VOLUME XLVII.

Orillia, Ont., July 1.—(Canadian ress Dispatch.)—History was olled back three hundred and ten years in Orillia today. Samuel De Champlain, intrepid explorer of the early French era in Canada, arrived again on the shores of Smiling Lake Couchiceing and re-established with the natives of Lovely Huronia a friendship and alliance which lasted throughout the entire French regime in Canada. It was done in regime in Canada. It was done in pageant today, of course, but it was a vivid picture of the arrival of the old civilization in the great new world which is now the Province of Ontario. However, it was more than a celebration of the arrival of Champlain. Mingled together in the crowd of 10,000 which watched the ceremony were people of Indian, French and British descent all mingling cordially together, which mingling cordially together, which was simple proof that the animosities of two hundred years had passed completely and that both lines of races, and indeed the Indian too, were one for a great united Canadian people.

A MAGNIFICENT MEMORIAL

The memorial which the thousands had gathered to see unveiled drew from the distinguished visitors and even from the stolid Indians undisguised admiration. Nowhere in the United States or Canada, it was stated, is it excelled. From the top of a 45-ton boulder, Cham-plain, cast in heroic proportions, gazes on the placid lake. On either side are large bronze groups, comprised of three figures each, representing those two objects ever near to the heart of the great explorer; the bringing of Christianity to the Indians and the opening of a great unknown continent to commerce. The groups are admirably executed. Intense zeal shines from the face of the priest, and a spirit of wonder pervades the kneeling Indians. The very spirit of the trader bartering with the Indians has been caught and held fast in the bronze.

On the front of the column is the following inscription: "1615-1915. Erected to commemorate the advent in Ontario of the white race, under the leadership of Samuel de Cham-plain, the intrepid French explorer and colonizer who, with ten com-panions, arrived in these parts in the summer of 1615, and spent the following winter with the Indians. making his headquarters at Cahiague, the chief village of the Hurons, which was near this place. A symbol of good-will between the French and English speaking people of Canada."

Among the Indians present were Chief Big Canoe, aged ninety-four. from the Rama reserve, Lake Simcoe district, a living link with the Ojibway race, who in his ceremonial costume grasped hands with Chief Justice Sir William Mulock; Chief John Bigwind, who accomie Lemieux, the representative of the Canadian ship.

"In these days of threatened revolution let us strive to assert liberty without license, to maintain authority without despotism. Let us never despair of the future of Canada. The felicity of British connection was again to be defended in 1812-14. Probably no French-Canadian better understood than did Sir George E. Just as in those early struggles, the sentiment of French Canada was unitedly for British connection, so the entente thus manifested has continued down through the years. It is our duty to see that it shall still continue. Each race has its contribution to make to the destiny of the Dominion. Each must strive to know and understand the other. We must love our courter. other. We must love our country-men as we love our country. It has been truly said that many of our petty differences rest in their sheer incomprehension and vanish upon that closer acquaintance which is at once a pleasure and a duty to cultivate as we have been cultivat-

"As in Canada's past, the French race has played a great part so will it in the future. The record of their achievements as pioneers and coureurs de bois adorns the pages of the history of Canada. In replying to the toast to Canada Sir George E. Foster wondered if the fact that there is so much talk about bridging the gap between Ontario and Quebec or between the two races in Canada is not emphasizing a difficulty which does not exist. Personally in all his experiences in political life he had never found it necessary to "fight with a member of the French speaking race." And he added that the two races are "indissolutably united in working out the destiny of the nation." A FAMOUS SCIENTIST DISCARDS UNBELIEF

PROF. JOHANNES REINKE, M.D. TELLS OF HIS FAITH IN GOD AND NEED OF RELIGION

By Dr. Frederick Funder (Vienna Correspondent, N. C. W. C.)

Another world-famed natural philosopher has joined the ranks of Ampere, von Liebig and Pasteur in bearing testimony to all the funda-mental truths of religion.

He is Professor Johannes Reinke, M. D., Ph. D., of Kiel University, a Prussian State institution, one of Prussian State institution, one of the most widely known and quoted men in his field.

Like many of his eminent prethe ultimate reward which the toils and trials of the pioneers would bring to coming generations."

SIR WILLIAM MULOCK

Speaking at the evening banquet, Sir William Mulock also stressed the importance of friendly relations with Quebec.

Like many of his eminent predecessors who were pioneers of eccessors who seems to him, says Professor Reinke, of importance that at a time when everyone is longing for religious regeneration a natural philosopher should make a statement such as his. For it is natural science, he recalls, which the materialistic monists and atheists invoke most freely in endeavoring to substantiate their doctrines, and it is through an appeal to natural ment that he stated that the last science that they have gained shot in defense of British connection greatest credence with the masses. PHYSICAL SCIENCE HAS LIMITATIONS

"True, it is a principle in natural eience to remain within the limits drawn for it, a principle to which I too have strictly adhered in all my treatises," he says. "But even the most far reaching physical explanations of the cosmos cannot satisfy the desire and longing of men for a still farther examination of all questions.

ly provoke in man the wish to fathom, by looking through the veils spread over nature, so to speak, the secrets of events and developments in nature, in order to be able to recognize at least part of the force which holds nature together in all her wonders. The metaphysic longings inherent in every man—even the simplest-minded man—are in closest contiguity with his religious impulses, with the seeking of God.

"The natural philosopher is in a position to recognize God through and in the multiplex refractions and the manifold natural phenomena, especially the events and developments of life, from a distance, and I may be allowed to confess with Augustine: 'My heart was dis-turbed until it found room in God.'

"In the hearts of so many men the idea of God has been suppressed. nay, almost extinguished, but I raise its banner with bold and joy-ful confidence in the hope that by close examination of the true contents of natural science the doubts of many a man will be dispelled and they will find fresh strength in the religious ideas which from the times of the Christian martyrs up to the present days have helped numerous people to surmount the difficulties and sufferings of our earthly life."

COLD RECEPTION FROM PROTESTANTS It is noteworthy that the statements of this prominent representative to German science have met with a refusal on the part of the liberal Protestant clergy. The liberal Protestants no longer wish to open their eyes, nor to be advised by the language of God and the wonders of nature; they even rebuff an expert who gives them an interpretation of that voice of nature. Professor Reinke, speaking of this painful experience, acknowledges with special thanks the kind recep-tion which Catholics on all sides, in even the highest places, have accorded him, in strong contrast to the attitude of the Protestant theo-

Uniformed guardians of Philadelphia—policemen, firemen and park guards, to the number of 3,500—in serried ranks like so many Crusaders, on Sunday, June 21, attended an open-air Military Field Mass in the shadow of the City Hall. An immense throng estimated at 100,000, witnessed the ceremony.

Members of the League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the 3,500 were observing the feast. The night before, in equal strength, they had marched through cheering crowds to the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, to hear a call for a renewal of their sense of duty and service to the community. Now they were come reverently to offer sacrifice to God in the same cause, and to hear further inspiring

Special arrangements were made for the protection of the city during the service. Most of the men were members of squads off duty, at the hour of the Mass, and only a few members of the "4 to 12" squads from each station were present.

Father Turner was equally sweeping in his arraignment of Dublin, Ireland.—At the Free Church Assembly, held recently in Edinburgh, Rev. Dr. W. Mackintosh Mackay, Glasgow, said a serious situation was arising as a result of the growth of the Irish population and the expansion of the Catholic Church in Scotland.

Dr. Mackay added that he wished to see all denominations in national (or Public) schools and pointed out that the Catholic Church now took Significantly, Father Turner its place, after the Church of Scotchose as his subject "The Causes and land, as the second largest Church the Cure of Crime," and as his text, in the country according to the country according to baptisms. The whole matter of the religious question was referred to a mittee for report at a future Assembly.

The real trouble is that the Cath olic population in Scotland is claiming educational liberty—that is, the right to educate its children as Catholics; and the Free Church, alarmed at the spread of Catholicism in Scotland, is demanding that Catholics shall not have equal rights in the matter of schools. Anti-Irish feeling is being excited for an obvious reason.

JAPANESE HONOR JESUIT APOSTLE

Paris, France.-A dispatch from Osaka announces that a monument is to be erected at Yamaguchi in honor of Saint Francis Xavier. A French missionary, Father Villion, found some time ago the site of a temple which had been donated in 551 to Saint Francis Xavier by the Daymio of that time and which was used by the Saint as a residence during six months.

The campaign undertaken by Father Villion to raise a monument to the Apostle of the Indies on this site has been crowned with success The matter is now in the hands of a committee headed by the Prefect of Yamaguchi and of which the leading diplomatic representative of the various countries and a large number of members of the local aristoc-racy are members. The Prince Regent of Japan has sent the committee his supreme approbation.

