HE CALLED OUT THE RESERVES How an Excited Harlem Man Sent the Police Rushing Through the Streets. kidney potatoes 1st; Christie potatoes,

An energetic citizen bounded breathless

New York, at 6.30 o'clock Sunday evening The judges' dinner was served in the and made a mad plunge for the telephone "Hello! hello!" he bawled as he twisted the handle of the bell. He twist- dog?"

> "Hello! Hello!" gasped the energet ic citizen. "Gimme police - local station -gimme Headquarters. Busy? Oh blazes; well, get 'em quick. Two men cuttin' each other t' pieces!" "This Headquarters?" spluttered the up quick - men killing each other - two Headquarters heard a little more, but eeing that the call came from the build- off!" ing in which is the Harlem police prison, at once concluded that there was a riot there and that the prisoners were cutting each other or the keepers. Then the ticker in the east 126th street olice station began to whir as if the lectrical storm were central over New he barked and woke every one up too York, and Sergeant Holbert, half falling of his chair, learned from the rapidly moving indicator that there was a riot or something in the Harlem prison. Whang! went the bell for the reserve olatoon, which was taking its Sunday ease in the back room. The next moment Roundsmen Schlottan and Woodbridge and fourteen men came tumbling in. "Get down to the Harlem prison! Something's 'broken loose,', said the Sergeant, and the men bolted out of the station on the double quick. They whirled into third avenue, and, jamming their helmets down and tightening their belts, they 'crashed through the crowd at 125th street. The corner is one of the idensest crowd ed spots in the city at 6 o'clock on Sunday night, and the pell-mell onslaught of the police came like an expolsion. Men were pushed aside, boys were bowled over as the platoon crashed on. In the wake followed the crowd.

"What's the matter?" asked a staid citizen as the crowd swept by. "Hell's broke loose"—"ten men killed by dynamite"—"Two girls just killed"— | prose; "Riot in the jail."

All this the staid citizen heard with oulging eyes. Then, with a yell, he The platoon took the corner of 121st street with a wide turn and plunged up to

Kenna reading of golf and other things in a Sunday pewspaper. "Well?" said the roundsmen. "Well?" said McKenna. "Ain't there a riot here?" "Here? In the jail? No," replied

McKenna. "There isn't? exclaimed the platoon in chorus, a bit disappointed, perhaps. "Then what did you call for?" asked the roundsmen.

"Call nothing," from McKenna. When the police had somewhat recovered their breath they ascertained that there had been a family row in Sylvan place and that the energetic citizen had been uneccessarily agitated. No arrests were made.

KILLED BY ELECTRICITY. A Fearful Scene in Montreal

At half past seven Tuesday morning, a young man named Deguire was instantaneously killed by electricity, on St. James Street, Montreal Avenue. The shocking death was witnessed by a large crowd of horror-stricken people, and the events leading up to it made it all the more sensational. An electric light wire had crossed another and burning in two one end fell to the ground. Hissing and cracking it jumped around like a live thing, and a crowd of people ran for their very lives. It almost appeared that the wire tried to catch them. It sprang about in all directions, and the shrieks of others. Surely they must have gone crazy for right into the way of the wire some of the new comers ran only to venture near it in the vain hope of preventing disaster by pinning it to the ground. The scene was one of the greatest excitement and will be long recalled. In the midst of it wire made a move towards the roadway

he grasped it with the right hand. With a shriek of pain he sprang into the air, and fell to the ground a corpse. The live wire burned itself through flesh and bone, and as the smoke of the burning flesh rose the crowd grew more excited than ever. One spectator after the other tried to pull the corpse from the death dealing wire, and it was only after many had been shocked that the body was released from its executioner and carried to the sidewalk. The St. Henri patrol wagon was called and tenderly the corpse was lifted in and taken to the station. Soon afterwards the deceased's father arrived, and the scene as he threw himself upon the body of his boy, was pitiful in the extreme. Deguire was married last spring, and the young widow is so prostrated that her friends fear that her reason may be impaired.

SEASONS FOR MARRIAGE.

