Ethel M. Dell's New Novel.

Miss Dell's new novel opens up a fresh field of romantic feeling, and she works it with the rapid skill and vigor which have put her in the front rank of novelists of the emotions. "The Obstacle Race" is run by a heroine of sympathetic character, a young woman disillusioned with the world of fashion and frivolity, who endeavors to return to the less complex and more honest and human ways of life. The obstacles are the associations and entanglements from which it is so hard to fling away. With the aid of a great lover she ultimately conquers the last obstruction. A dramatic narrative, worked out upon a delightful stage with the aid of a large and interesting company of actors—one of Miss Dell's most enthralling novels. Only $1.50 post paid.

CHAPTER XXII. THE FRIENDS SHE LEFT BEHIND.

"My dear fellow," he said, in tones of vexation, "I'm afraid I have had news for you there, Miss Alwyn has left St. Clair's these three months."

"Left! Just when I wanted to tell—when I wanted her to say—Now, by all that's unlucky, how I wish I had come earlier! Once more I've been too slow. But I can follow her wherever she is, for of course you know, sir?"

"No more than you do." Then, careful to avoid watching the signs of extreme disappointment on his hearer's face, the doctor, as far as he felt at liberty, told of Sydney's good-bye to him, and the subsequent vacating of the Dale, finishing with:

"No I fear, Drayton, here is a block in the good-luck which you had not calculated on."

"But one that must be got over," said the other, resolutely. "Can you tell me, sir, where the Alwyns came from to St. Clair's? I might get their present whereabouts so."

"I have not the slightest idea, I never heard their former home named."

"Nor anything of their former life? Mr. Alwyn's profession or so forth?"

"Nothing whatever. It has struck me sometimes it was a subject purposely avoided."

Mr. Drayton crumpled up his brows, and for a minute thought intently. Then he asked:

"And you've no clue to what took Miss Sydney away?"

"Not the least. I only surmise, from the peer child's emotion, it was something delicate and painful. As she could not disclose it, I have no right to pry into it. Though as for you—you haven't said if so many words why you want to see her, but, my dear Dick—"

"But I must find her somehow," broke in Mr. Dick, abruptly, "if you can't see me on my way, sir, I suppose no one at St. Clair's can!"

and then, having picked up her rake and hoe, shook hands again, remarking that he would have come on the night before, but had arrived too late, so he took time by the forelock to-day.

"W—my father will be very pleased to see you," said Mary, leading the way with another blush. "He was wondering last week if we should ever see you again."

"See me! Why, of course you would. I wanted very much indeed to get here. For, Miss Dacie, I am so hoping you can tell me something of your friend at the Dale—of Miss Alwyn especially."

The bright color left Mary's cheeks with a chill rush. To hear of Sydney had come. Only that!

"I can tell no more than that she is gone," she said, thankful that on such a theme she might be pardoned sadness.

"And you can't help grieving over it, can you?"

"Indeed, not!" turning her head away.

"And I'm sorry too. On your account"—he was staring determinedly at her, but Mary kept her face invisible—"and here too, and my own, I'd have given a good deal to have found her here. Can't you possibly do us all a good turn by putting me on the track to see her?"

"If I could I would, Mr. Drayton" (it cost something, that assertion)—"but I have no knowledge of where she is."

"Nor her mother?"

"Mrs. Alwyn was at Zurich a month ago."

"Zurich. H'm! It will be a round-about road if I have to trace her from there. But one or the other I must see. Propriety says Mrs. Alwyn. Preference says Miss. The lady mother and I seemed mutually repellent; while Miss Sydney—Mary swallowed a great heart-burning during that pause—"

"she would answer the question I have put in a moment. You'll give me your good wishes to speed me to her, won't you, Miss Dacie?"

By good fortune in came the doctor and Mrs. Dacie just then. With a murmur of affirmation Mary escaped to the other end of the tidy, shabby room, and busied herself with mending, while the father and mother chatted with their caller.

Place of which Mr. Drayton read the truth pretty plainly, and had his deduction confirmed when, the three-mile trudge over, they again neared the Gate House.

For Mary hastened to meet them, exclaiming, "Oh, papa! have you seen the man from Oakleigh Place? No! Ah, then he is gone on to Dr. McAndrew! You were wanted to attend the house-keeper. If only you had had poor Punch, now, you would have been back in time. Isn't it unlucky?"