The monument will be impressive in its simplicity. On a granite base will stand a monumental cross of white marble, bearing on the arms of the cross, the bronze medallion of the Saint. At the top will be fastened a plate with a copy of the original act of donation, dated 1551, which has been preserved all these years.

It was a desolate, unlovely place, even under the softening influence of the moonlight, yet as Monsieur Dugas drove around to the little le in the rear, he heaved a great sigh of contentment.

By now the storkeeper had found and lighted the lamp, and, peering inside, I stared in astonishment at the sight that met my eyes. It was a small room, even for one person, yet into it had been crowded the entire overflow of the store. Boxes, jugs and barrels littered the entire floor space, tall pyramids of gaudy labeled cans had been built up against the walls, while from the rafters overhead hung bridles and sets of harness, lending a final touch of lending a final touch of raggedness to the slovenly aspect of the whole.

In one corner a cot with tattered mosquito netting marked the resting place of Monsieur Dugas, and save for this there was no other furniture. At the back an open fireplace yawned cold and cheerless,

Removing his hat and overcoat, Monsieur Dugas caught up the lamp and vanished inside the store, leav-When he returned a moment later, he was burdened with an armful of oath. He was a young man, plain he was burdened with an armful of filthy blankets which gave forth a cloud of dust as he threw them upon a convenient barrel-top. Then, hastily clearing a small narrow space upon the floor by thrusting a part of the litter beneath his cot, he spread the blankets lengthwise into a rude sort of bed, its foot, as though from habit, pointing toward the empty fireplace.

me he was asleep.
As for myself, I lay upon my blankets in sobbing, tortured wakefulness, my whole small body racked with the dreadful pangs of homesickness. That these pangs were my first, served only to increase their poignancy, so that my very soul ached with its longing for Madame Therese.

Gone was the pleasure of the morning's inverse the pleasure morning's journey, the pleased anticipation of all that was to come. I groaned. I writhed. I clutched the blankets fiercely in my agony that their rotten fabric gave way beneath my fingers. It was very dark and still in the growled were dark and still in the crowded room, and, to the odors that I had encountered upon the door-step, there was added the reek of ill-cured leather.

the carnival? Dieu, but you are a strange one."

He paused to chuckle at the thought, and then added, "Believe me, I am not that kind of a fool. Each year it is necessary that I journey to the city to replenish the stock of my store. If I go at this time, it is only that I may receive the carnival as lagnappe. You unbearable that, as in the days of my loneliness and terror, I rose suddenly to my knees in the middle of the blankets. Out went my arms, and from my lips there issued forth a trembling, whispered supplication, although now it was addressed to One far greater than my adored M'sieu L'Empereur Napoleon.

It was a simple monotonous appeal, eyond my comprehension.

At all events, as I knelt there shivering, a soft bright finger of moonlight slipped suddenly through the dark square of the uncurtained window, and rested for a moment upon my face like an answering caress

Somehow I felt strangely compresent. Quickly I drew it forth, unwrapping its covering of tissuepaper until my mother's picture lay in my hand. The finger of moonlight had now slipped to the floor, where it shimmered a thin quivering streak of silver, and, lowering the picture into its glow, I saw upon the glass of the frame, a small "It is round object.

And so, through the strange workings of Providence, in the hour of my childhood's greatest necessity, and in the country of her youth, I was comforted by the mother whom I had never known. mother whom I had never known.

CHAPTER V.

MARSH ISLAND I awoke next morning to the sound of angry voices and, upon looking sleepily about me, saw Monsieur Dugas and another man engaged in excited conversation. They stood before the open fireplace in which a fire of dry china-tree branches now crackled merrily, sending up long tongues of flame against the black sides of the iron kettle that was suspended above it. At one side the sahes had been raked away to accommodate a battered coffee pot, and Monsieur Dugas, armed with a large pewter spoon, presided over it all with an authority born of long usage.

Removing his hat and overcoat, Monsieur Dugas caught up the lamp and vanished inside the store, leaving me to choke in the close but chilly atmosphere of the room.

When he returned a moment late.

"Exercise, my dear Raoul, is the best of tonics," he was saying between vigorous jabs at the kettle. "Also you should have been waiting for me. Had I not left when I did, I would have been charged with a night's stabling."

You know how long I have saved for this suit, these shoes, this hat.

And now look at them."

Turning to display his plight to better advantage, he caught sight of me sitting up upon my huddle of blankets.

blankets.
"Why—who—" he began.
Monsieur Dugas smiled, possibly with satisfaction, for I have always felt that he counted upon my discovery to put an end to a very unpleasant discussion.

"Ah, so you have discovered him, you who he is, you will be more surprised than ever. This is all that I can tell-you for the moment."

Thus, having established a curicsity in the mind of his clerk that completely overshadowed the question of the ruined garments, Monsieur Dugas gave a final stir to the kettle and, lifting it from its crane, dumped the contents into a gressy platter.

greasy platter.

"Come, breakfast is ready, mon p'tit," he called to me. "We must eat quickly and be off, for there are still some miles ahead of us."
Hastily slipping into my shoes and coat, I took my place at the barrel-top which served as a table, and began to gulp down the hot mush that Monsieur Dugas had been preparing. It was coarse and tasteless, but fortunately there was an abundance of it. For, through the absence of my supper the night before, I was now ravenously hungry.

After a moment of indecision, Raoul joined in the meal, eating with such rapidity, despite his sullenness, that it was evident that, in the matter of the mush at least, he intended getting the better of his employer.

When the last particle had disappeared, Monsieur Dugas wiped his mouth upon the back of his hand, and gathering the dishes into a heap, dumped them carelessly upon the hearth

'You will now open the store and tend it until my return, Raoul," he ordered. "Also you will set out some of the goods in here saying that I have brought them from the city. Of course there will be an extra charge for the freshness. You understand

Raoul nodded sulkily. 'But this boy, and my clothes-' he began.

"Upon my return, Raoul, upon my return, said the storekeeper soothingly, and motioning me follow him, led the way outside.

It was not until I had stepped out into the stable-yard that I realized how early we had arisen. The mist still hung damp and heavy above the surrounding prairie and the morning light was gray and hazy, distorting the smallest object into an unnatural size. Across the narrow walk that led around to the front of the store a pump crowned with a tin basin loomed like some huge, helmeted giant, and Monsieur Dugas, pausing before it, thrust a small sticky lump of soap into my "Make a good job of it mon p'tit," he advised. "Your appearance will count for something, be-lieve me." And with this wise, if And with this wise, if suggestion, he hurried away to harness his horse.

A MOTHER'S LOVE

Situated on the principal street of the city was the homestead of of the city was the homestead of comfort and plenty owned by the Courtenays. To everyone, who passed by, it seemed a Utopia of content to be able to live there. Besides to be a Courtenay meant that you were looked up to by the entire populace as a model of aristocracy. In such surroundings we find Henry Courtenay, the only child of the family. To his father's disappointment Henry is a real American young man. Often Henry broke the old-established customs of the Courtenays by mingling with those generally contage belong it, was doubly anxious to have her released. Anxious to hush the matter up, she told Van Leder that Mr. Courtenay would transfer the printing contract to him. Van Leder readily agreed and Mr. Courtenay, although reluctantly, consented to Mrs. Courtenay although reluctantly, that the reason for his action be kept secret.

Once at home Mr. Courtenay demanded an explanation from his was doing it, was doubly anxious wife. She dared not tell him the truth that the reason for his action be kept secret. gling with those generally considered his inferiors. Henry, possessing a cosmopolitan spirit, was somewhat attached to the poor and often spent his leisure hours riding to help. It was while doing so that one day he came upon a bowery bully molesting a young girl. Without a moment's hesitation Henry dismounted and walking up to the bully, said: "Let her alone." The bully, hardly glancing at Henry, replied with a sneer, "Go about your business or I'll—!" This stirred the red manly blood in Henry beyond control. Seeing Henry. Mrs. Courtenay Mrs. Courtenay would have readily taken it as a keepsake, but under the impression that the key was needed, offered it to Inez. Inez, however, told her that if she cared she might have it, as it was just an extra office key belonging to repay Mrs. about your business or I'll—!"
This stirred the red manly blood in Henry beyond control. Seeing failure in the use of words Henry turned to physical force. A battle royal followed, while the girl stood by in fear. The bully, taken unexpected in the state of the sta pectedly, for he was under the impression that his appearance was enough to scare Henry, was soon overpowered. Henry saw further to the girl's protection by accompanying her to her home. He felt rather interested in all that the girl had to say. She told him she was lnez Watts and that she worked in a factory, at which she made a few dollars a week.

