Memories.

When twilight's hush is drawing nigh
And thence the blue shadows lie,
Fond memories cluster thick and fast
Around the dear old buried past;
"Tis then I dream of rosy hours,
Faith, hope and love in wooded bowers,
And merry voices low and sweet,
And converse fraught with joy complete.

Still brighter visions round me cling,
When song birds round me are carolling,
How that we pledged our hearts' pure vows
Beside the rippling stream's soft flow,
And strolled the woodlands through and through
For clovers red and violets blue,
And smiling, laughing lily bells,
The pride of moss entangled dells.

These vanished years they come and go
Like spectres gliding to and fro,
Across my weary, songless path
That lies along life's stormy path;
But soon, beyond the sun-kissed hills,
When freed from earthly cares and ills,
I'll meet the loved and brave of yore,
And years the perfect past no more.

The Sea.

Dawn is dim on the dark soft water,
Soft and passionate, dark and sweet;
Love's own self and the deep sea's daughter
Pair and flawless from face to feet;

Paired and flawless from face to feet;
Paired and flawless from face to feet;
Paired and flawless from face to feet;
Paired and flawless from face to feet;

So they sang; but for men that love her
Bonds that bear not her word in vain,
Earth beside her and heaven above her,
Keen but shadows that wax and wane,
Softer than sleep's are the sea's caresses,
Kinder than love's are the sea's kisses,
Blither than spring's when her flowerful tresses
Shake forth sunlight and shine with rain.

All the strength of the waves that perish
Swells beneath me and laughs and sighs,
Laughs to know that it lives and dies;
Dies for joy of its life, and lives,
Thrilled with joy that its brief death gives,
Death whose laugh or whose death for gives
Change that hide it outside and rise.

SELECT STORY.

The First Harvest.

It was the tenth day of November, and the fall term of Harcroft Academy had closed that afternoon.

John Lane, a pupil who had not missed an hour of the term, was watering the cattle on the farm of Jeremy Brewer, where he had worked through the summer for wages, and through the fall, what time he could spare from his studies, for his board. It was a pleasant place perched on a high hill in the northwest nearly a mile below the large, low, red house, the great barn with open doors, the rambling out-buildings, the old elms, their bare boughs meeting above the brown road, the huge, red oxen drinking from the mossy trough by the roadside, all illuminated by the light of the low sun, made a perfect picture. The soft Indian summer mist, that had lain all day like a veil of gauze on the distant hills, was touched by the sunset splendor and the spires of the village were glowing. The boy's face, as he stood alone under the bare trees watching the cattle drink, was grave and thoughtful. Longfellow's "Lost Youth" had been read in the closing exercises of the school that afternoon and the suggestive, musical refrain had been saying itself over in his brain ever since. He was fifteen years old, and could understand with the world all before him that "the thoughts of youth are long and long thoughts." But that "a boy's will is the wind's will," was not so clear to him, a boy with square brow and chin, a firm mouth, clear steady gray eyes and quiet manner. He felt himself strong--strong to work, to study, to win something worthy in the world--and he meant to do his best. He was now trying to settle the question with himself whether he should leave school or not. He was an eager student and he knew that he should never give up his studies as long as health and a few spare hours each evening were his. He was alone in the world, with his own fortune to make, and his mind was full of ambitious plans. He believed he could go on with his work now, earning regular wages, and still keep ahead of his classmates who were preparing for college. One classmate he had, indeed, and one only, whom he never had outstripped--Philip Evans, the lame boy of the class, and his nearest friend; but Philip had no hope of going to college. Dear Phil--John's #### face softened whenever he thought of him.

The soft rose color on the hills had faded to purple, and the first large star trembled in the twilight as the great oxen turned toward the barn and a joyous barking down the road announced the coming of Jeremy Brewer and his wife, who had attended the Academy examination that afternoon in honor of John. They contrasted somewhat oddly as they sat in the open buggy. Mr. Brewer, short, robust and jolly; Mrs. Brewer, tall, slender and erect, with a delicate, serious face; but they both smiled kindly down upon John as the fat farmhouse pranced by him, with Room, the house dog, bounding ahead, and Mr. Brewer flourished his whip above his head as John lifted his hat to them.

A generous volume of smoke was pouring from the kitchen chimney, the sight of which sent a grateful glow to Mrs. Brewer's heart.