"Clair's usual," said the poor old suppliant medicus, rather bitterly; and Mr. Drayton left them, to mature a fine desire just planted in his brain.

He took another walk by himself that afternoon, and admitted its aim that evening to the rector.

"Your parish spreads so far, sir, you ought to have a good cob for the outlying parts. I looked out such an animal as would suit you to-day at the farm up the road, where you like the people."

"Hammerston's? Ay, they are good folks, and have excellent cattle. But, friend Richard, such a luxury means money; and I've not enough to spare for that. Besides, my expense would never keep the creature in health."

"Just so, sir. But there's Dr. Dacie killing himself, and losing his patients, for want of a quadruped. Couldn't you and he keep a cob between you? I'll leave you to settle terms (without mentioning me, though, please), but the fact is, I've bought that brown nag of Hammerston's, and I want to get it into Dacie's stable somehow. I know Miss Alwyn would have managed it. You won't refuse the offer in her stead, will you, sir?"

So the upshot of that device was that a few hours after Mr. Drayton left St. Clair's next day ("It's much rather have stayed longer," he assured Mary; "but I really do so want to find Miss Alwyn. I hope I shall return, with her leave, and tell you what she and I had to talk about, before long") a servicable steed was discovered crunching oats at Punch's manger, and for the present Mr. Vaughan had to carry off his share of the guilty secret as best he could, determining to make a clean breast of the conspiracy the very next time Mr. Drayton came down.

But, though they all seemed vaguely to expect to see him soon, the year wore out without his reappearing. A note reached the Gate House early in October, saying:

"Dear Miss Dacie—Shortly after leaving St. Clair's I met the Major Villiers whom I had once seen there. By his assistance I was put in the way of obtaining information which I hinted at to you. Unfortunately, I have not had the pleasure of seeing Miss Alwyn at present. I thought you might be expecting to hear this, which is all I feel myself as yet free to communicate. Kindly accept my best regards, and believe me, very faithfully yours,

"RICHARD DRAYTON."

Whatever did it mean? Had he, through her former guardian, offered himself to Sydney and been rejected? Impossible! Was there to be a private engagement? Why, what for? And yet what else could the semi-coherence betoken? Mary read her note fifty times, surreptitiously cried over it; then, in a rage of her weakness, nearly burned it. Relented, hid it in an innermost drawer, took it out and looked at it at night; and continually, with some reason maybe, called herself for her pains the very biggest goose, or any other emblem of absurdity, that ever stepped!

CHAPTER XXIII. ROCKS AHEAD!

That September evening when Sydney went back from Stillcote Upton to Capel Moor, so grateful had she felt at the manifest desire for her return that she would willingly have taken double duties on herself for Jean Hurst or for her brother. But in one direction this impulse had no response, but was steadily repelled. A certain change came over Mr. Hurst's bearing toward her. He had been always grave, reserved, save when he warmed up to some subject under study, or on those notable occasions when he talked with Sydney on their early morning and homeward walks together. Still, there had been a brightening in all his aspects as the hours he evidently enjoyed came round, and Sydney's apt questioning and pertinent calls upon the wealth his splendid memory held roused him unflinchingly to cheerful activity, if not positively active cheerfulness.

Now this was altered. As unobtrusively but completely as when between ere and dawn myriads of silent snowflakes spread a white shroud over the living earth, so some spell was cast over these signs of reawakening interest in existence. The books he gave before were finished, certainly, and not a shade of his usual attention or thanks did Mr. Hurst remit. A chair would be always placed for his interpreter of pages, in warmth and light between fire and window, though he no longer seated next would listen, shoulder up against the bookcase, as far off as the room permitted. Furtiveness he grew, that Miss Grey should not read on into the hour allotted to her mid-day walk.

PAINS SO BAD STAYED IN BED

Young Mrs. Beecroft Had Miserable Time Until She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Hamilton, Ont.—"I have suffered for three years from a female trouble and consequent weakness, pain and irregularity which kept me in bed four or five days each month. I nearly went crazy with pains in my back, and for about a week at a time I could not do my work."

"I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the Hamilton Spectator and I took it. Now I have no pain and am quite regular unless I over-work or stay on my feet from early morning until late at night. I keep house and do all my own work without any trouble. I have recommended the Compound to several friends."—Mrs. EARLY BEECROFT, 289 Victoria Ave. N., Hamilton, Ontario.