This confession, however, did not This confession, however, did not make Henry lose his interest in her, and before leaving that day he obtained her permission to see her again. Time and again Henry visited the slums. No one knew of his frequent calls except Inez. Inez, indeed, liked to see him, but foreseeing the consequences should foreseeing the consequences should his real mission be discovered, she warned him again and again. She did not want to see him suffer on her account, because she would share his misfortune. Although Inez sometimes exaggerated what the possible consequences might be, nevertheless nothing seemed to disoccupied by him.

Their marriage was secretly performed because Henry was quite sure his parents would object to it. Once married, he no longer feared the consequences. What mattered it to him if he had to undergo any to having van Leder's tered, like a ship wrecked at sea to was secretly performed Henry that the big firm had won the contract. This was, indeed, a shock to Henry, who was patiently awaiting this day with hopes of having Van Leder's mentality, in our manner and in our time; and we come to discern all this by true obedience.

"That is right," said he. "You vill be warmer so." And blowing ut the lamp, he made his way harrels with the same marvelous arrels with the same marvelous couracy that he had exhibited upon ur drive across the prairie. How could Henry leave Inez? Such Henry and inez were disappointed, 'tis true, but there was someone else who felt the little firm's misfortune. It was no one other than Mrs. Courtenay. Her love for her son had never lessened though he was ment to persuade him to do what Henry and Inez were disappointe ment to persuade him to do what the "Courtenay" pride would demand in such a case. Henry interrupted his father's speech and retorted: "Father, stop this instant. Inez is made of the same the situation Henry was now a plan to help him occurred to her. This was soon followed by a resolution to act. She took from an iron box a number of paper bills and common clay as any girl whom you enclosing them in an envelope wrote would have me marry. I will go to the end of the world to keep her." In another moment he was "To Mr. Henry Tatum." "To Mr. Henry Tatum." Scrutinizing the envelope she realized that her writing would reveal to Henry the sender. She tore up the envelope, and taking up another she printed in a disguised hand "To Mr. Henry Tatum from an old friend who owes him the enclosed." Into this envelope she placed the money and sealed it. After three years we find Henry, but now calling himself Tatum, living in a small and humble cottage in the poor section of the city.

Earnestly he worked day after day
as foreman at the Van Leder Printing Shop, trying to make ends meet and to give Inez and his little son home on an unknown mission. That night she secretly left her and to give Inez and his little son all that he possibly could. What a contrast to his former home where every conceivable luxury was his? Nevertheless, in all his struggles Henry seemed to feel happier than he had ever been in his father's home. In order to keep up with the ever-increasing cost of commodities Henry approached the president of the firm and asked for a raise in salary. Mr. Van Leder premised Henry a raise provided

It may have looked bright for the Van Leder concern had not the Courtenay Printing Company, the largest concern of its kind in the city, also bid for the contract. The Courtenay Printing Company, of which Henry's father was president, anxiously desired to win the contract in order to uphold its former prestige. FORGIVE THEM

The Centurion halted outside the old walled city, in the midst of the young verdure of the suburban gar-dens. The city of Caiaphas did not dens. The city of Calaphas did not allow capital punishment within its walls; the air perfumed with the virtue of the Pharisees would be polluted; and the soft hearts of the Sadducees would be distressed; hence, condemned prisoners were expelled from the city before their death

They had stopped on the summit of a rounded mound of limestone resembling a skull. This resemblance might seem to be the reason for choosing this place for executions, but the real reason was rather because the two great roads from Jaffa and Damascus crossed and it was other close at hand, and it was well that the cross should show its terrible warning to the traveling multitude of pilgrims, merchants and provincials.

The sun, the benign sun of the solstice, the high noon-day sun, shone on the white mound and on the mattocks ringing sonorously in the rock. In the nearby gardens the spring flowers expanded in the mild air; singing birds, hidden in the trees, rent the sky with the silver arrows of their warblings; down flow shout in pairs in the doves flew about in pairs in the warm, pastoral peace. It would be sweet to live there in some wellthe perfume of the earth awakening and clothing itself, awaiting the harvest moon, in company with lov-ing friends! Days of Galilee, days of peace, days of sunshine and friendship among the vineyards, beside the lake, days of light and liberty, wandering with friends who listened understandingly, days drawing to a close with the wellearned cheerfulness of supper, days which seemed eternal, although they were so short! -Now Thou hast no one with Thee, Jesus, called the Christ. These soldiers preparing that appalling bed, these thieves insulting Thee, those hounds awaiting Thy blood, are only shadows, cast by the great shadow of God. Thou art alone as Thou wert alone at night; the sun that warms Thy assassins is not for Thee. Before Thee lies no other day, no other journey; ended are Thy wanderings and now at last Thou canst rest; this skull of rock is Thy goal. A few hours hence, imprisoned spirit shall be torn from its dungeon. God's human face is wet with cold sweat. The blows of the mattocks ring in His head, as if they struck at Him; the sun which He loved so much, symbol of the Father, just even to the unjust, now falls harshly on His aching eyes and swollen eyelids. His whole body aches with weariness, traphle in a restrict factor of the state o trembles in a yearning for rest which He resists with all His soul. Has He not promised to suffer as much as is needful up to the very last? At the same time it seems to Him that He loves with a more intimate tenderness those whom He is leaving, even those who are working for His death. And from the depths of His soul, like a song of victory over the told and flesh, rise up the words, never to be forgetten by men, "Father, forvictory over the torn and weary wery people who were making Him suffer pretended as a last insult that they had mercy on that suffering, and by reducing it by the merest trifle they thought they had the greater right to demand that the greater right to demand the greater right the rest of the cup of suffering be drained. But Jesus, as soon as He had tasted this mixture, bitter as gall, pushed it away. He would have accepted a single word in place of the wine, but the only one on that day who could find the word to say was one of the thieves whom they had dragged up to the place of the skull with Him.

The incense and the myrrh which they offered Him on that day were not perfumed like that incense bitter was it, was not the genial nuptial wine of Cana, nor that which he had drunk the evening before, warm and dark as blood

On the top of the hill of the Skull the three crosses, tall, dark, with outspread beams like giants with outspread beams like glants with outstretched arms, stood out against the great sweep of the sweet spring sky. They threw no shadow, but they were outlined by brilliant reflections from the sup. The beauty of the world on that day in that hour was so great that tartures were unthinkable; could they not, those wooden branches, blossom out with field flowers, and green, hiding the scaffold with verdure, in the shade of which reconciled and friendly brothers might

But the Priests, the Scribes, the Pharisees, those who gloated over suffering and over revenge, who had come there to satisfy their morbid appetites with the spectacle of three deaths, were stamping with impatience, and jeeringly hastening on the Romans.

The Centurion gave an order. with rapid, rough gestures, removed demned to crucifixion must be entirely naked.

As soon as He was stripped, they passed two ropes under His arm-pits, and hoisted Him up on the cross. Half-way up on the upright was a rough wooden peg like a seat where the body was to find a precarious and painful support. Another soldier leaned the ladder against one of the arms of the cross, climbed upon it, hammer in hand seized the hand which had cured lepers and caressed little children's hair, spread it out on the wood and drove a nail into the middle of the palm. The nails were long, and with a wide head so that they could be easily hammered. The soldier struck a vigorous blow, which pierced the flesh at once, and then another and a third so that the nail would hold firmly and so that only the head would remain outside. A little blood spurted out from the pierced hand upon the hammering hand, but the diligent workman paid no attention to it, and continued to hammer away vigorously until his work was properly done. Then he came down the ladder and

All was finished: the drops of blood fell slowly from His hands on the ground and the blood from His feet reddened the cross. From now on He was to flee no more; His blaspheming mouth was soon to be gaping in agony, but it was to teach no more forever. The assassins might be satisfied with themselves and with the foreign executioners. The poisoner of the people, the enemy of the Temple and of business, was fastened with four solid nails on the tree of ignominy.

The Scribes, the Elders, mocked Him in the same way, and so did even the soldiers, although the affair was none of theirs, and even the thieves also, suffering though they were in anguish with Him.

"He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now if he will have him: . . . for he said, I am the Son of God.'

He had announced that He came to give life, but now He could not save Himself from death! He had boasted that He was the Son of God, but God did not move to save His first-born from the scaffold. Therefore, He had always lied; it was not true that He had ever saved any one. It was not true that God was His Father, and if He had lied about that, He had lied about everything, and deserved this fate. There was no need of proof, but the proof was there so clear that all could see it, and their con-lived and prayed; it is not the prayer of a man, but of a God to a God. Men, who cannot pardon even the innocence of an innocent man, had never before that day man, had never before that day dreamed that a man might pray for the forgiveness of those who were putting him to death.

The that know not what they do!