With regard to the seasons for celebrating marriage the church was formerly very strict. The parish register for St. Mary's, Beverly, contains the following entry under the date November 25, 1641:

When Advent comes do thou refrain,

Till Hilary set ye free again.

Next Septuagesima saith thee nay, But when Low Sunday comes thou may Yet at Rogation thou must tarrie, Till Trinitie shall bid thee marry. The above seems to have been a popular verse to inscribe in registers, for with slight variations it is to be met with in several parishes. Philomath's Almanac of the year 1674 contains simular rules in Times prohibting marriage this year. Marriage comes in on the 13 of January, and at Septuagessima Sunday, it is out again until Low Sunday, at which time it comes in again, and goes not out till Rogation Sunday. Then it is forbidden until the jail entrance. There sat keeper Mcbidden till Advent Sunday, but then it goes out, and come not in again till the 13th of January next following.

Editor Armstrong who knows something of the dairy business when he puts his knife into the butter at home, thinks the farmers should give turnip raising a rest and cultivate the cow. He believes much greater profit would accrue from dairying and he gives this example: "The wife of a Waweig farmer drove into town last week with a few crocks of butter in herwagon. Dr. Hurlburt claimed that Sunday school work was successful as the Christian church was successful, only that neither of them were as yet working under full head of steam. The average Sunday school was successful: 1st - Because it finds work for Christ ians. There is no branch of church work which offers so large a field for active exercise of working faculties, work is a necessity, and without it he claimed no Christian could successfully live.

2nd-Because Sunday school work exerts a reflex influence of the most benefic ial kind upon the teachers themselves The teacher who conscientiously does his Sunday school work, must be greatly helped to better knowledge of the work of God, and of his spiritual position, needs

3rd-Because it devoted to the study of one book only, the bible. Dr. Huriburt claimed that the Sunday school teaching of the present time was far and away superior to anything of the kind in the past, as witness the innumerable lesson helps, commentaries, maps and other helpful literature now being published in various parts of the world.

Fourth and lastly, because the Sunday school is one of the greatest missionary agencies of the Christian church, from the fact that in newly settled districts it is a pioneer in church work. Districts which are too poor or too distant to admit of the immediate establishment of churches, could have and did have Sun- Ladies, day schools, which began and sustained evangelizing work until more could be Dr. Hurlburt's address was heard with

Dr. Hurlbut gave a very interesting normal lesson on the "Life of Jesus Christ." He said that a general outline of the knowledge of the life of Christ was necessary to have an intelligent understanding of His work and character. The order of twothirds of the recorded events in His life of Christ into seven periods, namely, the thirty years of preparation, the year of obscurity, the year of popularity, the year of opposition, the week of the Passion, the day of crucifixion, and lastly the forty days after the resurrection, He referred to the discouraging remarks of a bishop regarding missionary work in India, in elected to the position of field secretary, teacher may use as curiosity, restlessness which he said that it was impossible for and came in for a good deal of well meritthe natives to live a Christian life on the ed commendation humble pittance they received for their day's labor. The speaker said that every miracle was meant to be an illustration of divine and spiritual working, and was meant primarily to call attention to his mission and teaching. Parables was meant to set men thinking. After the singing of a hymn, the executive committee's report was read by Mr. Parsons. Their have been four meetings of the executive during the year. Seventy-two parish conventions have been held during the year. There are 960 Sunday schools in the province, an increase of ninety-three over last year. It commends the retention of the International Sunday school lesson, but objects to the introduction of a second primary course. It recom-

of field secretary. Mr. Gurney was heard on behalf of the International Evangel. After a long discussion, a motion to adopt the Evangel as the provincial organ, was carried almost unanimously.

The report of the provincial treasurer, Mr. White, was then read. Last year the Sunday school work back through ages of county contributions did not redeem history of the christian church, and their pledge by $130. ## Priestley's Dress Materials

Every lady should be interested in the fact that the Priestley s Dress Materials are to be had from the better class of dealers throughout Canada. For beauty, texture and enduring quality, they are unequalled. Manufactured as they are in pure wool, and in silk and wool interwoven, these goods have a soft richness which is a perfect delight to a lady of taste. Priestley's goods are mostly in black, and in black A gown in Priestley's fabrics retains its style and beauty as long as there is anything of it left, hence they are the most economical for all classes.