For forty years women have been telling how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored their health when suffering with female ills. This accounts for the enormous demand for it from coast to coast. If you are troubled with any ailment peculiar to women why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It is made from native roots and herbs and contains no narcotics or harmful drugs. For special advice women are asked to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of forty years experience is at your service.

"Bill was a character," he said. And now he's dead. And since the day his spirit went I have been wondering what he meant. A character! His word was good. With all throughout his neighborhood.

His ways were gentle and he smiled much like a child. He never bickered men for gain. But strove to cause another pain. And yet to what of good he knew. For sixty long years he was true.

He had a quaint and curious style. And liked to smile; He seemed to love the birds and trees. And gloried in the merriment breeze. But in this world of dears and duds. That he could find God everywhere.

He never rose to wealth or fame. But just the touch of genteel grace. To this poor weather-beaten place. A character! That's what we said. But we shall miss him now he's dead.

Fashions and Fads. The extensive use of panels continues. The trimmed armhole is a new feature.

Frings of animal tails is used on the fur wraps. Fringe of wool yarn is used to embroider children.

The flat panel back extends from shoulder to hem. Chanille embroideries are seen on coats and dresses.

The irregularity of the hem line continues in vogue. Street dresses and blouses show long flowing sleeves. Black hats have elaborate decorations of jet beads.

Skirts feature pointed effects in panels and hem lines. White evening wraps are lined with vivid colored silks.

Buttons are firmly entrenched in the world of trimmings. Green, yellow, fuchsia and white are favored for evening.

The long unbelted suit coat is only one of the favored styles. Beads, fringe and fur trimming are seen on the new suits.

Toy Pistol Frightens Gunman.

Mrs. Mollie Golden, whose toy pistol frightened her home in New York a man who had threatened her with a revolver and afterwards shot her husband, Samuel, in the arm, says that when she appeared on the scene with her "weapon" and ordered the man to drop his revolver she did not count on her own courage, but his lack of it. "I knew," she said, "that any man coward enough to take advantage of unarmed people wouldn't have any if he felt himself matched. So when I pointed the toy pistol at him and ordered him to drop his gun he turned and ran like a deer."

Aeroplane Riddles Boat With Bullets.

Sweeping down Narragansett Bay with its machine gun wide open, and spraying the water with a rain of bullets, an unidentified aeroplane on August 8 riddled and nearly sank a launch containing five people, severely wounding a girl passenger and slightly injuring a man. Falling to observe frantic signals from the boat, the plane sped on its way. With the boat sinking and the girl in danger from loss of blood, the launch party travelled eight miles to shore to reach medical assistance.

Physical I

and its Bearing on

(By GEL.) INFLUENCE OF EXERCISE ON DIGESTION.

Relation of Exercise to Digestion. Relations of exercise to digestion are very important. A cue amount of muscular exercise seems to be responsible to healthy digestion and easy digestion. One of the serious forms of dyspepsia is the feebleness of the muscular movement of the stomach, which does not produce the churning so essential to digestion.

Strong Abdominal Muscles.—It is generally true that strong abdominal muscles are generally of good digestion, and weakness of the muscles "accompanies" indigestion. Bodily exercise is the best for food.—Hunger aids a strong digestive apparatus.

Exercise and the Secretions.—Respiratory exercise is the best for the complete throwing off of water from the system is as important to health as an ample supply of food. Exercise increases the circulation of the blood, causing a transudation of nutritive material to fill the inter-spaces of rounding textures. It also dilates the blood pressure in the capillaries, thus facilitating the absorption of the waste matter from the spaces of the tissues. In the case of the decreased pressure of the minute veins favors the absorption of a larger quantity of nutritive material, thus rendering the blood richer and more vitalizing.

Exercise and Organs of Movement.—Exercise of muscles, even if it increases their volume, shows that a new substance has replaced the old material, and corroborating general statement that muscular exercise promotes increased growth by increasing the circulation, augmenting, and, in turn, improving the nutritive material. Muscular action develops at the expense of nutritive material, but that is the very reason why exercise in bulk and strength also develops the bones.

Abdominal Breathing.—One sign of the inflation of the lungs is the base, that is the abdominal wall. If the full benefit of lung exercise is to be obtained; to wit, a full, rest and flat abdomen, which are criteria of health. Notice when you expand the chest, how back the abdomen. Notice when you draw in the abdomen.

Physical Development

And its Bearing on Health and Strength.