The that the painful heaving of his point the painful heaving of his abortive hope, an impossible dream of miraculous salvation; but a despairing man hopes even for the blasphemers, for it would have relieved us to have stoned Thee one by one. fell silent. That prayer was so new for him, summoned him to emotions so foreign to his nature, and all his life, that it carried him back at one stroke to his almost forgotten child-hood, when he also was innocent, and when he knew there was a God of whom one could ask for peace as poor men beg for bread at the rich man's door. But in no canticle were not perfumed like that incense and myrrh brought to Him in the stable by the Wise Men from the distant Orient. And in place of the gold which had lighted the dingy darkness of the stable, there was the iron of the nails, gray now, waiting to be reddened. And that wine which seemed poisoned so bitter was it, was not the genial bitter was it, was not the genial who deceived with His miracles, no longer had His hands free to mold the clay which restored sight to the blind; the throne of the King was a hard wooden peg; the hater of Jerusalem was hung up in sight of the Holy City; the Master with so many disciples now had as companions only two thieves who insulted Him, and four bored soldiers. "Callo on the Father now to save Thee, ask for a legion of angels to heart an echo of something he would have liked to believe, above all at that moment when he was dount to appear before a Judge more awful than those of the law-courts. This prayer of Jesus' foundant unexpected echo in his own more with the court of the law-courts. This prayer of Jesus' foundant unexpected echo in his own in thought, a thought beyond his power to formulate or express, but which now seemed to him luminous in the darkness of his fate. Had he really known what he was doing? heart an echo of something he would have liked to believe, above ions only two thieves who insulted Him, and four bored soldiers. "Calls on the Father now to save Thee, ask for a legion of angels to take Thee away from there and disperse us with flaming swords. Then even we will believe that Thou art the Christ, and we will fall down with our faces in the dust to adore Thee."

And some of the priests, shaking their heads, said: "Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross."

This challenge recalls that of love, would he have committed the actions which had brought him rich men, who by their usury drained dry the veins of the poverty-stricken? Those were the men who had condemned him to death; but what right had they to kill him if they had never done any-thing to save him, and if they, too,

When they were all on the cross, the other thief, although suffering terribly from his pierced hands and feet, began again to insult Jesus. He also began to vomit out the challenge of the Jews; "If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.'

If He were really the Son of God would He not have thought of freeforgotten by men, "Father, forgive them: for they know not what

He had sinned; in the eyes of men, he had gravely sinned, he had taken away from the rich a little of their riches, perhaps he had also stolen a little from the poor, but for sinners ailing with an illness worse than any bodily weakness, Jesus had always a tenderness of which He made no show, but which which He made no show, but which He was never willing to hide. Had He not come to bring back to the warmth of the stable the flock lost among the thorns of the country-side? Were not the wicked already sufficiently punished with their own wickedness? And those who thought themselves righteous, were not perhaps often more corrupt than the wicked they con-demned? Jesus does not pardon all men. That would be injustice, holier than the injustice of the world, but still unjust But a single motion of repentance, a single word of regret is enough. The prayer of the thief was enough

Eminently fitting is it that a monument so nobly conceived should be unveiled on Dominion Day in the presence of eminent scions of that race that gave to Canada the heroic Christian explorer, and that joined the qualities of that race should be the leading representatives of English speaking Canada.

The committee that so nobly conceived and so ably carried out this great undertaking have said to the press of Canada: "Unless the monument helps to promote a spirit of good will between the French and English races, its erection will fall short of one of the objects desired."

We have just been reading a review by Professor Kennedy of two books on D'Arcy McGee. A short quotation from this review may fittingly conclude our reflections on this question of racial good will and cooperation.

'The appearance, then, of these two books is almost an event in Canadian history. Coinciding with the recent McGee centenary celebrations they are not only welcome additions to historical literature but they ought to serve to widen the knowledge of McGee's great principles-an all-Canadian spirit, a national outlook, religious and with them in cordial recognition of racial toleration, and that sense of faith which transfigures the present and lends promise to the future."

We think the Champlain Tercentenary Committee need have no misgivings as to their success in promoting these great principles so essential to the present and future welfare of Canada.

REASONS FOR CONDEMNATION

Nevertheless, the Tennessee Anti-Evolution Statute is deserving of condemnation. While the anti-religious teaching at which it was religious orders were mobilized should be made through me between lation of the doctrines to be taught a wrong done to those who are during the War, of whom 4,618 my Sovereign Lady the Queen of in the schools is easily liable to this and for other causes resulting the labor of which I undertook the of violating the Anti-Evolution Law from that period of stress, the want more faithfully and freely eight may have to face a jury that is incompetent to determine whether the theory of evolution has been twenty-five dioceses, we are told, great glory, all the idolators, our taught in such a way as really to one-third, and in some, even one-common accursed enemy, might be contradict "the story of the Divine Creation of man as taught in the Bible." Furthermore, if the State may forbid certain doctrines to be taught in the prescribe the teaching of certain doctrines? Laws requiring the Bible to be read in the schools could easily be expanded so as to provide that certain doctrines should be proposed to the pupils at the true meaning of certain biblical passages.

Obviously, this theory is difficult to reduce to practice. As a matter of fact, it is frequently and flagrantly disregarded. Nevertheless, the violations of religious neutrality by Public school instructors could be greatly lessened. This result should be achieved, not by an enactment of the State legislature, but through the school administration. The responsible authorities and officials of the school system, or of the particular school, can lay down and enforce regulations which will attain the desired end, insofar as it is morally capable of attainment.
Within certain wide limits, the problem is one for the administrative, instead of the legislative branch of the Government.

WILL DENY CRIME IN TEACHING

A word as regards the judicial processes, impending and remote, which are to determine the legal guilt or innocence of young Mr. Scopes, and the validity or invalidity of the law. At the approaching trial, the defendant will admit that he taught the doctrine of evolution in the Dayton High school, but he will deny that this action constitutes legal crime. His denial will be, ased on the ground that the Anti-Evolution statute is unconstitu-His attorneys will try to show that the law violates the process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; that is, the injunction that no State "shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law."
They will contend that the individual liberty thus protected includes liberty of teaching. Since the liberty of teaching. Since the Anti-Evolution law destroys this liberty, it violates the Constitution.

It was this Constitutional guaranwhich, in the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court, rendered null and void the Oregon Anti-Parochial school law. The Court held that "liberty" in the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment included the liberty to maintain, to teach in, and to send children to a Private school. If the Scopes case presented this issue, it would be ended before it could be begun. But it involves a materially different question; namely, whether the Constitutional liberty of teaching implies the freedom to teach particular doctrines in the Public schools. Against this claim of educational freedom may and will be set up in court the conten-tion that the State has full authority to determine that curri-culum of its own schools; and its own schools; and man: especially that it has the right to forbid teaching which violates the religious neutrality of the Public

It is not, however, the Constitutional aspect of the case which will arouse most popular interest. Counsel for Mr. Scopes will lay great stress upon the settled policy of the State to foster science and scientific inquiry. They will contend that the Anti-Evolution law flagrantly repudiates this policy. Mr. Darrow, in particular, may be counted upon to exert all his great skill and all his varied talents on behalf of this proposition. We may confidently expect that this phase of the case, this issue of scientific inquiry, this plea against limita-tions to the march of human knowl-

ATTITUDE OF CATHOLICS

The attitude that a Catholic might reasonably take toward the Tennessee statute and its fate in the courts would seem to be about as follows: to hope that the law would be declared unconstitutional, since it might easily become a precedent for grave and tyrannical interferences by legislative major-ities with the curriculum of the Public schools and, indeed, of private schools, and to remain undisturbed concerning the relation of the Bible to science; for Catholics know that there can be no real conflict in this respect, and they realize that the meaning of any passage of the Bible is determined for them, not by a State legislature, or a court of justice, or a legal advo-cate, but by the infallible voice of

BIRTH CONTROL MAKES STIR IN ENGLAND

OUTLOOK ISSUES WARNING OF CONSEQUENCES

London, Eng.-The Outlook a non-Catholic review, issues a warning to the Anglican leaders who are arguing about birth-control that as the result of their indecision the Catholic population is going up all over the world, and the Protestant population is going down.

This comment follows an out-spoken address by the Anglican Bishop of Birmingham, Dr. Barnes, who, speaking at a health conference in Brighton, urged that steps be taken to secure a decrease of what he called "reckless child bearing."