The Kingsclear Fair.

The annual fair of the Kingsclear agricultural society took place on the society's grounds at Kingsclear on Wednesday. The ttendance was small in comparison with former years, owing no doubt to the bad state of the weather. The exhibits, with the exception of roots and grain, were hardly up to the average, but the display of the latter was exceptionally fine. John McKay had on exhibition twelve turnips that heaped a lime cask and weighed over 260 pounds. The display of apples was also very good, some splendid varieties of fall and winter fruit being shown. The exhibit of dairy produce was hardly up to the standing which the district is capable of producing, and the judges appeared to have no trouble in awarding the prizes. The display of fancy work, flowers, domestic manufacture, etc., was very fine. The pulling ing match, to test the mettle of the draft horses, was quite exciting, but Thomas Murray's handsome team of grays appeared to have a walk over. The judges were:

THE CANDIDATE.

"Father! who travels our road so late?" "Hush! my child, 'tis a candidate: Fit example of human woes; Early he comes and late he goes. He greets the woman with courtly grace; He kisses baby's the dirty face; He calls to the fence the farmer at work;

He bores the merchant, he bothers the clerk;

The blacksmith, while his anvil rings, He greets, and this is the song he sings: 'Howdy! Howdy! how d'ye do? How is your wife, and how are you? Ah! it fits my fist as no other can, The hornyhand of the workingman.'

"Husband! who is that at the gate?" "Hide my love, 'tis the candidate!" "Husband! why can't he work like you? Has he nothing at home to do?" "My dear, whenever a man is down-No cash at home and no credit in town, Too stupid to preach and too proud to beg, Too timid to rob and too lazy to dig; Then over his horse his legs he flings,

And to the dear people this song he sings: 'Howdy! Howdy! how d'ye do? How is your wife and how are you? Ah! it fits my fist as no other can. The horny hand of the workingman.

Brothers who labor early and late. Ask these things of the candidate; What's his record? How does he stand At home? No matter about his hand Be it hard, soft, so it be not prone To close over money not his own. Has he in view no theiving plan? Is he honest and capable? He's your man Cheer such a man till the welkin rings; Join in the chorus when thus he sings: 'Howdy! Howdy! how d'ye do? How is your wife and how are you? Ah, it fits my fist as no other can, answering smile. Her answer was in her eyes, her lips, the clinging fingers, the sweet attitude of abandon; she surrendered herself to him in all the beautiful self-abnegation of true womanhood. What wonder he pressed so rapturously the rosy lips again and again, that she hid her face in maiden modesty? All fear was forgotten in this strong lover's arms, there was no presentiment of coming ill, but it was to come just

So the storm subsided; their hearts, bright as the sunshine, affianced lovers. they left the little hut, giving just one backward glance at it, as with his arm around her, they wended their way through the pearl bespeckled grass to-

"Do not tell yet," said Noreen, loosening his arm from her when they were almost in sight of the house. There was a terrified expression about the dark eves. What could she fear?

"Tomorrow, darling, all the world must know," he whispered. "If possiible, I'll hide the gladness in my eyes tonight, even at the fancy ball, but I doubt

She thanked him with a glance. Old Lady Decimer was first to espy them of

"Bravo, Sir Giles," she exclaimed, "you are a true knight-errant. You have brought the stray bird back without wetting her wings. It would have been a sad ending indeed to a pleasant entertainment, had aught happened to the fairest flower of all."

Noreen blushed rosy red. More than one noticed the gratified expression in Sir Giles' eyes at this speech, his rapid glance to the sweet face of his companion amongst them was Denize, who, although surrounded by devoted lovers as usual was terribly angry. Noreen had drawn this one from her side. She flashed her blue eyes on her mother, who stepped forward, taking Noreen by the hand. She held the girl's fingers in a firm clasp, Noreen could not have moved them had

"I am so infinitely sorry, Sir Giles," she exclaimed, in her loudest and blandest tones, "you should have taken so much trouble about this child - she is so sadly headstrong and wilful and so ridiculously afraid," all in the same breath. "I fear I shall have to punish her by leaving her home to-night, instead of going to the ball." Noreen looked up with scared eyes. "No, no, my dear Mrs. Ardleigh, not on any account," said Sir Giles, meaningly, and then he began to talk to Denize, who somehow had glided to his side. He felt he must be circumspect in order to win Noreen; mother and daughter were both against her; within earshot the uncle had paused in his conversation with an acquaintance; he was frowning heavily; it seemed hard lines if the girl were portionless and an encumbrance, they should grudge her a rich marriage.