(By GEE.)
EFFICIENCY OF EXERCISE ON DIGESTION.
 Relation of Exercise to Digestion.—The relations of exercise to digestion are very important. A due amount of muscular exercise seems to be indispensable to healthy digestive function and easy digestion. One of the most serious forms of dyspepsia is due to the feebleness of the muscular movement of the stomach, which impairs the churning motion so essential to digestion.

Weak Abdominal Muscles.—It is anatomically true that strong abdominal muscles are generally found in people with good digestion, and weakness of these muscles accompanies feeble digestion. Bodily exercise is the best means for food—Hunger aids a strong digestive apparatus.

Exercise and the Secretions.—Rapid complete throwing off of waste matter from the system is as important to health as an ample supply of food. Exercise increases the circulation of all arteries, causing augmented translocation of nutritive material into the inter-spaces of the surrounding tissues. It also diminishes the blood pressure in the small vessels, thus facilitating the absorption of the waste matter from the inter-spaces of the tissues. In the same way the decreased pressure of blood in the minute veins favors the absorption of a larger quantity of nutritive material, thus rendering the blood richer and more vitalizing.

Exercise and Organs of Movement.—Movement of muscles, even if it does increase their volume, showing that new substance has replaced worn out material, and corroborating the general statement that muscular action promotes increased growth by quickening the circulation, augmenting and, in turn, improving the appetite. Muscular action develops the bones at the expense of nutritive material, but that is the very reason the muscles gain in bulk and strength. Exercise also develops the bones and joints.

Abdominal Breathing.—One should begin the inflation of the lungs at their base, that is the abdominal portion. If the full benefit of lung exercise is to be obtained; to wit, a full, round chest and flat abdomen, which are the criteria of health. Notice this, that when you expand the chest you draw back the abdomen. Notice also, that when you draw in the abdomen the chest rises and expands. Thus there is mutual breathing by lungs and abdomen, a most important exercise, and strengthening, one easily practised, and bound to give the body a correct position and proportion. If there be a heavy, distended abdomen, one out of proportion to the rest of the body, and often unsightly, this mutual breathing exercise will reduce the unsightliness and contribute to symmetry of parts.

Exercise and the Nerves.—Nervousness is very common among those who do not daily subject their muscles to a sufficient amount of exercise. They get headache, faceache, pains in the back, neuralgia, dyspepsia, suffer from heart palpitation, noises and changes of temperature, grow irritable, lack energy and perseverance. It is known that a nerve left in prolonged inactivity degenerates, becomes relaxed and feeble. Hence the necessity for such exercise as will make it demand nutrition and grow strong.

Exercise and Mind.—Proper exercise of the mind is just as necessary for its health as that of the body. But unfortunately, the mind is apt to be overexercised, especially with children and modern systems of education. Overwork of the mind, even if it be called education, and neglect of physical culture is vicious in every way. The nervous apparatus, and more especially the brain, is the organ of mental powers. Just as the perfection of physical life is dependent on proper exercise of the organs, so the mental capacities in a healthy body are kept efficient by proper employment.

Appreciation of Exercise.—Perhaps one reason that systematic exercise is not appreciated at its full value is that its special object and nature, its adaptation to individual requirements, and its effect upon the different structures of the human frame are imperfectly understood. This arises from the fact that its effects upon any part, but the muscles, are seldom taken into consideration, and hence its vast influence on the organs employed in the vital processes of respiration, circulation and nutrition is overlooked. The evils arising from this mistake are many, for so long as it is popularly thought that systematic exercise gives nothing but muscular power, few of those engaged in intellectual pursuits, to whom sheer muscular power is of little account, care to cultivate it.

Merchant Tells of a Remarkable Case in His Town

Really Sounds Incredible But Well Known Man Testifies To Truth Of It.

Writing from Maxey, Ga., A. J. Gillen, proprietor of a large department store at that place, says: "I have a customer here who was in bed for three years and did not get to a meal at any time. She had five physicians and they gave her up. One bottle of Taniae got her up, on the second bottle she commenced keeping house and on the third she did all the cooking and housework for a family of eight."

This sounds really incredible, but it comes uncoloured from a highly creditable source and is copied verbatim from the letter.

"Taniae is sold by leading druggist everywhere."

July a Fiery Month.

Fire losses in the United States and Canada during the month of July reached the unusually heavy total of $33,355,750. This is some $3,000,000 increase over the 1920 record for July, and $13,000,000 in excess of July, 1919. The July figures this year, as shown by the compilation from the daily reports of The Journal of Commerce, indicate an exceptionally high burning ration for this season of the year. The fire losses of the first seven months of the current year reach a total of $198,282,050, the highest in the history of the country of any year, not including those having large general conflagrations.