"John is a boy of unusual consideration, Jerry," she remarked, as her husband helped her to alight. She was a gentle, precise woman, with a liking for long words and a profound respect for Harcroft Academy, from which she had graduated thirty-five years before.

"That's so!" heartily assented Mr. Brewer. "And he's walked home, got a good fire started and gone about the chores, while I was hitchin' up the horse and ploddin' after. John's always on hand."

Their own six children were all grown, married and settled in homes of their own, and the kindly hearts of the lonely couple were full of good-will toward the homeless boy who did their work so faithfully and was so thoughtful and many.

Ten years before, one hot summer afternoon, John Lane's father, a strong young farmer, had been drowned, by the capsizing of his boat in a sudden thunder squall, which struck him as he was crossing the pretty lake north of the village. He was carrying a doctor who had asked him to take him across the lake to visit a patient. It was thought he might have saved himself, but he was seen struggling heroically through the boiling waves and blinding rain to save the doctor, who could not swim, and before help could reach them they were down together. His wife died at twenty-four, brokenhearted, the neighbors said, by his death, leaving her boy, a child of six, with no near relatives in the world. The small property left him was wasted by a dishonest guardian, until all that remained of it was a tract of neglected pasture land, thickly overgrown by scrubby birch and spruces, which adjoined Jeremy Brewer's farm. This forlorn remnant, good Mr. Brewer, who had lately been installed in the rascally guardian's place, meant to "improve" for John.

"Here is the paper, John," said Mr. Brewer at the supper table, handing over to him the Harcroft News, moist from the press. Other publications must bear distinctive names. This village sheet was "the paper" with Mr. Brewer.

On the local page that night was this item:

"Two dollars a single horse-load will be paid for evergreen boughs in this village. Two hundred loads wanted."

Nearly every house in the village was banked with green boughs in winter, and as John read, this thought flashed through his mind, "Could the first fruits of his neglected acre be the boughs of this scrubby evergreen that now encumbered the ground?"

Mr. Brewer had finished his supper, and sat tilted back from the table, using a tooth-pick made from a goose-quill, which he carefully kept in his vest pocket when not in use. He was studying John's face intently as the boy read. His own face expressed content and satisfaction, and at intervals a long, deep, rumbling sound came up from his throat, which was sufficiently startling to those who heard it for the first time.

Mrs. Brewer rolled her napkin neatly into its silver ring, and glanced nervously at John and then at her husband, said gently:

"Dear Jerry, I am afraid you are getting dyspeptic! You never used to emit those--those guttural eruptions after your meals, I am sure."

Mr. Brewer came forward on his chair legs, with his toothpick held aloft.

"Them, what, Martha?" he ejaculated. Then hesitatingly, as if her meaning began to dawn upon him: "Oh,--I know now what you mean, wife; but never mind, I'm getting old, and I ain't handsome now, and can't be expected to keep up the style I used to." And he shook his fat sides with silent laughter.

Mrs. Brewer gave her husband a mild, indulgent, but somewhat pathetic smile and began to take away the tea things.

John was painfully conscious, from much reading and observation, and certain instincts of his own, that his guardian's manners were not those of a gentleman, but he thought it well to bear in mind another fact he had noted, that many worthy, hard-working men who had led pure and beneficent lives; had manners like Mr. Brewer's.

"Martha's never got acquainted with me, John, and we've lived together almost forty years," he continued solemnly, with a twinkle in his eye, as he watched his wife moving about.

"Now, Jerry, husband!" began his wife, protestingly.

"It's a fact, wife. You don't mistake to this day what an old dot I am, and love me just as well as if I'd read them twelve books of the Aeneid as you have, John," he broke out.

"Who in time was the Aeneid? I've never dared to ask Mrs. Brewer. I reckon he was a kind of a car of some old country or other."

Mrs. Brewer's gentle face was a comic picture of distress as she looked appealingly to John, who was laughing with Mr. Brewer.

"Don't believe his nonsense. He isn't an ignoramus, John!" she explained. "He has excellent judgment--much better than mine--and such a good heart!"

"Poor mother!" said Mr. Brewer, pityingly, "she's always stood up for me and done her best to make a gentleman out of me; but I was made fat and she was made thin, and we've had to keep so in spite of ourselves. Well, John, read something to us." And John read the notice quoted above.

Mr. Brewer slapped his knee.

