BE HOME OF PEACE. In Squart's lingering bues of gold, Some far eff isle of rest, The hearts in this sad world grown cold Aye beckons to its brezst.

The Indian, on the calm blue sea, Baholds in distance sleep Some heaven for the tempest-free, Soft cradled on the deep.

There rest the winds-the surges rest, And cloudless skies are seen The breeze scarce ourles the river's breast, Or stire the forest's green.

In the lone melodies that float When twilight shades are near. Or the wild wind-harp's plantive note, A summoning voice we hear.

It tells of painless joy to come, It calls the wanderer back, Woos him to view a peaceful home O'er memory's desert track.

Oh ! is it but in sunset dreams That isle of peace is seen-A phantom built of starry beams. With faithless waves between?

Is it in Fanev's ear alone That melody is heard. Vegue, wild and wandering, like the moan By feeble breezes stirred?

Or is it given to winds that die-Or on waves on Ocean's breast To answer to the spirit's sigh. That craves its bourn of rest ?

We have seen the Petition alluded to. It is signed by the most influential members of our County; is addressed to the Colonial Secretary of State, and sets forth, in strong terms, the reprobation of a large portion of the people against disturbing the peace and harmony of the Parent Country and her dependercies by representations not founded on fact, and of a character likely to bring this Colony into contempt rather than raise it in estimation and consequence. The absurdity of sending people home to complain of specific gaievances already officially correct ed, is too glaring to escape the notice of the ed, is too glaring to escape the notice of the mess, to merit a share of their Patronsge.