The fire losses of the country and the general business stagnation appear to go hand in hand, as with the decrease in business activity and deflation in values the fire losses have shown a tendency to mount month by month. The economic waste of the obliteration by fire of $33,000,000 in property values is a serious one. It constitutes a depletion of the nation's wealth which fire insurance distributes but cannot replace.

The fire underwriters are more or less discouraged by the present trend of losses, as they had hoped that the deflation of war prices would result in a reduction of the fire losses. Moral hazard losses are, however, constantly increasing and materially add to the total loss record. This condition is more serious to the fire underwriters than normally because this year they are facing the steady reduction in their premium volume, and it is doubtful in many of the companies can show an underwriting profit unless the situation materially improves before the end of the year.—Montreal Chronicle.

Swims Across St. Lawrence.

Miss Frances C. Calsley, swimming instructor of the Y.W.C.A. at Quebec, successfully accomplished the feat of swimming across the St. Lawrence River, on August 9, between Levis, and Quebec, before thousands of people, who looked on from the cliffs of Quebec and Levis, as well as from the river side. The young lady has the honor of being the first to attempt the cross-river swim, which was about one mile, but which had to be fought all the way, owing to a very powerful current. The crossing was made in 36½ minutes.

Quote in Canadian Dollars.

Complaint is again being made by buyers of Canadian exports that payment is demanded in terms of American rather than Canadian exchange; this time it is British importers who are objecting—before it was customers in Newfoundland.

Technically the matter appears to be one of business having to do with the individual transaction. The quotation in American funds would undoubtedly be lower in dollars than one in Canadian funds and probably established for the purpose of competing with American manufacturers more particularly in cases where raw materials are imported from that country by Canadian makers.

As to the effect upon Canadian trade relations within the Empire, however, it would seem to be another matter. The impression which has been gained in the cases brought to the attention of THE FINANCIAL POST is that the quotation in American funds is given to provide an additional profit by taking advantage of the fact that United States dollars can be increased when changed into Canadian dollars. The point immediately came up: Why buy in Canada under such conditions?

It would seem to be much better business for Canadian manufacturers and other exporters to state their prices in terms of Canadian dollars—even though the figure may be some higher—and thus encourage inter-Empire trade, establish Canada as a world trade unit and remove any impression that our banking system is controlled from New York.

More important, even, perhaps, is the point that Canadian manufacturers seeking export trade should look to the benefits of good-will in the establishment of permanent connections rather than small advantages that might accrue in the present period of unsettled trade conditions. Satisfied customers whose confidence has been won on the basis of service are the chief factor in the upbuilding of the successful foreign trade of any country.

Rarer Than Diamonds.

"A gem so rare that a diamond seems common in comparison," is a statement that sounds almost unbelievable, yet there is such a substance and it is "rose ebony."

Only about fifty pieces of "rose ebony" are in existence to-day, and, as its composition is limited to such an extent that it is doubtful if there will ever be more than a few hundred pieces at most.

Mrs. Sarah Sewell Jones, of Seattle, holds the secret of the exquisite gem—a jet black substance, nearly as hard as a diamond, yet composed of a material of which rose petals are the base.

Mrs. Jones from childhood has been deeply interested in sculpture, and she early developed remarkable talent. The idea of using rose petals as the basis for a substance with which to work appealed to her as soon as she conceived it. What a wonderful thing it would be, she thought, if she could preserve the beauty of the gardener's fairest flower so that it would live for centuries instead of merely a few days.

Numerous mechanical obstacles confronted her in working out the formula, but she finally found how her object could be attained. Using several other ingredients—the character of which, of course, she keeps secret—she works the rose petals into a plastic composition which she moulds to suit her fancy. Then the piece is put away to harden. Every day Mrs. Jones goes over the mould, working on it so that it will retain its original lines throughout the hardening process.

At the end of three weeks the gem is hard as flint—and then Mrs. Jones puts on the finishing touches with her chisel.

The carving is unlike anything else in the world. In some inexplicable manner it seems to retain all the fresh beauty of the rose, to which is added the artistry of the maker. "Rose ebony" will never be a drug on the market. The process has been known to Mrs. Jones for eight years—and in all that time only fifty or so gems have been made. Even if Mrs. Jones were to devote all her time to the work she could not possibly make more than six a month—which would only mean a few hundred in the course of her lifetime.