"Here, John, is a chance for you, my boy!" he shouted gleefully.

"Yes, I was thinking so if I can manage to pay you for a horse and my board while I am cutting and hauling."

"That's easy to manage. Why, John, you can take six loads a day in--all down hill, you see, and it's just plain to cut them and lop off the boughs."

The next morning Mr. Brewer rode down to the village, and before noon had bargained to deliver fifty loads of boughs, in season to protect the cellars from frost. Then, postponing his own wood-cutting, he went to work with John, and before a week the face of the neglected pasture was seen to be gradually losing its shaggy growth.

"The chores will have to be done, night and morning, John," Mr. Brewer had said, "and if you will help do them it shall pay for your board. I and my team, workin' what daylight there is, these short days, are worth two dollars and a half a day; and I reckon I'll take something over two weeks to cut and haul 'em."

The dry, mild, Indian summer days held on nearly through November, and they were days of the happiest activity for John. Up in the morning before light to feed the horse, grind the axe, and do the farm chores before beginning the day's work, breakfasting by lamplight and off to the pasture in the gray dawn, harnessing old Prince down the long hill with his fragrant load, and then, in the evening sitting down in his balsam-scented garments, by the pleasant, open fire in the lamp-light, with his beloved books, Mr. Brewer nodded over his paper, Mrs. Brewer knitting, with a cat and Moon on the hearth rug at her feet--it was, indeed, a happy time for homeless John Lane.

Continued Next Week.

"On Lack of Conscience as a Means of Success."

The following closes an editorial in the July Century with the above title: "The fact is that there is altogether too much reverence for rascals, and for rascally methods, on the part of tolerable decent people. Rascality is picturesque, doubtless, and in fiction it has even its moral uses; but in real life it should have no toleration; and it is, as a matter of fact, seldom accompanied by the ability that it brags.

"One proof that the smart rascal is not so smart as he thinks, and as others think, is that he so often comes to grief. He arrives at his success through his knowledge of the evil in men, he comes to grief through his ignorance of the good in men. He thinks he knows 'human nature,' but he only knows half of it. Therefore he is constantly in danger of making a fatal mistake. For instance, his excuse to himself for lying and trickery is that lying and trickery are indulged in by others--even by some men, who make a loud boast of virtue before the world. A little more or less of lying and trickery seems to make no difference, he assumes,--especially so long as there is no public display of lies and tricks,--for he understands that there must always be a certain outward propriety in order to ensure even the inferior kind of success he is aiming at. But, having no usable conscience to guide him, he underrates the sensitiveness of other consciences,--and especially the sensitiveness of that vague sentiment, 'public opinion,'--and he makes a miscalculation, which, if it does not land him in the penitentiary, at least makes him of no use to his respectable allies; therefore of no use to his criminal associates; therefore a surprised, miserable, and vindictive failure."

She Had Brains.

A young poet, not averse to letting strangers know that he was a poet, was one day in the country with a party of friends. Stopping for some milk at a humble farm house, they saw an old fashioned room in a small outbuilding.

Several of the party had never before seen a rag carpet woven, among the number the young poet.

After watching the process for several minutes, he said, in a patronizing tone:

"That looks simple, but I dare say, grandmother, I could weave a poem easier than I could weave a yard of that carpet."

"Like enough," replied the aged weaver, simply, with no intention of placing the young man in an embarrassing position before his friends, "like enough, sir; for, after all, it takes some brains to do this."--Youth's Companion.

A Mammoth Building.

Buildings eight and ten stories and some even twelve and fourteen stories high are no uncommon sight in our large cities. And among these mammoth structures is one which is now being erected in Chicago by a firm of well-known publishers of that city.

It is to be ten stories in height above the basement and the frame is to be entirely of steel--a novelty in the way of building. It will contain fifteen miles of steel railway; twelve miles of steam pipe; seven acres of floors, the boards of which if laid end to end would reach from Albany to Boston some two hundred miles. If the cement used in the building were in barrels piled one upon another, the pile would be two miles high and the plaster would cover an ordinary street for more than a mile. In the whole structure there will be some 3700 tons of steel. The building, when finished, will probably be unequalled in the west.--Detroit Free Press.

BLEEPSLESS NIGHT,

made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the Remedy for you. Sold by Geo. V. Hand.

Gems of Thought.

When you doubt, do not act. Mind unemployed is mind unenjoyed. He who believes the truth should himself be true.

