CHAPTER XVI.

macle, and must she now dethrone him as a flirt?

When the gentlemen came into the drawing-room he was the first. Moy was turning over her music at the piano, for she knew they would all sak her to sing, and, being unaffected, she thought she would have something quite ready.

Mr. Gilmartin, looking wonderfully handsome (for what glorifies a face like love and hope?), came across the room to her.

We first met at a musical pare.

We first met at a musical pare.

We first met at a musical party, Beliefs. An important series of he was right, she scknowledged to berself. Why had she not thought to the before? Particularly wher Mr. Gilmartin had himself told her that he did not think there was any woman in the world like Miss Wentworth. All this flashed through her brain in a moment. Mr. Finch went on:

"We always said in our set, every time he came home from his travels, that it would be a match. She has that it would be a match. She has helped him with his books, made related to the looks, made related to the said, and my firm belief is that the looks, made related her part well, but it had she first on the most distinguished writers, including an article by James Russell Lowell, which was not quite completed at the time of his death.