CHAPTER V.

Surely there is no prettier sight than a fancy ball in good society; the gay mingling of kings and queens, celebrated characters, patricians and peasants. We improve in these affairs' too, day by day; each one, as it takes place, gathering addition splendor and magnificence. This was the case at the Esmonds,; the exclamation, 'Beautiful!' came, with one consent, to every lip, as entering the grand, old mansion, they beheld a scene that dazzled them, with its costly decorations, its throngs of gaily-attired guests. Noreen had been snubbed unmercifully by Denize before setting out. She felt very small in the simple dress she had been enabled to manufacture, as she stood near her cousin's radiant figure, yet for her age, as it would have been for the other's, it was far better chosen, and, in spite of her cousin's assurance to the contrary, her glass had told her she would look very pleasing in her critical lover's fully and ungratefully in detaining him so long from her side." "I am awfully sorry, auntie," said Noreen, laughing again, "but indeed, it cannot be helped now."

They were quite aghast, and could not make the girl out; snubbing was quite lost upon her, nothing subdued her spirits, nor took the contented look from her eyes. Whan at the entrance of the alinger, matters became worse. He bowed with grace to all, but instead of offering his arm to Denize, he asked for the hand of the young Puritan maiden, and away they went, whirling around the room in a most delightful valse.

Denize bit her red lip and frowned, looking from one parent to the other with reproachfully flashing eyes; the heightened color, the glorious bright eyes suited well her queenly costume. Her coterie of admirers clustered around her, dubbed her radiantly beautiful, flattering her on all sides, eager for a smile from her lips, or a touch from her small fingers. Surely her path was one of roses!" What more could she desire? She wantdesired and determined to acquire the love of Sir Giles Massinger; he had no plain of in earlier years. eves but for Noreen.

true eyes looking into hers. She had no idea she was the talk of the coom, as she danced with Sir Giles one dance after another; she was so unsophisticated, so very young. Her aunt had never told her what a very gorgon society is, that it does not allow folks to be happy according to their own ideas of felicity, because she had never intended Noreen to enter society at all. Lady Massinger, at her son's desire had done part of the mischief; Lady Decimer, in her spite, had Vainly did Mrs. Ardleigh try to catch her niece's eye; Sir Giles steered her so well, they never came in contact. After the third dance, throwing a fleecy wrap over the girl's shoulders, he led her out into the spacious grounds. "Let them hunt for us, Noreen," he said. "You do not want to dance with any other fellow, do you sweet? I feel I should be miserably jealous to-night, did I see another's arm around you." She nestled closely to him in a rose arbor; a refreshing breeze lifted the sweet blossoms, wafting their perfume around them; the silver moonlight shed her holy beams on tree and flower.

"I would rather be with you," she whispered. "It is so wonderful to think of what has happened today."

"To-morrow morning, sweet, I shall ask your uncle. He will not say me nay

"They often - especially Denize, say they would like to get rid of me, that I am an encumbrance. Oh! but don't you love Denize? Are you quite sure? It is not to late to tell her vet." "You would give me up very easily, little one," he said, drawing her closer; but it will not do, you have promised to be mine, and must keep your word. Say-'Giles, I love you,' after me, or I shall think you regret, and want to pass me on

"Giles, I love you," she whispered. He kissed her fondly, rapturously.

"Oh, my darling! if aught should hapen to divide us, could we live apart? I fancy I should find you at the uttermost parts of the earth I've taken you to my heart, you tender flower. It is for such as you, men have died-you hold my life in your hands."

"Don't -don't, you frighten me! eem to see faces mocking me, hear gibbering voices around. What is it?" "Nothing but the sound of the waterfall, and the breeze playing in the branches, pet.