The best doctors are Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman. Beware of a man who secus to doubt your married happiness. No man who is wretched in his own heart and feeble in his own work, can help others.

Every man should bear his own grievances rather than detract from the comforts of others. Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of our friends upon them. Serving riches, instead of making riches serve you, is the most pitious of all poverty. It is slavery. People who boast that they never did any harm are generally those who haven't done much good.

We must teach more by our example than by our advice, or else we shall be poor pleaders for the right. Every man feels instinctively that all the beautiful sentiments in the world weigh less than a single lovely action. Frugality, diligence, punctuality, variety--these are the grand foundations from which money, and all real values and values, spring for man.

A contented mind is the first condition of happiness, but what is the first condition of a contented mind? You will be disappointed when told what this all important thing is, it is so common, so near at hand, and so many people have so much of it and yet are not happy. They have too much of it, or else the kind that is not best suited to them. What is the best thing for a stream? It is to keep moving. If it stops it stagnates. So the best thing for a man is that which keeps the currents going, the physical, moral and intellectual currents. Hence the secret of happiness is--something to do; so congenial work. Take away the occupation of all men and what a wretched world it would be. Half of it would commit suicide in less than ten days.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 25, 1890.

Swimming Tournament.

A large number of people were attracted to the wharves on Monday afternoon to witness the swimming by the young men and boys of Wolfville.

The next on the programme was a race for boys under fourteen years. In this the contestants were Benton Quinn, Stanley Gilmore and Jack Heales.

The programme was then brought on. The first paper was read by Mr E. B. Newcombe, of Sheffield's Mills, subject "School-houses and Grounds."

Two other papers were grouped with this one, viz, that on "Health," by Principal McLeod, of Kentville Academy; and that on "Physical Training," by Principal Smith, of Windsor Academy.

The first paper in the afternoon session was Mr Smith's. Physical training was receiving attention in the colleges, and in fact was regarded as indispensable in a thorough education.

The last paper of the day was read by Principal M. S. Read, of Wolfville High School, on the subject "Teachers' Salaries."

About twenty of the young men of Wolfville assembled in Witter's Hall on Wednesday evening and formed themselves into a fire and protection company.

Berwick News.

The Methodist Church are going to thoroughly renovate their place of worship; repairs will begin this week.

Several nice houses are nearing completion here, two of them very modern style, which adds greatly to the beauty of the village.

A widow lady from Wales purchased Mrs Skinner's fine residence last week. Mrs Skinner will go to California where her daughter is very ill.

The firm of F. A. Clark & Son are in full blast, having several large buildings in course of construction in various parts of this and adjoining counties.

Messrs Pineo & Clark are pushing things in the Foundry. We noticed a nice neat furnace just completed. They have lately undertaken furnace-work, and it must surely prove a success.

The Baptist Church opened their new vestry on Sunday, 13th. It will be used for preaching service till the audience room is completed. On Tuesday evening, 15th, their Strawberry Feast was a success. Net proceeds, $64.

One very noticeable feature here is the well-conducted schools. Quite a number of students are leaving to-day to attend the examinations in Kentville and Bridgetown, where they each expect to succeed in getting a license.

Mr W. V. Brown, of Yarmouth, was here last Friday and bought a large tract of land south of the R. R. Station. The intention is to open streets, and lay it out in building lots. Several lots are to be given away; one for a hotel for the enterprising man; also a lot for a church edifice; a lot for a school house, and one for a factory. Here is an opening for men of capital and push.—Monitor.

Teachers' Association.

The Teachers' Association of the Inspectorial district of Kings and Hants met at Kentville Academy on the 17th July. It had been nearly two years since this body had met, the last time being at Windsor. The meeting was called to order at 11 a. m. by the President, Inspector Roscoe.

At first it was feared the attendance would be small; but, after the arrival of the morning express, these fears proved groundless, and nearly one hundred teachers from both counties enrolled themselves as members.

Friday morning Miss West, of Kentville Academy, taught an object lesson in Botany to her pupils. She varied this with singing and calisthenic exercises, and all showed the work of an exceedingly clever and successful teacher.