Here are some of the surprising statements of that Anglican church-

FOREIGN MISSION NEWS LETTER

A HIDDEN ENEMY

Father Marriolliat of the India Missions has had quite an experience. Whilst touring his district his faithful Hindu cook came to announce that he had seen a big snake wriggling up the wagon wheel! It was much easier for the snake to get in, than for the travellers to get him out. Search as they might, through the stores of provis ion, through the bedding, through the linen chest and bamboo mats that serve as covering, the Father and his cook could find no trace of the intruder. Naturally the re-mainder of their trip was rather unpleasant. Twelve days later, the good missionary was meditating on the devil's work in India, when suddenly he beheld the steely-red eyes of a huge snake curled around the bamboo pole supporting the roof of the cart, staring at him ferociously. Did you ever hear of Basutoland? Over sixty years ago the first Catholic mission was founded there. and after surmounting incredible difficulties began slowly to make progress. It must have been a great consolation to Fathers Gerard and LeBihan, the pioneer Oblates to have been spared long enough to see the marvelous fruits of the work of their early days.

For thirty years, this spot in Africa bounded by the Orange River Colony, Natal and Cape Colony resisted the Call to Grace. Difficulties and disappointments were chiefly occasioned by the violent opposition of the ministers of the Paris Evangelical Society whose headquarters were, as now, at Morija; and as they had influence and strength the wonder is that our missionaries zeal and self-sacrifice conquered at last. Bishop Cinez tells us that when he first came into the country there were not more than 3,000 Catholics whereas now they number 40,000 with a net increase, allowing for deaths, of 3,000 each year.

With genuine pleasure we note that the good work carried on by Father Fraser in his former parish of Taichowfu, China, has been ably continued by Father Van Oyen, since Father Fraser began his work in Canada for founding a Seminary for missionary priests.

There was only one Catholic on this committee, Dr. Letitia Fair-field, and she signed a reservation to the report, declaring that the last of contracentives is a fruit state of contracentives in the state of contracentives is a fruit state of contracentives in the state of contracentives is a fruit state of contracentives in the state of the about 300 women and girls, and these works are self-supporting," With characteristic zeal he intends to start a similar work in another part of the mission, if he secures permission of the Bishop and the necessary funds to erect the build-

In 1912, Father Fraser employed about 8 catechists on this mission, a number which increased to almost 25 by 1914. Father Van Oyen tells us, "We have just finished the yearly recollection of our catechists; they number about fifty. Fifty catechists and schoolmasters! A splendid number, but not yet sufficient."

There are now 27 chapels and 38 schools to attend to, and despite its rapid development it is relatively the cheapest of all the missions. Other stations of similar size would be obliged to pay salaries of at least $3,000 a year. "We spent this least $3,000 a year. "We spent this year, only a little more than $1,000."

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY OF CANADA

THE WORK OF PREACHING THE GOSPEL

BY THE PRESIDENT Before Our Divine Lord ascended into Heaven He commanded the Apostles to preach the gospel to every creature. This was not a commission to certain ones of the Apostles; it was an order to all. And Jesus coming, spoke to them (the eleven,) saying, "All power is to restrain their appetites for sweets that their pennies and nickles might be devoted to the saving of souls.

the Gospel to every creature. (Mark xvi., 14, 15.)

This was surely an official utterance. The eleven represented then the ministry of the Church. The Holy Ghost who was promised was to complete the word of Christ.

After His coming we see all the to complete the word of Christ. After His coming we see all the had decided to look for a berth in China, just a few months before they actually booked passage. One could scarcely call them missionary the word with signs that followed. What better evidence than this of word with signs that followed. What better evidence than this of the proper meaning of Our Lord's command! The apostles received this command for the whole church... Missionary work was necessary then as it is now and will be until the gospel is preached to every creature.

It is one of our duties, as Christians, to help in the carrying out of this work which should be per-

Missions. It belongs to no particu-lar diocese, but extends to the whole of Canada; obtaining money from the faithful in the older and better established provinces with which to aid, in the things of religion, brothers residing in far-flung and sparsely-settled districts where assistance is necessary for the safe-guarding of faith. Extension Society supports the missionaries working among the Esquimault in the far North and southward among the Indians; it appeals for missionary priests in dioceses where the ever-increasing harvest is great and the laborers few; it constructs chapels where the people alone could never build them—thus establishing new centres of Catholicity, and with God's help and the constant aid of the Catholic people of Canada it will continue this work as long as there is a soul to be reached in the unorganized districts of the country.

Through its zeal, made possible by the aid of devoted friends, Extension has awakened in the minds of all a realization of the important fact that missionary needs cannot be ignored by a living church, and the value of its work becomes every day more apparent. It is sowing seed which in time will produce an abundant harvest of souls. It is the Society whose efforts make it possible for Catholic missionaries to survive the cam-paign of powerful, influential non-Catholic organizations which year after year lavishly spend money to establish and maintain community and missionary centres which not infrequently attract our foreign-born Catholics from the faith of their fathers.

If our needs in the past were great, they are every day increasing to meet the flowing tide of non-Catholic opposition. It is a realiza-tion of this fact which inspires the missionaries in far-off provinces to suffer privation and hardship and to give all other members of the Church an example of most heroic charity. While others are spending themselves for their own satisfac-tion in the quest of things of earth, the missionaries are busy searching through hidden and forgotten corners for souls which otherwise would be neglected. When others fail, they alone go forth on their errand of mercy and charity which is beyond all praise. It is during such times as those through which we have been passing that the most charitable works of the Church are and accuser were both put to death. sometimes neglected. Diocesan works and parish needs are always pressing and there is always someone to plead their cause and make known their necessities. Let us be mindful of the poor missionary. He has his place in our daily tasks for the Church as he is given the place of honor in our admiration and praise. Christ left to the whole Church the task of preaching the gospel and in that holy and most meritorious of all works, we must do our share.

Before the closing of school we received, from pupils of different classes donations for the work of Extension. This money represents the self-denial of children who chose

FIVE MINUTE SERMON

BY REV. WILLIAM DEMOUY, D. D. SIXTH SUNDAY AFTER

PENTECOST

THE DANGER OF SMALL FAULTS "So do you also reckon that you are dead to sin, but alive unto God, in Christ Jesus Our Loid." (Rom. vi. 2.)

St. Paul, in the part of his Epistle to the Romans fixed by the Church to be read today, speaks of our baptism in Christ and our consequent death to sin, and the resurrection, similar to that of Christ's, rection, similar to that of Christ's, to come. By baptism we die to sin; we must not revivify ourselves to sin. This is a death from which we ourselves never should rise, nor allow any one else to cause us to rise. It is a death, fortunately, of which we are more or less conscious, owing to the faculties with which God has blessed us. We never can be absolutely certain that we are justified before God, but the consciousness of duty well performed sciousness of duty well performed and of evil avoided affords us a we can say that we are dead to sin. Then there are the means, established by Christ, for keeping the spiritual life within us. This life must permeate us totally. It can not exist where sin is. These means are especially the sacraments. As food conserves the life of the body, so does grace, the spiritual food of the sacraments, keep life in our soul. Nay, grace is itself the life of the soul. Hence, as we must often partake of material food in order to have life in our body—so, to preserve the life of our soul, begun at baptism, we frequently must consume spiritual food. In proportion to the quantity of spiritual food of which we partake will be the amount of vigor and strength of our spiritual life. The stronger and more vigorous our spiritual life, the less the fear of a rising again to a life of sin. But alas, how small the number of people that remain dead to sin! Many, it is true, do not rise to a full life of sin, but how frequently they are in danger of it! Small habits take possession of them and gradually assume dangerous proportions assume dangerous proportions. How few people think a habit is progressive! Its mode of progress is a deceptive one. While habit goes on in its deadly course, it molds nature its way and tends to weaken the inward voice of even the most insistent conscience. Thus people begin to pay little attention to it. When the awakening day comes, how sad the experience that follows How many, for instance, have begun almost unintentionally, to call attention to faults in their fellow-beings? At first it was only a casual remark, perhaps confined to the members of their immediate family; then it may have been repeated to others less closely related. These gave a more willing Making. ear, which is always an incentive to grown into an eloquent criticism. Those guilty of this vice no doubt examine their conscience on some some extent, silence the victim of this terrible habit. Even though one becomes only a material sinner under its influence, there is still the punishment of remorse. Often scruples arise in the conscience of those so addicted, and, remaining the Church shall use even the most through life, rob them of the peace novel methods of winning souls and that usually comes to those who making converts.