No Degrees in Honesty.

A $10 bill is either good or bad. A man is either honest or dishonest. If he is honest he will not cheat or steal or take undue advantage of another man under any circumstances. If he is dishonest, his cheating and stealing will be limited only by his opportunity or his timidity.

The difference between big thieves and little crooks is sometimes a difference of opportunity—more often a difference of courage. The little thief does not steal continually because he is afraid to. The big thief has less timidity—or less imagination, and steals whenever he has a chance. But one is just as dishonest as the other. And often the little fellow is the worst, for he adds cowardice to his crookedness.

A full grown man or woman, trained to life, who does a dishonest action will do another under the same circumstances. A boy or girl, lacking this training, will sometimes become straight with the growth of intelligence.

For the ancient adage about honesty being the best policy is so apparent to common sense that even people who are mentally crooked often turn honest and remain honest, merely because more profit can be had in that manner of life.

It is well to apply the honesty test to yourself, and change your method if you find that under certain circumstances you would take advantage of a fellow creature—legally or illegally. It is well to drop friends that you catch cheating at cards, or at golf, or in business. For the cheat is a particularly despicable form of crook, and deserves no friends whatever.

Never think that a man or a woman is a little dishonest, or dishonest about some things and honest about others. They are 100 per cent. honest or not honest at all. They are honest in everything or honest in nothing. If they are honest, as we believe most people are, they are worthy to be trusted. If they are dishonest, knowing what dishonesty means, the wider berth you give them the better it will be for you.

Adaptable Russians. Convicted by Old Coins. These English sovereigns represented practically all of the English coinage of gold in the year 1871, and were so dated. No doubt some went into circulation, but it is obvious that in a period of nearly fifty years they would automatically have become abraded and would have passed out of circulation many years before the opening of the great war.

Final Meeting Held.

REGATTA OFFICIALS PRESENT REPORTS. At the final meeting of the Regatta Association held last night in the T.A. Armory, it was found that all outstanding accounts had been paid and a substantial balance remained in hand for next year. Medals were presented by the President who made a most interesting address.

Optimism in Dublin over Irish peace negotiations received a shock to-day, when John MacNeil, speaker of the Irish Republican party, in introducing a deputation from Tryrone and Fermanagh counties to Eamon De Valera, Irish Republican leader, delivered a violent attack against Mr. Lloyd George.

When he thinks he has sufficiently mastered the anatomy of the animals and has acquired the necessary dexterity, he appears before the Court to prove his qualifications. Part of his test is to sharpen a slaughterer's knife so perfectly that the trained hand of an expert cannot detect the faintest flaw in its edge.

Another of its functions is to grant licenses for marriages to be performed. These "rulers" were the judges who presided over the first Courts long before the first Nebuchadnezzar reigned over Babylon, precisely as Dr. Hertz, Chief Rabbi of the Jews, and his two assessors conduct the 20th century Court in St. James's Place in East London.

As it seems so venerable an institution this Court, which is known as Beth Din (the House of Judgment) is very sedate and dignified. It has none of the ceremonial of our own Courts of Justice, none of the pomp and splendor of Assize.

In a large room on the first floor of the Court House you will find perhaps a hundred or more Jews of both sexes and all ages assembled, awaiting their turn to present their cases before the tribunal; and meanwhile discussing their grievances in a babel of tongues, ranging from Yiddish to the patois of Russia and Poland—with sympathetic listeners.

As each successive case is called, the parties mount the stairs to the Court, and find themselves in a barely furnished room and in the presence of the Reverend Rabbi, and of his assessors, one sitting on each side of him behind a long table.

The two dominant features of the Beth Din are its silence and its entire absence of all formality. There are no pro or eloquent counsel, no jury and no warders. In low voices the plaintiff states his grievances, and the defendant pleads his cause, and the witnesses are heard. The litigants then retire; the judge and his assessors consult together; and the verdict is quickly given. It is justly administered on ideal lines of brevity and common-sense, and without World's Most Ancient Court of Justice. The most ancient court of justice in the world is situated in the far East End of London, England. It is enshrined in an old and dingy brick building in a rather squalid corner, which bears the high-sounding name of St. James's Place.

U.S. Presidents a Frugal Lot. Most of the Presidents of the United States since Hayes have accumulated money enough or means of earning enough to permit them to live comfortably after leaving the White House.