For best map of North America, 1st, Minnie W. Brown, Wolfville; for best original design, 1st, Florence Anslow, Windsor; 2d, Ethel Yeaton, Hantsport; 3d, May Sutherland, Hantsport; for best copy book, grade 5, 1st, Helena Schaff, Hantsport; 2d, Ida M. Brown, Windsor; grade 6, 1st, Sadie Shaw, Hantsport; 2d, Wiley Churchill, Hantsport; grade 7, 1st, Cassie Mosher, South Alton; 2d, Geraldine Caldwell, South Alton.

The officers of the Association for the ensuing year are: President—Inspector Roscoe, ex officio; Vice Pres.—Principal Smith; Sec. Treas.—J. I. Bishop.

LOWER ECONOMY, JUNE 25th, 1890. Mr J. B. Morton, Eridgetown, N. S.: DEAR SIR,—I hereby certify that I was troubled with Chronic Diarrhoea for five years, which was brought on by liver and stomach trouble. During that time I had treatment from five doctors and a month's medicine from Pierce's Institution, Buffalo, all of which did me little or no good. Last November I commenced taking Dr Norton's Dock Blood Purifier, at which time I was unable to work and all of my food went to water, dare not eat any meat of any kind and had given up to die. I only used two bottles of the medicine and am now well and strong, and would highly recommend it to all who are affected as I was. Yours truly, CHARLES W. McLELLAN.

Cambridge.

"Cambridge Glee Club" held a strawberry festival Tuesday, 23d inst. It was a decided success. There is no doubt but there would have been a large crowd had it not been for the busy season; the farmers being in the midst of haying. Nevertheless a goodly number assembled and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The Berwick Band was in attendance. They acquitted themselves in a manner that was a credit to themselves. Their presence was a great help to the enjoyment of the day.

The special feature of the programme was a base-ball match between the C. G. C.'s and Waterville, which resulted in a victory for the former. Some very good playing was done on both sides, especially the first half of the game. The change of battery on the Waterville team was a mistake, which they soon saw and rectified. A pretty double play was made by Munro, short stop, and Cox, 2d base. Ellis pitched a good game for the C. G. C.'s. Moshier, Carlton and Lawson worked well for the other side. The following are the scores:

Table with 2 columns: Player Name and Score. C. G. C.'s, NINE INNINGS. Cox, 2 b and e..... 3; Munro, 4 b..... 1; Craig, 1st b..... 5; Knowlton, r f..... 2; Ellis, p..... 2; Sawyer, 3d b..... 1; Webster, c and 2d b..... 2; White, c f..... 1; 20.

Table with 2 columns: Player Name and Score. WATERVILLE, NINE INNINGS. Moshier, p..... 0; Beah, 1st b..... 1; Carlton, 2d b..... 1; Osborne, 2d b..... 2; Lawson, 3d b..... 3; Brown, s..... 1; Magsoun, r f..... 1; White, s f..... 2; Wallace, l f..... 1; 13.

The C. G. C.'s did not take their next inning.

W. Wallace, from Wolfville, umpired in a manner that was entirely satisfactory. After the match was a 100 yards dash, which was won by F. W. Webster, with B. Wallace a good second. Wallace was handicapped four yards. The running high jump was taken by Charlton with Webster a good second.

The crowd now repaired to the Hall where refreshments were served. After which the Band discoursed more of its music, which was enjoyable to all. Soon after all dispersed for their respective homes, thoroughly satisfied with their day's pleasure.

THE BOOMER'S WAYS.

How an Old Farmer was Cured of the "City Fever."

Watchtower, Kan., is one of the cities of the West that has seen a genuine boom...

"I've got a farm that I want to trade for a city lot," he explained. "My oldest girl wants a taste of city life...

"Well, you are a three-thousand-dollar lot," said the agent. "I'll take you to see some of the finest city lots in Watchtower."

"Get right in, and we'll ride out to the lots," he said, politely. "How far is it?" asked the farmer...

"Oh, not very far," replied the agent, assuringly. "We got into the buggy and the agent drove rapidly through the main avenue of the city."

"Mister," said the agriculturist, slowly getting down out of the buggy. "Do you know what farm-house about two miles back on the road we've just come over, toward the city?"

"He has been pulled down by a manufacturer," said the agent. "The object I had seen fitting on the surface was the dorsal fin of a shark."

It has been well said that married couples should study each other's weak points for the sake of their own peace of mind.

Men should remember that many of our privileges are founded on compromises and concessions. It is so in the world political, and the policy that makes a state prosperous and happy is not based on a homo sapiens.