It is indeed difficult to remain dead to sin, or to preserve one's baptismal innocence. There are so many dangers surrounding us that the inclinations to evil existing are in daily intercourse with all classes of people. The example set by these tends to influence us. It sometimes seems as if we want to the condensation of the classes of people. The example set by these tends to influence us. It sometimes seems as if we want to the class of t endeavoring to build two kingdoms within ourselves—a kingdom where righteousness reigns and a kingdom where malice holds sway. Commonly speaking, we say that there is something good and something evil in each one of us. It may be so, but this evil should not be wilful; it should be only the evil inclinations inherent in our nature on account of original sin and its consequences. These inclinations to evil are not sinful in themselves, though they strongly incline us to evil. The reasons, then, why it is evil. The reasons, then, why it is sententious statements, disjointed so difficult for us to remain dead to as they are, are quite in the manner sin may be summed up in these two of the information that millions of classes: the evil inclinations w and the bad example without. the evil inclinations within,

Were there no remedies at hand for these spiritual maladies, and no helps offered us in our weakness, perhaps it could be given as an excuse. But God has provided for our insufficiences, and if we fall, at least seriously, into sin, it is because we have not heeded these remedies, nor gone in search of them. God's grace is our salvation and our help. It is the antidote for the poison we for our lapses into sin? It does not. Were there no remedies at hand for

RELIGIOUS TEACHING PLAN ATTACKED IN COURT

White Plains, N. Y.—Orders have been served on members of the Mount Vernon Board of Education to appear before Supreme Court Justice Seeger and show cause why the Board should not be enjoined from dismissing Public school children for forty-five minutes once a week to receive religious instrucweek to receive religious instruc-

The orders were issued on peti-tion of Laurence B. Stein, a tax-payer of Mount Vernon. Joseph Lewis, a representative of the Free Thinkers' Society of Manhattan, who was in the court room when the action was taken, announced that it is the beginning of a series of similar actions to be filed throughout the State if Mr. Stein succeeds in obtaining an injunction here. Mr. Lewis contends the plan of excusing Public school children for religious instruction violates the religious liberty guarantees of the Federal and State constitutions.

PAULIST EDITOR SPEAKS TO CONVERTS' LEAGUE

At a meeting of the Catholic Converts' League, of New York, held in the Plaza Hotel, Rev. James S. Gillis, C.S.P., spoke on "New Times and New Methods in Convert Making."

"The Catholic Church," he said, "is an anomalous institution. She further confidence, and it was not long before the casual remark had is not subject to the laws that goygrown into an eloquent criticism. Those guilty of this vice no doubt examine their conscience on some soul-stirring occasion, and they discover what slaves to habit they have become. Then the fight to regain their freedom is more strenges at the constant of their freedom is more strenges. their freedom is more strenuous tradition, yet prompt to adopt reathan they could have imagined possonable innovations: semper eadem, sible. Week after week they commit the same faults. The habit has grown into them and has become a granite, yet flexible as a willow second nature. How many conquer it completely? It is a fact, lamentable but true, that very few ever finally escape. And it is only the thought of God's mercy that can, to result in the second as a willow wand. She never quite abandons a tradition, yet she does not stagnate, or crystallize or fossilize. She has not gone the way of Confusianism, or Buddhism, or any other Oriental religion, though she herself is of Oriental origin. In a word the Church is a paradox, rigid and flex-ible; conservative, but progressive;

old but young.
"Hence it is to be expected that

APOSTOLATE OF THE PRESS

"Take, for example, the aposto-late of the press. In itself that apostolate is old, but recently it has taken on new forms. In the city of papers a short, pithy paragraph, on some Catholic custom, or belief, or some historical fact, redounding to the credit of the Church, and then aga kind of fillip to the little para-graph, a solitary sentence, such as: 'The First Public Library in America was in a Catholic University.'
'Ampere, the discoverer of the Unit of Electrical current was a Catholic.'
'Pope Gregory XV. gave the world its present Calendar,' and a hundred other similar items.

"These pithy paragraphs and persons absorb from the newsnd the bad example without.

But does the fact of the existence | papers. They will not read books; book. Their power of thinking has been all but destroyed by the are liable to absorb from without, and for the infection present within.

Of course we are free agents, and grace will not be forced upon us. We must try to preserve it by the means at hand, and, if we are so unfortunate as to lose it, we should use the means that God has provided for the regaining of it.

Christians often should examine their lives seriously, and see whether or not there exist in them habits or faults that are tending, or the could in time tend, to rob them of the regaining of the press is one that has been of the press is one that has been of propaganda from Genesis to the apocalypse. Paradise Lost is propaganda to justify the ways of God to men.'

"The Divina Commedia is propaganda, for religion, and for the Christian theology. To take a thing, but I am confident they would have approved of it.

"Another phase of the apostolate of the press is one that has been not propaganda. Bernard Shaw

"Another phase of the apostolate of the press is one that has been used with most conspicuous ability by Mr. Benedict Elder of Louisville, who persistently writes to the daily papers of his city, setting them right, politely, wisely, discreetly, whenever any statement misrepresenting Catholicism appears in their pages. It is no small task for the senting Catholicism appears in their pages. It is no small task, for the newspapers are notoriously careless and uninformed about Catholic doctrine and Catholic history, but Mr. Elder keeps relentlessly on their trail. They have come to fear him and respect him, If we had a few such scholarly gentlemen, with an equally ready pen, in every city, we might almost succeed in working the miracle of making the newsthe miracle of making the news-papers reliable in Catholic matters. MIRACLE IN GEORGIA

"In Georgia, the Laymen's League has actually wrought a seeming miracle, an almost incred-ible revolution, by the same means: patient, polite, painstaking letter writing to the papers. In 1916 Georgia was a horrible example of unfairness to Catholics. To quote from a report of the secretary of the League, 'There was only one newspaper in the whole State of newspaper in the whole State of Georgia that was fair to us.... Catholics were villified on nearly every political soap-box in the State. They were boycotted. The Veasey Bill providing for the inspection of certain institutions, and admittedly aimed at convents, was passed after a series of anti-Catholic orations almost unparalleled in the history of supposedly Christian Commonwealths... To-Christian Commonwealths. . To-day, the newspapers are as free from matters objectionable to Catholics as are any in the United States. Objectionable articles have dwindled from as many as a hundred a week to an average last year of two a month. Many papers, formerly very critical and hostile are now friendly. Catholics are no longer boycotted.' "These welcome changes have been made largely by the League which adopted principally the cus-tom of writing letters to the press. This achievement is important, not only defensively, but offensively. Setting non-Catholics right, and stopping up the flood of calumny are two great steps towards convertible.

'Another all-important method of reaching people outside the Church is street-preaching by laymen and laywomen, so successfully practiced by the Catholic Evidence Guild in England, and by similar organizations in Australia and Holland. It is as plain as day that Holland. It is as plain as day that we shall have to come to it. All objections have been met and over-thrown. The most unsubstantial of all objections, the danger to our dignity, is hardly worth considering. Our Saviour preached in the streets, and after Him the Apostles preached wherever they could get a hearing. The greatest preacher, since St. Paul, the originator of the most sweeping religious movement since the primitive days of Christianity, was St. Francis of Assisi, a layman.

"One thing is certain, if we wait for the priests to convert America, the work can never be done. need laymen and laywomen, inspired with the zeal and the courage, and trained to the ability in England, who have made an indubitable success of street-preaching and park preaching. It will come. It must come, and the sooner the better.

"Still more spectacular, and even more necessary, as well as infinitely more effective is the radio. I look upon the radio as a new manifesta-tion of the wonderful works of God. Every scientific invention not only adds to our knowledge of the universe, it broadens our concept of God. Now this divine discovery is, to a very great extent, in the of Harlequin, if not of Mephisto-phelos. It is a shame for us to abandon to Satan what could easily add to the honor of God. We have been deterred 'largely by timidity and by the fear of enormous ex-

"But the Paulist Fathers in New York are building a broad-casting station, now nearly completed, at a cost of almost $100,000. We are none too soon. A little longer and we should have been too late. Presently millions of listeners will hear from our station, not only high class music, and a general program of instruction and entertainment, but discreetly presented explanations of truths and incidents pertaining to Catholicism. We feel that it is the biggest event in the history of the Church since the instruction in the church since the church since the instruction in the church since the church si vention of printing, perhaps it will turn out to be even more important

"The Divina Commedia is propaganda, for religion, and for the Christian theology. To take a modern instance, immeasurably less important as literature, H. G. Wells never wrote a line that was not propaganda. Bernard Shaw reaks with didactism. He is the propagandist par excellence of paganism. If these men use their art to dethrone Christianity, why shall we not use art, and literature, and the drama to defend our God? "To resume; the Catholic Church is not only indefectible. She is indefatigable. She is old, but ever on the qui vive for whatever in the new may help to carry her message to mankind."

FRENCH CATHOLIC WOMEN

Paris, France.—A report on the organization of Catholic women in the United States, prepared by Miss O'Donohue, was read by Madame Girod de l'Ain at the Woman's Social Circle held here under the auspices of L'Action Sociale de la Femme. These meetings were attended by several prominent writers and publicists, including Georges Goyau the historian, Monsignor Chaptel and the distinguished barrister M. Chenu.