Hayes is said to have saved $44,000 a year during his term as President. At the rate he had at the end of his term some $176,000 which, invested at 5 per cent, would give him an annual income of $8,800.

Garfield was in office only five months before he died, but his successors, Arthur, is believed to have saved $50,000 during his three and a half years in office. Cleveland was a poor man when he went into the White House, but he retired to private life with a comfortable estate.

Woodrow Wilson had practically nothing before 1912, but in 1921 he bought a home in Washington for $150,000, paying for it in cash or its equivalent. He is planning to spend a similar amount on a country home, and he actually refused an offer of $150,000 for an article on the peace listening ears—for each case is tried in camera. Covers the Whole Field. And what is the jurisdiction of this strange and really wonderful Court? It covers the whole field of wrongdoing, except crime. It adjudicates on debt and breach of promise, assault and libel, it decides disputes between husband and wife, parent and child, employer and servant. It lays down the law in problems of religion or ritual or diet.

Unlike our own courts of law it has no power to enforce its decisions. The litigants who come before it, however, must first sign an undertaking to abide by its verdict; and such is the faith in its wisdom and justice that, with very rare exceptions, its judgments are accepted as final by no means confined to Jews is proved by the fact that many cases that would otherwise come before East End magistrates are sent for adjudication to the Beth Din, with the certainty that justice will be done. In fact, many of the cases thus remitted could not be properly tried in an English court, for the reason that the parties to them can only speak strange tongues, of which the police court interpreters are as ignorant as the magistrates themselves.

ANOTHER WAY TO SHOW RESPECT

On a very foggy morning not long ago we were passing an unusually depressing cemetery (I think cemeteries vary greatly). There are some that seem to suggest peace and rest and make one wonder if, after all, it might not be a pleasant thing to "lie down for an aeon or two until the Master of all good workmen shall set us to work anew." And there are others that suggest funerals and black gloves and all the diabolical formal trappings of death. Just as we passed the entrance we saw a man going in with a big bunch of flowers, evidently to lay in some grave. He looked utterly depressed and dispirited and it seemed to me highly unlikely that he would come out looking any more cheerful from so dismal a place.

"Why do people do it?" I asked the Authorman.

The Authorman considered the matter and then answered: "Partly out of respect to the dead. Would you want your grave unattended? Partly because it is an emotional outlet."

I Don't Want My Grave Respected.

In my turn I considered his question for sometime before I came to a conclusion. And then I answered what I really think is my honest feeling. "I don't want to be forgotten any more than other people do. But I don't feel at all anxious to have the respect paid to my grave. It really seems to me that if anyone thought of me and wanted to do me some honor, I would honestly be just as pleased if they went and performed some kind act. If they wanted to let people know that my memory was being kept green they could tell the person that the act was done in my memory. Now really when you come right down to it, wouldn't that be a whole lot better than haunting a cemetery? I'd be just as much honored and someone else would be given pleasure."

Couldn't Flowers be Enjoyed in a Home?

"Fine," said the Authorman, "for everyone except the florists."

"Well, as to that, why couldn't the person who would naturally put flowers on a grave go and give them to someone living instead? I feel quite sure if I were a Spirit that I would just as soon come down and enjoy flowers if they were in someone's home as if they were on a grave. In fact, I think I would prefer it for I always did dislike cemeteries."

"What about the emotional outlet?" pursued the Authorman.

"It seems to me that it would be a good deal more of an emotional outlet to go and do something nice for someone, with all the warm human contact that means, than to go and mope in a cemetery. I don't think moping in a cemetery is an outlet at all. It's a blind alley not an outlet."

Who is It?

The Authorman admitted that he felt much the same way about it and so we are going to give each other's cemetery flowers to someone alive. But last night I had a new thought. I want to be broad-minded, but there is one person I would just as leave he would not give my flowers to. Maybe you can guess who it is.

Names and Phrases.

The expression "son of a gun" is quite common in South Wales. It is thought by some that the word "gun" is derived from the original Gaelic "gunna" (modern Welsh "gwn"), meaning a bowl; if so the expression "son of a gun" is a fragment of old Celtic mythology, the bowl or cauldron in both Irish and Welsh mythology being the source of and origin of embryonic life.

Paper 1 3/4 inches long by a little more than eight inches wide is known as foolscap, and this is the story of its name: "When Oliver Cromwell became protector, after the execution of Charles I, he caused the stamp of the cap of liberty to be placed upon the paper used by the English Government. Soon after the restoration of Charles II, having occasioned to use some paper for despatches, some of this Government paper was brought to him.

"On looking at it and discovering the stamp, he inquired the meaning of it; and, on being told, he said: "Take it away; I have nothing to do with a fool's cap!"

Proverbs being wisdom gathered by observers and concentrates into a few words it is only natural that we should find a resemblance among proverbs of various peoples. Many English proverbs find corresponding expression in Japanese sayings. Instead of "More haste, less speed," the Mikado's subjects say, "If in a hurry, go round," which is not unlike another bit of English popular wisdom. "The longest way round is the shortest way home." "Accidents will happen in the best regulated families" of English-speaking countries, and "Even a monkey will sometimes fall from a tree" in Japan. We say "Oil and water will not mix," and they say, "You can't rivet a nail in a custard." We say "Out of evil good may come," and they say, "It rains springs from the mud." Mrs. Partington's famous though futile effort with the mop becomes "Scattering fies with a fan."

Mrs. Partington, it will be remembered, was the woman who endeavored to stem the Atlantic with her broom. In the winter of 1824 a great storm struck the town of Sidmouth (England); the sea rising to a great height, threatened the entire town with destruction. In the midst of the turmoil Dame Partington was found wielding her mop, vigorously pushing back the Atlantic, of course she was beaten in the attempt.

The meaning of the word "bogue" was the subject of a long discussion in a London court the other day. Eventually the judge had recourse to a dictionary and that book, in giving examples of the use of the word, quoted the fact, that there was once a judge who did not know the meaning of a bogus transaction.

A teacher told one of his scholars, a son of the Emerald Isle, to spell "hostility."

"H-o-r-s-e," began young Pat.

"Not hostility," said the teacher, "but hostility."

"Shure," replied Pat, "an' didn't you tell me the other day not to say 'hoss'?"

He jabs, it's one thing with ye one day and another the next."

The electrician had arrived home at 3 a.m., and was quietly sneaking up stairs, when his wife called: "What's the matter? Wire you insulate?"

But the shock was too great. The electrician had fainted.

WONDERING WHY.

Men send their autos roaring along the midnight street, disturbing people snoring, destroying slumbers sweet; with automatic madly coughing, and pistons whanging loud, we hear them in the of-fing, the foolish, fathead crowd.

There is no sense, beshrew it, in racketing along; I wonder why they do it, when they must know it's wrong. Speed fiends, in all the papers, read tales of death and wrecks; because of speed fiend capers, men carry broken necks; and to the boneward, daily, dead men in heaves go, because the speed fiends' gaily refuse to travel slow. Cops run them down and pinch them, the while some victim groans, and Justice, which should cinch them, just fines them seven bones. Such leniency's a blunder—they pay with-out a tear, then scorch again like thunder, and kill an auctioneer. 'Tis wicked to pursue it, this vicious course and vain; I wonder why they do it—why not be safe and sane? I drive my fiery auto, a thing of brutal power; by ten and nine and grock, at fifteen miles an hour. And though for years I've driven my bus along the pave, I've sent no guy unshriven to all an early grave, I've caused no sore contusion with fender or with hood—but, haply, in conclusion, I'd better knock on wood.

Cupid Tempts the Sailors

Curles Maples, 18, of Brooklyn, is in jail in Newark, N.J., because, according to his shipmates on the steamship Suricho, he used sand to keep Cupid from slipping. Maples was brought back in irons from Liverpool on the Suricho. He was arraigned before U.S. Commissioner Pfaff, in Elizabeth, charged with sabotage, in that he put sand in the turbine engines of the ship while she lay in dock at Liverpool. According to the story which he told his shipmates he found a sweetheart in Liverpool, and viewed with alarm the early sailing date which would separate them. Hence the sand. It laid the ship up for repairs as soon as the

A bull frog that smokes in a curiously lurking somewhere in Nichevang Lake, near Peterham, Mass. When in camp there the other evening, Librarian Harlan Ballard, noted scholar and author, of Pittsfield, Mass., cast a lighted cigar in the water. Promptly a huge amphibian leaped after it, grabbed the unlighted end and swam to a rock, where it enjoyed a smoke for 10 minutes. Afterward the frog gave a concert, which indicated no illness. Mr. Ballard is trying to secure it for the Berkshire Museum, of which he is Curator.