The special study conducted this year was the problem of the perils which menace Christian civilization and the methods by which suitable remedies may be devised to counteract these perils. One of the princi-pal papers was read by Madame de Steenberghe-Engheringh, President of the Union Internationale des Oeuvres Catholiques Feminines. At the conclusion of the session, a

WASTE NOT

If you've any task to do,
'Let me whisper, friend, to you,
Do it!
If you've anything to say,
True and needed, yea or nay,
Say it!

If you've anything to love, 'Tis a blessing from above, Love it!

If you've anything to give,

That another's joy may live,
Give it!
If some hollow creed you doubt,
Though the whole world hoot and shout, Doubt it! If you've any debt to pay, Rest you neither night nor day, Pay it! If you've any joy to hold Near your heart, lest it grow cold, Hold it!

If you've any grief to meet, At a loving Father's feet, Meet it! If you know what torch to light, Guiding others in the night, Light it!

In the philosophic reckoning of time there is no time like the present. Time makes life, and life itself passes before our eyes like a vast panorama in ages that are reckoned by years, and years that are divided into months, weeks, days, hours, minutes, and last but not least, seconds.

Each second is meted out to us.

Each second is meted out to us, and we are given it to work out the problem before us. Little can be accomplished in this very brief interval, but they are given us in succession and in direct order, so that the future becomes the present and the present fades into the past.

It is not unusual to hear men speak of youth with envy. They say that care free youth is the bet time. They would barter their soul in exchange for the few years of youth. Youth, on the other hand, longs for the days when it will feel itself free and independent to go about and accomplish great work. It is an inconsistency of nature to be see discretified.

be so dissatisfied. The present second and the present day to each and every one should be counted as the best day. Yearning for times that have gone by, and hoping for those times to come lead a man nowhere. While he dreams, his very act has robbed him-of a precious moment. It may have its joys and its comforts, yet what reason has he to hope that the future will fulfill itself? He cannot possibly see the future. It is like a dense fog which hides objects from his view. It may seem that his imagination can penetrate the mist, and he sees golden towers and glittering steeples, but he is fooled for he is gazing at a mirage. It is as remote as another horizon, as fantastic and fickle as a dream.

As we think, we like. The past may serve as a prop for the present time. The future means and the server of the present time.

time. The future may act as a stimulus, but we cannot dwell in either, for one is dead and the other is uncertain.

Hours have wings, fly up to the author of time and carry news of our usage," wrote Milton. "All our prayers cannot entreat one of them ither to return or slacken his pace. The misspents of every minute are had no bi new records against us in heaven. had no bi Surely, if we thought thus, we should dismiss them with better reports, and not suffer them to fly away empty, or laden with dangerwhen they carry up not only the messages, but the fruits of good, and stay with the Ancient of Days to speak for us before His glorious Man is scarcely aware of the periodicity of time. It is given us in such abundance that we are unappreciative of the opportunities which it carries with it. It is a sort which it carries with it. It is a sort of river of passing events, and strong in its currents, bringing things into sight; and in a twinkling of an eye they disappear and another takes the place, but this too will be swept along with the current. The big things of life consist in the steady building of the little things. Little difficulties overcome give one strength to face overcome, give one strength to face bigger ones.

On the present depends life. The performance of every act in life must be attributed to the present. Those which were the past were at one time present, and those to come will see the present. The acts of the present bid for a changeless immortality. When time and life fulfill themselves, our thoughts and actions are measured, and according to the fullness and profit of time spent are we judged.

The present calls for patience, optimism and goodness. He is a wise man and a true philosopher wise man and a true philosopher who does not "cross a bridge till he comes to it." It is fear and worry of things which belong to the future which rob man of the present. And we cannot expect to have peace of mind and a light heart, if we are forever borrowing from the future. It is wishing our lives away, throwing it to the winds. When we have spent the good part of the day climbing a hill, it is not difficult to

So we under-stand the wisdom in the words of thine! Marcus Aurelius when he said "Be not as one that hath ten thousand years to live; death is nigh at hand; while thou livest, while thou hast

With the thought in mind that we are building an immortal home, let the good deeds build a firm foundation, and a life well spent will adorn it with a beauty everlasting. If it is built upon the work of the present, it will stand strong against the unforescent and is not ant to fall the property of the present and is not ant to fall the property of the present and is not ant to fall the property of the present and is not ant to fall the property of the prope unforeseen and is not apt to fall. LYING an offence against God. It attacks the very foundations of society. Men can live together and make progress only so long as they can trust one another. Civilization is based on mutual dependence and mutual dependence without mutual confidence is unthinkable. The most flagrant violators of this trust—the criminal class—society puts behind bars.

Nor does society fail to punish the liar. He who is forever making lying excuses, who is ever ready with a denial or a plausible explan ation when detected in or accused of wrong doing, soon finds himself charged with things of which he is innocent, and his denials and excuses rejected. He has destroyed the confidence which his fellows should be able to place in his word.

The "romancer" and the chronic exaggerator soon find even their lightest word, their most moderate statement disregarded and themselves treated with contempt more or less lightly veiled.

He who pretends to virtue or to cleverness which he does not possess, receives no credit. YOUTH AND THE AGED

Youth—be tender with age. Life disappoints all of us. The old have known, probably, loss and worse than loss, bitter disillusionment. Today their sight is dim, their hearing dull, their movements are slow and feeble. That is loss enough. Do not make the failure of the body, the dimming of the mind, any harder to bear. Don't remind them that their race is all but over, while yours is all before you. To their state you must come-as you will

In the natural course of events, the present acts are a sequence of the past. Accordingly, as we lived yesterday we will live today, and we may rest assured that it is all to the base of the Barons, by Bulwer Lytton. A lad, tender, gentle, full of pity for an old man has given him help, help sorely needed. And the old man, lifting trembling hands, prays: "God shield thy old age, children, with hearts like Prayer can obtain everything; it can open the windows of Heaven, and shut the gates of hell; it can put a holy constraint upon God, and while thou livest, while thou hast time, be good."

The future is a yawning void. It offers the present no tangible guarantee. We have no control over time. Why should we boast of the future? Are we the masters of time? Can we check the setting of the sun or the ebbing of the tides? We are sure of one thing—the present. We have it in our hands, and it rests with us to mould it into a good that is lasting, and which will be recorded in the book of life as an asset.

With the thought in mind that we prayers today than to resolve to become a saint next week. Today is here, and next week is nowhere, this day is mine; I know not if I shall have so much as one other. God has the past and the future, I will thank Him for the past, I will beg Him for the future. As to the present, with God's help, I will set to work to do my utmost.

CHEER UP Cheer up! This world has not treated you so badly, taking it all in all, and your prospects are pretty good for the next one! Cheer up! Don't darken the sunshine with your woe begone countenance. The fogs and mists and thunder clouds you think you see, are all within your own brain. Drive them out, and let God's blessed sunlight stream in.

God still loves you, otherwise He would not be so good to you. You must admit/it: He really has been good to you.

True, you have had your losses

True, you have had your losses and your reverses, but you have never yet starved or frozen to death. Our Lord Himself has said: "Having food and raiment, with these we are content."

He has not given you more than this, because He knows that more is unnecessary. And as for the next world, why, you say your daily prayers and hear Mass on Sunday and receive the Sacraments occasionally and try to lead a pretty straight life. straight life.

Now all these are special graces of God. How often you were prevented from committing some great sin by something, you know not what! This is a clear proof that a loving Father is watching over you. You still have your faults, of course. He permits that to keep you from growing proud and to make you pray. Therefore, cheer up! The birds have not all stopped singing nor has the sun been extin-guished.—Annals of St. Anne.

THE GERMAN ELECTION

PROTESTANTS USE FAMILIAR TACTICS AGAINST CATHOLIC CANDIDATES

By Rev. Dr. Wilhelm Baron von Capitaine

Conjecture of every sort, accompanied by astonishment in some quarters, has followed the election of Marshal Hindenburg as President of Germany. Mostly it is said that the love the Germans hold for the venerable soldier because of his war exploits, and the glamour of the days when Germany was holding the world at bay by arms, account for his victory. However much that may be true, it also is true that there was much religious bias injected into the campaign. Now that the heat of the struggle is over, it may be appraised.

There is a particular significance in the raising of the religious issue because there was no such issue in the case of the first German President, Ebert. That leader's relation to the Catholic Church is generally not understood. It is simply this: Ebert was the son of a Catholic father and was christened in the Catholic Church, but he was educated by his Protestant mother in the Protestant confession. These facts explain why such ecclesiastical representatives as the Papal Nuncio assisted in the last rites for the dead President Ebert, however, was a Socialist, and since most of the German Socialists are little more than atheists, Catholicism and Protestantism made little political difference in his election But when Hindenburg was opposed by the Catholic Marx for the succession to the Presidency, the old religious issue was immediately dragged forth. It certainly had considerable share in deciding the election. Some idea of the vigor with which this issue was fought may be gained from the expressions of the leaders and the press.

The Evangelisches Gemeindeblatt,

letters, even, were not too much for the foes of the Church. In spots Marx was labelled a "servant of the priests" and it was declared that it was the intention of Rome and the Pope to make Germany a vassal State. The same men who made these ridiculous charges then went into Catholic districts and attempted to confuse the voters and win them over by declaring that the Pope greatly desired the elec-tion of Hindenburg.

In all this campaign, it is true,

Marx did not lack supporters among the Protestants. Notably, Dr. Baumgarten, professor of the Uni-versity of Kiel and preacher at that institution, wrote a long series of articles in the Frankfurter Zeitung n his support. Dr. Marx, said this student, had performed such service to the nation and was a man of such sterling character, political astuteness and fairness that all who loved their country should vote for him.

PROTESTANT PLEA FOR MARK Dr. Adolf von Harnack, the Berlin University professor who is the best writer in Germany on dogmatic history, also wrote a compelling "Appeal to the Protestant Ger-mans" in which he concluded that Dr. Marx should be chosen to head the nation. Dr. von Harnack set forth the exceptional qualities the man must have who could save Germany in this critical time.

"Whoever has these qualities," he continued, "must be elected. Marx exemplifies them; Hinden-burg, whom we all view with reverence, does not have them. The religion of the candidate must not be regarded. It might be if beside Marx we had a Protestant of the same qualities. Now, however, we have no choice; there is no one but Marx. There also is the question whether for the salvation of religious, political and cultural liberties a German Nationalist would be better than a Catholic, and likewise the question whether the Nationalist would do more for internal peace and spiritual freedom.
"In the condition in which we find ourselves, all religious considera-tions must for the moment be put aside. Marx must be elected, and by the aid of the German Protest-

It is not too much to say that these religious agitations brought about the election of the aged Hindenburg, who, in truth, is be-loved of Catholics and Protestants alike but who because of his age and military career seemed not the equal of Marx for the office.

MARX FELICITATES HINDENBURG As a matter of fact, the Protestant sections gave Hindenburg his winning votes. Saxony, Wurttem-berg, Baden and the Protestant dis-tricts of East Prussia, Liegnitz, Thuringia, Pommern, gave him the majority of their ballots. Catholic Bavaria, where opposition to Prussia and the Center party goes hand-inhand with the choice of monarchy, also gave him a heavy vote. However, Hanover, Hindenburg's home; Berlin and its environs, the Hansa towns — Bremen, Hamburg, etc. — and all the occupied Rhineland gave a good majority to Mary.

good majority to Marx.
Out of it all came another affirmacion of the strength of the Center Catholic Marx, and the fine public spirit of the Catholics, who willingly acknowledge Hindenburg as President. This spirit is exempli-fied in Dr. Marx's warm letter of felicitation to Hindenburg, in which he declared his intention to work with the new President for the peace of the world and the welfare of the

A PROTESTANT POET HONORS OUR LADY

By Rev. Dr. Wilhelm Baron von Capitaine (Cologne Correspondent, N. C. W. C.)

Cologne.-A Protestant German Cologne.—A Protestant German baron, Ernst von der Planitz, who incidentally was born in America, has recently made himself famous in the annals of Catholic literature by writing a volume of poems entitled "The Life of Mary: The Book of Our Lady, the Mother of God." The work has been highly praised as a piece of literature by critics in two countries.

Not content with writing the book, Baron von der Planitz has printed and bound it himself, as an additional act of piety. There is no similar record in German literature.

A touching little story attaches to this remarkable feat. Ernst von der Planitz, scion of an ancient Protestant German family, was born in New York in 1857, after his parents had emigrated to America He was educated in the United States until he was ten years old. Then upon the death of his father, he was brought back to Bremen and later was placed in a monastery in Wurttemberg.

VOWS TO HONOR VIRGIN

One day the little boy, who could speak no German, went into the Cologne cathedral while a solemn Catholic service was in progress. It made such an impression on him that he never forgot it. The piety of the nuns at Wurttemburg in-creased his respect for the Catholic reach the top. From the foot, the hill loomed up and it seemed like a somewhat impossible and improbable feat to mount to the top. Step by step, we are carried to the very tip and we laugh at our fears. One who worries and frets about tomorrow experiences the same sensarous description.

honor of all the Protestants demands unconditional combat against an Ultramontane (Catholic) President." in the College de France. Here he increased his knowledge and admiration of Catholic life and culture. At the same time he determined to learn the art of printing and bookbinding.

the shadow of the wonderful Cathedral of Notre Dame, that Ernst von der Planitz made a vow to write a work in hohor of the Blessed Virgin, and to print and bind it himself.

Years passed, and the young baron became famed as a writer. Among his works were some which had the piety of Catholics and the charity of nuns in peace and war as their theme. their theme.

Then, a grown man with the flush of success upon him, he recalled the of success upon him, he recalled the pious vow he had made in the shadow of Notre Dame. He took up the task of love, and finally completed the book of poems to Our Lady. That the full promise might be fulfilled he printed and bound it with his own hands. Thus German literature was given its first volume. literature was given its first volume printed and bound by its own in honor of the Blessed Virgin. But none, say many of the critics, has given to German Catholics a volume so exquisite as Ernst von der Planitz's "Life of Mary." Even the Figaro, of Paris, has added its tribu e to his work.

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE

Professor Bordiga, the head of the new school, has announced the establishment of a chair of ecclesiastical architecture. Venice may thus boast of being the first and only city in Italy to include practi-cal liturgical instruction in architectural courses. Even the School of Architecture of Rome offers no of Architecture of Rome oners no such course, although it has been pointed out that over 80 per cent. of the most famous architectural monuments of Italy are of a religious character.

At the request of the Ministry, Mgr. Giovanni Constantini has been appointed to give this course. It is stated that this appointment shows the desire of the Italian government to reward the notable work accom-plished by Mgr. Constantini in behalf of the renaissance of sacred art in Italy.

But the fact still remains that the Jew as well as Gentile was excoriated in the Old Testament for "seeking the truth from the dead." The only novel feature of modern spiritism is its hold upon the present generation. Dr. Coakley's work is the death knell of the Doyle idea that Spiritism is a religion. The chapters that comprise his book are clear, learned and mortally logic expositions of the evil of Spiritism's claims, with a generous array of lucid arguments to defend Christianity's impregnable position.

NEVIL HENSHAW

The Literary Digest says: A man who loves the good brown earth is writing. He knows the good and simple people of the Louisiana marshes, with their Gallic humor and vivacity, their courtesy and kindness under rough clothes and circumstances. He has found delight in writing about them, and because of that he makes reading of them a delight. He has made a book of charm and truth.

ST. ANTHONY'S CORNER

So worldwide is the devotion to the great Wonder-Worker at his Graymoor Shrine that we received a thanksgiving letter all the way from Simla, India. His clients are to be found on every continent and in every clime. However, we regret that we cannot publish all the thanks-givings that are sent us, and part of which appear in "The Lamp" Magazine every month. A sample copy of this will be sent to those intesested. These are a few of cknowledgements of gratitude: acknowledgements of gratitude:

O. L. K., Koch, Mo.; "Rev, Father: I wish to have published in thanksgiving to St. Anthony and asked my friends to do so. Just eight days later while I was cleaning my locker the pin fell at my feet. I was more than surprised, for I had gone over the things several times. I am very grateful to St. Anthony."

F. M. H., Providence, R. I.; "Rev, Dear Father: Enclosed find a thank offering which I promised to good St. Anthony if my petition was granted for my brother to obtain a position. It seems as though he would give up if one didn't come soon. So I began another Novena, and I said I would try again for St. Anthony in the reseasion, and this time it was answered. I am very grateful, and as soon as circumstances are better I will send more."

D. H. K., Chevy Chase, Md.: "Rev, Friars:

Due to your Novena I recovered in a miraculous manner from an operation. I enclose an intention to be remembered in the Novena intention to put on the Feast of St. Anthony, I condition in the Novena intention to see the period of St. Anthony, I condition in the Novena intention to your Novena I recovered in a miraculous and pression and the Novena intention to put on the Feast of St. Anthony, I c

The Friars will be pleased to enter your petitions, and place them at St. Anthony's famous Graymoor Shrine and send you the Rosary League Manual, which contains prayers and directions for the Perpetual Novena. Address your petitions to:
