EGG MARKETING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

December 17, 1974—Mr. McGrath—The following proposed motion:

That the first report of the Special Committee on Egg Marketing presented to the House on Monday, December 16, 1974, be concurred in.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the wish of hon. members on all sides of the House that this motion be taken under consideration as the first order of business under orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF STANDING ORDERS 43 AND 28—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since the House gave unanimous consent authorizing the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to present his motion under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of extreme urgency since it relates to the application of Standing Orders 43 and 28.

Considering that, under the terms of Standing Order 43, any member can request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an urgent matter and that, on the other hand, under Standing Order 28 any member who wishes to speak must rise in his place and address the Speaker designating him by his title, though it may be only to oppose the unanimity required under Standing Order 43, and that I have already pointed out this matter to Your Honour whereupon Your Honour said the ruling would be given later on in this regard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House study without delay whether Standing Order 28 should apply even in the case of a motion presented under Standing Order 43, and that those two standing orders be deferred to the standing committee of the House for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK

PROPOSED EVENING OF FELLOWSHIP FOR MEMBERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity inasmuch as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the provincial premiers, the mayor of Ottawa and numerous mayors across Canada have proclaimed the week of February 16, as Brotherhood Week, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis):

That all hon. members gather in the railway committee room on Thursday, February 20, during the evening for fellowship across the Canadian cultural barriers in Brotherhood under the Fatherhood of God and, furthermore inasmuch as Mrs. Betty Kennedy is the national chairman for Brotherhood Week during this International Women's Year, that an especially cordial invitation be extended to the sisterhood in this hon. House, realizing that in fellowship with the distaff side of the human family is the only basis for lasting brotherhood.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member who proposed his motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, partly out of a strict adherence to the rules regarding urgent and pressing necessity and partly, I must confess out of a desire not to put any hon. members of the House into the embarrassing position of withholding their consent for discussion of such an important topic, I would have to find that despite the extreme importance and interest of the matter to all members of the House and, I am sure, unanimous support of the idea, that I will withhold, in my discretion, putting it to the House because of the absence of the element of urgent and pressing necessity.

Alberta Representation

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED CHANGES IN PROCEDURE FOR ORAL QUESTION PERIOD—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask permission of the House to present a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the urgent and pressing necessity for adequate opportunity for backbench members of the House to raise matters of importance during the daily question period, and in view of the fact that the present length of the question period does not adequately permit this, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That immediate consideration should be given to lengthening the daily question period to one hour and furthermore consideration should also be given to designating two days per week on which 20 minutes of the one hour question period be reserved exclusively for members of the House who are not designated opposition critics and who do not sit on the front bench.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member raises a question of extreme importance and interest to all members of the House I am sure. A review of the procedures of the House, in so far as they relate to any opportunity any member may have, to put his views forward could be extremely important and of great interest. It is a matter of constant concern to all members, but I think in fairness the motion lacks the element of urgency or emergency which is contemplated by the rule.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PRIME MINISTER'S APPOINTMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE OF ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the ill-considered actions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in appointing a member from the other place to represent without mandate the people of the province of Alberta. To deny a province its rightful channel of representation by election is obviously serious.

In recent days, however, the issue has developed to a state of urgency. May I remind this House that we are in a period of extremely tender federal-provincial relations. Nevertheless, the member from the other place who was appointed by the Prime Minister to act as a spokesman for the province of Alberta, has displayed incredibly weak judgment by making ridiculous and false statements in public about Albertans and the Alberta government. As an example, the pseudo representative has made statements such as the following—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am persuaded by the hon. member that his motion has an element of urgent and pressing necessity. Perhaps he would like to put it to the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Malone: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Prime Minister repeal his appointment of the member from the other place as a spokesman for the province of Alberta, or alternatively, that he appoint him to a cabinet position so that he may be held responsible for his outlandish and false statements.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion being proposed. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be debated at this time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE REPRESENTATION AND ESTABLISH A COMMISSION TO READJUST ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-51, to increase the representation of the Northwest Territories in the House of Commons and to establish a commission to readjust the electoral boundaries of the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STATUTE LAW (SUPERANNUATION) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND VARIOUS STATUTES TO PROVIDE FOR CHANGES IN PENSION CONTRIBUTIONS, BENEFITS, ETC.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-52, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Judges Act, the Tax Review Board Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the Order: Government notices of motions:

February 13, 1975—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to hear evidence on and to consider Canadian policy with respect to the question of continuing defence cooperation with the United States and in particular the future of the North American Air Defence agreement (NORAD); and

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to hear reports from Canadian delegations which have met with delegations from foreign parliaments or attended inter-parliamentary assemblies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 348, 361, 450, 465, 550, 780, 819, 871, 1,141, 1,153, 1,207, 1,213, 1,267, 1,284, 1,296, 1,348 and 1,349.

If questions Nos. 156, 276, 715 and 1,360 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions Nos. 1,098 and 1,121?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Question No. 348—Mr. Gillies:

1. (a) Over how many "off-main-line" trackage miles is grain normally moved (b) over how many of these trackage miles can a fully loaded hopper car move, with due regard for elevator loading clearances, track loading limits, etc. (c) over how many miles for a 3/4 and for a half loaded car respectively (d) when trackage is subject to safe load limits, can the loaded weight of the hopper car be accurately assessed, to avoid dangerous overloading?

2. (a) Allowing for routine maintenance, how many car-days should these cars be expected to deliver over a normal season (b) how many car-days did they operate (c) on the average, how many cars would be sitting idle (i.e. not moving, not loading, not unloading) on a typical shipping day (d) for what reason would these cars be sitting idle?

3. (a) For how many car-days were some of these cars diverted from moving prairie grain (b) what was the maximum number of cars diverted (c) what was the per diem rate (d) how much per diem rental was collected and what happened to it (e) what were the diversion dates?

4. (a) For the in-service period of these cars, how many tons of wheat were moved (b) how many tons did these cars move (c) how many tons were moved by other cars (d) what are the comparable figures for all other grains (e) by best estimate, how many tons of wheat will have to be moved during each of the next five seasons (f) how many of these tons will move by other cars (g) how many tons will move via the 2,000 hopper cars (h) on a car-day basis, what per cent utilization will these 2,000 cars experience, by season?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. (a) "Off-main-line" trackage: CN 2,529 miles, 263,000 maximum; 1,775 miles, 220,000 maximum; 3,752 miles, 177,000 maximum; CP Rail 1,852 miles, 263,000 maximum; 3,800 miles, 220,000 maximum; 135 miles, 177,000 maximum. (b) CN 2,529 miles: CP Rail 1,852 miles; (c) Three quarter: CN 4,304 miles; CP Rail 5,652 miles; Half, CN 8,056 miles; CP Rail 5,787 miles; (d) No. Strict control is exercised by the railways in placing hopper cars to avoid exceeding branch line track load limits. Weights shown on railway way-bills can be in error. Official weights are determined on out turn at terminal grain elevators.

2. (a) The railways have advised that routine maintenance should not exceed 10 to 15 days per year. (b) Cars have been in service full time; (c) None, except for normal detention awaiting unloading and dispatch through classification terminals and junction points; (d) see (c) above.

3. (a) None. The cars are restricted to grain service; (b) A total of 834 cars have been diverted to the handling of Prairie grain east or Thunder Bay to and including movements to the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Ports; (c) $7.50 per car day while assigned east of Thunder Bay; (d) $415,793 collected by the Canadian Wheat Board payable to the Receiver General covering 55,439 car days assigned east of Thunder Bay; (e) January-April 1974.

4. (a) Canadian National advises that a total of 19,874,000 tons of all grain were moved between December 1972 and September 1974; CP Rail advises that a total of 21,441,100 tons of all grain were moved between the period January 1973 and June 1974; (b) CN 2,827,000 tons of a) above; CP Rail 2,783,800 tons of a) above; (c) CN 17,047,000 tons; CP Rail 18,657,300 tons; (d) A breakdown by grain is not available; (e) Estimates are not available; (f) Not available; (g) Not available; (h) Not available.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRANSLATION OF ALL FORMS

Question No. 361—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is it the intention of DND to have all its existing documents, such as technical publications and forms, etc., relating to all military equipment, ground, air and sea, defence headquarters and military base stationery, etc., translated and printed in French and, if not, which forms or documents will be?

2. Is a programme to have all the above-mentioned printed in French now in progress and, if so, on what date will it be completed?

3. Will all existing documents in military colleges and training schools be translated and printed in French?

4. Will any new documents, technical publications and forms, etc., be ordered in both French and English?

5. What will the total cost be to translate and print all existing DND documents, technical publications and forms, etc., (including military colleges, training schools, air, land and sea divisions) in French?

6. What is the projected increased cost to order any new Department of National Defence documents, etc., in English and French?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The policy of the Department is to provide in bilingual format all orders, directives, instructions, form notices, information letters and bulletins and documents intended for other than local use, plus all manuals including general and technical publications. Local orders, recreational facilities are printed in the language of the unit or formation. Exceptions are that in the National Capital Region, and other locations in which there is a significant number of military personnel of both language groups, they are printed in bilingual format.

2. Translation into French and printing in bilingual format has been in process for a number of years and is continuing. Except for technical publications the backlog should be eliminated in a very few years. The pace of translation of technical publications will be geared to the availability of translators having the necessary technical experience.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. The total cost of the program cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy at this time due to the long time frame.

6. It is estimated that it costs 40 per cent more to publish documents in bilingual format than in a single language.

AIRCRAFT—CHARTER OF 707'S

Question No. 450—Mr. Neil:

Has the Department of National Defence chartered any PWA Boeing 707 aircraft to carry freight to Europe and/or the Middle East from January 1, 1974 to the date this question is answered and, if so (a) what was the number of charters contracted for (b) what was the destination of each charter (c) what was the total cost of these charters (d) for what reason were DND aircraft not used?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes: (a) Three; (b) all three operated to Lahr, Germany; (c) $32,400; (d) DND aircraft were fully committed to higher priority activity.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRAINING COSTS

Question No. 465—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the current cost to the public for training to operational proficiency a (a) transport pilot (b) combat pilot (c) radio navigator (d) dentist (e) medical officer (f) lawyer (g) tank driver (h) long range pilot (i) marine engineer (j) construction engineer (k) computer programmer (l) ship's captain?

2. What were the training costs to the public for each category in 1963 and 1967?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The cost of training the following trades and professions for 1974 is as follows excluding pay to the students: (a) and (h). Transport Pilot and long-range pilot, $270,648; (b) Combat pilot, $301,668; (c) Radio Navigator, $89,054; (d) Dentist, $10,980*; (e) Medical Officer, $6,102*; (f) Lawyers are usually recruited following qualification and admission to the bar. The only training costs involved are those common to all officer classifications such as recruiting and officer cadet school costs, these total $5,446; (g) Tank Driver, $12,993; (i) Marine Engineer, $16,400*; (j) Construction Engineer, $18,881*; (k) Computer Programmer, 25,628*.

(l) The training of ship's captain cannot be accurately costed as appointment is based on experience and merit following junior officer training.

2. The training costs to DND for each category in the years 1963 and 1967, where available, are as follows:

Category	1963 $	1967 $
Transport and long-range pilot	82,400	94,500
Combat pilot	82,400	99,000
Radio navigator	54,600	69,900
Dentist	Not available	3,500
Medical Officer	Not available	3,500
Lawyer	Not available	3,500
Tank Driver	Not available	Not available
Marine Engineer	Not available	Not available
Construction Engineer	7,500	Not available
Computer Programmer	12,000	Not available
Ship's Captain	Not applicable	Not applicable

* These costs include only DND disbursement and do not include any federal contributions and grants to post secondary educational institutions.

[Mr. Richardson.]

TOTAL VALUE OF OLYMPIC STAMPS SOLD AS OF OCTOBER 1

Question No. 550—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What was the total value of Olympic stamps sold as of October 1?

2. What was the total cost of producing such stamps sold as of October 1?

3. What payments were made to COJO as of October 1 from Olympic stamp sales?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. $1,630,277.

2. $375,952 in manufacturing costs only, exclusive of other costs.

3. $225,000 has been transferred to the Olympic account of the Department of Finance.

PAYMENT TO SCULPTORS FOR STATUES OF CANADIAN STATESMEN

Question No. 780—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What was the total amount paid to the sculptors, with respective names and addresses, who produced (a) the statue of the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen (b) the statue of the Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent (c) the design proposal of the statue of the Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Words and the Secretary of State as follows: Amount paid to sculptors was as follows: (a) Marcel Braitstein, P.O. Box 1238, Sackville, N.B. $48,000; (b) Eleck Imredy, 2132 Yew Street, Vancouver, B.C. $56,000. These payments were made through the Working Capital Advance and the costs recovered from the Secretary of State Department. (c) The Department of the Secretary of State paid $2,800 to Elford Cos, Willowdale, Ontario, to produce a maquette.

NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES AT COTC AND AGGREGATE SALARIES FOR 1968-74

Question No. 819—Mr. Stevens:

1. As of March 31 in each year 1968, 1970, 1972 and 1974 (a) how many were employed by the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation (b) what would have been their aggregate salaries if all were employed for a full year (c) how many had salary levels of (i) $20,000 or more (ii) $35,000 or more (iii) $50,000 or more?

2. What was the salary or the salary range for each of the five highest paid employees of the Corporation?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): The management of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation advised as follows: 1.

(b)	1968	$ 5,224,800

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 871—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of National Health and Welfare have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. As of November 20, 1974, it is estimated that 10,700 pages of forms and directives remain to be translated.

2. Not applicable. Past records are not translated.

3. These translations will be completed at the earliest possible date.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of National Health and Welfare, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the Government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 4,291,663; for 1973-1974 it was 5,048,963. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the Translation Bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. It is estimated that the cost of translating these documents will amount to $131,000.

6. There is no additional ordering cost.

*AIR CANADA—OCCURRENCES OF DEPRESSURIZATION

Question No. 1,098—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many occurrences of accidental or emergency depressurization that required an aircraft to decrease altitude in order to regain cabin atmospheric pressure were there on Air Canada passenger flights at home and abroad in 1973 and 1974?

2. In how many of these instances (a) did the oxygen masks fail to be presented to all passengers (b) was oxygen not supplied to all passengers?

3. How do the above figures compare to the airline industry average for the same time period?

4. What steps have been taken recently to decrease the number of such instances?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the answer to this question is somewhat long, I wonder if it would be permissible to have it printed in Hansard as if it had been answered.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Answer above referred to reads as follows:]

The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1 and 2. Air Canada operates some 200,000 total flight legs a year. In 1973 it experienced 13 pressurization problems and 11 in 1974. In both years oxygen masks were presented for passengers on three occasions. In all cases, oxygen was supplied in a normal manner, within the design tolerances of the system as established by the aircraft manufacturer. Emergency oxygen systems are designed to start operating when cabin differential pressure reaches a pre-determined value. At that time, panels covering oxygen masks open and passengers are expected to take them from the storage compartment and pull the attached line to start the flow of oxygen. Full instructions on the use of this system are given to all passengers by cabin personnel prior to each flight departure. In some cases, aircraft pressure differential setting and the flow control regulators, while within manufacturer's tolerances, may present or make the masks available at different times. In all checks run by Air Canada, systems have operated within the established design tolerances. There can also be instances where, at varying cabin altitudes, the flow of oxygen may be altered, since a smaller volume is required at lower altitudes. Again, during all checks, oxygen flows have been within manufacturers tolerances.

3. The data available for industry comparison is based only on information reported to the manufacturer by operators, and it is inadequate for comparison. However, Air Canada has held discussions with other operators and manufacturers, and these confirm that Air Canada's operations compare favourably with current industry experience.

4. Industry experience has shown that the design of the pressure system on the DC-9 is somewhat more critical than on other aircraft. As a result, a special meeting was held by the Douglas Corporation in October, 1974 to discuss DC-9 pressure control. Air Canada attended with 11 other airlines and the U.S. navy. Following the meeting, Douglas published a recommended list of 23 modifications of which Air Canada has actioned 22. The remaining item dealt with a switch location which has not been a problem in Air Canada's history.

*NATIONAL DEFENCE—ARMOURED VEHICLES

Question No. 1,121—Mr. MacKay:

1. Has the Department of National Defence conducted studies to determine the choice of armoured vehicles to replace the Centurion tanks now used as the main component of our armoured regiments?

2. Has consideration been given to purchasing (a) the British Chieftain (b) the German Leopard (c) the American M-60?

3. Has the Department made inquiries as to the possibility of leasing tanks and, if so, what governments were consulted and what were the terms?

4. What were the advantages and disadvantages of each type of tank considered (a) the Chieftain (b) the Leopard (c) the M-60 (d) others?

5. Have plans been completed to acquire new tanks and, if so, on what date will they be delivered to the various armoured units across Canada and overseas?

6. How many tanks will be acquired?

7. What is the expected cost of the programme?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. The Department of National Defence maintains current information and detail specifications on several types of armoured vehicles.

2. (a), (b) and (c). The characteristics and capabilities of all three tanks have been studied and are well known to the department.

[Mr. Speaker.]

3. The department has not made any formal inquiries about the possibility of leasing tanks but one firm has made an informal proposal to Canada to lease tanks to the Canadian forces.

4. Each tank has some specific advantages over the others in terms of relative cost, size, weight, range and availability. However, these relative advantages and disadvantages are NATO classified information.

5. No.

6 and 7. Not applicable.

UIC—BENEFITS TO SLOCAN VALLEY COMMUNITY LIBRARY

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Brisco:

1. Did any employees of the Slocan Valley Community Library pay into the Unemployment Insurance Commission or had pay deductions made to the UIC in order that they could qualify for UIC benefits in the years 1972, 1973 and 1974?

2. Have any employees of the Slocan Valley Community Library ever received UIC benefits on the basis of their employment at this library during the years 1972, 1973 and 1974?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Employees of the Slocan Valley Community Library (the correct name of this organization is Community Learning Unlimited) paid unemployment insurance premiums during 1973 and 1974, since they were working in insurable employment, as defined by the Department of National Revenue/Taxation.

2. At various times during 1973 and 1974, 12 persons qualified for and received unemployment insurance benefits.

AIR CANADA—APPLICATIONS FOR STEWARDS AND STEWARDESSES

Question No. 1,153—Mr. Marshall:

How many applications for positions as stewards and stewardesses were received by Air Canada in the years 1970 to 1974 from persons whose stated home address was (a) Newfoundland (b) Prince Edward Island (c) New Brunswick (d) Nova Scotia (e) Quebec (f) Ontario and, in each case, how many were accepted?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: Accurate records, indicating the number of applications received by Air Canada for positions as flight attendants, or records with any real degree of validity, are not available for the years prior to 1973. However, since the beginning of 1973, a complete account of all applicants interviewed—which represents those whose qualifications met basic minimum requirements—has been maintained. Application forms from those whose qualifications are not up to minimum standards set by Air Canada are returned with appropriate explanations. Following are statistics related to the years 1973 and 1974.

	1973	1974	1973	1974
(a) Newfoundland	66	63	2	0
(b) Prince Edward Island	15	10	1	0

	Number of Applicants Interviewed		Number Hired
	1973	1974	1973	1974
(c) New Brunswick	225	60	1	5
(d) Nova Scotia	103	191	7	0
(e) Quebec	2304	3008	422	210
(f) Ontario	3840	2742	250	149

APPLICATIONS FOR CANADA PENSION PLAN DISABILITY PENSIONS

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Wise:

1. How many applications were received by the government for Canada Pension Plan disability pensions for each year 1972 and 1973 and, of these, how many were approved?

2. (a) How many people received disability pensions for each year (b) what was the average amount received?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Disability pension applications received by Canada Pension Plan Head office: 1972, 18,009; 1973, 19,126; Approvals: 1972, 72.7% or 13,273; 1973, 72.8% or 13,924.

2. (a) Disability Recipients*: 1972, 19,330 (December); 1973, 29,636 (December); (b) Average monthly payment: 1972, $92.11; 1973, $93,75.

*Excluded are those who were beneficiaries sometime during these years but who were no longer beneficiaries in December and those who may have received retroactive payment at this time.

CNR—NOISE LEVEL STUDIES

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Huntington:

Will the Department of Transport release the noise level studies arranged through the Department of the Environment, for the Canadian National Railway, pertaining to noise levels resulting from rail and waterfront activity in the City and District of North Vancouver and, if the study is not available, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The study referred to in the question is a private one conducted by Canadian National for their internal use. The Ministry of Transport did not participate in the study and does not propose to release the study results.

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES—SERVICE TO SASKATOON AND REGINA

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Is the government committed to allowing Canadian Pacific Airlines rights to serving Saskatoon and Regina in Saskatchewan for domestic and/or international flights?

2. Has Canadian Pacific Airlines made application to serve Saskatoon or Regina for domestic and/or international flights?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. No.

2. No.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

Question No. 1,284—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government giving consideration to an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act to provide for the payment of pension at married rates following a pensioner's divorce so long as the pensioner is compelled by court order to pay maintenance to the former spouse and/or the pensioner's children?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No consideration is being given to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act to provide the payment of married rate following a recipient's divorce. Married rate is not paid to a recipient of an allowance if he or she is divorced as his or her spouse is no longer recognized for allowance purposes. With respect to dependent children, married rate may be authorized on behalf of the first child and additional allowance may be paid for each dependent child provided the child is a "dependent child" as specified in the Act.

CABINET MINISTERS—EXCHANGE OF GIFTS WHEN ATTENDING MEETINGS OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 1,296—Mr. Coates:

1. Has it been the practice of Cabinet Ministers to exchange gifts when attending meetings outside Canada on government business and, if so, is this a usual practice or one that only relates to specific visits and, in either case, have there been occasions when this has occurred and what are the names of the Cabinet Ministers who have been involved in such gift exchanges?

2. In each instance (a) was the gift received by the Cabinet Minister considered his own property or the property of the country (b) was the gift made to a foreign dignitary paid for by the Cabinet Minister in question or the government (c) what were the gifts exchanged?

3. Have there been any occasions where a Cabinet Minister visiting outside of Canada received a gift from a foreign government where there was no exchange of such gifts and, in these instances, was the gift retained by the Cabinet Minister or did it become government property and, in cases where this has happened, what was the specific item received?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): There is no policy for exchanging gifts. On certain occasions, such as official visits when they are guests of another country, Ministers have presented gifts to their hosts on behalf of the Government of Canada. Sometimes the host has presented a gift to the visiting Canadian Ministers. The same general situation prevails when dignitaries from other countries visit Canada officially and are guests of the Government of Canada. The gifts selected for presentation to hosts abroad or to visitors to Canada have been of a personal nature intended to be retained by them as a souvenir of the occasion and of Canada. Enquiries among Ministers indicate that the gifts they have received have been of the same character, i.e. personal and intended as a souvenir of the occasion and of the country of the donor.

SALES TAX REDUCTION ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 1,348—Mr. Robinson:

In what way will the government ensure that the 5 per cent sales tax reduction on building materials will be passed on to the consumer?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the answer to this question was contained in the answer to Question No. 1,191, which may be found in Hansard, January 29, 1975, page 2714.

PERCENTAGE OF BUILDING MATERIAL SALES TAX DERIVED FROM RESIDENTIAL CONSTRUCTION AND FROM NON-RESIDENTIAL CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,349—Mr. Robinson:

What percentage of the sales tax on building materials refers to (a) housing (b) commercial construction?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that approximately one third of the estimated revenue from the sales tax on building materials was derived from materials used in residential construction and two thirds from materials used in non-residential construction.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FREELANCE SPEECH WRITERS EMPLOYED BY MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

Question No. 156—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. In the period March 31, 1973 to March 31, 1974, on how many occasions did a Minister of the Crown employ, or otherwise arrange for the services of, a freelance or contract speech writer?

2. In each case (a) who was the Minister (b) what was the fee (c) what was the occasion of the speech?

Return tabled.

FOREIGN-OWNED FISHING VESSELS ON EAST COAST

Question No. 276—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. In 1965, 1967, 1969, 1971, 1972 and 1973 (a) what was the number of foreign-owned fishing vessels fishing on the East Coast of Canada (i) above the 50th parallel (ii) below the 50th parallel (b) what were the countries of origin of such vessels (c) what was the tonnage?

2. For the same years (a) what was the number of foreign-owned fishing vessels fishing on the West Coast of Canada above the 55th parallel (b) what were the countries of origin of such vessels (c) what was the tonnage?

3. In each case, what were the reported catches on the East Coast of the species (a) cod (b) haddock (c) halibut (d) herring (e) pollock (f) silver hake (g) ocean perch?

4. In each case, what were the reported catches on the West Coast of the species (a) halibut (b) salmon (c) cod?

5. During the same years, what was the number of Canadian-owned vessels having a fishing range in excess of 100 miles in the four areas designated, their tonnage and catch on the species designated?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—TRAVEL EXPENSES FOR MINISTER AND STAFF, 1972-74

Question No. 715—Mr. Stevens:

1. In each fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, 1973 and 1974, and for the six month period ending September 30, 1974, what was the aggregate expenditure by the Department of Agriculture for travel abroad by (a) the Minister of Agriculture and his immediate staff (b) departmental staff (c) the staff of boards, commissions, tribunals, Crown corporations or other similar agencies reporting to the Minister (d) others whose expenses were paid in part or in whole directly or indirectly by the government?

2. In the case of an expenditure in excess of $200 (a) what was the purpose of the foreign trip (b) what was the furthest destination (c) what is the name of the person(s) who took the trip (d) how long was the person(s) outside the country (e) what was the nature of the expenditure (f) how many others were in the party making the trip?

Return tabled.

SURVEY OF DISABILITIES OF PRISONERS OF WAR DURING WORLD WAR II

Question No. 1,360—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did the government request J.D. Hermann, M.D., to do a survey of the disabilities of the servicemen (all three services) who were prisoners of war in the European Theatre during World War II and, if so, on what date was this report requested?

2. How many questionnaires were mailed out to ex-prisoners of war in April 1973 and what were the questions asked?

3. Has Dr. Hermann completed and reported the results of his survey and, if not, for what reason?

Return tabled.

● (1420)

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to answers to certain order paper questions being made orders for returns rather than answering them in the usual manner so that the answers appear in Hansard. On February 5, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred to this problem. At that time the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) replied setting forth what he said was the procedure the government followed in deciding whether or not to make a question an order for return. I quote from the parliamentary secretary's statement which appears at page 2931 in Hansard:

> The general practice we follow now is that all answers that will take over half a page to three-quarters of a page in Hansard are made orders for returns.

Mr. Speaker, I refer specifically to question No. 426 and the answer tabled last Wednesday, February 12. The question asked for information regarding appointments or employment received by candidates of the Liberal party since the general election of July 8, 1974. The answer listed the names of ten Liberal candidates who were placed on the public payroll following defeat by the electors. These names do not appear in Hansard because the government used the device of tabling the answer. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be contended, to cite the formula outlined by the parliamentary secretary, that the printing of these names in Hansard would take up more than half to three-quarters of the page. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a glaring example of the government tabling an embarrassing answer so that it will not appear in Hansard. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government should not be able, by using the procedure of tabling answers, to hide information which shows the manner in which it rewards party faithful from the public trough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a similar point of order. I have a number of questions that have been on the order paper since September 30, 1974; Nos. 40, 41, 42, 46, 47, 48 and 50. I appreciate that there is detail associated with them. For example, one question relates to the number of times government aircraft were used by cabinet ministers between May 8 and July 8, 1974. It is very important that the House of Commons and the public know whether during a federal election campaign cabinet ministers were using government aircraft. We are entitled to this information. We are entitled to know if government aircraft were used for political purposes and whether repayment was made to the federal treasury for the use of those aircraft.

There are a number of other questions that are similar. In view of the fact the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and a number of his colleagues went to Great Britain to see how questions are answered in that country and they discovered that most could be answered within one week, any member of this House who has had to wait since last September 30 deserves an explanation and the answers as quickly as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: On the points of order raised, particularly the one with regard to a delay in answering questions, this is something the House had heard before. Although this may be a grievance, it is not a point of order.

On the point raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), the practice of asking that certain responses be deemed to have been made orders for return in order that the returns can be tabled forthwith, is, of course, at the pleasure of the House. If hon. members are unhappy with that practice, it is to be hoped a way will be found to improve it. The failure to do so might ultimately result in the withholding of agreement of the House to that tabling. This might lead to the question being put as to whether that can or ought to be done at that time. Although it might be dramatic, it would be a rather cumbersome procedure. That is the logical conclusion of a disagreement about whether such responses can be tabled in that way. As I say, if there is difficulty about the procedure, hon. members can agree on a way to improve it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise regarding a question having to do with the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill—starred question No. 1,526. I endeavoured to get this information by means of an ordinary question placed on the order paper in the month of October, I think it was—I do not have it before me. It has to do with pensions and the amount paid to Mr. Pickersgill when he headed the Transport Commission. The answer previously given was completely without information as far as answering the question was concerned. Therefore, on February 5 I put down a starred question regarding the same matter. Starred questions have to be answered orally. I realize it is going to be embarrassing if this answer is given, but I would point out to Your Honour that the contemptuous way in which questions are being answered, or answers withheld, constitutes an endeavour on the part of the government to place a blindfold on parliament.

I shall not deal with that matter at the moment, but I think I should say to you, Mr. Speaker, as custodian of our rights in the House of Commons, that this hiding of the facts, the delays in answering that are taking place, indicate that the government has complete contempt for the right of members to secure information. This is a matter which I may bring to your direct attention shortly.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBLE SUBMISSION OF INCOME GUIDELINES TO UNIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COLA CLAUSE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of a statement of the Minister of Finance that public service employees had been represented at talks with union leaders aimed at reaching some kind of consensus to restrain inflation. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour who has, I understand, been participating in these talks, whether the government has outlined to the unions, particularly, in this case, the public sector, any specific guideline respecting incomes, wages or salaries which the government feels would be suitable and appropriate in present conditions.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Not in the discussions in which I was present.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. It arises from the statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on January 28. I quote:

> From my point of view the addition of a COLA clause makes a good deal of sense because it responds to the cost of living rather than anticipating rates of inflation, which hopefully will not be attained.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the endorsement of a COLA clause by the Minister of Finance is government policy, particularly with relation to public service contracts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): As the Minister of Finance said in the statement which has just been quoted, there is something to be said for this. But, regrettably, there is more to be said than that. I would not look upon the statement of the Minister of Finance as being an endorsement at all. He merely comments that there is something to be said in favour. There is something to be said on the other side, too. I would not interpret the Minister of Finance as endorsing COLA.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is something to be said for cabinet solidarity.

Mr. Sharp: Anyone who has looked into the question of the best basis for the negotiation of labour contracts knows that this is a subject upon which there can be legitimate differences of view. The Minister of Finance was not endorsing this concept for universal application; he was saying there was something to be said for it, and there is.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—DATE FOR ARRIVING AT CONSENSUS ON METHODS TO COMBAT—POSSIBLE DESIGNATION OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say it is sad for a Leader of the Opposition to see a Minister of Finance undermined when he is operating under such difficult conditions as this. I take it that the Acting Prime Minister has rejected the statement of policy made by the Minister of Finance in the House on January 28.

In view of the explanation given by the Minister of Finance the other day as to why the process of reaching a consensus has been delayed, which is partly because he and other ministers involved have been busy with other responsibilities, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he is prepared to give the House the time period within which the government will report to the House regarding this effort to achieve a consensus, which has been put off; and in view of its importance and the apparent distraction of ministers involved with other duties, will the government delegate or designate one minister as being responsible for carrying out this program and giving it the highest priority?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these consultations are continuing. I do not think the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition would have the effect of expediting the process. I think it is highly desirable that a number of ministers should be involved and that the government itself, through the Prime Minister, should take the responsibility. When these consultations have reached the point where there is something useful to report regarding the explorations that have taken place, there will be a report to the House.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that the Acting Prime Minister is refusing to give a date within which the government will report on this matter that was in the Speech from the Throne and which has been dragging along now for quite a number of months?

Mr. Sharp: I do not think it would be desirable to fix the date, Mr. Speaker. I think the most important point about these explorations is that we should try to reach a consensus among the people who are participating. If we fix a time by which we are supposed to report a consensus, it is my view that it would inhibit the process.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege at this time. I have just had provided to me an answer to question No. 1,296. This is the first opportunity I have had to rise since being made aware of the reply to the question, and I understand this is the avenue I should follow. I raise this question because—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is reserving his right to raise a question of privilege at the first available opportunity, but I wonder whether it would be agreeable to him to wait until the conclusion of the question period before raising his question of privilege. I understand his concern that if he waited until the end of the question period it might be asserted that he had not raised it at the first available opportunity.

Mr. Coates: That would be satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—POSSIBLE SUBMISSION OF INCOMES GUIDELINES TO UNION AND SHORTENING OF CONTRACT PERIOD

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and arises out of the obvious split between the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Finance respecting COLA clauses as they apply to the public service. In view of this difference of view, is the government contemplating any across the board incomes guidelines or a program that would be flexible regarding lower paid groups in the economy that have fallen significantly behind? I have in mind particularly the GLT group. Does the matter of comparability of wages for this group and similar workers in the private sector fit within the terms of reference of the government's objectives on a consensus?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the public service we try to reach agreement with unions through negotiations. Our objective is to provide civil servants with salaries comparable to those received by people carrying out similar duties in the private sector. I think that with such a policy it is possible to achieve the government's objectives.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the obvious failure on the part of the government to impress upon the GLT's this situation, in view of the bankruptcy of policy on the part of the government respecting the lower paid employees in the public service—which all members of the GLT group are—and particularly in view of the fact that one union member is reported at noon today to have said that if the government would shorten its contract period from two years to one some talking point might be arrived at and there would be a new chance for agreement, would the government indicate whether it will do this in order that this matter which has just begun can be brought to a head and this strike concluded?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are still negotiating with the union. The parties met over the weekend and this morning, and they are talking. The mediator, Mr. O'Connor, is working with the parties and I hope he will find a solution that will be acceptable to both of the parties.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STIMULATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Having said when unemployment in the automotive industry had reached only 15,000 that the government had no specific plans because the minister did not then regard the industry as being in a serious situation, I should like to ask the minister, now that unemployment has reached the 25,000 figure, and particularly since he has had time to consider a long and serious brief presented to him and to other ministers by the United Automobile Workers of Canada, whether he is in a position today to announce specific proposals which his government plans to take in order to deal with this very serious situation.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we had a very good meeting this morning with representatives of the automobile workers. Theirs was a lengthy, comprehensive submission dealing positively with many of the issues before us. My colleagues and I will be giving very careful consideration to it.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister has had the brief for some ten days and that he and his officials as well as other ministers in the cabinet have had access to and studied the brief for some ten days, is either the minister's department or any other department of government prepared to announce today proposals or courses of action which they plan to take, or can the minister at least tell the House when we can expect a specific, detailed program from the government?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been present this morning, he would have known that my colleagues and I took note of a number of these submissions made by the automobile workers. We will be advising him in due course of the government's decision.

AUTOMOBILES—REDUCTION OF PRICE AS MEANS TO STIMULATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I can only hope that there are still some workers employed by the time the government gets around to announcing its decision. I should like to ask him about one area of price differential in which the minister has shown remarkable insight by saying we sell 80 per cent of our cars to the United States, overwhelmingly due to the fact that the price is about $600 lower in the United States. Has the minister or the government reconsidered the price position with a view to bringing down the price to Canadian consumers as one means of increasing employment in the industry?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would focus upon the main problem of the automobile industry in Canada, which is the failure of the United States market, he would realize that the particular solution he is proposing would not have the effect of bringing about a resurgence in the automobile industry of Canada.

AIRPORTS

VAL-D'OR AND ROUYN—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF COMMERCIAL SERVICE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

There is now some discontent in northwest Quebec regarding Val-d'Or and Rouyn airports. Val-d'Or was previously a military airport, which is now within the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, and Rouyn has a civilian airport. The minister is undoubtedly aware that officials of his department visited these two places many times.

Can the minister say today whether Val-d'Or will keep all its present equipment and continue to provide the same services, and whether Rouyn will be adequately equipped, so that airlines can serve both airports for people who want to go to that region?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the Department of National Defence decided not to keep that airport, we sent investigators to see how we could use it for civilian purposes, since it was already used for such purposes.

We are trying to determine the best way to proceed. I cannot promise the hon. member there will be two airports, one in Rouyn and one in Noranda. I think the hon. member can easily use his car to go from one to the other but, in any case, it would be a good thing if one of them provided adequate service.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Whether I want to take the plane or use my car does not concern the Department of Transport.

For about twelve years, officers of that department have come to visit the region. They promise us the equipment for an airport in Rouyn, to make possible the landing at 70 miles from Val-d'Or. That is done between Ottawa and Montreal, and I think that Rouyn and Val-d'Or are as important as Ottawa. Is the minister prepared to give better service to Rouyn airport without taking any away from Val-d'Or?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I can assure the hon. member for Témiscamingue that his representation will be taken into very serious consideration, and I hope he will be satisfied.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF WAGE GUIDELINES WITH MINISTERS OF FINANCE AND LABOUR AS BASIS FOR NEGOTIATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Darmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Inasmuch as we have heard from the Minister of Labour that he has had no discussions with the Minister of Finance respecting guidelines, has the President of the Treasury Board had any discussions with the Minister of Finance respecting wage guidelines, and has he had any discussions with the Minister of Labour and, if so, were these guidelines expressed in any way to the general labour and trades group at any point during the negotiations or subsequent to them?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I were to reveal in the House what my position is, there would be no point in having any negotiations.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I was not looking for details of any disclosure. Let me put the question in the simplest form. I believe the House is entitled to this information. Has the President of the Treasury Board discussed the matter of guidelines with the Minister of Finance, not necessarily with respect to the current negotiations but regarding negotiations that will be going on from time to time between the Treasury Board and employees of the federal government?

Mr. Chrétien: It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance and I get along very well.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF SALES TAX

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to Canada's troubled automobile industry and I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that 30 per cent to 40 per cent of the Canadian automobile industry is directly dependent upon sales of Canadian auto products in Canada and because of the buyer resistance that is building up this year due to the price increase of Canadian automobile products, and further, because one of the factors in that increase is the 12 per cent federal sales tax levied on Canadian manufactured automobiles, not Volkswagens, not cars produced in the United States but Canadian manufactured automobiles, can the minister tell us now if the government has any plans to reduce or abolish the federal 12 per cent sales tax as has already been done in respect of the construction industry?

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Canadian automobile industry depends on U.S. consumers for about 80 per cent, or very close to it, of its production. Therefore, the sales tax proposal that the hon. member has put is, in my view, not an answer to the Canadian automobile industry. If indeed the sales tax reductions were to be applied, they might also have the effect of increasing the proportion of imports from third countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the Canadian consumer?

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact that we are talking about a sales tax on Canadian manufactured goods, not those imported into this country, and in view of the fact that the ten year old auto pact called for an equalization of price in respect of motor vehicles produced on the north American continent, can the minister tell us now what the government is doing right now in respect of the troubled Canadian auto industry?

An hon. Member: Nothing besides prayer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF VETERANS LAND ACT UNTIL NEW HOUSING LEGISLATION INTRODUCED

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that there are only about six weeks before the phasing out of the Veterans Land Act and that there are just under 3,000 applications which have been received by the veterans land administration because of the extension of the act, would the minister indicate whether, if no new veterans housing legislation is introduced before March 31, 1975, he will extend the act by an order in council or by legislation until the veterans housing legislation is ready.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been decided by the government that the Veterans Land Act would not be extended any further. As I have mentioned on previous occasions, a study has been conducted by my department, by the department of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, by the Department of Finance, and others. When the findings are known to us which I hope will be very soon, I will make them available to the House of Commons.

Mr. Marshall: The minister did not answer my particular point, that is whether, if the new veterans housing legislation is not ready by March 31, 1975, the minister would consider extending the act for two or three months until that legislation is ready.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): This is a government decision which will be taken at the time, and whether the decision is favourable or unfavourable, the announcement will be made.

PROPOSAL GOVERNMENT DEAL WITH UNIONS REPRESENTING SINGLE SECTORS OF ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ESTABLISHING LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Because of the fact that so many different sectors of the economy are being affected by the present GLT group walkouts, could the minister advise the House whether or not he would now perhaps consider looking into the possibility of having single public sectors in the economy dealing with the government as a whole in order to avoid the fragmentation of union power which, for example, has made this specific walkout so widespread?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty with that question because I do not know whether there would be less disruption if all the people were in the same union. If there were to be a strike, it would be a hell of a big strike. I do not think this would serve any useful purpose. Last week when the question was put to me twice I said that a joint committee of the House and of the Senate is looking into the recommendations of the Finkelman report and the hon. member will be welcome to express his views.

Mr. Jelinek: The President of the Treasury Board did not understand my question in which I referred to the individual public sectors, not the whole economy. However, my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour is as follows.

● (1450)

In view of the present work stoppage by the GLT group, could the minister advise this House whether his suggestion made to cabinet in a recent memorandum regarding labour relations in Canada will be implemented, and whether consideration is being given by cabinet to establishing a Canada labour relations council for the purpose of finding, on a continuing basis, solutions to different problems of practice and perception in labour relations, including the problems of fragmentation in the union?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not free to discuss here policies with respect to labour or any other policies discussed in cabinet.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO EVICT TENANTS AND FIND ALTERNATIVE USE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It deals with the report of the York County grand jury recommending that Canadian forces personnel be used to clean up the unholy mess in Rochdale College in Toronto. I would like to ask the minister what action the government has taken or will take regarding this problem which has been existing for four years.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member probably knows that this is in the hands of the court. There is a court-appointed trustee. Court action is taking place. I am not a lawyer, but I understand that the wheels of justice grind slowly.

An hon. Member: Like the cabinet.

Mr. Danson: We would like to see this turned over for more beneficial use of the community, and I assure those concerned that while we are going through a legal process, I am keeping close to it. We will do all we can to co-operate and see that the best use of the accommodation available is made if this property returns to CMHC's hands.

Mr. Scott: I agree that the wheels of justice grind slowly, but they must need a little grease by now. Why can the minister's department not put this building to some better use so that the citizens of Canada, especially the senior citizens, may receive some value for their tax dollars? I ask him to look into this.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of constant concern. I would like to see this returned to beneficial use for senior citizens or some other use which may be decided upon. I cannot do anything until the courts have made their determination.

AIRPORTS

ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE AND BONAVENTURE—SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF FUNDS FROM PICKERING PROJECT FOR AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport?

Since people from Toronto and the area are still reluctant about the Pickering airport project, would the minister consider transferring part of the funds earmarked for this airport to make the urgent improvements needed at the Îles-de-la-Madeleine's airport and build an airport at Bonaventure?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the minister was rising to answer my question and I would like to hear what he has to say.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe that if repairs are needed they should be made at the airports referred to, without necessarily using the funds earmarked for other purposes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I now direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the government at the instigation of the Minister of Finance decided to cut back or slow down the social security program which the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced in this House on April 18, 1973? Can he specifically now tell us what the target date is for the introduction of a guaranteed annual income?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will have the opportunity to meet my provincial counterparts tomorrow and the day after at a federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers. As for the matter of income security, I think that when my hon. friend reads the proposal the government intends to make to the provinces on this occasion, he will find that these proposals are well within the limits indicated in the working paper tabled in this House in April 1973.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister make a statement on this matter to the House immediately following that conference?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I will certainly make sure that any statements I make at the conference will be available immediately to all members of this House. As to whether it will be necessary to make a formal statement to the House at the end of the conference, I would like to give consideration to it later on.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and I would also ask the President of the Treasury Board to give it very special attention.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Owing to the considerable increase in unemployment in areas where textile and lumber industries are set up, as in the Bellechasse constituency where the people are quite concerned, may I ask the minister whether additional estimates will be earmarked for the Local Initiatives Program, so that priority projects will be subsidized thus creating jobs to compensate for dismissals in those industries and will he suggest that the date for the beginning of works be deferred from January 31, 1975 to March 31, 1975?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will give consideration to and discuss the hon. member's representations with my colleagues.

FINANCE

AMOUNT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PAYMENTS ESTIMATED FOR 1975

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I asked the Minister of Finance this question, and in his absence today I will repeat it for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the obvious revision of the financial resources available to the government and to the economy, would the minister advise the House as to the revised figure he has arrived at respecting the cash requirements of the government for unemployment insurance payments in the fiscal year 1975, in light of the government's obligations? Will this figure possibly exceed the $2 billion reached in 1972?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think, as the Minister of Finance indicated, there are a great number of variables which go into such forecasts.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He said he would look into it.

Mr. Andras: Yes, I am sure he will, and we are constantly looking at the variables to see the range. I would say that it is quite possible that the benefit pay-out in 1975 would be larger than the benefit pay-out in 1974, but to what extent I cannot tell you yet.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In view of the fact that the estimates are going to be tabled on Wednesday next, surely the minister already knows whether the figure of cash requirements for the government with regard to its responsibilities under the unemployment insurance scheme will exceed $2 billion.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister of Finance has been a party to these calculations. When the estimates are tabled I am sure the hon. member will be able to explore with us what the consequences and results might be.

IMMIGRATION

VISAS FOR LOUISEVILLE COLOMBIAN WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Given the precarious situation of the 37 Colombian weavers of Louiseville who have obtained some support from Quebec, does the minister intend to grant them an immigration visa?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I missed the first part of the question. I presume it relates to the Colombian workers who were brought in to work in the textile industry. As the hon. member knows, we have extended their permission to be here and we are looking at all possible means to alleviate a situation which arose, perhaps, inadvertently.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—ALLEGED SLOWDOWN OF SERVICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General investigated the report which appeared in the Montreal Star on Thursday last under the byline of Mr. Claude Adams to the effect that there was a deliberate slowdown in postal service in the Montreal post office which included sporadic and erratic situations, double and triple sorting of sacks and other activities of that kind, and if he is investigating this report, would he be making a statement to the House on the matter?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are constantly monitoring all our main post offices including that in Montreal, and the performance in the Montreal post office leaves something to be desired. On the other hand, there are officials there today making certain that our supervisors in the Montreal area have the required authority to prevent such action from being taken.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. In view of the statement of the Postmaster General that a small number of troublemakers are out to destroy the whole system, would he report to the House on this matter in order to restore the good name of the majority of postal workers and also to avoid further more serious disruptions of this kind?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that right now the majority of postal workers are entitled to a good name. They are law abiding citizens who do excellent work and provide the third best postal system in the world. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the group I am talking about is not confined to Montreal; it is found in other areas as well. The ideological conflict will be sorted out in due time.

AIR TRANSPORT

REGIONAL AIR CARRIERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since Canada's five regional airlines have stated that an urgent review of regional air policy is very necessary to them especially since they contend, and rightly so, that they are operating within the framework of the 1966 policy, I should like to ask the minister in view of the fact that his department has had some discussions with the regional air carriers about this program in the past two months, if he can inform the House what steps will be taken to upgrade regional air policies? Can the minister also inform the House whether a policy statement will be forthcoming in regard to what the Department of Transport intends to do in connection with regional carriers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the policy which I hope can be announced shortly will cover not only the regional air carriers but it will cover the third level air carriers, it will cover the boards, it will cover the airports, the railways, the highways—it will cover everything that moves in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It won't cover the government, then.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO AID PRODUCER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recent crisis in the beef industry that is causing farmers to sell livestock at almost half the cost of production, I should like to ask the minister what steps the government is taking at this time to alleviate the situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have programs for our livestock producers that no other nation in the world has and we can provide stability for their production. We have, for top grade cattle, a support price of $45.42 per hundredweight. We are reviewing our indexing system for the price we set last August for one year and have announced that this cattle support program will be extended for another year from August, 1975. The provinces also have programs. There is no way we can tell people not to sell their cattle, but I think they would be better off not to sell at this time.

Oral Questions

HARBOURS

SCOTT REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES WHICH HAVE COMMISSION PORTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The minister is aware of the discrepancy that exists between the National Harbours Board and the commission ports and he knows the difficulties for those areas where commission ports are built. Could the minister inform the House as to the disposition of the Scott report and tell the House whether it contains policy regarding grants in lieu of taxes to local governments where such commission ports are in operation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to give a clear answer on this and I am sure you can understand why. We have a very difficult situation here—it is easy to make a joke of what I am saying but the problem is the following: we have 13 ports under the National Harbours Board jurisdiction; we have the same number of harbour commissions and we have from 15 to 2,000 ports—

An hon. Member: You have one hell of a mess.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —which depend on the marine administration of my own department. Then, we have ports with special status like those in Toronto and Hamilton and private ports like Seven Islands and Port Cartier among others. The situation differs from place to place. If you ask me whether the National Harbours Board has a general policy for all those ports the answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO AID PARTS INDUSTRY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which relates to the very serious situation in the automotive industry today. Since almost half the people employed in the automobile industry are employed in the parts sector and since this sector is particularly badly hit at this time, can the minister tell the House specifically what the government is planning to do to alleviate this critical situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to assist them to find new export markets. We have participated with them in a number of trade missions abroad and Canadian fairs abroad. There have been various delegations from other countries to Canada looking at Canadian parts manufacturing as a source of supply. We are trying to find as many new and varied markets as we can.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ISSUED BY FAMILY COURTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I would direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the subject also concerns the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. On March 25, 1974 I mentioned the fact that 75 per cent of all family maintenance orders made by Canadian Family Courts against deserting husbands are in default. These defaults cost the Canadian taxpayer $365 million annually. In answer to my question during the adjournment debate the parliamentary secretary stated that this problem could be explored through the conference of uniformity commissioners on legislation which meets annually to examine ways and means of achieving uniformity in laws throughout the various jurisdictions. Can the minister now report to the House on the annual meeting and state what action is being taken to rectify this situation which has cost Canadian taxpayers close to $1 billion since January 1, 1973.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to refer the hon. member's question to the Minister of Justice on his return to the House and the minister will then report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED REFINERY AT EASTPORT, MAINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON USE OF CANADIAN WATERS TO DELIVER OIL

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the continuing hearings being held by the environmental authorities in the State of Maine regarding the construction of an oil refinery at Eastport, Maine, and in view of the position taken by the Minister of the Environment on April 29, can the minister inform the House whether a message has been sent to the Secretary of State of the United States to indicate what use may be made of Canadian waters for the delivery of oil to the proposed refinery?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend has stated the application is presently before the board in Maine and to my knowledge no decision has been rendered. If the oil for use in the proposed refinery is to be carried through the Head Harbour passage, of course, the attitude of the government of Canada has been made clear to the government of the United States. We think that the hazard to the environment is so great that this would be a very unwise course of action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North on a question of privilege.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to a matter raised earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that was brought to my attention in answer to question No. 1296 today. If you will examine question No. 1296 you will see that I asked very specifically for details in relation to gifts exchanged between members of our government and members of foreign governments when our government members are visiting foreign countries or members of other governments are visiting this country. In my question I sought to determine a number of things. I wanted to know, mainly, what moneys the taxpayers of Canada were putting up for gifts to foreign dignitaries. I was referring to gifts which such dignitaries receive in this country and to gifts which members of our government give to them when visiting other countries. As well, I wanted to know what happened to gifts received by representatives of our government.

The answer I received was pure gobbledygook. It says nothing except that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), who signed the order, states that there is no policy with respect to exchanging gifts. That, Mr. Speaker, is obvious. I submit that members of parliament are entitled to such information as I seek. The money for gifts given by our government members does not come out of the pockets of cabinet ministers; it comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this nation. Yet this government refuses to supply me with the detailed information I seek about the expenditures of those tax dollars. This is not the first time this has happened. The government is becoming more and more secretive and ever more reluctant to disclose information; and we have a legitimate right to such information.

The government is making a mockery of a procedure which is useful in eliminating debate in this chamber. We submit questions to be placed on the order paper for a very good reason: if they were not on the order paper, the answers would take up valuable time in the question period which is already too short. For a long time I have endeavoured not to misuse the question period and, whenever possible, in my search for information I have submitted written questions. The response to such questions has been inadequate. For example, not long ago there was a request for information and details about people taking language courses on either a short or a long-term basis. The answer was that: everybody taking a language course, regardless of where he may be, is treated as if he were still a member of the work force here in Ottawa. I point out that such a person might be in Quebec or in France. Nevertheless, that is all the information which was supplied.

If a question on the order paper is to be a useful tool for members of parliament, I suggest that you, sir, as our representative and spokesman should see to it that we are furnished with legitimate replies to our questions—and this is happening less and less frequently. The kind of garbage I was given as an answer today is just not good enough. Something must be done or the entire system under which we work will break down. We are not being treated fairly. The government is secretive—and it has no right to be secretive about how the taxpayers' dollars are spent. We want the facts. Having taken the time to formulate a question in detail, a question which is often based on research, we are entitled to an answer. The least we can expect is that the government will give us the information we seek. If we do not get it, the House will discover that every Monday and Wednesday at least half the day will be taken up by members of the opposition legitimately rising and complaining about the government not giving them information to which they are entitled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. It has become obvious that the government is hiding information, concealing facts and refusing to produce any information that is available. For example, let me refer to the question I asked on November 8 last, three months ago. I knew what the answer was when I asked the question; I received it from a departmental official. I wanted to know the total amount paid to sculptors for the statues of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, and for the design proposal of the statue of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. The government hid that information for three months. I raised the matter recently and said there could be no excuse for this. The excuse, of course, is that the government is afraid to give us the answer; that is all. But that is not the way to treat parliament.

Today, according to the answer furnished, we learn that the sculptor, Marcel Braitstein of Sackville, New Brunswick, received $48,000 for the statue of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. Sir, that was the greatest monstrosity ever produced—a mixture of Ichabod Crane and Daddy Longlegs. It is about nine feet high, and totally worthless. The government hid it for the last three or four years until we found out about it. Not only did the government decide that it could not set up such an object on Parliament Hill; it refused to give an answer for three months.

The next part of the answer dealt with the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Elek Imredy was paid $56,000 for the statue. Then there was the monstrosity of a mock-up for the statue of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. It consisted of a mummy about three feet long, the identification of which might have been possible in the days of Tutankhamen, but not since. One, Elford Cox, of Willowdale, Ontario, was paid $2,800 for this. Why was this information withheld? This is happening day after day. It shows that the government is determined not to answer anything that might embarrass it, or is determined to hide an answer as an order for return so that the people will not see it.

I know the government cannot answer some questions immediately. On November 6 I asked how many convictions for rape have been registered over a period of years and how many kidnapping convictions have been registered. Although the question was asked three months ago, the government is still working on it. One would think, if they had any regard for the administration of justice, that the information would have been available long ago. But we are told all this takes a long time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Some hon. members have already contributed to the alleged point of order or question of privilege relating to questions which have been placed on the order paper, answers to which the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council

(Mr. Reid) indicated would be given today. I accept the comments as being in the nature of a grievance. I think hon. members well know that the rules and Standing Orders of the House do not in any way compel the giving of answers by the government, no matter whether the question be an oral one put during the question period, a written question on the order paper or a question marked with an asterisk, that is, a starred question.

I am commenting now only on whether a question of privilege has been established and whether, in the final analysis, the Chair has any authority to compel answers. I am sure hon. members know full well that there is no compulsion under the Standing Orders and therefore no authority vested in the Chair to compel, in any way, the government to give answers. The government's choice as to whether to give answers is its own. Comments which have been made may be legitimate about the performance and discharge of that responsibility on the part of the government, but the Standing Orders stop short of providing the Chair with power of compulsion. I want hon. members to understand this clearly. The regulations and practices of this House stop far short of vesting authority in the Chair to compel any answers or to put any time limit on the giving of answers. If it is the feeling of hon. members that that should be done, that the Standing Orders of this House should be changed in such a way as to provide for compulsion, then so be it.

With regard to the point that it is not required within the Standing Orders at the present time, I wish to make it absolutely clear that I cannot see a question of privilege involved in this regard, nor can I see any authority for the Chair to compel action to be taken under the Standing Orders as they stand at the present time.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a different question of privilege, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I tried to rise earlier with regard to the matter of gifts which was raised a moment ago. I feel I have a legitimate question of privilege in this regard. Some weeks ago an announcement was made by the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in keeping with the increased tendency toward the governing of Canada by the Prime Minister's office, that guidelines were being drawn up to set forth conflicts of interest with regard to gifts received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet and their wives. As yet, these guidelines have not been presented to this House.

All we have been presented with are answers like the one given today to the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), which answer is ridiculous and flaunts the privileges of every member of this House. I do not know if we have to wait until every member of the cabinet has had a Japanese junket, been given a swimming pool or a flight on a whisky jet—but it is time the government got off the seat of its pants and provided this House with proper conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EGG MARKETING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that the first report of the Special Committee on Egg Marketing presented to the House on Monday, December 16, 1974, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was in the House earlier. I hope he will be here later to participate in this debate. Let me say at the outset that although my motion calls for concurrence in the committee's report, the reason I am putting forward the motion is to get the report before the House. I very much regret that this step was not taken by the chairman of the special committee or one of the government supporters on the special committee; hence, I moved the motion as a means of getting the report before the House so that it can be the subject of debate.

The special committee was set up on October 17 last with specific terms of reference. It was, first, to examine the operations of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and, second, the performance of the several authorities having responsibility with respect to those operations. There was no quarrel with the terms of reference. They were sufficiently wide in scope to give the committee the latitude it needed to embark upon this very important inquiry. Where we did, and do quarrel is with respect to the very narrow time-frame placed upon the committee by the government. The committee was instructed to report back to the House on or before December 16, 1974. This meant we had less than two months in which to conduct our inquiry.

I ask hon. members to imagine a judicial inquiry or a royal commission inquiry being asked to embark upon an investigation of this magnitude and being told to hear the evidence, draft a report and present it to the government within two months. No judge or any other public-minded person in Canada would be party to such an inquiry. Yet that was precisely the position in which the special committee found itself. During the 24 days of the committee's public sittings we heard 73 witnesses and we received 173 briefs. The witnesses who appeared before the committee made oral presentations and they were subject to cross-examination. As far as the briefs were concerned, it was up to the members of the committee to examine them in the best way they could within the very narrow time limits imposed by the order of reference.

I think it is generally agreed that the members of the committee worked hard. In fact, this was one of the hardest working committees on which I have served. I can also say—and I am sorry the hon. member is not in the House—that the committee was presided over by a very fair, impartial and competent chairman. I refer, of course, to the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I do not intend to go into the committee's report in detail: it is before the House. Suffice it to say that the report contains many very worth-while recommendations. The fact that my colleagues and I are dissenting from the report does not in any way mean that we do not support any of its recommendations or findings. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. Many of the findings and recommendations in the report are the direct result of our interest; however, it is our opinion that the committee failed on two important grounds. In spite of evidence to the contrary, even an admission by the Minister of Agriculture that he shared some of the blame, the committee in its report to the House failed to lay the blame where it belongs, that is, squarely on the shoulders of the Minister of Agriculture. It makes a rather faint-hearted attempt in the report to absolve the Minister of Agriculture of any blame whatsoever regarding the destruction of the 28 million eggs. I quote as follows from page 16 of the report:

> The committee recognizes that the Minister of Agriculture does not have any direct control over the operation of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency.

We intend to show during this debate that not only was the minister responsible, but that a lot of the problems plaguing the agency today are a direct result of the failure of the minister to take an active interest in the first year of the agency's operation, especially since it was supposed to be a pilot for other national marketing agencies to be established under the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Second, we cannot be a party to the committee's report because in our view the committee did not have an opportunity to hear all the facts pertaining to the operations of CEMA and the destruction of surplus eggs because of the time-frame imposed upon the committee by its order of reference. The committee had less than two months to call witnesses, examine the evidence and prepare a report for the House. The Minister of Agriculture said, during the debate setting up the committee—and I quote from page 490 of Hansard:

> Let the nation get all the facts which it has not received to this date.

We did not get all the facts. Let me give the House three illustrations of what I mean. First, the committee never had an opportunity to examine the management committee of CEMA, that is to say, the committee which is in charge of the day to day operations of the agency. How can one properly carry out the terms of reference of the committee without examining the body which is most closely involved?

● (1530)

Furthermore, after the committee had concluded its public hearings and had commenced its sessions in camera to draft its report, a letter was circulated to all committee members by CEMA's auditors, Touche, Ross and Company, indicating that the auditors could not issue an audit of the agency's financial accounts which would be in accordance with generally accepted auditing principles, and here I am paraphrasing. I might say that this evidence was produced as a result of a question directed to the auditors by my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). In a letter to CEMA dated October 24, 1974, the auditors stated that the inventory records of the agency were inaccurate and not up to date at the time of the auditors' examination. The letter also contained this startling revelation:

> There were several locations where eggs were stored and could not be examined by us because the locations were not known to us or to the agency at the date of the examination.

That evidence was crucial to the committee's investigations. Obviously, the implication here was that there could have been considerably more than 28 million eggs destroyed. We shall never know, because CEMA itself did not seem to know; at least, the auditors were unable to locate stored eggs because the locations were unknown to CEMA. So the number destroyed may have been 30 million, 40 million, or more. It might have been as high as 100 million. On October 5, 1974, the last day of the committee's public hearings, the provincial ministers of agriculture, following meetings in Ottawa with the federal minister on the future of CEMA, issued a statement containing a number of recommendations the effect of which was to place CEMA under trusteeship for two years. This report did not come before the committee until the final day of public hearings, when there were no further opportunities open to us to examine witnesses or to hear new evidence. The key recommendations in the ministers' report are as follows:

> 1. For an initial period of two years, CEMA should consist of a two-part administration: (A) CEMA proper, to consist of ten provincial representatives, plus (B) a five-member executive committee.
> 2. The provincial representatives should be selected by the commodity egg board in each province and should be acceptable to the other signatories to the plan in each respective province.
> 3. The executive committee should consist of: three persons appointed by the federal minister after receiving nominations from the provincial ministers; the chairman and vice-chairman of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency.

This report was not presented to the committee for examination. Moreover, its recommendations were adopted only on division according to a letter which the ministers themselves sent to the committee. Surely the House has the right to know which provinces dissented. We are entitled to know what position the Minister of Agriculture for Canada took in respect of those recommendations. As I say, this report came at the end of the committee's hearings and we had no opportunity to obtain this information.

Whether the recommendations are good or bad is irrelevant at this point. The point is, they represent a complete reversal of attitude toward CEMA. For example, when the publicity about CEMA in connection with the destruction of eggs had just begun, there were complaints that consumer representation on CEMA was inadequate. It was not suggested at any time that producers should not have any say in the conduct of their own marketing boards. But that is the attitude taken by most of the provincial ministers. It is up to the minister to decide whether to implement these measures or not. We hope the Minister of Agriculture, who is not in the House at this moment, will address himself to this question before the debate concludes.

The evidence to which I have referred, coming, as I say, at the end of the committee's hearings, totally discredits, in my view, the report which is now before the House. That is why my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Murta) will be moving an amendment later this day to refer the report to the Standing Committee on Agriculture where members would have the opportunity to learn all the facts—not just selected facts, not just the facts the minister wants us to hear. There will also be an opportunity to look into the new facts which have come to light since the committee made its report.

I should like to review briefly the events which have taken place since the committee presented its report. In December there was an announcement that British Columbia would be withdrawing from CEMA. British Columbia is one of the important producer provinces. Then on January 29 of this year Newfoundland announced that it would be withdrawing from CEMA. We are told that other provinces are about to make a similar move. Why are those two provinces withdrawing? Surely the House is entitled to an answer to that question before it comments on this report.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that we no longer have a national egg marketing plan. Indeed, it is questionable whether such a plan ever existed. Evidence was presented to the committee, from several provinces, to the effect that barriers to interprovincial trade in eggs still exist even after a full year of operations by the agency. And, of course, the principal reason for bringing CEMA into existence was to end the so-called chicken and egg war; to bring down provincial barriers to trade. For example, Nova Scotia eggs could not get to Newfoundland, and British Columbia closed its border to eggs from Alberta and other provinces. The committee hears evidence to the effect that CEMA had set its intervention price, that is, the price which would be paid for surplus eggs, so high that it was, and perhaps still is, an incentive to over-produce.

Then again, CEMA is unable to enforce its quotas and some of the provinces have failed to discipline their own producers. Here I refer to the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. As a result, production in Canada is still out of control and CEMA is unable, or at least it was unable up to the end of January, to control the supply of eggs. Last month CEMA announced that it had 40 million surplus eggs in storage. That surplus production was growing by an additional 15 million eggs per week. Here I refer hon. members to the story that broke in the Globe and Mail on January 15 last. Shortly after that story appeared, CEMA announced at its meeting in Moncton that it would be reducing production by 10 per cent. What about the present surplus production? Is it now rotting in storage? We are told it has been disposed of. How was it disposed of? Even the Minister of Agriculture was skeptical of that statement when he first heard it.

Fourthly, there can be no supply-management concept unless and until there is co-ordination between domestic production and the importation of eggs into this country. We said the following in our own submission:

> The Minister of Agriculture has failed to recognize a crucial feature of the supply-management concept in that his own government failed to implement an effective mechanism of import controls which directly resulted in lack of stability to the producer and still subjects the consumer to fluctuating prices.

The result, of course, is apparent every day. For example, the egg situation in the province of Ontario has been such that a short while ago Ontario producers were forced to sell eggs at below cost of production, and this was a direct result of the failure of the agency, of the government through the minister, of the Farm Products Marketing Council and of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) to control the importation of eggs into Canada, or at least to co-ordinate the importation of eggs into Canada with the domestic supply of eggs. I am sorry that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not in the House. He did make one of his rather infrequent visits to the House today, but I am sorry that he has been unable to stay for this debate. Hopefully, the minister will participate in the debate since he does have direct responsibility in this matter.

The Consumers Association of Canada has described CEMA as a mismanaged monopoly. Enjoying as it does the special privileges that it has respecting the combines act, unless and until this particular agency has consumer representation it lends itself to that kind of charge. At the beginning of the present session the Minister of Agriculture promised the following, if I may quote from his speech on October 3 as reported at page 92 of Hansard:

> Shortly we will be announcing some new appointments to the National Farm Products Marketing Council. These will include a consumer representative, a labour-oriented representative, and a businessman.

Where are these appointments? They were promised the House last October. Under the statute, the Farm Products Marketing Council has direct supervisory responsibility and is accountable to the minister, which of course makes the minister responsible for the day to day operations of CEMA. We were promised consumer representation on the council last October, so why has the government not seen fit to move on its promise?

What about CEMA itself, if in fact it is able to survive and does survive? I believe—many members share this view, including the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs—that CEMA, because of its special position and the special privileges it enjoys, and also because the provisions of the combines act are waived, should have consumer representation on its board. I hope that from this point of view alone we will have some comment from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Indeed, one would have expected the minister to be the champion of cause of consumers if for no other reason than it is in keeping with his responsibility under the statute under which his department was set up. But the reverse seems to be true.

It is interesting to read what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had to say when he appeared before the committee. I quote from issue No. 10 of the committee's proceedings. He said:

> I am not advocating a consumer representative; I am advocating a federal representative and, therefore, if anybody has to put money in it will not be my department, it will be the federal government.

That is the kind of gobbledygook that we got from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during his brief appearance before the committee. But if one thing rings true loud and clear, it is the statement that the minister is not in favour of consumer representation on the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, or that indeed he does not support the principle of consumer representation on national marketing boards. While talking about consumer representation on national marketing boards, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should tell the House what he proposes to do about, for example, the recommendations contained in the Forbes Report on Consumer Interest in Marketing Boards. The Forbes report was not undertaken as an academic exercise. This is a report that was commissioned by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which has been in the hands of the minister and his department since last April. From what I have read of the minister's appearance before the committee, he has obviously ignored Professor Forbes' recommendations, just as he has ignored the recommendations of the Consumers Association of Canada. I regret this very much because for a while the minister was showing some promise. I certainly hope we will hear from him in this debate.

Professor Forbes' report, which I commend to all hon. members of the House, contains some interesting reading. He has described our agricultural policy as "confused" and as a "hodgepodge" which is costing the Canadian taxpayer, to paraphrase him, over $1 billion a year. We certainly have a good example of this confusion before the House at the moment. We are told that the broiler chicken industry in Canada is in a mess. I mention that fact because the government has once again made no response whatever to the recommendations of the Food Prices Review Board report which was released on January 13. In that report the board recommended that the federal government "not proceed with the establishment of a national chicken marketing agency until a number of questions arising from the board's findings are resolved".

As an extra plank in its program to end the chicken and egg war, the government put into place plans to set up a national broiler chicken marketing agency. In its report on January 13, which is in the hands of all hon. members, the board sets out very good reasons for taking this view, reasons that I think are very germane to this debate. For example, the board found that producer price increases in the chicken broiler industry and the wholesale price spreads do not appear to justify either the increase in average retail prices in the past year or the differences in retail price spreads among the provinces. The board goes on to question whether these differences in fact reflect regional differences in input costs. On checking today, I was told that there are 34 million pounds of broiler chicken in cold storage.

At the time the report was filed, there were 31 million pounds of broiler chicken in cold storage as of last September. The board finds that the Canadian Broiler Council's proposal for a national chicken marketing plan under the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act——features a narrow definition of the interests to be served in a national marketing plan and it does not resolve the problem of provincial versus federal jurisdiction which seriously impeded the effective working of the national egg marketing plan.

Therein the board underlined the most serious weakness of the national egg marketing plan, and that is the problem of jurisdiction, the problem of the constitution and the fact that CEMA consists of ten provincial marketing agencies which have full jurisdiction under the constitution. Unless these provincial marketing agencies are prepared to discipline themselves and to adhere rigidly to the agreed upon quotas, there can be no national marketing plan. That is precisely what has happened and that is why today there is no national marketing plan.

It should be remembered—I think this is worth pointing out for the record—that it was the Food Prices Review Board that touched off the egg controversy in the first instance. It made a similar report on eggs back in January of last year. At that time the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to ignore the recommendations in that report. He still has not responded to the board's report on the chicken broiler industry even though it was released early in January and contains serious charges that should be made the subject of an investigation by the minister or somebody designated by him. One would think the minister would have learned a lesson, but it is obvious that some people never learn. Perhaps the minister, if he graces us with his presence today, will tell us what he proposes to do about the findings of the board on the broiler chicken industry. Otherwise, he should tell Mrs. Plumptre and her people to go home and stop wasting the taxpayer's money if these reports are to be ignored, as they are from time to time.

In summation, I should like to say the following. We feel that the report should be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that we can get all the facts. On the basis of the evidence we have, the Minister of Agriculture was warned as far back as December, 1973—and that evidence was presented very clearly to the committee in a memorandum which was presented by the Farm Products Marketing Council—that egg surpluses were getting out of control and would continue to get out of control. The minister's failure to act on the report of the council at that time, his subsequent behaviour with regard to the report of the Food Prices Review Board and the publicity which attended the first revelation, can only be construed as an attempt to cover up this whole rotten affair—an attempt which, I am pleased to say, failed.

Let the minister now level with the House and with the country, because it is not CEMA that is on trial here but the whole concept of national commodity marketing agencies and the supply-management principle. Neither concept has been served well by this minister. At a time when Canadians are paying record high prices for food, and when there are rising farm input costs, we have a right to know if the minister intends to take steps to ensure that before any other national marketing plans are put in place the best interests of both producers and consumers will be protected.

Furthermore, the minister has an obligation to tell us that these things will be done not just as another ad hoc program, as an ad hoc reaction to a continuing crisis situation, but in the context of a national food policy which was recommended to the government by the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices of late lamented memory, and that such a national food policy will not only honour our obligations and commitments to the people of Canada but our obligations and commitments to the people of the starving world.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) this afternoon because many things were done by the Department of Agriculture and in my opinion many good recommendations were made by him, but I do not know whether they were given any consideration either by the farm marketing board or by CEMA itself. Only the minister can give us that information because, due to special circumstances, this matter is not before the Standing Committee on Agriculture as it normally would be.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) say that later a member of the House will be moving an amendment recommending that this matter go before the committee on agriculture. I would certainly support such a motion. First, however, I would like to indicate two things. The previous speaker put great emphasis on the fact that consumers are not involved in marketing legislation. He has mentioned this on several previous occasions, presumably on behalf of consumers. I believe that that is one of the matters that was dealt with very effectively by the committee, and I think the hon. member stood alone in his contention.

Without doubt, marketing legislation does affect the consumer but it does not necessarily affect him in the way that the hon. member pointed out. Obviously it affects the consumer because a monopoly is being established, normally for the benefit of the people who are operating it—in this case, the egg producers—and who are deciding how many eggs should be produced, where they should be produced, and at what cost. The consumer is affected if the cost is too high. Conversely, it is true that the consumer will gain considerable benefit from orderly marketing if supplies are made available during a continuous period of time so that there are no shortfalls, at which time the price is exorbitantly high, and no surpluses when the consumer still buys a normal amount of the product and the remainder of the product depresses the market and the surrounding sectors affected by that market. If the price of eggs drops very low, other farming segments are affected, such as cattle, poultry, and so on, because this is a protein that can be used for various purposes.

Mr. Speaker, whether the producer will learn nationally to control his produce to his advantage in order to ensure a reasonable price, and at the same time supply the market with a suitable product over a continuous period, will depend on whether the agency we now have will bring together the constitutional problem of provincial versus federal control. If it is able to master this, in my opinion it will be able to serve the needs of the consumer and probably facilitate the consumer having some input in respect of legislation in this area.

For many months when the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act was before the committee on agriculture, I fought against it, not because I was opposed to the idea of orderly marketing but because I was opposed to the idea of the federal government establishing a piece of marketing legislation which it would not be able to control. It seems to me that what happened in respect of the egg marketing legislation was inevitable because we operated the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act for the first time in the development of a national agency that was dependent entirely upon provincial agencies. There was considerable discussion at that time by many provinces as to whether they were willing to give up their autonomy in establishing quotas and prices. There was a great deal of discussion on whether they were willing to give this up to the federal government or whether they would operate in conjunction with the other provinces under the umbrella of national marketing legislation. They opted, under the egg marketing legislation, to do just that. It is my opinion that this kind of marketing legislation will never operate satisfactorily. It will not operate satisfactorily because provinces will continually, in every agricultural field, be looking for self-sufficiency. If every province looks for self-sufficiency in every field, obviously there will be a surplus which no federal government will be able to handle.

On a number of occasions we have overcome this problem of federal-provincial jurisdiction in respect of agricultural production. We have done this in the industrial milk field. The federal government operates a monopoly in industrial milk products simply because we were willing to make a very substantial payment to get control of that field. The provincial governments have not become involved in it; they have allowed the federal government to operate it. I have heard very little complaint with the exception of price, which will always be a complaint with farmers, with workers and with everyone else when it comes to the sale of their commodities. But I have heard no complaint from the provinces as to the operation of the federal government in the industrial milk field.

To a lesser degree, because it affects a smaller number of people—but certainly in a much larger field—the federal government has successfully operated the Canadian Wheat Board which has a monopoly in three provinces and a monopoly, in a different way, in two other provinces. It has operated this monopoly on behalf of the producer over a long time and in my opinion has done so successfully. Any detriment which has occurred to the industry over the years, or to consumers, has been in my opinion due to meddling with that marketing agency and production: we have reduced its efficiency. I am convinced that federal marketing legislation is necessary. I am convinced that it is advantageous. Whether we can get the co-operation of all the people who joined CEMA is very doubtful.

The hon. member for St. John's East also complained about the fact that again there is building up a very large surplus of eggs, and if that surplus continues—it was indicated early in January that we had 40 million and we were increasing that surplus by 15 million per week—I think he has reason to worry. It is very interesting to note that his sidekick or mentor, Mrs. Plumptre, does not take his position. She said on January 16, referring to this vast build-up, as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail:

> Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, said in Ottawa yesterday there is no need for panic over the 40 million egg surplus.
> "That's not an excessive amount," Mrs. Plumptre said. "It's certainly not anything to be panicking about."
> She said the president of CEMA has a tough job ahead of him, "so for goodness sake let's give him a chance to get the situation under control."

Mrs. Plumptre did not seem to be particularly worried about it. But two things which were involved at the same time really worry me. When asked about this matter, one of the officials of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency said they had had a large build-up of eggs—they had 40 million plus the weekly increase of 15 million—but that was last week and now it has all been taken care of. I am really concerned about that because I would like to know how it was taken care of and under what circumstances. How does one get rid of so many eggs, and under what circumstances? I am also concerned about another factor which is very important. The Minister of Agriculture gets into the act and indicates that we are exporting more eggs than we are importing. The Montreal Gazette of January 16, 1975, says:

> Canada imported about 72 million eggs from the United States last year and, at the same time, exported 156 million, most of them to the U.S., an agriculture department spokesman said yesterday.
> This seemingly strange set of circumstances, expected to change this year because of declining American production, results mainly from price differences in the two countries.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the things that really confuses the Canadian public. The minister can say that we are exporting more eggs than we are importing. We imported 72 million and we exported 156 million. The eggs which we imported were table eggs: most of them went on the table in Ontario or in Quebec. But the eggs we exported were breaker eggs at about one-third the price of table eggs. So we are importing eggs for table use and we are exporting eggs for breaker use. It would be of great interest to me and to many other people to find out exactly how we got rid of the large number of eggs we had accumulated in January so that by the end of the month it could be said at the Moncton meeting that there was really no surplus and we were going to embark upon a reduction of the quota. At the same time, we have not been given any indication that quotas are being imposed on the importing of eggs.

I agree with one thing the hon. member for St. John's East said, and that is that the time limit imposed on the committee worked to its detriment. I think the committee did an excellent job. It held 24 public meetings, received 20 briefs and hundreds of submissions, and in those meetings it looked very extensively at the whole problem not only of eggs but of marketing legislation in a federal system. It made a number of recommendations, and I think we have a right to know what happened to them.

One criticism levelled at the Minister of Agriculture is, I think, unfair. I would be very opposed to a national marketing agency over which the minister would exercise the kind of control that is being suggested by some members. An agency should be able to stand on its own feet no matter who the minister is or what situation or emergency develops. So far this agency has not had to handle unexpected emergencies.

It has been suggested that when CEMA was established it had a large surplus of eggs on hand from the provincial marketing agencies, particularly from Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, and the surplus was never properly inventoried; we did not know where it was or what kind of storage it was in. Although it was in no position to take over that surplus, CEMA did take it over and finally eliminated it and now we are in the position where we only meet our requirements. One of the initial problems with CEMA was that it did not have people who were interested in establishing a national agency. Instead, it had people who were interested in being loaned from their own provincial sections to a national agency, to the advantage of the provincial agencies. That meant there was nobody looking after the over-all situation with a view to establishing a reasonable national quota. The people who were part of the agency did not have the time nor the expertise to embark upon a program to expand international sales.

It is my view that a national agency composed of provincial people had very little opportunity to get off the ground. One of the committee's recommendations was that the size of CEMA should be increased by three members and hopefully one of these would become chairman. It was felt that people who were properly oriented would look at the over-all position. The committee felt that the government should immediately look into the question of importing and exporting eggs. Surely it would be better not to import them from the United States. If we allow unmarked table eggs to come in from the United States, they can be packed in boxes displaying Canadian companies' names without any indication that they are not Canadian eggs. In Ontario, a large number of eggs come directly from the United States and to my knowledge the government has not taken steps, under the orderly marketing operations which are a right under GATT, to have these eggs labelled as such.

The committee made many suggestions about the bookkeeping of CEMA. The agency depended almost entirely on provincial boards for information on where and what surpluses there were. Sometimes the surpluses were counted twice, and sometimes storage places were missed. The auditors said that an audit could not be done on CEMA books nor on most of the provincial board's books, and recommended—and the committee agreed—that they should meet with the boards and establish a bookkeeping system. They wanted the provincial boards to follow the same set-up so that their audit would be acceptable to federal auditors. I should like to know, from someone on the government side, whether this has been done. If it has not, I should like to know why.

It was also suggested that CEMA be helped to develop a method of disposing of surplus eggs to the needy in Canada. The board indicated that they had investigated this matter, had not found a way to do so advantageously and had therefore temporarily set the idea aside. The committee also recommended that eggs should be in storage for a limited length of time and should only be kept there to meet the needs of Canadians. The committee agreed that some storage eggs could be marked as such and put on the market at a reduced price. It was suggested that eggs were sometimes held in storage longer than they should be because the board was in negotiation with the breaker trade. The report said clearly that if the eggs could not be sold for a reasonable price, CEMA could order them to be broken and converted to powder and then dispose of the egg powder as part of our food aid program to underdeveloped countries. The federal government was to pay for this conversion to powder. This course was better than holding the eggs in storage when there was no likelihood of their being used as fresh table eggs.

The committee was told that eggs could be stored for eight months and still be certified by the Department of Agriculture as fit for human consumption. Obviously, if the eggs are to be broken in any event, there is no point in storing them for a long period. Why not break them right away? I think that was the committee's view. Many eggs that we eat today have been stored, not by CEMA but by the supermarket chains. They store the eggs until they can sell them at an advantageous price. This course has sometimes resulted in egg spoilage, as most housewives can tell you. If eggs were to be marketed within seven days of being laid, there would be no spoilage and housewives would not complain.

The other day the Minister of Agriculture said that unless CEMA functions more adequately, he will disband the organization. Farm marketing legislation gives him the right to abolish the agency. Experts appearing before the committee were opposed to marketing legislation, but they agreed that in the final analysis marketing legislation was beneficial. They did not support a national egg marketing agency. It was pointed out that bringing together the 33 people involved in CEMA was a major undertaking. However, unless the agency can work satisfactorily, its policies will again lead to disaster and the alternative will be one national marketing agency which will control all egg production in this country, in the same way as one board controls industrial milk. Although this course may simplify administration, it will not have the support of most ministers of agriculture in this country.

I hope the minister will tell the House which recommendations of the board he has put into effect. Personally, I think the committee did a good job and the government should heed its recommendations, as well as recommendations made by the ministers of agriculture who met late in November. Everyone agreed that if the agency could be made to work properly, producers would benefit, as would consumers who would have available high quality eggs at stable prices.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, before commenting on what other hon. members have said, I would speak about the situation which existed a few years ago in the egg industry. The industry experienced ups and downs; prices to consumers fluctuated and returns to producers fluctuated. The result was that many producers went out of business, and when high profits were to be made, the few who remained in business made them. In our society the farmer is not organized, nor is he part of a pressure group. He does not belong to an association of the kind to which doctors, lawyers and other professional people belong; that is, to an association which will safeguard his job and in some cases guarantee his income. Safeguards are necessary if people are to buy expensive equipment. The farmer buys land as well as equipment.

Members of occupational associations do not worry so much about booms or busts which have been traditional in agriculture. The farmer is alone, open to the elements and to the caprices of markets in which he is forced to sell. I do not think anyone in this House suggests that the farmer's position is enviable. He cannot foresee the weather. If he is a poultry producer, he does not know if and when disease may strike. If he is successful he may find, on going to market, that other farmers have been successful as well; and plenty in the marketplace means a low price to the farmer but, of course, a beneficial price to the consumer.

[Mr. Peters.]

I suppose many farmers and others in Canada have looked into this situation. I am proud to say that British Columbia was among the first provinces to consider the establishment of marketing boards. It is unfortunate that after our first experiment in establishing a national marketing agency so many eggs were destroyed because of mismanagement by the board. I do not think the farmer, the egg producer or the poultry producer was happy to see 28 million eggs destroyed. The consumer was not happy, either. When something like this happens, we all lose.

You must realize, Mr. Speaker, that there was a genuine desire for order in an industry which had experienced ups and downs, booms and busts and havoc for many years. The fact that 28 million eggs were destroyed after one year of operation does not detract from the marketing concept: it only proves that after a short period of time you cannot handle a large industry like this. You need control and expertise which is only developed over many years. You must become professional.

I have no idea whether the egg marketing concept will still exist in one or two years from now. However, if it fails, it will be a sorry day for both the consumer and the farmer. I have two views on this. I realize there was incompetence; there were managers who did not manage and producers who overproduced or tried to hide what they had produced. As a result, it is not just one man or one government that is at fault in this matter. I believe it results from a combination of all parts of the marketing scheme. If we are going to lay blame, let us put that blame on all sectors; let us not look for one man as a scapegoat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: I hear some members of the opposition laughing. We have one Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), but we have many members. Don't blame the Prime Minister, the leader.

An hon. Member: The buck has to stop somewhere.

Mr. Anderson: Don't blame the general of the army if a battle is lost, because a general is only one man. This question involves many other people.

Mr. Lawrence: There's an old Chinese saying: He who gets swimming pool gets blame.

Mr. Anderson: I hear comments from the other side. I am glad they are awake.

Mr. Lawrence: We are, but it's a real effort.

Mr. Anderson: There were many parts of an organization, not just one or two. There is no use blaming the chairman of CEMA, the marketing board, the Premier of British Columbia or the Premier of Newfoundland. It is not fair to go after the jugular vein of one man in this House, because he was not the only man involved. I do not believe, in the short time we had to make this report, that that is the evidence that turned up. I wish to say a few words about the time-frame. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) stated that the committee worked within a time-frame. Members of the committee will recall that we sometimes met two or three times a day: it was a very busy schedule. However, when I look at the number of witnesses who appeared—in most cases to the satisfaction of the committee—I believe we heard from as many people as required to make a decision and recommendations on this matter.

I wish to mention just a few of the witnesses. We heard from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). We also heard from representatives of the National Farm Products Marketing Council, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, the Food Prices Review Board, the marketing boards of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, the Newfoundland Egg Marketing Board, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the federations of agriculture of almost every province, the Canadian Poultry and Egg Council, the Consumers Association of Canada, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, and the University of British Columbia. The following organizations submitted briefs to the committee: the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario, the Committee to Reform Egg Marketing in Ontario, and the Egg Producers' Association of Quebec.

It was stated that we required more time. All I can say is that we certainly hit all bases as far as representatives from the poultry industry and consumers are concerned. The only thing that could perhaps be faulted is that we could not spend two or three hours or days with each witness. That would have been impossible. I do not think it is necessary to spend a great deal of time if you can question the witnesses and sift through the information to the satisfaction of the committee. I do not believe we required any further witnesses.

There was reference to the fact that the CEMA auditors, Touche, Ross and Company indicated as follows in their report on the agency's financial statements ending June 30, 1974:

> Because of our inability to verify egg production levies, the cost of egg surplus removal program and the inventory, and because of the uncertainties arising from the financial position of the agency, we do not express an opinion on the accompanying financial statements for six months ended June 30, 1974.

That is a very harsh indictment of the CEMA board. The hon. member for St. John's East stated that these people should appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I submit that if we look at what was said, they do not know how many eggs were produced, they do not know what the levies were, they do not know the cost of the egg surplus removal program, and the inventory is uncertain. No matter how many committees they appear before, whether it be the agriculture committee or a committee on the commonwealth of nations, they will say the same thing—that they do not know. There is no use bringing in these auditors because, according to the bookkeeping system of CEMA, they cannot tell whether the agency produces eggs or walnuts.

Even though that is a harsh indictment of CEMA by the accounting people, we are not discussing the faults of these people or what they did wrong. They made mistakes, obviously, otherwise we would not have had the committee. The point is, what further information could these people give us if they were called before the agriculture committee? I suppose they could elaborate; they could go up and down. However, they would say the same thing, namely, that the accounting procedures of CEMA make it impossible for them to know what is going on.

In all humbleness, I suggest that the hon. member for St. John's East is incorrect in asking that these witnesses appear before a committee of any type, because the same story would come out. Even though they have an inefficient method of counting eggs produced in Canada, and in many cases do not know where they have put the eggs, both the committee and the House could have been saved a lot of trouble if someone had learned the simple fact that you sell the oldest produce first: you do not sell the freshest produce first. What happens is that the old eggs get older and eventually rot. It is a strange thing to see happen in our day and age. We have refrigeration plants which can keep produce fresh for many months; we have modern equipment which can haul produce to refrigerator units; we have cost accounting; we have computers—yet somewhere along the line somebody forgot to tell the people in the warehouse that you don't leave the old eggs in there when you fill orders; you ship out the old ones first.

The loss of 28 million eggs amounts to an expensive lesson in the correct handling of eggs at a warehouse. I do not think we need expert witnesses before a committee of the House of Commons to tell us this. It is elementary. There is no need for accountants to tell us that they cannot make head or tail of the books. There is no need for provincial representatives to tell us that perhaps they were more interested in the effect on their own areas than in the national picture. All this is contained in testimony which the committee has already heard. We know about the pitfalls. We know where they went wrong.

After hearing this evidence, the committee made its recommendations—the recommendations contained in the report which is now before the House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is no way in which the committee can instruct the minister or CEMA to implement these recommendations. That is something for the provinces to consider and for the minister to decide. One of the recommendations which I would strongly urge the minister to carry out, and one which appeals to me on humanitarian grounds, is that surplus eggs should in future be distributed in such a way that senior citizens and people in receipt of welfare funds might make use of them. One of the reasons a surplus of eggs arose was that the egg breakers in Ontario and eastern Canada are controlled to an estimated 70 per cent by one firm, and it was obviously to the advantage of this firm to be able to buy eggs at as low a price as possible, despite the fact that this was bound to create a problem for the egg marketing system which was trying to get a fair price for its product.

Canadians, whether consumers or producers, feel strongly that we cannot afford to allow any food to be destroyed, either through greed or through neglect. Surely we cannot, in today's conditions, allow food which is so desperately needed throughout the world to go to waste here. I believe the CEMA people understand this responsibility and I hope the agony of the committee hearings, the several weeks we spent discussing this problem, made them aware of their shortcomings. Surely they are smart enough at this point not to go through the whole exercise again.

Mention should be made of the special position of the Minister of Agriculture and his relationship to these events. The power given to the Minister of Agriculture is clearly stated in the course of the background respecting ministerial responsibility. On page 6 of issue No. 16 of the proceedings of the Special Committee on Egg Marketing, the following appears:

> The committee fully recognizes the principle of ministerial responsibility which is fundamental to the British parliamentary system and therefore effectively directs all of its observations and recommendations to the Minister of Agriculture for his consideration even though they have direct bearing on the operations of the National Farm Products Marketing Council, CEMA, provincial boards, provincial governments and other departments of the Government of Canada . . .
> The committee further recognizes that the Minister of Agriculture does not have any direct control over the operation of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. The agency has the obligation imposed upon it by parliament to report directly through the Farm Products Marketing Council. The Farm Products Marketing Council in turn has a responsibility and obligation to report to parliament through the Minister of Agriculture. The Farm Products Marketing Council Act passed by parliament does not envisage that the Minister of Agriculture directly would have responsibility for the day to day operations of the Farm Products Marketing Council. These responsibilities rest primarily on the shoulders of the management of the Farm Products Marketing Council itself.

On page 16:7 of the same report evidence is given to the committee by the legal advisers to the National Farm Products Marketing Council that unilateral action on the part of the minister or the agency was not possible. In other words, we are dealing with a conglomerate of ten provinces associated for the common purpose of establishing a stable price. Neither the provinces, the minister nor the agency can take action on their own. Possibly this is a weakness in the system. However, I suppose that in some respects it is rather like confederation itself, where the ten provinces sometimes work together and sometimes do not. It is unfortunate that provincial boards do not at all times submit to the will of the national board, but I suppose it is only understandable that they should wish to protect the interests of their own areas.

In any case, it would be foolish to suggest that the minister had it within his power to correct the situation which was developing, without reference to the other provinces and to the other boards. It would be a great disservice to the minister, who is recognized as one of the all-time champions of the farmers, to accuse him of failing to follow the progress of this agency as though he could throw out the life-saver which would rescue an extremely waterlogged board.

When hon. members have perused all the evidence given before the committee, I hope they will feel, as I did, that there was a genuine and sincere attempt by many people, who before the committee met had had very little experience of eggs, egg marketing boards and farmers, to outline the faults that had been created and to bring in remedies and cures for those faults. However, to return this matter to the agricultural committee would, I think, be a waste of time both for the committee and for the House.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, the Special Committee on Egg Marketing, of which I am a member, received very special terms of reference, that is to inquire into the performance of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, established under the provisions of Bill C-176.

The terms of reference of that body entailed very great responsibilities. That was evidenced by the seriousness all members displayed during all the proceedings which lasted several weeks. I wish to pay homage to all my colleagues on the committee for the responsible way in which they worked during the proceedings. They very objectively endeavoured to find out the weaknesses of this egg marketing program, put forth recommendations for its improvement and enable on the one hand, producers to get the income they deserve and, on the other hand, consumers to buy good quality eggs at prices they can afford. In my view, Madam Speaker, such was the objective to be set by the committee in order to serve the whole Canadian people.

A number of sessions were held, many witnesses appeared, as was aptly mentioned by the hon. member that moved the motion to debate the committee's report dated December 16, 1974. It is my conclusion that members of the Canadian Egg Marketing Board either showed levity, or failed to realize the extent of their responsibilities.

Under an act of Parliament, the Farm Product Marketing Council's responsibility was to establish, at the request of producers themselves, a marketing board, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. During the months after that agency was established, we saw problems were arising. Producers were not altogether satisfied with the scheme, and also egg marketing was not being conducted in an orderly fashion in Canada.

Newspaper reports appeared to the effect that eggs were let to spoil in various locations; FEDCO, the agency in the province of Quebec, was not adequately fulfilling its member's expectations, and in other areas such as British Columbia or even Ontario the orderly marketing of eggs fell somewhat short of expectations.

The Food Prices Review Board, the so-called Plumptre Commission, entered into the picture, presumably at the request of consumers complaining they could not get fresh enough eggs, or at reasonable prices they could afford, or the eggs offered for sales were unmarked and they were in doubt whether they were buying Canadian eggs or eggs imported from some other country.

The Plumptre Board made a few reports, made checks on the spot, determined that there were irregularities in this area, that there was something wrong, and it submitted its report. Every member of the special committee responsible for studying this problem was able to see certain recommendations that the reports of this board contain.

Madam Speaker, even after all this, the issue was raised in Parliament, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was faced with an extremely serious problem, namely that there was something wrong. A motion was then presented in Parliament asking that a special committee be instructed to examine all aspects of this problem and to report to the House by a predetermined date, that is by December 16, 1974.

As concerns the Food Prices Review Board which I mentioned a moment ago, I would like to say that I have examined carefully the research that has been made and the exact complaints made by consumers which justified the need for a report by the board. After all that reading I came to the conclusion that the Farm Products Marketing Act in Canada with which we first experienced in the area of eggs did not give results that were really encouraging. So, to avoid such spectacular results in other areas, discouragement and the dropping of that legislation, something just had to be done.

I remember quite well, Madam Speaker, that when CEMA was established following the passage of Bill C-176 representations were made that that agency included only producers, people interested in the area of production, and they had neglected for reasons I ignore to appoint representatives from the consumer side as well when the minister under that act had the power to appoint two or three members on that agency as consumer representatives. Even if there had been two members from the consumer side, would we really have had better results? That is a question that may be asked.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—Finance—Amount of tax liability reduction in 1975 due to indexing; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Canadian National Railways—Company's intentions respecting escalation of pensions of persons already retired; the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Public Service—Proposal government deal with unions representing single sectors of economy—Government position on establishing labour relations council.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, there was some talk that perhaps we would dispense with private members' hour today. However, I understand that the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) wishes to go ahead with his private member's notice of motion No. 30.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

ENERGY

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE FURTHER STUDY ON HARNESSING BAY OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the undertaking of any further investigations required to develop the information necessary to undertake construction of the dams that will harness the tides of the Bay of Fundy for power, in partnership with the governments of the province of Nova Scotia and of the province of New Brunswick, and using the Canada Development Corporation as the agency for financing the undertaking.

He said: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to enter this debate today to discuss a matter that could not be more appropriate at this time than the development of alternate sources of energy which would materially assist in the overcoming of the anticipated shortfalls in energy which may face the Atlantic area of Canada. I am pleased indeed to see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen) is in the House, for he has indicated in past debates on this matter that all the support for an undertaking of this type does not come only from Atlantic Canada but that even Ontario is willing to join us in endeavouring to undertake the development of what might be considered a rather visionary type of new energy source that would be of value and benefit to the nation as a whole.

Let me say, first of all, that it is hard to find today a type of development in the field of energy resources that would produce power that is both pollution free and inflation free. Yet that is exactly the situation that exists in so far as tidal power is concerned. We in Atlantic Canada are most fortunate in that while for some time in our history it appeared that there was no way of developing the resources we had that would be useful not only to our area but to the nation as a whole, it has been discovered that many of these possibilities are becoming probabilities and some of them are very close to becoming realities.

It pleased me greatly to learn that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) recently announced the development of further grid systems that will provides the means whereby power can be transferred from the Churchill River in Newfoundland to the province of Quebec as the result of improvements in the grid system in the area of Atlantic Canada, as well as the fact that initiatives will be taken to produce a cable that will go underwater between Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to link Prince Edward Island to a grid system that will be part of our power program in the maritime provinces. It is also an indication that if we are to undertake something as substantial as the development of the Fundy tidal power, we will have not just a regional grid but a national grid.

When our party was in office, initiatives were undertaken by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) to make such a national grid a reality. Discussions lay in abeyance for a number of years, but have been resurrected and are now actively under consideration again, so that the power that would be produced from the tides of Fundy—which at one time could only be used in the south, in the United States—could now probably be used in other parts of Canada, making the undertaking a Canadian project of benefit to Canadians not just in the Atlantic area but in Quebec and Ontario.

Perhaps one of the reasons the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance in the last debate that we had on this matter indicated a willingness to line up with Atlantic Canada in the efforts to secure this undertaking is that he could see that in the long run, because of the many problems with which Canada was concerned east of the Ottawa Valley regarding the securing of a ready and reliable power pool, it would be able to benefit from the undertaking which I anticipate will come much sooner than was originally expected. It has been a long road to the point where we are in history today, as far as the Fundy tidal power is concerned. I am especially pleased to see my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) in the House because, like myself, he has advocated for a long time this method of securing power for the maritime provinces. We have been together on many joint undertakings which we hoped would further the cause of this particular development.

In December of 1974, the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and I had the pleasure and opportunity of assisting Mr. Robert Monks, director of the department of energy and resources in the state of Maine, Mr. Stanley Tupper, former congressman, ambassador to Canada and counsellor for the state of Maine, Dr. Charles Berg, associated with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and Dr. Mary Webster, also associated with the directorate of the department of energy and resources in the state of Maine, at meetings with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and a number of other officials in Ottawa. At those meetings, not only was the Fundy tidal power discussed but also the possibility of developing power from the Dicky-Lincoln complex in the main and, as a further alternative, harnessing the power that is available at Passamaquoddy Bay.

These undertakings are all bilateral in that both Canada and the United States have to be involved in a very direct way. They are very important because both northeastern United States and eastern Canada must determine how we are going to use the resources we have to produce the power we require to guarantee that we will not freeze in the dark in the days ahead. Because we do not have the guaranteed oil potential of western Canada, we must look to other projects which will give us the same kind of protection which oil in the west guarantees that part of Canada.

I think that at all times we must consider our relationships with our friendly neighbour to the south and work out ways and means whereby we can be of assistance to each other, because the energy problem existing in Canada also exists in the United States. We have for a long time been great friends and great partners in developments of value and benefit to both nations. It saddens me at times to think that while we as Canadians went to the United States in the fifties and sixties and tried to convince them that they could assist us in the development of our oil resources by taking from us certain amounts of oil in order to allow us to develop our resources, today we are telling the same people, whom we convinced would have an assured market for oil from Canada, that maybe they cannot have the oil, and maybe this and maybe that and maybe something else. This is a far cry from what we told them in the days when we were trying to sell them our oil because we needed to do so in order to guarantee that we had an industry in western Canada. I hope that by looking at alternative resources and alternate means of producing the energy required, we can produce an over-all power pool by a combination of various means of energy resources which are available to all of us and which will benefit both countries.

Only last week Mr. Tupper made a determination on the availability of any surplus power resources we might have which would be of benefit to the northern United States. They have to make long-term decisions. They have to know if there will be surplus resources available to them and, if there are not, they have to know how they are going to handle the problem of producing the power they require in the days ahead. So it is important that we work together. It is also important, from Canada's point of view, to look at Fundy tidal power as a very unique type of long-term investment which will be of fantastic benefit, not just to the Atlantic provinces, not just to all of Canada but from an external point of view as well because there can be little doubt that this type of power will be developed around the world.

While the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and I visited the La Rance tidal power project and looked at power possibilities associated with the harnessing of the tides there, and while we appreciated that it was a pilot-type project, we were also impressed when the director of that installation told us that that power project—which employed a type of construction which would not be acceptable today, certainly not acceptable in Fundy, and was very expensive from every point of view—has nevertheless shown that it can produce power and make a profit. If that is the case, there is no doubt that the tides of Fundy, with the highest tides in the world—around 53 feet—will produce power in the kind of volume which will make it feasible and a great asset to Canada.

But it will do more than that; it will provide our people with expertise in what is now a unique form of tidal power production. It will give them engineering expertise which will be important and useful. If our businessmen are as good as I think they are, they will use this development to produce a program of ways and means of selling our expertise to other parts of the world where it will also be useful. I think that apart from the federal government, the province of Nova Scotia and the province of New Brunswick involving themselves in this undertaking and moving, as I see it, in a very active and energetic way toward the culmination of all the data required to bring together the information required to call tenders and to get construction under way, we must never lose sight of the fact that we have in existence in this country what is known as the Canada Development Corporation. As far as I am concerned, we have not used the resources available to this corporation in the way we should.

There cannot be anything more useful to the people of Canada than to undertake this great project with the dollars of Canadians, so that we can say we own lock, stock and barrel a resource which will produce the power that exists. For this reason I believe the Canada Development Corporation should be involved in the undertakings which are moving forward. We have heard from Baron Rothschild and we know that he is interested. We have heard from Americans. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and myself involved ourselves with a number of representatives of the biggest trading companies in Japan. They are also interested in Fundy tidal power. If all these people are interested in this project, as well as people from the United States, why can we not find the money right here in Canada to undertake the job?

I am very pleased with the progress of this project at this time. I do not think for a moment that we should do anything to impede it. As a matter of fact, I think we could move still faster. I believe we must put every emphasis on the development of this program. Before I sit down I would like to say that I think this type of capital works project is better than the 102 grants which might be made available to various industries in Atlantic Canada for producing employment, stability of employment and viability of the economy of that part of our country. This is the way it can be done. This is the way it should be done. I believe that if we keep going forward as we are now, this is the way it will be done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Madam Speaker, the question of Fundy tidal power as raised by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) is a question which cannot be dealt with in isolation. It is part of the major energy problem facing us today. When I speak of energy, I am referring to all forms of energy whether it be derived from petroleum, from natural gas, from coal, from hydro-generated electricity, from nuclear energy, whether it be fission or fusion or solar, wind and tidal means of generating energy. This is the total framework in which study is needed in terms of both time and money so that priorities can be established. At present this is being looked at with a 12-month energy Research and Development study conducted in house under the auspices of the government. It is presently being finalized and I understand, will be tabled very shortly.

Looking ahead at this total energy picture, the big prospect of the future is fusion. Fusion is the joining together of two hydrogen atoms at temperatures of 50 million degrees centigrade, at which time the two atoms of hydrogen fuse together and form helium and give off a neutron and energy. If more energy is given out than is put into this reaction, you have an energy-creating nuclear reaction.

It is postulated by scientists that within 25 years we may expect to have harnessed energy from the fusion reaction. You may say the year 2000 is a long time away, but I remind you that in 1950, 25 years ago, there were some farsighted scientists who said that if we split the uranium atom we would have fission energy and could harness energy. As a result, today we have the CANDU reactor. This is recognized as one of the leading nuclear harnessing systems—

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mind the hon. gentleman making a speech about nuclear power at the proper time, but I do not appreciate my private member's motion being misused so that he can say whatever he knows or thinks about nuclear power. If the hon. gentleman wants to support my motion, let us hear him say something about Fundy tidal power.

Mr. Maine: On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I think it is critical to this whole question that we get it in perspective. This is one part of the total energy picture, and I am trying to develop a spectrum to show the hon. member and others how this fits into the time-frame I am developing. Tidal power is one aspect of it.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, I think if we were involved in an energy debate it would be quite proper to take that approach, but the question I have placed before the House relates to Fundy tidal power, its development and the ways it is to be developed. I take strong objection to the hon. member coming with a prepared text relating to nuclear power that is not associated with Fundy tidal power, and using private members' hour to speak about another matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I have read the motion. It deals with immediate consideration being given to the undertaking of any further investigations required to develop the necessary information. Perhaps the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) is about to come to this matter.

Mr. Maine: That is correct, Madam Speaker, and to do that I have to develop the whole picture so that we can put the Fundy tidal power project in proper perspective. I was about to recommend, logically, what should happen to this motion to show why fusion is a direction in which we should go. The fuel for fusion is hydrogen, and hydrogen is abundant as it comes from water. We have a great deal of water on this planet and it is very cheap. This is not the situation with uranium, which is presently the source of energy for the short-term future. The supply of energy derived from uranium is very limited; our proven reserves of uranium are 25 years in total. This does not augur well for our needs in the future.

The other aspects of fusion reaction which are attractive are not only the abundance of cheap fuel but the fact that there are no nuclear, radioactive waste products which are environmentally damaging. This has been a very serious problem with fission reaction with which we are coming to grips now in Canada and the United States. Another attractive aspect of fusion reaction is that there are no weapons byproducts. This is a problem we deal with in this House; how to have safeguards against the abuse of weapons byproducts of nuclear fission reactions.

If we can agree that the long-term goal rests with fusion, then the rest of the problem is how to fill in the 25 years from now to the year 2000 at which time fusion will be supplying most of our energy. The traditional sources of energy will supply the bulk of our requirements, this energy being derived from oil, natural gas, hydro-generated electricity, coal and nuclear fission. The stopgap measures which will help supplement some of these dwindling supplies of energy are energy or fuel derived from the tar sands as well as energy derived from oil in the Mackenzie Delta and in the Arctic.

These have to be looked at in the time frame as well as the money frame. Billions of dollars are needed, as we have heard, just to operate the Syncrude product which is just one of several tar sands projects being contemplated. To get the proven oil from the Mackenzie Delta down the Mackenzie Valley by pipeline will cost about $5 billion for the first pipeline, and other pipelines are being thought of. To get the natural gas and oil from the Arctic Islands by pipelines, which will involve new technology because they go underwater, will also involve billions of dollars. We have a problem of time and money which we have to put together in a 25-year context. Ancillary sources to be investigated, but which are unlikely to play a major role, are energy derived from the sun, wind and tides. Wind is a form of sun energy—

Mr. Coates: Wind is what you have been producing since you stood up.

Mr. Maine: Wind is the direct result of the sun's energy being transmitted to the earth, heating up the air and forming differences in the surface temperature of the earth. Winds are created to somewhat equilibrate this. These three forms of energy are being looked at but are not deemed to provide a large amount of energy in the short term. Solar panels have been used in space and are being used in certain parts of the world. In Japan right now they have parabolic mirrors as a source of energy for heating the bath water, one of the few areas where solar energy is being utilized commercially. Solar energy is being looked at very seriously and is being contemplated in Canada. Historically, we have had windmills, but recent developments at NRC have used turbines with increased efficiency.

The third major form is tidal power. There are two or three aspects of this, but they have to be put in proper context with the other forms of energy. It is in this framework that the Bay of Fundy tidal power is being studied and will come to its final conclusion in due course.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words on the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates).

The hon. member who preceded me talked about the wind, the sun, nuclear power, and other things which had nothing to do with the motion before the House which reads, in part:

> ... the government should give immediate consideration to the undertaking of any further investigations required to develop the information necessary to undertake construction of the dams that will harness the tides of the Bay of Fundy for power, in partnership with the governments of the province of Nova Scotia and of the province of New Brunswick, and using the Canada Development Corporation as the agency for financing the undertaking.

I always thought the Canada Development Corporation was established to help the development of ventures beneficial to Canada. You know, the last speaker was so carried away with ideas about atomic energy and nuclear power that I wondered if he had been drinking heavy water.

Let me give some background. Ever since 1957 the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) has been speaking both in this House and outside in public forums, about Fundy tidal power, and speaking about it as often as possible. In the past those in authority would smile and look askance if you talked about tidal power. Everybody thought the concept was out of this world, was not reasonable, not practical. But the hon. member was not discouraged and, as I say, has been pursuing this subject for many years. Now, all of a sudden we find that learned people throughout the world are interested in tidal power, particularly because we are experiencing an energy crisis. At least our government and other governments tell us this. So it might be useful to recall some of the people who, in the past, favoured the production of power from tides.

Going back some years we find that one of the people who favoured turning the dream of tidal power into reality was Michael Wardell, who published the Fredericton daily Gleaner and the Atlantic Advocate. Another was hon. Hugh John Flemming, who supported tidal power development when he was premier of New Brunswick. His close association with the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when the right hon. member was prime minister, resulted in the establishment of the Atlantic Development Board, which investigated the possibility of turning the dream into a reality.

Then came a change in government in New Brunswick. The government headed by Hon. Louis Robichaud favoured tidal power, and it was the Chignecto committee report on this question which, with the backing of Premier Robichaud, gave credibility to the idea of harnessing the tides.

In addition the idea found favour with leading members of the business community. K. C. Irving made numerous proposals, as did Les Kirkpatrick, the president of Nova Scotia Power Corporation, and people involved with the Nova Scotia Light and Power Corporation. They all supported this concept.

As times changed, people's opinions about the feasibility of Fundy tidal power changed. The idea is more widely accepted now. Today, both Premier Regan and Premier Richard Hatfield are in favour of developing tidal power. It should be noted that Premier Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia has pressed with vigour, both at home and abroad, the development of power from the tides. He has made public statements in the past weeks and months to the effect that he is not entirely happy with the pace at which the federal government is becoming involved in this project. He wants to see the tempo of development quickened. I must say, however, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has been most co-operative, and there is now hope that, with the help of the minister, the pace of Fundy tidal power development will move more quickly and come to fruition within a reasonable period.

Throughout the period when tidal power was merely an abstract idea the leading newspapers of the Maritimes, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald and the Saint John Telegraph Journal succeeded in keeping the project alive in the minds of their readership. There were dark days when skepticism almost overcame the region's enthusiasm, and these two newspapers materially aided in keeping the light burning.

Returning to the present, it is easy to see that we shall tread a difficult and costly road. Many unknown factors will need to be clarified over the next few years. I have already intimated that in our present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources we have a man who has a real appreciation of the total energy problems facing our nation. We hope he will move ahead with this project. He has indicated, in his statements on the reviewing committee report, that he is not frightened by the complexities of Fundy tidal power and is willing to ally himself with our region if the new two-year study confirms the initial findings.

On December 4, 1974, an article in the Chronicle Herald bore the heading "France Only Site of Tidal Power Plant". It referred to the La Rance tidal power project in France. It is interesting to mention that the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North and I visited this project in France. Very likely we were among the first representatives of Canadian political agencies to visit it. May I quote from the article, as follows:

> Engineers have long dreamed of harnessing the enormous energy in the rise and fall of the tides to generate electricity, but so far only one site—La Rance, on the coast of Brittany, France—is producing commercial power.
> The huge sums of money required and technical problems stalled all other possible projects. However, soaring costs of producing energy from fossil fuels have renewed interest in harnessing tides to generate hydroelectric power, especially in eastern Canada.
> After a Nova Scotia government delegation visited New York earlier this month for talks with the investment community on a variety of projects, Business Week magazine reported that Canada probably would move faster than any other country in the west on the tidal-power question.

The sponsor of the motion told us of the way in which supporters of tidal power had been welcomed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and of the treatment they had been given by the department. This reminds one of what happened a number of years ago when President Franklin D. Roosevelt commissioned a study into the possibility of harnessing the tides of Passamaquoddy Bay, between Maine and Canada. Since Maine is about as far from Washington as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are from Ottawa, the project came to nothing. It did not go ahead.

I hope that what has happened in the past will not determine what is to happen in the future. You see, at one time it was held that what was good for General Motors was good for everybody. That is not necessarily so. It was thought at one time that what was good for Quebec and Ontario was good for B.C., P.E.I. and Nova Scotia. Often that was not the case. The Seaway was constructed at great public expense to help all this country, and there is no doubt but that the harnessing of the Fundy tides will be of great benefit to all this country.

Les Kirkpatrick, president of Nova Scotia Power Corporation, told Business Week he estimates tidal power would cost 15 mills a kilowatt hour at the Fundy site, roughly comparable to the cost of nuclear power. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) spoke about nuclear power. For his information, proponents of this project contend the advantage of tidal hydro projects is that the fuel—the tides—is inflation-proof because it is free and renewable and, unlike river-based projects, tidal plants would not run short of water during droughts. They also say a tidal plant would have a life-span of at least 60 years, double or triple that of a nuclear or fossil-fueled plant.

I do not want to take up too much time and talk out this motion. I hope it will come to a vote. I appeal to hon. members to give consideration to the motion sponsored by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) along the lines he has suggested. The Canada Development Corporation should become financially involved in any way possible.

Another point I wish to make is that far too often, particularly in latter years, those in the government and some in the opposition have attempted to pluck the feathers of the American eagle and throw darts at the Americans. Who would say that we should not co-operate with them technically if they were willing to become financially involved in Fundy tidal power as long as we had complete control? I think it would be a good thing. We often boast about the undefended border from east to west which has no guards, soldiers and so on. However, we seem to like taking pot-shots at the Americans. I feel we should try to co-operate in projects of this nature. Is the hon. member in the back row trying to say something?

An hon. Member: I will in a few minutes.

Mr. Muir: I would rather he stayed seated on what brains he has rather than interject from his seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: I am learning from the Liberals. However, I do not want to learn too much from them, especially from the new experts who came here in 1972 and 1974. They think they have forgotten more than the most senior members of this House will ever know. My good friend, the whip of the Liberal party, realizes the situation. I am sure he understands what is going on. In any event, I wish to take my seat—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: I appreciate applause, even from the other side. I appreciate it from anyone. Let us now hope they will vote for this resolution so that we can make some progress on the east coast, as is often done in Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, like the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), I am pleased that at last we seem to be making progress with regard to harnessing the power in the tides of the Bay of Fundy. In view of the announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) it seems to me that the government would welcome this motion being passed by the House this afternoon.

I could again give my personal credentials for being interested in this matter. After all, my ancestry on my mother's side comes from New Brunswick and my ancestry on my father's side comes from Nova Scotia. That puts me on both sides of the Bay of Fundy.

Entirely apart from that I am a Canadian and, across this country, all of us are interested in developing new sources of power. This is one we have talked about for a long time and it should now be advanced. I am happy to indicate my party's support for this motion and—

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Once again, Madam Speaker, I am able to speak for my party, the next party, and also for the independent member for Moncton (Mr. Jones).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to debate with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in private members' hour. He and I have not had that opportunity too often in this parliament, but I know he always enjoys being a majority, even if it is a majority of one, which he is today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the parliamentary secretary has associated himself with me, will he follow my example and make it short?

Mr. Cullen: When you are five foot seven, Madam Speaker, everything you do is short.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I commend the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). I am not one of the new experts from 1972 or 1974. I am an old guy from 1968 who does not know much about it. I say to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys not to under-estimate the 1972 and 1974 classes as did some of his colleagues. They are now sitting on the outside while these fellows are sitting in here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: Let's hope they pronounce themselves on occasion and not just stay sitting.

Mr. Cullen: The unhappy part is that the older members use all the time, and this is very frustrating to the newer members.

From my earlier participation in this debate, the mover of this motion will know that, even though I am from Ontario, and those nasty words—central Canada—I have supported this proposition ever since coming to this House, and more particularly when I had the honour to serve as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. At that time I visited the area to look at the tides. The hon. member is correct; they do rise 53 feet. I did not measure them, but I am prepared to take the hon. member's word.

The mover of the motion and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys will, I am sure, concede that the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has given fantastic encouragement to something that was only a dream or an idea. Rather than scoffing or laughing at it, this minister has taken up this matter.

As to whether the Canada Development Corporation is the proper agency to co-ordinate it, I feel that this is something a little down the road, a little in the future. I feel it should be done on a government to government basis. Frankly, I have my doubts about whether the CDC should be moving into this particular field. The CDC was told it would pretty well have complete freedom insofar as operating in the business world is concerned. We may be able to make suggestions, but we should not dictate what it should be doing in any particular field.

The merits of this operation are well known. There has been a series of reports. In October, 1969, there was a report on the feasibility of tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy, and the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board concluded that economic development of tidal power in the Bay of Funday was not feasible under prevailing circumstances. I am sorry I have to read that conclusion but I wanted to get that portion of the report correct. They did say they felt that additional detailed study should be authorized. Then they set out a series of conditions under which future studies might be carried out. The conclusion was that the project was not economically feasible, but they did not rule out the possibility of the project being feasible from an engineering point of view.

Subsequently a new report was prepared by the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board. This is described as a preliminary reassessment of the feasibility of tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy. That report came out in September, 1974. Here again, the subject is being considered by the three governments primarily concerned—the federal government, the government of New Brunswick and the government of Nova Scotia. Both the provincial governments have given an impetus to this report.

When I heard this debate was to take place today I did some checking, and I learned one or two things which might be of interest to the hon. member. In fact I might even suggest to him that his motion is a trifle premature although I realize that on other occasions he was probably six or seven years ahead of his time. Today, however, he may be just a couple of months ahead.

The three governments I have mentioned have agreed to a further study, with respect to which the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost and the two provincial governments 25 per cent each. They will be looking into two main areas, first, the marketability of power and, second, the engineering requirements. I can say that the cabinet has approved this project—a decision was taken last week. I do not know whether this information has been made public or not; usually the hon. member gets such information very early because of his special interest in the subject. In any event the study has been approved, so the motion he is putting forward may be just a little premature—maybe we shall be dealing with it in a couple of months' time.

I know, Madam Speaker, there are some hon. members from the classes of '72 and '74 who are more knowledgeable regarding the engineering aspects of this proposal than I can ever hope to be, so rather than use up all the time available to me I should like to give them an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): I am pleased to join this debate for the remaining few minutes and to put on record that I am very much in favour of any power project which is economical, which fits in with our environmental concerns, and which adds to our total inventory of available energy.

I think one of the fundamental things in any energy policy that Canada must have is a substantial switch in the supply of energy away from petroleum base to hydraulic, to coal, to nuclear, and if the project we are presently debating shows signs of being economical we should proceed to study it.

One of the concerns in the whole energy picture that I don't think we have talked about very much in this country, or in this thirtieth parliament where we are changing a lot of the base loads from petroleum input to electrical energy, is the role of the provincial electrical utilities. I think the time is coming when the projects that they will be building will be tied together through a national grid, and there will have to be some type of agreement among these utilities as to the timing of all these projects.

It does not seem to me to make great sense that one utility would have a very large project coming on stream at about the same time as a utility in a neighbouring province. In such a case both the utilities would have a surplus; they would go to some lengths to make use of this power, and then presumably both of them might very well end up in the position of being short of power. On the basis of what the hon. member is proposing we will require a good deal of investment on and research into a much stronger grid across Canada, into which provincial utilities can tie.

I would hope research would indicate that we could go considerably above what is considered to be the design limit of 750,000 volts transmission at the present time. I am anxious that we do some research work on direct current transmission because in terms of the size of the country, and the length of the grid we need to deal with, these are very important considerations. However, in terms of the project we are talking about, I am most concerned that, however valid it may be from an economic point of view, and however it may be required for the supply of energy, someone should take a look at how we phase in all energy projects across Canada.

I just do not see that the Government of Canada has the economic resources to be building the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, to be pursuing the CANDU technology, the gasification of coal, and developing all of this all at the same time. Presumably we might end up with a good deal of the yield of that type of investment coming on stream at the same time.

One of the most important things we should be doing at this point is to stage matters so that each project or each level of technology in its own time would follow in its right order. I am encouraged from what little reading I have done on this project to believe that the economics of it are perhaps a lot closer to being viable than we once thought. I remember having read about this in some detail some three or four years ago, and at that time there was a question of whether it would ever be economically viable. But at that time we were not thinking of the price of oil on the world market approaching $12 a barrel. My understanding is that if we have to deal with oil prices at that level this project does become economically feasible.

There is one other thing we should indicate. It works in very well with some of the thoughts I have on the energy situation, a situation where a good deal of the input comes from nuclear, from coal, from hydraulic. Nuclear has to have a 24-hour load factor full-time, and coal is the type of generation that can be varied, but we do need a national grid with some type of input that can be used for peak demand periods. It would seem that tidal power would fit into this concept very very well, because I do not think we could afford or want to have a nuclear capability meeting the peak because then you would have technical problems—with what to do when the seasonal load, or in fact even the daily load, doesn't meet the situation.

I want to associate myself also with the remarks of the previous speaker concerning the Canada Development Corporation. I just do not think that this is really the vehicle that we should be using. One of the things about the Canada Development Corporation surely is that we hope it will invest in such projects as companies that have a high degree of Canadian technology, or in areas where it is most important that Canadian ownership be maintained.

I hope we will move before too long to enable the public to invest in that corporation. Without a viable portfolio it will not attract investor confidence, and if we saddle the Canada Development Corporation with the cost of all kinds of studies and so on, I suggest that this would interfere with that very basic objective.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the hour appointed for private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McGrath that the first report of the Special Committee on Egg Marketing presented to the House on Monday, December 16, 1974, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when the House called it five o'clock, CEMA was created as a result of the adoption of Bill C-176 at the end of 1971. Under that act, Parliament decreed that the provincial marketing boards should take into account the interests of both producers and consumers, and that the National Farm Products Marketing Council should supervise the application of the act.

Mr. Speaker, it has always been my understanding that Bill C-176 was intended as legislation to ensure co-operation between the producers, on the one hand, who deserve remuneration for their products and a reasonable profit margin to allow them good enough an income to provide for their families decently, and the consumers, on the other hand, who should be able to purchase quality eggs, in adequate quantities, and at a reasonable price. I therefore saw this legislation as a means to come to a better mutual understanding and to establish within our boundaries the marketing of an essential farm product in a way which would have met the aspirations of both consumers and producers.

The facts revealed to the committee showed that despite instructions from Parliament, the National Farm Products Marketing Board and the CEMA have neglected the interests of both producers and consumers as regards egg marketing. This is unfortunate, but those are the facts which came out of our meetings in this committee.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the lack of planning before CEMA began its operations and the poor quality of its administration are at the origin of the failure of this marketing program. The evidence showed that there was little or no cooperation between CEMA, the National Farm Products Marketing Board and the minister himself.

The committee could not examine the reports of the CEMA and National Farm Products Marketing Board meetings because there were no such reports, which is extremely irregular. I have always understood that if an agency is legally constituted, it must keep minutes of its meetings and of the decisions that it makes so that those responsible for the control of the operations may report to whom it may concern at the appropriate time and place.

During the discussion on Bill C-176, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) and myself had emphasized the need for an effective control on imports and exports. We had requested at the time that section (2)c) of Bill C-176 include any imported natural product, while the bill mentioned only any Canadian natural product. We wanted to include the provision that any imported natural product must be submitted to the same marketing requirements as Canadian farm products.

I well remember, Mr. Speaker, that during the night of December 30, 1971, when I was sitting exactly where my hon. colleague from Moncton (Mr. Jones) has just sat down, I had moved, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond, an amendment to Bill C-176 to include in the act the provision that imported products should be submitted to the same regulations as Canadian products, in other words, that any imported natural product should be marketed through marketing agencies so that these boards could control the need to import or export such or such a product.

Indeed, if one refers to the proceedings of December 30, 1971, one finds that at that time the amendment was put and the government side voted against the inclusion in that legislation of regulations to have imported natural products marketed in the same way as Canadian products.

Today, we find ourselves faced with a problem that would probably not exist if we had more assurances that that problem would have been solved by CEMA because they would have had efficient means to prevent importers from importing eggs when Canada did not need them. That is where the crux of the problem lies. We found in our discussions that it was mainly the importation of eggs for consumption, table eggs, as they are commonly called, when we did not need them that caused the problem. Those eggs were marketed without being indentified while the eggs of Canadian producers remained in storage, and those places had no rotation system, that is, eggs were coming in and out by the same door.

As often eggs were imported and took the place of Canadian eggs on the domestic market, Canadian eggs aged because they remained at the back of the storage and could not be taken out. That lead CEMA to order the destruction of a certain amount of eggs that were no longer fit for consumption.

Mr. Speaker, what is the point of having a Canadian Farm Products Marketing Act if we give free course of action to profiteers who import products and market them when we have domestic producers who cannot dispose of their production. They are profiteers, people who take advantage of a situation, who take advantage of a market to make profits while our farming organizations such as our Canadian Marketing Agency should be struggling in an almost impossible situation. To my mind, nobody here would have done better because we lacked the tools that would have allowed us to do more.

I feel that is the core of the problem. People might say: The hon. member for Bellechasse must understand one thing, that is we must trade, export and import. I agree on that. However, when we import table eggs at a price three times higher than that of breaker eggs, which we can export, we must export a great number to be able to reach the price of table eggs, which we can and sometimes must import, when we are forced by need to do so. Mr. Speaker, I feel we are not being fair with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Although he may be blamed, he has a part to play. He has his responsibilities, but if we deal behind his back, he will not be able to make miracles.

The duty of the Minister of Agriculture is to assure the Canadian people that they will be able to obtain the amount and quality of food required to meet their needs.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it so happens that permit and licence controls as to farm products export and import are in the hands of another minister, who is often pressured by those who are interested in the import and export of these products for a profit and not for the common good of our country.

The National Farm Product Marketing Council and CEMA faced difficulties because, in spite of the leaders' goodwill, 3 million dozens of eggs have been put on the market. This is due to a quota set under Canadian law. In the meantime, importers have obtained licences to import from other countries a similar quantity of eggs put on the market without any quota and not liable to the Canadian products marketing. This factor tends to alter the normal play of supply and demand, since quotas can be established only from the data and needs of our home market.

Mr. Speaker, such is the problem. If we do not stop and pass legislation to provide the Minister of Agriculture with the required authority to issue those licences after consultation with the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, there is no point making speeches in the House passing legislation. We shall never achieve the objectives we aim at because automatically cards are faked. This is my view on this question and this is the way I have spoken about it in the night of December 30, 1971. What I had foreseen then proved to be right. The situation we are now in is lamentable. Neither consumers nor producers are satisfied with it. I know producers who have suffered considerable losses. We still have to take that problem into consideration and study it as it really is.

Let's think a moment of the losses sustained by egg producers, when the laying hen has given everything it could, when it has produced everything it could in the 16 square inches of space that it can use. Then, he has to put it on the market under the form of meat, which is still good for human consumption, but at what price?

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to look up in the newspapers the market price for fowl meat, that is layers not yet ready for consumption. They will find out, as I did and as I have known for a long time, that the offering price is 3 cents a pound only. How can we expect egg producers to compensate with the sale of a certain product, when the price is below cost and they have to stay in production to last through the production cycle if they want at some time to make a profit and remain in business.

When eggs are sold in the supermarkets, are the Canadian housewifes in a position to check whether they are buying Canadian versus American, Cuban or other eggs? Definitely no. All they know is they are buying eggs. I therefore believe it would be in the Canadian public's interest if we had an act under which products and product origin had to be identified, so our Canadian housewives would know. It is very well to tell customers to buy Canadian. But when the goods are not marked as to origin, how do you expect the consumer to follow suit? I feel the time has come we had in our statutes specific legislation providing for compulsory identification of products, applying even in the case of eggs.

It is already done in gloves for instance. When we import gloves, whether from India or Japan, they are so marked. Why not have the same thing with farm products? In my opinion, this would be a good way to protect those responsible for the management of farm products marketing against unneeded import penetration. We could then gauge those people's efficiency. We manackle them, we create enormous problems for them, and then we tell them they were not efficient, they were unsuccessful.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have to be honest with those people and act in such a way they could resort to this measure. If they do not succeed to their objective, we will then be in a position to blame them, to tell them they are incompetent, not fit to occupy such or such a post in such a government agency, including the Farm Products Marketing Agency. Mr. Speaker, I want to defend the interests of both producers and consumers. In so doing, I believe I work for the best interests of all Canadians. I believe this measure is required, otherwise, we will never succeed in meeting the objective we are aiming at.

I think that licenses for egg imports or exports should be issued under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The minister knows my views about this. It does not mean that I do not trust the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), but it is his responsibility to see that as concerns food Canadians are supplied in a reasonable way and reasonble quantities. If we lay some obligations upon him we also should give him tools so that he can fulfill satisfactorily his duties to all Canadians.

I am aware of the constitutional jurisdiction problem regarding imports and exports control and it is a very ticklish issue. When you wish to get your supplies from a province, a provincial marketing agency tells you: It is under my jurisdiction, I am the one who decides if such or such product must be imported or not. In another province it will be the same. It really becomes a problem, a constitutional issue. And we know, Mr. Speaker, how costly all those constitutional squabbles have been. Sometimes it was about important issues but sometimes it was for mere trifle.

The Canadian taxpayers have to pay for all this and while we are quarrelling and go to courts, lawyers are getting richer, judges are bored and have trouble making a decision. We, the parliamentarians, make everything possible to contribute to a spirit of mutual understanding among Canadians. We make everything we can so that legislation be efficient, that westerners and easterners be able to live from their work. This is our only aim: Be able to survive, to have incomes related to the efforts we make to produce such or such a thing. Do not ask me to grow wheat on my farm, the soil is not good for it, but ask me to produce butter or milk and I shall tell you yes, but give me the possibility to make enough profits to earn my family's living. The Western wheat producer asks exactly the same thing.

Why should we bother with legislation, regulations and all kinds of mechanisms that are bothering everybody. When we could get through and go straight to the point. What is our goal, Mr. Speaker? We want to be able to distribute throughout Canada those quality goods produced by Canadians for Canadians in sufficient quantities. If we achieve that in the Parliament of Canada, why would any agency throw a spanner in the works, spoil that labour? We really could meet that objective so that eventually, throughout Canada, from Vancouver to Newfoundland, there might be some butter on every table. Whether that butter is produced in Quebec, in New Brunswick or in Ontario is irrelevant provided it reaches its destination.

If farmers need grain to process it into pork products, dairy products, or eggs, the agencies and producers must be able to rely on regular supplies to carry on such processing and then put that product unto public markets, according to some orderly organization, some appropriate mechanism—which I expected to find in Bill C-176. I as a Canadian would not wish this failure of the egg marketing concept to act as a deterrent for other producers. But all of us should roll up our sleeves and make a reasonable effort to try and cope with this situation.

If the Act has to be amended, let it be amended; if restraints have to be imposed, let them be imposed, but let something be done before it is too late, because every Canadian is watching this Parliament, watching everything we do, everything we shall decide, everything we shall do. Shall we accept to be paralysed because of the temporary failure of an agency called CEMA, or shall we go ahead and provide the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with additional powers? Any mistake we might make could not be worse than any past one, and could be termed another failure. But I do not think we will make a mistake if we act in that way and use the necessary means to achieve that goal.

What is the goal? It is better distribution throughout Canada of food products at prices tailored to the consumer's ability to pay and bringing farm producers enough revenue to allow them to live decently. That is all we are asking for, nothing more. I cannot understand why, in 1975, 264 members of parliament should fail to solve that problem. No need to wait a hundred years to do something. The time has come. Let us do everything we can and Canadians will be most grateful.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think you will find there is general agreement in the House to limit speeches to 15 minutes for the balance of the debate tonight in order to give members of all parties an opportunity to participate. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will be speaking, and he has indicated to me that he was not prepared for this and may want an extra two or three minutes. I think there would be agreement to that.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, we concur in the suggestion and I commend the hon. member for making it on the basis, of course, that the minister will not go excessively over 15 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker—15 minutes for ordinary mortals, and 17 for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik). Although there is a limiting factor in the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I wonder if this should be applied by the Chair, or does the House wish the time for the minister to be more flexible?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that speeches be limited to 15 minutes, with reasonable extension for the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: He needs all the time he can get.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate although I believe the time could be better used for some important legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: We can make a comparison, Mr. Speaker, between some of the world's best remembered speeches. For instance, the Gettysburg address comprised only 268 words. Somebody counted the words used in the committee hearings inquiring into egg marketing, and it was a million some hundred thousand. I only hope that 268 words of my speech will be remembered tonight.

This thing called CEMA, the first born child of national marketing legislation, was asked for by the producers and the provinces, and it is basically their responsibility to provide the co-operation to see that it does what they want. Some people have said that last year I could have controlled CEMA. Under the authority I have as Minister of Agriculture all I could have done was tell them they were finished by withdrawing the federal authority vested in them. I thought it better not to do that.

Some people have said that I covered up the facts. I want to say again as I said before, that is a falsehood and anyone who has studied the situation knows that.

I hope that within the next ten days we can announce the appointments to the National Farm Products Marketing Council, Mr. Speaker.

On December 16 I gave the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency an ultimatum: come up with a workable plan or the federal government will take away your power to operate. The deadline was February 15. The date has just passed, and I am pleased that CEMA is getting a grip on surplus production.

Since mid-December CEMA has reduced the quota allocation to seven provinces by 10 per cent. The other three provinces' quotas were not reduced because they are each less than 2 per cent of the national quota.

Whether this 10 per cent cutback is felt in the hen house or merely on paper is up to the provincial egg boards. These boards have given us proof that they have a plan that will work. I give you an example. Early in February the provincial egg boards voted that CEMA be given the power to seize, detain and dispose of eggs and fowl that are excess to quota. This is a big step in the right direction. If given this power CEMA would become a policeman with a club. Until now the agency has not been able to do anything more than shake its finger.

The fact that the provinces realize that CEMA must have this added power is the biggest news for the Canadian egg industry since CEMA was born.

Recently CEMA has also ruled that provinces with less than 5 per cent of the national quota can adjust their quotas up or down by 10 per cent on a quarterly basis to supply seasonal tourist demand. This kind of flexibility is proof that the agency is maturing and can deal with changing situations.

CEMA's future depends on the provincial boards. This is a fact.

The parliamentary committee on egg marketing, I as the Minister of Agriculture and, most important, CEMA's members, are demanding an end to deficit financing. In fact, all provinces have agreed to pay as they go. That is the kind of news for which we have been waiting.

Some still owe CEMA backdebts for 1974. But I am glad to see most of the provinces have now either paid up their debts incurred in 1974 or have made binding agreements to rid themselves of these debts by the end of the year.

These are some real proofs that egg producers are going to make CEMA work. I would make a good sized wager that we are only one year away from having the most sophisticated planned production system in the world. That does not mean there are not a lot of problems that must be tackled. There are, and they must be tackled promptly, and without regional bias. The parliamentary committee probed many of these problems. Some of the committee's recommendations have already been carried out by CEMA but it is urgent that many more be implemented, and soon. However, I want to alert hon. members. There are specific parts of this report that I feel could be premature. There are other recommendations that could be so hard to work, or so costly to carry out, that they would be of less benefit to producers than meets the eye.

I want to outline briefly the major strengths and pitfalls of the report. Its major strength is its recommendation that CEMA have tough policing powers. This goes hand in hand with the recommendation that each regulated producer be put on a computerized card system. This demands that provincial egg boards feed what each producer's flock size is, the age of his birds, his daily egg production and the death rate of his layers, into the computer each month. These figures, double-checked with a pullet permit system and grading station records, will do two things. They will let CEMA tailor supply much closer to demand and give the facts needed to get a clean sheet from the auditors. This bill get rid of a lot of guesswork. We will know how many hens we have, where they are, and how many eggs they are laying.

Right now producers are paid the full price for their eggs when they take them to market. If the market sours, CEMA and the provincial boards charge producers a levy to cover their losses. The committee recommends discarding this system, and instead giving producers an initial payment covering production costs. The final payment would be what remained of the market price, after deducting the marketing costs. There would be no levies for egg removal, and no debts for either CEMA or the provincial boards. This system has been used successfully by other commodities in Canada. If it can be applied in the egg industry it could break important ground for the egg producers of Canada. The partner recommendation to this calls for CEMA to have a third party work out the costs of production in each province.

I want to see all farmers producing over their quota to be penalized, so that the people who abide by the rules are not ripped off. I want the provincial egg boards to play fair ball, too. Some have been paying the salvage price to their producers over-quota eggs, then getting a higher price from CEMA for some of these same eggs by passing them off as within-quota eggs. The inquiry uncovered this and I commend the committee members for doing so. It has to be cleared up.

The committee calls for licensing of imports and exports. The recommendation is that the maximum volume of eggs licensed in any month should not exceed the average volume traded in that month during the last five years. I am right behind licensing all imports and exports. However, I also want to see a provision for licensing larger shipments of either imports or exports. There may be a periodic need or an opportunity for larger shipments that will not hurt, and may benefit, our producers and consumers. Producers have been waiting for this kind of common sense market protection. It deserves the support of all hon. members.

Now for the pitfalls: the report asks the federal government to consider having the federal and provincial governments each pay 25 per cent of the cost of removing within-quota eggs that are surplus to the table market. I cannot back this. It would encourage overproduction. I do not want to see producers gear up production to fill a phony market that does not pay them the price they need.

The report also wants the Consultative Advisory Committee to CEMA to review and assess all major policy issues. Is there not a real danger that bias and self-interest here could taint the input this group would give?

I also have doubts about putting a grade "A" storage quality egg on the retail shelf. Canadian grade standards are one of the highest in the world. I do not think consumers want to give up this high quality. On top of this there will hopefully be few, if any, eggs in storage. So, this grade could seldom be on the retail shelf and certainly not in all centres. I think all Canadians are entitled to high quality produce of all kinds, including eggs.

I back the recommendation calling for two additional appointments to the board of directors. I will work with CEMA to do this but I will insist that these new directors have a national outlook. I do not want the hands of these two new people to be tied with political strings or regional loyalties. I would also caution, again, that there may be more problems than we can spot at first glance in carrying out some of the committee's recommendations. Let me give you a couple of examples.

Selling eggs at a discount price to the disadvantaged is something I am right behind. Consumers will be, too. But, can it be done for a reasonable price? Should all Canadians not help foot the bill? What are the full implications of regulating all producers with flocks of more than 100 birds? There are many, and we have to probe them carefully before we steer the industry in that direction. As I said, if the eggs are to be sold at discount prices to the disadvantaged, should not all society foot the bill? I do not think that the producers of a commodity should be asked to pay if the surplus production of any given product is to be made available to the disadvantaged at a lower price.

Consumers should welcome many of the regulations. Selling discount eggs to the disadvantaged is only one. The report also calls for marking all eggs with the country of origin; rotating CEMA stocks to prevent spoilage; and more reporting to the public. Now you know how I weigh these recommendations. One more thing you should know as grist for the debate is that CEMA today owns no shell egg stocks. The only province that has stocks is Ontario, and those eggs are already sold. They are merely being held until they can be delivered.

You should also be aware that CEMA has already implemented a number of these recommendations. I will list some for you. The agency has hired a manager. It is giving a monthly report of its activities to the council. In Nova Scotia production facts are being fed into a computer on a trial basis. CEMA is in the midst of a thorough audit of provincial egg boards. The agency is already exploring export markets. Members of the National Farm Products Marketing Council have just returned from the Middle East and Europe. Some sales have been made in Hong Kong. More are being negotiated right now with other countries. Cases of one province accusing another of dumping are being investigated. If the evidence is strong enough, charges will be laid. A number of the provincial boards have cracked down and are getting truer hen counts and production records.

Today I received a telegram from seven, possibly eight, provinces which told me what they are doing. I am happy about what most of them are doing.

What hon. members do with this report will have a major impact on the egg industry. I support this report, as a source of suggestions to give CEMA leadership in the future. When CEMA fulfils all of these recommendations, we all—most of all members of the parliamentary committee and members of CEMA—will have something to crow about.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, before I make my main comments I wonder if I might ask the minister to answer a question. He mentioned that he had received, from the provinces, telegrams outlining provincial plans. Could the minister take the House into his confidence and table these telegrams, so that members of the House can also take an objective look at them? That way we shall know what CEMA is doing and where it is going. Or, if the minister does not want to answer this question now, or heed my request, perhaps he will take what I have raised as notice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In the interest of procedure it would be proper to consider the hon. member's request as a request for the unanimous consent of the House to allow the minister to answer this question. Does the House agree to allow the minister to answer the question, if he wishes to answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the best way I can answer is by saying that most provinces agreed to what we asked them to do, although some have certain reservations. I think the hon. member knows I cannot table the telegrams unless and until I go through the usual procedure and obtain permission of the provinces. I will do that as soon as possible.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing the minister to speak. If he cannot table the telegrams at this time perhaps he would consider making them available to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, for scrutiny and discussion. I shall move that this matter be referred to that committee.

I will not take up the time of the House in elaborating on the history of CEMA, for it is well known to hon. members. I do not think any member is proud about what has happened in egg marketing since the inception of the national egg marketing plan. The difficulties arose because of mismanagement, as the committee found, and because of personality conflicts within CEMA. These factors were responsible for many of the agency's difficulties.

If we are to talk about one major problem, from my point of view it is management of the program that is lacking. I understand a manager is being hired for a five year period. That will allow the person involved to get into the whole aspect of egg marketing in Canada. As a result, I hope a lot of changes will come about, such as those recommended in our report.

My main reason for speaking this evening is to state that we in the Conservative party feel we did not have enough information on which to base an objective decision when the committee report was made on December 16. When you consider the period that has elapsed since December 16, this would have given time to go over the objections and some of the matters we felt should be looked into further, and we might have been able to present a far more complete report.

One problem is that we could not have the auditors as witnesses. It has already been mentioned that the management committee did not have an opportunity to appear before the special committee. The provincial ministers of agriculture made a decision which changed the course of what happened. That also had a bearing on what we felt was really a "short change" because of the time restraints on the committee. We feel this matter has not been really resolved.

The minister spoke this evening. His speech was certainly soothing in many respects. However, we still do not believe the matter is resolved. We would like to see it discussed further, and the place for that discussion is the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

As I listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) this evening, he reminded me of the syndrome that exists in that corner of the House with regard to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). When things were going wrong, he certainly was not to blame. He did not want to accept any responsibility. It was put off of and on to other parties, but you can bet your last dollar that if and when the plan works, the Minister of Agriculture will be the first to stand in this House of Commons, and at meetings across the country, accepting full credit for making the plan work. He cannot have it both ways. There is certainly enough evidence to indicate that the Minister of Agriculture really did not take his job seriously. That is another reason why we want this whole matter looked into further.

Probably the most important point now is what will happen to CEMA in the future. Do we want it to continue? The Conservative party certainly would like to see it continue. There is no doubt about that. As I mentioned before, there were a lot of problems, and a lot of mistakes were made along the way. However, we feel it should have another chance to prove itself. Hopefully, the recommendations and program for CEMA and the producers will be implemented in the future.

If we agree on that aspect, we must move ahead to try to make the program work. If, after two years, we find that CEMA has lost control over the provinces, the producers and its own inventory system, we should take another hard look at it. If that happens possibly it should then be disbanded. Until that time, however, all parties in this House should work toward making it a better vehicle, not only for the producers but for the consumers. One cannot exist without the other. They both have to work together much more closely than in the past.

Before I resume my seat I wish to move an amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after "1974" and substituting therefor the following:
> "be not now concurred in but be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for consideration and revision in order to better examine and inquire into the provisions of the terms of reference of the said special committee, other than the instruction to report by deadline."

We feel this is reasonable, especially in light of the statement this evening by the Minister of Agriculture that the provinces are making some moves to set some of that information out for him. If the amendment is accepted, I hope the matter will be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture as quickly as possible so that the points raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), myself, and others can be dealt with there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At first glance I have some reservation as to the acceptability of the amendment as proposed by the hon. member. Because of the time limitation on tonight's debate and the fact we may not deal with this tomorrow, I hesitate to invite procedural debate. I do not want to prevent hon. members from presenting argument. If I were to make a decision on the proposed amendment, I would reject it. I will leave it to the House. I see two members seem ready to speak. I invite their comments.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the limitation placed on the House by the clock, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that Your Honour hold your ruling on the amendment until ten o'clock.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, it may not be necessary at this time, but I was simply going to argue that, in my view, this amendment is out of order. In light of the time limitation I do not think it is necessary to pursue that course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was trying to avoid taking away the time available for debate. If it is agreed, I will hold my decision until ten o'clock. Hon. members may wish to enter into a procedural debate at that time. We will then see what is the wish of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I simply suggest that the Chair hold its decision until the next time this order is called. There is not much point in having a decision at ten o'clock tonight unless we are going to come back to the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will withhold my decision until later.

● (2100)

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to have the opportunity to speak on the motion put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) dealing with the report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Egg Marketing tabled in this House on December 16 last.

I say this because, as a new member of parliament, participation on this special committee gave me a unique opportunity to become familiar with the important role which can be played in our parliamentary system by special committees which are given specific terms of reference and required to report back to the House by a specific date. This specific mandate and timetable provided the sort of incentive which encourages committee members of all parties to concentrate on the task at hand with a degree of determination and objectivity which, in my brief experience, is not always present in the sittings of some of our regular standing committees.

The other general point I should like to make is that, as a member representing an urban riding, participation in the work of this committee also provided me with the opportunity to gain at least some important insight into one small area of the many problems besetting the agricultural segment of our Canadian society.

In the few minutes available to me tonight, Mr. Speaker, I want to underscore certain recommendations contained in the report of the special committee. My selection of these recommendations, four in number, is made simply on the basis of my view as to their significance in relation to the overall subject of attempting to regulate egg production and marketing in this country. The recommendations to which I refer are as follows:

H-2 and H-4—Implementation of import/export licensing and specific identification of imported table eggs

A-6—Annual progress review by all signatories to the federal-provincial agreement

B-5—The active involvement of the Consultative Advisory Committee including meaningful participation by representatives of the non-producer segment

In the matter of recommendation H-2 dealing with the need for an import/export licensing system in accordance with acceptable provisions under the GATT agreement, it seems to me essential that CEMA have as a minimal responsibility that of maintaining appropriate records and issuing regular reports on those table eggs which are making their wayon to the Canadian market having originated from sources outside Canada.

It became clear to the committee during the hearings that this is an area over which CEMA has in the past exercised no control. An example of the significance of imported table eggs to this whole question of controlling production and distribution of eggs within Canada is the recent importation of 926,000 dozen eggs from the United States for marketing to Canadian consumers during the weeks ending from December 7, 1974, through January 4, 1975. This is the equivalent of roughly 50 carloads. Bearing in mind that in the province of import, which I understand in this instance to have been Ontario, the committee is recommending that production be controlled in the case of flocks of 100 or more hens, it is quite obvious that an importation to the extent mentioned must constitute a significant factor in the overall production and distribution of eggs in the Province of Ontario.

Whether or not CEMA itself should be involved in the allocation of import/export licensing permits is something which will, no doubt, require further consideration. It does seem to me, however, that the agency would be providing inadequate reporting statistics on egg production and marketing in the months ahead were it not to make specific reference to the quantities being imported and exported month by month. In fact, Mr. Speaker, failure to take into account the quantity of table eggs coming into Canada from outside tends to render the whole scheme of production and marketing controls within Canada something of an exercise in futility.

Recommendation H-4 relates to the identification of table eggs in the supermarkets. It is my belief that Canadian consumers of agricultural products are equally as interested as those purchasing manufactured products in knowing that the product they have been offered originates outside their native land. In fact, it might be argued that consumers would be more interested in knowing they were purchasing non-Canadian eggs than they might be if it were a matter of other non-Canadian products purchased on a daily or routine basis. In my view it is entirely possible that an indirect but important effect of such identification of imported eggs could be the eventual reduction in the overall quantity of table eggs imported into Canada each year.

The third recommendation on which I should like to comment is the one dealing with the involvement of the provincial ministers of agriculture.

The national plan under which CEMA derives its very existence was an agreement signed by a number of signatories, including the provincial ministers of agriculture. I would emphasize this point for the benefit of the hon. member for St. John's East who is still maintaining that sole responsibility rests with one of the 11 ministers involved, that is to say, the federal minister. The co-operation of these provincial ministers and provincial marketing boards which fall directly or indirectly under their jurisdiction is obviously of paramount necessity if the marketing scheme envisaged for handling eggs in this country is to work effectively. For this reason it is my view that provincial marketing boards should not be permitted to announce their withdrawal from CEMA in the absence of prior consultation between such provincial boards and their respective provincial ministers as well as with the federal Minister of Agriculture.

It has been noted recently that two provinces, British Columbia and Newfoundland, have announced their intention to withdraw. What has not been noted is any indication of prior discussion at senior ministerial levels prior to such announcements having been made by the heads of the two marketing boards. It is for this reason that I wish to underscore recommendation A-6 which requires at the very minimum an annual meeting of the National Farm Products Marketing Council with all signatories to the federal-provincial agreement and other directly affected parties, to review progress and achievements as well as to air areas of concern to the industry in order to avoid serious problems which could be developing.

In my view, the potential withdrawal of any one of the provinces from the national marketing scheme is indeed a most serious problem. All aspects should be carefully considered and discussed at a national meeting prior to any option for withdrawal being exercised or even announced in an official way.

The last point to which I wish to address my remarks this evening is recommendation B-5. This is the recommendation that endorses the concept of involving what I might refer to as the other side of the equation in the many consultations that must obviously form part and parcel of CEMA's operations. It became obvious to members of the committee during the recent hearings that both CEMA and the various regulatory bodies within the provinces are strictly producer oriented. Yet it is clear that the production and consumption of eggs in Canada is of as much concern to the consumer element of the general public as it is to the producer element.

Failure to accede to this concept of involving non-producer elements of the public in at least an advisory capacity will lead in the long run to further credibility gaps in the operation of the egg production and marketing scheme. Recommendation B-5 attempts to accomplish this goal without at the same time endeavouring to control the decision making ability of the CEMA organization. It does this by proposing an effective and meaningful role for the Consultative Advisory Committee that was envisaged in the original federal-provincial agreement. The problem to date has been that this particular committee has not been activated in any meaningful way.

I believe that all recommendations in this report of the special committee on egg marketing are important. My selection of four of these recommendations for purposes of discussion in this debate should not be interpreted as an inference on my part that I do not consider the other recommendations to be significant. Indeed they are, and I have no hesitation in endorsing them in the hope that all recommendations in the report will be given most careful consideration by the various authorities to whom they are directed.

In conclusion let me say I tend to agree with the emphases placed by the mover of the resolution, the hon. member for St. John's East, on those recommendations contained in the report to which he has made reference. My major disagreement, however, is with his continuing efforts to place the blame for the problems of CEMA to date at the feet of the federal Minister of Agriculture, when he so well knows, as do all participating members of the committee, that CEMA will only be effective when it receives the full support, in practice as well as theory, of all 11 ministers across the country.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Madam Speaker, I do not believe I will take up all the time that has been allotted to me. Those of us who were privileged to sit on the parliamentary committee that studied the egg mess for a number of weeks put in an extremely busy time at meetings which were going on morning, noon and night. I think I speak for all of those members when I say that it was a very interesting time. Many of us learnt—at least, we think we have learned—a great deal about the egg industry of this country. We learned a new language, really. Not only did we learn about quotas but we were introduced to such phrases as the "crack market", the "shell trade", the "fresh trade". Indeed, it was almost like going back to law school and learning legal phrases and jargon. A lot of us had to learn a completely new phraseology.

An hon. Member: "Sunny side up."

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, "sunny side up". I think we got a little too involved with many of the details, and this is one reason I am not going to go into too much detail tonight.

Underneath it all, Madam Speaker, when you really sat back and thought about it, was there not something, and is there not still something, screwy about what is going on in Canada and in the world today, especially in terms of agricultural production? We all know there is a world wide shortage of protein foods. Yet all we talk about are quotas, restrictions, and measures such as that, including planned production and supply control, all of which ultimately will have but one effect and one effect only, namely, the limiting of production of a very valuable food, the lack of which is causing starvation in some parts of the world today. As I say, there must be something screwy about this.

I must say the minister did not get off as easily in the committee as he got off in the House tonight. He can disclaim responsibility all he wants. He can say "No, it's not me, I have nothing to do with it, and the government has nothing to do with it". But I would remind him that the federal Minister of Agriculture accepted responsibility for a national egg marketing scheme in this country and, to put it as simply as I can, this Minister of Agriculture boobed, and boobed badly, in respect to this particular industry. If the minister was going to take on this job in face of world wide shortage of protein, in face of the supply situation, the feed situation and the existing production situation in this country, then I do not think he can shrug off his responsibility in the way he attempted to shrug it off in the House this evening.

During the committee hearings this simple question was put directly to the minister: "Mr. Minister, do you not believe that you bear some responsibility for what is happening now and what has happened in the egg industry in this country?" There was, Madam Speaker, a very pregnant pause for a minute, and then he finally admitted that he did have some responsibility for it.

Rather than go into detail, let me try to paint with a broad brush what has gone wrong in the industry today. Speaking of broad brushes, I must say this about the committee. I think that committee was a hard working committee which delved into all sorts of things. As I said, we worked morning, noon and night. But so far as the very touchy situation that the minister had backed himself into is concerned, I must say that the committee turned out to be a complete whitewash with regard to the responsibility that the Minister of Agriculture should bear to the egg industry of this country.

In saying that, I do not want any member to follow up with the sort of parroting that we have heard tonight and say that we are trying to blame everything onto poor old Gene Whelan. That is not what I am saying. I do not think that is what the members of my party have been saying, and I do not think that anyone who listened to the committee hearings would attempt to reach that conclusion. But what we do say, Madam Speaker, and what the committee, due to its majority of members of the government party, was not honest enough to admit to itself, is that a major responsibility for the mess that existed rested in the office of the Minister of Agriculture; there is no question about that.

Why else would the minister come along tonight and try to say, "Look what a good boy I have been; I have cleared up the mess"? Why would he say, "Look at the pressure that I have put on the National Farm Products Marketing Council, which in turn put pressure on CEMA, which in turn have put pressure on the provincial boards. Because of what I have done, CEMA has now got a new general manager. Because of what I have done, the provincial boards are now playing ball where they were not playing ball before. Because of what I have now done, within a year we will have a worth-while national egg marketing scheme in this country".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I hear some hon. members on the other side banging their desks. I think that is great. But the point is that it could have been done two years ago by this same minister, and it was not done. There have been two years of delay, waste and procrastination by this particular minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Nonsense!

● (2120)

Mr. Lawrence: There is no question in my mind—

Mr. Cafik: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to know whether the hon. member who has the floor would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Lawrence: I would be delighted to answer a sensible question if the hon. member is capable of asking me one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: However, under the circumstances and due to the record of that particular member, I would rather have him wait until I have completed my comments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: If some of the hon. members had had the gumption about a year ago to stand up and call chicken, we would not be in the mess in which we find ourselves. In any event, there is no question in my mind that a good portion of the blame not only belongs to the Minister of Agriculture but belongs to some of the provincial governments and provincial boards that exist right now across this country. We are not trying to lay the blame completely and exclusively at the feet of the Minister of Agriculture. Heaven only knows that he is responsible, even though is not willing to admit it. But I do say that another element in this—and you should merely look at the history of this tangled web of the egg industry to realize it—is that the provincial governments and marketing boards in the first instance had to come on bended knee to plead with the then minister of agriculture to get a national egg marketing scheme adopted.

I say in defence of this government—although not in defence of this Minister of Agriculture because he was not minister then—that certainly at that time it was in the interests of the provincial egg marketing boards and of the provincial governments to have a national egg marketing scheme. I do not think that there is any question in anybody's mind that they were willing to try to get the federal government to take on the scheme, but unwilling to give to the federal government the power, the control and the policing mechanism necessary to make it work. But I do say to you that the careless if not negligent minister of agriculture of the day, followed by his bungling successor in this office, failed miserably at that time to talk turkey to the provincial boards and provincial governments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You got them going. They are awake now.

Mr. Lawrence: They should have said to them simply this, "All right, if you want us to bail you out, then, by golly, transfer to us the necessary power". There is no question that that was not done and that it should have been done. The reason it was not done is the fault of the federal government. We got into a hassle, and now a couple of years too late everybody is seeing the light, including the provincial boards and the provincial governments. They themselves apparently are now well along the road to some form of recovery. That is great, but let us not forget that it was this government that bungled the deal in the first place, and it should bear that responsibility.

I can well understand the feeling of some of the provincial boards and provincial governments in respect of CEMA and, more particularly, the National Farm Products Marketing Council. More than one individual at the provincial level has come to me, not just Tories, not just members of a provincial board or a provincial government that is Conservative, but others who have asked me why in heavens name they should give any power or control to the federal National Farm Marketing Council when they have no confidence in it. I asked them how come they have no confidence in the council, and they said, "Look at the makeup of the council. It is made up of political appointees, people who are appointed to that council more for their knowledge of the ins and outs of the political halls of this country than for what they know about agricultural production".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Now the minister comes to the House tonight and says, as he did in the committee: "Oh gosh, fellows, I couldn't do anything about it. All I could do was to either keep them going or cut them off". That is absolutely ridiculous. First of all the council has the general supervisory power of any national marketing agency. Who appoints the council? The federal government appoints its members on the recommendation of the minister. Secondly, the council which supervises the national agency is responsible to the minister. Who provides the credit for the national agency? It is provided under a letter of comfort signed by the present Minister of Agriculture. If he has no control over that council, if he has no control over CEMA, then what in the world is he doing signing a letter of comfort which provided the basic credit for the agency itself? Certainly he has control. If he has no control, why is he now going to take the credit for cleaning up the mess? Of course he has control.

The council is responsible to the minister, the council advises the minister, the council reports to the minister, and the council has the general regulatory supervision over the national farm marketing agencies. The minister did not even take the trouble or time to find out if the proper statistics were being formulated by CEMA. Surely to goodness somewhere along the line some of the taint of this mess must rub off on the minister. The whole reason for a national egg marketing agency must be found in the problem that the egg producers and the provincial boards have been having in respect of interprovincial and international trade. If that power exists, as it can only exist in the federal government, then surely the minister must bear the responsibility—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order please. There being an agreement that speeches cannot be extended beyond 15 minutes, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Lawrence: May I merely complete my sentence, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There being no agreement, I am afraid I cannot allow the hon. member to continue.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, I was a member of the special committee, and this debate enables me to place on the record of the House my views on the committee's final report. But first let me say that I was interested to note from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency recently went on an egg selling mission to Hong Kong, and one wonders if it did this because some people in Hong Kong wanted to buy 1,000 year old eggs for their own unique use.

Seriously, this committee's final report is important because it deals with the first attempt by the government to apply the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Parliament directed in section 22 of the act that agencies set up under it are to have due regard for the interests of porducers and consumers, and further directed in section 6 that the Farm Products Marketing Council is to ensure that this is done. The evidence indicated clearly that in spite of this direction from parliament, both the Farm Products Marketing Council and CEMA failed to give sufficient regard to the interests of consumers in national egg marketing. Both the council and CEMA are composed entirely of producer representatives, or of people closely linked with the producer interest.

On the whole the final report has a number of useful recommendations. If implemented they can do much to bring about needed improvements in the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, the national egg marketing system and the National Farm Products Marketing Council. However, there was no response by the government during the two months since the report was tabled last December 16 as to what it would do to bring about the implementation of any of these recommendations, or any alternative measures in their place, nor have we been given information before tonight to show that CEMA or the council itself has been doing anything of significance to carry out the recommendations of the committee.

In fact, during the past two months there have been disturbing signs of the kind of "business as usual" which originally made the appointment of the special committee necessary. I am referring to the press reports of a few weeks ago alleging a sudden appearance and subsequent disappearance of a new surplus of 40 million eggs. This matter is important enough for Canadians generally to have expected some announcement by the government of its decision for remedial action before the commencement of today's debate.

It was my hope that this debate would hasten the kind of action required. From the Minister of Agriculture's speech this evening, this is apparently what has happened. Hon. members will want to consider whether the steps he mentioned could not have been taken sooner since CEMA was created over two years ago, and the first Food Prices Review Board report on egg marketing came out some 12 months ago.

I have just said that the final report of the committee of the whole contains a number of useful recommendations. However, I do not believe that it deals sufficiently with the question of how the consumer interest can best be recognized and protected in the operations of CEMA and national egg marketing. The report recommends that CEMA should have a stronger consultative committee on which consumers would be represented, and that two additional members be appointed to the CEMA board by the governor in council. However, it is clear that the consultative committee would be able to do no more than be informed by and express its views to the governing board of CEMA. Also, the report says nothing about who the two additional federal appointees should be.

Since consumers are vitally concerned with and affected by decisions on the supply and price of eggs, it is essential that they be able to take part in the actual decision making process of CEMA itself. It is not sufficient to achieve this purpose for there to be a consumer representative on the National Farm Products Marketing Council alone. The government announced early in October that such a person and two additional non producers would be appointed to the council. However, these appointments have not yet been announced before today, a delay of almost five months.

Also, it should be a matter of concern for all those who wish to strengthen and protect the interests of Canadians as consumers that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) also told the Special committee when he appeared before it that he was "not advocating a consumer representative" on the board of CEMA itself. Instead, he said that he wanted a federal official to be appointed, and what he appeared to have in mind was that this official should come from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Shame!

Mr. Gray: When parliament passed the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, acting on behalf of all the people of Canada, it gave CEMA a form of monopoly power. At the same time parliament specifically said that neither CEMA nor any producers dealing with it would be subject to the Combines Act.

It is essential, therefore, that the monopoly power of CEMA be exercised and be seen to be exercised in the total public interest. The concept of orderly marketing of agricultural products in Canada according to parliament rests on two foundations; one is the interest of the producer; the other is the interest of the consumer. In my view, the total public interest cannot be protected in the way that I have mentioned if only the producer side is involved in decision making. The consumer side must be involved for this purpose as well.

I therefore want to put on the record of parliament some of my views as to what would be appropriate action to bring this about. First, for an interim period sufficiently long to ensure that the recommendations in the report to improve the management and operations of CEMA, the council and the egg marketing plan have gone into effect, CEMA should be administered by a five member executive committee much as recommended by the provincial ministers of agriculture.

Some hon. Members: We're with you.

Mr. Gray: To the extent that this committee would be composed of federal officials, they should not all come from the Department of Agriculture. Instead, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and possibly the Treasury Board should be represented as well. If the committee is to be composed of people from the private sector, some of its members should be connected with the consumer interest.

Second, after the interim period mentioned has elapsed, there should be a number of consumer representatives appointed to the permanent board of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency by the government. The federal government appears to have the power to do this under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Arguments to the special committee, by the present management of CEMA and other producer representatives, that having consumer representatives on the board would be divisive indicate clearly that producer representatives themselves do not believe that they are likely to be able to give due regard to the consumer interest in ways consumers would consider acceptable.

Third, the council should be restructured so that it would become a body clearly authorized to hear appeals from decisions of CEMA and other marketing agencies set up under the act from anyone—producer, processor or consumer—affected by these decisions.

Finally, such reports and advice from the council on the operation of agencies set up under the act should be submitted to and considered by not only the Minister of Agriculture, but also by an inter ministerial committee made up of that minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). They should all share responsibility for the operations of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act rather than have it left entirely in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture as it is at present.

The issue of ministerial responsibility is one of the difficult and sensitive areas touched on by the committee report. A reading of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act as a whole conveys the view that parliament in passing the act certainly did have in mind that the Minister of Agriculture would be responsible for the over-all administration and application for the act, including some meaningful degree of responsibility for the agencies created under its authority. The act contains a number of indications of this, but one of the clearest of them is section 6 (1)(a) which says that the duties of the Farm Products Marketing Council are, and I quote:

> . . . to advise the minister on all matters relating to the establishment and operation of agencies under this act.

One could well argue that parliament would hardly have been likely to have directed the council to advise the Minister of Agriculture in this way unless parliament wished to impose on the minister some degree of direct responsibility with respect to both the establishment and operation of marketing agencies created by cabinet under the authority of the act.

One can ask therefore why the final report of the committee found a lesser degree of responsibility with respect to CEMA on the part of the Minister of Agriculture than the minister has, himself, finally been willing to agree that he holds. He did admit to the committee, in the course of his second appearance before it, that he "possibly had some responsibility" for what he described as being only a "minor catastrophe." On Wednesday, January 28, the minister said that he would take drastic action if CEMA did not reform itself. He would not be able to do this if he did not have more responsibility for CEMA than the final committee report found that the Minister of Agriculture had.

One could also ask why the committee found less responsibility for action on the part of the Minister of Agriculture in this matter than the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That minister in his release of September 6, 1974, and in particular in a television interview on the C.B.C. on that date, clearly expressed his view that, in effect the Minister of Agriculture had responsibility for the operations of CEMA and should, therefore, take action to cure its problems. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs confirmed he made these statements and stood by them when he himself appeared before the committee.

The committee's final report in its findings on ministerial responsibility clashes with and rejects the views about it held by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This, together with his unwillingness last November to advocate consumer representatives for the CEMA board, suggests that the result of his confrontation with the Minister of Agriculture over egg marketing early last September was certainly not a victory for the consumer point of view.

It is true that provincial governments and provincial egg marketing agencies were involved in the negotiations that worked out the terms of the egg marketing plan as well as its later implementation. However, marketing agencies under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act are created by the federal governor in council, that is, by the cabinet by proclamation, as are the marketing plans these agencies implement. In other words they come into being because the cabinet exercises authority delegated to it by the parliament of Canada in the act. They would not come into being without this cabinet action being taken.

The act also provides that the cabinet can amend the terms of any marketing plan, or withdraw any powers it had earlier given to any agency which was created under the act. One should note that the act does not say that the only thing the cabinet can do if it is not satisfied with the operations of an agency is simply to terminate it by withdrawing all of its powers all at once. Parliament instead gave the cabinet the authority to operate flexibly, to amend individual agency powers if it wished to do so. The act does not say there is any necessity for any provincial concurrence or consent before any of the steps I have mentioned are taken.

In my view the evidence presented to the special committee has confirmed the findings of the Food Prices Review Board that the manner of operation of CEMA did not give due regard to the consumer interest. It confirmed the board's findings that the intervention price was set so high as to both encourage overproduction and, at the same time, inhibit purchases of eggs by consumers. It also confirmed the board's findings that the cost of production formula on which the intervention price of eggs was based was neither realistic nor adequate for that purpose.

It should be noted that the lack of adequate planning that took place before CEMA began its operations, and the faulty administration that marked its operations once they were under way, all came about when the decision making and management in this regard were entirely in the hands of producers.

Let me say, Madam Speaker, that I believe that no more marketing agencies should be created by the federal government under the Act unless it is firmly established that the plans and systems of administration for them are such that the mistakes and mismanagement associated with CEMA to date will not occur again.

The destruction of 29 million eggs is bad enough by itself, but what is equally troubling about it is what it demonstrates about the flaws in CEMA and its administration to the detriment of both producers and consumers, and the flaws that could develop when other marketing agencies are created under the act.

The difficulties of CEMA provide a powerful lesson, one which unfortunately had to be learned through a bitter experience so costly to both producer and consumer. Let us hope that this lesson has come early enough in efforts to develop national supply management programs so that with appropriate federal government action the mistakes and mismanagement connected with CEMA will not be repeated. If this is the case, the interests of all Canadians, whether producers or consumers, and thereby the total public interest, will in future be more fully and properly served, and the work of the special committee will be proven to have been greatly worth while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Madam Speaker, on a point of order I should like the record to show that members of the opposition applauded vigorously for a very constructive speech, and no more than four members on the government side applauded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I think it would be fair to say that, if it could be shown, many more were with me in spirit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ellis: They don't need spirit, they need guts.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the question has been very thoroughly covered already and anybody who wishes to make further remarks on this debate makes them with the fear of being repetitious. However, there are a few things which I think have not been said.

I am in sympathy with the farmers who decided they were not particularly anxious to see a representative of the Consumers' Association of Canada on their board. You do not find a president of General Motors as a member of the United Auto Workers. You do not find a farmer on the board of directors of a chartered accountants' association of Canada, you do not find a farmer on the board of directors that charts the course of the legal associations, the medical associations or nursing associations of this country. All of these people need food, however, and farmers need their services, yet they have never been invited to participate in the professional associations of any group in this or any other country.

While I agree in principle with a great deal of what has been said, I challenge hon. members and their professions to invite farmers to participate in the direction of those professions. When that happens I am sure farmers will reciprocate, and welcome consumers on their governing body.

All the various forms of information should be available to the public. All the public notices that the board has requested should be available to consumers, and consumers should know the basic cost of production. Farmers are entitled to this information but they could not get it from their own board, from the farm marketing council, from the minister or any other source. Like everybody else, farmers and consumers are entitled to the information.

What is the future of this board, Madam Speaker? The principle of national control of production of any commodity was precipitated by the chicken and egg war which, in turn, was precipitated by the policies of an urban oriented government, a government which had absolutely no concept of farm production or adequate supply of food. It encouraged production here and discouraged production there, until the Canadian agricultural picture became distorted. An area capable of producing grain found itself producing pigs and poultry by virtue of a federal subsidy which was contributed to by provincial subsidy—all financed by public money. Instead of grain pouring out of the west it was flying out in the form of birds, or it was shipped out in the form of eggs, because of a total lack of perception of what would happen if production of a particular commodity was increased by 2 per cent.

In any agricultural commodity on the North American continent—and virtually anywhere in the world—when a surplus of less than 1 per cent appears on the market, that market may plummet overnight. This was the knowledge that the urban cabinet did not like. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could not understand it, and allowed the government virtually to annihilate agriculture from coast to coast under the misapprehension that, if he satisfied the westerners by getting rid of their grain, his government and Ottawa would seem like Utopia to them.

If we had paid attention to fundamentals we should not have the egg producers on our backs. Eastern potato growers from P.E.I. and New Brunswick would not be on our backs if we had not abandoned traditional agricultural policies which worked in the past, and if we had not thrown away the concept of the stabilization board and said to the provinces, "This is happening in your area; you look after it." This is the sort of attitude which precipitated the call for orderly marketing. The call for agricultural production controls resulted from the absolute abandonment of responsibility for agriculture—and I cannot blame the minister, as he inherited the situation—on the part of the Trudeau government; it has neglected its responsibility ever since coming to office.

Government policies brought us to the catastrophic position in which, for six years, there was a drastic decline in the potato industry of this country. The government of Canada neglected the country's potato growers. The minister's efforts to help were thwarted. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and I were thwarted as we pleaded on behalf of the industry in our respective provinces. We wanted the assistance which was so necessary for healthy agriculture, and a healthy agricultural industry is essential if food is to be available at reasonable cost.

CEMA was made necessary because of the workings of an urban-oriented cabinet. When farmers are mentioned, cabinet ministers either leave their seats or laugh. They know little of agriculture. Policies which allowed the importation of food duty free were detrimental to Canadian agriculture. In the end the government introduced that pernicious bill which allowed CEMA to be created. Let me be clear on one point—farmers wanted the agency. As things now stand, the farmers have to have it; and it has to work. Let there be no misunderstanding. The egg industry has been forced back into a corner and the agency must work. If it does not work, the result for a great many egg producers will be bankruptcy. So I say to the minister that the agency had better work, or else.

Anomalies must be corrected. The egg producing industries of our smaller provinces cannot compete with the egg producing industries of richer provinces such as Ontario and Quebec. If the federal government wants to help agricultural producers, and egg producers, it had better make certain that its policies apply from coast to coast in a fair way.

Let us look at the history of the matter we are considering. In early 1973 the council was advised by people in the know, people who know the egg business, that the egg marketing concept was not going to work. They said in so many words, "egg production is creeping up, and we are heading for trouble." How true. In late 1973 poultrymen who had studied poultry industry statistics as well as Department of Agriculture statistics, and figures released by Statistics Canada, said that the controls exercised by CEMA were not going to work, and there was trouble ahead.

The statistics kept piling up, until the climax came when 28 million eggs were reported as spoiled. Only heaven knows how many more were spoiled. Records have not been kept of total spoilages. Not even the minister may know how many were spoiled. The CEMA people were very vague about total figures. They did not know where all eggs were stored and how many were involved in spoilage. I do not suppose anyone really knows the figure. Certainly the auditors do not. Without proof, they refused to certify that more than a certain number had been spoiled.

When this matter came to the minister's attention he should have called the appropriate federal and provincial authorities together and told them to sort out the mess. In any event the situation deteriorated, the number of spoilages grew larger and larger and, finally, the pressure of public opinion forced the government to act.

What is happening? According to statistics, a large number of pullets in various provinces are now getting ready to lay eggs. Some provinces may decide to go their own way and produce eggs at whatever rate seems appropriate to them. This is a matter for the Minister of Agriculture and the government of Canada to handle. I hope, for the sake of the producer and the consumer, that the minister can control all ten provinces, not just nine. This control is necessary for the sake of everyone.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Madam Speaker, I thank you for having given me the floor. Unfortunately, the hon. member across the way has left me very little time, barely 45 or 65 seconds, to participate in the debate.

Several members, from both sides of the House, would have liked to take part in it, I believe. Though I have very little time, I should still like to emphasize one point which was raised a while ago by one of the previous speakers, and that is in part the role played by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the egg question.

Members have suggested that the Minister of Agriculture should have intervened unilaterally and imposed recommendations to the Egg Marketing Agency. As far as I am concerned, I feel that this is an unusual way of looking at federal-provincial relations in this country. To think that a federal minister should interfere with a federal-provincial agreement, signed by all the Ministers of Agriculture in Canada, strikes me as pure arrogance. Had that occurred, such a unilateral intervention on the part of the Minister of Agriculture would have been denounced.

Quite the contrary, in that case he did what he had to do: he met and consulted with his provincial colleagues in July and November of that year, and they agreed on a plan of action to try and put some order in the house. And finally it is very important to show that that marketing agency can work to meet the need of both consumers and farmers in Canada.

I think for my part that underlying the committee report was the fact that it recognized the true role the marketing agency must play within the Canadian economy. How else can we make sure farmers of this country have adequate incomes so they will continue to produce the kind of quality commodities we are used to receiving in Canada? Professor Ford who appeared before the committee had no other mechanism whatever to suggest to replace the marketing agency.

So, instead of looking at false problems the committee made recommendations. It determined who was responsible for the agency's problems. It submitted certain findings but agreed that in the final analysis the Minister of Agriculture did what he had to do.

Before attacking the Minister of Agriculture it is worth noting that no recommendations were ever made in that regard before the committee but they rather preferred to wait to do so in this House. No attempt was made to convince the committee—as they should have done as members—of what was suggested here tonight in this House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—AMOUNT OF TAX LIABILITY REDUCTION IN 1975 DUES TO INDEXING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, on February 11 the titular Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) misled the House. This is the background. In a budget speech dated November 18, 1974, delivered by the titular minister, but apparently not solely prepared by him, it is stated that indexing will reduce the tax liability of Canadian taxpayers by $950 million in 1975.

On February 10 of this year the same minister stated, as reported at page 3067 of Hansard that taxpayers would save $750 million as a result of indexing in the 1975 taxation year. The following day, as recorded at page 3101 of Hansard, I asked the minister:

> Would the minister indicate which figure is correct, the one he gave us yesterday or the one he gave us on November 18?

The minister replied:

> This is a great game of selective statistics again advanced by my hon. friend . . . One figure applies to the calendar year, and the other applies to the fiscal year.

On February 12 I asked the minister to supply the House with the proper figures for relevant years on a fiscal and calendar year basis. He replied he would look into it. The next day, again under questioning, the minister said, and I quote:

> Mr. Chairman, the hon. member stated yesterday that in my November 18 budget speech I indicated that the reduction in personal income tax liability in 1975, as a result of indexing, would be $950 million, while on Monday I indicated that the reduction would be $750 million. That is how the question came up. The hon. member asked which figure is correct. In response I indicated that one figure was for the calendar year and another for the fiscal year. In so doing I misunderstood the question and perhaps misled hon. members. I ought to have responded that both figures are correct.
> The $950 million reference in the budget speech was the total tax saving attributable to people in 1975 because of indexing; the $750 million figure is part of that $950 million which is attributable to the federal treasury. The other $200 million is attributable to provincial treasuries.

After admitting he misled hon. members, this sham minister, attempting to rationalize his mistake, only demonstrated the cleavage that exists between the Prime Minister's "Group of Seven" and his denuded Ministry of Finance. Mr. T. A. Wilson, a member of the "Group of Seven", wrote in an article published this month, and I quote:

> The second round of tax indexing in January involves a reduction in federal and provincial taxes of $1,000 and $250 million respectively . . .
> Without the indexing of taxes therefore, federal and provincial revenues would be some $1,250 million higher in 1975, and the effects on the net budget position would be even larger. The additional fiscal drag which inflation would have generated with a tax-transfer system without indexing would have been sufficient to plunge the economy into recession in early 1975 unless offset by discretionary fiscal changes.

In his budgetary speech of May 6 last year, this titular minister said, "I have always tried to be frank with parliament and the people." In his last budget speech he stated only "I have always been frank with the Canadian people." Obviously the minister is a little embarrassed to maintain still that he is being frank with this parliament. The fact is that he has never been frank with this parliament. Nor has he been frank with the Canadian people.

We deserve a fuller explanation concerning the minister's statement in connection with indexing. At the time of my leader's speech, the minister so denounced the concept of indexing that it is only fair that he now state the accurate figures as to how much Canadians are benefitting at the present time as a result of indexing in the Canadian income tax field. I hope we will get a full and proper explanation of this unfortunate incident, which is only one in a series of incidents where this House has been misled by this minister.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): On February 11, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) stated that in the November 18 budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) indicated that the reduction in personal tax liabilities in 1975 as a result of indexing would be $950 million, while on Monday, February 10, he said that the reduction would be $750 million. The hon. member asked which figure was correct.

In responding, the minister explained that one of the figures applied to the calendar year and the other to the fiscal year. It is indeed true that the reduction of personal income tax liabilities in fiscal year 1975-76 will exceed that for calendar year 1975. This is so because a new and higher indexing factor will automatically take effect on January 1, 1976, and will apply for the last three months of the fiscal year.

In his budget speech the minister stated:

> Indexing will reduce the tax liability of Canadian taxpayers by $950 million in 1975.

In saying this he was referring to the total savings to taxpayers—savings resulting from the reduction of both federal and provincial tax liabilities. In his statement to the House on February 10 the minister was referring to the reduction in federal revenues due to the tax cuts set out in the bill, and in that context he gave the 1975 estimated cost of indexing to the federal treasury alone. Both figures given by the minister are correct. The $950 million refer to the total reduction in personal income taxes, federal and provincial, and the $750 million to the cost to the federal treasury only.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COMPANY'S INTENTIONS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF PERSONS ALREADY RETIRED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, on Thursday, February 13, I asked questions about railway pensions which I directed first to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and then to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). In this area of railway pensions there are of course many angles, and I am concerned about all of them, but during this late show tonight I am concentrating on just one point. It is the point I presented as clearly as I could to the Minister of Transport last Thursday. My question—and it is my only question tonight—related to the escalation or the indexing of the pensions of retired Canadian National employees.

I am not tonight talking about the need to revamp the Canadian National pension plan to make provision for the escalation CN workers presently employed may enjoy when they retire. I am talking only about former CN workers already retired and now drawing their pensions. For many years pensions in this category were of a fixed amount with no escalation at all. After a while we got the CN to come through with an escalation of 2 per cent per year. This was done for several years.

When the ceiling was taken off other plans which came within the responsibility of the federal government, we put pressure on the CN to escalate pensions in accordance with the actual rise in the cost of living. Last year the CN at least broke through the 2 per cent ceiling and allowed an escalation of 4 per cent which, though not good enough, was better than 2 per cent.

My question tonight is: when is this year's escalation coming through and, when it does, will the amount be at least the full amount of the rise in the cost of living?

We can argue about what that percentage should be, but other pension plans that are under the aegis of the government have this year had escalations of 10 per cent or more. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I submit that the retired employees of the Canadian National should now be getting the 1975 escalation of their pensions, and that the amount of that escalation should be at least 10 per cent.

As I said the other day during the question period, I am asking for this pending the tabling of the Hall report. I hope my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Guay) who will be replying tonight for some other parliamentary secretary, will not tell me—indeed, I am sure he would not want to say it—that we will have to wait until Canadian National gets the Hall report. That may be many months down the road. The time for an annual escalation of pensions is at the beginning of the year, and Canadian National pensioners have the right to that escalation now.

[Mr. Cullen.]

The other answer that the Minister of Transport gave me the other day, and which I found a bit annoying, was one he has given me on other occasions, namely, that this is the subject of collective bargaining. The pension plan of the Canadian National Railways, in so far as it will affect those still working, when they retire, is now on the collective bargaining table. But escalating or making any changes in the pensions of those already retired is not on the collective bargaining table. Those people have a representative on the pension board, but there is no collective bargaining on behalf of those already retired. They will get an escalation under the present arrangements, depending on what may come out of the Hall report, only if Canadian National comes through with an escalation.

I know that we are told frequently that we have to let the Canadian National Railways make its own decisions. But the fact of the matter is that pressure by the government, pressure from the floor of this parliament by members like my good friend, the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), my good friend from St. Boniface, and their good friend from Winnipeg North Centre, has had an effect in the past.

I hope that the parliamentary secretary will be able to tell me tonight that the government will talk turkey to Canadian National, and will tell the CNR that this matter cannot wait any longer, that it cannot wait for the next round of collective bargaining by those still working, that it cannot wait for the Hall report. These retired employees of CNR, many of them in our constituencies, deserve an escalation in 1975 of at least 10 per cent, and they deserve it now without any further delay. The parliamentary secretary can make a good name for himself in St. Boniface and throughout greater Winnipeg tomorrow if he will give the answer tonight, that this escalation is coming soon.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity, in the very short time available, to discuss this very important matter with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As he is probably aware, there are many CN pensioners in my constituency, and the problem of coping with the ever-increasing cost of living is a major concern for all pensioners as well as for us.

In the past the increase of pensions for retirees has been averaging about 2 per cent per year, and this increase has been made on a sporadic basis. There has never been any specific timing for this increase, and I must agree that this situation has created some problems and hardships for the pensioners referred to by the hon. member.

I know the hon. member probably does not want me to talk about the Hall inquiry commission, but the fact remains that the Hall inquiry commission was set up in May, 1974, by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), to make proposals with regard to pensions. Hearing began on November 28, 1974, and he has been holding hearings ever since all over the country. It is hoped that, as a result of this commission, the government will be able to act in a positive manner to protect the income of retired railway workers.

As the hon. member is probably aware, the unions have proposed to the Hall inquiry commission that the pension plan provide for automatic adjustment in accordance with the increases in the cost of living. But since the hearings are ongoing and Mr. Hall has yet to make his recommendations, we will have to await them to determine what action will be necessary and what action should be taken by the government. There is no doubt that the railway will give consideration to this important matter as soon as it has received the Hall report and the recommendations of the government in this regard.

In closing I would like to repeat what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said on February 13 in response to the question, as recorded at page 3186 of Hansard, that if he became involved, he would be sympathetic to pensioners' demands in this matter. I wholeheartedly agree with this because not only do I sympathize with pensioners but I believe that this is something they rightly deserve.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And they deserve it now.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PROPOSAL GOVERNMENT DEAL WITH UNIONS REPRESENTING SINGLE SECTORS OF ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ESTABLISHING LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Madam Speaker, last Friday, as well as this afternoon during question period, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) whether or not his department, or in fact any government department, has considered or is considering the possibility of single sector bargaining, in other words, of having a single public sector as a whole dealing with the government, rather than the fragmentary way in which the general labour and trades group, for example, has done, thus adversely affecting and harming so many different sectors of our economy.

It is puzzling to see the government continue to accept this method of bargaining, knowing full well that the fragmentation effects of a strike such as the one with which we are faced today are widespread, to such an extent that they alone can be damaging to the extent of millions of dollars to our economy in a dozen or so different sectors.

I believe, however, that the majority of Canadians are fed up with the increasing inconvenience and economic impairment to the individual and the community alike of walkouts, legal and illegal, in essential services in this country. Let us remember that two-thirds of the Canadian taxpayers do not belong to any union and therefore are not protected by the gutless permissiveness of governments, or do not belong on the government payroll with armour-plated job security. I would think that a great many of these taxpayers are against all walkouts and strikes, legal or illegal.

They find it to be a form of blackmail and some people suspect that the public is becoming so outraged that it will demand that the labour clock be turned back and strikes outlawed, with real and heavy penalties imposed in the essential services. That would surely bring about some very rough confrontations.

I believe, however, that there is a way around this whole affair. I believe that there is a way around this sort of fragmentation which would still give the individual within a union the right to strike but which, at the same time, would give the Canadian taxpayer the assurance that for the duration of a contract a specific single sector of the economy, such as air transportation, the post office, schools, food inspection, ports, trains and other public sector services, would be strike-free.

Surely in view of the number of strikes with which Canadians were faced last year, and the ever increasing labour unrest and militancy threatening public interest, some immediate alternative ways and means must be adopted before our economy deteriorates any further.

I believe that there is an urgent need for federal legislation requiring union groups in a single public service sector to bargain with the Treasury Board on a joint basis only for agreements of perhaps not less than two or three years' duration. This suggestion is not too different from a recent recommendation made to the cabinet in a memorandum regarding labour relations in Canada put forward by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I happen to have this memorandum which asks the cabinet to consider establishing a Canadian labour relations council with the purpose of finding solutions on a continuing basis to different problems of practice and perception in labour relations, including the problems of fragmentation in a union, a recommendation with which I am sure the public would agree.

It is fine to make the suggestion such as the one which was contained in the reply of the President of the Treasury Board to my question, that this sort of recommendation should be made to the joint committee presently studying the Finkelman report dealing with labour relations. But, unfortunately, before the dust settles after the completion of those committee hearings, our economy will have suffered the loss of millions of working man days as a result of walk-outs and strikes, and thus hundreds of millions of dollars, partially due to the fragmentary way of bargaining which this government seems to have adopted as a way of life.

The result of bargaining with a single public service sector as a whole, in the simplest terms would be assurance to the tax paying public that each essential service sector would be strike free except for the possibility of a walk-out every two or three years or so. By a wide margin the majority of public service strikes are at the federal level.

It was a Liberal government which gave federal public servants the right to strike back in 1967. We have seen this right abused at the expense of the taxpayer and so, quite fittingly, it is on the Liberal government, with its new strong majority mandate, that public responsibility rests to take the initiative to restore some balance between the right of the taxpayer to uninterrupted essential services and the right of the federal unions to withdraw them.

For example, if one happens to be grounded by an air service strike at the time of a business or holiday trip, the most frustrating and maddening aspect of the situation is the fragmentation of union power in shutting it down at different times. Most devasting also for management, and damaging to the economy, is the same idiotic spectacle of airline service, for example, having just been restored after a strike in one sector of the industry being closed down again by another union group walking out.

At different times in recent years air service has been grounded by striking firemen, runway maintenance workers, air traffic controllers, stewards, baggage handlers, ticket agents and other service workers. The railways, shipping, port services and the post office run the same risk of disruption by fragmentation of union bargaining.

Over the last three or four years the record of labour disruption of essential services, and the cost in money and inconvenience to the public make it plain to see that sooner or later a reasonable balance—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I have just one paragraph to finish.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The general rule is that speeches at this time cannot extend beyond seven minutes. The hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The strike of GLT employees of the public service of Canada is, of course, having an unfortunate effect on different sectors of the economy. Any strike of this dimension has that effect. I trust it will be shortlived. The employer is still prepared through mediation or any other suitable medium to strive for a settlement, and I hope that the Public Service Alliance is similarly motivated.

The matter of single public sectors is not something which can be decided in a hurry. There is every indication that to adopt this approach to collective bargaining would definitely result in fragmentation of union strength and the creation of far too many bargaining units. We have 80 bargaining units now, and it is possibly more in the public interest for the number to be reduced eventually, rather than increased. Union power is certainly not fragmented by having one GLT bargaining unit.

In any event the number and nature of bargaining units are a matter for decision by the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and if the hon. member has any suggestions to make regarding changes to the Public Service Staff Relations Act he will doubtless have an opportunity to pass them on to the parliamentary committee now studying the Finkelman report.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-48 TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there has been discussion amongst the House leaders about the desirability of proceeding as quickly as possible with Bill C-48 to amend the Railway Act. In order to expedite consideration of that bill, it has been agreed—and I hope it will be made an order of the House—that tonight at 9.30 the committee of the whole will rise and report progress on Bill C-49, the House will then take under consideration Bill C-48 and the debate thereon will be continued at this sitting until the conclusion of second reading. It is also agreed that there shall be no debate on the adjournment motion if the debate on second reading of Bill C-48 extends beyond 10 p.m. I would remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that there is agreement that there shall be, at most, five speakers on Bill C-48.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the government House leader said, there have been discussions and the proposal is agreeable to us. We want to remind the hon. gentleman that the opposition is always prepared to assist the government in proceeding with its legislative program, under proper circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to this arrangement, but we do trust that the debate will not extend too far beyond ten o'clock this evening.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed by all members that it be ordered that the House proceed at 9.30 p.m. along the lines and the terms outlined by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

TABLING OF "OPPORTUNITIES FOR CHOICE" AGREED UPON AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to lay on the table copies of the document "Opportunities for Choice", in both official languages, that was agreed upon at the federal-provincial ministers' meeting last December.

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE PERCENTAGE OF AUTOMOBILE COMPONENTS MADE IN CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity with respect to the critical unemployment situation in the Canadian automotive industry and, in particular, with respect to the Canadian automotive parts industry. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce make immediate provision to increase the percentage of automobile components made in Canada for Canadian-made cars and trucks.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed under Standing Order 43. It cannot be debated without consent. Is there consent?

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS OF ACT TO EARL HASTINGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns published statements by a self-styled petroleum landman who resides and has an office in Ottawa and a post office drawer address in Calgary, Alberta. These statements by this oil executive allege that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) consulted him about the government's oil policy, that he has influence with the cabinet and a voice direct to the highest levels of government in Ottawa. If there is consent, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the government take immediate steps to apply the appropriate provisions of the Income Tax Act to the financial affairs of one Earl Adam Hastings.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot be debated at this time.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED FINANCING OF PUBLIC DEBT THROUGH BANK OF CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to deal with an urgent matter requiring immediate action.

Considering that the Canadian public debt, in 1975, will exceed $55 billion, that servicing this debt will cost almost $3 billion in the same year—over $8 million a day—and that this debt is an increasingly heavy burden which the Canadian taxpayers are no longer able to carry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House study the possibility of setting up the financial mechanisms required to finance the paying off of the public debt through new credits issued by the Bank of Canada on the guarantee of the overall real wealth of the country, this, with a view to freeing Canadian taxpayers from the burden the public debt represents.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Malone.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED BROADCASTING OF WORLD HOCKEY GAME BY CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion.

In view of the fact that hockey is Canada's national sport and that professional hockey has become almost exclusively American, as far as the National Hockey League is concerned since only three Canadian teams out of 18 are competing in it; in view of the fact that, a division of the World Hockey Association is exclusively Canadian and that this division is the most stable of the association; and considering that the calibre of play in those two leagues is almost identical, it is deplorable to find that CBC is exclusively concerned with NHL publicity and that no World Hockey Association's game is televised on the national network. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House enjoin the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation not to discriminate any more against the WHA and to televise this league's games, particularly those involving the Canadian division.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF LANDING OF FLIGHT 253 AT CLOSED WINNIPEG AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to request leave of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43.

Last night the Ministry of Transport ordered Winnipeg International Airport closed from 5.15 p.m. to 7.25 p.m., because of dangerous snow conditions on the runways. At approximately 6.45 p.m. Air Canada flight 253, a Lockheed L 1011 from Toronto, landed at the closed airport. In view of the fact that Air Canada spokesmen have stated unequivocably to broadcasting station CKY of Winnipeg that there was absolutely no problem with the aircraft, and in view of the potentially disastrous situation that this suggests, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House does instruct the Minister of Transport to launch an immediate investigation into this matter and report the findings to the House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Speaker: The motion has been proposed under Standing Order 43 and therefore cannot be moved without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot be moved at this time.

Mr. Paproski: Joe Guay said no.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

SUGGESTED SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE TO REMEDY SHORTAGE OF COINS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of this House to discuss an important matter requiring immediate attention.

The strike of Royal Canadian Mint employees has caused a coin shortage which is getting worse every day. Several businesses are already unable to complete transactions because they do not have enough change to give back to the buyers. We know that coins are "the poor people's money" and that the poor are the main victims of this shortage. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House instruct the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to report to this House on the protracted conflict between Royal Canadian Mint employees and the government to bring this conflict to an end as soon as possible so that the population may obtain the coins required to make normal business transactions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY ACT

MEASURE TO ENHANCE THE STATUS OF WOMEN IN INDUSTRY

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-378, respecting women in industry.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, this bill will require contractors tendering for government business to file a statement describing in detail, as set out in the bill, the status of women working in their firms. This will create certain competition among firms to improve the status of women and produce higher standards than are obtained by laws which set minimum requirements.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would I be in order if I asked the hon. member if the bill will cover that great body of contracts for which there are no tenders?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—ALLEGATION OF POSSIBLE RETALIATION BY UNITED STATES IF ANY REDUCTION IN AMOUNT EXPORTED

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. No one in this House would dispute the right and propriety of the government and the National Energy Board to regulate export of natural resources, particularly gas to the United States. In view of reports that have been circulating recently, more particularly in the press today, that the United States government might make serious retaliations if any major changes are made on long-term contracts for the export of natural gas, have any special representations, either of a formal or informal nature, been made to the Canadian government stating that in fact the United States government will take such retaliatory action?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Before responding, may I welcome back the hon. member from his illness. I hope we will see a lot more of him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to the report today that there have been allegations of statements by State Department spokesmen of retaliation against Canada if there is a reduction in gas exports, I will preface my remarks by reminding the House that the National Energy Board is engaged in a hearing on precisely this question. In any response I make, I want to avoid in any way prejudicing that hearing.

● (1420)

Having said this, I can assure the hon. member that in my meetings to date with senior members of the administration and of the Congress I received no such representations. There has been concern about gas supplies but no suggestion of retaliation and no official representations to the Government of Canada in this regard. I think I can say to the House that on the basis of our good friendship with the United States over the years we shall do our best to assist them in any such problem, but perhaps this willingness to be of assistance might be diminished rather than increased by any suggestion of retaliation.

NATURAL GAS—GOVERNMENT VIEW ON POSSIBLE RENEGOTIATION OF CONTRACTS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Is it the position taken by the government that the long term contracts which have been signed with respect to natural gas could be the subject of renegotiation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I should probably not give a legal opinion, but the terms under which the gas is exported from Canada are under the National Energy Board Act, and are that the gas should be surplus to the reasonable requirements of the Canadian market and the National Energy Board Act does provide for the amendment of any such permit. This would have the effect of amending the contract by force majeure.

Mr. Gillies: In the course of the meetings which are going on at the present time, has the question of long term contracts for natural gas been an important factor?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): United States officials have been aware of the extensive board hearings which have been going on and have expressed, in general terms, concern about the supply of gas to the U.S. market, but of course they recognize that the question remains hypothetical until the board has made its determination and the government in turn has made its decision.

OIL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OFFSET POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED IMPORTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the same general subject. Has he now had an opportunity to inform himself as to the extent to which our export of crude oil will fall below imports in the latter part of 1975—the projected figure is some 200,000 barrels a day, as I understood the minister to indicate some months ago? If this prediction is unchanged, is it now the policy of the government to accept this situation and the very large consequent deficit in our balance of payments which will follow, or does the government have any plans to offset this effect?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As the hon. gentleman knows there is a level now set of 800,000 barrels a day being exported to the United States. I suggested at the time of publishing the Energy Board report that the government would consider moving down to a level of 650,000 barrels a day as of July 1, subject to consultation with the provinces. There has been discussion at the official level with the provinces. Because of its fiscal consequences, this will be a matter to come before the first ministers in April. It will depend very much on the outcome of that meeting whether the level remains at 800,000 barrels a day. However, subject to any sudden or unforeseen increase in imports, I would say the account should remain roughly in balance.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask, then, what is the intention of the government, subject to consultation with the provinces? Is it to seek the approval of the provincial governments to reduce exports to some 650,000 barrels a day by mid-1975? Is this still the policy as it seemed to be when the minister last spoke on the subject?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Having set the figure of 650,000 barrels a day, naturally, we will discuss it with the two provinces most affected before making a final decision.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS AND RATE OF PAY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the serious effects of the continuing strike of public service employees, I wonder whether the negotiations are continuing and, if so, whether there is a basis to the claim of the employees that most of those who were receiving wages when collective bargaining started a few years ago comparative to the wages paid for similar jobs in private industry are now being offered in many cases an increase which will bring their pay to not much more than half the pay of employees in private industry.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): My answer to the first part of the question is that I hope the parties will meet again tomorrow. We are willing to sit down at the negotiating table and try to come to an agreement. As for the second part of the question, I do not think the allegation is true.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—SUGGESTED TABLING OF ANALYSIS BY PAY RESEARCH BUREAU

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wonder whether the minister, if the negotiations are not brought to an amicable conclusion in the next few days, would make a statement in the House or table for members of the House the analysis done by the pay research bureau comparing wages paid to these employees with wages paid to workers doing similar work in the private sector of the economy.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that it would not be advisable to start negotiations in the House of Commons. I think that those people have the right to strike, a right which has been given to them by the parliament of Canada and which we respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SUGGESTED CONSULTATIONS WITH AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY ON MEASURES TO CONSERVE GASOLINE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Following his recent statement that efforts should be undertaken in order to conserve energy, has the minister had discussions with the automotive industry to recall certain vehicles that do not meet a certain standard of performance, such as for example, half ton pick-ups which use gasoline at the rate of seven or eight miles to a gallon, which is not a good performance?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Personally I have not, although my officials have been and are in the process of contacting industry with regard to ways in which industry can be of assistance. With regard to the automobile industry in particular, given the parallel goals that the United States administration has had over a period of years, we would seek to direct the auto industry to less wasteful means of propulsion systems in automobiles, thereby significantly conserving energy.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister whether discussions are also being held with the automotive industry to encourage them to design anti-pollution devices in such a way that they may be turned off, particularly in rural areas where pollution is not a problem, because these devices are great gas consumers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we recognize the problem and in conjunction with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, we will be pursuing that question as well.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INCLUSION OF COLA CLAUSE IN CONTRACT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board with respect to the negotiations that are going on. I wonder whether or not he accepts the Acting Prime Minister's statement of policy yesterday, in as much as he rejected the comment of the Minister of Finance with respect to the COLA clause, and whether the inclusion of the COLA clause in the negotiations is acceptable to the Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I do not want to restrict the hon. member's right to ask a question, but I have great difficulty in relating that question as a supplementary one to the question on gas consumption.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I did try to catch your eye with respect to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. Mine was supplementary to his.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will just reply by saying that it would not be advisable to negotiate in the House of Commons.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARING BEFORE DECISION ON REFINANCING

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport and it relates to the St. Lawrence Seaway. I am well aware, as is the minister, that many telegrams and letters have been received in respect of the 10 per cent increase in tolls and the need for a public hearing. Has the minister received representations to that effect and what was his answer?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I receive representations and the department is now working on a paper for cabinet in order to see whether we can refinance the whole seaway, and I will have to discuss this matter with the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: Is that a further policy statement?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You know what the seaway debt is. I think it amounts to $30 million per year. They do not collect enough money to even pay the taxes, so I think we must have a new scheme, and I hope that I will be in a position shortly to make an announcement.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact there has been some concern about this government moving in a unilateral direction on this matter, and keeping in mind that there has been concern registered regarding our export trade, Canada-U.S. relations and a concern on the part of primary and secondary industry, would the minister now give some assurance that he will implement a policy of holding public hearings prior to the cabinet making a decision? In other words, will he attempt to get all the input possible on the economic factors involved before the cabinet makes a decision on this extremely important matter?

Mr. Stanfield: Like Pickering.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, it was very useful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): When the hon. member says that we are acting unilaterally, perhaps I should point out that the United States did the same thing. One day they decided to maintain their tolls in order to reduce the debt, and they did that without consulting us. We were just informed of it. We may have to do the same thing, or find some other formula. As to whether it is necessary to have a public inquiry, I submit that if we can avoid it we will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the minister realizes that this is an extremely important and sensitive matter which he should not be treating lightly, and I do not think that he is, but I should like to ask one final question in order to get some assurance from the minister in respect of the direction he is going. Can he assure the House at this time that when he eventually makes a refinancing decision in respect of the St. Lawrence seaway he will make every effort to prevent increases in tolls which would seriously affect our export trade, Canada-U.S. relations and primary and secondary industries in Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that this is something I will have in mind from the very beginning to the end.

POSSIBILITY ORGANIZED CRIME CAUSES INCREASE IN PRICE OF HAMBURGER—REQUEST FOR STRENGTHENING OF INVESTIGATING COMMISSION

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the commission will use all the people it thinks can help it in carrying out a proper investigation.

BROILER CHICKENS—ALLEGED UNJUSTIFIED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN RETAIL PRICE AND PRODUCERS' RETURN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what he proposes to do regarding the charges raised by the Food Prices Review Board in its report on the broiler chicken industry to the effect that the price spread between what the producer gets and the retail price cannot be justified?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no national broiler chicken marketing board. There are provincial marketing boards such as the one here which has its authority vested by the province of Ontario. We do grant them the authority to operate interprovincially. They may be operating in a fashion that some hon. members would question, and if hon. members can give me some real evidence of that other than what Mrs. Plumptre presents I will look into it.

BROILER CHICKENS—INCREASED AMOUNT IN STORAGE—POSSIBLE USE IN FOREIGN AID PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would then ask the minister what he proposes to do about the growing cold storage surplus of broiler chickens in Canada, which I understand has increased from 31 million pounds in September to 34 million pounds today? Perhaps I could also ask the minister whether he intends to pursue his plans to set up a broiler chicken marketing board, notwithstanding the recommendations of the Food Prices Review Board?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the National Farm Products Marketing Council held hearings last year in respect of whether there should be a broiler marketing agency for Canada. Hearings were held and views were expressed. The council then proceeded with a draft agreement, but the agreement has gone no further. I think that is probably because of the inquiry into the national egg marketing agency called CEMA. I am not prepared to go ahead at this time until there is more federal authority, or until more federal authority can be vested in such an agency because I do not see how it could properly be run without it. The fact that there is a surplus of broiler chickens in storage has nothing to do with any national marketing program. These provincial marketing boards run their own systems at the present time. Such a federal or national agency would require a proper supply management program, and that would have to be put into effect before I would sign any agreement that required a federal authority as a signatory.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether, in the absence of a national agreement, he proposes to carry out his responsibilities as the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, in meeting with his provincial counterparts to see whether a plan can be devised to get these chickens out of cold storage to be used as part of our foreign aid program, or put on the market to the advantage of the Canadian consumer?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would say that the poultry producers have a certain cost involved in the production of poultry, and if society as a whole wants to put the poultry on the market or into some foreign aid program, that would be the job of society as a whole. Society as a whole should have the total authority for putting them into foreign aid or on the market. There is no sign of waste. We have investigated the storage facilities in which these broilers are stored at the present time and I am told there is no chance of waste at the present time. I am also told that producers are voluntarily cutting back on production. This is a free wheeling type of operation and there is no real federal jurisdiction or control in respect of production at the present time.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he confirm that the Governor General and the Privy Council, through the office of the Prime Minister, have received a petition from the Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards, containing some 47,000 signatures, asking the government to refer Quebec's bill 22 to the Supreme Court of Canada and, if so, what is the intention of the government in response to this petition and request?

● (1440)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that such a petition has been received. It will of course be studied, as it deserves to be, by the cabinet. I can only say by way of answer that on the questions of policy the Prime Minister has indicated on certain occasions the general attitude the government would take in these matters, namely, that disallowance is a procedure which has not been in effect for many years, and we are most reluctant to employ it, and also that if there were to be a private action against bill 22, the government might be disposed to participate. These questions will all be considered in the light of the petition which has been presented.

ENERGY

SYNCRUDE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF COST BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the vast amount of federal funds committed to the Syncrude project, and considering as well that the cost estimate given to the public and hon. members of the House escalated from $2 billion to $2.9 billion, I wonder if the minister would agree, prior to the government signing a final set of contracts on the project, to the establishment of a special committee of the House to investigate the commitments of the government and all costs related to the Syncrude project with a view to reporting back to this House prior to any signing of final contracts by the government.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): With relation to the allegations made last week by the hon. member's colleague about a cost escalation, I would advise that the $900 million alleged escalation is made up of a $226 million escalation in the cost of the utility plant, which is not the responsibility of the Syncrude partners but of the government of Alberta; of mortgage financing for housing of $100 million, which again is the responsibility of the province of Alberta; of $500 million interest during construction which, because it is all financed by equity funds, is not relevant; and the sum of approximately $30 million in relation to saline water disposal anticipated in part under the contingency fund already provided for.

The estimated costs are still estimated at the level of $2 billion. There will be in the final supplementary estimates coming forward an application for a supplementary estimate of appropriation for this, which would provide an initial forum, at least, where we could have a discussion of the details of the transaction which I personally would welcome.

Oral Questions

SYNCRUDE PROJECT—INCLUSION IN COST ESTIMATE OF ENVIRONMENTAL COSTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COST ESTIMATES WITHIN AND OUTSIDE GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Would the minister inform the House in the current estimate of $2 billion, which he says is still the one held by the government, whether environmental costs are included. When he answers that would he also consider tabling for hon. members of the House and for the public all of the aspects of the Syncrude project which are to be included in the estimates of the government and those cost estimates which will be outside the purview of the commitment of the federal government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to make that clear. As I indicated in answer to a previous question, the studies done by the government of Alberta of course are its property rather than that of this government, and if there is to be a tabling, they would have to be translated. We would be glad to put before the House and before the committee the details of the nature of the obligations being assumed by the partnership and that being assumed by the government of Alberta.

With regard to environment, as I indicated, there is involved in the $2 billion figure a contingency amount for environmental problems of the kind referred to.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Due to the fact that by the time the House considers the estimates the agreement will already have been reached and therefore serious consideration of the policy would be too late, is the minister saying that the government does not intend the House to have the opportunity to investigate all aspects of the Syncrude project thoroughly prior to its making a commitment?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate having some difficulty executing a contract in relation to the Syncrude project without first having the approval of the House for the appropriation to enter into the transaction.

CRIMINAL CODE

RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

A policemen congress from the Maritime provinces took place recently where a resolution was adopted recommending the restoration of capital punishment in Canada. Is the minister aware of this resolution, did he receive a copy of it and did he follow it up?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a copy of the said resolution, although I have read about it in the press. On the other hand, when I was invited to this meeting, I told the organizers that I already had a commitment for that particular day but that I would be willing to meet with representatives or the executive following the meeting to discuss the issues with them, but I have not yet heard from them.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister says he had a previous engagement, but if it had not been the case, can he affirm that he would have attended the congress?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: No, Mr. Speaker. I receive many requests for engagements in this country, and I had made a commitment on this occasion. I promised to meet representatives from that meeting, or their executive and so far I have not heard from them. If they wish to meet with me, I would be quite willing to do so.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGED LOCKING-UP OF NEWSPAPER REPORTERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Solicitor General. Is the Solicitor General aware that last evening 12 newsmen, including cameramen, who had gone to the B.C. penitentiary to get a news story in regard to a hostage being held at that time were invited inside and locked up—penned up, one might even say—and held incommunicado for over two hours, even half an hour after the hostage had been released?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was only advised by a newsman of this matter after I came into the House this afternoon, and I promised him that I would look into it immediately.

An hon. Member: Why did they let them out?

Mr. Allmand: I might say that I received information this morning about the hostage case, but I was not told about this incident with respect to the press.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when the minister makes his report, would he let us know upon whose orders this particular action was taken and also the action that he proposes to take to ensure that this does not happen again and that those responsible will be dealt with appropriately?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

EFFECT OF PROVISIONS OF ACT ON MARITIME PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the opinion expressed by the premiers of the Atlantic provinces that Canada's Foreign Investment Review Act is placing restrictions on foreign companies and investment in Atlantic Canada at a time when unemployment in our area is 11 per cent or more and rising, is it the intention of the minister to propose that the controversial second part of this legislation be shelved when he meets with the provincial industry ministers on March 10 and 11?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, but I do intend to meet with those ministers on that occasion to discuss with them the operation and consultative mechanisms set up by my department and with their departments.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. Where is the Prime Minister, what is the matter with him, and is it serious?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see that the hon. gentleman is just as concerned as the rest of us about the health of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has the 'flu. I gather that he was very anxious to come into the House today, but his doctor said it would be advisable that he remain home for another day. I will pass on to the Prime Minister the concern of the hon. member. I know that he will appreciate it very much.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—EFFECT ON FOREIGN GRAIN COMMITMENTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board with respect to the strike of public service employees now taking place. In view of the fact that at the time of the grain workers strike in the fall of 1974, the Canadian Wheat Board indicated that if the strike lasted for six weeks it would take until mid May, 1975 to fulfill foreign grain commitments, and because there has been at least one other work stoppage, I wonder if the minister is in a position to indicate whether there are any contingency plans to move grain if this current strike persists in view of the very detrimental effect it may have with respect to our foreign commitments.

● (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): This aspect of the problem does not come under my responsibility, Mr. Speaker. The employees involved have the right to strike. Parliament has given them this right and I believe we must respect it. Of course, any strike creates problems in various sectors of the economy, but Parliament did allow these employees to use this weapon, and I respect this wish.

[English]

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—POSSIBLE FORMATION OF PUBLIC INTEREST DISPUTES COMMISSION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I accept the position the minister takes with respect to the right to strike but in view of the fact that this matter has some serious consequences for the producer in western Canada and across the country, I wonder if he is in a position to indicate whether the government will give consideration to the formation of a public interest disputes commission in order to ensure that Canadian grain producers will not be subject to sales losses as a result of future strikes, slowdowns or work stoppages?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I now have no indication that the strike has seriously disrupted the movement of grain to ports, or the shipping of grain to our customers. In any event, I do not see why, when grain is concerned, the right to strike should be withdrawn and other sectors of the economy allowed to use it. The right to strike is either respected or it is not!

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION WHY ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS STILL IN CANADA FOLLOWING DEPORTATION ORDER

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration and concerns the very disturbing circumstances involving one Roosevelt Douglas who is a criminal convicted in the 1969 burning and smashing of the computer at Sir George Williams University. His appeal against deportation was turned down after the minister and the Solicitor General last year signed a rarely used form which indicated that it would be "contrary to the national interest" to allow this professional troublemaker to stay in Canada. Can the acting minister advise why such a person, considered by the court to be a security risk, is still in Canada and last week surfaced to publicly criticize the green paper on immigration?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SALE OF OFFICE FURNITURE TO CUBA BY LITTON EQUIPMENT—ACTION BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister indicate if the government has received any response from the government of the United States of America with reference to the concern registered by the Canadian government over the proposed sale of office furniture to Cuba by the Scarborough based firm of Coles Division of Litton Equipment?

An hon. Member: It is all settled.

An hon. Member: That is old news.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. I believe in this particular case a waiver was granted to allow the sale to go forward. I certainly regard it as a positive development in the situation.

CYPRUS—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF DECLARATION OF TURKISH CYPRIOT STATE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the recent unilateral declaration by Turkish Cypriots of a separate state in Cyprus while negotiations were going on between Turkish and Greek Cypriots, will the government of Canada express its disapproval of this action based as it is on military force and a defiance of the unanimous resolution of the United Nations Security Council on November 1 which called for speedy withdrawal of all foreign armed troops, and the continuation of negotiations with a view to reaching a free and mutually acceptable settlement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has learned with concern of the statement by the Turkish Cypriots on that island. We have, as you know, considerable peacekeeping obligations there and for that reason have attempted to avoid taking sides. We have urged the parties to negotiate however, and of course formal negotiations began earlier this year. There can be no doubt that the announcement made by the Turkish Cypriots must be regarded as a serious setback to the success of those negotiations. I might add to my hon. friend that we must note that the Turkish Cypriots have not gone beyond asking for a federated state, and therefore the Canadian policy of supporting the independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus has not been breached by this statement. I do, however, regard it as a serious setback to the success of the negotiations. I believe that now all countries must urge the two parties on the island to resume negotiations, even though this complicating circumstance has intervened.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether the setting up of a separate state entirely outside the negotiations is a preliminary move toward the partition and destruction of the integrity of the Republic of Cyprus?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the statement itself does not constitute a request for partition or for an independent state. To that extent, it meets the concern of my hon. friend and to that extent it ought to be greeted with a certain amount of satisfaction.

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTION UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE EMPLOYEES BE GRANTED BONUS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

Mr. La Salle: May I go on with my question, Mr. Speaker? Considering that since last Thursday the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices on Montreal island refuse to answer in English, that employees classified as French unilingual must answer many inquiries made in English and also that those employees have asked to be entitled to the 7 per cent bonus since they must give information in both languages, can the minister now say whether he is willing to comply with the request?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the government policy on the bonus for bilingualism does not apply to this category of employees, but to a special category of secretaries, here in the House of Commons and in Ottawa, who receive this bonus. We are not projecting to extend this bonus to other categories of federal public servants. I could not agree to this demand, and I hope the employees concerned will do their duty and answer government customers in both official languages.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. member later, but for the moment, the hon. member for Victoria has the floor.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED DESIGNATION OF CANADA TRUST TO PRESENT RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLAN TO MEMBERS OF FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister confirm that Canadian Armed Forces bases have been ordered to set up meetings between armed forces personnel and salesmen from Canada Trust Company for the presentation of a registered retirement savings plan and that in remote areas where it is difficult for the Canada Trust salesmen to reach the bases, commanding officers have been ordered to pass on instruction with the sales kits?

● (1500)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is correct to say that Canada Trust is setting up a retirement savings plan for those who may wish to join it, but I cannot confirm or deny the actual arrangements which have been outlined.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, if the minister will refer to National Defence Headquarters message 071815Z he will see what I am referring to. Does he see nothing wrong with his department's shilling for Canada Trust in the high pressure sales world of registered retirement savings plans?

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I think the retirement savings plan will be of benefit to the individuals within the armed forces who participate in it.

Mr. McKinnon: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a message has gone out to all bases clearly saying that Canada Trust alone has been selected by the department to act as trustee, does the minister not consider this an improper position for the department to take?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the members of the armed forces, as individuals, are entitled to join any retirement savings plan they wish. This is an attempt by the department, after long study, to select a company that can be of service to the individuals of the armed forces who wish to participate in a retirement savings plan. There is absolutely no compulsion of any kind. It is a benefit to the armed forces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is time for one more question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF MINISTER TO AFRICA—INQUIRY AS TO ROLE OF CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY AND PAUL GERIN-LAJOIE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Minister advise the House if he will be accepting the invitation to visit Africa in April, whether he is going under the auspices of the Canadian International Development Agency and whether Paul Gerin-Lajoie will be accompanying the minister on this "fun-in-the-sun" excursion.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just had a suggestion from one of my hon. friend's colleagues to join the "fun-in-the-sun", so he ought not to be scandalized at the prospect of that happening. I am planning to take a working visit—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Are you taking your bathing suit?

Mr. MacEachen: —which I look forward to with a certain amount of trepidation.

Mr. Stanfield: Are you going to Uganda?

Mr. MacEachen: I have not decided on my travelling companions, as yet.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is related to the fact that I mentioned three times that I would like to ask a supplementary of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

With your permission, now that I have been recognized I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My supplementary—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: You have not been here long enough.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must realize that he joins some very impressive company in the House in this regard.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on behalf of all members of this House. It seems to me that the practice of the House has always been, and I think it is borne out by Roberts and other authorities on procedure, that a question of privilege or point of order shall take precedence over other business being debated. Your Honour has recently seen fit not to hear a point of order or question of privilege at the time of its being raised and to hear it only after the conclusion of a series of discussions.

Apart from whether the point raised just now had merit, I suggest, on behalf of all hon. members, that Your Honour should hear a question of privilege as soon as it is raised. It has always been the practice of the House that we interrupt whoever has the floor in order to allow an hon. member to put his point of order or question of privilege. I suggest that we would be better served if that practice were to continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the hon. member's point, I have tried, when points of order or questions of privilege have been raised, to indicate to hon. members who are raising them that I see them and recognize that they have a question of privilege or a point of order to raise. In some cases hon. members have seemed to agree, at my urging perhaps, that their question of privilege or point of order would be as well served if they did not interrupt the hon. member who was in the midst of a particular line of questioning. In other cases hon. members have indicated that their point of order or question of privilege had some urgency in that it related to them personally.

The fact that a question of privilege or point of order is recognized as being in order is, I submit, adequate. There is nothing, it seems to me, in the practices or precedents of the House which says that the raising of a point of order or question of privilege ought to stop, in mid-sentence, a member who is in the course of developing a supplementary line of questioning. I am simply trying to combine the two points of view and to be fair to all members at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Chair, I think that under standing orders the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is perfectly right when he says that a question of privilege must interrupt all parliamentary proceedings and allow all hon. members to hear that question of privilege. The Chair decides whether there is a question of privilege, but first the right to raise it must be recognized anyhow.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member for Témiscamingue, I shall point out that I tried to explain that it is because of that and of well established precedents that I recognized the hon. member for Saint-Denis on his question of privilege. I suggested that the oral question period go on for the other two members. But had the hon. member for Saint-Denis insisted on raising his question of privilege at that time, I would have heard him, but if he permits me to recognize the other two members to finish the oral question period before he asks his question, the House and the Chair agree.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to hear evidence on and to consider Canadian policy with respect to the question of continuing defence cooperation with the United States and in particular the future of the North American Air Defence agreement (NORAD); and

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to hear reports from Canadian delegations which have met with delegations from foreign parliaments or attended interparliamentary assemblies.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, February 14, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last Friday, February 14, 1975, clause 28 had been carried. The committee will now proceed to the consideration of clause 29.

● (1510)

On clause 29.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, there is a technical amendment to be moved here. I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to be good enough to move this amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I move:

That clause 29 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 36 to 42 on page 49 and substituting the following:

"receivable."

(2) Subsections 59(2) to (5) of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) There shall be included in computing a taxpayer's income for a taxation year any amount in respect of

(a) a Canadian resource property,

(b) a foreign resource property,

(c) any property described in paragraph (1.1) (b),

(d) any property described in any of subparagraphs 66(15) (c) (i) to (vi) that is not property described in paragraph (1.1) (b), or

(e) any property described in any of subparagraphs 66(15) (c) (i) to (vi) if the references therein to "in Canada" were read as references to "outside Canada", that has been deducted as a reserve under subsection 64(1) in computing his income for the immediately preceding taxation year.

(2.1) There shall be included in computing a taxpayer's income for a taxation year any amount that has been deducted as a reserve"

(b) by striking out line 9 of the French version on page 49 and substituting the following:

"a) d'un avoir minier canadien, ou"

(c) by striking out line 43 of the French version on page 50 and substituting the following:

"biens visés à l'alinéa (1.1)b), les"

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: Explain.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a legal opinion.

The Chairman: Hon. members have heard the minister's proposition.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cannot possibly give an opinion. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could explain the purpose of the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Cullen: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I think that in English, for the hon. member's information—

[English]

Explanatory note (a), the words "in that year" were deleted at line 36 on page 49 since they are not required. Subsection 59(2) has been amended at lines 37 to 39 on page 49 to change the previous reference because of other changes to subsections 59(1) and 59(3). The amendments in subsection 59(2) are only technical and there is no change in policy or application of the section.

The words "deducted as a reserve" have been added at line 42 on page 49 to the previous subsection 59(2.1). These words are consistent with other sections in the act where the deduction from income is in the form of a reserve. With regard to 59(1)(b), this amendment at line 9 on page 49 merely corrects the French translation to correspond with the English. Appropriately enough, (c), the amendment at line 43, page 50, merely corrects the French translation to correspond with the English.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 30.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can advise me on this matter. I notice a change here, as a result of underlining, as follows:

—or as a payment to or under such a plan under which his spouse is the annuitant, as permitted by section 146—

In my ignorance, I ask whether in fact we can start now, in terms of International Women's Year, to bring in an amendment regarding "his or her spouse." Second, I want to know whether in fact this means the spouse is entitled to two deductions. I believe there is something like $4,000 or $4,500 now. Does this mean the husband can be involved with the plan, and if his wife is involved or has the right to be involved with it there is a further reduction amounting to something like $8,000 which would be involved under this section? Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would answer my first question regarding "his or her," amending the whole act accordingly, and my second question as to whether there is a double deduction in this regard.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I understand they are each entitled to the deduction, but he can contribute to hers if she is not working. Therefore, the total is there. There is not a duplication, if that is what the hon. member is worried about.

Mr. Alexander: What about my first question? Perhaps the parliamentary secretary does not think it is important. It is with regard to an amendment adding the words "or her" and the whole act being amended accordingly.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I believe one of my colleagues in the back bench raised that very point. Under the Interpretation Act "his" does mean "her". If the private member's bill of my colleague is carried, perhaps we will have it the other way around. However, under the Interpretation Act "his" does mean "her".

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, I would like further clarification. Is the parliamentary secretary saying that if you are working and your spouse is not, you can donate $4,000 to your own plan and $4,000 to your wife's plan, or $2,500 and $2,500 if you are on salary?

● (1520)

Mr. Cullen: I am advised that one cannot have more than $4,000.

Mr. Neil: If one spouse is not working and the other spouse is, can he or she put in $4,000 for himself and $4,000 for the spouse, amounting to two exemptions?

Mr. Cullen: You could take the one $4,000 and put it in for yourself, or you could take the $4,000 and divide it.

Mr. Nystrom: Why is the government taking this route at all? It appears to me that those able to take advantage of this concession would be the middle class or the wealthy; a person in receipt of an average income would not be able to do so. Why does not the government set aside money to establish, for example, a pension plan for housewives? This proposal seems to cater basically to the wealthy.

Mr. Cullen: The quick answer is that this is simply an extension of the law as it presently exists; we are taking it one step further.

Mr. Nystrom: I realize it is an extension of the present law, but I wonder why we are moving in this direction instead of doing something for the poor people. If we stopped doing all these things that help the middle class, we could perhaps establish a pension plan which would help the poor, the ordinary working people.

Mr. Cullen: If the hon. member would consider not only what we have done for the middle class but also for those in the lower and middle income groups, he would find that a very fair balance has been struck. What the hon. member is suggesting may have merit, but we can only go so far at one time. There is a limit to the funds which are available to go around.

Mr. Ritchie: Will this be classified as a gift by those provinces which presently tax gifts? Has the hon. gentleman received any legal opinion on this point?

Mr. Cullen: I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Ritchie: I know that in Manitoba, for example, if a husband gives his wife more than $5,000 it becomes taxable. Would the $4,000 proposed here add up to part of a gift as far as that province is concerned?

Mr. Cullen: The point is well taken. However, the provinces are aware of what we propose to do in this legislation and they would have to react in order to give effect to the changes set out in the bill, changes which I am sure the hon. member would wish to see.

Mr. Ritchie: Presumably, then, this would be tested in court.

Mr. Cullen: It is not a question of testing it. The hon. member mentioned Manitoba. The law would apply and a provincial tax would be payable. I think we would want the provinces to amend their legislation so as to give the full benefit to their residents.

Mr. Alexander: I see that in subclause (2) there is reference to the Unemployment Insurance Act and to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There is something here, too, with respect to computing income tax; provision for deducting fees and expenses incurred in preparing, instituting or prosecuting objections to rulings of the commission, and so on. I see the former minister of labour sitting over there. He has more wisdom in this field than I have. These are not familiar words to me. Are they to be found in the Unemployment Insurance Act? What do the words "instituting or prosecuting an objection" mean? Are we talking about a lawyer who acts on behalf of a disgruntled applicant? I may say I am in agreement with this provision, being familiar with all the bureaucratic red tape surrounding the monstrosity we now have.

Mr. Cullen: This covers the expenses of an appeal against a decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It is a relieving amendment related to paragraph 60(o) under which a taxpayer when computing his income may deduct expenses incurred in appealing a decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, a board of referees or an umpire. It is, in effect, a relieving section. The hon. member might be interested to know that it does include lawyers' fees.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I am tempted to rise on a question of privilege. I was merely seeking information. However, since the hon. member has given me that information I can understand members of the legal profession taking greater interest in these matters.

Mr. Cullen: I never think of the hon. member as being a lawyer, but always as a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order please. Just for the sake of clarity, let me point out that the minister has moved the French version of the amendment.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I notice that in the English version it reads "line 47" but in the French version it reads "line 46". Is there a reason for this?

Mr. Mackasey: It sometimes happens in the translation that one version takes a little more space than the other.

Amendment (Mr. Mackasey) agreed to.

Clause 34 as amended agreed to.

On clause 35.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance proposed an amendment to clause 35 on February 10, 1975. I would now like to move a new amendment to this clause and propose that we not proceed with the earlier amendment. The amendments were tabled earlier as a courtesy to hon. members. The Postmaster General will move the amendment to clause 35.

Mr. Mackasey: I move:

That clause 35 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by adding thereto immediately after line 24 on page 56 the following:

"(1.1) All that portion of subparagraph 66(3) (b)(ii) of the said act preceding clause (A) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(ii) the amount, if any, by which the aggregate of"

(b) by striking out lines 34 to 41 on page 56 and substituting the following:

"(D) the amount included in computing his income for the year by virtue of subsections 59(2) and (2.1)

(c) by striking out line 3 on page 60 and substituting the following:

"66.1(2) or deducted under subsection 66.1(3)"

(f) by striking out line 16 of the French version on page 61 and substituting the following:

"laquelle elle a repris l'exploitation active"

(g) by striking out line 8 on page 62 and substituting the following:

"paragraph 59(2)(a), (c) or (d) or a share"

(h) by striking out line 16 on page 62 and substituting the following:

● (1540)

(i) by striking out line 29 on page 62 and substituting the following:

"paragraph 59(2)(a), (c) or (d) or a share"

(j) by striking out line 51 on page 62 and substituting the following:

"by him after 1971 and before May 7, 1974) in respect of that field"

(k) by striking out line 37 of the French version on page 62 and substituting the following:

"66.2(5)b) (vi) le montant qui est devenu"

(l) by striking out line 4 of the French version on page 63 and substituting the following:

(n) by striking out line 28 on page 60 and substituting the following:

"expenses as were incurred by it during a period, before the"

I could repeat the French, Mr. Chairman, which is a precise translation, or I could carry on in my Gaelic, whichever you prefer.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment moved by the minister.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question in respect of clause 35, on page 66, regarding expenses. I would ask the parliamentary secretary whether this paragraph, which refers to the production or marketing of sodium chloride or potash, or a business which is involved in manufacturing products involving the processing of sodium chloride or potash, is a "once in a lifetime" deal similar to the Syncrude project in Alberta, or do the potash companies in Saskatchewan have these private deals of which we are not aware?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this is a consequential amendment to subparagraph 66(3)(b)(ii) incorporating a reference to paragraph 59(32)(a) or (c) which determines the amount included in income by virtue of Canadian exploration expenses and Canadian development expenses as amended by subclause (29)(2) and (36)(1) of the bill. The inclusion of this income increases the amount of deduction by an individual of Canadian exploration and development expenses within the limitations set out in revised subsection (66)(3). I am sure if the hon. member reads that and makes the reference he will find the answer to his question.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. This bill is sufficiently complicated as it stands, with 287 pages. It has been printed and circulated and we have all had it in our hands for several weeks. Now we are being asked to approve amendments being brought forward and read quite clearly, I grant you, but there must be 15 or 20 of them to this particular clause. With all due respect, I suggest that with the approval of the committee we should have these amendments circulated so that we can place them beside the existing text. Perhaps we could stand this clause. We are assured that these are technical amendments, but things have happened before, when technical amendments have been accepted, that have resulted in substantive changes in the law. With all due respect, I suggest that we proceed in this manner on this clause and any other clause that has so many amendments.

The Chairman: Before I recognize the hon. member for Calgary South I should perhaps deal with the point raised. I suggest it is a valid point, but to be fair to the parliamentary secretary I should point out that he indicated he was ready to suggest that clause 35 be stood in order to allow hon. members to look at the amendment. This may not prevent further discussion, but if hon. members feel the clause should be stood, that is the committee's decision.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, in response to the hon. member—and I think his point is well taken—I would indicate that all the amendments that have been put forward were tabled on February 10 in order that the action he is suggesting could be taken. I was going to indicate that these changes, quite frankly, involve corrections to the translation. This particular amendment is a new one and involves a series of changes, but all the others were tabled for precisely the reasons indicated by the hon. member. I would be quite prepared to go through these in the interests of getting the clause passed, if that would help.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I would support the remarks of my colleague as they relate to the amendments we are hearing about for the first time today. It is clear that the parliamentary secretary and the minister are reading from a prepared text, and it is also evident from the way they are reading that they do not know what they are reading. They have with them in the House a deputy minister who is backed up by a cast of thousands. The assistance they have in the form of the deputy minister is vast in that he has been working on these amendments and on the budget for many, many months. I would suggest that if the action is taken as suggested, the opposition should be provided with copies of these amendments in order that we can more closely scrutinize them.

I should like to know from the minister or the parliamentary secretary what sort of support might be provided members of the opposition who are generally staffed with a first and second secretary, in order that they might probe into the effects of these amendments. In this way they could go through the bill clause by clause and line by line with a better chance of understanding what they are being asked to deal with and pass today.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the hon. member, as I did earlier today, that we have endeavoured to do just what he has suggested in respect of this income tax bill. These amendments were tabled and have been available for study for some time. When we indicated we had these amendments, they were discussed with hon. members opposite and were all tabled with the exception of the latest one. It does involve a series of amendments but, as I have said, they are for the most part technical.

In so far as the study is concerned, funds have been made available both to the hon. member's side and to our side for the provision of research staff. I would hope that he is using more than just the staff he has in his office for the purpose of research, because if he is doing just that I do not think he would be too well informed. Knowing the hon. member as I do, I rather think he has access to other sources for research. In any event, if hon. members are disturbed about this amendment to clause 35 and would like to read the amendments and check them, we will give them copies, stand the clause and go on to the next one.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 35 be stood?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, although I have no wish to be sarcastic, I hear complaints about amendments moved this afternoon. It has been indicated twice that these amendments were all tabled on February 10. Members with an interest in Bill C-49 could therefore have gotten a copy as I did myself. I even copied into the bill the amendments to the clauses. While not an expert in fiscal law, far from that, I believe it is easily understood for example that on page 62, "66.2 (5)b) (vi)" was an error. "(4)" should read "(6)".

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is trying to filibuster.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are talking about.

● (1550)

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, we do not need a political speech in the House at this time. That is a filibuster. We want to get ahead with this debate.

The Chairman: Shall clause 35, with the amendment thereto, stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Just one short question before we do that, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary or the minister could tell us whether there is anything of substance in the clause which we should be contemplating, or are they in his opinion strictly technical amendments?

An hon. Member: He doesn't know.

Mr. Nystrom: If he does not know, it does not matter. He can tell us if he does not know.

[Mr. Bawden.]

Mr. Mackasey: When I do not know, I seek advice. When I do not know, I will ask the deputy minister.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, in response to the hon. member I would say that the clause has substance but the amendments are all strictly technical, correcting varying language versions, and that sort of thing. We have asked that the clause be stood so the hon. member may look at it.

Clause 35 stood.

On clause 36.

Mr. Cullen: We have an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary has pointed out that there are some minor amendments to clause 36. In clause 36 of the bill the amendments are to pages 68, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 80 and 81. I therefore move:

That clause 36 of Bill C-49 be amended as follows:

(a) by striking out line 6 on page 68 and substituting the following:
"112 and 113".

(b) by striking out line 26 on page 73 and substituting the following:
"expense of that other taxpayer or was, by virtue of subpara"

(c) by striking out line 46 on page 73 and substituting the following:
"est, paid by him after May 6, 1974, and before that time"

(d) by striking out line 16 on page 74 and substituting the following:
"paid to him after May 6, 1974, and before that time"

(e) by striking out line 3 of the French version on page 75 and substituting the following:
"59 (3.2)c), la fraction, s'il en est,"

(f) by striking out lines 12 and 13 of the French version on page 76 and substituting the following:
"cumulatifs engagés au Canada, ou"

(g) by striking out lines 25 to 39 on page 78 and substituting the following:
"in Canada for the disposal of waste liquids from an oil or gas well,
(B) drilling an oil or gas well in Canada, building a temporary access road to the well or preparing a site in respect of the well, to the extent that the expense is not a Canadian exploration expense,
(C) drilling or converting a well in Canada for the injection of water or gas to assist in the recovery of petroleum or natural gas from another well, or
(D) drilling for water or gas in Canada for"

(h) by striking out line 19 on page 80 and substituting the following:
"expense of that other taxpayer or was, by virtue of subpara-"

(i) by striking out line 22 on page 80 and substituting the following:
"taxpayer; and"

(j) by striking out line 38 on page 80 and substituting the following:
"paragraph (v) or (vi) that is estab-"

(k) by striking out line 21 on page 81 and substituting the following:
"paid to him after May 6, 1974, and before that time"

(l) by striking out line 32 on page 81 and substituting the following:
"al Grants Program"

(m) by striking out line 39 on page 81 and substituting the following:
"expense incurred by him."

Mr. Chairman, if we can dispense with reading it in French, I promise to read the next one in French and save reading it in English. I am told that the French version is precisely the same.

Mr. Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bawden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he would explain in some detail what he has been reading to us.

Mr. Cullen: In answer to the hon. member for Calgary South, I might say that this amendment was tabled on February 10 and passes on Canadian exploration and Canadian development expenses. Amendment (a) is a technical amendment at line 6 on page 68, deleting the reference to subsection 66.2 which was previously included in error. It is simply deleting that particular subsection. Amendment (b), the addition on line 26 at page 73 of the words "of that other taxpayer", is merely for clarification purposes.

Amendment (c), the words "and before that time" have been added at line 46 on page 73 since the calculation of the cumulative Canadian exploration expense is done at a specific point in time, and therefore any amounts paid by the taxpayer have to be determined before that specific time. Amendment (d), the words "and before that time" have been added at line 16 on page 74 since the calculation of the cumulative Canadian exploration expense is done at a specific point in time, and therefore any amounts received by the taxpayer have to be determined before that specific time. Amendment (e), the amendment at line 3 on page 75 corrects the French translation to correspond with the English version.

Amendment (f) at lines 12 and 13 on page 76 corrects the French translation to correspond with the English version. Amendment (g) is a technical amendment at lines 25 to 39 on page 78 specifying that the deductible expenses have to be incurred in Canada. Amendment (h) is a technical amendment at line 19 on page 80 which adds, for clarification purposes, the words "of that other taxpayer". Amendment (i) at line 22 on page 80 corrects a previous error. The word "and" was previously omitted by mistake. Amendment (j) at line 38 on page 80 merely corrects incorrect references.

Amendment (k) is a technical amendment at line 21 on page 81 to clarify that the amounts concerned must be paid after May 6, 1974, and before the particular time: it is necessary to add the words "before that time" since the calculation of the cumulative Canadian development expense is made at a specific point in time. In regard to (l), this amendment at line 32 on page 81 corrects a previous error. The word "development" has now been deleted as was previously intended. In regard to (m), the amendment at line 39 on page 81 corrects a previous error. The words "incurred by him" were previously omitted by mistake.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary, when he is reading from his voluminous notes, would consider reading the page number first. He reads so quickly that by the time he gets to the page number, having quoted the paragraph, subsection and subsection of subsection, it is almost impossible for us to get the page open before he is on to the next amendment. It would be helpful if he would start with the page number.

I should like to ask whether the amendments the parliamentary secretary is reading off so quickly and ably from his notes include recommendations which came to the minister late last week from the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Independent Petroleum Association relating to these special areas of oil and gas exploration?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I think it is traditional in this House not to say that such and such a group came before us and as a result an amendment was made. Individuals who have made representations will know from the legislation whether their recommendations were carried out.

Mr. Gilbert: Perhaps the hon. member can tell you.

Mr. Bawden: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the amendments he is giving us today were drafted subsequent to a detailed study of the suggestions from those two associations, by the sizeable staff of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Cullen: As I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, the amendments were tabled on February 10.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I am specifically interested in knowing whether any of the amendments that are today being proposed were drafted after consideration of the recommendations that came from the Canadian Petroleum Association last week.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I tried to answer the first time the hon. member raised the question. First of all, the amendments were tabled on February 10 and, second, I think it would be inappropriate to make that kind of comment.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the amendments that the parliamentary secretary is proposing to clause 36, he has repeatedly stated that the amendments were in our hands on February 10. I think it would be fair if the parliamentary secretary went further and indicated why they were not in our hands before February 10, bearing in mind the fact that the clause was substantially contemplated when the May 6, 1974 budget was brought down. I think we should have an explanation of why such extensive amendments were not forthcoming much earlier.

In particular, I should like the parliamentary secretary to explain what prompted the amendment. Was it simply faulty draftsmanship on the part of the department, or were the amendments agreed upon after overtures were made by the private sector concerning those parts of the resolutions which gave them problems?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated, some of the amendments are corrections. In some cases, where a word or date was previously included it now has been taken out. In other cases, it was a question of having the French version correspond with the English version, and vice versa. Some amendments were in response to recommendations made to the department. We received some excellent representations and some of them have been carried forward in amendments.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary did not answer my basic question. Why did it take from May 6, 1974, to February 10, 1975, to discover that these amendments were needed?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I think it is appropriate to remind the hon. member that in May we had a ways and means motion and not the bill. The bill did not come forward until December, and then there had to be reaction to it from industry and private enterprise. Bearing in mind the size of the bill, I think many of the amendments and changes that were tabled on February 10 are not significant as far as policy is concerned; they are simply correcting amendments.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, that is the answer I was looking for. There were mistakes that became apparent on December 20 when the bill was finally put into form, and they are now simply trying to catch those mistakes which the department or outside consultants or advisers indicated would cause problems. This being such a big section, possibly one of the most important sections in these amendments, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could indicate to what extent it reflects the current definitions concerning expenditures that are commonly used in the United States for this type of activity.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, rather than copying the Americans, we have endeavoured to use Canadian nomenclature.

Mr. Stevens: Is the parliamentary secretary denying, Mr. Chairman, that the wording he has used is almost identical to that used to describe mineral exploration expenses under the United States code, sections 616 and 617?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, we look at the legislation adopted south of the border, we look at the current Canadian practice, we list the representations made to the department, and out of all that available information we endeavour to draft legislation appropriate for the Canadian tax program.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary is almost as evasive as his minister. My simple question was, is it not true that the wording being used concerning exploration expenses is almost identical to that in the United States code, sections 616 and 617?

Mr. Cullen: I have answered that question once, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the hon. member has the definition beside him. We try to adapt, adopt and improve: this might be a good way to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the parliamentary secretary's remarks on this question. It is rather interesting that the Postmaster General is now here, helping the parliamentary secretary to read many of these complex amendments. I would suggest to him that if something were mailed from Ottawa on February 10 to western Canada, there would not be time to consider it and mail it back in time for it to be discussed in the House eight days later. Maybe we should have some comment on that. Eight days is not enough time for return mail, much less for deliberation.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the reason the parliamentary secretary is answering the questions rather than the Postmaster General is that he is much more knowledgeable in this particular field than I will ever be. He is one of the better members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: We are not talking about postal legislation now; but I have brought in labour legislation and accepted amendments right up to the final moment, from the Canadian Labour Congress. As long as an amendment improved a bill and was in line with the philosophy of the bill, I accepted it. Representatives of the petroleum industry were present when the bill was tabled and had a copy of it 2½ minutes after, when it was made available to the public. I imagine that members of the petroleum industry have had, since February 10, ample opportunity to meet the Minister of Finance and other ministers, including the Postmaster General. These various ministers may or may not, depending on one's viewpoint, have contributed positively to the final version of the bill. Without being hypocritical, let me say that I do not think anyone in this country has not been given the opportunity to make his views known. The fundamental point is that after hearing what these people had to say, we brought forward a bill reflecting as nearly as possible their constructive viewpoints. That was the whole intent of the exercise.

● (1610)

Let me refer to what has been happening today. We have been correcting translations. Nobody can render a translation from English to French so perfectly that it does not need revising or clarifying. Some printing errors have been discovered, even though the bill has been proofread umpteen times. But that is not unusual, as anyone who knows the printing industry will testify. Between February 10 and the present the bill has been improved and modified on the basis of recommendations of the Department of Justice and possibly of legal officers of the Department of Finance as well as others. Possibly some last minute amendments have further improved the bill.

If the hon. gentleman is objecting to this procedure, he is objecting to a parliamentary process which has existed for 50 years and will continue for another 50 years. He should not be under the impression that any vested interests forced the government to water down the bill, because the government is above that.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the matter of amendments, as I am not a member of the treasury benches I do not have authority to move amendments to this income tax bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, it appears we have difficulty in this part of the House in drawing your attention, or the Speaker's for that matter, when he is in the Chair, as indeed happened during the question period.

The member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) pointed out that when the parliamentary secretary gives explanations on amendments, he speaks too fast. A clear indication is that the people doing the interpretation—which they do with a high degree of expertise—of the parliamentary secretary's terms are experiencing a good deal of difficulty, so we unfortunately missed in the French interpretation a major part of explanations on the tabling of amendments. The parliamentary secretary might wish to take note of it. When he explains the amendments he will move, maybe he could do so somewhat more slowly, in order that French-speaking members may enjoy full interpretation.

[English]

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, we are considering an important clause which allows oil companies in Canada to write off 100 per cent of their exploration costs. In an earlier budget the Minister of Finance wanted to reduce write-offs from 100 per cent to 30 per cent. Now that the government has a majority, the write-off provision has been increased once more to 100 per cent. I find it hard to follow the reasoning which allows a 100 per cent write-off to oil companies, in view of the recently increased price of crude oil and the subsequently increased profits of the subsidiaries of multinational oil companies operating in this country.

Mr. Bawden: The hon. member cannot be referring to companies in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Symes: At one time the oil companies, which can hardly plead poverty, were content to explore in western Canada when oil sold for $2.80 per barrel. They explored before the world price rose to $6.50 per barrel. The price of crude oil in this country has more than doubled, and later this spring will rise from $6.50 to $8.50 per barrel. Oil company profits will, likewise, soar to unprecedented levels.

The concession given to oil companies therefore seems discriminatory, especially when one considers profit levels of manufacturing industries in this country which are labour-intensive. In 1974, manufacturing profits, on average, increased 38 per cent. During the same period, oil refining profits rose 68 per cent and profits for western oils rose 109 per cent. Imperial Oil and Gulf made after tax profits of hundreds of millions of dollars. I think the time has come for the government to cease giving concessions and to collect taxes on these high profits. This clause is a retrograde step as it will allow rich subsidiaries of oil companies a 100 per cent reduction. From my reading of the bill, it would be possible for Imperial Oil, for example, to apply the provisions of this clause to the Syncrude project. For example, if Imperial Oil invests $300 million in Syncrude, it can, under the tax regime which will be introduced, apply that amount against the profits of its other operations. Oil companies will make unprecedentedly high profits. The government has not recognized this and has increased write-off allowances to 100 per cent from 30 per cent. What is the reasoning behind this move?

The minister has argued that oil companies need incentives because the amount of exploration has declined. We are not fooled by that argument. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has argued that Syncrude can be our salvation. The companies need not explore for the Syncrude oil as they know where the tar sands are. If the companies are blackmailing the government by saying they will not explore unless they are given a 100 per cent write-off of exploration costs, I suggest that the government itself should enter the exploration business through PetroCan. Let it award contracts for exploration and find oil for Canadians. I oppose the government's backing down and allowing the oil companies a 100 per cent write-off, and urge the committee to vote against this provision.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, as the parliamentary secretary has the benefit of the advice of the deputy minister, I would like to ask him a question with respect to subclause (3) of clause 36. The subclause would permit Canadian taxpayers to deduct 30 per cent of their cumulative Canadian exploration expenses from taxable income. Would the parliamentary secretary explain how the 30 per cent figure was arrived at?

I would also like to know whether Canadian taxpayers can deduct land acquisition costs and whether any other incentives have been provided for Canadian taxpayers who are not principally in the petroleum business. Is there some incentive to take the step of becoming engaged in petroleum exploration? Some step has been taken in this clause. What other initiatives are there in this bill?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I will answer the questions in reverse order. We feel the package provides the over-all incentive. There is nothing magic about the 30 per cent figure: it has been the traditional figure.

Mr. Bawden: Why not 40 per cent?

Mr. Cullen: Ask the fellow who invented baseball why four balls and not three. It has been the traditional rate; there is probably no more explanation for it than that.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary really did not answer my question. I think it is a very important aspect of legislation in this country. Since the petroleum industry came into being, Canadian investors, by reason of the punitive tax laws in Canada, have been excluded from investing in that industry on an equal basis with foreign investors in the United States. This government has continually gone about this in a negative way, trying to artificially exclude investment and change these patterns. There is no question about it, this is the most important factor in bringing foreign ownership of Canadian oil reserves to its very high level at the present time. There is nothing in this budget to significantly turn this around.

I will rephrase my question to the parliamentary secretary. He said 30 per cent is traditional. The first time I saw the 30 per cent figure was in the May 6 budget. I suppose if something has been around for the better part of a year, to this government it has become traditional or long-term policy. I would like to know if the parliamentary secretary considers 30 per cent to be traditional.

Looking at the complexity and the vast number of clauses and changes in the bill, it is only fair that the parliamentary secretary should outline for members what other aspects of the bill can be considered to slant toward incentives for Canadians, if in fact it is the intention of the government to truly have Canadians invest in this industry; or do they want to continually put them at a disadvantage while at the same time moving to exclude foreign capital in this area?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is probably more familiar with the bill than I am with regard to this particular enterprise. I would think that after a careful reading of the bill, which he has obviously had, he would be prepared to concede there are clauses wherein there is that particular kind of incentive to the point where we are criticized on one side for doing too much and on the other side for not doing enough.

Mr. Bawden: Ignore them.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member waves and says we should ignore the NDP. However, they speak for a fairly large number of people in Canada and represent a particular feeling in this country. We have to be pragmatic politicians and endeavour to find which will achieve consensus in the House.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I still cannot get an answer from the parliamentary secretary. He suggests that members should read the bill and draw their own conclusions. I say the parliamentary secretary has an obligation to outline this to the House or admit that he does not understand the bill and does not have these answers.

Mr. Nystrom: To further add to the confusion, I wish to direct a series of questions to the parliamentary secretary which I am sure his officials can answer. It is my understanding that the May 6 budget proposed lowering the amount which companies could write off for exploration from 100 per cent to 30 per cent. We have had the November 18 budget and there are now two categories. First, there is the category for the principal business corporation. My understanding is they can write off 100 per cent of their exploration costs. In the May budget, that was proposed to be 30 per cent. In the bill before us today, a corporation that is not a principal business corporation can write off 30 per cent of its exploration costs. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, with one change. It has been said that we backed down. I would not say we backed down; we backed off.

Mr. Nystrom: The parliamentary secretary says they backed off. I wonder if that was as a result of having a majority government. In any event, by backing down, how much money will the Canadian treasury lose? How much money would this actually involve per year, going back the last few years and anticipating for the future, if they had written off only 30 per cent of their exploration costs rather than 100 per cent? How many million dollars are we dealing with? I realize this would be a guesstimate.

Mr. Cullen: Replying first to the hon. member for Calgary South, as I tried to indicate we have been chastised by the party to his left for the 30 per cent figure. The fact that we now allow 100 per cent exploration costs, and that the new tax abatement has had the effect of reducing the federal tax rate by 25 per cent, demonstrates initiatives that have been taken and which we hope will have a positive impact on this industry.

In reply to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, in the budget speech of November 18 the minister indicated, as recorded at page 1425 of Hansard:

> For the year 1974, I estimate that the changes I am proposing tonight will improve the position of the oil and gas companies by about $100 million and of mining companies by about $15 million as compared with my May proposals. This saving for the resource companies affected is a full 25 per cent improvement over the May position.

The hon. member may disagree with the word "improvement", but those are the figures given on budget night.

Mr. Nystrom: Those are the figures for one year. I take it that was based on the current rate of exploration. Exploration is now down. If exploration increases, that could skyrocket in the next few years. Hopefully, that is what the government envisages. What is meant by a "principal corporation"? Is Exxon a principal corporation in most of the undertakings they have? Which are the non-principal corporations? Does this by chance discriminate against small Canadian corporations? I suspect it does. This is a point the hon. member for Calgary South has made in the past. If this is so, why is there the double standard?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I am advised this is a question of tax status and "principal corporation" is a definition that is well known. It has been founded in history for this particular enterprise. We would not know the specific corporations; it is a question of interpretation. With regard to the hon. member's use of the expression "skyrocket", I must dissociate myself from that. We certainly hope exploration will take off, but whether it will take off like a skyrocket is something we really do not anticipate.

Mr. Symes: I rise on the same point, Mr. Chairman. It is important that the parliamentary secretary tell us what is meant by "principal corporation". We want to know just how much discrimination there is against Canadian companies. By principal corporations, does the parliamentary secretary mean Imperial, Gulf, and so on; subsidiaries of American companies? We have the fantastic situation of the Canadian government giving subsidiaries of multinationals tremendous tax breaks compared with Canadian companies in the field. I cannot for the life of me figure out the reasoning, considering the capital pool and the amount of money these major subsidiaries in the oil industry in Canada can draw from their parent companies. When we think of Exxon, the parent company of Imperial, making profits last year of over $3 billion, we must ask why the Canadian government is not insisting that Imperial draw from Exxon some of the funds necessary for exploration, rather than giving them the incentive of a 100 per cent write-off.

● (1630)

Figures for the decade of the sixties show the parent corporations gave to the oil industry in Canada only some 17 per cent of the capital needed by the subsidiaries to expand and explore and, in return, received in the form of dividends 18 per cent of the revenues raised in this country. So the parent companies are not financing the subsidiaries in Canada; in effect, the taxpayer is doing so. An analysis of the funds raised in the sixties shows that about 38 per cent of the capital raised by subsidiaries was derived from tax concessions and write-offs of the kind we see in the bill before us. Are we giving these corporations advantages which they really do not need?

Mr. Cullen: There is probably a basic disagreement between us as to whether they are getting advantages they do not need. But the short answer to the hon. member's question is that principal corporations are companies whose principal business is resource development. Under section 66(15)(h), a principal business corporation is defined. I do not intend to read the whole of the paragraph, but a principal business corporation means a corporation whose principal business is the production, refining or marketing of petroleum products or natural gas, or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas. There are six further subsections and I refer the hon. member to them. It does not simply say that "a company" is the principal corporation. It could be an all-Canadian corporation, for that matter.

Mr. Symes: Considering that 90 per cent of the oil industry in Canada is foreign-owned and that 99 per cent of the refining industry is foreign-owned, the parliamentary secretary is really saying that we are giving the bulk of the tax concessions to the foreign, multinational corporations operating in this country.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this item prompts me to put forward a thought or two leading up to a question. I believe the hon. member would accept my view that over the last 30 years a large number of Canadian oil companies have gone down the drain. One of the reasons has been referred to specifically by the hon. member for Calgary South who sits behind me. It is that these write-offs, though well-intentioned on the part of the government, are in fact one of the major reasons Canadians have lost control of their own resources. The great bulk of the small companies have never been able to get into a position where they were sufficiently in the black to take advantage of these write-offs designed to encourage exploration.

As I go over the history of events in the industry since the war, I see that well-intentioned parliaments thought they were helping the oil industry by making provision for write-offs. The intention is fine, but in practice the majority of the oil companies have not been able to survive because they never got themselves into a position where they could take advantage of these write-offs. The wildcatter trying to find oil knows that the chances against him vary between 8 to 1 and 20 to 1. I have seen many groups of Canadians pool their limited capital and enter this risky business of trying to find oil, encouraged by the thought that if they succeeded they would be able to write off the expenditures incurred. But they never found themselves in a position to take advantage of this particular concession.

I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary this question: Have there been any representations from the smaller, independent oil producers and gas producers asking that the government allow them to pass these losses through to the shareholders since the company itself cannot take advantage of the write-off provision? Under this arrangement the revenue department would simply allow a proportionate amount of the loss to be passed through to the shareholders in order that individual shareholders might get the advantage of what the government is trying to do. If this concept had been in effect in the past, some of these companies might have been saved. Some of them might, indeed, have become big companies able to compete with the internationals. Thus, the question I have raised is an important one and again I ask whether there have been any representations from independent oil or gas producers for this type of concession.

Mr. Cullen: I am advised that the representation or suggestion just made by the hon. member has not been addressed to the department. Most of the individuals who have made representations have set themselves up as syndicates to take advantage of existing provisions, instead of asking that losses be written off against shareholders' profits.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): If a syndicate were formed and took a loss, could that loss be written off against other income if it were not derived from the principal business? Is that what the parliamentary secretary is suggesting?

Mr. Cullen: I am advised that within limits this is precisely what is taking place, because the other opportunity, the one proposed by the hon. member, is not available to the shareholders.

Mr. Nystrom: I just want to make a few comments on this clause before it is voted on. In my opinion, you have a couple of choices when it comes to dealing with oil companies with regard to exploration and any other kind of tax write-off. The reality of the situation is that you are dealing with an industry which is basically foreign-owned, and whether or not it is contributing to Canadian corporations is really immaterial. If it is 90 per cent foreign-owned, then basically it will benefit foreign-owned corporations and there is no guarantee that Exxon or any other foreign company will reinvest those extra profits or extra capital in Canada. Quite often the funds raised in this country are invested in other countries.

When we are dealing with huge corporations such as these in the free market economy or the free enterprise economy, I think we have one of two choices. The member from Calgary South and members in his party have opted for one choice and our party has opted for the other. One choice is to keep it in the traditional free enterprise world and allow the corporations to develop the enterprise, to develop the oil. In order to do that you have to make all kinds of tax concessions, and the federal government recently—

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nystrom: I am getting to Saskatchewan right now. The government recently increased taxes on some of the extractive industries. Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have done the same with regard to royalties. As a result, there has been a fall off in exploration and development. The reason is the immense incentives in the United States in the form of low taxes and low royalties. The rigs are being pulled out of western Canada and are going down to the United States to explore and develop.

That is a natural phenomenon in the free enterprise system. Anyone in that system will go where they can make profit with the greatest ease and where they can have the greatest number of shares with the highest dividends for their shareholders.

If you play that game, which is what the federal government is doing, you have to offer incentives to match what the Americans are doing—write-offs to the tune of 100 per cent for exploration—in the hope of attracting capital. I do not think that will happen. The incentives we offer in this country and the type of oil we are going after will still make it more attractive than what they are doing in the United States. If you are going to offer incentives, you will have to reduce taxes on oil to such a low level that there will be a massive sell-out. So my party has been suggesting that we take another route. Why cannot gas and oil be publicly owned, as is electricity in most parts of Canada today? That is the situation in almost every country in the world. For example, in Britain all future energy developments are at least 51 per cent publicly owned. In France, Japan, most of the OPEC countries and many of the small developing nations, energy is publicly owned.

The same should be done in Canada. This cannot be done exclusively in one small province in the country because you will have one province being played off against the other. If you take oil as an example, Saskatchewan owns 10 per cent and Alberta 85 per cent. If Alberta develops oil under the traditional corporate system where all kinds of write-offs and incentives are offered, while Saskatchewan imposes heavy taxes on this resource, naturally it will be difficult to develop oil through the free enterprise market. That is why, if you impose heavy taxes on the oil industry, you must establish a national petroleum corporation which would have the co-operation of all the provinces. You cannot play just half the game. One cannot be just half pregnant, as someone said. You have to go one way or the other.

That is why I object to this clause. I do not want to see further write-offs being granted to oil companies. I know why it is being done. The government is trying to hand out a larger number of candies to them than is the United States. The time has come to develop this industry under public control, including exploration, development and refining. This is a non-renewable resource and it should be treated as a public utility. It is for that reason I object to this clause and other clauses which give greater incentives to the oil industry.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, I will take only a moment; however, I cannot help but say a few words in case the minister and the parliamentary secretary were listening to the last speaker. I think it is a very simple thing: either incentives will be provided in Canada and this country will have at least a shot at being self-sufficient or, if we continue to follow the rules that the government is proposing in the budget, we will find that our country will fall far short of self-sufficiency. That is what this debate is all about.

Many of the important clauses in this bill which affect the natural resource industries can be dealt with in a number of ways. There are all kinds of questions that can be put. It is simply a question, when the final figures are totalled, as to the kind of return an exploring company can get in Canada as against the kind of return they can get somewhere else. I think the key question, as suggested by the hon. member to my left, is that of public ownership, and I would like to put forward the following facts. Today, Canada is facing strikes in many critical areas where a few people, such as air controllers and others, can virtually shut down this whole country. I suggest to the members on my left and to the parliamentary secretary opposite that we could envisage one of the most serious situations that could be imagined in our country, with our cold climate, were we to concentrate all of the ownership in Crown corporations or public utilities so that by the simple turning of a valve by striking employees the country could be put up to ransom in such a way that it could not even operate for 12 hours.

In these situations, a strike within any number of independent or even large companies has its limits. The fact is that these employees know that in bargaining there is a limit to which a company can go and maintain its viability, and these limits are certainly recognized by labour and by management as well. Strikes against the government and strikes against public utilities, when unlimited funds can be provided simply by running the printing presses, provide an opportunity for a small segment of the population to hold the country up to ransom.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let the comments of the owner of an oil drilling concern go unanswered. He has made a very interesting case for destroying labour organizations and unions in Canada by bringing out the red herring of a possible strike among the employees of a Crown corporation whereby they could hold the country up to ransom. A wildcat strike among any of the employees of any company that exists today, including Imperial, Gulf or any other, could do the same thing. But the hon. member ignores the major factor of who is blackmailing whom in this country, who is holding whom up to ransom. Of course, the most recent example is the Syncrude operation where a group of multinational oil companies beat this government into the ground.

A couple of Mondays ago at a meeting in Winnipeg some oil companies manoeuvred Canada into a position of facing shortages and misled the government in their reports to the National Energy Board by telling Canadians that we had enough oil for 200 years, that we had nothing to worry about and that we could export millions of barrels of oil a year. But suddenly this government woke up to find that we do not have all this oil. As a result, the multinational oil companies have this government and the Canadian people on their knees, and they say, "You will do things on our terms before we will go looking for more oil".

Syncrude is the best possible example of this. A couple of Mondays ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said he would go to Winnipeg to convince the partners of Syncrude to postpone their decision to pull out by January 31. That is all he was going to do. Suddenly we found that the Canadian government had committed $300 million to that project. The cost has continued to escalate. There were four reports prepared by the government of Alberta. The federal government received one of them on Saturday afternoon, another on Sunday evening and the third on Monday morning. On that same fateful Monday a decision was reached committing millions of dollars to a project that is still in the hands of the multinational corporations which sold out Canada in the past and will continue to do so in the future.

It is time we ended this farce of multinational companies looking after Canadian interests. They look after their own interests. Let us not be fooled by them. It is time we looked after the development of Canada's oil supplies ourselves. Only in that way can we guarantee production and exploration in the interests of Canadians and at prices that suit the Canadian economy.

Mr. Bawden: Like Saskatchewan, where nothing is happening.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I have another comment or two to make in response to the hon. member for Calgary South. He said that our concern in this country should be self-sufficiency. I think that is a very important argument. People are interested in what will happen with regard to gas and oil. When you go around this country you find that this is the main concern.

I agree we should be self-sufficient in this country. There are two ways of doing it. One is through the private enterprise method, which we have done in the past through multinational corporations—that is the hon. member's way, the corporate enterprise way; that type of system is being subsidized massively by the government and has been for years and years—and the other is through public ownership. In the first case, most of the profits that the multinational corporations make are reinvested in various countries. This clause will give them another $100 million this year, more money next year and still more in the years to come. What we are saying in our party is that we should develop public ownership as other countries have done. You can hire the same technicians, the same scientists, the same economists, but the enterprise is owned by Canadians.

I was very happy to note that the hon. member for Calgary South did not try to refute any of the arguments about public ownership except to suggest that the labour unions would be more difficult to handle through public ownership than private ownership. I do not think that argument holds water. I think you will have the same relationship with labour whether it be a Crown corporation or a private corporation that is involved. The federal government should set the example in dealing with labour. I do not think that argument is relevant to the basic question of whether you should have public development. This is an important issue when we have a clause like this and when we are giving hundred of millions of dollars to foreign-owned oil companies. I do not think the taxpayers want us to do that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am constantly amazed by the tremendous inferiority complex of members of parliament, particularly those who belong to the official opposition. If you look at the international oil companies you will see that in virtually every country which has large pools of oil, including the OPEC countries, the governments have taken over 75 per cent, 90 per cent or 100 per cent ownership of that oil. I could list all these countries, but whether it is Venezuela in South America, or Iran—

Mr. Andre: How many of them are democracies?

Mr. Orlikow: The question of whether they are democracies is completely irrelevant to the question of who owns the oil resources in those countries. Whether it is Venezuela, Iran, Iraq or Saudi Arabia, the oil has been discovered by the multinational corporations. These corporations have drilled the wells, built the refineries and the gathering lines and have paid a very small price to these countries for their oil. Speaking from memory, it seems to me that the Shah of Iran said some time ago that all they were getting was 12 cents a barrel for the oil being pumped out of that country.

Most of these countries are still in the feudal age, with very few highly skilled or qualified technicians, but all of them who supposedly could not carry out the development themselves have taken over the oil. They have made an arrangement to have this oil purchased by the multinationalists. The multinationalists are dealing with these countries and shipping the oil to western Europe, to North America and to Japan. They are still living in these countries. They have not pulled out their technicians or their expertise, because they need the oil.

These multinational companies have, through negotiation, arrived at a price with which they can live. They have said to these countries that if they compensate them they will continue to do business, and that is what they are doing. When it comes to Canada, a country which has a great number of highly educated people, with engineering schools from which we have turned out thousands of engineers in the last 25 years, we are suddenly told we cannot do what the OPEC countries have done. I have a great deal more confidence in the know-how and ability of Canadians than, obviously, members of the official opposition. When the OPEC countries can take over the oil resources and operate them or make a deal with the multinationals to supply the expertise in return for oil at a price with which they can live, I do not believe that we cannot do the same; I do not accept that for a moment.

If we accept that suggestion, we are in effect saying that everything we have done since the end of World War II to upgrade the knowledge and skills of the Canadian people has been in vain. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in increasing the number and size of our universities, technical and community colleges and every year we are turning out thousands of well trained people, yet members of the opposition drag out this red herring, saying that we do not have the know-how to develop our own resources.

The hon. member for Calgary South wants to know about capital. These multinational corporations are not supplying the capital. The capital to develop the oil resources in this country resulted from the tax concessions and unconscionable write-offs which the people of Canada gave the oil companies through their governments, Conservative and Liberal. I am not blaming the oil companies for trying to get the best deal thay can. When they see that the country has a government composed of a bunch of suckers, they take every advantage they can. I suggest we have the resources and we have the capital to do the job ourselves; we have the know-how. But if we were short of know-how, we should make a deal with the oil companies, with which they can live, to develop our resources just as the OPEC countries have done.

I noticed this morning that Guinea, a country in Africa which has virtually no trained people, is increasing its tax on bauxite in one shot by $40 million a year. We will not see Alcan, Reynolds, Kaiser or any of the other corporations producing aluminum moving out of Guinea, because they need bauxite and they will pay the higher price. The same thing is happening in Jamaica: They know that the resources are needed and they can get a better price for their people.

An hon. Member: You should think about democracy when you suggest that.

Mr. Orlikow: This has nothing to do with democracy. In the waters off Norway there are tremendous oil resources and that country is controlling the way in which that oil will be developed and how much ownership it will keep. Great Britain has oil resources in the North Sea and has stated that 51 per cent ownership of the oil will rest with Great Britain. This has nothing to do with democracy. I want to say one more thing with reference to this red herring which the hon. member for Calgary South drew across the trail. He suggested there were no strikes in private industry, but there would be unlimited strikes in that sector. That is so ridiculous I cannot imagine anybody who knows anything about our society making such a statement. The fact is that there have been massive strikes in all major, privately-owned industries in this democratic society.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, before calling it five o'clock perhaps we could carry clause 36 in order to show some progress on this bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—National Defence—Inquiry whether Canada negotiating with Brazil in purchase of armoured cars; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—National Defence—Disbanding of military bands—Request Government review decision.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I understand that the items which precede No. 23 on today's order paper will not lose their place in the scheme of things as a result of calling No. 23.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that those bills be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS MAKING INSULT TO CANADIAN AND FOREIGN FLAGS AN OFFENCE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East) moved that Bill C-223, to amend the Criminal Code (domestic and foreign flags), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, during the course of the twenty-eighth parliament I had two private members' bills on the order paper of the House of Commons. Bill C-197 was a bill to amend the Criminal Code, and the purpose of that bill was to make it an offence to insult, in any way, a Canadian or provincial flag.

The second, Bill C-198, was a bill to amend the Criminal Code with regard to foreign flags, and the purpose of that bill was to make it an offence to insult, in any way, the flag of a foreign country lawfully represented in Canada.

Neither of those bills came to second reading prior to the end of that particular session of the twenty-eighth parliament.

The bill before us today, Bill C-223, encompasses in its present form all three of the points in the previous two bills. When proposing legislation of this nature it is important to make certain that the law being proposed is practical and can be enforced in the courts. If this is not the case, passing such a law would merely be window dressing instead of something realistic, practical and meaningful on the statute books of Canada. With regard to this latter point I would like to express my appreciation to hon. members in all parties with whom I have had consultations with reference to this bill. I wish to make it quite plain that they have been most co-operative and understanding.

I have also had several discussions with legal authorities who are concerned about the implementation and protocol of a law of this nature. Because of these latter discussions, and other research I have undertaken on the subject, I have this afternoon decided to make a major change in this bill by making it less complicated and, it is to be hoped, more practical. It is my personal wish to request the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw three words from proposed section 49.1. Those words are "or Provincial flags."

In addition I wish to withdraw proposed section 49.2 in its entirety. This would make the bill deal with Canadian flag legislation only, and it would then read as follows:

1. The Criminal Code is amended by adding immediately after section 49 thereof the following:

"49.1 Every one who destroys, disfigures, mutilates, defaces, defiles, desecrates or casts contempt upon the Canadian flag is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction."

My reason for wishing to withdraw these two items is that I hope their withdrawal will ensure easier passage for the remaining part of the bill, plus the fact that we would be dealing with the ramifications of enforcing one particular piece of legislation instead of three at the same time.

For example, if the House were to approve the bill this afternoon in its present form, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs could be faced with representatives from provincial governments across Canada who might wish to comment on the bill. The committee could also be faced with many representations from groups across the country in regard to the foreign flag section of the bill. Then, of course, there may well be people wishing to comment on the Canadian flag section of the bill. After considering all the ramifications of the present form of this proposed legislation, I have come to the conclusion that both the provincial and foreign aspects should be removed from the bill.

I am advised by legal experts that it is normal procedure for the provinces to recommend to the federal government the changes they wish in the Criminal Code as it applies directly to them. Therefore, if I were to retain the part about provincial flags I might end up stepping on the toes of some provincial legislatures. That is certainly not my intention.

Similarly the foreign flag section presents a problem in that many foreign flags of countries legally represented in Canada are on the various embassy properties which are excluded from Canadian jurisdiction. If such a foreign flag is insulted in any way, the Department of External Affairs extends an apology on behalf of the Government of Canada and ensures that the matter is brought to police attention for action under the appropriate law. Many people have expressed views to me, and I am sure that other hon. members have had the same views expressed to them, that they are quite often disgusted when they see a flag being torn down, burned, or insulted in any way—and I mean with intent to insult.

I do not consider it an insult to or desecration of the Canadian flag if people wish to wear a sweater of T-shirt with the Canadian flag on it, if they wish to wear a Canadian flag on the hip pocket of a pair of jeans, or if they wish to sew a Canadian flag on their knapsack when travelling. This is simply a way for people to express pride in their country and their very definite identification with Canada.

By bringing this bill forward today I wish to make quite clear to hon. members that if it becomes law I would not wish to have it used to charge someone where the intent is simply to express pride in Canada. If this bill passes I would want the resulting law to be used against those who wilfully damage a Canadian flag or insult it in any way, or where there is clear evidence that there was intent to do so.

Any time that I have seen a Canadian flag being desecrated or insulted, my first thought was that the person or persons involved had no pride in the nation. There is also the underlying feeling that citizenship in this country carries with it not only rights and privileges but also duties. I hope that this bill will help such individuals to realize that Canadian citizenship is something in which Canadians take a great deal of pride, and that citizenship carries with it certain duties and responsibilities, and not just rights and privileges.

Regardless of what human frailties we may have, as members of the House of Commons or indeed as members of the Canadian community as a whole we surely must agree that we live in a country with great potential. We live in a country with great institutions, and we live in a country that presents all kinds of challenges and frustrations. The latter we must tackle, and while doing so we must display a reasonable amount of patience and perseverence.

A flag is a very important symbol to any nation, and by insulting the flag you are indeed insulting a nation and its people. If we, as Canadians, are able to treat that important symbol with the dignity and decorum that true Canadian citizenship has a right to demand from us, then it will make us look that much bigger in the eyes of other nationals. By doing so we are not in any way merely paying lip service to or worshipping a piece of cloth, as some agnostics might wish to have us believe; instead it should be interpreted as an act of respect and loyalty to our nation and to the people who occupy this nation.

I suppose all of us in this House of Commons had many occasions over the years to visit the Cenotaph on Remembrance Day, November 11. There we see the ceremony carried out with decorum and respect by those who fought to retain our nationhood, while at the same time we pay our due respects to those who made the supreme sacrifice on the battlefield to preserve it.

We are also well aware that the Canadian Armed Forces wherever they are around the world consider any ceremony dealing with flags, and with the Canadian flag in particular, as something that must be carried out to the nth degree of perfection along the lines that protocol demands. They have been responsible to a very large degree for portraying the Canadian image around the world, and the Canadian flag has become clearly indentifiable in the international community.

I wish to thank this House for its patience and consideration during the course of my remarks and before I sit down I should like to ask unanimous consent of the House to remove the two parts of the bill that I have mentioned or, if not, I will give the House a commitment that if the bill receives formal second reading today I will see to it that those amendments are moved at the committee stage.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, I would certainly not agree that the items the hon. member has suggested be deleted. I think the manner in which his bill was framed was good, no matter what his constitutional experts or the Department of External Affairs may have told him.

There was an instance not too far from my own constituency in the summer of 1974, where an organization obtained moneys from the federal government and an incident took place when the Union Jack was desecrated and insulted. I think section 49.2 should remain, and I certainly would not consent to withdrawing it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, it gives me pleasure to say a few words on this bill, and to congratulate in particular the hon. member who introduced it. Indeed it seems that if one considers what the Canadian flag represents one realizes immediately how important it is for Parliament to pass official legislation to protect it and particularly explain clearly to the people of this country what the flag truly represents.

Those who sat here a few years back during the very difficult debate which then certainly divided Canadians for a while must understand that step must now be taken to avoid another division of Canadians on the flag issue, a flag which now, quite on the contrary, unites Canadians from coast to coast. It seems important to me that the bill be enacted because I had myself opportunities to wish that it were so.

I come from the heart of Montreal, a part of our country which is particularly noisy and which is represented at the provincial level by a member who advocates breaking up Canada and who certainly managed to gain a few supporters. I already received representations from certain people in my riding asking to be protected because they wanted to fly the Canadian flag but felt threatened. I think it is absolute nonsense that a citizen of Canada—such a free country—should even feel threatened when he wants to fly the flag of his country, the national emblem. That is why I think the bill introduced by the hon. member is excellent, and I will support it.

I would also like to make the following remark: It seems to me that respect for law and order in a society such as ours can only be enhanced if there were respect for its symbol, probably the most important, at least the most known, in that society—its flag.

That is why I congratulate the hon. member and I will support his bill.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I thought the two parties of the opposition were going to speak on this bill. First of all, let me congratulate its mover. To my mind, deleting the words provincial flag and foreign flag is an excellent idea, because we would otherwise be intervening somewhat in someone else's responsibility; what we are concerned with now is the national flag.

As the preceeding speaker said a while ago, we have had enough discussions about the national flag. When we voted, I was a member of the joint committee on the flag. I still remember the terrible discussions we had for months. Some will doubtless say that this bill is not necessary. I feel that if we limited ourselves to the spirit of Canadian citizenship, we would, at first glance, be inclined to say: Offhand, we would say this bill is not needed because those who do not respect the national emblem have no love for their country. Whether they have reason is another story.

The national emblem is in my view somewhat in the nature of a family picture, for instance. Children have a love for family emblems because they were brought up to respect authority, to love their parents. Laws will never be needed to prevent them from tramping on their parents' picture. This is something inherent that cannot be imposed by statute. But since we have in Canada different tendencies, I believe a bill to that effect is really needed, unfortunately, to prevent unseemly acts across the country.

If someone has reason not to love his country and to make it known by tearing up or destroying the national emblem, we are entitled to ask ourselves why they tend to do so. It is certainly because they were not impressed by the behaviour of parliamentarians and the authorities in the country, or probably because they were disappointed by the administration of justice or witnessed shortcomings. These are questions that come to my mind when I think of the bill.

I suggested it should be a natural thing to respect one's national emblem, to the extent that all citizens love their country. Who is going to induce them to do so? People in authority. If citizens see only gangsterism in the government, in the Cabinet, and in every parliamentary organization, how can they love their country?

I believe primary responsibility rests with parliamentarians. We, as members of parliament, should learn to show dignity, and especially in the course of these debates, knowing we are here to represent the people of Canada and we alone can make citizens love their country. They will love it to the extent they feel free and happy to live here.

I am not ready to put immediately the blame on the groups who are going to rebel against the flag or any other emblem of this country. Instead, I wonder if this action was not provoked by people who should set a good example. This is why respect for the flag should not be forced by legislation, but should come from the pride that the citizens have of their country, from the confidence that they have in their administrations and from the security that they can enjoy in their country.

I support this bill somewhat reluctantly since I would have liked that this Parliament promulgate more humane laws so that all Canadian citizens could be happy to live in Canada. In this way, Madam Speaker, we would be sure never to have to legislate to insure respect for the Canadian emblem.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, although the hon. member who introduced this bill did not obtain unanimous consent for his amending proposal, he gave a certain undertaking. I think the House agrees with the bill in principle, and perhaps we could give it second reading and refer it to the appropriate committee without delay or further debate. As unanimous consent was not given for the hon. member's proposal, perhaps the committee might deal with it.

This matter deals with questions of propriety, and some may think that the federal parliament is not displaying good manners if it deals with the matter, as some provinces may be offended. I say this because of certain opinions which have been expressed in the past by the Department of External Affairs. I remember one occasion when the Department of External Affairs gave an opinion about the propriety of flying the flag of the Ukraine in front of City Hall. That opinion was not an opinion in the legal sense so much as an expression of belief. The department suggested it would be improper to fly the flag, and great difficulty resulted. Eventually the city decided not to heed that dubious advice of the Department of External Affairs and flew the flag of the Ukraine on Ukrainian national day.

Perhaps we ought to commend the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) for withholding unanimous consent. The hon. member who introduced the bill gave an undertaking; consequently, as I think there is general agreement, the subject matter of the bill should be sent to committee.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) was surprised because representatives of the official opposition and of my party had not taken part in this debate. The reason has now been given by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). We know that some genuine questions could be asked about this bill, but we think that the idea that we should make sure respect is shown for the emblem of this country is good, and we support it. Therefore, we think it would be a good idea to read the bill the second time and send it to the committee.

The hon. member who introduced the bill has indicated the changes he will make. He was not given consent for those changes to be made in the House, but this can be done in committee if the committee is so disposed. That was our reason for not participating in the debate, lest the bill get talked out. We are prepared to allow the bill to be read the second time and be sent to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before we call it six o'clock does the House agree to revert to committee of the whole for the consideration of Bill C-49?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As the committee has agreed to call it six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.30 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at six o'clock, it was considering the amendment to clause 36.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take a few moments to complete the argument I was advancing when the committee stopped discussing this matter. In particular I want to comment on the suggestions made by the hon. member for Calgary that not only will it be bad business for the people of Canada if the oil corporations are operated through public ownership, but there would be many strikes and this would really drive the industry to the wall.

There is no evidence, in this or any other country, that people who work for the government or crown corporations are more likely to strike than workers in private industry. There have not been many strikes in the oil industry. That industry has not been highly unionized. It has been an extremely efficient industry in terms of finding oil and selling it at a high price. There is no evidence that under public ownership the workers in the oil industry would be more likely to strike than at present.

An hon. Member: What about British Railways?

Mr. Orlikow: I would be very happy to discuss the sorry plight of Great Britain with the hon. member on a more appropriate occasion. If he wants to look really at Great Britain, he should look at how little Conservative governments, which have been in power for most of the last century, have done to force British industry to modernize its equipment and management techniques. Therefore I do not think we need to look at Great Britain to see what they have done. We are talking about Canada.

We do not believe it is necessary for the people of Canada to give the fantastic concessions which the minister proposes to give to the oil and gas industries. This clause proposes that the entire cost of exploration and drilling for oil can be written off by the companies. When you do that, you virtually take away all the risks from the companies which are engaged in the oil business. If you drill a hole, regardless of whether it is dry or not, you can write off the cost against your profits. If you find oil, you are permitted to charge a very substantial price per barrel. You can make a lot of money. You can use the accelerated depreciation, the fast write-offs and everything else. We do not accept that that is necessary.

I go back to what has been said many times by many people in this country. There is no need to develop all our resources just to give them away at bargain basement prices. Our resources will be needed much more in ten, 15 or 25 years from now. The value of our natural resources will be much higher at that time. We need not go out of our way, as the minister seems to be doing, to give the oil companies just about everything they want. That being the case, we cannot accept the basic proposal in this clause.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on this clause. The debate before dinner seemed to have gotten off on an ideological strain. That means this clause is terribly important for what it says. It is symbolic in terms of the attitudes the Conservative party has in defence of what it calls private enterprise as against the socialist way of looking at this.

As with a lot of other things, we are using terminology in a different way. The Alberta members seem to be talking in terms of the defence of private enterprise which is relevant to a small sector of the economy owned by one or two family businesses or a few entrepreneurs, in the old sense of the word, that still exist in our economy and make a great contribution. However, in describing corporate capitalism they are using the same terminology. They are using a folklore of 19th century capitalism to describe corporate capitalism which has just as much planning as any socialist state, only the planning is done by the corporations in co-operation with any government that will co-operate with them.

For a very long period of time it has been the policy of the Liberal government and the Conservatives, when they were in power under the right hon. member for Prince Albert, to play ball with these large corporations. They not only give them an enticement to help get over a risk period, but take away any chance that there could be losses. When talking about Imperial Oil, Exxon and what have you, there is no profit and loss situation. The government gives them depreciation allowances.

These corporations are given 100 per cent write-offs as envisaged in this clause. There is no possible way these large corporations will suffer losses over a period of time, although it is true that with the way they keep their books, this may appear to be so for a given period of time. But they have a planned way of getting what they expect with regard to dividends and internal financing. It always works out because government plays the game that is envisaged in this clause.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The Minister of Finance, who is in the chamber this evening, should take a few minutes to explain to us why he has gone from a 30 per cent to 100 per cent write-off. Why not a 50 per cent write-off? Why must these large corporations have a 100 per cent write-off?

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

● (2010)

Mr. Symes: Can the Minister of Finance answer a question which my hon. friend and others put this afternoon when he was not in the House? In view of the increased profits being made by the oil companies, in view of the fact that the minister was quite prepared to allow only a 30 per cent write-off on May 6, and in view of the fact that the 100 per cent write-off now proposed applies to foreign-owned corporations, why is the minister backing off and taking the position that the 100 per cent write-off for exploration is now justified?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I gave those reasons fully in the budget speech on November 18. Because the risk is so high in both the mining and the petroleum industry I felt it would be in the interest of the country to allow a 100 per cent write-off for exploration.

Mr. Symes: Why has no consideration been given to the effect of the reduction in the provincial royalty rate which is now to be only 35 per cent as opposed to 65 per cent? The companies are getting an extra incentive from the provincial government yet the minister is still listening to the pleas of poverty from the oil companies by giving them 100 per cent. In the light of the concession the Alberta government is making, why does the minister still feel it is necessary for him to change his position?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have made that judgment and I have nothing further to add.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The minister says he changed his mind because of the high risk involved. Would he explain to the committee what is the risk? If there is a loss there are no tax penalties, and when exploration is made in or near proven areas the risk is, anyway, minimal. Certainly, in a situation like the tar sands or oil shale, or where there are known deposits of minerals, it is difficult to understand why a risk which was worth 30 per cent is now worth 100 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, Mr. Chairman, if we knew where it all was there would be no problem at all. But we don't.

Mr. Benjamin: Since the minister confesses that we do not know what the risk is, or how much it is—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Why does he not provide that if they can prove that a risk was taken, and if a loss was incurred, they could write it off? Why not wait until they can show in subsequent years that a risk was, in fact, taken and a loss sustained?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The explanation would probably not be undertaken because of the high risk involved unless there was a commitment in the law that the expenditure could be written off against current income.

Mr. Nystrom: Why was the minister willing to do it for 30 per cent last year and why does he now believe 100 per cent to be justifiable? What is the reason for this startling change?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because I have taken part in intensive conversations with representatives of the provinces and with people who have to try to find these resources, including the independent companies, and I have concluded that in the light of the diminishing reserves of petroleum in the country this was the proper thing to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: I find the minister's explanation incredible in the light of the profits the oil companies have received in the past and those they are getting now. Oil companies were content to explore when the price was about $2.80 per barrel. Today, although it is true provincial royalties have gone up, the price per barrel has also increased and the oil companies are making even greater profits. So the argument that they need extra incentives is impossible to accept.

I should like to draw the attention of the committee to some figures on the cost of producing a barrel of oil and on the profits derived from its sale. Between 1965 and 1969 the average wellhead selling price was $2.58 per barrel. The finding and development cost was 52 cents per barrel, of which 13 cents went into exploration. The cost of production, including the operation of gas plant, averaged 35 cents a barrel, and the provincial royalty averaged 30 cents a barrel and federal taxes 14 cents a barrel. So there was a profit in percentage terms of 49.2 per cent.

When the price went up to the current figure of $6.50 a barrel the cost of finding and development did not rise—it is still 52 cents a barrel. The cost of production is still only 35 cents a barrel. Provincial royalties have increased from $1.27 to $2.22 on the average, and federal taxes amount to 60 cents compared to 14 cents under the old regime. The profit derived by the oil companies, despite the higher taxes, is $2.81 per barrel, or 43 per cent, only slightly below the original profit of 49 per cent. And when we look at it in real terms, profits in dollar terms are much higher, the increase ranging from 60 per cent to 100 per cent last year, or gross figures in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Despite all this the minister says a 100 per cent write-off is needed.

It is so obvious. If the people of Canada could only see how the tax laws are made they would realize who it is the government really cares for, that is to say, the multinational companies and their corporate friends. These are the people for whom the laws are designed. Meanwhile ordinary Canadians pay higher prices while, at the same time, losing revenue because the government continues to subsidize the oil companies through tax concessions and write-offs.

I believe the minister is out of tune with the people, or at any rate out of tune with the people I talk to in all walks of life. They are outraged over what has happened to our oil industry, over the Syncrude sell-out, and the lack of initiative on the part of the government in failing to take over the resources of this country and develop them in accordance with Canadian priorities.

● (2020)

Clause 35 in the bill is just one further example of the sell-out on the part of the government to multinational companies, and it is also indicative of the change of attitude now that the government is in a majority in parliament and thinks it can ram this clause through to the detriment of all Canadians. I think the minister has failed to explain the change from the 30 per cent to 100 per cent, hoping that he had secured the majority of votes and that a mildly reasonable explanation would suffice. I think it is a national disgrace.

Amendment (Mr. Mackasey) agreed to: Yeas, 63; Nays, 9.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 36, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 36, as amended, agreed to on division.

On Clause 37.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we tabled an amendment which I would like to move. It is intended to clarify the application of the fair market value rule where the taxpayer sells petroleum or mineral products to a government agent. I move:

That clause 37 of Bill C-49 be amended by striking out line 20 on page 84 and substituting the following:

Fair market value of resource output disposed of to Crown

(8) For the purposes of subsection (6), the fair market value at the time of disposition of a unit of any particular quantity of petroleum, natural gas or related hydrocarbons or metal or industrial minerals disposed of by the taxpayer referred to in that subsection to a person referred to in any of paragraphs (6) (a) to (c) shall be deemed to be the amount by which

(a) the average proceeds of disposition that became receivable in the month that included that time by that person for the disposition of a like unit from a person other than a person referred to in any of paragraphs (6) (a) to (c)

exceeds

(b) the average aggregate of all expenses (including depreciation) incurred by that person in respect of that month for each such unit that may reasonably be attributed to transmitting, transporting, marketing or processing thereof to the extent that such expenses are reasonable and necessary and do not include any cost of acquisition thereof.

Fair market value of resource output acquired from Crown

(9) For the purposes of subsection (7), the fair maket value of a unit of any particular quantity of petroleum, natural gas or related hydrocarbons or metal or industrial minerals acquired by the taxpayer referred to in that subsection from a person referred to in any of paragraphs (7) (a) to (c) shall be deemed to be equal to the amount, if any, paid or payable to the taxpayer by that person in respect of that unit.

Certain persons deemed to be same person

(10) For the purposes of subsection (8), where a person referred to in any of paragraphs (6) (a) to (c) disposes of a unit of any particular quantity of petroleum, natural gas or related hydrocarbons or metal or industrial minerals to another person referred to in any of those paragraphs, those persons shall be deemed to be the same person."

The purpose of this rule is to ensure consistent treatment, whether the resource is marketed by a government agency at a mark-up, or by the taxpayer subject to government royalty. In each case the revenue from the resource which is taken as mark-up or royalty will be included in the tax basis. In order to achieve this objective, where the government marketing agency is involved the taxpayer is deemed to have sold petroleum or a mineral product at fair market value.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a simple question for the minister. Has Clause 37, and the amendment to it which the minister has just moved, any connection with clauses 4 and 7 which are controversial, and which we are standing?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, it determines fair market value for the purpose of the deductibility or non-deductibility of a royalty. So it does relate.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Is it understood then that we will be standing this clause after discussing the amendments?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, if that is the wish of the committee at this stage.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that Clause 37, and the amendment thereto, be stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, I should like some clarification on a small point. I wonder if there is a typing error in the amendment. In the second to the last line of (9) we find the words "to" and "by". I wonder if those two words have been inadvertently reversed by the typist. Should that phrase not read "payable by the taxpayer to that person"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We will look at that when it is stood.

The Deputy Chairman: It is agreed that Clause 37, and the amendment thereto, stand.

Clause 37 stood.

On Clause 38.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we have a technical amendment to Clause 38 which I would like to move, as follows:

That clause 38 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 31 to 33 on page 84 and substituting the following:

'inventory of a business or a property described in any of paragraphs 59(2) (a) to (e).'"

(b) by striking out lines 37 to 42 on page 85 and substituting the following:

"owned by him or deemed to have been owned by him on December 31, 1971, and thereafter without interruption, that was a property referred to in subsection 59(3) or (3.1) and shall be deemed to have"

(c) by striking out lines 3 to 6 on page 86 and substituting the following:

"amount included, by virtue of subsection 59(1.1) or paragraph 59(3.1) (a), in computing the amount referred to in subparagraph 66.2(5) (b) (v) from property in"

(d) by striking out lines 20 to 22 on page 86 and substituting the following:

"property referred to in any of paragraphs 59(2) (a) to (e) has, on or after the death of the"

(e) by striking out line 53 on page 86 and substituting the following:

"66.2(5) (b) (v), as the case may be, in"

and

(f) by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 87 and substituting the following:

"subsection 59(1), (1.1), (3) or (3.1), as the case may"

● (2030)

This is a series of technical amendments primarily to correct previous incorrect references to other sections.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 38 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 38, as amended, carry?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The point was made this afternoon about trying to follow amendments as they are introduced, and it was suggested in this connection that the page number be read first rather than the line number. This is a small point, but when one is going through a document of this thickness and learns that there is going to be a change on line 17, and then finds it is on page 86, which may be four or five pages past where the last amendment was made, it is very difficult. It would simplify matters, I suggest, if the page numbers were read first and the line number after that. Then we could follow it much more easily.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We will try to accommodate the hon. member. I might say that the amendments were all tabled, and if the hon. member really wants to follow them he can get a copy from the Chair.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a comment on clause 38(7) at pages 89 and 90. This clause deals principally with the intergenerational transfer of farm land from an individual farmer to his children. It has nothing to say about the subject which I think a good many farmers in Canada are keenly interested in, and that is why this same intergenerational transfer could not apply to incorporated family farms and farm partnerships. If it is in order I should like to make a few comments on that.

First of all I want to say that I think family farm partnerships and corporations should be entitled to this roll-over provision. There are two other provisions included within the same clause, and they are the provision for five year averaging and the provision for principal resident exemption under the capital gains tax provisions. Those three items as they relate to the family farm corporate set-up and the family farm partnership are the items in which I am particularly interested.

I should like to remind the minister of what I felt was a very useful meeting which took place in the minister's office almost a year ago now, on March 13, 1974. At that time he was good enough to meet with the tax committee of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Most of our conversation was directed to this subject I am raising this evening. At that time the minister was good enough to include myself and the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo in the meeting because of our obvious interest in the cattle industry in Canada. I thought we came away from that meeting with the feeling that the minister was genuinely interested. We felt our points were well taken, and that something might come from that.

I made some remarks on this subject during the second reading debate and I should like to go back to two short paragraphs because I think they state in a nutshell the arguments which are pertinent. I said:

> It is important to remember that while only some 7 per cent of our Canadian farms are incorporated, they account for 28 per cent of our total farm production. These figures do not include farm partnerships. We should also take note of the fact that while we have some 336,000 farmers in Canada, about one-third of this number, 113,000, produce 80 per cent of our total farm production. It is a personal view, of course, but I make a clear distinction between a so-called family farm corporation and a business corporation in a non-farm sector of our society. Surely the fundamental reason for farm incorporation is to enhance and preserve the family farm as a meaningful farm unit.

I should like to add that there seems to be a sense of responsibility on the part of the federal government and many of our provincial governments in that over the years they have encouraged this type of family farm set up in order to preserve the interests of families, keeping them interested in the family farm approach. Then I went on to say during second reading debate, in reference to the meeting with the minister in March of 1974:

> —there appeared to be genuine interest and sympathy from the minister with respect to this matter. He suggested to our tax committee that because of the implications of our request, the so-called small business side of our society had to be seriously considered and he could make no decision at that time. He also suggested that his department must determine, in fairness to small businesses, if the roll-over provisions for small family businesses should also apply to them. To use the current phrase, I ask sincerely, why not? Surely a suitable definition of the term "small business" or "small family business" could be arrived at. This possibility could be given serious consideration. I think the minister has got into difficulty because he cannot adequately define a small business. In summary, I suggest that clause 38(7) of Bill C-49 has indeed done justice to the individual family farm, but at the same time it has drawn attention to a remaining injustice to other family farm businesses which do not enjoy this privilege.

It seems to me that the term "family farm corporation" suggests something insidious or sinister about a big business type of project. This is a necessary type of operation that has to be recognized. It is not in the category of a million dollar enterprise that bears close tax scrutiny or anything like that. Since that meeting with the minister a year ago I hope the minister has given this some thought and can make some comment on the situation. I would invite him to do so now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I recall the meeting to which the hon. member for Medicine Hat referred. The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo was there, and also an old friend of mine, Gordon Parks, who is now the president of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. He went to university with me in British Columbia.

Subsequent to that meeting I was with the hon. member in the Kamloops-Cariboo constituency, both in Kamloops and Quesnel, where we had further discussions about this problem, so I have been doing a great deal of thinking about it. I have not been able to resolve the problem to the satisfaction of either the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo or the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

We were concerned about persuading more people to stay on the land and produce food. We recognized the difficulty in respect of a family farm in the current economic structure, and we eliminated the capital gains tax on the transformation of a family farm from one generation to another as long as the land remains in agricultural use. The difficulty is that since the land is so illiquid, the payment of capital gains tax on the value of the land is very difficult, particularly in those areas of the country where there might be an artificial effect as a result of suburban sprawl. In this event the land is drawn out of agricultural production because the children cannot raise the money to pay the tax on the death of the father or mother, and it is the land, that is liquidated.

In the case of an incorporated farm there is not that type of liquidity because the shares, by reason of estate planning, can be transmitted over a period of time within the lifetime of the father and mother, and the same problem of liquidity does not arise.

There is also the fact that it is very difficult to ascertain whether the incorporated farm or the corporation to which the farm has been sold, or which holds the farm, does not also on behalf of the shareholders hold other property, shares, investments, other businesses and so on. From an administrative point of view trying to segregate the holdings of the corporation, the farm, from the other assets, would be extremely difficult indeed. On the question raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, there is very little logic in segregating the incorporated family farm as a business from any other incorporated business in the country—of which there are hundreds of thousands—so that in fairness, if one were to allow capital gains, free transmission from one generation to another in an incorporated family farm, there would be little argument for resisting that transmission on a tax free basis from one generation to another in any incorporated family business.

I have not been able to overcome those problems, and when the hon. gentleman mentions small business, I might say that we did try to accommodate small business in the last budget by increasing cash flow available to small businessmen incorporated in this country by raising the limit from $50,000 to $100,000 against which the 20 per cent or 25 per cent rate applies. I say those two different rates because it would be 20 per cent in the case of a manufacturer or processor, and it would be 25 per cent in the case of any other small business, and would raise the accumulated surplus against which those lower rates could apply from $400,000 to $500,000. That means an increase in cash flow for every small incorporated small business in this country of $11,500 per year.

I am conscious of the problem the hon. gentleman brings to me, but I have not been able to surmount the hurdles I have just described to him.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to raise the last point again about this so-called small family business. The minister raised the point of the similarity between that and the small family incorporated farm. Why not treat them both the same? Is there anything wrong with giving the same option to the small family farm and non agricultural business below certain levels?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Broadview said it would never end. I was thinking the same when I heard him and his colleagues earlier this evening. I do not want to tempt the hon. gentleman at all. I say that in a spirit of good humour which we all share at 8.45 p.m.

The revenue consequences would be too extreme for fiscal absorption at this stage. Again, it is getting very hard to segregate the holdings of those incorporated entities as between the farm, the farmland, the principal farm residence and other investments which are held by that corporation. I have not been able to overcome those difficulties. I have not closed my mind to the suggestion, but there is nothing I feel I can do to respond affirmatively to the hon. gentleman at this stage.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the minister has not closed his mind to this, would he be willing to stand this particular clause for an interval in order to give us an opportunity perhaps to help him come to a conclusion?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Since I have been thinking about it for a year, Mr. Chairman, I feel that all I can do at the moment is advise the hon. gentleman that I do not have a remedy for him, and the standing of the clause would not improve the situation.

Mr. Towers: I think that if the Minister of Finance does not resolve this problem it will be with him to haunt him for the rest of his days because he promised to do this when the capital gains tax was first introduced. At that point in time he said that he would go along with it and try to resolve the problem. The question that I have for the minister is whether there is any plan of indexing capital gains for the first time turnover of the family farm as there is in the first time turnover of a home.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I want to add a few words to what the hon. member for Medicine Hat has said, but first I would like to congratulate him for raising this point and also the minister for taking the time to speak to people actually in this predicament. I am going to come at it from a different way in the hope that I can add enough weight to the concern the minister is showing in this problem so that he will make some serious efforts to make the adjustment we all know is fair and equitable.

Ever since I have been around here we have received this same answer from ministers of finance that nothing of this nature can be done for the family farm because immediately the same privilege would have to be given to those in small businesses. I would like to relate to the minister what I think is the most terrifying experience a rural member can have these days, and that is to go visiting the farms of this country and to talk with the woman of the house. Perhaps I could add something new to the arguments the minister could use with his officials who hold adamantly to the idea that nothing can be done.

This is the year of women. I see these buttons on the lapels of some hon. members asking: "Why not?" I am asking the Minister of Finance why not? This is what I find when I go to a farm home today. Because of the shortage of labour, whether the farm is in the east or the west, farmers cannot get people to work on farms. The only way they can keep their operation going with the type of expensive equipment they have to obtain is to find someone who is responsible to look after that expensive equipment and the only person the farmer can turn to is his wife.

Particularly at this time of year when farmers are filling out their income tax forms, it is more than the ordinary risk a politician should have to take to go into these farm homes, because the wife is just fuming. She has a long list of the hours she has spent driving the truck, running the grain loader, operating the tractor, running the combines, loading grain into the bins. She has a list of hours that would make a hired man in my day envious at having such a claim to send in to the boss.

The farmer's wife sits there and watches her husband go through this detailed business of filling out his income tax form, and she cannot even claim for the wages she has earned the hard way, in addition to doing the ordinary chores expected from the distaff side in looking after the family, the house and so on.

The husband sits there with his shoulders hunched in mortal terror, like the politician who is visiting, fearing that the wife will go beyond the bounds of sanity and really let loose. When I sit there and try to explain that the advisers to the Minister of Finance keep saying that it will cost the treasury a lot of money if we give this to farm families because they might have to give it to small businesses as well, it will not wash.

This is the problem the rural politician has in this situation. It is not the revolution of women's liberation in the cities that terrifies the politician; it is the deep anger of a woman who has worked 3,000 or 4,000 hours in a year and cannot even collect the wages she should be getting.

● (2050)

The lawyers get on television and hold out to these farm families the promise that, if they incorporate, then the woman or the children who work on the farm can be paid. Of course this can be done for a small legal fee. They are told that if they incorporate they pay lower taxes on the first $100,000 and pay their legitimate labour fees on the farm. But if they pass the farm on to the next generation they lose the tax free provision in this section.

The minister lives in a city riding where it is pretty hard for a husband to find 2,000 or 3,000 hours of hard labour for his wife to perform during the year. Some of us, however, have to go out and meet those ladies on the farm, when they are tired and worn out, and give them the explanation the minister has given us tonight. I think that is more than a politician should have to do. It is putting him at a level of danger that an ordinary mortal should not have to face.

I suppose I should be speaking more solemnly, Mr. Chairman, but I am simply saying to the minister that equity demands that we tackle this program. I talk to the wives of small businessmen in our towns who work long hours with their husbands, and then they get hit with this at income tax time. The younger people are all leaving for the towns and cities today. In this House we have the hypocrisy to stand up and pay great obeisance to the ladies. This is their year, yet we will not even make a simple amendment to let them have the advantages of incorporation without losing the advantage of being able to pass the farm or store on to the next generation.

I do not think the excuses we are getting from the Minister of Finance make sense; they threaten the survival of those of us who come from rural ridings. He is condemning us to a fate that is so awful that most of us do not dare face it.

I know the minister cannot change this in a short time, but I hope that if he brings in another budget, in this year of the women, he will make this amendment. If not, there are going to be a lot of casualties among rural members of parliament of all parties. These women do not think we are doing our job here when we cannot persuade the minister to accept a simple amendment. It could be done if the minister would just take the initiative. It would not be too difficult to put down the conditions that would prevent the provision from being abused in the area of small business. I would like to see us maintain the family businesses in our country, and also the family farms. We are going to need all the production of these people in Canada and the world, and I would like to see the House override the objections raised by the minister and insist on this amendment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think the committee ought to recall that the only exception to tax free transmission of property from one generation to another is the one I introduced in the previous budget for the family farm. The hon. member is not going to catch me up on emotion on that situation. We brought it in because of the importance of the family farm and the partnership between man and woman on the farm.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat is trying to suggest to the committee that we should extend that exception to incorporated family farms. I am saying to the committee that we cannot do that without extending it to every incorporated family business, and that I am not in a position to do.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain calls me a city slicker because he feels I represent a city riding. He knows this town pretty well, and he still canoes on the Rideau river between my riding and that of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. He knows there are a lot of good beef and dairy farmers in Cumberland and Gloucester townships. I want to assure the hon. member that the women of those townships are very well adjusted, liberated and fulfilled!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, all I can say to the minister's last remark is that I am not responsible for them being fulfilled.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am simply pointing out in flat contradiction to what he said, that if he cannot do this for the family farm without doing it for small business then he should do it for both. If he does not do it for both it is not morally equitable, and I do not think we have the right to stand up and brag that we are doing justice to women in this year 1975.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am curious about why the minister says so definitively that he cannot do it unless he does it for the small businessman as well. Is there any particular reason why this cannot be defined to apply to a small business farm?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is because it is not the definition of the corporation that counts, it is what the corporation can hold. Once the corporation is incorporated there is no limit on what it can hold.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister agree that the draftsmen of income tax legislation are usually adroit enough to define what is the main business of the corporation? If the main business is farming according to the definition, then you have a family farm situation and you go ahead and include them in the provision. I think the minister has drawn a red herring across the situation when he says we have to go the whole way or not at all. It is possible to draft a provision that would apply to an incorporated farming business without any suggestion it should apply to all personal small businesses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the difficulty is not just the mechanical problem, it is the equitable problem. I can distinguish, and I think members of the committee can, between an unincorporated farm and another kind of business because of the illiquidity of land—the difficulty of mustering the money to pay succession duties, and now capital gains tax on land. I cannot draw that distinction between an incorporated family farm and an incorporated ordinary business because the shares are not illiquid and they can, in any family planning situation, be transmitted over the course of a lifetime of the owners of those shares. That is the difficulty. Once you attempt to incorporate the family farm there is no logical reason why the same tax free transmission should not be granted to any family business. That is the problem as I put it to the committee.

Mr. Stevens: I take it the minister agrees that from a drafting standpoint and legal standpoint it could be done, but he just feels that in equity it should not be done.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In equity it is difficult to justify without going further. In terms of drafting it is difficult because you have to provide for some limitation on the holdings of the corporation. From an administrative point of view that would be very difficult to enforce.

Clause 38, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 39 to 42 inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to have clause 43 carry but I want to introduce a new clause 43.1 which I will explain.

Clause 43 agreed to.

● (2100)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to circulate an amendment I intend to propose. I have not given it to the committee. It is a technical amendment to paragraphs 18(1) (m) and 12(1) (o) of the act, and is intended to clarify the application of the provisions in this bill concerning resource royalties and resource taxes levied by government.

As part of the provisions affecting the petroleum and mining industries, this bill provides that government levies such as royalties and resource taxes would not be recognized as a deduction in computing the income of the taxpayer. It has become evident, however, that the French wording is not sufficiently clear to cover cases where one taxpayer reimburses another for such government charges. If, in such cases, the relief or levy is clearly being borne by the taxpayer who is making the reimbursement, the government will make it clear that this taxpayer's income is adjusted.

The taxpayer being reimbursed—usually a freeholder—will be put in the position as if he had neither received nor made a disbursement with respect to the royalties or mineral taxes for which he was reimbursed. In this way it is clear that the owner of the freehold land who happens to pay a province an annual payment for that land which is leased to an oil company or resource company will not be penalized. If the oil company or resource company pays him rent for the use of that land, this provision will cover the tax which he would otherwise have to pay to the government. Unless we make it clear that the non-deductibility provision does not apply to the owner of the freehold land but applies to the oil company or the resource company which is using the land, the wrong person will wind up paying the tax. There are hundreds of owners of freehold land in western Canada who have leased out their land to oil companies, independents and otherwise, and they would be caught unless we bring in this amendment. It is clearly our intention, if the committee will entertain the amendment, to have it stood with the rest of the resource clauses until they can be dealt with. May I put the amendment to the committee. I move:

That Bill C-49 be amended by adding immediately after line 20 on page 95 the following clause:

'43.1 (1) The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

Reimbursement by taxpayer for payment to Crown deemed paid direct to Crown

"80.2 Where pursuant to a contract between a taxpayer and another person (in this section referred to as the "payee") any amount is paid or payable by the taxpayer or any property is transferred by the taxpayer to the payee as reimbursement in respect of any amount paid or payable referred to in paragraph 18(1)(m) or the fair market value of any property paid or payable referred to in that paragraph by the payee to any of the persons referred to in any of subparagraphs 18(1)(m)(i) to (iii), for the purposes of this Act the following rules apply

(a) the taxpayer shall be deemed to have paid the amount or property, as the case may be, to a person or persons referred to in any of those subparagraphs,

(b) the payee shall, to the extent of that reimbursement, be deemed not to have paid an amount or property, as the case may be,

(c) the payee shall be deemed not to have received any reimbursement from the taxpayer, and

(d) paragraph 12(1)(o) shall not apply in respect of the amount or property paid or payable, as the case may be."

(2) This section is applicable in respect of amounts or property paid or payable on or after May 6, 1974.'

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as the committee has not seen the amendment, perhaps we could stand the entire clause as well as the amendment.

The Chairman: Order, please. I understand clause 43 has been carried, and the amendment just put will introduce new clause 43.1. The amendment does not amend clause 43. It introduces new clause 43.1.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I understand clause 43 carried, and I propose that new clause 43.1 should stand.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand new clause 43.1?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 43.1 stood.

Clauses 44 to 46 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 47.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I intend to move a technical amendment to clause 47, found on pages 98 and 99 of the bill. I move:

That clause 47 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 31 to 33 on page 98 and substituting the following:

"tion and,

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Now that the minister has given us the amendment in ordinary layman's language, would he like to put it into legal language for us?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please. Before doing that, the amendment should be put to the committee.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, we would like to see this amendment stand.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Paproski: It has consideration for resource property disposition. We would like to make a little further study on it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I understand what the hon. member for Edmonton Centre is saying. I wonder whether he would allow the amendment to carry and just stand the clause.

Mr. Paproski: That is fine, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 52, as amended, be stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 52, as amended, stood.

On clause 53.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we have a series of technical amendments to clause 53. The page numbers are 129, 130, 131, 132, 136 and 140. I move:

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I consider all these amendments to Bill C-49 extremely important. I understand that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is particularly familiar with the provisions which concern taxation since his role consists in ensuring that money is coming in to finance government expenses.

With all due respect, I would like to suggest that the amendments be read more slowly so that we may follow them very closely. I make this suggestion with all due respect so that we may really follow tonight's procedure.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I understand the hon. member and I sympathize with him. I distributed all the amendments about two weeks ago so that the committee could examine them. However, I shall try to read carefully and clearly, and the hon. member could perhaps ask the Chair for a series of copies of these amendments. I see that you have them.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 53, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 54.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have one more amendment to this part of the bill, after which there are no amendments for a while. Perhaps the committee would turn to page 142 the bill. These are relieving provisions. I move:

[The Chairman.]

That clause 54 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out line 24 on page 142 and substituting the following:

"tion that has, before November 19, 1974, become"

(b) by striking out lines 30 to 34 on page 142 and substituting the following:

"at any time after November 18, 1974 shall be"

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 54, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 55.

Mr. Stevens: I think the Minister of Finance might help the committee by giving us some explanation of clauses 55 and 56, which I believe are related. In particular I would be interested to know what he feels would be the revenue implications.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We do not have the revenue figures. The purpose of the amendment is to allow Canadian parent companies to operate abroad and only be taxable on that part of the income which is brought back into the country or not used in the legitimate business of a subsidiary. Revenue is very difficult to estimate since it depends on economic activities in the various countries in which the companies operate.

Clause 55, agreed to.

Clauses 56 to 68 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 69.

Mr. Brisco: I should like to ask the minister for clarification of this clause—I do not altogether follow the complexities of the tax structure. What is the deduction for which provision is made in paragraph 1 of Clause 69? Is it in the amount of $1,000, or is it more than that figure? It has to do with deductions for handicapped people.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This includes as a deductible expense amounts paid in respect of an individual, the taxpayer, his spouse, or a dependant, to a school, institution or other place equipped to provide training to persons who are handicapped. At present, the subparagraph restricts the deduction to amounts paid to a school or institution which takes only persons so handicapped. It is now being extended so as to apply to any school which may, among other things, deal with handicapped people.

The Chairman: Shall clause 69 carry?

Mr. Stevens: I believe it is the intention that we should turn to other business at 9.30. We have some comments to make on clause 69 and I see it is now 9.30.

Clause 69 stood.

The Chairman: Then pursuant to the order made earlier this day I request leave to rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE AUTHORITY TO MINISTER TO ACQUIRE CERTAIN COST INFORMATION FROM COMPANIES

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-48, an act to amend the Railway Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

● (2130)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the disclosure of railway cost information on a confidential basis from the federal government to the provincial governments. While this legislation was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, it is not restricted only to the western provinces but applies to all provinces.

The railways had not in the past been required to disclose information on their cost of operation unless the Canadian Transport Commission held that this disclosure was in the public interest. This left the provinces without the necessary information for the formulation of all policies.

To date, considerable cost data has been made available to the federal-provincial Committee on western transport for its major studies. As well, where certain cost data have been requested by the provinces for policy formulation purposes, the federal government has arranged to provide this information through the Canadian Transport Commission. Western ministers have nevertheless pressed to have provisions for disclosure of cost information included in the Railway Act. The prime purpose of the legislation is to ensure that the federal government will be able to continue to fulfill its commitments in this regard to the provinces.

I should add that this proposed legislation is an interim measure pending the introduction of a transportation information act which will take in the whole transportation system and all modes.

Let us look now at the four new sections to be added to the Railway Act.

331.1 This section implements the undertaking of the Prime Minister given at WEOC for disclosure of information on railway costs to a province on a confidential basis. For this purpose the information on costs is defined as costs of "transportation services and operations" or "costs of a specified movement of a specified commodity", for example, a car load of cattle from Edmonton to Montreal.

Railway Act

331.2 This section provides that the minister for his own use can request information on costs of any kind from a railway company. This provision does not arise from the WEOC commitment.

331.3 This section provides that information on costs cannot be communicated to or published by any person, except that such information can be communicated to ministers of the Crown—federal or provincial—or public servants—federal or provincial—required by their duties to receive this information.

Subsection 3 provides that information on costs furnished to a provincial government or the minister under this act that is relevant to a proceeding under specified acts may be published or communicated by the province or the minister. This subsection implements the second principal undertaking on railway costs given at WEOC.

331.4 This section ensures compliance by a railway company with a request from the minister. If a railway company does not comply, the minister can use the powers available to him under section 82 of the National Transportation Act.

Section 82 of the act provides in part that the minister has the power to summon witnesses, enforce their attendance and compel them to give evidence and produce books, papers or things that are required to be produced, as is vested in any court in civil cases.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the gist of our proposed legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what we want to do actually by the proposed amendment to the Railway Act is to be able to get all information pertaining to freight rates and their justification when requested by the provinces or the Department of Transport. I think that is what not only the western provinces but the others as well have been requesting for a very long time.

We want to know. That would be done on a confidential basis for a very simple reason: I think that from the moment you accept competition between railway transport, shipping, trucking, and air transport there is a need to know exactly what the cost is to be able to compare and make sure that Canadians really get a fair deal with all those with whom they must deal.

So, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill before us is very limited. There will be another later on, a general one, dealing with not only the whole cost but all forms of transportation. For the time being we want to know what it costs. The western provinces want to know what it costs to move commodities from one place to another and, presumably, the other provinces also want the same information. That is the purpose of Bill C-48 now before the House.

[English]

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that I will not take up too much time of the House this evening because I understand that there are three more speakers. It would be tempting, after listening to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) speak, to get into all the areas of past inequities in eastern or western Canada pertaining to the whole aspect of freight rates, etc. I will not do that tonight because hopefully we will have time to scrutinize this particular piece of legislation at committee stage, and again on third reading.

● (2140)

The western provinces, in fact all the provinces, have waited for some action from the government for a very long time. The minister mentioned the Western Economic Opportunities Conference held two years ago. When you view this particular piece of legislation I think it is apparent that it is a very small band-aid in the government's total approach to transportation, and because it is a small band-aid approach it is apparent that the transportation policy of the government is clearly in a mess. I think that that really goes without saying.

In speaking to Bill C-48, the primary intent of the amendments is to provide the Minister of Transport with the power to obtain costing data from the railways at the request of the provinces. This legislation is apparently one step toward the implementation of a more comprehensive transportation information act as was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne on September 30, 1974.

To give a little bit of background, which the minister really did not delve into, the request for railway cost disclosures originated from a transportation paper presented by the four prairie provinces at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in July, 1973, nearly two years ago, yet the minister comes into the House tonight and says he is still planning to do something in the area of transportation.

In response to this request, at the time the minister stated:

> We agree fully with the provincial position that this is desirable, and if it cannot be achieved under the existing act, which we believe it can, we are prepared to amend the act.

This is one of the very few times I have been able to ascertain in the minister's political career that he was correct in a statement. There is little doubt in my mind, on looking into the various aspects of the National Transportation Act, that the power to obtain information from the railways re costing data exists under both the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act if the government wants to use that power.

Dealing with the Railway Act, I intend to refer to specific sections because I think they are important, and I hope hon. members will bear with me. It is important that we look at the National Transportation Act in its total context, especially those sections which pertain to the bill we are discussing now and will be debating in the committee.

In looking at sections 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, and 330 of the Railway Act we find they clearly outline the specifics of information to be submitted to the commission by the railways on an annual basis. Furthermore, if we look at section 328 we find it gives to the commission the power to dictate to the railways the accounting procedures and classifications which must be used uniformly by all railways under the legislative authority of parliament.

If we look at section 331 we find it states that the commission, once in receipt of this costing information, may at its own discretion, dependant on the public interest, publish that information.

[Mr. Murta.]

Furthermore, if we look at section 335 we see that it indicates that the commission may require returns from the railways at any given time, and specifies the type of information it may request. If we look at section 335(3) we find it states that this information shall not be made public, but section 335(4) requires that the information may be communicated to the Governor in Council, in other words, the cabinet.

Furthermore, section 335(5) states that the commission may make public the information when there are "good and sufficient" reasons for doing so, but it cannot publish the information unless the company is notified and its objection is heard.

The purpose of outlining these sections of already existing legislation is primarily to illustrate that this piece of legislation before us is not needed at the present time if the government wants to use the existing legislation at its disposal. Bill C-48 will be, if anything, more restrictive than the present statutes.

Under the Railway Act the Canadian Transport Commission and the Governor in Council are given a very broad range of powers concerning railway costing data. The Canadian Transport Commission has the right to publish this information in the public interest, consequently the provinces do have the right to examine the costing data under existing legislation.

The provisions of Bill C-48 specify that the minister, upon the request of a provincial government may—and there is the use of the word may again—in writing request the railway companies to furnish him with information relating to costs "in such manner and to such extent as he may specify".

Furthermore, upon receiving the information the minister may—note once again—release the information to the provincial government if that government has undertaken to treat the information as confidential. This amendment, as far as we are concerned, serves to restrict the dispersion of the material solely to the provincial governments which must, in turn, agree to treat the information as confidential. Consequently the restrictive nature of these provisions in Bill C-48 is clearly illustrated.

We think that this entire piece of legislation is what could politely be called a political farce. The powers accorded the minister under Bill C-48 are powers which already exist at the request of the Canadian Transport Commission and the Governor in Council, if they wish to use them. This fact is openly admitted in section 331.4(2) where it states that if the railway refuses to comply with the request of the minister he can then revert to section 82 of the National Transportation Act as a contingency measure.

We also believe that the bill appears to erode from the Canadian Transport Commission some of its duly appointed powers, and proceeds to place these powers in the hands of the Minister of Transport whose past performance, as far as the assertion of power is concerned, leaves much to be desired, and is at times shameful.

We feel what can be termed the wresting of power from the Canadian Transport Commission is indicative of the persistent authoritative struggles between the ministry and the commission over the past few years. In some cases the commission, being the legally established regulatory transportation body, should necessarily have control over railway costing data, simply because it has the authority to control the rate of every mode of transportation in this country. It would appear that the minister has now deemed it politically expedient, and I would say that is the only reason this legislation is before us, to assume this control, especially where western Canada is concerned.

The operational validity of the entire ministry of transport must, at the present time, be subject to the most severe criticism and skepticism. The minister has publicly admitted that the system is in a mess. He said this as early as March, 1974, nearly a year ago. We have a situation where an 18 month freight rate freeze, which was a gesture, to use the minister's own words, and which was initiated to allow for the creation of a time frame within which a more equitable policy could be formulated, now ends without a policy or any indication of one in the near future.

I do not think anyone in this country believes the Minister of Transport when he says there will be a transportation policy in the near future. We have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) intervening in a legal and lawful decision taken by the Canadian Transport Commission in the public interest, and negating the effects of that decision. We also have the Minister of Justice making statements contradictory to those made by the Minister of Transport over the Crowsnest Pass freight rates.

We have seen situations where the president of the Canadian Transport Commission and the minister have persistently passed the buck over who has authority over what. We have witnessed the creation of numerous pilotage authorities which are allowed to operate completely autonomously from the minister, or from any control the minister has over them. We apparently have a situation, according to the minister himself, where the railways, and I am quoting the minister:

> ... when these companies consider they are making no money by investing in cars they do not build any.

The minister said that on March 21, 1974, as recorded at page 737 of Hansard. The railways are thus hindering our grain transportation efficiency as well as Canada's international reputation as a grain supplier. The Canadian railway system is plagued with inefficiencies which the minister claims are beyond his control. For example, a situation exists where the number of derailments escalates every year, and still nothing is done, no leadership is given, and no positive action is taken. There is a persistent boxcar shortage, and under the Canadian Transport Commission Railway maintenance is negligible, to say the least.

The minister claims once again that these matters are beyond his control, yet the president of the Canadian Transport Commission contends that the minister does have the legal authority to order the railways to improve their services.

Section 100(1) of the Railway Act provides that whenever the minister is aware that a railway company, which has received construction subsidies out of public funds, cannot be safely and efficiently operated, he may apply to the commission for an order that the railway and its equipment, or both, shall be put in a safe and efficient condition. The commission is authorized to make such an order, and the order may direct what repairs, improvements or additions shall be made to the railway, equipment, or both, and stipulate time limits for commencement and completion.

The use of the word may in the subsection indicates that the minister has the discretion as to whether he makes an application. The minister repeatedly says that he does not have that discretion, so one can only draw from that the conclusion that he is still passing the buck, and that he is still either not interested or does not understand the significance of transportation in Canada.

However, as a minister of the crown representing the public interest—as opposed to private interests—and as a trustee of the subsidy interest of the public in the railway, his discretion must be exercised in the public interest. The application of the minister, when made, must be in a mandatory form, that is, that the railway must be put in a safe and efficient condition, if the minister truly wants that to happen. This power vested in the minister under the Railway Act is confirmed by section 48 of the National Transportation Act.

Again, Mr. Speaker, section 50 of the National Transportation Act authorizes the Governor in Council—presumably on the recommendation of the minister—to refer to the Canadian Transport Commission for action anything required to be done under the Railway Act, and the commission shall, without delay, comply with the requirements of such reference. Yet the minister has made no move towards utilizing the authority accorded him, and if one looked at the various sections of the act, which I have quoted, the sections provide the government with the power to go ahead and move toward solving many of the problems we have in transportation. This is especially true of the small piece of legislation that is before us, which is a political farce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: If this is the case, the implication of the provisions of this bill and the persistent use of the word may, which implies that the minister has a discretion, are such that they will render the legislation ineffective and useless. For this reason we intend to amend the legislation to ensure that its enforcement will reflect the public interest.

It has been nearly a full year, give or take a month, since the minister first admitted that the system is a mess, yet absolutely nothing has been done. His speech tonight indicates that probably nothing will be done. The election promises the government made in the 1974 election were just promises. Commitments made at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference have disappeared in the midst of struggles within the department and politically motivated statements from the Minister of Transport from time to time, not to mention the kind of performance we have seen by the minister of transport here in the House of Commons.

At this point in time one can only reflect that the government based its mandate in the last federal election on the aspect of leadership, and on May 17, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) opened his campaign in Toronto by stating, and I quote him "The issue is not this or that or the next problem. The issue is what group of men and what party can give the leadership to the country to solve its problems." At the present time that quotation must have a very hollow ring even for the government backbenchers. There has not been leadership in the transportation area, to be specific, nor has there even been a passing interest in transportation from the Minister of Transport himself.

I would like to close by saying that it can only be hoped that part of our transportation problem will be solved by the replacement of the Minister of Transport at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, many people in many parts of the country have been waiting many years for something to happen to our freight rate structure, in fact for as long as 40 or 50 years for parliament to act in this regard. I was hoping that the government would have deemed this important enough that we could have dealt with it a little earlier tonight, but there was agreement to do so at this time and I must abide by that.

I want to say that legislation has been promised by the government and by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) for almost two years. The bill proposes a new section of the Railway Act empowering the minister to require the railways to furnish specified cost information, either at his request or at the request of the provinces, and to release such information to those provinces. As the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) said, such information will be kept confidential. The first question I want to raise with the minister and with hon. members is why the necessity for confidentiality. There is no need for it, particularly where there is no competition. There is very little need for it even wherever there is some small semblance of competition in transportation. The minister himself has said that competition in transportation in Canada does not work.

I agree with the hon. member for Lisgar, and I hope that the minister will do this himself without our having to try to amend the bill so that it will read that the minister shall, not the minister may. I am sure the minister would want to amend his legislation to that effect.

● (2200)

I have a lot of quotations from speeches of the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but I will be lenient on hon. members tonight, Madam Speaker, and not quote them all. I want to quote some of them, however, to illustrate what I believe to be the case, that the Minister of Transport does not have the support of his colleagues in caucus and in cabinet for what he would like to do for transportation in Canada. One only has to notice the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board run from one end of the country to the other, making announcements about Crowsnest pass rates, freight rate freezes, branch line abandonments and other areas of transportation that are the prerogative of the Minister of Transport, to see how he is being undermined by his colleagues.

This bill is only a small beginning regarding the disclosure of costs. The minister promised a new transportation information act prior to the election, and the Prime Minister promised it during the election. If, and when, we get it we will want an extension of the disclosure provision to cover all federally regulated modes of transportation. We will press for a full disclosure, not only to provincial governments but to the public, where massive public subsidies are involved. Every mode of transportation in this country gets massive subsidies. The railway subsidies show up clearly, but the greater subsidies to highways, trucks and airlines do not show up as readily. There is no real competition in most areas of transportation in Canada, and so there is not the excuse of confidentiality. The public has a right to know, and this parliament has a right to know.

It is not sufficient for the railroads just to disclose their costs. I, for one, do not believe their figures, and the minister, the provinces and this parliament need to be satisfied that their costs are not padded. If the minister does not have the authority to investigate the railways' claim of their costs of freight rates and branch lines, etcetera, then I hope that he will ask for that authority by amending this legislation.

The hon. member for Lisgar said that he thought this bill was a farce because the government already had the power it sought. Certainly in certain circumstances it does, but I think it is significant that the provinces still want this disclosure legislation. That indicates to me that they do not believe the figures that are being given. I have only to quote the Premier of Alberta on this. The premiers of other western provinces agreed with him, and I am sure the premiers of the Atlantic provinces would agree as well. In March, 1973, Premier Lougheed said:

> We call here and now for the federal government to order both national railways to provide every aspect of their costs to interested provincial governments.

The fact that the provincial governments want this legislation indicates to me their lack of trust in the railroads' figures. The four western premiers pressed their demand further in July, 1973, and secured a commitment from the federal government to get information on railway costs. In November, 1973, in this House the minister said:

> We made a commitment in the west to the effect that the provinces would be informed as to all details of the railway rate structures.

Since he himself has said "we"—meaning the government—made a commitment, I ask why they have the word may in the legislation instead of shall. Later in November, 1973, the minister said:

> ... the commitment we made was to have the CTC and the railway companies give the information—on costs—at the request of the provinces. The provinces have made a number of specific requests and information with respect to them will be furnished ...

Perhaps the minister will tell us when we get to committee whether these requests have been complied with fully. I should also like to know what information the provinces asked for that they still have not received. The fact of the matter is that the provinces want all the information there is, not only on freight rates but on the cost of operating branch lines and so on. That commitment, made by the minister and the Prime Minister, applies to everything.

This has been a thorn in the side of the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces ever since the CPR was built. The anomalies of freight rates—or what I call the absurdities of freight rates—have been a thorn in the side of the western provinces for decades. This is somewhat of an occasion this evening. We are finally dealing with this matter—we finally have an opportunity to request our transportation industry to be honest and open with the parliament of Canada, the Minister of Transport, the provinces, and the people of Canada.

Any attempt to rationalize a freight rate structure and remove inequities cannot succeed without full and complete cost data. The lack of progress to date in the federal-provincial committee has been primarily because of the refusal of the railways to supply the information requested. Let me give an example.

An independent study done in Ontario by R. L. Banks and Associates, Inc. was commissioned by the Ontario government, and the report was released in November, 1973. It estimated that the cost of moving coal by rail from Alberta to Ontario was between $5.49 and $6.08 per ton. But the CNR and the CPR were requesting a rate of $9.50 per ton.

In view of the importance of exploring relative economic efficiencies of alternative energy sources, the provincial governments of both Alberta and Ontario demanded information on the railways' cost structure and the rationale for what was obviously an excessive rate—something over $3 per ton in excess of what was a reasonable cost. In my book cost includes a reasonable return on investment.

Let us consider subsidies. Each year the two national railways receive hundreds of millions of dollars in government subsidies to cover operating losses on branch lines, or for what they claim are operating losses based on their figures and costs. Allegedly, these subsidies cover uneconomic passenger service. Even the CTC, which you can hardly call the friend of the Canadian public, has disallowed something like 20 per cent of the alleged costs claimed by the railroads for their transcontinental passenger services.

The 1974-75 estimates include payments to the railways of $140 million. Of this sum, the subsidy for rail passenger service was $100 million, and for branch line service, $40 million. Without full and complete costing information the public and the government have no means of knowing whether and to what extent subsidy payments are justified. The parliament of Canada has no alternative except to accept the word of the railways as being given in good faith.

From my experience with railroads, both when I was with them and agin' them, I know that I cannot accept their figures in good faith. We have known too many years of bitter experience with our transportation companies, and I will not accept their costing figures as being given in good faith. Yet the government will part with $140 million, without knowing actual costs. That is what I call parting easily with public money.

Let me say for the benefit of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), who I am sure agrees with me, that if our transportation system were treated, owned and operated as a public utility, if we eliminated nineteenth century concepts of competition and profitability and provided transportation service to meet the needs of Canada, all these figures, all these costs, would always be known to the government, parliament and the people of the country.

To use the words of the Minister of Transport, our transportation system is in a mess. The freight rate freeze was imposed for 18 months and the railways have received or will receive compensation of around $180 million for what they claim to be the losses they incurred as a result of the 18 months' freeze. Madam Speaker, lacking full access to railway costing data, the government must accept, again, company figures at face value.

What will happen when the freight rate freeze is lifted? Our people complain about freight rate inequities—anomalies is the polite word, but absurdities is better. The government will part with $180 million to compensate the railways for alleged losses incurred while their freight rates were frozen; in addition, the lifting of the freeze will mean that these same inequities, anomalies and absurdities will be compounded by 25 per cent as of March 1. I know, Madam Speaker, that you are interested, even if the Postmaster General is busy. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) may be interested.

When you consider existing rates it is small wonder that provinces want costing information, and small wonder that we want it to be made public. Consider the rate for the shipment of iron and steel articles, not punched or drilled or bored. I am not sure if that applies to Liberal members of the House. To ship these articles from Hamilton, Ontario, to Vancouver costs $2.43 per hundred weight. To ship the same articles from Hamilton to Regina, costs $2.63 a hundred weight, or 20 cents more per hundred weight.

Mr. Alexander: Watch it!

Mr. Benjamin: Regina happens to be 1,200 miles closer to Hamilton than Vancouver is. We could even ship members of parliament from Hamilton out at cheaper rates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)!

Mr. Alexander: I am not disagreeing with your figures, but just watch it when you talk about Hamilton.

Mr. Benjamin: The rate to Saskatoon is $2.84. What have the railways against Saskatoon? The distance from Hamilton to Saskatoon is not much greater than the distance to Regina.

Let us talk about agreed charges, the rates arrived at between the railways and various corporations. The Minister of Transport has said that there is not much the government or the CTC can do about agreed charges because they result from contracts between the railways and corporations. Let us see what some of these agreed charges do to western Canada.

The rate for 75,000 pound carload lots of calcium chloride from Niagara Falls and Shawinigan, Quebec, to Vancouver, is $2.63 per hundredweight; the rate to Regina is $3.12 per hundredweight. That is an agreed charge, a charge which the minister cannot touch because it is provided for under a contract. Now you can see why we support a railway costing bill.

I should like the CPR to tell parliament and the Minister of Transport how come they can collect 49 cents per hundredweight more for calcium chloride shipped to Regina, when Vancouver is 1,200 miles farther down the line. Furthermore, the railways need not go up and down all those mountains when shipping to Regina. Yet it costs 49 cents per hundredweight less to ship to Vancouver than to Regina.

Let us look at phosphates and sulphates. There is a fertilizer industry in western Canada. The rate for shipping 100,000 pound carload lots of phosphates and sulphates from Buckingham, Quebec, and Clarkson and Port Maitlan, Ontario, to Vancouver is $2.51 per hundredweight. The rate to Regina is $3.12, and to Saskatoon, $3.29. What have the railways against Saskatoon? What have they against Regina?

Let us see how these agreed charges affect consumers. The rate for 80,000 pound carload lots of corn oil, corn starch, corn sugar and corn syrup from Toronto to Vancouver is $2.20; to Regina, $2.17, which is three cents less than the rate to Vancouver, although Regina is 1,200 miles closer to Toronto, and to Saskatoon, $2.42. The distance from Toronto to Regina is about the same as the distance from Toronto to Saskatoon, give or take 20 or 40 miles of rail line.

Let me continue speaking about agreed charges. No wonder the people of western Canada and of the Atlantic provinces are upset after 90 years of discrimination, and betrayal of confederation by the national railroads; yet these birds opposite fight elections every time on the issue of national unity while they perpetuate discrimination in freight rates which make national unity a myth.

The agreed charge for 100,000 pound carload lots of canned foodstuffs from southern Ontario to Vancouver is $2.57 per hundredweight; to Saskatoon it is $2.75 per hundredweight. Madam Speaker, the Canadian National main line runs through the south side of Saskatoon, yet the rate is 18 cents per hundredweight higher to Saskatoon than it is to Vancouver. Let us look at the rate for packaged foodstuffs, including baking powder, macaroni, spaghetti, margarine, milk or cream substitutes, oils, rice, and other necessities. The rate for 80,000 pound carload lots from southern Ontario to Vancouver is $2.43 per hundredweight; to Regina, it is $2.71 per hundredweight, and Regina is 1,200 miles closer to southern Ontario. To Saskatoon the rate is $2.93 per hundredweight, and Saskatoon is as far from southern Ontario as Regina is. I am enjoying this.

Mr. Murta: I'm not.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope the Minister of Transport is angry about these rates, because then we can do something about them.

● (2220)

Let us look at the open tariffs on which the minister allowed the freeze to be lifted. The minister stated this only affected 22 per cent of the railway rates. That is true.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

However, it affected more than 22 per cent of the commodities the railways haul.

I now wish to deal with the inequities in different regions of Canada. Let us look, for example, at live cattle and dressed beef. There were announcements in Alberta and Saskatchewan of cutbacks and closures of meat packing and meat processing plants. These announcements were made last year as well as from January 1 this year. There is a perfectly good reason.

If I were the owner or operator of a meat packing or processing plant in western Canada, I would close it and build a new plant in Ontario or Montreal. It was bad enough during the freight rate freeze. It cost 91 cents a hundred more to ship a whole dressed beef hanging by its hocks from Saskatoon to Montreal, Ottawa or Toronto than to ship a live cow or steer.

The minister allowed the freeze to be lifted. The railways fought the CTC order in the courts, supported by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). With a friend like that, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) does not need any enemies.

The rate increase was allowed. Instead of the differential being 91 cents a hundred between shipping live cattle and dressed beef from Saskatoon to Montreal, on March 1 the difference will be $1.17 per 100 pounds. I do not believe the railways can prove higher costs to ship dressed beef as compared to live cattle.

If the minister puts the requests properly and in sufficient detail, this railway costing bill will reveal that in the livestock, and meat packing and processing industry in western Canada, the railways have been robbing the people of that area.

For decades these rates have discriminated against the manufacturing industry and meat industry in western Canada without any justification other than "all that the traffic will bear". There is no significant competition. The shibboleth the Liberals and Tories abide by is competition and profitability. They got together and did us in some more.

The Edmonton Journal and the Western Producer of February 3 illustrate that it costs more to move 100 pounds of meat from Edmonton to Toronto than 100 pounds of live animal. After the 30 per cent increase, the differential will be $1.51 per 100 pounds.

The minister has made many statements about inequities and discrimination. We all agreed with them. How can he now sit back and refuse to extend that freeze? These inequities have been compounded. Surely the minister could have said to the railways that even if the freeze only affects 22 per cent of the rates, it will remain in effect until the legislation goes through parliament and the railways' costs have been examined to see whether they are justified. If the minister had done that, he would have done a favour to the packing industry in western Canada.

Burns and Company have been forced to cut their operations in half in Prince Albert because of freight rates. They make no bones about the fact that they would rather be operating with two plants in western Canada instead of five. Why? Because of freight rates.

The Minister of Transport has stated what he thinks our transportation should be in this country, yet he has allowed the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to make statements about transportation, If I were in the position of the Minister of Transport and one of my colleagues did that to me, I would punch him in the mouth.

The minister in charge of the wheat board stated the Crowsnest Pass rates should be reviewed. He made a number of speeches on the Crowsnest Pass agreement. However, in answer to the hon. member for Lisgar, the Minister of Transport assured him he need not worry, that that item is not being reviewed. I would like to know who is correct on this, the Minister of Transport or the minister in charge of the wheat board. Who is calling the shots on this?

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I do not think the Minister of Transport has the support and co-operation of his colleagues in cabinet and caucus. He is almost alone trying to win the battle of transportation, a battle Canadians have been trying to win for the past 90 years. One of the minister's colleagues is trying to cut not only his throat but the throats of all Canadians.

In the throne speech of last September a long section was devoted to transportation. It stated:

Transportation must be an instrument of national purpose, designed to achieve broad social and economic objectives.

That is a beautiful quote. I could not have written it better myself. It continued:

The government does not believe the principles underlying the present transportation system or its methods of management and operation are adequate to meet current and future national aspirations.

Not even the NDP could have put a better line in the throne speech than that. What has happened since? We got a small beginning. I hope the minister will introduce some minor amendments to this bill. Commitments and promises were made by the Prime Minister, the minister, and their predecessors, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was Prime Minister. Most of this is not new. We have had it ad nauseam year in and year out.

I still believe the Minister of Transport is genuinely sincere about this. I am sorry he was not able to bring in this bill sooner. It is very short. There is not much to it. We have been waiting for this bill for 20 months. I can only assume it was not brought in sooner because the minister's colleagues in cabinet and caucus objected. The minister had a great deal of difficulty persuading them to bring this forward, if for no other reason than to honour a commitment made before and since WEOC.

I say to the Minister of Transport that I will support him when it comes to the Crowsnest Pass rates. As far as I am concerned, the minister in charge of the wheat board would have a better chance trying to amend the Ten Commandments than changing the Crowsnest Pass rates.

I have never believed the railroads' claim with regard to their losses in hauling grain. They have never put a figure on those losses. We have never been given the cost to move a bushel of grain from point A to point B, yet we are expected to believe them. I believe that in this field the unit cost of moving grain has been cut in half in the last ten to 15 years. We need this bill to prove that the railways are not losing the kind of money they claim they are losing on the Crowsnest Pass rates. That is why the provinces of western Canada are asking for this information, whether the CTC already has it or not.

I should like to say a word here about rapeseed and rapeseed products. I am not sure what disclosure may do to encourage the government to reach a decision on these items. When one considers the freight rates charged on rapeseed and rapeseed oil one cannot help wonder why it is taking so long to determine this matter.

When the Minister of Transport was asked why the cabinet had not made up its mind on the rapeseed question he said, "That is Otto Lang's baby." Well, it seems to have been an abortion. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board says he is not sure whether anything will be done this year, even though the matter has already been under consideration for a year. According to the Minister of Transport, it is the Minister of Justices' baby, and he cannot get off the hook lightly. I know he has assumed prerogatives which belong to the Minister of Transport, sounding off with policy announcements and making statements he has no right to make. I can only assume he is doing this without the knowledge of the Minister of Transport; I would hate to think the minister agrees with his suggestions.

One rapeseed mill has already been sold because of the delay in reaching a decision. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board says he is not sure whether he can get this matter settled in cabinet before the end of the year. If the Minister of Transport feels the bill before us would help him by giving him more authority, I am all for it. I hope that once he is armed with these powers he will not be in a hurry to review the Crowsnest Pass rates. I urge, too, that there should be no delay in reaching a decision with regard to rapeseed rates. We want information as to the cost not only of moving people and commodities but the cost with regard to the operational portions of the branch lines and particular sections of the main lines, because I do not believe the figures already offered.

I believe the minister should invite experts from outside, from the provinces, to help him in reviewing these costs. I should like him to invite experts from other countries to take a careful look at what the railroads here claim to be their costs. It is my belief that some of those costs are based on trackage which was written off 50 years ago. There are still rails in use which were put down in 1910. I should like to know all these costs. So would the provinces. So would the Minister of Transport. I hope the minister will move a couple of amendments in committee.

We shall deal with the matter quickly because the provinces are ready to make their requests, but in the meantime I trust the government will hold the line with regard to freight rate increases which would further magnify the inequities in the structure. We shall support the legislation, but much more is needed and we hope the government will not be slow in taking action accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, further to the agreement reached today on Bill C-48 by the leaders of the various parties represented in the House, I should like first of all to assure Your Honour and my colleagues that we will respect this agreement and that I shall limit my remarks to the strict minimum.

With regard to the comments of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) broadcast last night with regard to the present disturbing economic situation in Canada, and more particularly in the province of Quebec, which situation will continue to worsen through 1975, we better understand the purpose the government wishes to achieve through Bill C-48.

Still, it is time authority should manifest itself in Canada that the people might be reassured and that order might reign in our country, that the monetary capital might serve the human capital and that those two forms of capital might work together towards the economic development of our country.

Madam Speaker, I often regretted that in our country we have governments that are strong in front of the weak, governments that do not hesitate to smother the weak with taxes of all kinds, that force the little people to respect law and order. On the other hand, we have seen weak governments in front of the strong, governments that in turn are defeated by the big and powerful.

It is high time that taxpayers be in a position to know what it costs in such and such a sector to ensure essential services to the public and that without waste.

I also understood that Bill C-48 is an instrument, a very valuable tool, providing we are willing to use it, put into the hands of a minister, a cabinet, so that the large companies, in this context, the railway companies, respect our country's laws and give accounts.

● (2240)

Year after year, Parliament votes credits to subsidize this transportation system which often operates at a loss without submitting a detailed account of its administration to Parliament. Are the taxpayers' dollars used to the best advantage of all? That is what I have asked myself. Are Canadians receiving reasonable transportation services for their tax dollar?

Now, the purpose of Bill C-48 was to disclose the profits and expenditures of the CNR for the whole country, and not only for one part, be it Eastern or Western Canada. Formerly, Madam Chairman, expenditures and revenues were not disclosed to the public. This bill will make the rendering of accounts and the disclosure of expenses and revenues to the public in general mandatory, so that they may have a clear view of this situation and that they might receive proportional return for their contribution to the maintenance of these public services.

The provinces rightly requested information from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the federal cabinet, through the Canadian Transport Commission. The CTC, with all respect due the commissioners, has not always clearly met the taxpayers' demands. We have here another high-minded commission flying way above the people's representatives and ministers, not giving a heck about anybody, making decisions as they see fit without answering to Parliament for their administration. I hope under this bill we will at least have reports and see exactly what goes on in the field of transportation. As the Minister of Transport aptly said, clause 331.1 only requires companies to give what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) already mentioned at a western provinces' conference. If through an act of Parliament the wish expressed by the Prime Minister of our country is translated into action, we will be in a position to say one conference at least gave results and the Canadian taxpayers can be proud of it.

Public information on railway costs has long been overdue, whether from CN or CP. We are entitled to know exactly what we pay for. Whether the cost is too high or too low is for the taxpayer to tell, when the figures are published.

Clause 331.2 provides the minister may require and publish cost information. I support this. For once we perceive the government has the strength and courage to require public information from these big corporations. For this reason, I wholeheartedly support Bill C-48 introduced by the government, and feel convinced my colleagues will surely follow suit when they have had an opportunity to get more detailed knowledge of it.

In section 331.3, according to what the minister said a while ago, we are advised that it will not be possible to publish cost information until it is released to all the Ministers of Transport, both federal and provincial. But it is quite normal that the companies operating under national or provincial legislations should report to the government, to the minister responsible for their respective operations, before having their reports made public, so that the minister may check the information, and get to the bottom of things, as the President of France, the great General de Gaulle, used to say. He has given the world a piece of advice we should never forget. We, as members of Parliament, should be inspired by it: to get to the bottom of things. We should closely check on whatever happens in any given area without acting silly. When we are asked to give information, we should be able to give it out.

I think that, under section 331, the minister will at least have the satisfaction of being able to get the required information and then to pass it on to the public. I think this is the way it should be. I know this is not the second reading debate and that it should not be a clause by clause discussion of the bill, but in this I take example after the Minister of Transport who just explained the fundamentals of this bill. He said its purpose was to make sure the demands of the minister would be obeyed by the railways; through this bill the minister will have the power to make investigations, call witnesses to clear up the issue. Madam Speaker, if there is a minister with enough courage to present such a bill and insist that all this transport issue be fully aired, then I will gladly and vigourously endorse such a bill, if for no other reason than to shed light on the subject.

Finally, whenever provinces request it, the minister wants to have information on the transportation costs in both western and eastern Canada, in order to compare railway costs to those for water, air, or land transportation.

God knows, Madam Speaker, how many discussions have taken place over the last few years over the issue of feed grain transportation from Western to Eastern Canada. The Eastern farmers were asked to believe that if to get the same grade of feed grains they had to pay higher prices than the Western farmers, it was because of transportation costs from the West to the East, even though Parliament had passed legislation providing for a grant to compensate for this price differential. Of course, that grant did not always provide a fair compensation, but at least it was available and its aim was to establish a reasonable balance between production costs for Western feed grains and Eastern grains.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, as representatives in this Parliament, I and several of my colleagues did not always get the necessary information to be able to ascertain whether the subsidy did reflect the difference in prices, with the effect of giving eastern and western farmers equal chances.

If this bill is a means of obtaining information, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said earlier, while another act is still to come later, then we shall be in a position to use Bill C-48 to clear up a lot of questions which might be of some concern not only to Members of Parliament but also to taxpayers and those in the production business, whether in the furniture industry or in the production of pork, eggs, poultry or dairy products which have to travel throughout the country. If this bill can enable us to force transportation companies to provide Parliament with real information on the cost of transportation, on the revenues accrued, and we eventually manage to determine whether there really are profits or losses, I think it will have been worth waiting a little bit later tonight to pass this bill and let it become a reality as soon as possible so as to enable the Minister of Transport to give us more information.

I trust that the Minister of Transport will be honest and another bill will be introduced in the House. Hon. members will then be able to inquire deeper into the activities of railway companies and the effective cost to taxpayers of this public service which is essential for the development of our country.

Madam Speaker, I have always considered that railway transportation services are a must for our country as a whole and that Canadian people are willing to assume the costs of that transportation provided it benefits the development of our industries throughout Canada and they do not have to pay twice as much for a service that can be obtained at a lower cost.

I therefore commend Bill C-48 with all my heart.

[English]

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, I suppose at this hour of the night I should give the benediction, the blessing, and go home; but that is not quite all. Certainly Bill C-48, on reading it, is self-explanatory. After all I have heard tonight, in the interests of fairness, time and expediency, I do not intend at this time to pass judgment on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) or his department.

Certainly the matter of disclosure by the railway companies is a serious business. They are public utilities and their costs of operations should be public knowledge. Certainly the bill should go further and I trust that the committee will cause amendments to be made to make it more forceful and meaningful, and report it back to this House forthwith.

This question of transportation is of the utmost importance in the minds of all Canadians, including those in this House. The government must get on the right track, and get off cloud nine. I come from a railroad town and I know some of the problems in transportation at first hand. The transportation problems in our country must be given priority of solution. This is a most essential prerequisite of our confederation, and the survival of our economy and our people depends in large part on straightening out the transportation system, once and for all, so we can then proceed to achieve greater heights in confederation, in unifying our country, and in eliminating regional disparities.

We must have a policy and a plan, and we must be prepared to follow that policy and that plan. Transportation must be treated as a service to the public, not as a business. Until we realize that philosophy as the basis of policies to be drafted in respect of transportation, we will never really correct the difficulties. I am sure that we, in this House of Commons at this session, can straighten out most of those problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to an order made earlier today, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 11 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—RIGHT OF HOUSE OF COMMONS TO CONTROL SUPPLY—PROCEDURE FOLLOWED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning what I think is the most ancient privilege of the House of Commons under our parliamentary system, the right of the House of Commons to control supply. It might be said that that right is more than a privilege; it is the raison d'être of the House of Commons. Without that right, we do not have a parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Under the present Standing Orders which govern the examination of estimates and the voting of supply, in view of the rulings of the Chair on the interpretation of those Standing Orders and the pressures on standing committees when they are considering the estimates, as well as the utter impotence of the House of Commons at the report stage of the estimates—except if the government is in a minority position—the House must reject expenditures which are in the public interest in order to reject expenditures which are considered to be not in the public interest. But even when the government is in a minority position there is no way, under the existing rules as interpreted, for the House to reduce or to eliminate expenditures not considered to be in the public good, except by eliminating those which are considered to be in the public good. Due to these fetters on the House of Commons, we are not far from the point when we will no longer have a responsible House of Commons in a parliamentary system.

Today, I believe, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) will lay before the House the main estimates of the government for the next fiscal year. These estimates will later be supplemented by supplementary estimates. The estimates, including supplementaries, will probably exceed $30 billion. After an examination which would be farcical if it were not tragic in its implications for this House and the Canadian people, those estimates involving that vast supply of money will be voted to the disposal of the government, perhaps without being reduced by one dollar or even one cent. This futile exercise will have served only to hold up the examination of the government's legislative program by this House and its committees.

The government leader of the House has already conceded—graciously, I might add—that the procedures of the House dealing with supply are unsatisfactory, but no concrete action has been taken to correct this. Once again the estimates will be presented in the House and we will have to deal with them with unsatisfactory procedures which leave the House impotent. I realize that the minister may refer this question, with others, to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, but that has not yet been done. The motion has not been brought forward and no report that committee makes to remedy our supply procedure with regard to estimates can be brought forward and adopted by this House in time to apply to the consideration of the 1975-76 estimates.

I submit it is essential that we have an ad hoc pro tem remedy for this predicament, for this loss of our ancient privileges. If you agree, Mr. Speaker, that I have a question of privilege, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be authorized to meet forthwith to consider, report upon and recommend a sessional order that will allow debate, amendment, and vote by the House with respect to a selected number of estimates in the main estimates for 1975-76 or upon any portion of each estimate so selected; and that the committee report back with its recommended sessional order within ten days from the adoption of this order.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was good enough to give the Chair notice of his intention to raise this question of privilege. He indicated only that it related to the examination of the estimates, without giving the detail contained in the motion. Hon. members frequently raise grievances questioning the opportunity of members, under the existing Standing Orders of the House, to put questions in the question period, to receive answers to questions in writing, to debate or amend and, now, to examine the estimates. These are all very important grievances.

This grievance relates to the examination of the estimates. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, it is without question parliament's most important function to examine the spending power of the government of the day. As important as the grievance may be, and as valid and as widespread as the support may be for the grievance or the concern about the status of this House to examine the estimates, the fact is that this status has been arrived at by a series of agreements and amendments to the Standing Orders in the orderly and regular process of establishing the Standing Orders of the House.

While there may be legitimate cause for concern and, indeed, complaint as long as the procedures conform to the Standing Orders, I am not in a position to say that procedures which conform completely to the Standing Orders of this House can in any way constitute a question of privilege.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1975-76

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1976, was presented by Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

[English]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the main estimates which I have just tabled contain $28.2 billion in budgetary items and $1.3 billion in loans.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Chrétien: What is wrong?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The loans are at about the same level as they were last year, but the budgetary total is $6.2 billion greater. The growth is largely related to the inflation that has affected the world and to the steps the government has taken to counter some of its effects on Canadians. The most significant single step, in dollar terms, is our $1.3 billion program to subsidize consumer prices of products of the oil industry. But the total increase in other transfer payments to aid Canadians has been even larger, about $1.9 billion. Some of these payments go in the first instance to the provinces, such as hospital and medicare payments, and some go to individuals, such as family allowance payments.

Then, of course, the estimates reflect the growth in the operating costs of departments—Post Office, Transport, Defence and all the others—which unfortunately enjoy no exemption from inflation or the need to service a growing population.

[Translation]

Hon. members will surely remember that when he brought down the budget last fall, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) foresaw budgetary expenditures of about $28,750 million for 1975-76. Taking into account the funds that were not spent, that is the difference between estimated and real expenditures, I believe I shall be in a position to introduce supplementary expenditures of some $1,200 million during the year, without exceeding the total expenditures forecast by the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance stated in November last that government outlays, in terms of budgetary expenditures, costs, old age security and guaranteed income supplement, will probably increase by 15 per cent during the financial year 1975-76. That rate of increase would therefore be considerably less than that he expected for 1974-75, namely 25 per cent. We are determined to maintain a rate of increase of about 15 per cent, unless, of course, exceptional circumstances arise. Some could occur similar to those which forced us to pay very high indemnities for oil products; this considerably increased our expenditures this year.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

The government is again publishing a booklet entitled "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent" to explain many aspects of the main estimates. This year we are providing much more information in this booklet on the details of government spending.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Because of this, members of parliament and the general public should be able to see more readily the immense variety of demands made upon the federal government. They also may gain a better appreciation of the difficult choices which always have to be made in attempting to meet all these demands.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before I comment on the statement which has just been made, I wish to thank the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for his courtesy to the opposition in sending them copies of this document and to compliment him on his continuing habit of sharing bad news with everybody in the House of Commons.

My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), called attention today to the difficulty which parliament experiences with respect to controlling supply. We rise again to protest because government spending seems to have taken on a life of its own, much like the sucker that shoots from the side of a tree. This year the gardener promised to begin pruning and he promised that his shears would be sharp. Well, Mr. Speaker, the only thing sharp about the President of the Treasury Board's pruning of the estimates is his practice of telling parliament and the people that government spending will be moderated, when in fact he has permitted that spending to increase by $6.2 billion or 28 per cent over the main estimates of last year.

What kind of moderation is 28 per cent? What kind of example is the government setting? The 1975-76 main estimates propose budgetary expenditures of $28.2 billion. This is $6.2 billion, or 28 per cent, more than the 1974-75 main estimates. It is $2.8 billion, or 11 per cent, above the forecast expenditures for 1974-75, taking into account approved and expected 1974-75 supplementary estimates.

If you add the expected 1975-76 supplementary estimates in accordance with the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget of November, 1974, the increase in 1975-76 expenditures over those for 1974-75 is 15 per cent. This will make the percentage increase between those two years appear smaller, but only because the new Supplementary Estimates (D) will make the percentage increase from fiscal year 1973-74 to fiscal year 1974-75 larger than it is now. This government has acquired the habit of spreading various estimates over the fiscal year. How many supplementaries are expected this year? That is a question that ought to be answered. By how much money will they raise the expenditure planned in the main estimates?

We will be examining in detail the expenditures of each department, but speaking generally we note from examining the objects of expenditure columns that there is little evidence of restraint or even attempted restraint. We note that man-years are scheduled to increase by over 11,000. That is hardly evidence of restraint in hiring. We note that the fees for professional and special services will increase by $100 million, which is evidence of complete disregard for restraint on the part of the President of the Treasury Board. They will increase from $780 million to $982 million this year.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we in the opposition demand three things from the President of the Treasury Board. First, he must assure the House that when supplementary estimates come to the House they reflect expenditures that could not have been foreseen and are not just the expansion of existing programs. Second, he must justify, in detail, increases in manpower and in consultants' fees. Third, he must specify what impact on inflation, what impact on interest rates and the money supply, and what impact on Canadian attitudes toward restraint these increases will have.

Parliament and the Canadian people must know whether this government believes that these increases in government spending will be of small economic impact or whether they are merely evidence that this government, which has promised restraint, has at long last admitted it has lost control completely. We look forward to the examination of these estimates, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I thank the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for locking us in his office between one and two o'clock this afternoon so we could take a broad look at the estimates that he has tabled today and at the various statements and press announcements he has now released.

I think the first thing to be said about estimates of this magnitude—it needs to be said to my friends to the right, as well as to the country as a whole—is that civilization costs money. If we are going to build a decent civilization for the human beings who live in this country, we may have to spend even more than the amount in these estimates. We do not go along with the line that every time there is a proposal for government expenditure, it is a case of waste and carelessness.

We are concerned when there is waste and we want the estimates to be examined carefully. I hope that as a result of the motion on the order paper in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) calling for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to review our procedures, we will be able to do something this session about the way we are dealing with supply and expenditures.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think the more important matter for us in this House to consider today is that taxation and the spending of money by governments is not just a bookkeeping operation, not just taking in money and passing it out, but is an attempt to distribute the jobs and the wealth of this country in a way that will meet this nation's problems, in a way that will meet the problems of our people.

In one of the press releases the minister gave us today in his office but which he did not read into the record there appears this paragraph:

Main Estimates

The broad theme underlying planned expenditures for economic development and support in 1975-76 continues to be that of encouraging stable and balanced growth of the national economy—

Listen to these words:

—and a more equitable distribution of income and employment throughout Canada.

Those are wonderful words, but they are hollow when they come from this government. This is a government that at the present time, in the face of 800,000 persons being unemployed, shows nothing but complacency toward that disaster. This is a government which this very week is engaging in conferences with the provincial welfare ministers regarding a guaranteed annual income plan. In the early part of 1973 such a proposal was put before this House and we and the provincial governments were led to believe that the first steps toward implementing that plan would be taken some time in 1975. But this week the provincial ministers of welfare are being told that the plan is at least 2½ years down the road.

An hon. Member: Just before the next election.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One of my colleagues in the back says, "Just before the next election." More than six million people are affected by this situation. I suggest that we are prepared to take the minister's words as a test to apply to the government. Are its policies aimed at a more equitable distribution of income and employment throughout Canada? We say that on the basis of that test, this government is failing miserably. And my friends to the right, if they were to follow the line we have heard from them today, would fail even more miserably.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We thank the minister for having given us a preview of the estimates. I suppose I would not be revealing a secret if I said that in his office the minister suggested the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would want to cut down on expenditures, and that I would ask for more money to be put into our economy. That is only a recognition of the fact that civilization does cost money; that we are going to establish an equitable distribution of employment and income in this country only when we really address ourselves to the problem. This has not been done by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his taxation policies or by the President of the Treasury Board in his spending policies. Equitable distribution of income and employment is a goal we must still pursue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1430)

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the budget speech, on November 18, 1974, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) presented the House with estimates that had been prepared by officials of various departments and which gave a general idea of the economic and financial situation in the country. Today, however, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) advises us that the estimates will involve additional outlays of $1.2 billion to give the country the services and the administration Canadians need. But when we examine in committee the expenditure made by the various departments, we realize there would be ways of reducing them in many cases and using the money in other fields to render greater service to the population.

The minister's statement and the covering document outlined the main measures contained in the budget. We can see that 27.8 per cent of a budget of $28,242 million are spent for health and welfare. It is quite natural because all the efforts of a country, a family or an individual are aimed at protecting health, and at meeting physical needs. It is quite natural that a high percentage of the expenditures be earmarked for health and welfare.

There is a second item which also takes an important part in the budget, namely economic expansion and support. I do agree that efforts must be made in this area but I ask the government, the cabinet and the President of the Treasury Board to consider the matter seriously before the subsidies which have been granted to big corporations are paid to see if the millions of dollars Canadians pay to expand or maintain their industries are really productive and create employment. If necessary, we should make comprehensive inquiries to see if money has been wasted and to prevent this from becoming scandals.

A third item that is also very important is the public debt. I think we could speak about it two days and two nights, and there would be more to be said.

An hon. Member: Two months.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, for two months more. It is an important item. It is ridiculous to see how this item is considered as sacred. No one is able, in the existing system, to reduce it. We can discuss the others, but not this one. It is untouchable, it is more sacred than God himself.

I think that our financing system in the public sector could be modified by making greater use of the institutions at our disposal, if only one act were changed—the Bank of Canada Act—so that the government can ask this institution, which we really own, to provide the public sector with the credits it needs at an interest rate covering administration costs only.

After all, Mr. Speaker, what is a monetary system? I always thought it had to be a service, like the postal service, for instance. The monetary system must also be a service. It must be under government control and adjusted to the needs of the people. The day we stop allowing the tradesmen of the nation's credit to get richer because they have the privilege of making as many loans and deposits as they want under legislation that was enacted by parliament, but which should be amended, we will be able to lower the cost of servicing the debt. These billion dollars can be used to provide better services, to finance, for example, local initiatives programs. Every day people ask that their projects be accepted because they want to work. It would not cost one cent more to Canadians, nor to the government. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration would be very happy to approve more projects and Canadians would be happy to be able to earn their living.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before finally moving on to other business, may I make an announcement about the disposition of the estimates and ask whether the House might agree to a procedure that would assist the Leader of the Opposition and myself in having a look at the rules of the House in relation to the estimates.

First of all, the motion of reference of the estimates will be made by Monday so that the examination can begin. I wonder whether the House will be disposed to pass now, without any debate, government order No. 10 which appears under Government Business. I would point out that that particular motion does provide for a temporary as well as a permanent change in the rules. It would enable the committee to deal immediately with this and other suggestions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very worried about the procedure that has been proposed by the government leader. My worries and fears are that if the opportunity is not given to all members of parliament, not just the House leaders and not just the party leaders but all members of parliament in their capacity as members of parliament, to debate and discuss questions of procedure, then the amendments that would be proposed could be restrictive and not encompass the views of many members of the House who have been here a long time and who have every right to make an input.

Having said that, I want to say that we are quite prepared, if that is the case, to enter into a debate with respect to those matters immediately. I might remind you, Mr. Speaker, that that matter has been kicking around on the Order Paper for some time, that a tour of the Mother of Parliaments has taken place, that other members have studied and read on that matter, and that all members, and particularly members of the opposition, are anxious to have those changes. If the government House leader is also anxious to have those changes, let him bring them about in a way that is not restrictive of the rights of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I assume that the matter can only be dealt with upon unanimous consent. I take it that it is not necessary to ask whether there is unanimous consent.

Mr. McGrath: I should like to raise a point regarding the point of order before this matter is settled. I do not think it is asking too much to ask for an assurance from the government House leader—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, because the President of the Privy Council had made what could be construed as a comment when he put the suggestion forward, I felt it proper to allow the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to make a comment in response. The fact of the matter is that the President of the Privy Council was seeking something that could only be done by unanimous consent. If there is unanimous consent, it could be done now; if there is not, it would not be in order to debate the matter. In fairness, having allowed comments on both sides, I cannot let the matter go any further because it cannot be debated without unanimous consent.

PRIVILEGE

MR. TRUDEL—FAILURE OF EMPLOYEES IN MONTREAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICES TO COMMUNICATE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Many federal employees are now denying some members of this House the services to which they are entitled, especially the manpower and immigration office in Montreal. Our secretaries try to obtain information for themselves or for the members, but it is denied to them when they ask in either language.

When a French-speaking individual applies to those offices and the employee is English-speaking, the information is denied to him. When English-speaking individuals make inquiries, they are turned away just as we are and just as are those who were asked to inquire.

Not only do I consider the situation is very serious, but I think we should refer the problem to the Committee on Privileges and Elections so as to settle once for all this matter which prevents people and members from obtaining services. I therefore ask you, Mr. Speaker, to defer immediately the matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we may know how to deal with it.

[English]

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support, as strongly as I can the representations made by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel). I would argue seriously and sincerely that he has a valid question of privilege. If at any time I, as a member of parliament, am denied the right to address citizens in Montreal in the language of my choice, I submit that I am handicapped in performing my functions properly and to the best of my ability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Blaker: The procedure currently under discussion in the House—that is the representation made by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa as a question of privilege—may be an awkward one to consider although I would argue it is a valid question. I think the underlying point should be made that we members of parliament from Montreal have certain responsibilities with respect to assuring our constituents, whether they be French or English, that there is an official policy on bilingualism and that the federal government stands for bilingualism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: It seems to me that, short of a motion under Standing Order 43, there is no way in which such individuals as the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) may wish to assure this House that all members of parliament and indirectly through them, all members of the population, have access to the language of their choice when dealing with the federal civil service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the concern expressed by hon. members. Although this is a matter of personnel policy under the direction and mandate of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), it happens that organizations under my direction have been involved in this situation. I want to assure the House that it is government policy and the policy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission to provide service to the public in both official languages and that in the offices—

Mr. Fairweather: That is the law.

Mr. Andras: —under discussion there are bilingual people designated as such whose job and responsibility is to provide service in either of the two official languages. Any failure or refusal to do so by any individual is completely unauthorized.

An hon. Member: Fire them!

Mr. Andras: Where such failure has been established we are prepared to take disciplinary action.

An hon. Member: Fire them!

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. At about a quarter to two this afternoon, my office was in communication with the Unemployment Insurance Commission office located at 7510 Viau Street, Montreal and was advised by the person who answered the telephone that the entire staff was refusing to speak the English language until they were paid additional money by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). I think, Mr. Speaker, as hon. members opposite have said, that this is an infringement on the rights of members of parliament who attempt to get information from the UIC. It is also an affront to the Canadian public who, by virtue of the Official Languages Act, have a right to expect to be addressed in both languages when calling offices in areas designated as bilingual.

In bringing bilingualism to this country, the government has made much of the fact that they were in favour of bilingualism, so I am sure they will agree that this matter should be dealt with speedily by this House in order that those offices not rendering proper service in both languages in designated bilingual districts can be immediately dealt with. If employees refuse to offer those services to the Canadian public, they should be disciplined immediately by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras).

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have instructed the officials in my department to inquire into that subject. If officials working in any department do not comply with the acts of the Parliament of Canada, they will be suspended for their acts.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I presume no other member wishes to contribute to this point. It raises, of course, a most serious question. It is not identical to, but is associated with, the other very difficult question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) regarding the functioning of members outside this House of Commons, this chamber, and interferences with their capacity to operate in areas of this sort. As hon. members will know, by its very nature it raises an extension of the traditional position that has been taken regarding questions of privilege. I am examining the precedents carefully in respect of the alleged question of privilege of the hon. member for Laprairie, and I would propose to do the same with respect to this question of privilege and, as soon as possible, rule on the validity of both at the same time.

MR. REID—ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEES

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects the rights of all members of the House. Unfortunately the matter only came to my knowledge a short time ago. I should like to raise the matter now with the possibility of arguing it more fully tomorrow. The question of privilege which concerns me is the matter of members of this House of Commons appearing before committees of the other place to make presentations to them on legislation which has gone through the stages of consideration in this House. I understand that there are procedures and traditions of the House that mitigate against this happening. I should like to develop my argument about this more fully tomorrow.

An hon. Member: Who put you up to that, John?

An hon. Member: Can't you leave Herb alone?

Mr. Lawrence: The only answer is to get appointed there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Motions.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY PROBLEM OF BINDER TWINE SHORTAGE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the great difficulties experienced last year by farmers to get binder twine, and this even at exorbitant prices, and in view of the fact that sizeable quantity of hay could not be harvested and that there is a current shortage of feed with the result that cattle wintering costs have risen sharply, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Agriculture to study without delay what are the steps to take to ensure the supply of binder twine in proper time and avoid speculation by unscrupulous profiteers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is no unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF HONG KONG VETERANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I am sure that many hon. members will agree with me that the difficulties being faced by Hong Kong veterans—and I mention also when added to the premature deaths of many of them—make this a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I trust that those on the government side, some of whom know about the motion, will agree to it.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the Minister of Veterans Affairs be asked to make a statement to the House, at an early date, indicating the intention of the government with respect to the unanimous request of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, made on October 22, 1974, that the disability pensions of all Hong Kong veterans who are out of the labour market be increased to 100 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion being proposed. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

BILINGUALISM

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF EMPLOYEES OF MONTREAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICE TO SPEAK BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek leave to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I feel it should have the unanimous support of all members, especially of those on the government side who have continually expressed their sincerity in wishing to enforce the provisions of the Official Languages Act.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That in view of the fact that certain unemployment insurance commission offices in the city of Montreal, including specifically the one serving northeast Montreal at 7510 Viau Street, are refusing to speak both official languages to claimants and the general public, the House requests immediate government action to enforce the provisions of the Official Languages Act requiring services in both languages and that those refusing to serve the public in both languages should be immediately disciplined following this illegal action.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion being proposed. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Liberals said no.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be debated at this time.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek the consent of the House to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since agricultural producers face unbearable prices concerning costs of production such as hay, for instance, whose unprecedented price has risen to $100 a ton, and since the Department of Agriculture does not seem to be able to cope with the serious situation we face and offers no short-term solution to avoid the bankruptcies and the massive exodus that we witness every day, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House open discussion on the serious problems now facing Canadian agriculture in order to bring immediate compensation and provide our farmers with the assistance they urgently need, including all the necessary information concerning the difficult decisions and choices they will have to make this year.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. This motion, proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to request unanimous consent to introduce an important motion, surely of the utmost interest to all members and the Canadian people.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House recommend detailed study of the guaranteed minimum yearly income program, as proposed by the Social Credit Party of Canada, in order to help the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in the submission to the provinces of a more appropriate and more adequate plan for social security.

Mr. Speaker: Although I am sure, this is quite an interesting and significant suggestion, I regret it is not strictly a case of urgent and pressing necessity. Therefore, the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF HOURS OF SITTING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter which I deem to be of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the orderly progression of the business of this honourable House has slowed almost to a standstill because of prolonged and sometimes unnecessary debate on bills now before the House, which, in turn, has caused an unprecedented backlog of legislation important to millions of Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That the House give immediate and serious consideration to extending the hours and even the days of sitting until such time as required to complete the disposition of bills on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Come back in, Reid.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Notwithstanding the immense, and evidently widespread, popularity of the suggestion contained in the motion, I have consistently taken the position that suggestions for changing procedures of the House may be important and valid but can scarcely be considered as matters of urgency.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want it to be amply clear that members on my side of the House were prepared to agree to that motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fairweather: You had left the House. Sit down.

Mr. Reid: As there seems to be unanimous agreement—

An hon. Member: No, no; Sharp said no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let us understand one another clearly. If support for the substance of the motion is as widespread as it seems, surely ample machinery exists to implement that worthwhile suggestion.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS FOR MEMBERS OF FORCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to request leave to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. As the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has allowed Canada Trust to establish a retirement savings plan for the Canadian Armed Forces, as the Canada Trust plan will be in direct competition with the RRSP's offered by military credit unions which provide full financial services to forces personnel at military bases and have offices on those bases, as military credit unions provide RRS plans containing the same advantages as are contained in the minister's proposal, and as the Canada Trust plan could affect membership and loss of funds of military credit unions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That this House refer the whole matter to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for a complete study and a report from the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion being proposed. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be debated at this time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT CONCERNING POSSESSION OF FIREARM WHILE COMMITTING AN INDICTABLE OFFENCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-379, to amend the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House, I wish to make a short statement in connection with this amendment. I realize that normally this is not allowed, but I hope that in view of the fine spirit of unanimity which is present today, I will be permitted to mention what I have in mind.

Across our country today there is a carnival of gun murder. Thugs go here and there, intimidating or committing murder. Almost an open season exists. The reason is that there is no serious penalty against those wrongdoers who carry guns. I feel a minimum penalty for carrying a firearm should be added to any other sentence that may be given for the commission of a crime to the end that it will not be popular for those who carry guns to be in possession of them when endeavouring to commit an offence. What I propose is this:

Every one who carries or has in his possession a firearm for the purpose of or while committing an indictable offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than five years.

If that were done as well as putting an end to allowing people out on parole before the completion of the five-year sentence, it would go a long way towards ending or greatly reducing the amount of crime committed today by those thugs who carry revolvers and other firearms.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 919, 1,011, 1,032, 1,082, 1,108, 1,111, 1,117, 1,149, 1,166, 1,168, 1,214, 1,217, 1,237, 1,259, 1,260, 1,307, 1,317, 1,321, 1,329, 1,335, 1,358, 1,371, 1,452, 1,465 and 1,470.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 149, 391 and starred question No. 196 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

TECHNOLOGICAL CAPABILITY TO PROVIDE CANADIAN-BUILT ICEBREAKER

Question No. 919—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the government have the technological capability and yard capacity to provide a Canadian-built and Canadian-operated icebreaker with polar capability for continuous progress through 7 to 10 foot ice in this decade?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, the Canadian government does not have such capability, but Canadian designers and shipyards do. The Ministry of Transport has commissioned a design through a Canadian design consortium for a Polar Class 7 icebreaker which will be capable of continuous progress through ice up to 7 feet thickness. The design is expected to be completed in 1976 and if a decision is made to construct such a vessel it should be in service in this decade.

SPACE PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,011—Mr. Herbert:

1. Do space programmes require (a) a continuous research and development programme (b) a high investment in facilities and test equipment (c) a well-trained technical source of manufacturing people?

2. Is it possible for Canada to identify continuing space programmes in order to maintain this expertise?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; (c) Yes.

2. The government maintains an overview of space activities including research and application programme in order to ensure a reasonable balance of effort and the optimum use of resources. Examples of current government space programs include the Communications Technology Satellite project of the Department of Communications and the program of application development for remote sensing of earth resources and environmental factors carried out by the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

LIP—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Question No. 1,032—Mr. Cossitt:

During the time that the Honourable Jack Davis acted as Regional Minister in regard to the approving or disapproving of Local Initiatives Programme applications, what are the full details of all projects not approved by the Minister or his office, including, in each case (a) the nature of the project (b) the names and addresses or organizations or persons on the project application (c) the date of application (d) the amount of funds requested (e) all reasons for disapproval given in any manner whatsoever by the Minister or his office?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not available. Only the Minister of Manpower and Immigration approves or disapproves Local Initiatives Programme applications, although he does receive recommendations from Members of Parliament of all parties, provincial governments and others.

Order Paper Questions

LIP—MR. RICHARD DICERNI'S RESPONSIBILITIES

Question No. 1,082—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the memorandum dated January 25, 1973 to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on the subject of the Local Initiatives Programme and signed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. J. M. Desroches, who is the Mr. Dicerni referred to on page 2, what was his job designation and what were his duties?

2. Is this individual the same person as Mr. Robert Dicernie, Special Assistant to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration as of the date on which the memo was written?

3. (a) What was the exact relationship of Mr. Dicerni to the Local Initiatives Programme (b) was one of his tasks to advise LIP officials in regard to projects that were to be approved for political considerations?

4. (a) What is meant by the following sentence on page 2 of the memo "Mr. Dicerni will give us a decision in writing on whether the case is to be approved or not" (b) does this refer to LIP projects to be approved or disapproved because of political considerations?

5. (a) What is meant by the following sentence on page 2 of the memo "As soon as we have a clear picture of costs we shall report to you whether we can accommodate all decisions"—(referred by Mr. Dicerni)—"within the existing budget . . ." (b) does this refer to whether or not there were sufficient funds to cover projects which the Minister desired to have adopted for political purposes?

6. On what date and for what reason did Mr. Dicerni cease to be connected with the Local Initiatives Programme?

7. (a) What is his present position in government service (b) is he connected with the Unemployment Insurance Commission (c) do his present duties include performing any actions that are taken for political considerations and, if so, what are these duties and actions?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Mr. Richard Dicerni was employed as Special Assistant to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration from November 27, 1972 until September 1, 1973.

2. See (1).

3. (a) As a Special Assistant to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration Mr. Dicerni performed duties assigned to him by the Minister; (b) The task Mr. Dicerni carried out with regard to LIP was to maintain liaison with Members of Parliament and to consult with the regional Ministers, as described in Sessional paper 291-2-2319.

4. (a) and (b) One of the functions Mr. Dicerni performed was to inform the Department of ministerial decisions taken with regard to LIP Projects.

5. (a) and (b) It is the function of the Department to advise the Minister of the availability of funds in light of approvals. This is done on a regular basis.

6. See 1 above.

7. (a) Mr. Dicerni is presently Secretary to the Unemployment Insurance Commission; (b) See 7(a); (c) No.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,108—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Post Office Department have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Post Office Department and the Department of the Secretary of State as follows: 1. All documents as defined in the question have been made available in both languages for many years.

2. Therefore the question of retroactivity does not arise.

3. Not applicable.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Post Office Department, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the Government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 2,561,671; for 1973-1974 it was 2,668,059. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the Translation Bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. Not applicable.

6. Since bilingual forms and documents have been standard practice for so many years, it is not feasible to make a meaningful cost comparison at this time.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,111—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of Communications have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Communications and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. Documents required either for purposes of service to the public or communication with employees are translated as required from one official language to the other and distributed in both official languages.

2. Documents still in current use such as referred to in answer number 1 which were not initially produced in the two official languages, either have been translated, or are now being translated.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

3. The translation of all such documents referred to in number 1 and 2 above will be completed in the first half of 1975.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of Communications, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the Government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 1,662,567; for 1973-1974 it was 1,370,760. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the Translation Bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. Information not available.

PURPOSE OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS BRANCH—POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Beatty:

1. (a) What is the purpose of the Public Affairs Branch of the Post Office Department (b) does it have authority to act on complaints by customers?

2. On what date was it established?

3. How many employees belong to this Branch?

4. (a) What is the present budget of the Branch (b) what are the component parts of the budget (c) what has been the total cost of the Branch to the taxpayer since its creation?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1(a) The purpose of the Public Affairs Branch of the Post Office is twofold: (1) to achieve public understanding and acceptance of Post Office policies and plans; (2) to provide expertise to management in the areas of communicating with specific publics. (b) Public Affairs personnel do respond to complaints by customers, but the responsibility to resolve customer problems lies with Sales and Customer Service in the Marketing Directorate.

2. In 1970, the Information and Public Relations Branch became the Public Affairs Branch.

3. There are 41 employees at Headquarters, of which 24 are information officers, and an additional 44 employees, in the four regional and 14 district offices, of which 33 are information officers.

4. (a) The operating budget for 1974-75 is $1,798,631, including salaries. The advertising budget is $220,000; (b) The component parts of the budget include advertising, publications, audio-visual, special events, language quality, media relations, national news desk, press gallery liaison, and administration and production. (c) 1970-71, $1,510,758, including $650,000 for advertising; 1971-72, $1,385,922, including $500,000 for advertising; 1972-73, $2,011,987, including $655,000 for advertising; 1973-74, $2,091,148, including $655,000 for advertising; 1974-75, $2,018,631, including $220,000 for advertising.

INSTITUTE OF OCEAN SCIENCES, PATRICIA BAY

Question No. 1,149—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a press release issued by Environment Canada indicating the estimated cost for the Institute of Ocean Sciences at Patricia Bay as 20 million dollars and, if so, for what reason does this figure differ from the 1974-75 Estimates total cost of $10,750,000?

2. Has a decision been made to include additional organizations and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. A press release was issued on December 10, 1974 the estimated cost for the Institute of Ocean Sciences at Patricia Bay, B.C., as $20,000,000. The figure of $10,750,000 in the 1974-75 estimates was based on a 1972 preliminary Task Force report. The wharf-marine facilities cost was estimated at $1,936,000 and the buildings facilities at $8,814,000. Consultant Design Architects were subsequently engaged and in April, 1974, the wharf-marine facilities design was completed, tenders called and Treasury Board approved an expenditure of $4,200,000 for that purpose. The concept design for the building facilities was completed in May, 1974 and the estimated cost was indicated as $12,063,000 in 1974 dollars. However Treasury Board asked that escalation be applied to this estimate which resulted in an increase in the estimated building facility costs to $16,198,685. With the addition of the wharf-marine facility cost of $4,200,000 the total estimated cost of the complex is now $20,398,685 with a 1978 completion date. This figure will be included in the 1975-76 estimates.

2. No decision has been made to include additional organizations at this time.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN CANADA, 1965-73

Question No. 1,166—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

In the years 1965 to 1973 inclusive, how many public servants were there (a) in Canada (b) in each province?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following figures providing the details concerning the number of federal public servants in Canada and in each province through the years 1965 to 1973 inclusive.

Federal Government Employment by Province—Number of public servants as at March 31

	1965	1966	1967	1968	1969	1970[1]	1971	1972	1973

CNR—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 1,168—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) Is a survey form being circulated to CNR employees in regard to language capabilities (b) are such employees being asked if they are willing to take language training in one of the official languages and, if so (i) to what regional areas of CNR are such surveys being distributed (ii) have these been sent or will they be sent to employees of the Eastern Region?

2. (a) What persons authorized this survey (b) what are the names of all persons in government who in any way recommended or promoted the making of such a survey by CNR?

3. Is this survey another attempt by the government to promote bilingualism in Canada including areas that are predominately English speaking?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (i) Atlantic, Great Lakes and Mountain Regions. (ii) Yes, they have been distributed.

2. (a) Chairman, System Policy Committee on Bilingualism. (b) Commissioner of Official Languages.

3. The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a Minister. Questions may be put to him directly.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—SEAPLANE OPERATIONS

Question No. 1,214—Mr. Huntington:

Have rigid operational procedures been issued for seaplane operations, landing and taking-off in the Port of Vancouver and, if so, would the Minister provide a copy of the regulations and, if such regulations cannot be made available, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Special procedures are in effect at Vancouver Harbour which were promulgated in an Aviation Notice dated May 6, 1974. These require seaplane operators to use designated routes and altitudes when entering or leaving the harbour area. A copy of the Aviation Notice follows. Seaplane operations conducted in the Port of Vancouver are from a licensed airport and are in accordance with the section 529 of the Air Regulations which reads as follows: 529. Except when taking off from or landing at an airport or military aerodrome or except as specifically authorized by the Minister, aircraft shall not be flown (a) over the built-up areas of any city, town or other settlement or over an open-air assembly of persons, except at an altitude that will permit, in the event of an emergency, the landing of the aircraft without undue hazard to persons or property on the surface; such altitudes shall not in any case be less than one thousand feet above the highest obstacle within a horizontal radius of two thousand feet from the aircraft; and (b) elsewhere than over any area mentioned in paragraph (a), except at altitudes of not less than five hundred feet above the surface of the ground or water, unless such flight may be made without undue hazard to persons or property on the surface.

Aircraft Operations—Vancouver Harbour

In the interest of promoting safe operating techniques within the Vancouver Harbour and reducing noise exposure in adjacent noise sensitive communities, no aircraft shall cross the built-up area of Vancouver below 2000′ ASL. Aircraft operating to and from the Harbour will be expected to follow the procedures outlined below: 1. All aircraft shall maintain a listening watch on advisory frequency 122.9 Mhz.

2. Arriving aircraft shall transmit on frequency 122.9 Mhz. Abeam Point Grey or Atkinson followed by a second transmission approaching Third Beach. This transmission will advise the position, height and intentions of flight.

Example: "C-FABC" Pt. Grey for the Harbour, with the altitude followed by a second report. "C-FABC approaching Third Beach for the Harbour".

3. Departing aircraft shall transmit the intended direction of take-off on 122.9 Mhz., remain over the water and reduce to cruise-climb power when safe. This will be followed by advisory reports over Lions Gate Bridge, and Point Grey or Atkinson advising altitude and intention of flight.

Example: "C-FABC"—on take-off (Eastbound) (Westbound) followed by a second report. C-FABC by Lions Gate (with altitude) for Point Grey (Atkinson).

NOTE: Aircraft intending to transit the Vancouver Positive Control Zone shall contact the Vancouver Tower on 124.0 Mhz. when operating at or below 2000′ ASL or Vancouver Radar on 125.2 Mhz. when operating above 2000′ ASL.

Refer to VFR Supplement for VFR procedures within the Terminal area.

PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK—REPORT ON PUBLIC HEARINGS

Question No. 1,217—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. On what date will the government publish reports on the public hearings, which ended in 1971, concerning Prince Albert National Park?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

2. As of December 15, 1974, had the report or reports concerning the 1971 public hearings on the Park gone to translation and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. A firm date has not yet been fixed, but it is expected to be in February.

2. (a) The report was sent for translation December 10, 1974. (b) Not applicable.

1974 OFY PROGRAMME—PROVINCIAL ALLOCATION

Question No. 1,237—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the 1974 OFY Programme, what amounts of money were allocated to each province and how many jobs were created in each province?

2. What were the specific criteria used to determine the allocation of OFY monies to each province in 1974?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1.

Province	Jobs Created	Provincial Allocation $
Newfoundland	1,340	1,013,000	(included in these
Nova Scotia	1,341	1,141,000	provincial
Prince Edward Island	218	192,000	allocations the
New Brunswick	1,120	951,000	sum of $200,000
Quebec	8,815	9,255,000	which was utilized
Ontario	7,705	7,731,000	to fund projects
Manitoba	1,347	1,252,000	of merit whose
Alberta	1,893	1,728,000	activities extended
Saskatchewan	1,150	1,110,000	beyond a given
Northwest Territories	289	150,000	Management Area)
British Columbia	2,276	2,114,000
Yukon	31	16,000

2. The funds for the 1974 Opportunity for Youth Programme were allocated to the Department's 33 Management Areas, which covered all of Canada, using the formula which is described below. A Management Area was comprised of several Canada Manpower Centres. One-third of the OFY funds was allocated to the Management Areas on the basis of the distribution of the population 15 to 25 years of age in the areas as revealed by the 1971 Census. The remaining two-thirds were distributed in accordance with a prescribed formula which takes into account: (a) the number of jobs of a type considered normally available to young people, by area; (b) the population, 15 to 25 years of age, by area. The number of jobs available and the number of persons 15 to 25 years of age had been combined in the form of a Youth Job Availability Index for each Management Area. The numerator of the Index was the number of jobs available to young people in the Management Area; the number of persons 15 to 25 years of age was the denominator. The occupations included in the Index were restricted to those in which students and other youth could be expected to readily obtain work on account of the low skill and low experience requirements. The Youth Job Availability Index gave the relative position of each Management Area in terms of readily available job opportunities for young people and the number of persons in the youth age group (15-25). This Index was then related to the youth population in the area (Population 15-25/Student Job Availability Index), the results of which formed the basis for the allocation of the two-thirds portion of OFY funds. In other words, the funds were allocated to the Areas by taking into consideration job availability and the number of young persons in the Area. The total funds allocated to a Management Area was the sum of the funds distributed on: (1) the basis of the youth population in the area, and (2) the funds allocated using the ratio of Youth Population/Youth Job Availability Index. The total funds allocated to a province was the sum of the funds allocated to all Management Areas within that province.

SUBSIDIES FOR NATURAL MILK

Question No. 1,259—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. From October 1973 to January 4, 1975, how much did the government pay in subsidies for natural milk?

2. How much money was paid to each province?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Subsidies paid were for natural milk (fluid milk): 1. $108,772,197.18.

2. Newfoundland, $617,203.73; Prince Edward Island, $469,810.03; Nova Scotia, $4,604,787.87; New Brunswick, $2,779,441.85; Quebec, $26,188,963.29; Ontario, $45,524,396.51; Manitoba, $5,148,415.44; Saskatchewan, $3,872,297.47; Alberta, $7,962,313.85; British Columbia, $11,604,567.14.

CBC PROGRAMME "BYE-BYE 74"

Question No. 1,260—Mr. Herbert:

Is it CBC policy to deride the Stations of the Cross and the feelings of Canadians as was done on the programme Bye-Bye 74?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: No Religious programme, together with programmes including the serious discussion of religion form a regular part of the television and radio schedules of the CBC. The CBC French television network production of December 31, 1974, "'Bye-Bye 74' was a variety programme. The episode in question in the programme was a satirical one, in no way intended to deride religious practices.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES AND SALARIES

CANADIAN COMMITTEE ON OCEANOGRAPHY

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Forrestall:

Who are the members of the Canadian Committee on Oceanography and how frequently and on what dates did they meet in the past six months?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned, the answer is as follows: Dr. J. D. Keys (Chairman), Mr. H. O. Buchanan, RADM. A. L. Collier, Dr. A. E. Collin, Mr. F. A. A. Fergusson, Dr. G. Filteau, Mr. A. H. Green, Mr. N. Haffey, Mr. R. G. Head, Dr. M. J. Keen, Dr. D. J. Le Roy, Mr. J. R. H. Noble, Mr. W. A. O'Neil, Dr. G. L. Pickard, Dr. E. R. Pounder, Dr. C. H. Smith. The Canadian Committee on Oceanography has not met within the last six months.

Order Paper Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY CONCERNING RESIDENCE OF APPLICANTS FOR GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

Question No. 1,335—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the policy of the government, when hiring through the Public Service Commission, to accept applications from citizens resident in any place in Canada for any job offered regardless of the location of the job opening and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: In accepting applications for appointment to positions in the Public Service, the Public Service Commission is governed by two sections of the Public Service Employment Act: (a) Section 13 of the PSE Act states "Before conducting a competition the Commission shall (a) determine the area in which applicants must reside in order to be eligible for appointment; . . ." (b) Section 19 of the PSE Act states "Where an appointment is to be made to a local office, the Commission in making the appointment from outside the Public Service shall, whenever it is in the best interests of the Public Service to do so, give preference in appointment to qualified candidates who reside in the area served by the local office over qualified candidates who do not so reside." To carry out and give effect to Section 19 of the Act, the Commission has adopted Public Service Employment Regulation 10 which states: "Where an appointment is to be made to a local office from outside the Public Service in either of the occupational categories referred to in the Public Service Staff Relations Act as the administrative support or the operational category, preference in appointment shall be given to qualified candidates who reside in the area served by the local office over qualified candidates who do not so reside."

In categories other than the administrative support or operational, the Commission, in determining the area in which applicants must reside pursuant to Section 13 of the PSE Act, is influenced by: (a) The extent to which the area of competition must be extended to ensure that an adequate number of candidates is attracted from which to make a suitable selection, and (b) The need to confine expenditures to reasonable levels, consistent with the objective of appointing the best available candidate for the position to be filled.

"RADIO TELEVISION CANADA" ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Question No. 1,358—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the illustrated booklet Radio Television Canada what was (a) the number printed (b) the distribution (c) the cost of this publication?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: (a) 50,000. (b) The booklet is being made available to the general public including Members of the House of Commons and Members of the Senate, libraries and schools, government information offices, CBC listeners and viewers and other individuals or agencies requesting information about the national broadcasting service. (c) Total cost including layout, design and printing of this publication was $27,972.14.

[Mr. Drury.]

AGRICULTURE—REMOVAL OF QUOTAS ON PRODUCTION

Question No. 1,371—Mr. Robinson:

Does the Minister of Agriculture consider that the farmers should produce more and, if so, is the government considering the removal of quotas on production so that Canada can provide more food for the world's starving millions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Minister has stated on numerous occasions that he urges farmers to produce more, and that he is confident farmers will expand production if given adequate incentives to do so. The government does not impose production quotas on farmers. Marketing institutions such as the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Canadian Wheat Board and some producer marketing boards use marketing quotas to achieve orderly marketing for the purpose of forestalling shortage and surplus situations, and to enable all producers to have equal access to the market. These marketing quotas do not restrict production and removal of them would not increase the output of food from Canadian agriculture.

CHILEAN IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 1,452—Mr. Huntington:

Have Chilean immigrants arriving via Cuba and Mexico been allowed by Ottawa to enter Canada after having been refused entry by Vancouver immigration officials and, if so, what are the reasons for the overruling?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no knowledge of any Chilean immigrant arriving via Cuba and Mexico after having been refused entry by Vancouver immigration officials.

ATLANTIC REGION—ALL-WEATHER HIGHWAYS

Question No. 1,465—Mr. Howie:

Are there any plans to, in co-operation with the provinces, provide a complete network of all-weather highways through the Atlantic region, connecting to major markets in central Canada and the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Although the Ministry of Transport presently has no programme for assisting the Atlantic Provinces in improving their primary highway network, we are constantly reviewing the highway needs of each region in Canada as they relate to the national interest.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—CLUSTER MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Question No. 1,470—Mr. Whittaker:

Has the Pacific Region of the Department of Manpower and Immigration implemented the Cluster Management System for Canada Manpower Centres within that region and, if not, does it intend to implement such a system?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Pacific Region of the Department of Manpower and Immigration has not yet implemented the cluster management system for Canada Manpower Centres. However, development work on the concept is continuing and it is anticipated that it will be introduced later this year.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PUBLIC SERVANT PARTICIPATION IN POLITICAL CAUCUSES

Question No. 149—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. On how many occasions in the life of the 29th Parliament has a public servant, other than a translator, participated in a caucus meeting of the (a) Liberal (b) Progressive Conservative (c) New Democratic (d) Social Credit Party?

2. In each such case, what was (a) the name of the public servant (b) the dates of the participation (c) the subject-matter discussed?

3. On how many occasions in the life of the 29th Parliament has a public servant who was involved in preparation of a particular piece of legislation discussed the substance of that legislation with the caucus of the (a) Liberal (b) Progressive Conservative (c) New Democratic (d) Social Credit Party before that legislation was tabled in the House of Commons?

4. In each such case, what was (a) the name of the public servant (b) the dates of the participation (c) the subject-matter discussed?

Return tabled.

*OVERTIME PAY TO PUBLIC SERVANTS EARNING $18,000 OR MORE

Question No. 196—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many Public Servants, by departments, commissions, Crown corporations, etc. earning over $18,000 a year in the past year received overtime pay?

2. Of this number, how many received overtime pay (a) up to $1,000 (b) between $1,000 and $2,000 (c) between $2,000 and $3,000 (d) between $3,000 and $4,000 (e) between $4,000 and $5,000 (f) $5,000 and over?

Return tabled.

PUBLIC SERVANTS IN RECEIPT OF REMUNERATION FROM MORE THAN ONE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 391—Mr. Herbert:

Did any public servants in the last year for which the information is available receive any remuneration from another department while receiving full annual salary from their proper department and, if so, how many received such a remuneration and what were the circumstances that lead to the approval of this "double-dipping"?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Questions Nos. 636 and 637 were originally placed on the Order Paper of the twenty-ninth parliament on February 28 of last year as questions Nos. 222 and 225. The parliamentary secretary has only two parliamentary days left to save the government from going into year two in answering these questions. One deals with the Olympic program about which members are entitled to some information. The second deals with the information service officers retained by this government. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can accept the challenge of saving the government from continuing this Rip van Winkle type of approach in not answering these questions.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I take no responsibility for the answering of those questions. My duty is to report them. I suggest the hon. member take up his quarrel with the relevant ministers who are obviously not doing their work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the admission just made by the parliamentary secretary will be generally received with acclaim on this side of the House. In fact, the only criticism will be its limitation to the few ministers.

I again raise a matter which reveals the complete contempt this government shows toward questions for which they have answers but refuse to give them. I refer to question No. 1,256. It was placed on the Order Paper last fall and answered in a way that had no regard to parliamentary procedure or to truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I put the question back on the Order Paper with a slight alteration on February 5. I simply asked about the pension received by a former minister of the Crown, the Hon. John Whitney Pickersgill, and the salary he received when President of the Canadian Transport Commission. The government and the department are deliberately causing an affront to parliament by not answering. They have the information. They do not want to reveal it. They contemptuously treat members of parliament as though they were not here or had no right to examine anything connected with expenditures.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I placed starred question No. 196 on the Order Paper last October 1. I asked:

How many public servants, by departments, commissions, crown corporations, etc. earning over $18,000 a year in the past year received overtime pay?

The second part of the question asks how many received overtime pay up to $1,000 and so on. I do not mind if the parliamentary secretary does not give a verbal answer, but I see no reason for him to ask that it be made an order for return. People are interested in the answer to this question. It should be printed in Hansard so they can get a copy and see what are the facts.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the continuing failure to reply to question No. 782 which has been on the Order Paper in various forms since the last session. It seeks to elicit information as to the number of individuals employed in Crown agencies who began their public service careers in the political offices of ministers of the Crown. The question has acquired particular urgency following the recent Batten report which indicates that the major recruiting office for officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is the political office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

● (1510)

Mr. Schumacher: I should like to bring question No. 1,223 to the attention of the parliamentary secretary in the absence of the Solicitor General. This question has now been on the Order Paper for almost a month. It relates to the number of prisoners released from our penal institutions and to certain crimes committed by people who should not be at large. It is of some urgency and I hope an effort will be made to answer this question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order having to do with the point raised by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North. It seems to me that what my hon. friend presented was not just a grievance but a request that the rules be followed. In my view there should either be a ruling or an offer by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council to put the answer to that question on record in Hansard.

My hon. friend referred to question No. 196, which was a starred question, and according to Standing Order 39(2)(A) he has a right to an oral answer. He did say he was prepared to accept the answer being put on record in Hansard, but I really think it is going too far to reply by saying that a return would be tabled. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would agree to printing the answer in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize, I am sure, that the House has already passed an opinion on this matter when an order for return was made. Hon. members were asked whether it was the pleasure of the House that this be done, and it was done. We cannot go back over that ground. Perhaps the suggestion offered by the hon. member could be considered by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps there could be unanimous consent that the answer to that starred question be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary suggested that I take up my grievance with the two ministers responsible. Could he be more specific? I think there are about five ministers who might possibly be involved.

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a point of order to call attention to the fact that it will soon be Easter again and that question No. 25 has remained unanswered since last Easter in the old parliament and again in this parliament. It is a simple question. It asks how much was paid from public funds for two specific trips made to the Caribbean for holidays by the Prime Minister and a second trip to Switzerland. Surely, all the bills and accounts have now been received and been paid. I believe I am justified in bringing up this matter again, as I have brought it up on several earlier occasions, without receiving any response from the parliamentary secretary. I think an answer to question 25 should now be available and I can only assume, because it has not been provided, that the government is trying to hide information from the Canadian parliament and the Canadian people. We are getting rather tired of information to which we are entitled being denied us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Schumacher.]

Mr. Cossitt: Members on that side of the House are afraid of the consequences if the Canadian people are given these facts. I believe it is about time we got answers to our questions within a reasonable period of time and not six, eight, or ten months after they have been put down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: I do not wish to complain about questions which are still unanswered. I did that a while ago. But something has to be done if there is to be any sense of order in this chamber. What is happening now is what I predicted on Monday would happen, and it will be repeated indefinitely unless things are done properly; hon. members will use devices which go against the rules because the rules are not suitable in meeting the circumstances of the day. We have to move forward along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) so as to ensure that Your Honour is not put through the tortures of the damned trying to get us to the business we are supposed to be considering because the government is not handling the affairs of the House properly.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Would Your Honour be so kind as to call Notice of Motion No. 24?

Mr. Speaker: Notice of Motion No. 24.

COPY OF AIR CANADA CONTRACT AS REVISED

Motion No. 24—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Air Canada contract and all additions, revisions and amendments thereto.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Air Canada contract contains considerable confidential information relating to the organization, operation and maintenance of the Air Canada lines. Air Canada's competitors are not obliged to provide such information or expose their contractual arrangements to similar scrutiny. To place Air Canada in such a disadvantageous position would not be in the public interest. Under these circumstances would the hon. member agree to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Fairweather: How can a monopoly be at a disadvantage?

An hon. Member: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notices of motion for production of documents be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

MINISTER'S VIEW ON COLA CLAUSE IN LABOUR CONTRACTS IN THE PRIVATE AND PUBLIC SECTORS OF THE ECONOMY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In directing my question to the Minister of Finance, I would remind him that on January 28 he said he had informed labour leaders in Vancouver, I think it was, some time previously that from his point of view the addition of a COLA clause made a good deal of sense because it responded to the cost of living rather than anticipating rates of inflation which hopefully would not be attained. I would surmise that following this statement most labour leaders would think that a COLA clause was well within the ground rules of the Minister of Finance related to restraints and the policy of consensus he is trying to attain. Is this statement that a COLA clause makes a good deal of sense still the minister's view?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, sir. There may be situations in negotiations between employers and labour where a COLA clause would be less inflationary than a clause based on future rates of inflation which might be a self-fulfilling prophecy. Each case must be examined on its merits.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether his statement that from his point of view the addition of a COLA clause made a good deal of sense would not be taken to be a declaration of a much more general nature than he has indicated. Specifically, I would ask the minister whether it is the policy of the government in discussing a consensus with labour leaders and others to approve of the presence of a COLA clause in a contract. Would any contract negotiated with such a clause in it be regarded by the Minister of Finance as being out of order?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I indicated to the hon. gentleman rather fully last Thursday, just after orders of the day were called, we are at the exploratory or evolving stage of this consensus and the government has not yet put forward any proposals. We are listening to labour, management, professionals and consumer groups to find out what aspects of moderation in their claims against the economy are possible.

Mr. Stanfield: Having told us that in his view a COLA clause would not be considered to be excessive in the case of labour contracts in the private sector, would the hon. gentleman indicate his attitude toward a COLA clause in a public service contract?

● (1520)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have said that in general terms it may be that negotiation or settlement of any particular COLA clause would be less inflationary than a settlement which tried to anticipate future rates of inflation as a direct linear projection of the current rate. So far as public sector negotiations are concerned, it depends on the particular situation. I have full confidence that the negotiator on behalf of the government will take all factors into consideration, and the man in charge of negotiations for the government is my colleague the President of the Treasury Board.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSTAL EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON MAKE-UP PAY BOOST

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the fact that a make-up pay boost is one of the basic requirements of continued negotiation with the postal unions with reference to the current troubles and has also been underlined by the Postmaster General from time to time as being one of the reasons for the continuing malaise among postal employees, would the President of the Treasury Board put forward some sort of proposition that would get negotiations started again with this important sector of the public service?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we undertook negotiations. I believe one group applied for conciliation, and we will be present. Everything is proceeding normally. We hope a common ground can be found, to the satisfaction of both parties.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the specific question that I asked the President of the Treasury Board, is he considering the make-up-in-the-pay-cheque proposition that is regarded as basic to any resumption of negotiations with the postal workers?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe a move in that direction would be appropriate. The hon. member should know a $500 payment was made to all civil servants whose contract was not negotiated in 1974. Post office employees were paid that $500, as was every other government employee.

FINANCE

REASON FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering the fact that among those most seriously affected by the current rate of inflation, which is running in the neighbourhood of 10 to 12 per cent, are the six million Canadians who would be positively affected by the introduction of some form of guaranteed minimum income program at this time, would the minister inform the House why under the existing circumstances the government has reached the decision—if indeed it has—that it does not now intend to proceed with this kind of program for those in the country who need it the most?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question ought to be referred to my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare who spoke on behalf of the government at a federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I saw the minister winking across the House, which surely suggests we should take his answer with some skepticism. I am asking him this question as Minister of Finance, and I think it is a reasonable assumption for us to make if past practices of parliamentary government have been observed by the cabinet, that he played a crucial role in this decision. Is it his view as Minister of Finance that the government cannot afford to implement this program at this time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. gentleman that no question that he has put to me so far has made me blink. The hon. gentleman ought to refer to the address my colleague made to the federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers; the government's position is contained fully in that document.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question. I am in fact referring to an earlier speech made by that minister in November, when he documented the problems of the poor in our society. I conclude with this question. Is it the minister's view, as Minister of Finance, that the $500 million only that the federal government would have to put up under changes to the Canada Assistance Plan—which would be the best route to take in this regard—are beyond the fiscal capabilities of this government?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my view was expressed by my colleague at the conference.

PUBLIC SERVICE

USE OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE WORKERS DURING PUBLIC SERVICE STRIKES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board.

Could he tell the House whether the government is considering generalizing the policy already partially established of hiring private contractors to do the work usually done by the public service employees now on strike and, second, does he consider normal that the same work in the same department is paid at different levels depending on whether the employee belongs to the public service or works for a private contractor, in which case his salary is much higher?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in cases where external help is required, we must take into account the fact that these employees are hired only temporarily, and sometimes even for a few hours or a few days, and their salary basis cannot be the same as that which applies to people who work throughout the year. When employees are on strike, as they are now, it is not government policy to hire staff from the private sector to replace them. However, when public servants are illegally on strike, I believe the government is entitled to replace them by people from the private sector.

USE OF PAY RESEARCH BUREAU AS BASIS FOR NEGOTIATION WITH GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question that is supplementary to the earlier questions asked of the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that a confidential report prepared by the federal pay research bureau has indicated that the workers in the general labour and trades group are paid at a lower rate than those in comparable positions in the private sector, and because it has been intimated that unless these anomalies are corrected the public service will face a severe labour shortage within the next decade, will the Minister indicate whether or not he would consider using this report as a basis for further negotiations, in an effort to resume settlement talks in the public interest?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we do not accept the premise contained in this question. I think there is no problem at all at this time getting employees to work for the government.

Mr. Forrestall: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether or not he is, in fact, in possession of a confidential report from the pay research bureau which indicates that members of the general labour and trades group are paid at a rate substantially lower than or not comparable with the general prevailing rates in the given zones and areas across the country?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am told that this statement is incorrect. Sometimes we are not talking about the same kind of employees. Some who work in maintenance positions cannot be compared with those who work in the construction industry, and so on. I think they do compare with people having similar occupations in the private sector. If we are wrong in some instances then we will be willing to correct those errors, but I am told that there are no such errors at the moment.

INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES WITHIN GUIDELINES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that posed to the Minister of Finance by the Leader of the Opposition regarding his pursuit of voluntary restraints and guidelines. Is the 28 per cent increase in federal spending represented by the estimates that have now been put before the House within government guidelines, and if not is the minister trying to tell us that he is in the position of imposing restraints on others that he is not prepared to impose on the government?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the main estimates tabled today by my colleague the President of the Treasury Board include only authorized expenditures as of this date. I said on budget day, and the President of the Treasury Board repeated today, that in comparing total outlays—budgetary, non-budgetery, including supplementary estimates, all loans and obligations of the government, the old age assistance plan, unemployment insurance—the total outlays for 1975-76 over 1974-75 are still estimated to be in the range I projected on budget night.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister in fact set down guidelines on government spending, and is in fact the current increase in government spending within these guidelines?

● (1530)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the President of the Treasury Board answered, subject to situations we have not contemplated up to this moment, we hope that the projected increases in expenditures as estimated in the budget will be fulfilled. I would refer the hon. gentleman to the statement of the President of the Treasury Board earlier in the session.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BOURDIGNON BUILDING, VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ADVERTISEMENT FOR LEASE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a recent advertisement in Vancouver under the public works banner and over the signature of Mr. MacLeod, regional manager of property services, which calls for lease proposals for 206,000 square feet of air conditioned office space in the city of Vancouver. The description, occupancy date and location required for this space were such that only one building, the nearly completed Bourdignon building in the Marpole area, could possibly qualify, and all other developers were therefore prevented from submitting proposals. I would ask the minister whether he will conduct a thorough investigation into what appears to be a sham advertisement calling for proposals, to the detriment of the taxpayers, especially in view of the fact that the Department of National Revenue had already agreed to lease the Bourdignon building before this advertisement was placed, as evidenced by the statement of government employees that the Income Tax Department in Vancouver would be moving in July of this year into a Marpole building.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing in any way that this is a sham advertisement, I would be glad to look into the matter.

ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES D, 1974-75

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board which relates to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Now that we have had the bad news in respect of expenditures for next year, will the minister tell the House when he proposes to table Supplementary Estimates (D) for 1974-75, and how much more money will be added to government expenditures for that year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are getting ready to table out final estimates in the House in the next few days.

ALLEGED OMISSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES D, 1974-75 FROM BUDGET OF NOVEMBER 18

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, that minister who, when he is not winking and blinking, may be nodding. In view of the statement by the President of the Treasury Board that there are to be additional estimates tabled, which I understand will be in the nature of something in excess of $500 million, will he explain why in his budget of November 18 he forgot about supplementary estimates (D) when tabling the expenditures amounting to $24,850 million?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these were not forgotten, but it will take me some time to explain to the hon. member on an appropriate occasion.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT BY YORK ADVERTISING LIMITED OF OTTAWA

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerns a confidential report about the unemployment insurance commission, commissioned by the government at considerable cost to the Canadian taxpayer and submitted by York Advertising Limited of Ottawa. In this report there are very disturbing findings such as that on page eight which refers to "programs we have witnessed appear to be based on some combination of hunches and ad hockery", as well as the observation on page 26 that "the UIC has been considered a dumping ground for incompetents and a career deadend".

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. O'Sullivan: In view of the concern of members of this House about the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the very disturbing implications of this report, will the minister table it forthwith in the House?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's representations.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we looked at that suggestion and decided such a program would be so hard to administer it would be impossible to put into place.

In view of the premier's desire to seek an accommodation, I should like to ask the minister whether he is considering that very reasonable suggestion?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the last two days I have been out in Vancouver and I have not seen this particular telegram. I think we have to look at the request with both eyes open, and I do not think it is cause for change.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, I should like to ask whether he is not now ready to accept or consider that proposal to delay proclaiming this clause until after the first ministers' conference, again in the interest of confederation and unity?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we dealt with this in the committee of the whole during the debate on the income tax bill. At that time I said the answer was no and I repeat it now before the whole House.

IMPORT CONTROLS ON POULTRY FROM UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Since our poultry producers are so literally outraged by massive US chicken imports that this morning in Saint-Damase, in the beautiful riding of Saint-Hyacinthe, some of them set fire to shipments from the United States, can the minister, in cooperation with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture, assure that Canadian consumers, and Quebec consumers in particular, will not be the victims once again at the retail price level of that new war between American and Canadian producers.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to talk it over with my colleague the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. Considering that our poultry slaughter houses are importing increasing amounts of US chickens to remedy their shortages of fresh chicken, and considering also that the Poultry Producers' Federation is prepared to increase the quotas of our own producers in the event of better control over chicken imports, can the minister state his policy on that, and more particularly could he tell the House whether he intends to intervene, first, at the import level and, second, at the level of his provincial counterparts to develop with them a policy that would be more favourable to our own producers of fresh chicken?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what was said in the House yesterday, the poultry stocks are not higher than last year. Actually, they are a little bit lower. The poultry producers have organized themselves, without any national marketing agency, in respect of controls and cut-backs to the extent of 10 per cent in production. They have agreed to that. Without any real guarantee of supply management in respect of such an agency, there is very little I could do as far as controlling imports from another country, at least without getting into what the hon. member has suggested, another so-called trade war.

HOUSING

MONITORING OF REDUCTION IN SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, since the minister of State for Urban Affairs has stated it was his intention to monitor the reduction of sales tax on building materials to see that the saving is passed along to the consumer, will he tell the House how this is planned and when it will take effect so we do not have a repetition of the monitoring of the removal of the sales tax on clothing, in respect of which stores are notified in advance of any inspection?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I stated in the House before, this is carried out by the materials monitoring group of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The indications so far are that the sales tax reduction is being passed on. I am never satisfied, nor are they, and there are continuing inspections and reports which are being accelerated so they will come in more frequently than normal. I am keeping a close eye on the situation.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the minister indicate to the House when we can expect a full report on the effects to the consumer of the reduction in the sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated at this point having a full report. I want current reports on a very regular basis so that we can monitor continually. After a reasonable period of time, I would be very happy to report on the net impact of this. As the hon. member can appreciate, the net impact at any given time is difficult to follow. However, by constant monitoring and questioning we are able to isolate those areas where it is being passed on, as well as those areas where it might not be passed on, and that is where we have to concentrate.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR NAME OF PERSON IN CHARGE OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTED DIFFERENCE OF VIEW BETWEEN MINISTERS ON COLA CLAUSE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. There seems to be some difference in view between himself and the Minister of Finance about certain aspects of the anti-inflation program. Could he tell us who is in charge of this program of the government, is this program directed by the Prime Minister or is it in the charge of a particular minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman has tried to point out differences between the Minister of Finance and myself but he has not succeeded. It has been a lamentable failure. I am very happy to have my colleague here to affirm the policy of the government with respect to this and other matters.

In so far as the anti-inflation program is concerned, this is a joint undertaking of several ministers. If it is under any general direction, it is under the direction of the Prime Minister. Of course, my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has a very important part to play because he is one of the most valuable citizens in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It may not be very reassuring but it at least has been some clarification for the Acting Prime Minister to have expressed some doubt as to whether the program is under any general direction.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether there is any way in which he can convince any reasonable person that the statement made by the Minister of Finance with regard to COLA contracts on January 28 bears any resemblance to the interpretation which he tried to place upon it in the House recently.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. gentleman will have noticed that the Minister of Finance has agreed entirely with my interpretation.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the agricultural issues have not been dealt with in the budget speech this year, in spite of the continuing difficulties in that basic sector of the Canadian economy, could the minister advise the House whether he intends to require special subsidies to cope immediately with the situation, or whether he will wait for the eventually forthcoming supplementary budget of the Minister of Finance to obtain the money required for appropriate action?

SHORTAGE OF HAY—POSSIBILITY OF IMPORTATION FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In view of the lack of fodder, particularly hay, in eastern Canada, whose prohibitive price is $100 a ton, and considering that farmers have lots of difficulties in getting some because there in no more supply, could the minister tell the House whether he will take the necessary action to import hay from the United States or elsewhere to allow cattle feeding?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OVERHAUL OF BOEING 707'S BY TRANSAIR—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF EMPLOYEES OF CANADIAN AVIATION AND ELECTRONICS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him whether, in view of the promise made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence last June that there would be 800 aerospace jobs provided in Winnipeg, including personnel working on base for Canadian Aviation and Electronics, and that DND Boeing 707s would be serviced by CAE, and in view of the fact that a contract for a transfer has now been let, has the minister any information which will give some encouragement to the people now working at CAE that they will not be in the unemployment lines in the very near future?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the commitments that were made in June are in the process of being fulfilled. One was that the Boeing 707 repair overhaul would be undertaken in Winnipeg, and that is taking place. Another commitment was that there would be a larger Air Canada presence, and there has been an announcement of a new hangar which is to be constructed. At the same time we set as an objective the creation of 800 jobs. That objective is in the process of being fulfilled. No time limit was set on it.

So far as CAE employees are concerned, every attempt is being made to find work for them at Transair or elsewhere, but particularly at Transair where Boeing 707 work is being done.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister the following question. In view of the letter which he wrote and which appeared on June 14 in which he said that overhaul work on DND Boeing 707s will be done in Winnipeg by CAE in Air Canada buildings, will the minister explain why that is not being done and will he tell members of the House, and particularly workers at CAE, whether arrangements have been made by the government with Transair so that at least the first call for the jobs which will be created at Transair will be given to those people at CAE who have already lost their jobs earlier with Air Canada and are now losing their jobs at CAE?

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

Mr. Richardson: At the time when that statement was made we were mainly concerned with having Boeing 707 work done in Winnipeg so that we could establish a major repair and overhaul capability in that city. Now that has been achieved. At the time, CAE appeared to be the only company that was able to perform that work, and we did not know until my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, set out to write a contract, that there was another firm that could do the work. He was responsible for the contract and he gave it to Transair.

HANGAR AT WINNIPEG—DATE OF CONSTRUCTION AND FOR WHOM CONSTRUCTED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I understood the minister to say that a new hangar is under construction in Winnipeg. I wonder if he could inform the House for whom the hangar is being constructed.

An hon. Member: Where is it being constructed?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I do not believe I said it was under construction. It has, however, been announced by the chairman of Air Canada, the names of architects have been announced, and it is a project that is clearly underway. However, I am certain that the actual construction has not started.

Mr. McKenzie: Could the minister tell us if the Minister of Supply and Services has found any further contracts for CAE in Winnipeg?

Mr. Richardson: I cannot answer on behalf of the Minister of Supply and Services, but of course there is other work and that company is capable of doing the work, and I expect that they will have additional work in the months ahead.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the government House leader. Having regard to the salutary spanking which the parliamentary secretary gave to ministers of the Crown earlier—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was a most unique occasion—I have never witnessed it before. May I ask the minister, knowing his desire to make parliament work, following his post-graduate course in London recently at Westminster, and because of the fact that Mr. Speaker very properly stated that he cannot do anything about protecting the right of members to secure information, will he get in touch with the various ministers in the cabinet, having first himself examined the questions, and point out to them the admonition that was given to them today by the parliamentary secretary, and at the same time let this House know that it is going to operate properly and questions will be answered, however embarrassing to the government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1550)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already done so. I have already spoken to my colleagues. I have been told by them, however, and I have examined the question as well, that there are some questions being put on the order paper—

An hon. Member: That are embarrassing.

Mr. Sharp: Not that are embarrassing but that involve an enormous expenditure of public funds. When questions are asked, I think they should be put in a form that can be answered quickly and with a minimum of expense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to one of the ministers who was spanked, the Minister of Transport. I have every sympathy for a minister who is spanked by a parliamentary secretary—but then every minister has my sympathy. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport to tell us what is the reason for the delay over months—and on the last occasion over two weeks—in answering a question regarding one of our former colleagues, the Honourable Mr. Pickersgill. There is no difficulty there and an answer should not take months. Why the delay?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, sometimes in life there are coincidences which nobody can foresee. At the very moment the hon. gentleman was asking this question, I was signing the answer in my book.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, such an unusual act on the part of the government deserves the highest commendation. Those that see wrongdoing and finally act deserve every commendation.

An hon. Member: How long has it been in your book?

INDEX FORMULA FOR MILK PRICING—SUGGESTED CONSULTATIONS WITH INTERESTED GROUPS BEFORE IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On January 24 the minister indicated in the House that a review of the dairy industry had been completed and that an index formula for milk pricing had been finalized. I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to make this formula available for study to the dairy farmers of Canada, producer associations, provincial marketing boards and other interested groups in the industry prior to the implementation of such a program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember the exact verbiage I used on the date the hon. member mentions.

An hon. Member: Did you say garbage?

Mr. Whelan: But a policy has been developed after a long period of study with input from all the organizations and the provinces. We will have final discussions with the people most concerned, the dairy farmers of Canada, before the final formula is presented to the industry.

Mr. Wise: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the minister's intention to introduce this program on or about April 1, the beginning of the normal dairy year?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I hope to have it at least by that time but sooner if at all possible so that people can understand the policy and it can be explained to them before it is actually put into use.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have been issuing stamps for many, many years that do not carry the image of the Queen. POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE IN EXTRADITION TREATY WITH UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. On January 24, my colleague the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo brought to the attention of the Acting Prime Minister the tragic death of a young boy in Hamilton as a result of a motor vehicle accident. The vehicle was driven by one Thomas Martin. At that time the hon. member asked whether the government was prepared to serve notice on the government of the United States that it should amend the extradition treaty to ensure that the charge of criminal negligence was included. The minister said that this particular point was not raised when he signed the last extradition treaty but that he would take the situation under consideration. This is a very important matter. I wonder whether the minister followed it up and if he has a reply for us?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Department of External Affairs is consulting with the Department of Justice on this question.

BEEF CATTLE—SUGGESTED DEFERRAL OF INTEREST PAYMENTS ON LOANS TO AID PRODUCERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Agriculture. A lot of young farmers have been encouraged to enter the cattle industry as a result of the government's policy of making loans available under programs such as the Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Improvement Loans. There is now a slump in the cattle industry, however, as a result of the government's inactivity. Is the government now prepared to defer interest payments or reorganize the Farm Credit Corporation so that as much of the industry as is possible can be salvaged?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not deny that the government did lend some money to help young farmers enter the cattle industry, but I think the hon. member should remember that the provinces did much more to encourage this than the federal government. Any reasonable or responsible request for deferral by any farmer who finds himself in difficulty, will be dealt with sympathetically by the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. Inasmuch as some of the programs have been "stop loss" rather than "make profit", has the government given any consideration to picking up the tab for interest on Farm Improvement Loans?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have given any concentrated consideration to this but I would be only too willing to discuss it with my colleague who has jurisdiction over the Farm Improvement Loan program, the Minister of Finance.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES ON CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture who on Monday night indicated some willingness to table the telegrams sent to him concerning the operations of CEMA by the provincial ministers of agriculture. There are indications that CEMA is in very bad financial trouble and is not getting the necessary co-operation from the provinces. In view of the urgency of the matter, I wonder whether the minister would table the correspondence so that either the Standing Committee on Agriculture or the House could see exactly what the situation is in regard to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, during the course of debate the other night I reported to the House that most of the provinces had committed themselves to paying the money. Some of them have paid it. I would say that CEMA is in a better financial position than it has ever been. We are following the proper course, asking permission from the senders of the telegrams, the provincial ministers, to table the telegrams in this House. I hope to have that authority shortly.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DIFFICULTIES IN FINANCIAL BRANCH IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the Minister of Labour if mediation services would be assisting in the serious labour problems of the Air Canada financial branch in Winnipeg. The minister announced that he would look into the matter and report early this week. I wonder if the minister can now report.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think that particular altercation took place in December and was resolved, although the basic problem has not been resolved. I understand Air Canada indicated they are prepared to open up the agreement and discuss classifications. We are awaiting a reply from the union. This was my information as of a day or two ago, but I will check again.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 18, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening, clause 69 was under consideration.

On clause 69.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would draw the minister's attention to subclause (3) of clause 69. My remarks may touch on clause 70 as well. The minister received a letter from a gentleman living in British Columbia who said that he cannot work because of a heart condition. At the age of 50 he cannot work at all. The impact of the income tax law is such that he finds himself paying about ten times the amount of tax paid by others who, because of the peculiar wording of the act, are entitled to various exemptions and deductions.

I shall refer to the letter but not reveal the name of the writer. The letter is dated February 3, 1975. The writer says that he wrote to the minister a year ago complaining that a person under age 65 who is forced to retire on pension for medical reasons is victimized by our tax laws. He pointed out as follows:

> —a person such as myself, forced to retire from the public service at age 50 because of severe cardiac condition and unable to work, received no tax relief. I can claim neither the age deduction nor the disability deduction because I am not confined to bed or a wheelchair.

The writer of the letter then suggested:

> Canada Pension paid on a disability basis prior to age 65 should be tax deductible . . . the disability deduction should be allowed those who are unemployable on medical certificate even though their condition does not confine them to bed or wheelchair.

The minister replied in part as follows:

> —there are, of course, situations where an individual cannot be gainfully employed because of disability although he is not confined to bed or wheelchair. It would be difficult, however, to distinguish in the tax law between the varying degrees of disability or incapacity, some of which would preclude gainful employment, others of which would not seriously impair earning ability.

This B.C. constituent comments on the minister's letter and says:

> The validity of this view escapes me. Surely, a person is disabled and unable to work, or he is not; the question being one for medical decision. In my own case, I have been medically certified by the Department of National Health and Welfare as unable to work both for the purposes of the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Canada Pension Plan. What more proof can be required to establish disability?

There are many who are not yet 65 but who for various reasons cannot work. The income tax law does not provide relief for such people who through no fault of their own are placed in an awkward position. The writer of the letter, whose 1974 income was $6,312, compares his position with that of a person aged 65 or more. According to his calculations, he pays $579.40 in tax whereas the pensioner with whom he compares himself pays only $53.60 I wonder if the minister can explain this anomaly. What is the reason for it? I ask this question because several people in my constituency are similarly placed. Will the minister consider reviewing the pertinent sections of the act in order to provide relief for people caught in such unfortunate circumstances?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I remember the particular case to which the hon. member refers. We do receive letters of that sort. I have said on other occasions that the income tax law is a global law and it is difficult to gear it to individual circumstances. We have extended, during the last three years, deductions and exemptions for the handicapped. The clause presently before the committee will further extend them. When I received the letter, which speaks for itself, there was no way to draw a line or to provide significantly different relief for that particular case without extending the law into areas in which its administration might be open to abuse. We are continually studying these cases but we must draw the line somewhere. We have extended decuctions and exemptions again in the budget, as is evident if one studies this and other clauses. I do not have anything to add to what I said in the letter which the hon. gentleman quoted.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister hazard a guess as to how many people find themselves in circumstances similar to those outlined by the writer of the letter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman, we could not even hazard a guess. These relieving amendments usually come about because of letters which I or the minister of the day may receive from individual Canadian citizens or from their members of parliament. Or amendments are introduced as a result of the representations of members of parliament. That is how the current increases or extensions of deductions and exemptions have found their way into the bill. We receive correspondence from various parts of the country. At the moment, however, the type of case illustrated by the hon. member is not so widespread as to justify, in our opinion, remedial relief through the tax law rather than by other means.

Mr. Stevens: Can the minister give the committee an estimate of the number of inquiries he has had concerning this type of problem?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot answer precisely, but there have not been very many.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, may I raise another question which is not related directly to clause 69? Can the minister say whether his department is considering giving income tax relief to those who must wear artificial limbs? As I understand it, they are now caught in the position where this necessary item is rapidly increasing in price and there is no provision for any type of deduction in respect of the cost of an artificial limb.

● (1610)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have a feeling, as does the assistant deputy minister, that it already qualifies as a medical expense.

Mr. Stevens: I would like the minister to expand on this. That was my impression until I started to check into it. I was speaking not to the departmental people but to tax consultants, and I could not get confirmation that it was deductible—certainly not 100 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we will give the hon. member the answer to that question as soon as we look at the regulations. It is a medical expense. We will get the section in a minute.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to explain fully subclause (5) on page 178. I would like to know the purport of this provision. Considering the high unemployment situation, how does the minister define the words "perpetual poverty"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to do my best to satisfy the inquiry of the hon. member. This amendment makes a relieving change to subsection 110(2) of the act under which a member of a religious order who has taken a vow of perpetual poverty may deduct from his income an amount equal to his earned income. Earned income is generally income from employment and business. The deduction equals the income which goes to the order and is not taxable to them. Earned income is generally income from employment and business.

Although paid in respect of employment or past employment, superannuation and pension benefits do not form part of the taxpayer's earned income. This amendment, therefore, provides that a taxpayer who is a member of a religious order and has taken a vow of perpetual poverty may deduct superannuation and pension benefits as well as earned income from his income, the reason being that superannuation benefits are not within the general definition of "income" under the Income Tax Act. This amendment will result in a retired member of a religious order being put in the same taxation position as a member who continues to work in a religious order.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to figure out "perpetual poverty". There are a lot of people in perpetual poverty vis-à-vis a lot of other things. How do you define that? Does a person have to belong to a religious order to get in on this deal?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is not the vow one takes when becoming a member of parliament. It is a vow taken in a religious order, under the rules of that order, whereby a man or woman who becomes a member of a religious order of a denomination that recognizes the vow of poverty disclaims any future right to income, the income going to the order. He or she has no future right to that income.

For many years it has been recognized under the Income Tax Act that the deduction from income is equal to what he or she earns by way of employment in a hospital or school. The money is transferred directly to the order. He or she does not get it and therefore pays no tax on it. However, since the definition of "income" within the act does not include superannuation benefits, this is an extension to ensure that such benefits are now included.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Jones: If a person is entitled to superannuation or pension benefits, apparently through the order, he must have obtained vested rights in superannuation or some type of pension. He would not, then, be perpetually in poverty. He must have a right: he is not poor.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): His employer, the hospital or what have you, may have contributed to that pension plan. The man or woman has disclaimed a right in it and has assigned it to the order. The amendment provides that he or she is not taxable on it, in the same way that no tax is paid by those who have taken a perpetual poverty vow during their working lives. There is nothing revolutionary about this. It is just a fact that now in hospitals, schools, and so on, members of religious orders who work for nothing, assigning their money to the order, have an extension of that principle upon retirement.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, I ask for clarification on a matter raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe concerning persons who are forced to retire on pension for medical reasons and feel they have been victimized under the tax law. In his reply the minister indicated that he felt there had not been a sufficient number of representations made to provide for remedial action in this regard. However, in a letter which he wrote earlier, the minister said this had not been brought about because it would be difficult to distinguish, under the tax law, between varying degrees of disability or incapacity. In other words, he stated previously in writing that no changes had been made because of the difficulty of applying medical standards to this problem. He now seems to be saying there are not enough representations to justify remedial legislation. Which of the two reasons does the minister now wish to put forward to these people?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, that is not what I said. I asked the hon. member for York-Simcoe how many cases there were. I said there had not been many representations. My reason for excluding this type of deduction is the one I gave to the person who wrote to the hon. member for York-Simcoe, namely, that it would be very difficult to draw a line to include this type of deduction in a global statute such as the Income Tax Act which applies to Canadians generally. I would advise the hon. member for York-Simcoe that I now have the section which allows as a medical expense an artificial limb, iron lung, and so on: it is section 110(1)(c), item (9).

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I have a question with regard to travel expenses incurred for medical purposes. The case I have in mind concerns dialysis patients who sometimes find it necessary to travel a considerable distance at regular intervals in order to receive treatment. Are such travelling expenses covered in this bill or are they allowed as a medical deduction?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, within a certain mileage. There is a limit. We incorporated this provision in the last budget. As a matter of fact, the former member for Skeena, Frank Howard, was particularly interested in this. I am trying to get the particular section. We dealt with this matter in the last bill.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 70.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment which I want to withdraw, and I want to substitute another one. There have been several representations, particularly from the hon. member for Duvernay and the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean, with regard to the definition of "interest" under this exemption. Hon. members will recall that in the budget of May 6, 1974, reinstated by the budget of November 18, 1974, there was a deduction from income of the first $1,000 of interest. The bill reflects that as net interest. The hon. member put it to me that this might militate against farmers who had borrowed by way of mortgage to finance their farm operations. He put it to me that gross interest would be a fairer way of calculating it. We have looked into this question very carefully and I now propose an amendment to clause 70, page 180 of the bill.

● (1620)

The amendment I am now proposing will have the effect of eliminating the requirement that the deduction in computing taxable income in respect of interest earned be in respect of net interest. As originally proposed, the interest which could be deducted was limited to the taxpayer's interest income minus the deductible interest expenses which he incurred in the year. This approach was proposed in order to eliminate the possibility that a taxpayer might simply borrow funds to generate interest or dividend income which would be free of tax, while at the same time deducting from his income the cost of borrowing the funds. While I am satisfied that there was good reason for this limitation, it has been drawn to my attention that it created serious difficulties for taxpayers who had borrowed funds for legitimate business purposes and were claiming the interest expenses on the borrowed funds.

The taxpayers most affected by this limitation were unincorporated businessmen, unincorporated farmers, members of partnerships and individuals who had borrowed funds to invest in rental housing. The effect of this limitation was to ignore the distinction between what I might term business borrowing and the income generated by what are essentially personal investments unrelated to the carrying on of the business. Under these circumstances, rather than penalize these taxpayers I am proposing this amendment which will ignore interest expenses for the purpose of the interest deduction and will give the deduction for the first $1,000 of gross interest or dividend income.

The reason I have presented this amendment as being effective only for 1975 and subsequent taxation years is to ensure that taxpayers will have their 1974 refund cheques expedited. If a change were to be made effective for 1974, it would mean a delay of at least four weeks, and possibly longer, in sending out refund cheques. This delay would be caused because all the 1974 returns are structured to reflect the net interest concept. Every return which has been processed would have to be redone. The Revenue Canada computer would have to be reprogrammed and every cheque which has been written but not issued pending the passage of Bill C-49 would have to be redone. Having regard to the cost in time, money and inconvenience it appears to be the wiser course to make this amendent effective for 1975. I therefore move:

That clause 70 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 39 to 49 on page 178;

This has the effect of converting the definition of net interest to gross interest. I would like to withdraw from the table—I do not need to withdraw it from the committee because it has not been presented—the amendment I circulated earlier. Hon. members will now be provided with copies of the amendment I have just moved.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with matters which are not dealt with in the amendment.

Mr. Bawden: I, too, wish to deal with the clause as amended.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So do I.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Clause 70 embodies the government's proposal to encourage Canadians to save a little more. Provision is now made in the tax return for the deduction of up to $1,000 in respect of interest receipts and dividends. This is, of course, a welcome concession, a welcome addition to the tax law. Then, again, there is the $2,500 which is deductible in respect of registered retirement savings funds and the $4,000 in respect of those self-employed.

The question I wish to put to the minister has to do with a wider difficulty which the world is facing in an economy which is increasingly capital-intensive. Projects undertaken today cost ten times as much as they did only a few years ago. As a result, economists are advising governments to adopt taxation measures which encourage more individuals and companies to save. These small concessions I have mentioned go in the direction of meeting this request by the economists, but they do not even begin to meet the tremendous demand for capital. In the field of energy-related enterprises alone, the United States will in the next 25 years be requiring between $750 billion and $1,000 billion. In Canada, a nation with one-tenth of the wealth of the United States, we expect to be called on to provide $250 billion of capital to meet the needs of energy-related enterprises.

If we divided the number of years left in this century into $250 billion, we would find that Canada has to raise $10 billion a year to finance energy-related enterprises alone. This involves an important political issue. We have seen over the last 30 years a large segment of the industrial and resource field get into the hands of people in other countries who could provide the capital needed to enable development to take place in that period. Today, the investment needs in the field of energy alone are ten times greater.

There is no point our looking any more to the companies to which we could at one time turn for help in developing Canadian industries; demand for capital is now worldwide. We are dealing, as I say, with the need of $10 billion a year for the energy sector alone, yet all the minister can do in this budget is provide that if an individual gets $1,000 by way of interest, he can deduct it. I suggest that if the minister is to respond in any realistic way to Canadian needs, he will have to revise his parameters. Only a certain proportion of income can be saved; the rest has to be used in meeting living costs. All those who can save because the family is raised, because they already possess their cars and television sets, must be encouraged to change their habits from those of a consuming society to those of a saving society. Before you can get them to save, you have to give them inducements to save, with the knowledge that at the end of the saving period they will still be able to enjoy the value of their money.

Therefore I come back to the other statement, that I do not think we can rely any more upon large international companies and accumulations of capital from Europe or the United States to help us out. We are faced with the fact that we must increase the amount of savings in Canada on the part of individuals, on the part of institutions that specialize in savings, so as to meet our capital requirements. Unless we do this, we will end up by turning this country over to outside investors who do not necessarily put Canadian interests first.

I put it to the minister that even these large companies cannot cope with this situation. Companies of the world have always relied on the generation of enough earnings and profits to provide the capital flow that will enable them to pay some dividends to their shareholders and to use the balance for new investment. Using the Canadian figures that the NDP are fond of quoting, the profits, for example, of Canadian oil companies are double or triple what they were two years ago. This is true. But if you add up all the profits of the oil companies in Canada, they came to less, at the end of 1974, than one-tenth of our annual need for capital investment in energy-related projects in Canada.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has warned the Canadian nation that we need $101 billion over the next ten years, which is $10 billion a year, the figure which I have quoted. Yet the Minister of Finance of the same government apparently is not listening to this warning. He has come along with a reduction, a combination of both interest and dividend payments, of $1,000. This is a mere pencil-scratch. Since we cannot get the money for capital flow from the profits of these companies, what are we going to do, Mr. Chairman? We must revise our whole tax structure to put the emphasis on saving, not on consuming. This is a task all nations in the western world will have to undertake during the next 25 years.

My question to the minister is this: Is the recommendation of the Carter royal commission, now eight years old—namely, that we should end double taxation in respect of Canadians who buy equities in Canadian industry—going to be adopted? As the committee probably remembers, the Carter royal commission recommended we should not tax twice Canadians who invest in their own country; we should only tax them once. Then the Benson reform came along and provided a 20 per cent dividend credit on a grossed-up type of income. This was a help. However, Canadians who need capital desperately if they are ever going to own their own country are still being doubly taxed if they invest in Canadian resource industries.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

The first recommendation of the Carter Commission was that we should integrate corporation tax with personal income tax so as to remove this double taxation. I ask the minister whether this idea is dead. The alternative recommendation was to pass these taxes through to the individual shareholder of the company and make provision for giving him a credit on his individual tax form. I should like to know whether this concept of Carter is dead, in view of the great need for savings in Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the proposal for integration was not quite as the hon. gentleman set forth. Mr. Carter proposed integration to eliminate so-called double taxation by removing the tax on corporations and transferring funds through taxation of individual Canadians on every source of income. Integration was rejected as an option in tax reform and in the statute that was approved as of January 1, 1972. So one could say that integration is not recognized in the statute or in the budget.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is my point, Mr. Chairman. Neither in the budget of 1972 nor in the statement of 1972 was it recognized; nor is the pass through to the shareholder recognized. I would ask the minister this question: In view of the fact that the situation in 1972 is not the situation of 1975—$1 billion a year covered most of our capital rquirements in the energy related industries three years ago, whereas today we need $10 billion a year—is this Carter proposal dead entirely, or is the minister still willing to consider it for some future budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Of course, Mr. Chairman, the gross-up of the dividend credit is a type of partial integration which is available to the shareholder even if the company is not in a tax position or because of deductions does not pay tax. We recognized some of the necessity for saving in this budget, as we did in earlier budgets. For example, there is the $1,000 interest exemption, the $1,000 dividend exemption that is taken on top of the gross-up. Then there is the registered home ownership savings plan which permits deduction of amounts up to a maximum of $10,000 for each partner of the marriage or, if both are working, up to $20,000 cumulatively. Then there is the capital cost allowance extension without a terminal date, the two-year write-off, and for manufacturers and processors the 40 per cent tax rate.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, over the past two or three years we have made some attempts to arrive at a reallocation that is acceptable. I do not argue with the thesis advanced by the hon. gentleman that in tax statutes we must weigh the balance of convenience against the balance of philosophical assumption as between incentives on one hand and equity to the taxpayer on the other. So incentive is only part of the application of a tax statute. But I do not quarrel with his general thesis, namely, that we must encourage and inject more savings into our economy if we are to respond to our capital requirements.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I thank the minister because that is exactly what I have been saying. All the techniques that the minister has listed are movements in the right direction. The only suggestion I would put to the minister is that we as one of the western nations must redirect our tax system so as to reward those who save and produce. But we must do so far more rapidly than has been the case to date, even in this improved budget as compared with previous budgets. In effect, I am asking the minister to keep this option open. Even if the principle of equity disappears in the process, we must try to emphasize savings.

Most tax money which is returned to the consumer encourages more spending, which is the currently accepted way to revitalize the economy. But this is not necessarily the right approach over the long term when we have to increase the gross capital stock of the country. I will come later to the other proposal of more rapid velocity flow, but I should like the committee to understand that I support any proposal in the budget that provides incentive to save, even in small amounts. We must start right away to put emphasis on changing the habits of Canadians and get them to devote 10, 15 or 20 per cent of their incomes to savings. This we must do if we are to build up the capital pool that we need in this country.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, my question to the finance minister concerns interest income deductions. For 1974 a husband may claim up to $1,000 tax-free income a year, but may not make any claim in regard to interest received by his spouse. I should like to ask the minister if he is contemplating any change this year, or will he consider making a change next year to allow the spouse's interest to be claimed?

● (1640)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is right in his assumption that the interest deduction is only available to the person receiving the interest against that person's income tax. If the wife and the husband both have interest income, each can use the separate interest exemption against his or her income, but they cannot transfer that exemption. I did make one exception to that rule in the budget, namely, with respect to couples 65 years of age and over where one partner to the marriage is receiving income, that partner can use not only the additional exemption for those 65 years of age and over which is applicable to himself or his wife but also the exemption available to the other partner if that partner is 65 years of age or over.

Mr. McKenzie: I also asked the minister whether he was planning to make any change this year in respect of this interest.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, I would not count on it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I received a letter from a Vancouver real estate firm in respect of the interest income deduction. In this letter the writer points out:

—it has now come to the writer's attention from the Vancouver daily Province that if an individual owns an apartment building and has a mortgage or bank loan against the property and consequent interest charges thereon, then the interest charges must be set off against the $1,000 interest earned allowance.

In view of the following this would not appear to be fair or reasonable.

1) The mortgage and bank loan has probably been set up for some time and was not done in order to take advantage of the budget proposals.

2) The purpose was to produce investment income the net of which is taxable.

3) Other points in the budget re depreciation were made in order to create a climate whereby investors would be inclined to produce rental accommodation. This would appear to be working against that possibility.

The writer therefore is of the opinion that mortgage or bank interest paid on this type of investment and interest paid in connection with operating a business should not be considered and should not have to be deducted from the $1,000 allowance.

In addition, an individual may have retained Canada Savings Bonds and used them as collateral for the bank loan rather than cash them in. It is to be presumed that the federal government did not want bonds cashed in or they would not have made them so attractive.

I wonder if the minister is considering this type of complaint.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think we dealt with matter that in the amendment the committee just passed, namely, that the interest is now considered for 1975 and subsequent years on a gross basis rather than a net interest basis. This meets the problem the hon. member has just described.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions I should like to put to the minister for the purpose of clarification. The first is in respect of page 178 and the amendment to 110.1(1) (b) (ii), the taxpayer's grossed-up dividends for the year. I note that is defined on page 180, but I find myself at a bit of a loss to understand what exactly is the taxpayer's grossed-up dividends for the year. Is it the dividends increased by the one-third which the shareholder has to declare as earned dividends for the year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is yes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That being so, I wonder why the nomenclature has been changed, because normally when one receives a statement of dividends it refers to the taxable amount of dividends. Why is that term not used to simplify matters for simple souls like myself who have all the difficulty in the world in trying to work out their income tax, rather than using a new term, that is, "the taxpayer's grossed-up dividends"?

My second question is related to the extraordinary practice adopted, and to the comments of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who indicated the need for savings. There is actually a penalty being imposed on those who have saved because of the necessity of having to gross up their income by declaring more income than they have actually received. I am wondering how this extraordinary practice ever crept into our law and, having done so, why it was retained. Has that been lost in history?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I got the preamble but I did not get the question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question relates to this grossing up of dividends and the desire—in fact, the need in this society of ours—to save. A person who has saved and draws dividends is penalized for saving because he has to declare more revenue than he actually receives—one-third more as far as dividends are concerned—and he has to pay taxes on that extra income. I know this is not new in the bill, but it has been puzzling me for many years. I have received numerous complaints from people who say they refuse to sign the statement that they have received this income, because they have not received it.

I see the minister blinking, winking and sniggering, but this is one of those things that ministers do. People who have put a good deal of effort into laying aside money in order to earn an income when the moment comes to retire are now penalized for having done so. About a month ago I made a plea for those members of our society who are over 65. I maked this plea for all members of our society who are still trying to save and are being taxed on income they are not receiving. There is a tax rebate, but it still does not bring the dividends down to the actual amount received by the bondholder or stockholder.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The story behind this gross-up is a long one. The House went into it in great detail when we were discussing tax reform. In respect of income against which the tax rate is 40 per cent or less, the taxpayer in Canada who receives dividend income gets an advantage from the gross-up and that advantage encourages savings. The hon. gentleman ought to recall that the amount of the gross-up is also reflected in the tax credit against taxes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is reflected against what?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The taxpayer gets a bigger tax credit because of the gross-up until his income reaches the stage where he would be paying at the 40 per cent rate. Until that point the gross-up is an advantage to him or her.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I must say that this baffles me. Perhaps my mathematics are not as good as those of officials of the Department of Finance. I will have to take the minister's word for it, because I do not follow this.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the best thing I can do for the hon. gentleman is to send him a letter in which I will outline the gross-up provision. It has caused confusion, and I am sure I receive as many letters about it as the hon. member. I will set it forth in a letter.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would be very happy if the minister would do that. I should like to ask one more question for clarification. Again, this relates to page 178 and the $1,000. Let us take the hypothetical case of a person who spends up to the hilt of his income but has an income which is taxable. Can he claim the $1,000 whether he saves or not?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No; the exemption from taxable income is only in respect of interest or dividend income. The clause reads:

● (1650)

For the purpose of computing the taxable income for a taxation year of an individual . . . there may be deducted from his income for the year an amount equal to the lesser of

(a) $1,000, and—

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But that has been amended.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In other words, you claim either $1,000 of interest or dividend income or whatever your interest or dividend income was up to $1,000. So it is only interest or dividend income.

Mr. Andre: You should have said "the lesser of".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right. It is your actual interest or dividend income up to $1,000.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am sorry, but I found it very confusing to read, and I am sure that those of us who within the next month or two will be filling in our income tax forms will find it even more difficult. I have another question with regard to page 179, the recurrence of paragraph (2) in this case, and page 181, section 110.2. The recurring paragraph (2) again lists those elements which may not be included, such as, "For the purposes of this section, interest shall not include any amount," etc. Presumably the section is 110.1—or is it 110.2?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On page 179 the section is 110.1.

M. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It refers back? Are these the exclusions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words of thanks to the minister and express my satisfaction, and that of all my colleagues who made representations to him, and introduced the amendment which has just been moved and passed; this amendment will obviously be advantageous for a special group, for which I have a soft spot, the farmers, and of course the small investors.

I also wish to congratulate and thank the minister. The clause which authorizes an exemption of $1,000 in investment income meets the request I have made repeatedly, not only to this minister but also to his predecessors in past years as well as to the right hon. Prime Minister. I am personally very happy to see that this is now becoming part of our legislation, and that Canadians will be encouraged to save for their old age, to take care of themselves.

However, I should like the minister to explain to the House what interpretation applies to credit unions, savings unions and other similar Quebec savings and investment groups: will their members be authorized to deduct the interest on their investments in these savings groups, under this new exemption?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, first I should like to make a brief comment on the very human reply made by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich a few minutes ago when he said that these words mean "your interest up to $1,000." This is very simple, is it not? Why cannot that language be used in a thousand other places?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am right with you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why cannot that simple language be used in income tax legislation and pension legislation? Yesterday we had before us a bill to amend a dozen different superannuation acts, and that unclear language appears all the way through it—"the lesser of" this and that. When one looks at it, one must translate it into double negatives and go back again, but the minister himself can stand up and in a split second say that what it means is "your interest up to $1,000." I was glad to see the mandarin sitting in front of the minister laugh as he did. I hope he got the hint.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The mandarin sitting in front of me was smiling because this was drafted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But the Minister of Finance used to be the Minister of Justice. Why did he not do something about this when he was there?

We are now on clause 70 which runs from page 178 to page 185. It does quite a few things, but in the main it does two things: it provides for a $1,000 interest deduction from one's taxable income which applies to the taxation year 1974, and it provides for the deductibility of $1,000 pension income which will apply to the taxation year 1975. My friends to the right have already expressed their welcome acceptance of the $1,000 interest deduction, and I join with others in saying that this is fine for those who have interest income and can get this extra advantage. I say the same thing with respect to the deduction that is to be allowed for pension income which will apply in the taxation year 1975, with which taxpayers will be coping when they complete their returns in April of 1976.

I say, on behalf of persons over 65, and the pensioners under 65 in some cases who will benefit from this, that for all of them it will be very welcome. But the minister knows very well what I will say: what about the 50 per cent or more of persons 65 and over who pay no income tax? The statistics back up the percentage I just gave. There are about 1,800,000 Canadians of 65 and over who draw old age security, and more than half of those who draw old age security also draw the guaranteed income supplement.

If they are drawing the guaranteed income supplement, it means they have little or no other income. The guaranteed income supplement is already non-taxable, so I submit that it is not a far-out estimate that about half of our senior citizens 65 and over already pay no income tax, so this benefit—which is welcomed by those who do pay tax; by those who have savings, to use the language of my friends to the right—does not apply to those persons who should be remembered but whom this minister has forgotten.

The minister may want to tell me that this is one of the budget bills and is not a bill in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. But I remind him that on more than one occasion when an election was ensuing, budget speeches told us of improvements that were going to be made in the pensions of senior citizens and others. The minister is smiling and acknowledging that he has done this himself. I say to the minister that if he is really concerned about the income position of our senior citizens, he should be matching these income tax deductions with an increase in the basic amount of old age security so that improving the position of senior citizens will be put into effect across the board and will not apply to only half or less than half of those who are in that category. I hope the minister will comment on that.

The minister said earlier today that his views were expressed at the conference of provincial health ministers by the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to a guaranteed annual income. As I said to my colleague when he made that reply, "That is what bothers me". It was the minister's answer on that that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had to make. He is in a pretty key position as keeper of the treasury. I should like to hear from him how he managed to forget the other 50 per cent of senior citizens. My friend from Esquimalt-Saanich wants to go further than the Minister of Finance, in relieving those over 65 of income tax. If he can carry that through, that is fine, but even that program, no matter how much you provide income tax deductibility for senior citizens, will be of no help to those who do not receive enough income to pay any income tax at all.

Mr. Chairman, there is another question I want to put to the minister which is quite unrelated to what I have been talking about, but it will save me jumping up and down and perhaps when the minister replies he will deal with it as well. At the top of page 183 of Bill C-49, there are some words that indicate what happens with reference to this $1,000 pension deduction in the case of a taxpayer and a spouse. The minister was good enough to give a simple answer to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I wonder if he will give me an equally simple answer as to what the words at the top of page 183, lines 1 to 20, really mean.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, public pensions and the Canada Pension Plan now have an index system to a certain extent. We have indexed the guaranteed income supplement and the old age pension to protect people 65 and over against the erosion of the purchasing power of the dollar. This is to protect those citizens who have saved or contributed to non-public, private pension plans, including most of the workingmen and women in this country. I think we are putting them in a position where the erosion of what they might have otherwise expected from their pensions by reason of inflation over the last 18 months is somewhat compensated by rendering the first $1,000 free of tax; in other words, putting the workingmen and women of this country, particularly those who have private pension contracts with employers, in the same position as those with public pension plans.

The hon. gentleman also asked about the exception that I mentioned to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he inquired whether the $1,000 interest exemption was transferrable from one spouse to another. I said it was not, and the only exception to that was the exemption against income tax given to everybody of 65 and over. Obviously, the exemption can only be an exemption against income, and in the situation of most married couples 65 and over, it is only one of the couple receiving income against which the exemption can be used. As additional relief for couples 65 and over, the spouse who files an income tax return because he or she has income can use as an exemption not only the extra $1,000 but also the exemption available to the spouse which the spouse would not be able to use otherwise because there was no income available.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is the age exemption?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is the age exemption.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I appreciate the fact that the minister is making it clear that when there is only one taxpayer of two persons in a marriage, that taxpayer can claim the 65 or over age exemption for both parties. What I see at the top of page 183, however, has to do with the $1,000 pension income on top of the age and other exemptions. What I am asking is, if there is a taxpayer who already gets the $1,000 extra exemption because he is over 65, and another $1,000 because his spouse is over 65, and if he has pension income of over $1,000 and so does his spouse, do both of them get the extra $1,000?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman, only the spouse who files the return. In other words, the $1,000 pension income is not transferrable. If the other spouse has other sources of income, that exemption will be available. The hon. gentleman stated the case correctly for the 65 and over exemption, but there is no cumulative privilege for the $1,000 pension.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister is satisfying me as easily as he satisfied the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. Looking at the language at the top of page 183, it reads:

> (5) Where the spouse of a taxpayer
> (a) has attained the age of 65 . . . has received pension income in the year . . .
> the taxpayer may, in addition to the amount, if any, deducted by him . . . deduct an amount equal to the amount, if any, by which the lesser of
> (c) $1,000, and
> (d) the spouse's pension income or qualified pension income, as the case may be, for the year
> exceeds
> (e) the amount deductible in the year by his spouse under subsection (1) or (2) as the case may be.

The minister just said it is not transferrable at all, that if one spouse is the taxpayer he claims only the $1,000 pension income exemption, but this clause seems to say there is something in addition that he can deduct. My unprofessional reading of this leads me to believe he can deduct something, but I cannot figure out what it is. Surely the minister is not right in saying that this clause provides there can be no additional deduction when the words I have just read say he may deduct such and such. What is that such and such?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we will look into that question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may we just wait a minute so there can be communication with those who know? I hope my point is clear. The minister has said there can be no extra deductibility, yet the words at the top of page 183 seem to suggest there can be deductibility in addition to what the taxpayer has already claimed.

An hon. Member: Is that true?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I just want to make sure this is right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suspect other members want to speak on this clause, so maybe my friend will work on it and get some word from upstairs, and we can come back to it later. I think the question deserves to be answered. While that is being done, Mr. Chairman, may I pose another question to the Minister of Finance? In doing so I want at the outset to admit and declare a conflict of interest.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are not that old.

● (1710)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let me say at the outset also that having declared the conflict of interest in what I am going to raise, if the deduction which I think ought to be allowed is granted, I will not claim it when I file my income tax return. I am not putting on any halo; I just want to do what is right.

Mr. Nowlan: You have never taken your halo off.

Mr. Paproski: If Moses could deduct it, why couldn't you?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I happen to be a member of the International Typographical Union. I do not believe he was. Are there any other members here? The International Typographical Union has a pension plan which is in some difficulty. If I retire—and I say "if"—there may not be any money in it for me, so that is that. However, questions have been raised in the last year or so about the rights of the members of the International Typographical Union to claim a deduction for the payments they are making into that pension plan, on the ground that it is not the usual type of pension plan but a fraternal benefit arrangement. It was recognized for tax deductibility for many years, but within the last couple of years the plan has been questioned. Actually, the matter has been under dispute or discussion between the union and the Department of National Revenue. It may even be under appeal at present.

It strikes me, as I read the language of the bill, that the Department of National Revenue may have to disallow these payments into that plan. But I appeal to the minister to look again at the law or to ask the people of his department to look again at the law. The reason I do so is that the workers, the members of this union, are making contributions which are reasonably substantial. The plan has been set up solely for the purpose of providing pensions for their fellow workers. The money is not put away in a registered retirement savings plan or in a trust company; it is held by the union which operates on a "pay as you go" basis. Pensions are paid each year to those who have retired, out of the funds which come in each year from those who are working.

My point is this: Canadians who are in this union are making payments into a fund the purpose of which is to provide pensions. They make these payments in the hope that when they retire they will get their pensions from this same fund. Yet, as I said, the Department of National Revenue is questioning the right of the members of that union to claim deductibility. It was Mr. Abbott many years ago who brought in the provision allowing for deductibility of trade union dues and who separated pension plan payments from other income. This worked well for years. Now there is this trouble. While the Department of National Revenue is considering the matter in terms of the law as it now is, would the minister look at it and consider my contention that the law ought to be changed to cover this kind of case?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will certainly do that.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask another question about the $1,000 exemption which has been included for the express purpose of encouraging savings. Senior citizens receiving the old age pension are not affected by this particular exemption. Yet, if my information is correct, interest from savings does affect entitlement to GIS. Will the minister clarify this point? If I am right, I suggest that the law will discourage savings, whereas those who have been less thrifty and have spent all they earned will benefit: such people are entitled to OAS and GIS, whereas those who have saved money and enjoy interest income will not be entitled to GIS or will not be able to participate fully in that program.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is correct in his interpretation. The incentive to save, in other words equalization for those who have taken pains to provide for themselves, is recognized by this exemption of $1,000. Equalization is not included under GIS because the GIS is an income tested supplement to the old age pension. So in recognition of the incentive and because we want to encourage people to save for themselves, we have allowed this interest exemption from income.

Mr. Patterson: It seems to me that those who did not save will receive assistance from society, whereas those who have saved or who have denied themselves will be penalized. I wonder if the minister could consider this particular point and declare that GIS shall not be affected by interest income.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think we have an answer for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The way the bill is now drafted, it provides that if the non-taxable spouse is not in a tax bracket and has pension income of, say, $500, that pension income is deducted from the marital exemption available to her husband. What this transfer does is restore the full exemption despite the pensionable income but does not transfer the pensionable income exemption. Does the hon. member follow? In other words, the pension income is exempted as a deduction from the marital exemption available to the other spouse but the total exemption is not transferred. So what I said to the hon. gentleman still stands: the pension exemption of $1,000 is not transferred to any pension received by the other spouse who is not otherwise taxable; that is not considered in lowering the marital exemption available to the taxable spouse. I hope that is clear.

Mr. Forrestall: As clear as mud. Would the minister mind repeating it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman consults legal counsel, the hon. member for Broadview, I think this will be explained.

Mr. Gilbert: I will charge a fee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has been able to state it in such a way that he can contend he did not make a mistake in what he said previously. At least it is a fact that an exemption of up to $1,000 is available, but it is under a different name. You can do it by the restoration of the marriage exemption, which otherwise would have been lost.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman wants to put it that way, we were both right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I still think that the wording on page 183, between lines 1 and 20, could be improved. Instead of using wording like "the lesser of" this or that, why cannot the Department of Finance come up with better language, or if Finance cannot do it, why cannot the Department of Justice do it? In another moment I shall defer to someone else. The minister, in replying to my initial comments about his not doing anything for those senior citizens who are not taxable, was trying to make the point that those who live only on OAS and GIS are getting escalation, and he says that all he is trying to do is provide a comparable improvement to those who have other income as well. I point out that those who have other income as well also have their OAS escalated. May I also remind him that this escalation about which he, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and others over there boast so often, is always behind. It never keeps the retired person up with the cost of living, let alone up with the standard of living or in line with the gross national product.

● (1720)

If the minister now says that the 45 or 50 per cent of old age people who have other income and who suffer from inflation need restoration of their income or the protection of this $1,000 exemption for taxation purposes, I say to him that the other 45 or 50 per cent who are not in the tax bracket need it even more. I suggest that the minister go back to cabinet and get together with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let him face this problem and come back some time soon with a substantial increase in the amount of the basic old age security pension.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, in order to further encourage savings, will the minister consider making interest income non-income for guaranteed income supplement purposes?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I said earlier, the guaranteed income supplement is an income test situation and all sources of income are taken into consideration. We have to provide for the savings incentive by reason of the exemption now before the House.

Mr. Jones: I would like further clarification of the definition of "qualified pension income" which appears on page 182. Unless there have been some changes, qualified pension income is defined as income received by the taxpayer in the taxation year in the amount prescribed, and it goes on with a lot of rubbish which apparently is technical, legal jargon about being received by the taxpayer as a consequence of the death of his spouse. Then on page 183 it refers to the spouse of a taxpayer and benefits received by the taxpayer as a consequence of the death of his spouse, which does not make any sense to me.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we cannot follow the hon. member. Is this on page 182?

Mr. Jones: Page 183.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would repeat the question.

Mr. Jones: I ask the minister to look at the definition of "qualified pension income," particularly the last words. This is on page 182. The last part is "received by the taxpayer as a consequence of the death of his spouse." On page 183 it states "where the spouse of a taxpayer has received qualified pension income in the year". That does not seem to make good sense. I do not know whether this is the justice department or the Department of Finance. There is something wrong.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any conflict there. The words on page 182 are:

—were read without reference to the words "if before the end of the year the taxpayer has attained the age of 65 years,") received by the taxpayer as a consequence of the death of his spouse.

There is no conflict there. One refers to the transfer payment and the other to the type of income that is eligible.

Mr. Jones: It is received in consequence of the death. The other spouse is dead. It then says "where the spouse of a taxpayer". You are just talking out of this world.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I said earlier, there is no problem. One has to do with his receipt of income and what qualifies for the exemption. The other has to do with the transferability of the spouse's eligibility in the 65 and over situation. There is no conflict here. We will look into the point raised by the hon. member, but I assure him we think his concern is unfounded.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, I would like some clarification. "Pension income" and "qualified pension income" are described on page 182. It does not include Canada Pension Plan income. There may be a situation where a person is in receipt of old age security plus Canada pension and is taxable. Someone else might be in receipt of old age security, Canada Pension and a private pension of about $1,000. The $1,000 private pension would be exempt from tax. He might pay tax on the Canada Pension and old age security pension. This places a person with a combination of Canada Pension and a small private pension in a much better position than someone who is only in receipt of the old age security pension and the Canada Pension. Am I correct in this assumption? If I am correct, this seems to be an unfair situation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the Canada Pension and the old age security amounts are not eligible for this interest deduction because they are publicly financed plans, whereas private pension plans are contributed to by the taxpayer.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, the Canada Pension is contributed to by the taxpayer and by his employer. I am pointing out that there is a situation where a person might have a small private pension in addition to his Canada Pension. He is in a much better position than a person with only the Canada Pension and old age security. This seems unfair because the Canada Pension has been contributed to by the taxpayer and his employer, but it is not eligible for any deduction.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there are two reasons why these payments have been excluded: first, they are already indexed; second, they are heavily, and properly, subsidized from the public purse. For those reasons it was felt it was not appropriate to render them eligible for further tax deductions.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that, if not millions then certainly hundreds of thousands of Canadians, will be very happy with a pension deduction, interest deduction and dividend deduction. I want to present the argument to the minister that even though a lot of people will be happy, this measure is not based on equity. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, there are many people who do not have other pensions. My grandparents and many others of their generation in Saskatchewan are basically poor. All they receive is the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement. This provision will be of no value to them; it will not give them any additional tax exemption. That is why I resent this type of move; I do not believe it is based on equity.

The same is true of the interest and dividend write-offs. I am as concerned about people saving as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. It is possible to write off $1,000 in interest and dividend income. With today's interest rates, you can have savings of $10,000. When you look at $10,000, you are looking at the upper income bracket. The average worker might be able to write off $50, $100 or $200. He will be pleased with that.

Mr. Andre: The word is "incentive."

Mr. Nystrom: This is where I disagree with the members of the Conservative Party. I do not think this type of move provides any incentive except to those in the upper income bracket. What about those who do not have any savings? We would be better off if we spent this money on providing a tax cut. That would put the funds where they are needed, to buy food, clothing and the other necessities of life. It would help stimulate the economy. This would create more work and the economy would be in a much better position. But when you have this type of program, again the wealthier persons in our country will get the advantage. I am sure that statistics will bear that out. It will help some working people and some ordinary farmers by letting them write off $50 or $100 per year, but will also help people like, for example, lawyers, accountants, doctors and businessmen who have $8,000 in savings or $10,000 or $20,000 invested in stocks or bonds. I think that is the wrong way of going about it.

This is a very attractive little gimmick. As I said at the outset, it will make people very happy, but I don't think will work toward a more egalitarian society; and if you have a more egalitarian society I think society in general will be stronger. You will give people the basic necessities of life and also a greater incentive to work. I do not buy the old argument that you must give those who have money greater incentive so that it will trickle down from the top to the bottom.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said we will need a lot of money in the future to provide energy in this country. I agree: we will need billions and billions of dollars. But I do not think you can raise it this way. There are other ways of raising that money. You will not raise it by providing even greater incentives for those in the top income bracket of this country. I believe in the Carter principle which says that a buck is a buck. Why should I pay tax on my parliamentary indemnity? But if I have a couple of thousand dollars in the bank, why should I not pay tax on the couple of hundred of dollars I get as interest?

Mr. Andre: You could leave it in the bank, because other people need it.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps the business community will borrow that money and reinvest it. I do not buy that type of free enterprise argument. I think you can raise a lot of capital in this country in many other ways, and it strikes me as rather strange that whenever we talk about equity in Canada or whenever we talk about putting more money in the pockets of the little guy, the Conservative Party reacts very violently. I think the way to stimulate the economy is to help the little people in this country and give them more incentive to enjoy life, to be productive in the economy. If you do that, the beneficial effect on the economy will be widespread. It will be a very positive factor in the economy.

Therefore, I wish the Minister of Finance would not travel this route. I wish, instead, we would take the funds we have available, provide tax cuts for the ordinary person and low income earner and in that way stimulate the economy for all Canadians.

Mr. Gilbert: Hear, hear!

Income Tax

Mr. Stevens: I have two or three questions to put on this clause. I should like the minister to explain the reasoning behind the requirement that the interest credit to be allowed must be generated within Canada as opposed to sources outside Canada. Undoubtedly the minister has received letters from pensioners in this respect. I have one before me, a letter from a man 80 years old who receives a pension from England. He is 100 per cent disabled as a result of war injuries. He is receiving a First World War pension from Great Britain, and he points out that because of its wording this clause will be of no assistance to him since it will not apply to his interest income from the British Isles.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Foreign pension income will qualify for the $1,000 exemption on pension income. Foreign interest will not qualify for the $1,000 interest exemption. The purpose is to encourage savings, and it is to encourage savings in Canada. That is the policy reasoning.

Mr. Stevens: Was any consideration given to providing an exemption in a situation of this kind? Could the clause not have been drawn in such a way as to apply to new investment, leaving existing interest, from whatever source, as a basis for the exemption?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman; that would be an administrative nightmare.

Mr. Stevens: I thought the bureaucracy liked those nightmares. Coming back to the question of the $1,000 eligibility for both the husband and the wife, let us assume that the wife has the $1,000 interest income: as I understand it, she will be entitled to the $1,000 exemption. What happens to the husband's ordinary claim for deductibility in respect of his wife? Is it lowered by the amount of her interest receipts?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not in 1975; but in 1974, yes. There is no way we can make that adjustment in time for 1974 because some returns have already been filed.

Mr. Stevens: But the situation to which I referred will be caught in 1975 and ensuing years?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is the same principle as I discussed with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The interest income of the spouse will not be considered as lowering the marital exemption of the taxpayer.

Mr. Stevens: Up to $1,000?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Right.

Mr. Stevens: The minister has undoubtedly received representations and briefs from the life insurance industry concerning his proposal. In particular, the industry feels it has been let down very badly. The minister's predecessor, Hon. E. J. Benson, at the time he proposed a 15 per cent tax on the investment income of life insurance companies stated that in equity this would be the net income tax position the companies would have to endure. The industry now feels this clause fails to take into account the 15 per cent the companies are required to pay on their investment income and that the pass-through provisions do not properly take into account the fact that those who are saving through life insurance companies have lost the 15 per cent. When the money is finally taken out they are not given a credit for this.

I understand the industry has placed alternatives before the minister and has been turned down with regard to all but possibly the alternative which I understand is already in existence in Australia, Great Britain, Germany, Holland and South Africa. Under this proposal, 50 per cent of allowable premiums could be deducted in calculating income, up to a maximum of $1,000 less any amount claimed under the exempt investment income provision. There would be a limit on premium rates to prevent abuse. The deduction would not apply to registered policies and would be confined to policies on the life of the taxpayer, his spouse or a dependant child. Would the minister indicate his attitude toward this representation, and does he propose to move an amendment to accommodate this point?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the matter is still under consideration. As a matter of fact, I signed a letter to Mr. Tuck, general manager of the Association of Life Insurance Companies, today. We allow as an exemption, under the $1,000 exemption feature, that portion of the policy which is surrendered and bears interest. We made that recognition of the interest content in the policy. We are looking at the general 15 per cent on a different basis. As for the deductibility of the premium, the principle is that if it is deductible on the way in, it is taxable on the way out. Insurance policies are not taxable on the way out, and for that reason we have not allowed the deductibility of premiums.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I join the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville in registering my objection to the kind of principles in our income tax laws which in my view create a situation where people at the bottom of the taxable income range pay a much greater proportion of their income in tax than do people in the high income brackets.

Looking through my files this afternoon I came across an article by David Crane who was with the Ottawa bureau of the Toronto Star for several years. The article was written in 1973 and he analysed some of the information released by the revenue department relating to the year 1971. According to this article, in 1971 there were 265,000 old age pensioners, who reported incomes averaging $4,385. They paid an average federal income tax of $415 each; those in Ontario paid another $114 each in provincial tax. On the other hand, four of the richest people filing tax returns in Canada in 1971 ended up paying no federal or provincial income tax. The combined incomes of these four unidentified persons amounted to almost $1.5 million. Each had annual earnings of at least $200,000. Another four wealthy people, each with an annual income of at least $100,000, reported earnings that added up to $517,000—but they also managed to avoid paying income tax.

In 1971 there were 204 Canadians with incomes of $25,000 or more who paid no income tax. Of the people with incomes of $25,000 to $50,000 a year, there were 128 who avoided paying income tax of any kind. I should like to know how they do this. I am not talking about people who broke the law, but about people who used provisions placed in the income tax law over many years giving precisely the kind of exemption we are discussing now. The $150 or $200 interest that I will earn because I have some savings bonds I will not pay income tax on, though I do pay the regular rate on my parliamentary indemnity.

To go back to the four people with an income of more than $200,000 each, together these four reported receiving wages and salaries of $255,000, business income of $155,000, rental income from properties they owned of $10,000, gross dividends from shares in corporations of $255,000, bank interest of $59,000, income from foreign investments of $769,000, and so on. These four people with, as I have said, a combined income of almost $1.5 million were able to claim $2,632,000 in deductions. These included medical claims of $10,000, alimony of $100,000, charitable donations of $9,000—they were not very charitable—and personal exemptions and pension plan contributions of $6,000. They also claimed $2,286,000 in deductions from investment income. This covered a wide variety of allowances ranging from interest costs on money borrowed to make new investments, depletion allowances on oil, gas and mining investments, and investment advice and accounting costs.

The point I am trying to make is that over the years we have made our income tax laws more and more complicated. Every clause we have added has benefited almost exclusively the people in the middle and upper income brackets. Like the Carter commission, I believe that a buck is a buck. I do not think it matters whether a person earns his living as an electrician or as a carpenter receiving an hourly wage, or whether he has an investment portfolio which pays him two, three or five times as much as a person who works with his hands; he has income from which he derives benefit, so surely he should pay tax on his total income.

I cannot even accept the idea that what we should do today is encourage savings. We have almost one million people unemployed. The reason they are unemployed is that the people of Canada do not have the money with which to purchase the goods we produce: they do not have the money required to buy automobiles or to buy houses.

Mr. Andre: This sounds like social credit.

Mr. Orlikow: No, it is not social credit. What I am saying is that in this day and age we want to encourage people, particularly those in the lower income brackets, to live better and to spend more money. If instead of giving tax exemptions to people in the upper and middle income brackets the Minister of Finance would close off these tax loopholes, he could do what my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre has said, namely, sharply raise the basic pension paid to old age pensioners. He would be able to increase the basic exemption for people paying income tax and he could probably cut the income tax rate for all taxpayers.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is what they should start doing with the provincial income tax rates in Manitoba.

Mr. Orlikow: If the hon. member for St. Boniface wants to discuss income tax in Manitoba, I would be very happy to debate it with him in his own constituency in Winnipeg.

I would be happy to ask the people of his constituency whether they prefer a system where, if you make less than $9,000 a year, you do not pay for hospital care or medical insurance, or a system where a person earning over $9,000 does pay for such things.

Mr. McKenzie: Tell us about the auto pact.

Mr. Orlikow: I would be happy to discuss the auto pact with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre any time he wants. I suggest that he should come to my office tomorrow morning and we will call a couple of agents—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think we should direct our attention to clause 70 as amended.

Mr. Orlikow: I was trying to stick to clause 70, Mr. Chairman, but I was rudely interrupted—perhaps not rudely, but loudly interrupted by members on both sides. Let me conclude by telling the minister that I hope if he continues as Minister of Finance, before his next budget, which will probably be coming forward in a couple of months, he will take the time to read the Carter commission report and take to heart some of the basic recommendations made in it, so we will have a tax system that will stop being of major benefit to people in the middle and upper income brackets and will become one that is fair to all taxpayers in Canada.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to answer the hon. member for Winnipeg North; I am sure the minister will do that, but I wonder for how many years we will hear statistics quoted from 1971. There have been many amendments to the Income Tax Act since then, and I venture to say that the 1971 statistics quoted by the hon. member could not apply to the last couple of years.

● (1750)

I rose to ask the minister whether any lower age limit was contemplated in respect of the advantage provided as a pension income exemption, or whether in fact a person of the age of 25, for example, leaving employment could take out his pension entitlement to the extent of $1,000 tax free?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised that we have allowed in this bill for legitimate early retirement in so far as eligible pension payments are concerned.

An hon. Member: Maybe I can retire early.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As a matter of fact, we might help the hon. gentleman in that respect.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it is the intention of the legislation to allow persons who repeatedly leave employment at an early age to take out each time up to $1,000 of pension entitlement tax free. I should think this might amount to an abuse and I wonder if it has been considered.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If it is an abuse, we will look at it in a different light.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member chided me for quoting statistics for 1971. I can only say that the article from which I quoted was written in 1973 and reported on the latest figures available. There must have been a report in 1974 for 1972. I want to tell the hon. member that I intend between now and tomorrow afternoon to call the revenue department and get those figures. I am certain they will not be very different, because there are just as many people availing themselves of these loopholes now in order to avoid paying tax. I will get that information for tomorrow if it is at all possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, the point is that changes were made in the law which did away with some of those so-called loopholes and I think the hon. member will find some improvements in the statistics since then. I should like to ask a further question about this clause. Is it intended that a person rolling over one registered retirement savings plan to another, who does not use the entire proceeds from the first plan in doing so but gets a refund, will be able to use the pension exemption against such refund?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The RRSP is only available to somebody over 65, so that I cannot conceive of that happening. What the hon. gentleman is suggesting is building up a pension of over $2,500 or $4,000, and he is asking if it can be claimed as an exemption under the pension provisions. I do not think so.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 71.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could explain why in the ways and means motion it is stated that for 1975 and subsequent tax years individual taxpayers will be required in computing taxable income to go to section 109.1, 110.1, 110.2, 110 and 111 respectively in that year, whereas the proposed section, clause 71, has the same sections but 111 is missing? I think there should be an explanation. I may make some comments after I have heard the minister explain why section 111 is deleted.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This reference has been misinterpreted in some quarters and by some commentators as being relieving in nature in that it would increase the deductible amount of non-capital loss. This was never the intention. The section was dropped because of confusion and because it was not absolutely required to give meaning to the ways and means motion.

Mr. Stevens: Is the minister stating that there is no difference between the wording which appears in the ways and means motion and the section as it appears in clause 71?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is the view of the department and the Department of Justice.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 72 agreed to.

On clause 73.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we tabled an amendment, which I should like to move now. The amendment is as follows:

(a) by striking out line 26 on page 188 and substituting the following:

"been paid out of the exempt surplus, as defined by regulation (in this part referred to as exempt surplus) of"

(b) by striking out line 33 on page 188 and substituting the following:

"of the taxable surplus, as defined by regulation (in this part referred to as taxable surplus) of the affiliate"

These two changes makes specific reference to the fact that there are two terms, "exempt surplus" and "taxable surplus". These are terms defined in the regulations under the Income Tax Act but are not terms defined within the act itself. This is merely a technical amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Turner, (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): This House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEES

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question of privilege concerning the applicability of members of this House attending committee sessions in the other place. As a result of my investigations I find that this is a very subtle and important point. Second, I have been unable to obtain the Senate transcript. I would ask Your Honour's indulgence and the indulgence of this House until I have had time to give this matter further consideration and obtain a transcript.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member's request is accepted, I ask that it be without prejudice to the right of any hon. member to argue the acceptability or receivability of the motion on procedural grounds and its merits on any other grounds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A question of privilege has been raised by the parliamentary secretary and I hope that more than one hon. member will want to contribute because the question is indeed a subtle and an important one. I hope there will be no restriction on intervention by other hon. members.

MR. WATSON—AIR CANADA REQUEST THAT EMPLOYEES BE PROHIBITED FROM COMPLAINING TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: While on the subject of questions of privilege, I indicated earlier that I would endeavour to deal with two very important questions of privilege that are before the House at the present time. The first is that raised by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) which relates to facts as described by the hon. member: they are simply that in a matter before a federal tribunal, namely, the Canadian Labour Relations Board, a Crown corporation, Air Canada, made representations—at least on the hon. member's interpretation, which I accept—that members of parliament ought not to interfere personally in the relationships between employee and employer in that corporation and, more particularly, in proceedings before the Canada Labour Relations Board, I assume even by their presence at the hearings.

● (1410)

Following the description put forward by the hon. member, which I accept, the stance would be one that is contrary not only to what an MP is free or entitled to do, but it would seem in addition to refer to what he might find himself obliged to do by virtue of his capacity as a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If there was any doubt about that, the hon. member's reference to the Freedman report—a well known, famous report—the relationships in that industry and the presence of a federal member of parliament intervening in a most meaningful way in the deliberations, that doubt was dealt with by the chairman and was adequately laid to rest by the Freedman report. There seems to me to be no question that whatever the relationship between the Minister of Transport and the Crown corporation, Air Canada, there should be no doubt that there exists that element of ministerial responsibility which would compel an explanation through that minister to this House.

It would seem, further, that however one describes the relationship between the Minister of Labour and the Canada Labour Relations Board, it is not one of control but it is surely of sufficient ministerial and parliamentary responsibility that if the board were to be persuaded to accept the proposal made to it by counsel—as described by the hon. member—the House would want from the minister an explanation of the board's stance in that respect.

What this amounts to, of course, is verification that the hon. member has raised a grievance of most serious proportions. The question I have to decide is whether it is a question of privilege along the lines of the classic definitions of that particular aspect of our procedures which have been adopted in the past. As hon. members well know, parliamentary privilege has always been defined in the strictest, most narrow terms. This was nowhere more clearly or precisely expressed than by my immediate predecessor in dealing with a proposed question of privilege by the then hon. member for Skeena. The question touched upon that hon. member's difficulty in gaining permission to tour one of the federal penitentiaries. In his reasons, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said on April 29, 1971:

> On a number of occasions I have defined what I consider to be parliamentary privilege. Privilege is that which sets hon. members apart from other citizens giving them rights which the public do not possess. I suggest we should be careful in construing any particular circumstance which might add to the privileges which have been recognized over the years and perhaps over the centuries as belonging to members of the House of Commons. In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a member to discharge his duties in the House as a member of the House of Commons.

Bearing in mind that very concise reasoning, it seems to me that improvement upon it is impossible and, furthermore, unnecessary. The consequences of extending that definition of privilege to innumerable areas outside this chamber into which the work of an MP might carry him, and particularly to the great number of grievances he might encounter in the course of that work, would run contrary to the basic concept of privilege. The decision of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux is a reaffirmation of the representative value of this chamber and also of the doctrine of ministerial responsibility whereby such grievances can be and should be laid directly at the feet of the minister responsible. On that definition of privilege, despite the seriousness of the grievance I cannot find that it qualifies within the terms of a question of privilege.

MR. TRUDEL—FAILURE OF EMPLOYEES IN MONTREAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICES TO COMMUNICATE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), that question is in fact somewhat less difficult. Here there seems to be an evident breach of either the law or of a policy quite simply put forward by the government but in fact adopted by this entire House. There is, in addition, a very clear and direct line of ministerial responsibility. Indeed, this was confirmed by both ministers who took part in the discussion yesterday and accepted final ministerial responsibility for the complaint put forward by the hon. member. The hon. member's complaint is not unique to members of the House of Commons but, in fact, is common to members of the public, and for those reasons it would not appear to qualify.

May I add that it may be fortunate that these two points have come together. Because, indeed, if we were to extend the definition of "privilege" to the situation put forward by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), which, after all, has intricate and complex circumstances surrounding it, then having done that it would be difficult to stop short of covering the question put by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel). In the final analysis, it would be almost impossible for the House to say that the complaint against government services would not qualify as a question of privilege. I hope hon. members would be unanimous that questions of privilege are not suitable for that kind of grievance.

On the other hand, all of us must recognize that the role of a member of parliament extends far beyond his work in this chamber; that more and more each day in modern times a member is not only invited, but in fact compelled, to become involved in many activities outside the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In the course of that work he will inevitably find some opposition to his activities or some criticism of them. Some of them will amount to legitimate grievances that ought to be brought to the doorstep of the minister responsible. Therefore, the only vehicle we have now is the question of privilege. If we accept a question of privilege in its classic terms as not suitable for accomplishing this objective, then we must surely begin to ask ourselves if we ought not now, in recognition of the many important areas into which members have to bring themselves, to be examining new effective and direct procedures to air those grievances that are legitimate grievances which arise outside the House but which do not qualify as questions of privilege.

It is all very well for the Chair to say that this is a grievance that ought to be laid directly at the doorstep of the minister. But it is not sufficient to do that in a private way because the subject is one that other members share in common if the grievance is established. In addition, it is not something that ought to be kept private between the minister and the member, because if it is true the public has the right to know about it.

Therefore, I put forward this question to the House: Is it time to consider other procedures for enabling members to bring forward directly to a minister, in some way other than that which we know now, those grievances that are indeed legitimate but which fall short of being questions of privilege? In the interim, may I say to both hon. members who have put forward these very important and interesting grievances, that until such procedures are developed, if it is their intention to seek recognition today in order to put a question with respect to those grievances to the ministers responsible, then I will have no difficulty in seeing them; and if they are not satisfied with the answers given by the ministers, I will see that their question will arrive on the late show tonight at ten o'clock.

AIR CANADA

CLARIFICATION OF MEDIATION OFFER TO FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43. The urgency and pressing necessity of the matter is that there seems to be some misunderstanding regarding statements the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has made in this House in respect of a situation at Winnipeg as between Air Canada and its finance branch employees. These employees have not heard of the mediation services of the minister's department referred to by the minister, and they have not heard of any proposal by Air Canada to renegotiate the agreement. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the Minister of Labour be asked to make immediate contact with the Canadian Air Line Employees Association, so that misunderstandings concerning the dispute between Air Canada and its Finance Branch Employees at Winnipeg can be clarified and so that his officials can really go to work on the resolving of this dispute without further delay.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BEAUDOIN—PARKING PROBLEM ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of our Standing Orders, I rise on a question of privilege.

On Saturday February 15 last, at seven o'clock, I had, at my private residence at Bromptonville, the visit of a representative of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who handed me a document summoning me to appear on March 3 before the Ottawa-Carleton district court, as a result of the ticket I got for having parked my car illegally a few feet away from the parking zone reserved for members of parliament and Commons staff; because the latter was filled up, I was forced to use a free space in the adjoining parking lot.

Considering that on February 5 last Your Honour sent a letter to the House leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada indicating that there is a severe parking problem on Parliament Hill;

Considering that, according to my information, 354 permits have been issued to people who do not work in the House of Commons, who are not members of parliament and who do not work either in the Confederation Building;

Considering that this situation is very prejudicial not only to the members but also to all staff members who work in the House of Commons;

Considering that the situation is urgent in that it has reached the stage where summonses are issued to appear in court;

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the House of Commons set up a special committee composed of a representative of each party under the chairmanship of Your Honour to study immediately the acute problem of a shortage of parking space, and more specifically the case of the 354 parking permits issued to persons who have nothing to do with the House of Commons or its staff.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the hon. member that I have already begun the process to which he refers in his motion, namely, the re-examination of the entire question he has raised about parking. I have asked for an initial report from the officials in charge. I have also indicated to the whips of the various parties that I hope to put before them a review document which would enable discussion within the caucus. I would hope, thereafter, to call together representatives of each caucus and representatives of the various parties interested in the problem. Hopefully, very soon we will be able to come together in a meaningful way to re-examine and perhaps review the entire procedures involved. That process is already underway. Perhaps the hon. member might accept that as something I have already initiated, and perhaps would be prepared at this moment to have me simply defer his motion on the subject rather than just not accepting it.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to inform the House and Your Honour that the ticket received by my colleague from Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) was not only inacceptable, but also drawn up in English only. Furthermore, the ticket inconvenienced a member of parliament on a weekend. It seems to me that in considering the question of privilege the Chair should assure the House that it will instruct those who give tickets to show respect for Parliament Hill and draw up the parking tickets in both official languages of our country.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for having raised this very important matter.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—SUGGESTED IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF UNITED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. In view of the announcement by General Motors today that some 2,800 production line workers will be laid-off, along with 2,300 workers in other related industries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the government take immediate action to enact the policies presented to them by representatives of the United Automobile Workers some two weeks ago.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put at this time.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED AID TO SMELT FISHERMEN IN NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity requiring unanimous consent of the House.

In view of the fact that New Brunswick smelt fishermen are only being paid 8 cents to 10 cents per pound for their fish and that these products are sold retail for about 85 cents to 95 cents per pound, and these fishermen are losing money and are likely to cease operations completely, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the Minister of State responsible for Fisheries take immediate steps to remedy the plight of smelt fishermen in New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE TO PERMIT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO MAKE STATEMENT ON PICKERING AIRPORT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I should like to make a proposal about the handling of the statement later this day by my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who has a statement to make about the government's decision on Pickering. But before doing so, may I welcome the return to the House of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: He looks fully rested and for the time being in a co-operative mood.

As I was saying, my colleague, the Minister of Transport, has an announcement which he would like to make this afternoon. Because of the nature of our business today, the timing is rather awkward and, therefore, I am making my proposal in a rather indefinite form. I would like to have the agreement of the House that there would be a return to motions to enable my colleague, the Minister of Transport, to make his statement at approximately five o'clock. In other words, if there is someone speaking, he would not be interrupted for the purpose of making a statement.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank the members of the House for their welcome. I say to my hon. friend, the President of the Privy Council, who hoped that I was well rested and in a co-operative mood, that I am at least well rested—and in a co-operative mood, especially today.

[Mr. Speaker.]

With regard to the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council, I think that it is reasonable. If the Minister of Transport feels that he needs up to five o'clock to draft the statement finally, we will be prepared to agree to that proposal.

Mr. Hees: Barney is writing his speech, and for free, too.

Mr. Baldwin: I only hope that if an hon. member has the floor at that time, and has nearly finished his speech, the Chair would not see the clock until the speech has been concluded.

● (1430)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, so often we get these requests on the basis of reasons concerning the stock market, and so on. It is refreshing to get the request today for the simple reason that the minister does not have the statement ready. In the discussions which took place before this agreement was reached, it was also understood that copies of the statement would be in the hands of each opposition spokesman a reasonable time before we revert to motions. I trust that is part of the agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are still agreeable to the general proposal of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), but we wish to express further our hope there will be afterwards a question period that will last until the sitting is suspended at six o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the oral questions may I ask, in light of those remarks, is it agreed that the House revert to motions at five o'clock under those terms as proposed by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

ENERGY

OIL—ANTICIPATED LEVEL OF IMPORT PRICES, DOMESTIC PRICES AND VOLUME OF IMPORTS AS BASIS FOR IMPORT COMPENSATION PAYMENT

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): My question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the main estimates tabled yesterday there is an item under the heading, Energy Supplies Allocation Board, for a payment of $1.3 billion in oil import compensation. Would the minister clarify for the House the assumptions upon which this expenditure projection is based and, specifically, the anticipated level of crude oil import prices, the anticipated level of the domestic oil price and the volume of oil imports expected in the year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will perhaps have divined that the figure there is a maximum figure which we anticipate would be involved at this particular time. The various predictions he has sought are difficult to make in light of the discussions which will be occurring between first ministers in April of this year. Therefore, we have taken the precaution of indicating a maximum amount. It could well be that as a result of both those discussions and other events the amount may be very much lower.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, the item is $1.3 billion. Would the minister therefore indicate the maximum assumptions he made with respect to the three components which I identified?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may recognize at once that the assumptions are about equal to those now applying.

ASSUMPTIONS ON WHICH OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM BASED—POSSIBILITY OF BALANCE BETWEEN REVENUES FROM EXPORTS AND PAYMENT FOR IMPORTS

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell the House whether his budget forecasts concerning the payment of the oil import compensation program were based on the assumption that expenditures within this program would be fully balanced by the revenues from the oil export charge, and if not, by what amount does he estimate such revenues will fall short of the $1.3 billion cost of this program?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is putting the question in different terms, but it has already been answered by my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. I will be rephrasing what I think is the same question. Does the Minister of Finance anticipate that revenues from the export tax which currently roughly balance the allocations to the subsidy programs for oil east of the Ottawa valley will continue,—that is this balance of revenues in terms of oil export and payments for imports, will continue for the next fiscal year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): As the hon. gentleman admitted it is virtually the same question.

Some hon. Members: Answer it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That will depend very much on the pricing arrangement made by first ministers in April and on the phasing out of exports.

Mr. Andre: Do the revenue forecasts of the Minister of Finance rely on the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on November 22 which indicated the government's intention to reduce the level of export of crude oil to 650,000 barrels per day, or do they not?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that this would be subject to conversations with the provinces.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PRESENT GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PROGRAM TO PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since those most seriously affected by the present rate of inflation are the poor in Canada, whether they are the working poor or not, could the minister inform the House why, after spending between $2 million and $3 million in his department in the last year and a half on more than 600 studies on the question of a guaranteed income program for the poor, he did not see fit to present to the ministers from the provinces in the last few days at the conference a specific proposal in this area for their acceptance, nor did he on the part of the federal government decide to accept some kind of alternative proposal by the provinces.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am pleased to see the hon. member take note of the many studies which have been made. I remind him that these studies have not been carried out only by my department but also by the provincial governments and that they are the result of a joint effort by the provinces and the federal government.

As to the position of the federal government, I made it clear at the conference. It contains specific proposals made in the context of proposals advocated in the working paper on social security reform, and I am pleased to inform the hon. member, if he has not yet read the news release published at the end of the conference, that during this meeting the provincial and federal governments agreed on a general approach to this question of social security reform.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: I would ask the minister if it is a fact that he said to the ministers from the provinces that this program had to be put off two or two and a half years because the program was too costly? If so, was this based on the cost estimate in the neighbourhood of $1 billion which would be shared between the provinces and the federal government if it was brought in under the Canada assistance program, for example, and if so, does he really think that the economy of Canada could not sustain that kind of expenditure?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have to answer that the hon. member's informers are wrong. I simply refer him to the statement I made at the beginning of that conference, to the effect that the government proposed for 1976 setting up an income support program for Canadians and the progressive implementation, over several years, of an income supplementation program. Once again I emphasize that all that is in conformity with the working paper put forward by the federal government in 1973 and unanimously supported by the provinces.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How much did you pay for that speech?

NATURE OF PROGRAM TO BEGIN IN 1976

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): It is my understanding that a majority of the provinces do not take it as a conclusion that the program is going to begin now. Would the minister explain to the House the nature of the program beginning in 1976 and what development can be expected to follow from that program which will begin in 1976 and subsequent years?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member could not attend the federal-provincial conferences. He would have seen that, contrary to the information he has just given this House, the majority of provinces did not share the opinion he indicated. On the contrary, the decision we reached at the conference was adopted by the provinces unanimously and it appears in the press communiqué released at the end of the conference.

TAX CREDIT PROPOSAL TO FINANCE GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

With respect to the guaranteed annual income proposed to the provinces and which seems to be creating a bit of a turmoil across the country, does the minister consider paying a guaranteed annual income to all Canadians and perhaps collecting the surplus as income tax under present fiscal regulations, so that those having a large income might pay the surplus back to the government and that poor families might keep the whole guaranteed annual income, which would increase their insufficient present income?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the possibilities that was considered by the government, that is tax credits. However, in the proposal we presented at the federal-provincial conference, we chose the option of transfer payments.

● (1440)

However, the proposal put forward after consideration and experience does not exclude the possibility of altering the proposed program in a tax credit program. But such is not the proposal endorsed by the government at the conference.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Would the government consider, for example, the direct transfer of credit by the Bank of Canada which would then distribute the necessary sums to the provinces for the establishment of a guaranteed annual income?

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

COST OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PROGRAM

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question about the alleged cost of the program. It has been alleged that the proposed plan submitted by the minister would cost between $250 million and $2 billion a year, or cost each individual Canadian taxpayer about $300 a year. Would the minister clear this confusion, so that the Canadian people will know how much the minister's proposed plan may cost.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that it depends on the levels of payments granted to persons in need and on the reduction rates. I firmly believe that if my hon. colleague's party were in office all Canadians would have a guaranteed income which would not cost a single cent for the very reason that the benefits would be so low that they would be useless.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the minister said this program would cost between $250 million and $2 billion per year. I ask the minister bluntly, is that what he said during the conference of afterwards?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker, once again I point out that the variation in costs depends on the level of benefits that would be agreed to between the provinces and the federal government and on the tax-back rate on those benefits. The net result is that type of variation.

BLIND AND DISABLED ALLOWANCES—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEMS OF RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. As the guaranteed annual income has been postponed and is now a long way down the road, may I ask if the minister discussed the plight of some people living in conditions of extreme hardship; I refer especially to those receiving blind allowances and disabled allowances. Those allowances still do not exceed the national maximum of $75. I realize that this is a provincial matter, but was it discussed, and, if so, can anything be done to alleviate the problems these people face?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this problem has not been raised during the conference, but as the hon. member has very properly indicated, this question is one which is a matter of option for the provinces concerned. Provinces may instead opt for the Canada Assistance Plan, which allows provinces to pay much more substantial benefits of course. Most provinces have opted for the Canada Assistance Plan. Unfortunately, the province from which the hon. member comes from has preferred to stick to the other act regulating certain benefits.

HOUSING

HOUSING FOR WELFARE RECIPIENTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. At the last welfare ministers conference the topic of housing for people who must resort to welfare was discussed and treated as an emergency, can the minister indicate if any plans have been put in place, in consultation with the provinces, in order to alleviate this problem.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, I am pleased to work on this area of concern with the provinces and I hope to be able to announce something very shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY FOR DISTRIBUTION OF OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES IN VIEW OF DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerns a more immediate issue. What if any contingency plans has the government to distribute old age pension cheques, given that mail distribution at regional centres such as Toronto is at a standstill.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be asked of my colleague, the Postmaster General, who is in charge of the Post Office.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we ran into this problem once before in my riding, Verdun, I think four years ago. The member, who at that time was not Postmaster General, simply delivered the old age pension cheques.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not so much concerned that the minister could deliver the cheques to the people of Verdun; I am concerned about seeing them delivered right across the country. Given the fact that regional centres such as Vancouver, Halifax and Toronto may well be out of operation, would the minister undertake to set up special distribution centres for old age pension cheques, of the kind set for the distribution of unemployment insurance payments, and to make those locations well known by utilizing all avenues of the media.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, this type of emergency operation has already been planned. As I mentioned, what I did in Verdun every member of parliament can do in his own riding, so that there is no particular problem. We could distribute cheques to unemployment insurance offices, and those cheques that are not picked up, because senior citizens may be too old, can be delivered either with the help of the Legion or other people who are willing to do so.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRAM OF INCENTIVES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As figures released today by Statistics Canada show that Canadian industry today is moving at a pace 4 per cent slower than that at which it was moving one year ago, that of course being the reason for the dramatic rise in unemployment recently, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House the program which he and his department are prepared to present to industry in the form of industrial incentives in order to get the economy moving at a satisfactory pace, one that will accelerate in the months ahead and provide the jobs which Canadian people have a right to expect.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the best things the House can do right now is expedite the passage of the income tax legislation.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the government intends to do nothing in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: My supplementary question is this: Given that answer and that attitude, is it any wonder that the economy of this country is in its present bad state. You just couldn't care less, Alastair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR CANADA

ATTEMPTED DENIAL OF RIGHT OF MEMBER TO APPEAR BEFORE LABOUR BOARDS—REFUSAL TO PAY EMPLOYEES APPEARING AS WITNESSES

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the incident in Montreal on December 4, when an Air Canada representative made representations to the Canada Labour Relations Board to the effect that the board should rule that citizens appearing before the board should not contact their Member of Parliament concerning matters before the board. Has the minister received any communication from Air Canada about this strange behaviour on the part of one of their representatives.

● (1450)

Since this matter does reflect the unsatisfactory state of labour-management relations at the Montreal-Dorval Air Canada setup, will the minister, in consultation with the Minister of Labour give consideration to referring this question of labour-management relations to either the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications or the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the information I got from Air Canada is that this corporation has never instructed its legal adviser to hold that stance before the Canada Labour Relations Board. Therefore, that stance has been a purely personal one, and Air Canada dissociates itself completely from what has been said.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, Air Canada may well try to sneak out of the position it took publicly at that labour relations board hearing by denying responsibility for the statement of its representative. In any event, among the things Air Canada did at that hearing which reflects its attitude toward labour-management relations was, in violation of its own regulations which require payment of salary to employees appearing as court witnesses, the refusal to pay employees who appeared that day as subpoenaed witnesses on behalf of Mr. Morrison. I wish to raise this matter at ten o'clock and discuss it at that time.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Was the legal counsel involved a regular employee of Air Canada or was he picked from the Quebec Liberal patronage list?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES ON RAPESEED—MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR A DECISION—DATE WHEN DECISION WILL BE MADE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport on another matter. In view of the fact several rapeseed processing plants in western Canada, supported by three provincial governments, have been fighting the matter of freight rates on rapeseed meal and rapeseed oil since October 1970 and the Canadian Transport Commission made a ruling in June 1973 which the complainants, namely the companies and provinces, appealed to the cabinet, can the minister advise the House whether, as reported in the press, he has not turned over responsibility for freight rates on rapeseed and rapeseed products to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board? Also, does he share that minister's view that a cabinet decision on this matter is not likely to be made before the end of this year?

[Mr. Watson.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have transferred any of my responsibilities to any one of the ministers. I could not do it legally. Some responsibilities rest with ministers, others with the CTC, and again others with the cabinet. However, I assume mine, and Air Canada theirs. Therefore, I have noticed that lawyers are chosen as often among Progressive Conservatives, Social Crediters and New Democrats as among Liberals.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the minister chose to answer the question put by the previous questioner. That leaves him one question behind. He can probably answer mine after the next question. I remind the minister he is quoted as saying "it is Otto Lang's baby".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FREIGHT RATES ON RAPESEED—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): That is one I hope he does not abort. Will the minister be placing before the provinces at the federal-provincial conference, which I understand will be on February 24, a proposal on this matter? If so, is he in a position to tell the House the nature of the proposal.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the agendas for those conferences are prepared by the ministers involved, including the Minister of Transport for Canada. As far as Otto Lang's babies are concerned, I really do not know their number, but I can assure hon. members that I am not the father of any of them.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been fought for and about by the people of the great prairie provinces for almost four and a half years. Cabinet has had this baby for almost a year and still has not made a decision. When will a decision be made by the cabinet? Is the minister in charge of the wheat board correct that there will not be a decision before the end of this year?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice will eventually be in this House. It would be preferable to address the question to him.

IMMIGRATION

STATUS OF KAMINSKI FAMILY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Considering that a Polish family, the Kaminski family, with three young children, has been living in Canada since October 1974, and that a deportation notice has been given to them and that the family is now in a very difficult position, could the minister reveal to the House if representations have been made to him asking him to grant them the status of political refugees and, if so, can the minister tell the House if it has been, or will, be granted?

[English]

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that appeal is now before the Immigration Appeal Board. It was handled by an interdepartmental committee which found there was not refugee status. I will be glad to keep the hon. member informed with regard to the status.

OLYMPIC GAMES

REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF COINS—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT COVERING LOSS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. In view of the delay in circulating series three of the Olympic coin program, and God knows they do not need any more problems than they already have, primarily because of the strike at the Mint and because of the fact that Mr. Page, a director of that program, has already announced a cut from the original nine million coins in the third series to five million, perhaps due to problems other than the strike, can the minister advise what the status of the coin program will be in the event of a continuation of the strike at the Mint and does his department have any contingency plans for supplementing the unexpected losses being encountered in the overall coin program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there are several very serious questions. I know the hon. member supports the Olympics and the financing of the Olympics. He will be pleased to know that the strike is in no way impeding the circulation of coin sets No. III since they are in the possession of Brinks Express and the government and not in the Mint.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because the Minister of Labour stated in the House last Monday that he is not free to discuss, here, policies with respect to labour—I wonder where he expects to discuss problems relating to his department if not in this House—I should like to put my question to the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the fact that approximately $150 million in production of coins has been lost since the strike at the Mint began on January 9 and because there exists a serious coin shortage in Canada notwithstanding the Olympic program shortages, could the minister inform the House of the latest offers made to striking workers at the Mint and what specific steps are being taken by the government to bring this costly strike to an end?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it was agreed with the union that no public comment would be made during the negotiating period.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REFUSAL TO PERMIT MEMBER OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURE TO SERVE ON AREA COMMITTEE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. I have already given notice of the question. Would the acting minister advise the House whether it is now departmental policy to exclude members of provincial legislatures from management area committees relating to the OFY program on the grounds of conflict of interest? Can the hon. gentleman also say briefly why he considers this to be improper, since nothing was mentioned about this in the letter of instructions soliciting nominations from members of parliament. I am particularly interested since I nominated a member of the Nova Scotia Legislature, a Liberal member, who was rejected despite his willingness to serve.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members know, each member was contacted to suggest names for this advisory group and guidelines were set out. I think there is a question in this particular case of whether the gentleman nominated is impartial.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I am interested to know he might not be considered impartial. Certainly, I would never make that suggestion.

Mr. Alexander: I would.

Mr. MacKay: Obviously, the hon. member knows more about this gentleman than I do. In reassessing the criteria for this type of committee or advisory board, I should like to know whether the department would look into the question of elected municipal officials being nominated so that members might have a greater idea of whom this government deems acceptable for service on these boards.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGER—ALLEGATION PEOPLE STARVING IN SPITE OF AVAILABILITY OF CANADIAN GRAIN—MEASURES TO CONTROL AID PROGRAM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister investigated a situation in the African country of Niger where bands of nomads are dying of starvation in a camp located ten feet away from a barbed wire compound containing a warehouse jammed with Canadian grain which is only available to local people with the money to pay for it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any information on this particular case but I will be happy to follow it up.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Because Canada's total aid budget in the new fiscal year will be $933 million, which is more than all but two government departments, and because the whole question of international aid now goes beyond CIDA and is inextricably linked with all our policies on international finance and trade, what policies will the minister recommend to the government to control and consolidate Canada's whole international assistance program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West.

ARGENTIA, NEWFOUNDLAND—CANADIANS EMPLOYED AT UNITED STATES NAVAL BASE DENIED RIGHT TO FORM UNION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In reply to a question put to him on February 12, the minister undertook to investigate charges that Canadians working on the American naval station in Argentia were being unfairly treated with respect to wages and other working conditions, can the minister now tell the House whether he has investigated these charges, and if steps are being taken to correct these conditions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have commenced an investigation into the matter raised by the hon. member. We have communicated with the American authorities and are holding discussions with Canadian labour personnel. As soon as we have something definite to report I will communicate it to the hon. member.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fisheries relating to tuna sport fishing. In light of the urgency of operators knowing what the position is going to be, is the minister able to announce the fishery regulations as they apply to tuna sport fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. We are trying to have as wide consultations as possible and to reconcile the conflict of interest between the sports fishery and the commercial fishery. We are now trying to come to a consensus, and I hope within the next 10 or 15 days to be able to come down with firm regulations.

BILINGUALISM

ALLEGED FAILURE OF EMPLOYEES OF MONTREAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICE TO COMMUNICATE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Jacques L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but since he is not here, I will direct it to the President of the Treasury Board.

During the past few days, employees of the manpower centres especially have been refusing to answer in either official language when several people applied to obtain information about those centres. I understand there are 300 positions which are designated as bilingual. What I want to know, Mr. Speaker, is whether those designated civil servants, who have been appointed to answer inquiries by the public, are refusing to answer them, or if, due to miscalculation, not enough people were hired to provide services in either official language. If so, can we expect people who can provide the services which the population expects to be appointed at superior positions, or at positions where they have to answer inquiries by the public, as soon as possible?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, we are now inquiring into that subject. It is a fairly complex problem, because there may be bilingual as well as unilingual positions in the same office. It is a matter of identifying the incumbents of both lines of positions. But I said yesterday, and I say it again, we shall take disciplinary action against those who are in bilingual positions and refuse to provide service in either official language.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary? Could the President of the Treasury Board tell us how many bilingual positions are now vacant in those services, and whether that situation prevents the Canadian population from getting proper service in either of the official languages, which it has a right to expect?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I cannot obviously answer now with respect to the number of bilingual positions. I shall inquire into that matter and report to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXPORT OF ARMS TO TURKEY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs although I think it also concerns the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has been reported from Ankara that Canadian arms dealers are seeking orders in Turkey for the sale of ammunition and other war materials to Turkey to replace the arms embargoed by the United States of America. Will the minister tell the House whether it is government policy to refuse to licence the export of arms to Turkey at the present time?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, for some considerable period of time during the situation in Cyprus it was not the policy of the government to approve any such licences. Since the situation has changed, I believe the policy has also been modified. I should like to refresh my memory, however, before giving the hon. gentleman a definitive answer.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is looking into this matter would he also see whether American arms are being shipped into Canada for export to Turkey in defiance of the U.S. embargo?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

REASON FOR RELATIONSHIP OF CANADIAN DOLLAR TO UNITED STATES DOLLAR

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Finance? Having watched the Canadian dollar drop below par with the United States dollar during the last couple of weeks, is it the direct intention of the Department of Finance to lower the dollar so that we can better plan our commodity trade?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are relying on market forces.

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can one assume that our dollar dropping below the U.S. dollar means that Canadians and the world have less confidence in Canada's economy, even though we are able to balance our energy needs?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is not the conclusion I take. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that the reason our dollar is dropping below the United States dollar is because of our current account deficit. It is because the Canadian economy is strong enough to attract more imports than the stagnant economies of our major customers are able to attract our exports.

PERPETUAL BONDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALTER LOW INTEREST RATE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance and concerns another example of the poor economics practiced by governments of the past and the present. My question arises from representations made to me by holders of Canada perpetual bonds of the 1930's bearing interest at 3 per cent and the near worthlessness of these bonds at the present time. What does the minister and his department intend to do to relieve the penurious conditions of bondholders resulting from the lack of a fair economic revenue from these bonds?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, virtually every member of parliament has written to me about these bonds, and I have received a good deal of correspondence from across the country. We had a meeting about this 16 or 17 months ago, including the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the hon. member for Don Valley and other hon. members on our side of the House. There are two difficulties. Firstly, a good percentage of these bonds are in bearer form. The second difficulty is how to find an equitable solution as between those who have already redeemed their bonds at 3 per cent interest and those who might redeem their bonds at a marketable rate of interest. I have not yet been able to find a solution to those two problems.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Why could not these bonds be recalled? The last bond issue which paid 9¾ per cent was a successful issue and well subscribed. In light of this fact, the minister is lending several millions of this money to Cuba through the Canadian International Development Agency at 3 per cent, so how does he justify the economics of taxing Canadians through making them pay high interest rates and then giving the money away to foreign countries?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are two answers to that, Mr. Speaker. The difference between the perpetual bonds and the Canada savings bonds is that the latter are immediately redeemable. The second answer is that Cuba is not receiving that interest rate.

FISHERIES

SMELT FISHERMEN IN NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR AID—POSSIBLE USE OF SMELTS IN EXTERNAL AID PROGRAM

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries). What action has the minister taken to relieve the plight of the smelt fishermen in New Brunswick?

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would underline that the problem is due to difficulties in marketing. A lot of last season's inventory was still left when this season commenced. We are now trying to get agreement between the Quebec and New Brunswick fishermen to limit the fishery and not stock more inventory which we are finding difficulty in liquidating.

I might say that I was hoping to get a question on this, because yesterday I was informed that there were some 250 pounds of smelt delivered for the attention of members of parliament. In the interest of conservation I asked that they be frozen immediately, and they were. I would be quite willing to receive suggestions regarding their distribution. I have suggested to the parliamentary restaurant that perhaps we could give all members of parliament a chance to taste New Brunswick smelt and to see how good they are.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, may I address another question to the minister? In addition to contacting the parliamentary restaurant and the cafeteria so that all members of parliament can realize how delightful is this delicacy and so the commodity can be sold at a fair and reasonable price, would the minister consider contacting CIDA to see whether they have sufficient money on hand to assist the smelt fishermen in New Brunswick, who are only being paid eight to ten cents a pound for their fish?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we have looked at this possibility and many others, but at the moment that avenue does not seem to offer very good prospects.

POSSIBLE SALE OF GOLD HOLDING—PROPOSED USE IN GOLD OLYMPIC COINS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With gold selling this morning at $183 per ounce, a figure more than four times the official price placed on the 22 million ounces of gold stashed away under the Bank of Canada on Wellington Street, would the minister indicate whether consideration is being given to selling part or all of this holding, bearing in mind that at today's price a profit of $3 billion could be reaped, or some $300 for every taxpayer in the country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we hold to the policy of demonetarizing gold. It really depends on agreement by the International Monetary Fund as to what the future of gold will be.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister or the government been approached to sell part of this Canadian store of gold to facilitate the minting of gold Olympic coins, and if so what position has the government taken?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that has not been brought to my attention, but I want to suggest to the hon. member that if every country were to accept the hon. member's suggestion, the plight of the third world in face of a revaluation of gold would be disastrous.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF SUBSIDY ON DOGFISH

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of State for Fisheries.

Could he make a statement to the House today concerning the subsidies to the dogfish industry which would continue its activities on the Pacific coast during the dead season, as I raised that question two weeks ago?

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a statement today. I will try to give an answer to the hon. member as soon as possible.

[Mr. Jones.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions regarding the length of speeches in the following debate. It has been proposed that the first speaker for our side and, of course, the first speaker for the government should have 30 minutes; there will be 20 minutes each for the first speakers for the NDP and Creditistes; and thereafter the balance of the speeches will be 15 minutes each. That proposal seems to have some acceptance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find this has been agreed to by all parties and by the independent member as well. When I suggested to the hon. member for Peace River that he get up, I was trying to remind him that today is Thursday and that he might like to ask about the business of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, we took part in this debate and we maintain our support. We are satisfied with this agreement which will allow more members to speak and we hope that the Chair will fairly recognize each member in his turn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the reminder by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I return to my duties by asking my co-operative friend, the government House leader, what business he has for tomorrow and next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to continue to give first priority to the income tax bill which is now in committee of the whole. It is the intention to call the committee to consider the bill again tomorrow and on Monday, or whenever is necessary. I hope it will be dealt with by Friday but I cannot, of course, commit the House. When that bill has proceeded through committee of the whole, it would then be the government's intention to call the bill to amend the National Housing Act.

● (1520)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader a question in respect of House business. We all realize that in a day or so the minister will be presenting a motion to refer to committees the estimates of various departments. In the case of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, they of course will include the Hong Kong question but not the Hermann report. I wonder whether we can soon expect a motion referring the Hermann report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing this matter with my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs and, as I said earlier, we have had some correspondence from one of the principal veterans' organizations. It would be the intention of the government to move such reference within the next couple of weeks or so.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader if he has any intention of bringing Bill C-16 before the House. I would ask him to treat this matter as an emergency, in view of the fact that in that omnibus bill, C-16, there is one section which includes a discriminating distinction between male and female cadets in the cadet services of Canada. In view of the fact that this summer the student summer employment program will include the cadet services, will the minister bring the bill forward so this matter can be rectified to the benefit of many young people in this country?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his suggestion. It is my hope that when we have disposed of the amendments to the Income Tax Act, the House leaders will meet and, hopefully, agree upon a definite allocation of time for all the remaining business on the order paper, so that we can reach this bill and many others in respect of which I have received various representations.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader if he will advise the House or consult the Minister of Transport on the annual report of Air Canada and that of Canadian National Railways. Will these reports be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications as has been done on other occasions? Also, will he tell the House when we may expect the annual CNR financing bill?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take those questions as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I want to speak on the same point of order concerning the proceedings of the House, Mr. Speaker. I asked many times that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the President of the Privy Council inquire when the bill on unemployment insurance amending the 1971 act will be presented to Parliament, as announced in the Speech from the Throne. The hon. gentlemen always answered that they would get the information and report to the House. I would like to ask once more if the President of the Privy Council has inquired about this matter and what was the information he got?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this question in relation to several other bills not yet on the order paper in respect of which it would be very desirable to have quick approval. I regret having to say, however, that because of the very long time being taken on the amendments to the Income Tax Act, the whole schedule has fallen behind and we will have to decide which of these important bills should receive first priority.

CIDA

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT SECRECY IN OPERATION OF CIDA—EFFECT ON EXTERNAL AID PROGRAM

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe) moved:

That this House deplores the Government's secrecy in the operation of the Canadian International Development Agency which casts public doubt on the quality of management and effectiveness of Canada's international assistance program.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in undertaking this debate and presenting this motion to the House, we are well aware of the very acute problems which our fellow citizens must face every day. Let me mention, for instance, inflation which is left uncontrolled, unemployment whose spectre, in the last few months, has been replaced by the sad reality of layoffs multiplication. We have debated these matters each day since the House resumed its sittings, and we shall go on doing so.

However, we dare take up a whole day for a close scrutiny of the orientation and administration of this government in the matter of Canada's foreign aid.

We believe that such an scrutiny is even more timely, perhaps even urgent, since the whole cabinet, when describing the economic situation, refer constantly, with OECD figures in support of their statements, to the fact that, according to them, the situation is even worse in foreign countries.

"In Canada, things are not so bad for the moment", said our Prime Minister during his speech on starvation throughout the world at the recent liberal $100 a plate fund-raising dinner held in Montreal on January 31st.

Mr. Béchard: They cost $160 a plate in your party!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, those were the comments of my colleagues opposite. They were discussing starvation throughout the world, while next Sunday we shall be discussing the termination of this government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like my friends opposite to listen to the right hon. Prime Minister's New Year message. He then committed himself and the generosity of Canadians towards helping the more disadvantaged among our fellow human beings. In giving that message, the Prime Minister must have hoped, and rightly so, that we in this country would prove equal to the task.

Of that, Mr. Speaker, we are not quite so sure, or rather we so want to be sure of that today, partly as a result of recent reports published in the newspapers in this regard, we want to question the government about its main sharing channel, namely the Canadian International Development Agency.

In fact, just about everyone wonders about CIDA, because, as the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) said in Montreal on Tuesday last, and I quote:

. . . because we know very little about what CIDA does, and because we know even less about the problems it has to overcome.

Mr. Speaker, we feel the time is ripe for a debate in this House, rather than in the Standing Committee on External Affairs when the president of CIDA appears for his annual accounting, since our solidarity with the third world, and the way in which we prove it, entail political objectives for which government and Parliament as a whole, rather than CIDA'S president alone, or a single vague interministerial committee, are responsible.

The time and place are all the more well chosen for our motion that the estimates for the financial year ending on March 31, 1976 were tabled yesterday, and that the only credit for CIDA provides for expenditures of about $734,-311,000—some $145 million more that the estimates for 1974-75.

● (1530)

[English]

In putting forward, on behalf of my leader and my party, the motion to be discussed today I would like you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of the House to understand fully the intent and purport of our concern.

At a time when the international viability of world resource management and distribution continues to be questioned, at a time when starvation and the political and social disorder that starvation brings, remains basic to the international horizon, nations where starvation is never present have a simple and direct duty to help others. At a time when the emergence of the third world is no longer idle prognostication but a political and bureaucratic reality, the developed world has a duty to its own security and to the international community to provide the developing nations with meaningful and well thought-out aid and development assistance.

That is the framework within which we seek greater scrutiny for CIDA and its operations. That is the urgent political reality which demands greater scrutiny by a committee of this House and by the House itself and, more important, that is the very political framework which the minister and the government to date appear to reject or choose to ignore. Those opposite are once again indulging in the old "Catch 22" approach to government policy that so frequently typifies the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to public policy and debate. Simply stated, the approach can be put thus: If you question how we run our program, you are against the program. If your not against the program, don't ask questions.

The logic of that approach may escape you, Mr. Speaker, as much as it escapes those of us seeking to scrutinize this particular agency's operations. But then again, perhaps we err even in wanting to ask questions. Perhaps we err in wanting to know why foreign aid has become the personal fiefdom of one man, why that fiefdom appears to be in revolt—the best example is the Price Waterhouse report on personnel turnover, a report which still remains a very secret document—and why this government has placed this little empire above scrutiny. Perhaps we err in seeking to have the activities of this agency brought before a special parliamentary committee for some frank discussion, some thorough probing, without the restrictions which are normally imposed by the rules of the House on the study of estimates. Perhaps we err in thinking that the government might treat the committee with any more respect than they treat this House.

Perhaps we err when we wonder why no government official, no minister, has jumped to the stringent defence of the agency in the face of fairly serious allegations made by an Ottawa newspaper concerning its management and internal policies. Is a defence now being put together? Does the government have a defence? Will we hear it today? Will the minister speak, or will he delegate someone else? Does this government care enough about its foreign aid establishment to defend the key foreign aid agency?

These are the questions we pose, not out of antagonism to the agency but out of a desire to ensure that our foreign aid programs are going to the right places, are administered in the right fashion and are providing the most valuable help possible to the recipient nations; because any failure of CIDA in this regard is a failure of our government to understand how contentious an issue foreign aid can become in times of, thanks to this government, growing national anxiety about economic resources and capacity.

If this House is more concerned today about foreign aid spending, if we seek more answers and more information it is because we know, as politicians, how difficult it is to justify foreign aid spending to the men and women who pay the taxes and find it more and more difficult to make ends meet. This is not to say that we do not have a responsibility to continue to fight for the importance of foreign aid and our nation's commitment to that aid: on the contrary, that fight must continue.

But I say to this government that their over-all attitude toward CIDA and its operations, their over-all refusal to allow for a clearing of the air and an examination of the record, does not help the foreign aid cause very much at all. In many respects it weakens the foreign aid cause so that one might justifiably ask whether this government is seeking some excuse to back down from its already less than impressive commitments in this field. The attitude of this government in regard to CIDA, their complacency, their nonchalance, is typical of their concerns in other areas.

I was touched when the Prime Minister worried about social disorder and fragmentation at a party fund-raising dinner in Montreal. While I was not as deeply touched as those who paid to hear the "sermon on the mount," I must say that I was struck by this new-found concern for social disorder, a social disorder that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) pointed to before the last election and for which he has provided some preventive answers. But then to talk about future difficulty, to call for action, was to express no confidence in the Canadian people. The land was strong—and Lalonde is expensive—the economy was strong, we were better off and all we had to do was shut off the prophets of doom and gloom.

● (1540)

Now this government worries about social disorder. Campaign promises which the government cannot afford to keep are now being shelved because the votes have been counted and the electorate can be sent out to pasture for four more years to graze on Liberal promises and predictions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Pretty thin fare.

Mr. Wagner: "Cynicism" is too kind a word, "dishonesty" too trite, yet we must look at these words when those of us concerned about this nation's foreign aid program, both as it relates to our over-all economic situation and our over-all world responsibility, seek to probe the apparent lack of government preparedness to come clean and put its cards on the table.

With reference to the recently announced loan to Cuba, which we should note was made on the terms of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as opposed to the terms of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), it is surely appropriate to ask whether within the western hemisphere and within the group of nations in need of our aid Cuba must come first. While this party has never opposed closer trade relations with the Cuban people, is it now to be government policy that CIDA acts as an instrument of our trade interests? If so, does this now represent a new mandate for CIDA, a new departure, something totally unrelated to its responsibilities in the area of foreign aid?

The question we have to probe more deeply is whether those who administer CIDA and those who, through their complacency, allowed the administration to proceed as it has, are now choosing to alter the role of CIDA without altering its mandate. If so, why has parliament not been consulted on this change? We hear all too often of developing nations harbouring deep resentment against wealthier nations which always have at least one ulterior motive in their aid programs, namely, the reinforcement of trade prospects. If CIDA is now to become an agency operating for the sole purpose of advancing our own trade prospects, then we risk losing the good faith and trust so necessary on the part of recipient nations if the programs that are Canadian tax-shared are to be supported.

Mr. Speaker, what are CIDA's criteria for aid? How does CIDA define need? Does it relate to some objective assessment of our national interest and, above all, the interest of the developing nations; or does it relate to the personal preferences of the president of CIDA? Would our decisions stand up to public and international scrutiny; or is it known that to gain this country's favour one need impress only one man, the president of CIDA? What does that say about this government and our country? What does that say about the international reputation of this nation and perceived public values?

When we have an agency which spends more than all but two departments, when we have an agency which reports through a public servant to cabinet and not through an elected minister, when we have an agency that remains undefended by this government against direct, incriminating allegations, we have more than a gap in credibility; we have simply a gap in good faith, which is surely a basic commodity in even this government's approach to external aid and parliamentary participation in that aid.

It may be that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is as helpless in this matter as prime ministerial officials have rendered him in other matters. Nevertheless, what I know to be his sincere and deep commitment to international aid must surely be sufficient to spur him both as a parliamentarian and as a citizen to see the merits of our motion and to reassert his responsibility in this area by supporting it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: The minister may well wonder what difference all this may have to the long-term objectives of his department in the area of external policy for this nation. No doubt aides and departmental advisers have urged him to treat this motion as a tempest in a teapot, an opposition ploy to place the government in some difficulty. I say to the minister that the foreign policy of this country, whether it relates to foreign aid, national security or international peace, is the domain of all Canadians and therefore the domain of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: I say to him that he should understand how deeply Canadians want an opportunity to be involved in the development of foreign policy through their representatives in this House, an opportunity which previous ministers have denied them in favour of the mandarins and the unseen advisers. I say to the minister that foreign aid is at the core of this nation's social responsibility at the international level; therefore, the administration of that aid touches upon the integrity of all Canadians not only as Canadians but as human beings in the community of man. It will be sad and disappointing if this minister and this government oppose a motion affirming this integrity and this responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, about $733 million will have been spent in 1974-75, according to CIDA's most recent annual report which will soon be published, and once the 1975-76 fiscal year is over, probably around $900 million will have been spent. The government would like to restrict our questions and to restrict information available to the public to two or three sittings of the external affairs committee and to the testimony of the chairman and a few advisors of CIDA.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public must know what is going on in CIDA. This involves its money and its sharing commitment with the third world. Its elected representatives must be kept informed, since their mandate is involved. The press itself, which reports the activities of this Parliament, must be thoroughly familiar with the orientation, operation and decisions of CIDA. Their role is involved.

Neither my colleagues nor myself will be accomplices of the government's secretive policy in this matter.

A budget of nearly 1 billion dollars cannot and can no longer be the responsibility, for all practical purposes, of a single high executive, however intelligent or cultured he may be. Political choices as important as the sharing of Canada and Canadians with their brothers of the world, at a time when tens of millions of children over the world are to die from starvation within twenty-odd years, we are told, such political choices must not and must no longer be the exclusive province, for the essential, of one official only, however good his intentions, and of his colleagues, whatever their degree of specialization.

Without respite since his election, the Prime Minister has been talking about participatory democracy. He urges Canadians to mind their own business, to be open-minded. At the same time, he protects CIDA activities, rejecting any political protection or stricter political authority over the agency. I feel like telling the Prime Minister what he said in his speech at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel: "Be very careful, right hon. Prime Minister, not to let yourself be taken in by your own words." It is all very nice to speak about participatory democracy, but you must also act.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my colleagues opposite are already convinced of the appropriateness of the motion. I would simply like to add that we have difficulty understanding, for example, CIDA's help to Brazil, a country whose economic health now allows it to launch its own foreign aid program. Brazil suggested that Canada's assistance be transferred to the Brazilian foreign aid program.

We also need to be explained the whole story behind that aerial photogrammetry project which we have been financing for five years in Morocco, and which is still incomplete after expenditures of over $4 million.

It might also be relevant to know the in-depth story about our help to the Ivory Coast in the Odienne area. Canada, as we know, undertook to carry out the rural electrification of the southwestern part of the Ivory Coast. A peculiarity of that electrification which, according to several experts, would have been more normal starting from the centre of the country, was that it allowed access to San Pedro, a dock for the iron ore locally extracted by a California firm for a Pittsburgh company.

From another point of view, we wonder about the very philosophy of this government and CIDA in the area of foreign aid. We question its coherence in that regard. Let me quote as an example Canada's attitude vis-à-vis Haiti and Haitians.

On the subject of Haitians awaiting deportation from Canada the government of Canada entrenched itself in a legalistic attitude that ignored all human elements in the record. By its unexplainable stubbornness the government of Canada made its desire known to the world to base its hospitality on most selfish economic rules. When a country behaves like that it is because its International Development Agency can be charged in certain quarters with taking an attitude, not of contribution to the better-being of the Third World, but of a business spearhead.

The philosophy of CIDA must be discussed. I should like to believe that some of the things we heard from one of the directors of CIDA are not representative of the general attitude. I will come back to it later when the estimates are considered.

So, it is to ensure a valid orientation for CIDA, more efficient administration of CIDA, and better participation of the people in the challenge of sharing their bread with the Third World, as the Canadian bishops urged, that we strongly insist that the agency be put under the political trusteeship of a specific minister other than the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Mr. Wagner.]

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I shall venture to use the arguments of Mr. Claude Lemelin, a former editorial writer of Le Devoir who, if I am not mistaken, has recently been made a special assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: The applause from my colleagues opposite makes me happy. That means they will endorse Mr. Lemelin's proposal and make it part of their policy. I quote:

> The Prime Minister should also seriously consider—

Those words do not come from the opposition but from the assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I resume the quotation:

> The Prime Minister should also seriously consider putting CIDA under the political trusteeship of a minister other than that of External Affairs. Thanks to this measure, the president of the agency would not too often have to take initiatives and decisions of a purely political nature vis-à-vis foreign countries; with this measure also, one minister would have the exclusive responsibility of promoting in a more efficient way the "international development" function and its bureaucratic implications within government agencies; for the last few years have shown that the workload of the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not allow him to give CIDA an efficient political orientation. With this in mind, we may think of two alternatives: either appointing a Minister of State for External Affairs in charge of CIDA but responsible to the Secretary of State, if it appears that the activities of this agency have to stay administratively related to the foreign policy of our nation, or making CIDA the Department of International Development... the activities of which would then be coordinated with those of other departments within cabinet committees...

I am extremely pleased at the arrival of Mr. Lemelin in the department, and I can already see that suggestion endorsed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that we want to develop public participation in our foreign help. That is why, in fact, we formulated in a very objective way the following three ideas in our party's program:

(1) To intensify our efforts to take advantage of the expertise of professionals, students, self-employed people and retired Canadians who might serve overseas in the field of development, help, technology and engineering. They would all belong to an international development body which would work in cooperation with CUSO, CWUS (Canadian World University Services) and other organizations such as OXFAM, which get public help.

(2) To establish a national council for international cooperation, comprising representatives of various churches—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I tried to allow him to conclude his remarks, but he already overextended his time by two minutes. Unless there is unanimous consent from the House, I must under the order accepted by the House—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would give agreement, if the hon. member will let us put some questions after he has concluded his speech.

Mr. Wagner: This I will do with pleasure, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the hon. member for Lévis knows, if the suggestion is to be accepted, I must ask for unanimous consent from the House. That is, not only for the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, but from all other members. This may be somewhat difficult to achieve, in view of present limitations. I now recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I was emphasizing the second point:

(2) Establish a national council for international cooperation, comprising representatives of various churches in the country, universities and Canadian groups with an interest in the Third World, in order to advise the government on a regular basis on its foreign aid policy.

(3) Consider, in consultation with provinces, the establishment of international development centres in our universities.

In conclusion, I say to all members on the government side: Let there be no misunderstanding about it. CIDA's philosophy and expenditures will from now on be closely scrutinized.

Because the validity of our foreign aid, the very credibility of our foreign aid policy and spokesman are involved.

● (1600)

In the course of this debate, my colleagues will take turns in trying to scrutinize the many aspects of foreign aid with the support of convincing facts, and by the end of this discussion, the people of Canada will have a better idea of how the government is performing and this, unfortunately, may create serious concern about the orientation and management of an operation which should be above suspicion.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) rising to ask a question? He needs the unanimous consent of the House to do so. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, I must recognize the hon. member—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, granted that the other members could be accused of behaving somewhat as demagogues or of playing petty politics, as a member of Parliament from Quebec, I still want to speak to a question of privilege rather than to a point of order, because after having listened very carefully to the speech made by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), I must—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should like to know from the hon. member who seeks the floor on a point of order to indicate exactly the basis for rising on a point of order at this time. If it is merely a matter of a difference of opinion or if he questions the facts related by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), it is not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, here is my question of privilege. The hon. member, who is the opposition external affairs official critic, is misinforming the public. He asks a lot of questions to which answers are to be found in CIDA's annual report for 1973-74.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lévis is entitled to his own opinion even if it differs from that of the previous speaker, but I must remind him that he should express his own views in taking part in the debate when his turn comes.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the start of the proceedings today there was a special order about the length of speeches: we reduced the time for ordinary members of the House so that more speeches could be made. Therefore, although I do not think there should be any objection to a few extra minutes being allowed the mover of the motion, beyond that I do not think there should be any extension of time. Otherwise what we did earlier would be in vain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that there be no further extension of time. Does the House agree that we make this an order, so it will be clear?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the official opposition have brought forward a motion dealing with CIDA. May I make it clear at once that we in this party have supported and will continue to support the objectives of international aid, for which in this country CIDA is primarily responsible. Indeed, we believe that the volume of international aid should be increased by Canada and by all other developed nations according to the standards proposed in the Pearson report and accepted by the United Nations and the community of nations, which would require .7 per cent of the GNP to be contributed in direct aid. We regret that Canada has not lived up to this standard and we call for an advance to this level of international aid.

On the other hand, we believe that the operations of CIDA should be fully open to the public and parliament and there should be adequate scrutiny of its operations. We believe that this would strengthen, rather than weaken, the purposes of international aid. In general, we think there is a tendency on the part of governments and government departments and agencies to operate in an atmosphere of secrecy and to refuse to produce documents and reports. I adopt a statement made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in Britain, Mr. Robert Carr. In a statement made in the British House of Commons on June 29, 1973, he said:

> If the government and we in this House as individual members of parliament are to have a proper relationship with the poeple of the country whom we represent and govern, the people must have the opportunity to be as well informed as possible, both about the policies which we are following and the reasons which have led us to pursue them.

This, he said, was central to the whole machinery of democracy. CIDA is spending substantial sums, on behalf of the Canadian people, outside the country for the purpose of building a world community and adding to the security of the world. But there should be no secrecy about its operations. I would like to emphasize that we do not believe an effective program of international aid by Canada is a matter of charity or, indeed, of mere humanitarianism. It is a contribution to world stability. It makes it possible to believe that we can build a world community. It minimizes the danger of conflicts which can lead to infinitely destructive war. However, there is no reason in the world why this effort should not be fully known to and fully discussed by the citizens generally. If there are things that go wrong, we should know about them so they can be set right.

The famous American, Ralph Nader, of Harvard, in an article in the Civil Liberties Law Review, volume 5, pages 1 to 15, June, 1970, said:

> A well informed citizenry is the lifeblood of democracy; and in all arenas of government, information, particularly timely information, is the currency of power... In our policy, where the ultimate power is said to rest with the people, a free and prompt flow of information from government to people is essential to achieve the reality of citizen access to a more just governmental process. It is especially essential to provide this informational flow in the Washington regulatory agencies, which are essentially unaccountable to any electorate or constituency.

We should substitute "Ottawa" for "Washington" in that quotation. May I say, however, that in dealings with the third world and in seeking to narrow the enormous gap between the have and the have-not nations, international aid is not enough. As important, if not much more important, than international aid is a more just trade system and greater effort by the rest of the world to give access in its markets to the developing world for products produced in the third world. This is the avenue which we have to explore in the future. It is a great, unfinished item on the agenda: it will come up again and again. The third world, as it is called, is fully aware of the importance of trade to its future development. In the developed world we have hitherto turned a deaf ear to pleas for trade rather than aid.

I have had the opportunity to travel in parts of the world where I have seen CIDA projects in operation. Many of them, in my judgment, are doing excellent work. However, there is no reason why there should not be provision for adequate scrutiny by the government, by parliament and by the public. I am reminded of the fact that at the end of the last session, the standing committee on external affairs sought the production of a report, prepared at public expense by the chartered accountants firm of Price Waterhouse, which dealt with the apparent rapid turnover of personnel within CIDA. There were objections that parts of the report were irrelevant and reflected on individuals. To meet these objections the committee asked that the report be submitted to the steering committee, in camera, so they could decide whether the report was relevant in all or in part and whether the reputation of individuals needed to be protected by not making public parts of the report or names in it.

The president of CIDA indicated that he would produce the report. However, he was instructed by the then secretary of state for external affairs, now President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), to tell the subcommittee and, through the subcommittee, a committee of this House that the document would not be produced. No reasons were given. Personally, I thought that in doing this the minister was flouting the rights of members and showing contempt for the operations of parliament and I moved a motion in the House to this effect. The Speaker of that day reserved his ruling and dissolution of the House the next day resolved the question. It may be that such a report contains inaccuracies or misjudgments, but surely if this is so it would be possible for CIDA to demonstrate that this is the case rather than to hide the report.

I make the following suggestions as to the way in which complete openness with regard to the operations of CIDA can be obtained. I do not think it is adequate, although it may be important, that the report and study of CIDA and its estimates be examined by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. This committee has to range all the way across the globe, consider many important questions of policy and all the estimates of the Department of External Affairs as well as the estimates of the Department of National Defence and defence policy. There is no way, in the time available—however keen and informed the members of the committee may be—that there could be an adequate examination. The material made available is the annual review of CIDA which for the years 1973-74 has just been published. This is an interesting and informative review but, as might be expected, it is entirely uncritical.

The only means for greater governmental scrutiny of CIDA might be the appointment of a minister as assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who would be in charge of CIDA and international aid generally. In Britain, as most hon. members know, there is such a member, known as the minister of overseas development, who at the present time is Mrs. Judith Hart. I have discussed the matter with her and she believes that to have a minister in charge other than the foreign minister provides for much closer examination of development aid and much more response to parliament. It has sometimes been said that it is important to have a minister of high prestige concerned with CIDA. By making the minister of overseas development, or whatever the title might be, an assistant minister to the Secretary of State for External Affairs would provide some measure of responsibility of a senior official in the cabinet which is, I think, highly desirable.

However, it seems we must go much further than this. There should, in my judgment, be some effective form of evaluation of projects by an independent source. This evaluation should not take place within CIDA, although no doubt it must take place there. We should not await the end of a project, but there should be examination and evaluation in mid-term as well as at the end of the project. In this way it would be possible to ascertain which projects had been failures and which were likely to fail and should therefore be discontinued. If it were possible to ascertain the reasons for failure, efforts could be made to ensure that future projects did not fail for the same reasons.

We are conscious, of course, of the fact that conditions in each country are different. I cannot at this stage say exactly what the composition of this evaluating organization would be. It might well be that we should seek experienced people who have been with the United Nations development program or with the development assistance committee of the OECD. Some such external evaluation is essential, in my judgment. We should review very carefully the list of recipient countries. I believe we should confine our assistance, both on a multilateral and bilateral basis, to the nations in most urgent need as established by the United Nations itself in August of 1974. They issued a list of 32 or 34 nations which are in most urgent need. It seems to make sense that these are the countries which need our assistance. If we adopt the philosophy that the purpose of international aid is to aid ourselves, a different judgment might be arrived at. But if the object is to aid people who are in greatest need, then we should restrict our aid to these countries.

Second, we must concentrate much more on agriculture, particularly on food production in the developing nations. At the World Food Conference we learned that there are chronically up to half a billion people who are undernourished, including at least 200 million children who are stunted both physically and mentally as a result. Certainly the answer is increased food production in the developing countries. Developed countries such as Canada have a part to play by providing research assistance appropriate to the areas in question. Of course, we cannot forgo direct food aid where there are threats of starvation. Nevertheless, the basic objective of development should be to enable people to help themselves produce the basic food essential to decent living.

We must also ensure that our aid goes to the people: in other words, it should go to labour-intensive projects and not to the enrichment of those who are already relatively prosperous. It should not be a program for aiding business in Canada or outside, but for aiding people in need. We should have less tied aid and more multilateral aid. We should increase our program of assistance to non-governmental agencies such as the World Council of Churches, OXFAM and UNICEF, all of which have practical, ongoing programs operated by experienced people, with greater flexibility than is possible for governments or government agencies to achieve.

I wish I had time to discuss the question of training people from developing countries. I believe much more attention should be paid to training people in their own countries, if possible with Canadian funds. If they came to Canada they should be fitted into courses where they could learn skills that would be valuable to their own country, and they should be given assistance on return to their own country. We could ensure that students and trainees in Canada returned home for summer holidays so they did not get out of touch with their own countries and found it difficult to adjust when they had completed their training.

There are many other things which would make CIDA's and Canada's contribution to international development and aid even more effective—something of which Canadians could be truly proud. An essential element in this is that the operation should be adequately understood and full information about it made available. I have in my hand CIDA's annual review which was published a day or so ago. This is a useful document but it is certainly not enough. One could read it from cover to cover and not find the slightest suggestion that anything done under these programs was, for one reason or another not working well. I believe the people of Canada are proud of and willing to support a contribution to international development. We in this parliament must be sure that this contribution is as efficient, as innovative, as flexible and as well understood by the public as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity of participating in the debate on a motion introduced on one of the allotted days provided for consideration of the business of supply, and which will allow us to study and scrutinize the performance of the Canadian International Development Agency.

The motion states rather accurately that the members of this House and the public in general lack information on this government agency. In my opinion, what the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) has said is true. All we can work on is an extremely vague annual report, cleverly printed in vivid colours, if you please, and this costs a lot of money, but which says just about nothing. Moreover, when one writes to CIDA, one gets no reply nor acknowledgment. As a rule, Mr. Speaker, CIDA is as busy as a hive, but that has nothing to do with the parliament of Canada. Still, over $770 million, more than the budget of the Department of Agriculture, are handed over to CIDA to provide assistance to developing countries.

Several developing countries experience shortages in areas as essential as food, energy or housing. In view of those disastrous situations, the president of CIDA has said in presenting his annual report, and I quote:

... only a coordinated international response could effectively meet and minimize suffering.

Mr. Speaker, from that statement of the president of CIDA, we assume that he should give us evidence that CIDA assistance has really met and minimized suffering. In a few moments, I shall give extremely specific examples that will prove the opposite.

Mr. Speaker, CIDA operates in very strange ways. This government agency's annual report is the only document available to the House. Now, on page 25, there is a chapter on the Ivory Coast. I shall read from it briefly.

Ivory Coast's National Library, constructed at a cost of $4 million, half of which was provided by Ivory Coast, was inaugurated in January 1974.

And we are coming to an interesting section. When one reads an annual report, it looks fine, it reads well, it is said and I quote:

During the year, 26 Canadian advisers worked at designing, writing and printing textbooks and workbooks required for the country's educational television system. To the $1.7 million it committed in 1971, CIDA added a grant of $3.2 million.

Mr. Speaker, members of the House who go through that report and come to that educational television project do not learn any more than what is said in that short sentence. We spent about $5,000,000 a drop in the sea, but no member got more information on that little project that what is said in that short sentence.

On the basis of this information and of personal research—and I do not want to involve in any way any Canadian consultant abroad—I would like to make available to the House information that CIDA refuses to give us on this little project which is so briefly described in the annual report. In other words, the educational TV system for the Ivory Coast got a $5 million grant. As I said earlier, it is a drop in the sea of the $770 million available to this agency. The agreement is scheduled to end in 1975. And that is all we know. If one tries to find out more about this, one realizes that this is difficult, through normal channels, of course.

This project was started four years ago. For the information of the hon. members, I shall make a summary of the situation. This is interesting. The personel amounts to 30 Canadian families approximately since Canadian consultants abroad have an average of three to four children. As far as field personnel is concerned there were six different coordinators over a four year period. These were Messrs. Jacques Gagnon, Jacob, Dufort, Beaulieu, Lalonde and Samson. Mr. Gagnon resigned. We should know why. Mr. Jacob was appointed temporarily, but his contract was not renewed. Another, Mr. Dufort, was repatriated or released by the embassy. What is the embassy or External Affairs doing in this business? Another, Mr. Beaulieu, was asked to resign and was expelled. Mr. Bigras, second secretary at the embassy, appointed Mr. Lalonde ad interim. And finally, CIDA appointed Mr. Samson.

Mr. Speaker, there were six coordinators in four years. In five months, four coordinators were put in charge of four different CIDA projects. They are Messrs. Benoît, Bossé, Desrosiers and Lemelin. The effect of the staff turnover is obviously very serious, because there is no continuity in the work of the various volunteers who are constantly being transferred from place to place and are always under great pressure from the Canadian embassy, the Department of External Affairs and CIDA. Therefore, the interrelation of administrative responsibilities becomes an acute problem.

Mr. Speaker, we also should know about the role played by the Canadian embassy in this project. It would be important. Who is the ambassador? What does he do?

An hon. Member: Just look in the book.

Mr. Fortin: It is not written in it.

Why does the embassy have so much power? Two positions being vacant, those of cameraman and coordinator, Mr. Lalonde has been appointed production manager and not coordinator; however, he signs his letters as acting coordinator. Where is the truth?

Mr. Speaker, it was a printing plant. So, a four-color rotary press was ordered through this project at a cost of $250,000. But the worst of it is that the press has not arrived yet while two experts have been waiting one of them for two years, Mr. Bossé and the other one for one year, Mr. Dion.

I recently put a question in this House concerning paper. A printing plant is good but, by gosh, it needs paper! This government passed a contract with the E. B. Eddy Company according to a press report in Le Droit of February 27, 1974. I quote:

The Minister of Supply and Services, Jean-Pierre Goyer announced the awarding of a $1,449,538 contract to the E. B. Eddy Company in Hull.

This contract passed by the Canadian Commercial Corporation on behalf on the Canadian International Development Agency provides for the supply of 1,970 tons of paper of different grades to Zaïre (Equatorial Africa) by April 1974.

That paper has never arrived, Mr. Speaker. We should know exactly what happened to it. I wonder why members opposite talk so loudly? What do they have to hide?

Mr. Speaker, here is a good example. I have here a letter dated May 1st 1974, signed by Mr. Michel Verhas de Bouaké, Rupublic of Ivory Coast. This letter is accompanied by a petition signed by all Canadians overseas asking CIDA, the embassy and Canadian authorities to show leadership, to stop acting like fools and to make the necessary efforts so that this project be realized. Let us not forget Canadians overseas in our debate. It is a good thing, Mr. Speaker, to send $707 million to developing countries. Those are financial resources. But we must not neglect the human resources we send to those countries, through CUSO, CESO or CIDA. Now, Mr. Speaker, our human resources happen to be there to cooperate with the locals but they do not get any directives or if they do, they get them all wrong.

I have before me a document dated April 29, 1974. I will not read it to you, but any member interested in consulting it will be extremely surprised at the content; it is signed by all the volunteers who claim: Please, help us work, give us some equipment; you have sent us here under contracts and we are ready to perform them; we are competent, we want to work, but we have nothing to do. We have a rotary press that prints in four colours, that is we do not have the machine, but the two employees, the two skilled operators.

● (1630)

Mr. Speaker, these are the points I wanted to make.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who is in the House, to have an inquiry made immediately and specifically on this particular project in order to find out how CIDA funds are appropriated. He will then understand why MPs have serious grievances against CIDA.

We do not wish to control CIDA nor dictate its policy. What we want is, first of all, that it be answerable to the House and that the minister give us the assurance that the funds allotted to this agency really serve the purposes for which they were appropriated.

Mr. Speaker, there is a deep silence, and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was right about that.

Now, from the copy of a contract of a person on assignment, I see that section 11 reads as follows: it is agreed by His Majesty and the assignee that, for the duration of the contract and for twelve months after the contract has expired, the assignee and his dependents promise not to publish anything, not to express in public any personal opinion deriving from the assignment of the assignee—

Mr. Speaker, persons on assignment are bound to shut off, not to say a word. Therefore, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to say, when he rises later, how many people have completed their assignment? How many had to quit of their own free will before the termination of their contract? How many were expelled from CIDA? How many were there compared to the total number of persons on assignment, because surely that appears in the annual report, does it not? Is CIDA consulting or meeting with those people sent abroad?

Mr. Speaker, I have on my desk glaring proof that Canadians were sent to francophone Africa, not only to the Ivory Coast, but to other countries. I have proof that they were sent without a contract, that the contract was signed only six or seven months later, once the volunteers had reached their destination. I know of specific cases where people were promised reimbursement of their travelling expenses but never received the amounts entailed.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind those are specific and important points. I ask the government members to help us, instead of finding this funny; let them co-operate with us that Canadians might be proud of the help we give developing countries. It seems that debates like this one today on the Canadian International Development Agency are few and far between, because the opposition must initiate them. It seems to me this would be an ideal opportunity for the minister to make very specific commitments before the House with regard to projects of which we want to be proud. We are willing to help developing countries, on that we agree.

We hand over $770 million to CIDA, the third highest item in the Canadian budget, which is more than that of the Department of Agriculture, to help the countries suffering from extreme hardships, severe droughts or poverty, where thousands of people die of hunger. Mr. Speaker, some young Canadians are willing to give of themselves, to give up a few years to help them. They are willing to do so! But let us support them and quit playing games with them.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many members of the House have laid eyes on the expert's guide. That is the name given the volunteer. This is a document intended for internal circulation, bearing number 550, which outlines what the volunteer must do.

Mr. Speaker, once an hon. member has read this guide, he has reason to ask himself hundreds of questions on the administration of CIDA because the expert's guide is, in the final analysis, a monumental hoax.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I do not want to take more of the time of the House. What I have to say now about CIDA is all negative because of the evidence I have in hand. It seems to me that the minister should take this opportunity to give us the assurance that he will answer the question I asked him the other day; I ask him again to assure us that he will order an immediate inquiry on the complex project of televised education in Ivory Coast.

He will realize that what I am now telling him is true. I can provide him information if need be. I am ready to co-operate with him and he can ask himself questions about other projects so that we may be proud of the assistance we make available to other countries.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there are a few things I would like to say in six very brief points. With the information I have, I can come to this conclusion: Some Canadian volunteers arrive in the host country from Canada without a working permit. Therefore, they have problems at the airport. That is not provided for by CIDA. I can give you names. Some volunteers leave without any contract in hand. I wonder whether the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Dupont) would go to work under such conditions. Some are surprised to see their contract cancelled by CIDA due to staff turnover, and that, without previous notice. A Canadian volunteer is sent to a country, and then his contract is annulled and he is required to sign another one.

Fourth, contract promises are not kept by CIDA. For example, Mrs. Gabrielle Robert was supposed to get a contract but she had no job once she got there. Mr. Speaker, I can even give you the names of Canadian volunteers who have no job in the countries where they are sent.

Finally, some volunteers do not work at the place where they had been assigned before their departure from Canada. Consequently, they must look for a job once they get there. I have even heard of a physical education teacher who got to a given country. He went to the school where he had been assigned under his contract and he was told: "We do not have any work for you, sir. Maybe you will find some at the next school". So, this teacher, whose name I can give you, went to the next school. He was told: "Sir, we cannot hire you because we already have a physical education teacher. But if you would go in another town, maybe you will find a job". Finally, this teacher went to the National Education Department of that country where he was hired. At the end, CIDA cancelled his contract and he has been brought back to our country.

They managed to discourage a young Canadian who was willing to give a great deal of his time, of his health and of his knowledge to help people who live in poverty and need our assistance.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of assistance is a disgrace. I suggest that the department should take measures instead of bragging, as Paul Gérin-Lajoie does, about having $707 million to distribute. It sure looks good, Mr. Speaker. If human value is so important to him, let him first look after his volunteers so that they can give their best and be proud of it instead of having to work under present conditions.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my comments by saying that the House of Commons is aware that a number of fundamental changes have taken place in the world economy in recent months. The inflation which has gripped the world, and the energy crisis with ensuing balance of payments difficulties, have had a very serious if not tragic impact upon the poorest countries of the world and the poorest peoples of the world.

Probably we ought to be devoting our attention in the long run in the House of Commons to consideration of ways and means of cushioning the impact of these global problems upon the developing countries of the world. Hopefully, today is the beginning of a process that will continue in the standing committee, in the House of Commons and in the country and will enable us to arrive at a consensus as to how best we can cope, as a nation, with world problems, especially those that affect the third world.

I was impressed during the debate by the general support for Canada's international effort in the field of aid. I want to tell my friends in the House of Commons that as Secretary of State for External Affairs for a very short time, I have discovered, as did my predecessor for a much longer time, that the perception of Canada's role in the world, a perception shared by the developing world and by others who are engaged in the developing world, is very favourable indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I do not make that comment in any way to turn aside the criticisms which have been advanced in respect of our aid program. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) in moving this motion has made a call for scrutiny. He has asked why the Canadian International Development Agency has become the fiefdom of one man. If Canada's international aid program, on which millions of dollars are being spent, has become the fiefdom of one man, the responsibility lies on the shoulders of members of the House of Commons. But I want to assure my hon. friend that the Canadian International Development Agency is not a fiefdom. It continues to be responsible to the government, and through the Secretary of State for External Affairs it is responsible to parliament. The head of CIDA has exactly the same status as any deputy minister in the Government of Canada, and his relationship to the minister and to parliament is precisely the same as that of any deputy minister.

● (1640)

Hon. members say they have had no opportunity to scrutinize the affairs of CIDA. Well, I must say that I do not take that seriously at all. The charge of secrecy is so ill-founded that it smothers the opposition in ridicule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the president of CIDA have been prepared to appear before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in all those past years. As I have looked at the record, I have found that the president of CIDA has in fact appeared before the committee every year and has been willing to answer questions. Indeed, he has been willing to come back and to provide the committee with the questions it might want to ask. He has invited members of parliament to go to CIDA to get more information. But members opposite make the plaintive cry, "We are powerless".

What has happened to the official opposition? What has happened to the public accounts committee? The chairman of the public accounts committee is a member of the official opposition, and the accounts of CIDA must go to the committee every year; but never has the public accounts committee asked that CIDA officials appear before it as witnesses. Perhaps the reason is that the former auditor general—the gentleman whom my friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), respects so greatly and who has presided over the accounts of Canada—has never raised a single criticism about the administration of CIDA. Maybe that is why the official opposition have failed, through the public accounts committee, through the estimates committee or through any other process, to conduct the scrutiny that they now desire.

So far as I am concerned as minister responsible, I welcome the fullest scrutiny. In fact, today I welcome the opportunity to set the record straight on some of the ill-founded criticisms. I do not mind criticisms that are based on fact, but I do mind criticisms that are ill-founded and based upon ignorance. Do not say that CIDA has been immune from scrutiny. The opportunity has been there. If the House of Commons has failed to take advantage of that opportunity, we should not blame CIDA but ourselves.

Some hon. Members: Blame the government.

Mr. MacEachen: No, sir, not the government. CIDA has been one of the most open agencies that I know. The avalanche of press releases informing members of parliament of projects is enormous. I have looked at these releases coming out every so often, advising us of the projects that are being financed by CIDA throughout the world. But hon. members do not know about it. Do hon. members blame CIDA because they do not read their mail?

Then I think of sitting in the House of Commons since the end of last September as Secretary of State for External Affairs, waiting every day for penetrating questions from the official critic of the opposition on CIDA in particular, in which subject he has shown such a recent and accelerated interest. I must say that the record of penetrating interrogation on the floor of the House by the opposition is dismal. I believe that from the opening of parliament on September 30 until the Christmas recess—that is, three months and about 40 hours of oral questions' time—exactly five questions have been put to me on international development. Since January, the record is hardly better. There were a few more questions, all vague, always general and very slightly related to Canada's bilateral aid programs in which hon. members opposite have shown such interest today. So I have been coming in every day loaded with papers, waiting, sharpening my wits—and nothing has happened. I wonder what is the point of becoming informed in the House of Commons about CIDA when nobody else seems to care. I am glad that attitude has changed.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has said that it would be interesting to know about certain projects. He referred to the cadastral survey in Morocco and said it would be interesting to know about it. Apparently he had questions about it. But that project was approved and the announcement was made in 1968. Surely in that period the hon. member could have gone to the committee and asked some questions. But really he was not interested in asking questions.

Mr. Wagner: I was not here in 1968.

Mr. MacEachen: He was inspiring his colleagues from Quebec at meetings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, not asking about the cadastral survey in Morocco.

Another project is that of the national library on the Ivory Coast that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) raised. That was approved in 1969—but the hon. member says he has not received any information on it. The committees have been meeting—the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the committees on estimates. Surely a hard-driving member of parliament could have gone to the committee meetings in those five years and found out what was going on.

The same is true of all these projects that have popped up in print recently. The motorization program on river boats in Senagal was approved in 1971, and the building of the boarding school was approved in 1969. The provision of fertilizer unloading equipment for the ports of India was undertaken in February of 1971. All during these years controversial projects about which the hon. member says it would be interesting to know something about have been there; but few, if any, questions have been asked.

I am glad there is a conversion. They want scrutiny and I want scrutiny. I think this is great. There has been such massive misinformation. The hon. member spoke about the loan to Cuba and suggested that there was a rift between myself and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). In fact, there was a story in the press on this subject relating to a letter which I was alleged to have sent to the Minister of Finance protesting the views of the Minister of Finance on this subject. The fact is that no such sentiments were ever expressed either by voice, by word, by pen or by typewriter. Never did I differ with the Minister of Finance on the financing of the loan to Cuba. When CIDA, just seven days ago, announced a detailed accounting of the Cuban loan, most of those who attempted to exploit the imaginary rift between myself and my colleague did not see fit to report the facts about the alleged controversy which made the headlines just a short time ago.

● (1650)

Then there was another story about Iran, with its oil riches, to which CIDA was alleged to have loaned $100 million on soft terms. Well, the loan to Iran never took place—not for a dime, let alone $100 million. Iran has never been in the development assistance program of Canada. Then, of course, there were the lie detectors. An important journalist, a former member of this House who has sat on both sides, said that CIDA was providing lie detectors to Cuba. One can imagine the fear which struck the hearts of the timid in Canada when they learned we were providing lie detectors to the Cuban authorities. It turned out that these machines, called polygraphs, were in fact needed for public health and animal husbandry programs in Cuba.

We were accused of subsidizing a private airline in Indonesia. That did not happen. We are accused of subsidizing the oil-rich countries. Are hon. members going to be drawn in by these spurious allegations that we are subsidizing oil-rich countries through CIDA? For example, Indonesia was mentioned as having a per capita income of $80, based on the gross national product, or a personal income of $100. Nigeria, which has improved its per capita income, is today standing at about $230. The hon. member asked me to tell him our criterion for providing aid. The criterion is poverty based on per capita income. If we give aid to Indonesia, Nigeria and Algeria despite the welcome improvements in their economies, it is because their standards of living and their per capita incomes are still unspeakably low in Canadians terms. The hon. member asked about Brazil. He asked an important question. Why do we give aid to Brazil? Does the hon. member know Brazil well? Has he talked to Bishop Camara of Recife, who is a worldwide authority on development and who knows Brazil well? If the hon. member had spoken to him, he would have been more moderate in his charges in regard to extending aid to Brazil.

Probably the most damaging criticism of all those made in this House was that in the dying months of 1974 CIDA rushed around trying to get rid of $117 million or so before the axe went down at the end of the fiscal year. I find that pretty hard to take, because of the $117 million, $70 million was reallocated in accordance with pledges made at the World Food Conference to feed the hungry of the world: $70 million was food aid. This reallocation was absolutely necessary because of the world food crisis and the plight of many countries. We provided $50 million plus $20 million of food aid commitment—$71.4 million—to countries like Bangladesh, Sahel, Tanzania, Ethiopia, Pakistan and Srilanka. I think it was good that we rushed around to provide help in that amount to the starving people in these countries. Part of the reallocation was in the acceleration of ongoing projects in the amount of $20 million for a railroad in Malawi, Kenya and Botswana.

Then we accelerated and approved new projects in the amount of $25 million, reacting to the inflationary problems, the balance of payments problems and the financial problems of the underdeveloped world. These reallocations were not made by this so-called fiefdom. They were approved, signed and authorized last November and December by myself as Secretary of State for External Affairs, and when I go before the committee I will be happy to explain each and every item in that $117 million. If any hon. member of this House argues that that money has been wrongly spent, I will ask to be convinced that it was and I will apologize if he can show me and the members of the committee that what he says is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I hear that criticism while we try to get more rice seedlings to Bangladesh or more fertilizer to Pakistan and Srilanka. This was all part of the reallocation of the $117 million. I would like to close on a more conciliatory note than that which I have been following for the last few moments. This is a large program, it is an expensive program and it is growing every year. International development is difficult. Development, even in Canada, is difficult; development in the Atlantic provinces is difficult. But it is much more difficult in the developing countries of the world which are just emerging into independence, which have new governments and low standards of living. We just cannot apply Canadian standards of management to these new countries; therefore, I do not think that every project will be a howling success. If hon. members think they will be, they are making a mistake. What we must do is exercise the best possible management and administration of these programs.

Since I have taken on this job I have been impressed by the dedication and energy of the officers of the Canadian International Development Agency who are administering these programs throughout the world. They are, I think, gaining for Canada a recognition and reputation which, if it is not the envy of the world, is at least the equal of any other country in the world.

I hope I am not giving the impression that everything in our development program is relevant to the very rapidly changing world in which we live. We have our programs constantly under review. Some of the comments made today as to the eligibility of countries are very much on our minds in reviewing our program. But aside from the review which is normally carried on, since I have become minister I have been conducting a rather fundamental review of CIDA programs and their relationships to all other aspects of government policy. We hope we can present at a future time a comprehensive policy to parliament and to the Canadian people which will explain, bring up to date and make more relevant our programs. I do not anticipate any miracles. We are working on this, and I hope at that time hon. members will be ready to scrutinize our programs.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having listened to the minister's comments with interest and heard him speak about the Cuba loan, may I ask, what is the interest rate on this loan?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have the press release here; it contains all the details. I will be happy to send it to the hon. member.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the minister will permit a question the answer to which may clarify his statement. Are we to understand that there has been no divergence of opinion as between the Minister of Finance and himself relating to the Cuba loan?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is what I said.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be prepared to table in the House correspondence or notes which have been exchanged between himself and the Minister of Finance on this topic?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend ought not to be drawn into believing that every letter presented for a minister's signature is signed and sent.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question was very precise. I am sure the minister did not intend to mislead this House and I am sure that he understood my question perfectly well. It was as clear as I could make it. Would the minister be prepared to table the correspondence exchanged between himself and the Minister of Finance relating to the divergence of opinion which existed between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance, these notes having been exchanged in December, 1974? Is the minister prepared to table them?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no, because the hon. member is still being sucked in to believing the newspapers.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I remind the hon. member that he sought the floor on a question of privilege. What he has presented is a dispute about certain facts, and that, as the hon. member knows, does not constitute a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister said that members did not ask him questions although he came to the House quite prepared. The other day, I asked him a question on the management of a television project in the Ivory Coast. I did not receive any answer then. I asked the same question again in my speech a moment ago, and he did not answer. Can the minister tell the House what he intends to do with the request I made to him?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult in a debate of this kind to deal with specific projects and give details about personnel, their qualifications, their travels and when they arrived in the host country. This is a very interesting and important question, and once we get into committee I guarantee to the hon. member that every question he asks will be answered to the best of our ability.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition signed by thirty two Canadians on assignment abroad who demand immediate action by the government. I ask the minister—and I am going to give him a copy of the petition—whether he would order an investigation into the matter.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Administration of justice—Enforcement of maintenance orders issued by family courts—Government action; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—National defence—Inquiry whether Canada negotiating with Brazil in purchase of armoured cars; the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson)—Air Canada—Attempted denial of right of member to appear before labour board—Refusal to pay employees appearing as witnesses.

Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now revert to motions.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—TABLING OF DOCUMENT GIVING REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT'S DECISION TO PROCEED WITH DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I realize that many members are concerned about the Pickering because the issues are most complex. Deciding whether or not to build a new aviation facility for the central Ontario region required careful deliberation. The government considered six years of studies, the report of the airport inquiry commission, and then a further interdepartmental review which took into account such matters as broad national policy implications for the longer term growth in the economy, the deconcentration of population and the relative roles of the various regions.

Rather than expound on the advantages and disadvantages of the alternatives to constructing the Pickering airport, I would like to table a detailed paper which explains the rationale behind the government's decision to proceed with immediate development of minimum international facilities at Pickering, to allow for known traffic demands, to permit full consideration of future policies and to come to grips with Canadian desires for the demographic composition of our country. This decision reflects the necessity to meet minimum essential needs while allowing us the time to pursue all other options.

[Translation]

Basically, Madam Speaker, this decision will allow us to avoid a congestion crisis at Malton in 1978-79, take immediate steps towards minimizing the Malton noise problem, ensure that the government has flexibility to respond to changing needs and demands. In proceeding with Pickering we will continue to work closely with other departments including environment, agriculture and urban affairs. There are a number of major outstanding issues that need to be resolved through federal-provincial consultations as well as discussions with the regional and local governments and with the people directly involved. I will keep the House informed of our progress on these matters.

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table a paper giving the rationale for the government's decision concerning Pickering airport.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, we are disappointed in the minister's statement. We believe our position on a second Toronto international airport has been made abundantly clear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member means all five positions.

Mr. Stevens: In October, 1972, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said, after reviewing all the circumstances regarding the need for a second international airport at Toronto, that he remained convinced that the case for a second airport had not been made. In no way has the minister in his statement today indicated any reason why the official opposition in this House should change their view concerning Pickering airport. In fact, I suggest that today's demonstration by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is a clear indication of the tremendous indecision and uncertainty that runs through that entire department. We have a project that may result in hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars of federal expenditure, yet a decision is being made with so much uncertainty that the minister could not even come into the House at two o'clock to deliver his statement because it was still being written. He asked for time, until five o'clock, to prepare his statement.

● (1710)

In my area of central Ontario we have had similar experiences with high-spending, highfalutin' Liberal government programs. The attitude of the present government, which is caught up with the bureaucracy and the consultants, is very similar to the attitude that apparently prevailed in this country at the time of the boom in canal building. At that time everybody wanted to build a canal. In our area, Sir William Mulock proposed the building of a canal. I invite the Minister of Transport to look at the Mulock ditch. It is still there. No ship has ever been through it, in spite of the fact it was one of the tremendously costly misadventures of the Liberal federal government at that time.

What is being done today will result in a very valuable part of central Ontario becoming known as the "Marchand wasteland". If you can believe and take seriously what the minister says, 18,000 acres will be devoted to the construction of a pint-sized airport with one runway and whatever terminal facilities are required. That sounds very innocent. I suggest, however, that that is the thin edge of the wedge. This government intends to put through a Pickering airport development very much in the style that they originally contemplated when they first made the announcement. Today's performance is purely politically oriented, as so much concerning a second airport in Toronto has been politically oriented by this government.

Let us get the record clear. When the first announcement was made concerning the proposal to build at Pickering, our party spokesman at that time made it clear that we did not believe a second airport should be built. We suggested a preferable approach would be to build an airport in the Kingston area which would service the Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa areas. We suggested that rapid transit facilities could be built between the central airport in the Kingston area and the three cities I have just mentioned. As well as a high speed transit service for the airport, the service would have been of inestimable value to the residents of the three cities with regard to their commuting problems. That was our position at that time.

I will be very interested in hearing the spokesman for the New Democratic Party. If you read Hansard for March 2, 1972, you will see that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was almost bubbling over in his commendation of the Jamieson proposal announced that day. He concluded with the following words:

> I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by congratulating the minister on his decision; I think it was a wise one.

That was his attitude on March 2, 1972, concerning the announced Pickering airport. We believe it was not a wise decision. We believe that the minister's suggestion today that he will have only some kind of mini-airport with a mini-runway is not being frank with the Canadian public. The minister made it clear that he believes international air service should be routed through Pickering. He referred to the Gibson report in certain respects, but not to the comment on page 212 of the report which states that all international travel should be routed through Pickering. These are the words used:

> The noisiest aircraft presently operating at Malton, the DC-8 and the 707, which are used in the international sector, will fly from the proposed Pickering airport.

I believe it is important that that be on the record. This airport is being designed to carry the noisiest aircraft presently in service. In referring to the Gibson report, we should bear in mind that that report substantially accepted and endorsed the Ministry of Transport's projections with regard to air travel in the Toronto area. We suggest those statistics are already outdated. They are based on the years 1973, 1972 or earlier.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), who is in the chamber, knows the impact which the energy crisis has had on air travel. There is serious doubt whether projections based on those statistics are reliable when projecting future air travel. That is why we suggested to the minister that rather than making the hasty decision he has given today he defer his decision for two, three or possibly five years to avoid an unfortunate mistake such as I believe he has made.

We suggest this because already 1974 figures for air travel indicate there has been a slackening in world air passenger travel increases. A recent ICAO news release is headlined "World airline traffic in 1974 shows smallest increase in 15 years". It points out that the year's rate of growth for total traffic was the lowest since 1958. They also point out that 1974 was the first year in which the airline industry showed a decline in aircraft miles flown. Is it not reckless for the government, knowing that this entire sector of transportation is changing, to rush in with today's hasty statement? They say they intend to go ahead with Pickering with one runway. This somehow is to pacify those in the area surrounding Pickering, and at the same time the government is hoping to pacify the Malton residents.

We have made it clear that we believe there is no need for those in the Malton area to be subjected to rising noise levels as a result of air traffic activity. We stick to that assertion. We believe that there are already possible alternative means of transportation that could handle much of the air traffic increase now projected to go through Malton. I refer to rapid transit between such points as Montreal and Toronto, or the development of a STOL Airport at the Island airport. There are many other technologically possible alternatives than simply stating that we need a second airport for Toronto and it should be at Pickering.

● (1720)

I should like to turn now to the lot of those people who live close to the Pickering airport site. In his statement the minister made it clear that the Gibson report points out that certain communities adjacent to the Pickering site may have a noise problem. He says that he is sympathetic to the residents of Claremont and hopes that some arrangement can be made to buy their properties. I take it that the residents of Stouffville will just have to live with the noise in spite of the fact that the Gibson report recommended that some effort should be made to reach an accommodation with them. The minister says that he does not believe they are going to be bothered by the noise and his department does not intend to offer any compensation to them. He also said that he intends to consult municipal and provincial governments. I was glad to hear that. I would point out, however, that up to the present he has not consulted municipal governments in the Pickering area nor the municipal government in Stouffville.

At page 75 of the report of the airport inquiry commission the following statement appears:

> The commission is of the opinion, having heard all the evidence, that the 28 NEF contour comes too close to Claremont and too close to Stouffville and if the Pickering airport is to be developed that the lands embracing both of these communities should be acquired.

At page 76 of the report the following appears:

> It is the commission's view that the project should include, as a minimum, the expropriation of all land within the 25 NEF zone level, or greater, in addition to that which it has commented upon concerning Claremont and Stouffville.

Hon. members should note that according to the document just tabled, the minister does not accept the recommendations of the Gibson report concerning the residents of Stouffville. This is most unfortunate. The government has purchased 18,000 acres in the Pickering area and has frozen about 60,000 acres, without compensation. For the Mirabel airport, however, the government bought over 80,000 acres outright. In Ontario they have just purchased the 18,000 acres and frozen the land surrounding the area. The Gibson report said, in effect, that if the government wished to go ahead with the Pickering airport it should offer to buy the surrounding land. However, the minister has turned down that recommendation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. According to Standing Order 15, a spokesman for an opposition party may reply briefly to a statement of the minister. Perhaps the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) would like to bring his comments to a close.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If he sticks to the truth it will be very short.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you for your comments, Madam Speaker. As the minister has indicated, however, it has taken six years to get to this point and we in the opposition are very disturbed about what has happened. I should just like to conclude by asking all members if they think it is reasonable to believe that the Department of Transport and the minister propose to build a one-runway airport on 18,000 acres, with all the infrastructure that is required. As is pointed out in the Gibson report, new highways will be required, new sewer facilities and water facilities must be built, and it will lead to the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. The fact is, of course, the government does not propose to build a mini-airport at Pickering at all. They are determined to build a super airport which will become another white elephant.

I earnestly hope that every member of this House will lend his voice in opposition to this foolish move by a minister who admits that his department is in a mess.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, the decision announced this afternoon on the Pickering airport rivals the decision made a couple of weeks ago on Syncrude, for economic and social irresponsibility. The minister did not announce plans for an international airport which would be part of a developed plan to integrate regional, national and international air services in Canada, as we might have expected. He has not presented the Pickering airport as part of a comprehensive transportation policy, but is continuing with the ad hoc type of decision-making that he has adopted since becoming minister.

In the statement the minister tabled, he said—I note he took care not to include this in his comments in the House because he knew we would have laughed him behind the curtains—that the Gibson report constitutes "an impartial report" of the problem. Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Speaker. This report takes over, holus-bolus, the whole set of assumptions and the whole methodology that preceded the original decision made by the Department of Transport.

The whole report constitutes an apologia for a decision reached many months or years ago by the department. In fact, it has just cost the taxpayers a great deal of money to duplicate what had already been decided. It is ludicrous to suggest that the report is in any sense an impartial inquiry into the need for an international airport at Toronto. Not only is the report not impartial but it can be faulted on technical grounds. I am not going to transgress the rules of the House by going in detail into the criticisms that have been made of the report, but I do want to mention a couple of mistakes that one would have thought the experts in that field would not have made.

At one point the number of people affected by noise in the Malton area was calculated at twice the actual figure. The mathematicians began with a series of concentric circles: in the outer circle they made the mistake of adding on the number from the inner circle; thus, they came up with a figure for those affected by the noise level in the Malton area of twice the actual number. That is a simple technical mistake that one would have thought even ordinarily competent technicians would have spotted. Of course it is the kind of mistake that reinforces the minister's argument against expanding the Malton facility.

Apart from integrating this decision with an over-all transportation policy, which I for one had hoped the government would give us, if not this afternoon then at least in the expanded speech that the minister tabled, though it it not there either, the crucial point is that he should at least have established the need for an airport at Pickering. Forget the economic benefits and all the other considerations for the area; if we spend a minimum of $1.5 billion of federal funds on an airport in the Pickering area or anywhere else, we have to establish need, and that the minister has not done. Surely this is the ultimate condemnation of his decision.

I want to refer, since the minister did in his remarks, to what I think he called the coming crisis in 1978-79 at Malton if some action of the kind he has now decided upon is not taken. Let us assume that the projections for 1978-79 turn out to be correct, though I do not assume they are correct. To go back to the methodology, this whole report was based on the cost of travel which existed prior to the energy crisis. It is incredible that the forecast of continued use of aircraft for travelling should have been assumed to be constant by the minister in light of the energy crisis.

It is stated as an assumption that one can expect air fares to diminish constantly. The fact is that air fares are going up, not down. However, let us assume, at least for 1978-79, that demands for air travel in the Malton area are what the minister anticipates. The point is that facilities at Malton could be expanded to take any additional air traffic without increasing to any significant degree the numbers of people who would be affected by the noise.

The minister knows—at least I hope he knows, though I am not always sure that is the case—that the number of those affected by noise in the Malton area between 1972 and 1973, instead of increasing, actually went down by some 33 per cent. Surely that fact is important. Why is the number going down? It is because of improved technology in aircraft. Aeroplanes are getting quieter, not noisier. They are also getting larger, so that a greater number of people can be carried by fewer planes, which itself reduces the total amount of noise. In addition, if you expand and use the runway facilities already at Malton in a sensible way, you can also decrease the number of people affected by noise.

The conclusion, therefore, is that even assuming the level of air traffic the minister assumes for the period 1978-79, Malton could have been expanded to take into account the increased number of flights without significantly increasing noise levels at all. Indeed, beyond that date because of all the improvements being made in controlling noise levels, the future of the people in the Malton area need not be seriously affected by noise at all.

I want to conclude on this note. The need for an international airport has not been established. We are going to lose valuable arable land that is needed for food production. The minister is flying in the face of the opposition by residents in the area, the desires of all municipal politicians in the Toronto area, and against the expressed desire—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You know that is not true.

Mr. Broadbent: It is true. The minister had a telegram from the mayor of Toronto and all the councillors. The minister is flying in the face of the development plan of the Ontario government for the whole region. He is making the kind of decision that was put upon him by his own department many years ago, and he cannot extricate himself from it now for political reasons. In short, he is abdicating all sense of responsibility as Minister of Transport, and it is time he resigned.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I understand that I am presently the only French-speaking member in this House, but I listened very carefully to the remarks—

[English]

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: I dislike interjecting at this point knowing members have limited time, but I thought the leader of the NDP might give us some indication of why the flip-flop from the statement he made on March 2.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if I have the indulgence of the House to reply to that, I would certainly be happy to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness there is no known machinery whereby a statement on motions can be interrupted for the putting of questions to hon. members.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, by unanimous agreement we can do anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, just a moment ago, I was saying—when there was much noise in the House—that there was much noise near airports. Someone says that there is also water. I am ready to accept water because it is necessary, but not noise when I speak in my own language in the House. I respected the speakers before me when they talked in another language. I was careful not to make noise and I do not accept it. I wish to say only a few words about the statement made by the Minister of Transport a moment ago. I wish to do it sincerely and express myself clearly to show once more that in this Parliament we have our responsibilities. It is about time for people to understand better that parliamentarians are the ones who should be making decisions here.

Mr. Speaker, the statement of the minister was short despite the importance of the subject which is extremely serious not only for today and tomorrow, but for years to come. The minister made his statement a few minutes only before five o'clock, and that I regret. We should have liked not only to hear his statement but also to know the content of the paper he has been good enough to table. This would have given us the opportunity to make more knowledgeable comments on the subject raised.

One fact, Mr. Speaker, should be remembered more often. It has always been my view members of the House represent Canada as a whole. This, at least, is what one may read in Beauchesne, and there should be no amazement if a French-speaking member rises at some point to speak on a question, especially if it concerns an English-speaking area of Toronto. This is quite normal for someone concerned with the whole country's welfare, considering that today one goes very rapidly from one area to another, thanks to modern technology and transportation. One must give serious consideration to any suggestion leading to better accessibility, so that Canadians can better understand each other, better communicate, practice trade in a more efficient, better way, and truly build a country that every Canadian can call his own, whether he lives in the east or in the west.

Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated this decision was taken after six years of studies, after the airport enquiry commission submitted their report to the minister and, I surmise, to the Cabinet. All this is the result of three enquiries: one made six years ago, one by the Pickering airport enquiry commission and the third, a departmental enquiry.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House, I would have welcomed the opportunity of being made aware of results as the enquiry process went on.

It is not a matter of seeking to lead or give directions, nor either administering instead of the Cabinet. It is nothing of the kind. It is rather to have a good understanding, when the Cabinet moves in one direction, of the why's and wherefore's of the decision. To know whether it is a valid one, whether the Cabinet actually took the decision or whether it was made by bureaucrats, department officials. That is the question I would like to clarify, Mr. Speaker.

I have always thought, and I repeat this evening, Mr. Speaker, I have clearly the impression that it is neither the members of parliament nor the ministers who are in command in the House, but rather the bureaucrats outside of Parliament, people who are not elected and are not given a mandate by the population.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want democracy to be an empty word. I do not want it to be hypocrisy. I do not want Parliament to be only a show of democracy. I want us to take our responsibilities, and if we have to make unpopular decisions, I for my part am ready to take my responsibilities. This is the way I see it. I regret it when we are told suddenly that a decision has been made. I have all the good faith in the world and want the best interests of Canada, but by gosh I would like to be told more, so that we, Parliamentarians, could have our say about this matter.

We are asked to vote credits only. We are asked to tell Cabinet: Spend money. However, we are not invited to learn why this money must be spent, what it will give and if it will be profitable for Canada. These are the questions asked by the people we represent. They are entitled to ask these questions and they are entitled to an answer.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the time has come in 1975 to have more cooperation between the ministers and the members of the House of Commons so that we may be truly aware of the direction we are taking, and whether it is good or bad, it is up to us to make the decision.

In the future I would like, and I am asking this with all due respect to all the members of the cabinet, that when such important decisions have to be made, we be given first the studies which have been made so that we might not be taken by surprise and be able to give a valuable opinion according to democracy, if we still believe in it.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the rules of the House are such that there is not an opportunity for other members to participate in replying to a statement on motions. However, it is also my understanding that with the unanimous consent of the House this would be possible. In light of the fact that my riding is the one most seriously affected by this decision, I would seek unanimous consent to make some comments at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is, of course, proposing a procedure that is only possible with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: This is an opposition day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, when we made this agreement, I proposed that this could be followed by a question period till 6 p.m. I do not see why the hon. member concerned should not be allowed to speak till 6 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: This is not provided for the in the Standing Orders of the House. Without the unanimous consent of the House, it is absolutely impossible to have a question period. This is not provided for in the agreement set forth by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Fortin: I am sure that you will get the unanimous consent if you ask for it again.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking me to seek the unanimous consent of the House at this time to the suggestion that there should be a period of questioning of the minister? I am unable to seek the consent of the House without knowing specifically what the hon. member has in mind.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT SECRECY IN OPERATION OF CIDA—EFFECT ON EXTERNAL AID PROGRAM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wagner:

That this House deplores the Government's secrecy in the operation of the Canadian International Development Agency which casts public doubt on the quality of management and effectiveness of Canada's international assistance program.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it was perhaps painfully ironic that we interrupted a debate on the world food situation and international assistance by an announcement which, in the long run, will make unproductive a great deal of wonderful land in this country. I also wondered, having heard the announcement, if it was not ready at two o'clock today why it could not have waited until tomorrow. After listening more carefully I wondered why, even at two o'clock tomorrow, it would have been such a shatterer.

Today's debate is an interesting one, the kind we have all too infrequently. I commend the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) for his wonderful, cogent, thoughtful and penetrating statement. I enjoyed too the remarks of my old friend, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and I listened with fascination to the minister in his presentation.

The last time I had the great honour and the trepidation of following a minister in this House it was the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Little did I know what a challenge I was facing, because only a few days ago I found that, while it was the voice of Lalonde, it was the hand of someone else, a hand in which $1,950 was later put. I not only had to compose my speech but deliver it, and no $1,950 came my way. So apparently I am not much of a businessman. Time was when members were not allowed to read their own speeches let alone someone else's, but we have ghostly developments in this spirited place.

I was glad to find that the minister had not lost his great capacity for political debate. When it comes to spirited and energetic political tub thumping there is no one who is his superior. This was not the time for political expertise; this was a time for our leading internationalist to draw upon himself the mantle of statesmanship, and not for scoring debating points.

According to the minister the President of CIDA is another deputy minister among deputy ministers. "There's nobody here but us deputies." According to the minister, nothing is wrong with the great program, it is perfect all across the world. According to the minister there is a steady flow of information, if only the dumb people over here were bright enough to put their cups under that spout of wisdom. We heard him on this subject, and how he chastised us for not being inquisitive enough. I noticed, however, that the weakest part of his argument was that part covered by my colleague when he referred to the correspondence between himself and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). If they cannot find correspondence, I suggest that they have someone in their office look in the files for the period from October 15 to December 13 of 1974. I say to him that if he is so anxious to disseminate wisdom, so eager to spread the gospel of complete perfection in his department, he should present these letters for public scrutiny.

● (1750)

I say also that the minister and his colleagues had their opportunity to show their concern for public and parliamentary enlightenment when the Price Waterhouse report was before the committee. Was there at that time any desire to enlighten members? There was not, Sir; there was suppression, followed by a further flow of funds. What was it for? Presumably, we must wait till some consultant group will produce a report so palatable that it might be allowed to be seen by the public, and perhaps it too will have a glossy cover with a beautiful fisherwoman on it.

I say also that my colleagues have sought, time and time again, to have a specific reference made to the standing committee on the report of CIDA. The minister and his associates said no to that as well. There is no reason why the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence could not undertake a thorough going examination of CIDA, not a limited examination which is cut-off by the guillotine of the estimates presentation. It could be done very simply by having the minister come in with the proper reference.

Some years ago when the former senator, the hon. Paul Martin, was minister, we had referred to the committee the annual report of the minister, and the committee under that reference was able to study in detail and at length these important matters. This is the way for the minister to get the information across to us.

I like the minister's debating style, but no peroration, however clever, can dissipate the clouds that surround the CIDA operation, can diminish the anxiety of the Canadian people that things are not going as well as they should. Has the minister told us why the phenomenal turnover in personnel has been taking place, why that very important division of government has become a regular personnel kaleidoscope? People are constantly spinning out of the department. That, sir, is very serious because, as every single speaker today has demonstrated, the people of Canada and the members of this House are proud of our role and are anxious to preserve our fine posture in the international field. But we want to be sure that every million that is spent, is spent wisely, efficiently and thoughtfully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Macquarrie: As one of those who left CIDA said, "Better to spend half a billion dollars wisely than a billion dollars unwisely". There have been mistakes, and they may be more important than the development of a very smart electric slicer of ham in a country where religion forbids the eating of ham, or more important than the roads that did not lead anywhere. This government knows all about roads that do not go anywhere. I live in a province where we have two approaches leading out to open sea. The PEI causeway has been abandoned after an expenditure of $20 million, abandoned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the very time when the members of the standing committee were down in the maritimes looking into its feasibility. So it is not only in the developing countries that we have roads that are abandoned and that do not really reach their destination.

What we have in mind, and what my distinguished colleague has in mind, is an invitation to the new minister, who is an excellent parliamentarian, to make it easier for all Canadians to be proud of what their government is doing in the troubled parts of the world. That is what we want.

I am not one of those who is at all reluctant to support aid to developing countries, and I come from a part of the land that has been long neglected. In fact we in the maritimes have been so long neglected that we are supposed to get used to it. In other parts of Canada if you treat them ill, they talk about separation or alienation. We are supposed only to say, "ho, hum" because it has always been that way. But I am not hesitant and never have been reluctant to speak strongly on behalf of external aid in the part of Canada which has been most neglected economically.

I am not deterred by those who say that charity begins at home and ask what is the use of helping these other people, because in my short life I have observed that those people who say that are usually not too charitable at home either, and they are not the kind of people from whom I take my signals.

It is not, as the minister mentioned, that we are objecting to sending rice seedlings to Bangladesh, that country that has gone through such travail and turmoil. Never was there a suggestion of that kind. We want the curtains of secrecy brushed aside. We want the light of day to enter into this very important department. We want to be assured, to be convinced, that all is going as well as is reasonably possible. We do not expect perfection. In fact there is far too much secrecy in this government.

I asked as long ago as April 8 last-year what military equipment we were sending to various parts of the world. Apparently we are selling so much of it all over the world that it takes nearly a year to get the figures totted up. So let us have an end to evasions and secrecy. Let us have openness, so that our external aid program, as we used to call it, may be one of the finest in the world, and one of which all of us can be proud.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I will preface my remarks by saying that I am one who always looks forward to the time when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) participates in a debate. I admire his courage, and certainly his performance in this House.

I must confess that today I was rather disappointed. I would have expected, at a time when within our global community hundreds of millions of people are either starving or suffering from malnutrition, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have forsaken his usual role in debate and evidenced some indication of understanding and compassion for these people in this global community. I would have expected that he would have forsaken the political gymnastics in favour of some compassion and concern.

In this debate on CIDA I intend to deal with two areas; first, in a general sense, CIDA's concept of itself; and second, in a more specific sense, with one role of CIDA in which I think there should be compassion and, possibly, re-direction. In connection with CIDA's own concept of itself, I examined with interest the messages of the president in the last four annual reviews of that agency. Going back to 1970-71 the president said, and I quote:

> I hope that CIDA during the next few years will gain a reputation for being not only sound and sensitive, but also for being innovative.

We move on one year later, and in 1971-72 the president indicated, and I quote:

> At CIDA we will continue to use these funds entrusted to us, carefully but with an openess to experimentation and innovation . . .

One year later there seemed to be some change in CIDA's concept when the president indicated, that now was the time, and I quote:

> . . . to develop a comprehensive strategy to give our efforts even great cohesiveness and vigour.

And finally, in the latest annual review for 1973-74, the president indicated that this was the year of, and I quote:

> . . . a testing time for CIDA.

He went on to say that it was likely time, and I quote:

> . . . to put emphasis on the sectors of assistance in which Canada excels . . .

If this year of 1973-74, the last year for which we have an annual review, was a testing period, the question obviously must be asked, "How has CIDA measured up to the test, and has it indeed passed its test?" I suggest that the answer, unfortunately, is that it has not passed the test.

All of us, and all Canadians are exposed to headlines, which really started in the latter part of last year, which cause Canadians grave concern about the efforts of this international agency. I read headlines such as: "CIDA in a Rush to Spend Millions", "CIDA: It's too set in its ways", "'Learning process' cost CIDA $4.4 million", "'Spend! Spend!' is foreign aid, agency's main emphasis", "At core of CIDA trouble lies development headaches", "CIDA: Is it a 'sick Joke'?". I have to ask myself, why these headlines? The only answer I have is to go back to the 1972-73 annual review when the president indicated that this was the year for a comprehensive strategy and firm guidelines.

In the year end speech of the president in 1973 entitled "Focus on Man", which is the annual message of the president of CIDA, he gave priority in section No. 1 to what was called the strategy for 1975 to 1980 taking shape, and indicated that it was a time to redefine the direction CIDA was to take. The speech continued by saying that:

> The shaping of the strategy for 1975-1980 should reach its peak during 1974 . . .

I ask where is the strategy, or is it abandoned, because indeed there is no sign of it, although in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on November 29, 1974, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie said:

> In addition, we are now only developing but coming to maturity with the proposed strategy for the years 1975-1980. I expect the document representing that CIDA proposal to be ready for our Minister within a matter of weeks or maybe days.

Again I ask, where is it, and again I ask, has it been abandoned? And finally I ask, where is CIDA now? The president in his last review says that he and the agency are in a testing period. I suggest to this House that the testing period is over, and indeed CIDA has not measured up to the test as we had hoped and, I am sure, as the minister had hoped.

In the Ottawa Journal of January 31, 1975, the last sentence of an editorial reads as follows:

> But it is precisely because Mr. MacEachen is responsible and because of his deep philosophical commitment to foreign aid that he should be taking vigorous steps to have the questions now clouding CIDA answered quickly and fully.

I suggest to the minister that this is a challenge facing him, and indeed all Canadians are looking forward to his response. There have been many suggestions in the press. One was that there was no hope for the reform of CIDA as it is currently constituted. Another was that CIDA must come under direct government control. Yet a third was that what is needed to maintain or restore confidence is a thorough investigation leading to recommendations and, if necessary, a shake up of administration. Unfortunately, other newspapers have been more pessimistic. The Ottawa Journal of January 27, 1975, says, "Some of those who know CIDA will believe that he"—meaning the Secretary of State for External Affairs—"will have great difficulty in bringing about meaningful change."

● (2010)

Referring specifically to CIDA's role, to what that role should be, and this is what we are examining, the Montreal Gazette of October 15, 1974, said in an editorial:

> . . . CIDA is developing a basic aid strategy which will place more concentration on food and agriculture.

I hasten to add that I support this thrust, just as I supported the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Rome at the International Food Conference. In my opinion, the most important sentence in his most impressive speech to the plenary session of that conference was the following:

> Canada emphatically supports the development of increased food production capacity by developing countries as the key to an anti-hungry strategy.

CIDA

On November 22, in the House of Commons, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said much the same. He said that if a country's agriculture is not healthy you can be pretty sure that country is having other problems as well.

I ask, what has been CIDA's response, what is its key to an anti-hungry strategy? According to the last annual review having to do with multilateral disbursements, 1.8 per cent of total disbursements were for agricultural programs. In the more important area of bilateral disbursements it is impossible, from an examination of the annual review, to determine how much has been devoted to agricultural programs. However, according to recent articles in the Toronto Star and other newspapers—and these figures, so far as I know, have not been refuted by CIDA or any of its officials—only 3 per cent of total disbursements have been applied to agricultural development programs. Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Rome said that these programs are the key to an anti-hungry strategy.

What was the result of the making of the pledge at that conference? First, so many ministers and officials had talked about a $50 million allocation that most Canadians must have assumed there were at least five or six such $50 million pledges. Second, it was finally determined that there was a $50 million re-allocation within CIDA's existing budget. That leads me to my next point. Third, what was the $50 million re-allocation for—what was its purpose?

In Rome—and I hope I am not doing an injustice to the minister—the Secretary of State for External Affairs implied, in my opinion, that the money was to be used for agricultural development. I thought that it would be made available for the purposes of the agricultural development fund, although in Rome, as I believe I can say in all fairness, we, as Canadians, did not support this fund.

The minister indicated in the House of Commons on November 14 that it was for the purposes of emergency relief. He said on December 2, in the House, that it was for a package of programs shortly to be announced. Then CIDA issued a press release, according to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs had said that the $50 million was to help relieve acute distress. But only five or six days before that statement had been made in the House of Commons, the Minister of Agriculture, on November 26, said at Belleville, Ontario:

> ... On top of this, we are doing something very important. We are helping people in developing countries learn how to feed themselves. That is the reason behind an additional $50 million grant that Canada is giving.

I suggest that was sheer flim-flam. I believe all members and all Canadians agree that we should continue in our humanitarian role, but we have lost sight of what the minister calls the key to an anti-hungry strategy.

Dr. W. S. Young, of the University of Guelph, has said, as reported in the Beacon-Herald of January 11, 1975:

> A sound agricultural industry in most countries is basic to economic and social development, but often industrialization has been emphasized at the expense of agriculture in the belief that this was the most important pathway to national development.

The minister accused us today of not reading CIDA publications. I received one today. It is CIDA's monthly publication "Contact". I looked through it to see if there was any emphasis on agricultural production in developing countries. There is one article on why Canadians should share their wealth, another article about a new resource centre being opened in British Columbia, an article about Ghana roads, and an article entitled, "Food shortage continues." Finally, let me refer to an article entitled, "Fertility study in rural Nigeria", which I was convinced had to do with agricultural development, but which I later discovered had to do with a fertility study involving women in rural Nigeria. There is absolutely no indication in this publication that CIDA has changed its emphasis or direction, or that it is concentrating on the key to an anti-hungry strategy as enunciated by the minister. There is no indication, from what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said today, that CIDA itself favours such change.

May I conclude by quoting the last paragraph of an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune dated January 8, 1975:

> MPs should insist on a close scrutiny of Canada's program to determine what positive results it has had, and is having, in the short-range goals of relieving human suffering and the long-range goals of helping people in developing countries stand on their own feet. It would be tragic if the laudable desire to help the unfortunate was being channelled in ways that worsened rather than ameliorated the lot of the poor and afflicted in the countries Canadians are trying to aid. In fairness to the people in these countries and to the Canadians who have been generous in their willingness to help, a thorough-going review is in order.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I thought it rather ironical that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe should have felt the need, to give himself some credibility, to use my recent speech in Montreal on the urgency of supporting greater Canadian assistance to the third world; rather ironical but not surprising. I ask him at once how many times has he had the courage to make a speech in favour of those who go hungry in the world, how many times has he done so in Quebec since he was elected under the banner of the Progressive Conservative party, how many times in Ontario or in western Canada? I would also like to know how many times, and where, he has committed himself, without double talk and unconditionally, in favour of those 72 per cent of the world population who survive on less than 25 per cent of all the wealth being developed in this same world?

● (2020)

For example, what amount of public funds is his party prepared to commit to try, barely try, to implement the resolution voted by the whole membership of the United Nations? Like me, he probably does not know the answer because I do not remember ever hearing that such a commitment was part of his party's platform.

So may I be permitted to add, Mr. Speaker, what he omitted to say from that speech I just made. I went on to say, and I quote:

> In fact, I think that when it resolutely committed itself to international co-operation, Canada set challenges for itself that it was perhaps unable to take on. Those challenges erred out of abundance of the heart rather than political bad faith or hypocrisy. I could not say the same of all countries. Canada wanted both to be efficient and innovative, balance its alliances with Commonwealth countries with those of the French-speaking, generous and careful Third World.

It wanted to make sure that our money or goods would go to those in need and not local, political or other go-betweens who would grow rich on our wheat instead of getting it directly to those starving in either Bangla Desh or Bengal. It wants to help nations obtain their self-determination in accordance with the United Nations 1960 resolution, but it wants to make sure that is done through humanitarian help, not military help. It wants to share with the poorest nations and it is driven to sign assistance protocols with political regimes that may be repugnant to Canadians. Those are a few of the paradoxes to be solved.

Of course, I was expressing there my personal perception of the views of Canadians up until now, first because of the letters I received from my constituents, and also the sittings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs. It is true that I have been in politics for only two years, but it seems shady and selfish to me to associate one's name with a motion such as the one the opposition introduced today against foreign aid, accusing the Canadian International Development Agency and the government of secretive behaviour. I have heard that to some everything is first and foremost politics, but I did not know that it could go that far.

I might add that we can wonder why the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, a French-speaking member from Quebec, indulges in this precisely when the criticism of certain newspapers gave a racial and personal colour to the widespread questioning of the Canadian International Development Agency.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe raises the question of privilege.

Mr. Wagner: I raise this question of privilege because of what the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) just said. I shall excuse on her part a certain enthusiasm and extravagance of speech. I shall even excuse her for accusing her colleagues of saying strange things. In such circumstances, we are sure that her words went beyond what she had in mind. But now that she takes the liberty of venturing entering on a much more slippery ground and that by innuendos she suggests that the opposition—where as the press can defend itself—engages in a battle on ethnic or racial grounds—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member again, but he knows from rulings that have clearly been made by the Speaker on a number of occasions that he is entering into debate. What the hon. member is saying does not properly constitute a question of privilege. Under the guise of a question of privilege it is not permissible for the House to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Wagner: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enunciate the question of privilege. To do so, I thought it would be fair and just to remind the Chair of the last words uttered by the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin). I now come to my question of privilege. If Your Honour will permit me, I will continue in French.

[Translation]

When the hon. member for Saint-Michel implies that it is because of racial prejudices on our part that we attack the president of CIDA, who happens to be a French-speaking Canadian from Quebec, I think such charges on her part indicate not only narrow-mindedness but an unhealthy feeling which unfortunately contributes to disunity in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, considering the circumstances, I deem it necessary to recall that we are not merely paying lip service to bilingualism in this country and that we are not paying lip service either to the need for equal chances for all groups. I would be grateful to government members not to make a pretext of such a justified debate as this one to accuse the opposition of racial prejudices, because in so doing they are guilty of something for which they blame others.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to keep on with my comments. I did not say what the member who just spoke said and I don't know what made him add those words, which he will surely not see in my speech in tomorrow's Hansard. That is not what I said.

I now continue. I was just saying that everybody acts according to a train of thoughts. I believe the hon. member has given proof of that. As for the substance of his motion, I believe one cannot understand that it can be a motion from a man who is supposed to have been a minister and who is today the opposition's critic as regards external affairs. As a parliament member I went to CIDA more than once without any problem. On occasion I asked for explanations and answers over the phone, without any problem at all. As a committee member, and without any supplementary staff such as the one he has, I believe on account to his duties, I receive a discouraging number of press releases, news bulletins and opinions.

Today for instance I received in my office Bulletin No. 37 of CIDA, titled Contact. As all other issues, this folder contains not only substantial extracts from various speeches, but it brings the usual news about the internal administration of the agency. It specially describes several bilateral projects to which we allocate two thirds of the agency's budget, if I remember well, or the most recent multilateral ones. I also receive Cooperation Canada, the news releases of the minister or the agency as soon as a project crystallizes, all documents and the regular letter from IDRC, the International Development Research Centre, those of SUCO, OXFAM, Youth Canada-World, the Institute for International Cooperation, to name only those, plus numerous briefs and letters from Canadians interested in that matter.

I give this long list because the motion reads as an accusation of deliberate or unconscious secrecy and I still do not understand.

● (2030)

I think I have a right to say that, because we have been sufficiently pestered in the committee with the so-called internal scandals of the Agency's administration, whereas I was expecting, I must say, some rather juicier bits than those coming from the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

On April 30th, 1974, at the meeting of the Standing committee of the House which was considering the Agency estimates, he could think of nothing better than talking in a most solemn tone about the staff turnover in some branches of that Agency, about the low morale of other employees, and about an inquiry made into that by management experts working for a Canadian firm.

That would be most relevant in an analysis of employee behaviour, involving also the members of this House, in the month of February. Any Canadian personnel manager is aware of the psychological effects which the forthcoming end of the winter season has on people. That might actually explain the apparent "filibuster" with respect to bill C-49.

Mr. Wagner: Obviously, this is Women's year!

Miss Bégin: But being aware, like anybody else who has a fair knowledge of personnel administration, of the nature of staff turnover problems, I cannot see what is so awful with the rates compiled for the Agency as compared to the very same classes of employees in the Public Service.

If the hon. member were kind enough to listen to me, in a courteous way possibly, since he has discovered that this was international women's year, I think she who is trying to speak would greatly appreciate it.

The "separation" rate—this is the English term used in personnel analysis—for the employees in the group of civil servants which were supposed to be at the heart of the scandal involving the Agency is lower in this organization than it is for the same class of employees in the Public Service of Canada as a whole that is 5.6 and 7.9 percent respectively for the financial year 1973-74.

Where the class of administrative support is concerned, and that is the bulk of the employees in absolute figures, the Agency is slightly ahead, with a rate of 14.4 percent as opposed to 12.6 percent during the same year for the Public Service of Canada as a whole.

It is a well known fact that the occupational rate is much higher among employees at the lower end of the scale. I have worked in this area myself, and I can find nothing awful with those figures which in fact are averages for all kinds of businesses.

Let me add that I am not shocked if there is higher rate of turnover within the agency, and I am ready to assume that it is a sign of good health. People interested in international development programs are usually young people, and they may be best understood by those who remain young at heart.

When we check with people in the management of long term international assistance, we see that they go from one project to another and may be borrowed from the agency by other groups such as those I already mentioned, that is CUSO, OXFAM, Canada World Youth, to name but a few. At some point in their lives, after spending a limited number of years in this especially energy consuming area of youth endeavour, because it requires full participation in the task undertaken, they may leave this direct aid field for other connected areas of community or social work.

I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I note with sadness no attempt is made, in spite of numerous opportunities to come to grips with the most recent problems faced by an international development agency such as the one we are dealing with tonight, problems arising from changing governments in countries in which we are trying to contribute. I shall mention but one of those problems about which one hears a great deal as a delegate to the United Nations, for instance, or to any other similar international organization, and I am referring to the urgently needed transfer of technological knowledge.

I think if we only discussed that problem, or that of the actual results of our economic assistance in the way of meeting the new request from countries wishing to trade with us and to learn international trade, we would make a much more significant contribution to Canadian foreign aid.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, there are two principal reasons why the Canadian international aid program must be thoroughly examined by parliament. The first is that the quality of the operation of the Canadian International Development Agency has been called into question, and the second is that world events demand a new approach by developed countries in which aid programs give way to structural reform of international aid and monetary systems. The motion we are debating tonight has been carefully framed to allow for positive debate in order to bring out the very serious aspects of this subject.

I listened very carefully to the minister's speech this afternoon, and found it lacking. I had hoped he would make a speech which would elevate and educate not only members of parliament but the public. Public opinion needs to be formed in this country to sustain an increased international assistance program not just in terms of dollars but in terms of commitments so that developing nations may enter more realistically into international trade and monetary arrangements. That was the message of the United Nations in the series of conferences it held during the past year.

The Secretary-General of the United Nations, Mr. Waldheim, has told us that the interlocking problems that have produced a global emergency are problems of food, population, mass poverty, depletion of energy and resources and capitalization. They are all linked, and demand a comprehensive and unified approach.

I had hoped that the minister would use this debate to bring before the House the plans of the Canadian government—even if they are not complete—for responding to this very critical moment in the history of the world. When he comes to write his memoirs I hope he does not bother to include the speech he made this afternoon. It was not one of his finer moments.

What the minister gave us was an exercise demonstrating a public put-down of an opposition which was not looking for an argument or a fight on CIDA, but for a chance to explore its development. Mr. Speaker, CIDA needs to be examined. The minister did not do us credit in dismissing the arguments so thoughtfully put forward by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). He did not respond adequately. If he had wished to give us an opportunity to explore the need for an enlarged Canadian policy he could have agreed to have the annual report of CIDA referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for study. That would have given us a chance to help frame a decent Canadian policy which would respond to international conditions. That would have given us an opportunity—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why not the estimates?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to talk about the estimates. I have just read again the evidence presented last spring at the meetings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which examined CIDA when considering the estimates. A very strong representation was made that the Price, Waterhouse study of CIDA should come before the committee to be examined. Even if there were some chance of confidentiality being breached it could have still been presented to the steering committee for examination.

● (2040)

The president of CIDA—I use the term advisedly because that is how he likes to be known—did a wonderful skating exhibition in by-passing a definitive response to the committee, even though he had assured the committee that he would make the report available to us, and went and hid behind the coat tails of the then external affairs minister.

If the minister were really serious he would say: "Yes, let us look at this Price, Waterhouse study" because, I suggest, it shows the management of CIDA has been lacking the best kind of operation that the minister has been saying he wants to have. If he refuses to let us have the Price, Waterhouse study, refuses to refer the CIDA report to the committee, if he comes to the House, as he did this afternoon, and gives us a political response when what we are looking for is leadership, then I say he only invites the kind of speech that we have unfortunately just heard from the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin). She took her lead from the minister and produced, I say very regretfully to her, a slurring speech not only on the opposition but on the whole idea of an examination.

We must get rid of the idea that when we call for an examination of something in this place we are attacking it. I say very clearly that I am not attacking CIDA; I am a defender of CIDA, and that is precisely why I want all the facts. I get mail, as do a lot of my colleagues, from people around the country who look at newspaper stories and hear what is going on in CIDA—staff turnover, things happening and so on. They ask me why we are contributing more money to CIDA: They do not even know yet that the amount is up to $933 million; it will take them a week or two to find that out. That is almost $1 billion, more than all but two departments of government. As soon as they discover this, I figure the mail will increase all the more.

I am trying to respond to these people as a member of parliament by saying that the money is being well spent, that it is going to places where we are achieving humanitarian benefit, that it is responding to the injustices that have so dominated international relationships for so long. But when I try to tell my constituents that the money is being well spent, the minister does not even allow me to have any decent factual material. All he wants to give me is high class, high gloss, very expensive public relations material that his department so assiduously turns out.

I say that is not good enough when you are talking about an agency with a budget of almost $1 billion. I only hope that during this debate we might be able to throw a little public light on the need for an examination of CIDA, even though it is apparent that when this debate ends tonight we will not be much further ahead than we were when it started, precisely because the minister chose to give us a political speech rather than the statesmanlike speech that we had every right to deserve from the external affairs minister of this country.

Mr. MacEachen: Why not show a little leadership yourself instead of that carping approach?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, my approach is not carping at all. I want to get behind the management of CIDA with all the support I can muster. I ask in return only for a share of some of the facts concerning how CIDA is presently being operated. I ask him to share with us the opportunity of planning the kind of response that is needed to meet the new conditions facing this world.

Those new conditions are graphically illustrated by the escalation of oil prices which have quadrupled during the year 1974, and which have more than wiped out all the foreign aid that the developing countries had been receiving. That simple fact alone illustrates why it is so necessary to move away from reliance on foreign aid as an expression of international assistance and toward what the United Nations has been proclaiming in its New International Economic Order, in the COCOYOC declaration, in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States. Those are three documents which came into being in the year 1974.

I look to the minister to come into this House and to explain to hon. members and to the Canadian people what this New International Economic Order is all about. It is not just a piece of paper, a mirage, a dream; it is a formal document passed by the sixth special session of the United Nations general assembly, backed up by the regular assembly last year with the passage of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.

I ask the minister to explain to us what needs to be done in order to implement that charter on the part of the developed countries. For surely it is the developed countries that must respond to the pressure being put upon international bodies today by the group of 77, now expanded to larger numbers but consisting mainly of countries of the developing world which have been most seriously and adversely hit by the kind of explosion that has taken place in international finance.

Time is running out on a speech in which I have so many more things I wanted to say in order to try to open up this debate and to open up parliament toward a new direction for Canada in international assistance, one where we can probably do more by spending less money. We do not need to spend $933 million by way of direct assistance, which will itself be wiped out by the kind of international trade and monetary arrangements which have such a deleterious effect upon developing countries. That is the principal point that needs to be expanded upon both in parliament and in this country.

The United Nations is engaged in a long process of solidifying a new international partnership for development. But it is itself under attack from the developed countries because the developing nations, constituting a majority, are flexing their muscles over such issues as access to their natural resources, the rights of foreign investors, aid and trade, inflation and monetary matters. Canada's voice and vote are needed in support of the U.N.'s programs for rapid economic and social development. I want Canada to move into what is now a leadership vacuum at the U.N.

We can do that by starting to shift right away from placing so much reliance on bilateral and multilateral aid in our CIDA budget. Bilateral aid now occupies 60 per cent of the budget; and 80 per cent of that has to be spent in Canada itself. I suggest as an expression of foreign aid it is a fraudulent one, with so much money tied up and being spent in Canada.

I want CIDA, as we start to move outwards, to give more attention to non-government organizations in this country, principally the Canadian Council for International Co-operation, which is an umbrella group bringing together 100 non-governmental organizations. These non-governmental groups are helping to educate Canadians. Their educational programs for development are themselves helping to change public opinion in this country, yet they find themselves short changed. CIDA is so badly managed that it does not even pay its bills promptly to the Canadian Council for International Co-operation, which puts that body, a non-governmental organization dependent on CIDA for its existence, in a bind. That is a very small amount of money relative to the huge amount that CIDA has. That is an example of the kind of management I am talking about.

Finally, I want to support what was said earlier about having CIDA made responsible to parliament by creating an associate minister to the minister of external affairs. It is abundantly clear to me that the minister has so many things to occupy himself in his portfolio that we should take the lead from other countries in the developed world which have given ministerial status to international assistance programs. I say that because CIDA would then be directly responsible to parliament, and the minister would have an opportunity of producing a comprehensive policy that would embrace all of our policies relating to trade, international finance, the United Nations and development aid. Then we would see CIDA in its rightful place in respect of providing international assistance through one component. I think this agency should come within the responsibility of one minister.

I should like to know when we get to the committee why we are spending $23 million on administration alone. If we had one minister responsible for international assistance, bringing all these aid programs together, we would be making a tremendous advance. If that is the result of this debate we are having tonight, then this debate will have proven eminently worthwhile.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the remarks of the last speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), who was very displeased with the speech of the minister this afternoon. I can certainly understand why he is displeased, because in my opinion the minister completely tore apart every criticism of opposition members, threw them in the waste paper basket, and caused a great deal of embarrassment to certain hon. members. I can understand why the opposition is unhappy with the points he made, because he showed up their criticisms for exactly what they are, half-baked and half thought-out, just as is this motion which should not have been brought on in the first place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: When I hear the suggestion of secrecy I am reminded of two fellows who were flying over Canada taking pictures of important installations, and one chap turned to the other and asked, "What will we do with the rest of the film?" When I hear the reference to secrecy I think perhaps we should start a new branch of secrecy in the Department of Agriculture, and call it Gene Whelan's closet. Perhaps we should have a department of secrecy in CIDA. This whole matter brings to my mind the cloak and dagger.

We are talking about an agency which is accused of operating behind closed doors. When a government agency that operates as a department of the government of Canada, that is subject to the same public and parliamentary scrutiny as other departments, is described as a secret operation then that is far from the truth. I think hon. members opposite would have been much better off had they discussed the operations of the agency rather than discuss how we hide things from the opposition.

CIDA was established in 1968, by government order in council, to administer the international development assistance program. Its chief officer has the status of a deputy minister who reports directly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who in turn is responsible for the activities of CIDA. In other words, this is not some clandestine operation operating behind closed doors with dim lights.

This agency is responsible to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who sits in this House and is open to questioning about his department at any time during the question period. He is also subject to written questions. The funds for CIDA are voted by parliament each year after the estimates are considered by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I suggest we have an operation in respect of which questions can be asked not only of the minister but of the director of CIDA, both of whom must respond in committee. Surely this is not a secret situation when the committee has the minister and the director available to it.

Prior to being presented to parliament the estimates of CIDA are approved by the cabinet, acting on the advice of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who in turn is advised by the president of CIDA, who in turn consults with the minister on significant matters of policy regarding the Canadian International Development Association. On the board of that association we have a deputy minister of the Department of Finance, a deputy minister of External Affairs, a deputy minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, as well as the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the President of the International Development Research Service.

An hon. member on the government side faces a difficult situation in following the minister because the minister has covered all these points thoroughly. However, I think I should like to buttress what has been said to make sure there is no question about secrecy on the part of this organization.

This agency publishes an annual review of its operations, and we also have the annual presentation of the development assistance committee. In this committee Canada's aid performance is examined fully by fellow donors. Moreover, the president of CIDA has been a prolific speaker on public platforms, both in Canada and abroad. The extent of criticism by hon. members, and other comments about the aid program in recent weeks, is an indication of the extent to which this agency operates in secret. Obviously hon. members have been commenting about statements already made by CIDA. I suggest that when such statements are made in public the operations cannot be considered secret.

On several occasions recently I have noticed members of the opposition using newspapers as their sources of reference. I believe they are treading on very dangerous ground, because I know of no newspaper that ever intended or claimed to be so factual you could use it as a reference in this House of Commons.

For example, on a visit to Cuba in 1974, where Canada allegedly signed a secret agreement—or according to one press critic this was a secret agreement—Mr. Gérin-Lajoie was accompanied by three journalists and a film team who covered every detail of this official visit. Many press reports have been quoted in this House regarding the secrecy of this CIDA group, yet the group included on its visit members of the press as well as a film crew. If this is supposed to be a secret organization I am afraid it is not fulfilling its function. Anyone who suggests that CIDA is operating in secrecy had better check his facts rather than using the newspapers to support arguments, to the extent hon. members have done up to date.

In the past three years CIDA has held two major international consultations, bringing together representatives from developing countries, and again these meetings have been covered by the press. If the organization is supposed to be operating in secret it had better change its ways, because it is not being very secretive.

As stated by the president of CIDA following one such meeting, the goal was to ensure that CIDA is listening to those with whom we have programs of development cooperation. Following such a consultation in October, 1972, a comprehensive review of CIDA's development assistance program and policies was undertaken. This is an organization which has gone to the trouble of printing the facts in respect of these meetings and presenting annual reviews of the year's business, showing how it spends its money, where it spends it, and who are the recipients. I am afraid that the word secrecy certainly does not apply to this group.

I really think that if we had taken this day to discuss where CIDA is going, where Canada's foreign policy is going, should we be sharing natural resources with the developing countries instead of giving food or technical assistance, and should we, perhaps, extend it to such products as oil for which many countries, especially the developing countries, are finding it difficult to pay due to inflated prices, surely these would have been more worthwhile topics than discussing an agency about which information is as accessible as that on any government department such as the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Finance, and which, as hon. members know, is directly answerable to the House. If it were not directly responsible to this House all hell would break loose, instead of which we only hear a few pleas from the opposition members for more information.

In all seriousness, I find that one of the hazards of my job is sorting through all the publications which I get from the government departments. I have found that on many occasions when I have requested information from any government group, I have received it promptly. I have not met with information being withheld from me and, as I said, I receive regularly bulletins, newsletters and reviews from CIDA.

Mr. Brewin: Have you never had any adverse report of any sort, not a single one?

Mr. Anderson: We are sometimes overwhelmed by the information coming from these agencies.

An hon. Member: Naive.

Mr. Anderson: I believe that the question of secrecy, although a very interesting one, is perhaps not worth the amount of time spent on it today.

I also suggest that if the members of the opposition are interested in this subject, we should decide some day in what direction CIDA should be going and what form this direction should be taking. I am glad to see members of the opposition agree, because this is how we should do it.

An hon. Member: Why not do it today?

Mr. Anderson: I support the statements made by the minister. I support the position of this government agency the same as that of other agencies, and I am very happy to hear the assurances of some members of the opposition that we will debate this issue. We all realize the importance of this program and that our contribution as Canadians is to aid other countries to a great degree. I think we are all in the mood to share some of our wealth with those less fortunate than ourselves.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I declare at the very outset as did those who have preceded me my full support of the objective of foreign aid. The minister need have no fear on that score. From this side of the House, indeed from members on all sides of the House he has had ample testimony of that already. We all here in the House feel that Canada is ready and willing to share its good fortune with the rest of the world which is not so fortunate. However, we want to be sure, and Canadians generally want to be sure, and we want to be able to assure them, that their tax dollar is going for good work, wherever it goes.

As to the matter of secrecy—I see the previous speaker, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) has disappeared with some secrecy—we were not talking about the secrecy in CIDA. We were talking about the secrecy with which the government refuses to allow us to talk about CIDA. The hon. member wants to talk about CIDA and I want to talk about CIDA this evening and, given the chance, I am going to do that. But first I would like to penetrate the aura of obfuscation created by the minister by the judicious application of the laser of scrupulous candor. How is that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Towards the conclusion of his remarks the minister spoke about the cadastral project in Morocco. He said it was announced in 1968 or 1969. That is not the argument. What is at issue is the announcement that the project did take place and, if possible, I would like the minister to be good enough to table the announcement concerning the commencement of that project. After he has a few days to work it out perhaps he would be good enough also to report on the original critical path drawn up for that project and the present position of the project on that path as of today.

Would he also table at the same time—he said we all had it, but I do not think that I was in the House at the time—the announcement of the national library on the Ivory Coast? The question was raised this afternoon. Let us have it tabled so that this information can be appended to this debate.

He said that no aircraft were delivered to Indonesia, yet the embassy here says there were 11 to 12 STOL aircraft presented to MNA.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not what I said. I said private support, private aircraft.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The embassy also confirms that MNA is a private company, and that thanks to this gift from CIDA it will be in an economic position to carry out its operations within five years. Is this the criterion of hunger of which the minister spoke?

With respect to Cuba the minister spoke about polygraphs, but they were for cows. Are the cows supposed to record the fact that they are giving a false story on the milk they are giving? Please, let us come off that.

And then there is this Turner-MacEachen difference that was referred to—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I mean the difference between the two ministers. He cannot deny the existence of the two letters so he skated around that, and he would let us know that the whole thing was in draft only. With all the other obscurities and the whitewashing in the minister's speech I find it difficult to believe that the differences do not exist. That is the fact of the matter as I see it. I invite the minister to table the exchanges, along with the other information for which I asked him.

The intention of the opposition members in proposing this motion was to begin a study of CIDA, not to engage in an exchange of abuse from one side of the chamber to the other. I have just indulged in a little bit of it because I felt that some retaliation was required. But CIDA is not as pure as the driven snow—it has some snags in its administration and in its priorities and projects. Let us not go away from this debate with any other thought in our mind. CIDA is not holier than thou, it is not above examination, and that is all we ask to do.

Why is there secrecy about the operations of CIDA, secrecy, I would remind the House, that did not exist in 1969 and 1970 when the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—and many members present here in the House today took part in it—took part in the examination of CIDA, in an in-depth study, and came forward with a number of recommendations? One of the recommendations was mentioned a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), namely, that a minister of state subordinate to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and without a seat in the cabinet might strengthen CIDA's voice at the political level in Canada and abroad. I agree with that.

Why are we being prevented today from looking into CIDA and testing its present performance against the study made in 1970 and the recommendations made at that time? We have been told that there were insufficient questions asked in the House to warrant a reference of the report to the standing committee. I consider that a very lame excuse.

Coming back to some of the whitewashing of CIDA—and I am sure the minister cannot possibly believe that it is free from all taint or all fault—

An hon. Member: It is human.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is human, exactly, and let us not make it a secret. Let us examine where it is. We all want to help, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, I would like to mention just a few of the faults I have found in CIDA as a result of my experience in a number of countries—and it happened in practically every country in which I have served since about 1965.

For example, we heard from the hon. member of the Creditiste party complaints about the technical assistants in Laos. My first experience with CIDA was that they were sending technical assistants to Laos, and when they arrived there they were badly briefed, they had no housing, they had been given promises of assistance which we could not fulfill at the mission, and they spent a great deal of time coming to us to have us sort out their problems for them. These things happen. The minister should be aware of this. Let him not be misled by his advisers in CIDA that everything is rolling smoothly. It is not rolling smoothly, but we want to make sure that it does.

In central America I will point out a fault in co-ordination. My next experience was the opening of a port in Acajutla in El Salvador which had been built with the assistance of Canadian foreign aid funds, and the ambassador of Canada in El Salvador had not been asked to the reception at the opening. Why should that have been? It was simply a little gaffe by someone who had not been aware that there was an ambassador in El Salvador. Perhaps it was my fault for not making myself a little more prominent at the time.

Another problem arose in Honduras. There is an agricultural college in Honduras—and I will come back to the reference to agriculture and the need for developing agriculture, which was put forward by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—and here was on stream a magnificent school of agriculture bringing students from all over Central America for two and three year courses to train them there in the fundamentals of agriculture—how to grow vegetables, how to market them, how to care for them, and how to care for the soil. This is what is known as third country training in CIDA terms.

I do not know how many letters I wrote about this particular operation. It would cost $750 to bring one student from practically anywhere in Central America to that school in Zamorano, in Honduras. I received a nil reply in that regard. I hope to have a chance to come back to third country training, but I think that it is one of the most important forms of training CIDA can give because it does not deprive the student of his culture. It keeps him in the general area to which he is accustomed. He is living at all times with people with whom he can speak and communicate. He is learning things he can readily take back to his home land, but I received no response on that.

In Panama there is an institute of community co-operation operated by a Canadian priest, Father Steele. It had been operating for ten years without any assistance. CIDA was there and Padre Steele would ask me on more than one occasion whether there was any possibility of my persuading CIDA to get two or three students to this institute so that he could train them and send them back into the country from which they came to develop community ideas. All the courses were in Spanish; there were no problems of language. But do you think I could get anything from CIDA—again a matter of third country training? Not at all.

I think the most unfortunate experience I had with CIDA mismanagement is well recorded in some letters which are on file. I do not think I am breaking any trust in telling the story. I was refused permission as ambassador to Nicaragua to visit an area where there was the prospect of a port being built. I was told not to go there because it might indicate that Canada was much too interested in helping finance that port. I had other arrangements to visit Canadian communities in the area which I had to cancel.

Within two weeks of that refusal a junior officer from CIDA was sent to that area. He did not even bother to visit the port but approved the participation of Canada in the building of it, went home, and did not even tell the ambassador from Canada to Nicaragua that he had done so. I found out months later that this had been done because I went to see some of the officials in the Nicaraguan government, and they said that Canada had been so helpful to them. I asked them to tell me about it because I did not know that. A junior officer in CIDA had come and negotiated and concluded an agreement concerning a port which the ambassador was not allowed to even look at!

These are the things we want to bring to the fore. These are problems which arise in all countries. There was another one in Costa Rica. There was a course in university administration which had been started and stumbled somewhat. When the negotiators came down to conclude the agreement, I had been given no briefing. I almost was not invited to the meeting, but I arranged to be there, and I was expected to expound on the benefits of this particular course. I did not even know there was a plan.

The lack of co-ordination between the Department of External Affairs and CIDA is appalling, and it is time the minister knew it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan).

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Madam Speaker, I think most of us can agree that the Canadian International Development Agency needs to be more responsive to the requests for less secrecy, despite the plea of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), and more open about its policies, programs and goals. I think an admirable suggestion has been made by my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), that a separate ministry be established for overseas development.

In the debate of November 15 on the world food crisis we mentioned that Canada, as with the United States, had not achieved its promised goal of supplying the least developed countries with even 1 per cent of its GNP. This is very disturbing to many of us, but we do not want to see Canada fulfilling that goal for its own sake but rather as a means of being helpful in the short and long run development of these countries. In this connection we want to ask: Is it true, as some commentators have recently suggested, that CIDA is rushing to spend $117 million within the next three months in an effort to impress Treasury Board officials?

We are all acquainted with the notion that if we do not spend what we have been allocated, they, the institution granting the money—in this case the Treasury Board—might reduce the allotment for the next year. I repeat, can this be true? In view of the fact that CIDA has now had some six years of experience, and given the incredible short run need for food aid and the long-term need for development of the 32 most needy countries, surely this cannot be true. Surely it is a false accusation that the chief emphasis of CIDA is placed on producing figures to support the impression that Canada is in the vanguard of nation providing development assistance.

Surely, Madam Speaker, it is false to say that in CIDA, a major criterion of success is not how well you spend the money but how much of the money you have been allocated in the budget you spend, and that you spend your allocated money, come hell or high water.

We know that at a time of world-wide inflation and structural changes in international economies, and of uncertainties in international monetary relations, CIDA faces great difficulties in adjusting and, indeed, changing its programs, projects and objectives in the foreign aid and development field.

We should not be surprised that such a complex job should carry with it internal administrative strain and personal unrest. These are all additional reasons, Madam Speaker, for an open and frank re-appraisal of CIDA by parliament. The government should not be afraid to show CIDA's warts, because such a re-appraisal will be a condition for a renewed international aid and development effort on our part as we enter the second half of the 1970s. A renewed, re-invigorated CIDA will allow us to meet the new and severe challenges of the 1980s in the international development field. According to most experts these new challenges will be much more severe than those we face in the 1970s. We will be facing a situation in which not only aid and trade problems vis-à-vis the least developed countries will still be with us; we shall also face a situation in which we, in the very well-off countries, must balance our attempts to overcome our wasteful habits by conserving energy, food and raw materials, with commitments by the poorer countries to change some of the worst features of their agricultural, demographic and environmental practices.

In the longer run, requirements for development in the least developed countries will mean that CIDA and similar agencies in other countries will have to play a greater role in giving such countries access to our markets at stable and remunerative prices. Likewise, they will need much greater access to our technology, management skills and investment capital. But the major goal for them has to be to learn by doing, because imitating and borrowing would satisfy neither their material needs nor their higher needs for greater control of their economic and cultural destinies. Hopefully on this matter CIDA officials will impress on them all that they should not follow our own historical development path as a model.

There are still and will be in the short run very pressing needs for customary food and other forms of aid. I might add that I disagree slightly with the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) on this issue, although I agree with almost everything he said this evening. There is a tendency today to dismiss this aid as being a failure, without attempting any serious analysis. Nevertheless, I still suggest that such aid is still very necessary for the development of these poor countries.

We mentioned in the November 15 debate that if hundreds of thousands of people are not to die during the next decade, mechanisms must be developed in order to plan food supplies on a world basis. The United States and Canada must lead the way. The money costs will be enormous and will have to be shared. But, Madam Speaker, that is the challenge we dare not fail to accept. At times it seems to be most forbidding; yet only if it is met will we have time to make realties of our longer run hopes for population control and new agricultural developments in poorer countries.

Some think it is already too late, that mass starvation cannot be avoided. That may be so, but it is necessary, in any event, to try. After World War I, in a disrupted Europe, John Maynard Keynes wrote poignant words which are well worth remembering. He said:

> Men will not always die quietly. For starvation, which brings to some lethargy and a helpless despair, drives other temperaments to the nervous instability of hysteria . . . These in their distress may overturn the remnants of organization, and submerge civilization itself in their attempts to satisfy desperately the overwhelming needs of the individual. This is the danger against which all our resources and courage and idealism must now co-operate.

As we are discussing the immediate plight of some of the poorest countries, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) say what CIDA's present role is in the Sahalian zone of West Africa, where there are some 25 million hungry people? Will we supply fertilizer to Bangladesh during the coming year or, more generally, are there such commitments in the form of loans or grants for fertilizer for that desparate country?

I urge the government, Madam Speaker, to make CIDA's internal and external problems better known to members of parliament who represent the Canadian people, so that we can help in making CIDA a better institution, one of which we can be even more proud in future.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Madam Chairman, when I heard that the opposition had decided to devote one of the alloted days to the discussion of the problems of international cooperation and the role of Canada in that field, on the one hand, I was happy because it seemed to me that it was the very occasion to make Canadians aware of the importance of those questions, which, as we know, draw more and more attention. We become more aware of the global aspect of the world community. We realize that during the last twelve months, the whole world has changed so that a problem existing on a continent which could have seemed very far from us a few years ago, has implications in the daily life of those we represent here as members of Parliament. On one hand, I was very glad, but on the other hand, I felt some apprehension because the opposition wanted to devote one of the days they are entitled to the discussion of a question of their choice, and I thought: they must certainly have terrific arguments; they are surely going to bring astounding accusations which will put our government on the spot.

● (2130)

We have been debating this matter for a few hours. In some cases, the debate was more or less acrimonious. Still we have been discussing this matter for some hours. I listened carefully to all the speakers, to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and to the others.

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Duclos: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. He is entitled to that title. I respect him.

I listened to him carefully and, finally, I realize that as in all the debates we have in this House, the opposition unfortunately did not play the important part it should play in a democracy. The role of the opposition is to give positive criticism. The opposition may occasionally make interesting suggestions which enable the government to run the nation's business more efficiently in a country like Canada.

I listened to them carefully and I must say that in some cases some interesting ideas have been expressed. I will come back to them. But it seems to me that, in most cases, we could call it a torrent of words in a desert of ideas. Unfortunately that is what we have heard since the beginning of the debate.

A suggestion which has some merit and is worth looping into is that CIDA should be put under the direct control of cabinet minister. Of course, in view of the growing importance of international cooperation and since it is a matter of increasing concern across Canada, this suggestion has certainly some merit. It should, however, be said that while in the past war was the extension of the foreign policy of countries—unfortunately this still rings true for some countries—but for us Canadians it is international cooperation which constitutes the extension of our foreign policy. Accordingly, I find it reasonable, normal and natural that the international cooperation programs launched by the Canadian government be the responsibility of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

In fact, I believe that this has enormous advantages even from a functional viewpoint. I have had the opportunity to live more or less with these matters, and I know that there is some kind of osmosis between the department and CIDA, which means that as concerns personnel, for instance, external affairs employees are often transferred to CIDA and vice versa.

While I am on this subject, I would like to take a few moments to speak of this alleged very great turnover within CIDA personnel. I have here some figures which show that, in fact, the rate of personnel turnover at CIDA is lower than the average rate throughout the entire Canadian public service. For instance, the figures for people who left CIDA show that in 1974-75, 3 per cent of the executives and 4.9 per cent of the support employees left the agency.

On the other hand, people left CIDA for other departments. I would like to say something about this, but I will simply give the figures, which are 3.5 per cent for the executives and 3.1 per cent of the personnel who brings the required support to the operation of the Canadian International Development Agency.

In my opinion, it is impossible to make a judgment on personnel turnover in an organization like CIDA in the same way as in another government department, quite simply because CIDA employees work in extremely different and extremely difficult conditions. There is much travel, the employees must live in foreign countries, there are adaptation problems, and in my opinion it is normal that some of the employees must eventually give up their jobs.

Madam Speaker, I would like to say a word about the accusations concerning the allegedly secretive operation of the Canadian International Development Agency. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) pointed out this afternoon, it seems to me the opposition has every opportunity, every chance to ask all their relevant questions, first when the estimates of that agency are considered, second when the public accounts committee meets.

On the other hand, it is common knowledge that the president of CIDA, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, never hesitates to meet with journalists. Never does he shy from talking to people in the academic field or specialists in international matters. He is remarkably available. I would specifically like to pay tribute to Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie.

I remember the contribution that man made at the beginning of the silent revolution in Quebec, specially with respect to the reform of the education system in Quebec. If today we have a better educated youth in Quebec, a youth that can make an increasingly substantial contribution to the direction of this country, the direction of Quebec, I think we must pay tribute to Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie.

Madam speaker, I would not want the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) to feel he has to rise on a question of privilege. I think he did inadvertently. I also think there are unpleasant things to say but they must nevertheless be said. I think perhaps unintentionally he made himself an accomplice of that swarm of journalists, of those pontiffs of the press who in recent months, in recent weeks, had the gall to attack, not CIDA as such, because there was absolutely nothing one can find to prove that CIDA does not have a sound management under the leadership of Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie.

I think there is some disappointment in certain quarters to see francophones come to Ottawa and really carry out their responsibilities and not just be fronts.

There was also the case of the president of Air Canada who was criticized and viciously attacked. Why? Because a Francophone came forward, accepted a responsibility in a federal government agency and decided to assume his responsibilities seriously.

● (2140)

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Duclos: There you are. Madam Speaker—

Mr. Wagner: The ministers are not saying a word. They are still.

An hon. Member: Because the hon. member for Montmorency is trusted.

Mr. Duclos: Madam Speaker, I expressed some surprise a while ago when I spoke of prejudice. We are going to talk about that. I was surprised that some offence was taken at the fact that through the Canadian International Development Agency the Canadian government should have established ties with the Cuban government with regard to international co-operation.

Let no one make me say that I agree with the political regime in Cuba. Still, to my mind, the foreign policy of a country like Canada should strive towards drawing countries closer, uniting them, all the more so in the case of Cuba, since Canada has always insisted on maintaining trade relations with that country and since the loan granted to the Cuban government will affect the economic development in Canada, in that Canadian companies will give work to Canadian workers who will benefit from contracts representing the amount loaned to the Cuban government.

Madam Speaker, perhaps we should make efforts individually to see not so much each one of the trees but the whole forest. When an agency has a budget of more than $700 million, that will reach $900 million next year, it is obvious that some programs must inevitably have weaknesses and deficiencies. Those who lead that agency are men, only men—

An hon. Member: This is Women's Year!

Mr. Duclos: Man in the most general meaning of the term! Perhaps we should try to see in what context the International Development Agency must operate. There have been changes in the last 10 or 25 years. Today's world is even already different from what it was a mere twelve months ago. Changes have occurred in the world situation. The countries with which we have established international co-operation programs have seen their needs evolve, the Canadian people have expectations that vary with each group, they have expectations that are different according to the various groups they are made of. The government may also have various objectives.

The subject of changes in the world situation can be tackled from a more concrete point of view with examples such as the changes brought about by the oil crisis. We see for instance countries such as Algeria, Nigeria, Indonesia which, from underdeveloped countries that they were before oil got as important as it is now, have become less dependent upon international aid.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Madam Speaker, all Canadians are interested in the present debate. All across the country, people ask themselves if their tax money is spent rationally by the government and by CIDA. If there is an area where the taxpayers' money is spent in an unacceptable way, it is in the sector of foreign assistance.

That is why, Madam Speaker, I want to take part in this important debate which gives us the opportunity to show to the Canadian people the unbelievable waste that is made of the taxpayers' money in the area of foreign assistance.

We, of the Social Credit Party, are not opposed to the principle of assisting countries that need help. We believe that Canadians have a responsibility towards underdeveloped and underprivileged countries. For that reason, we advocate technical and material assistance to enable those countries to become self-sufficient as soon as possible. That is also why we, of the Social Credit, object to foreign aid programs which maintain those countries in their state of underdevelopment.

A careful study of the activities of CIDA shows that this agency, in addition to swallowing millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, systematically supports assistance programs that are as costly as they are useless. We also see that the person who is mainly responsible for that situation is the present president of CIDA, Paul Gérin-Lajoie, former Quebec education minister and personal friend of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

It would be impossible to enumerate in a whole book the examples of colossal blunders and indecent waste that must be put to CIDA's credit. Madam Speaker, I shall simply give a few particularly striking examples.

In 1974, Canada granted $5 million to Brazil through CIDA. I believe that country is rich enough to have its own foreign aid program. Indeed, it suggested Canada pay the $5 million to the Brazalian foreign aid program. Finally, Canada paid a total $84 million to Nigeria, Indonesia and Algeria, all oil rich countries. Cuba, in turn, the democratic "paradise", received a $10 million loan, without interest, for 50 years, at the moment sugar was bringing fantastic revenues.

Madam Speaker, in spite of Canadian experience and expertise in agricultural matters, and a desire on the part of underdeveloped countries to tap that experience, only 3 per cent of Canadian foreign aid, or $23 million on a total $349 million, involved technical assistance. This means a mere 3 per cent of Canadian assistance was spent on helping underdeveloped countries help themselves and become truly independent.

On humanitarian grounds, CIDA paid significant amounts to various terrorist groups that spent that money on bombs and arms needed to kill those who opposed revolutionary wars. For example, $100,000 went to terrorists in South Africa, to help them in their destructive work.

CIDA also supplied a number of countries with totally useless products. Magnificent fountains were built in front of buildings erected by CIDA in a certain African country. The only problem is in that country, water is so scarce it is more expensive than oil. It is not wasted in fountains. CIDA also spent thousands of dollars to buy outboard motors to be used on dugout canoes in Senegal.

No more examples are needed to convince any person of good will that something is wrong in CIDA. The fact is known that in two years, more than 300 CIDA employees resigned. This excessive figure shows even civil servants find CIDA is not performing normally.

If CIDA does not work properly, it is first and foremost because it is not controlled by the elected representatives of the people. Mr. Gérin-Lajoie did not have to be elected. Neither does he have to answer questions in the House of Commons as any minister does. Yet, only two other ministers have higher budgets to administer, namely the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson).

Madam Speaker, Canadians would perhaps have less cause to complain about CIDA if, instead of being headed by a friend of the Prime Minister, that agency was headed by a minister of the Crown answerable to this House.

I repeat what I said earlier: We, Social Crediters, are in favour of foreign aid. On the other hand, we refuse to accept the wasteful practices of CIDA under its president, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie.

We believe CIDA should be made into a department. Thus, we could, every day call to account the minister responsible for foreign aid. That is what we demand, Madam Speaker. If the government is logical, they will surely follow the suggestions made today by the opposition.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, in the time remaining I hope to be able to put forward a few points.

I congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) on his motion. First of all I should like to say that it is indicative of the state of affairs in our government today, and in the various departments, that we should choose this topic for an opposition day motion. It is appalling that we should have to debate in this House whether or not parliament has the right to examine the actions of the chief of a government agency. There has never been a time in the history of our country and of our parliament when this has been a matter of discussion.

Of course we have a right to question the activities of any and all government departments and agencies, and we have the right, indeed we have the duty, to question the actions and the conduct of any and all chiefs of departments and agencies. When you consider the fact that we are actually debating whether we have the right and the duty to examine the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, then I have to ask whether or not someone has reversed the natural order of things.

Have we really reached the point where a chief of a department has the right to refuse to divulge information on his activities to the Canadian parliament? If that is what the president of CIDA thinks, and if that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) thinks, then all I can say is that those two gentlemen have a few things to learn about the Canadian system of parliamentary government.

This day of debate on the activities of the Canadian International Development Agency has not come a bit too soon. At a time when parliament is trying to find out why CIDA has to rush to get rid of almost $200 million before the end of the current fiscal year, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has announced that the CIDA giveaway budget is to be increased by $200 million in the coming fiscal year. Newspaper columnist Richard Gwynn asked the question, in his column of January 11 in the Journal: "Is CIDA a sick joke?" I think that we have the responsibility to determine whether or not CIDA is a sick joke before we approve such a massive increase in its budget. There are just too many indications that that is exactly what CIDA is, and there are indications that it is due to the actions of the boss of CIDA.

Our examination of CIDA must be extremely thorough, and it must have two primary objectives. We should find out exactly what is being done with the hundreds of millions of dollars that CIDA is giving away each year, and we should determine whether or not that money is accomplishing anything worth while. After all, this is tax money, money that has been grubbed from the Canadian taxpayers, and they have a right to know where it is being spent and whether or not they are getting full value.

Our second objective should be to determine the wisdom of keeping Paul Gérin-Lajoie, the former Liberal bagman, in the post of president of CIDA. Gérin-Lajoie has been running the agency with a free hand, making decisions that should be made by parliament and refusing to divulge even the most basic information about his activities; and the Prime Minister backs him in this.

Thanks to our press we have a picture of Mr. Gérin-Lajoie that makes him look more like an oriental potentate than a Canadian civil servant. He has little or no communication with anyone in CIDA outside his immediate associates in the upper echelons, and it has been said that some of the long time employees of the agency do not even know what their boss looks like. When he travels he has a larger entourage than a cabinet minister, and he seems to be able to travel wherever he likes, whenever he likes. There seem to be no checks whatever on his movements or of the money he spends on his travels.

His decision making powers appear to extend to every aspect of the agency's operations, and I commend my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds), for bringing to light still another aspect of his dictatorial handling of the agency. The hon. member revealed that CIDA's Latin American section has been designated unilingual French, meaning that the working language of the section is French. The hon. member charged that this policy makes it impossible for businesses in his constituency in British Columbia to deal with the agency, as those business people do not speak French. It is time for us to take a serious look at government policies that have made second class citizens of the majority of Canadians, those of our citizens who speak only English. I do not think our people are going continue to take that nonsense much longer, especially with this agency CIDA.

I support the demands that have been made for a complete and full inquiry into the activities of CIDA and of its chief, and that inquiry should proceed without further delay. In the meantime Mr. Gérin-Lajoie should be removed from the top position in the agency and for the time being, at least, the deputy chief of the agency should be placed in charge of both policy and administration. That move alone would, I am sure, go a long way towards re-establishing credibility, efficiency and sanity to Canada's foreign aid program.

May I call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Does the House agree to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ISSUED BY FAMILY COURTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, this is the second time within a year that I have spoken on this subject, the enforcement of maintenance orders issued by family courts. In light of the fact that 75 per cent of all family maintenance orders made by Canadian family courts against deserting husbands are defaulted, and in light of the fact that these defaults cost Canadian taxpayers $365 million annually, this means that between January 1973 and today these defaults have cost Canadian taxpayers almost $1 billion.

As things now stand, a court order to a man for maintaining financially the family he has abandoned is often worth no more than the paper on which it is written. While the divorce law is federal, the laws that govern other aspects of marital break-up, maintenance, child support and property rights continue to vary as provincial responsibilities under the BNA Act. These responsibilities, though, are seldom enforced by the provincial courts; they leave that job to the deserted mother.

The federal government must act through whatever means possible to ensure that the job of tracking down deserting fathers is not left to deserted mothers. Presently a deserted mother not only has to track down her spouse but also has to keep returning to court for new maintenance orders if he defaults. As well, she has to hire a lawyer if he refuses to comply.

The Law Reform Commission has recommended that all matters of family law should be gathered together under one court. As the commission points out, it makes sense that the judge who grants a divorce should also deal with the division of marital property, child custody, access to the child by the parent who does not have custody, and the welfare and maintenance of the child. However, as was mentioned, the constitution presents a barrier for it splits responsibility for these matters between the federal and provincial governments and, therefore, the same case is handled by different judges in different courts. It seems obvious that the commission's recommendations should be adopted. I am hopeful that the federal-provincial discussions concerning the commission's recommendations will be a starting point for these much needed changes.

● (2200)

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Marceau) answered me last March 25 and stated:

> I note that my colleague has seen the conclusions of the Law Reform Commission working paper. I think we agree that the matter should be studied immediately, promptly and efficiently.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

I hope that is what the government has been doing in the past 11 months. The parliamentary secretary went on to state:

> The proposal advanced in the study paper, if endorsed by the Law Reform Commission, is one which might profitably be explored through the medium of the Conference of Uniformity Commissioners on Legislation in Canada which meets annually to examine ways and means of achieving uniformity in laws throughout the various jurisdictions.

I hope the hon. member can report on this conference tonight. He then went on to state:

> I can assure my hon. friend that this matter interests me personally, as well as the department which I am representing tonight because I admit that it is time to truly deal with these problems unrestricted by jurisdictions which are necessary, but must not have priority over the population and the serious and important problems that my hon. friend has described and that I promise to refer to the minister. I also promise to give them particular attention myself.

What we need to rectify this problem is a federal wives' and children's maintenance act. I hope the parliamentary secretary can give a report tonight on the action that has been taken by the government, and indicate when proper government legislation will be introduced to rectify this serious problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the matter of uniformly enforced legislation dealing with the reciprocity of enforcement of maintenance orders has been studied on several occasions by the conference of commissioners for a uniform legislation in Canada, since renamed the Conference for a uniform legislation in Canada.

The commissioners agreed to the last draft of that legislation in 1973. The matter of compulsory maintenance between husband and wife and between parents and children was on the order of the day of the 1974 Assembly. It was then decided to review that matter into greater detail during the 1975 meeting which will be held in Halifax, from August 18th to 22nd; the commissioners for British Columbia will then report progress on that matter.

The British Columbia Royal Commission on family law and children's protection is presently preparing reports and a bill dealing with alimonies and some other matters relating to family law. British Columbia also initiated in the Richmond-Surrey-Delta area a pilot project to test several recommendations dealing with that branch of law. The results of that double series of studies should enable the British Columbia commissioners to submit to the 1975 assembly proposals backed by practical experimentation of new solutions to family law problems.

Whatever the outcome of the studies, the enforcement of alimony and maintenance orders still remains a serious problem. Uniformly enforced legislation would certainly make the enforcement of those maintenance orders easier in the case of spouses who flee from one province to another but the main problem comes from those who, without stepping out of the courts' jurisdiction, deliberately omit payments. The beneficiary of the alimony engages into extremely costly procedures in order to try and have the order enforced himself or herself, and the spouse in default of alimony can frequently evade his or her responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) knows there can be no point of order at this time.

Mr. Paproski: I just wish the hon. member would take it easy so the translator can catch up with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Marceau: The Law Commission of Canada says on page 54 of its working paper No. 1 entitled Family Court:

The Commission believes that, with its complementary services, a family court could and should play a more active part in the implementation of the orders it issues. Some measures could be quickly adopted in the Canadian provinces and territories without imposing too heavy a burden on the judicial and legal mechanisms or on existing welfare services. These measures would comprise the establishment of enforcement services within the family court.

The measures referred to by the Commission could be implemented by each province separately, without having to wait for the passing of standardization legislation. Some provinces, such as British Columbia, already mentioned, and Ontario have moved in this direction.

A pilot project on the automatic enforcement of maintenance orders, put into force during two years by the Peel family court, became in August 1973 a permanent program that was extended theoretically to Ontario as a whole except that, given the shortage of staff and overflowing dockets, it has not been possible yet to put it into force in some areas of that province. In any event, the rule is that once the order is issued and registered in the office of the clerk of the court, the family court is responsible for its implementation.

As for the federal action, it took shape through correspondence addressed by the Minister of Justice to the attorneys general of all provinces, expressing his wish to cooperate with their governments in the reform of family courts. In this connection, the Department of Justice considers granting subsidies to pilot project in that field. Several provinces have shown a desire to participate in this kind of common undertaking with the federal government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The time alloted to the hon. member has expired.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA NEGOTIATING WITH BRAZIL IN PURCHASE OF ARMOURED CARS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight because the other day I asked two questions about Brazilian armoured cars which were not really answered. Hansard of February 11 records at page 3106 the following exchange between the minister and myself:

MR. ALLAN B. MCKINNON (VICTORIA): Mr. Speaker, I have a seven-day old question for the Minister of National Defence. In light of the fact that a Brazilian-produced armoured car is now being tested at Camp Wainwright, can the minister now tell the House whether Canada has entered into negotiations with Brazil for these cars, and whether the cars are to be used for riot control or replacement for the Centurion, the Ferret or our armoured personnel carriers?

HON. JAMES RICHARDSON (MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE): Mr. Speaker, it is correct that we are testing armoured cars at Wainwright. One of them is from Brazil. There are other cars from Sweden and the United States. We have not made any decision, and we certainly have not entered into any negotiations with Brazil.

MR. MCKINNON: I understood the other car was from Switzerland, not Sweden; but I will let that go. Have the negotiations reached the state where the minister has consulted his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to determine if that minister may have reservations about a $200 million arms deal between Canada and Brazil?

MR. RICHARDSON: I have already indicated to the hon. member that we have not entered negotiations for any arms purchase from Brazil.

So in sum I asked two questions. One was: what are they going to do with these vehicles, what are they to replace? The other was: have we any reservations about entering into negotiations with Brazil?

Of these three vehicles that are at present being tested in Camp Wainwright, one if from the United States, the Commando, which is basically an armoured personnel carrier although it can be converted to a reconnaissance vehicle or an armoured car. It weighs in the order of 15 tons, and is a most unlikely replacement for the Ferret. It is produced by the Cadillac Gage company of Detroit, Michigan. It may be of some consolation to Canadians to realize that we now have three Cadillac armoured cars in Canada, one at Camp Wainwright and two at 24 Sussex Drive.

One of the other cars that is considered in this competition is from Switzerland and is known as the Puma. The company, known as Mowag, has a Puma and a Tornado. The two cars weigh 16 tons each.

The information on the car from Brazil is rather difficult to obtain and most of it is contained in a copy of Latin America of October 18, 1974. It describes the two vehicles being made by Brazil, the EE-9 Cascavel, a wheeled reconnaissance vehicle, and the EE-11 Urutu, which comes in two forms—either an amphibious troop carrier for 14 men, or an armoured car. I think that from the description of these vehicles it is difficult to see how they can fill any of the known needs that we have in the Canadian armed forces, where the desperate need is for a reconnaissance vehicle to replace the Ferret, or for a tank to replace the Centurion.

If it is to replace the Centurion, Canada will end up with the world's thinnest-skinned tank. If it is to replace the Ferret we are going to end up with one of the heaviest imaginable armoured personnel carriers with a very indifferent cross country performance, being wheeled instead of tracked. I merely asked the minister the question the other day to try to obtain an answer because military men are puzzled when three vehicles, which are not anything like the top priority for replacement in our armed forces, are brought here for testing. One could easily fall into a state of conjecture and imagine that it is as a riot control vehicle, which is the main purpose to which these are put in the South American countries, according to Latin America.

● (2210)

The question of whether we should or should not buy it from Brazil is of interest to Canadians. Brazil is not a democracy as we know democracies. Brazil is not an ally of ours. The United States is certainly an ally, and there are other countries such a Great Britain producing very serviceable armoured cars and tanks.

I return to the main questions: what are we doing with these vehicles, what are they to replace, what is their use if we do buy them, and are we to assume that there is no preference to be given to the other nations in NATO?

I hope that the parliamentary secretary will be able to answer these questions because I am asking him for information, not to embarrass the department or the minister. I think there is quite an expression of interest in defence in Canada, and this needless and pointless secrecy only serves to confuse what may be a reasonable replacement program. I am sure that the Canadian people are now prepared to accept the fact that we do need replacements desperately, and particularly for our armoured vehicles.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as part of its re-equipment program the Department of National Defence has a requirement for an armoured wheeled personnel carrier, commonly known as an armoured car. This type of vehicle is being manufactured in a number of countries, including Brazil, France, Switzerland, Germany and the United States.

During the past summer, a technical procurement team from the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services examined ten different types of vehicles available on the international market. These government representatives visited the U.S.A., Brazil, France, Germany and Switzerland to examine at first hand vehicles being developed or in production.

Companies which had armoured cars which met the basic requirements of the Department of National Defence were asked to submit technical and financial proposals. Six proposals were received.

Following an intensive assessment by the government team, which considered such factors as technical performance, potential industrial stimulation and program price, three vehicles were selected which met the basic criteria. These are the Commando from the U.S.A., the Piranha from Switzerland and the Urutu from Brazil.

The technical assessment in progress last summer for an armoured wheeled vehicle was the normal preliminary step in examination of equipment needs which the Department of National Defence carries out. Models of all three vehicles are now undergoing winter trials at Camp Wainwright, Alberta, to determine their performance under cold weather conditions. These trials commenced earlier in February and will not be completed until the latter part of March of this year. The trials themselves are being conducted by soldiers from the Calgary based No. 1 Combat group under the supervision of factory representatives and specialists from National Defence headquarters.

Following completion of these trials and further detailed studies concerning technical performance, potential industrial stimulation and price, recommendation will be made to the government by the Department of National Defence seeking approval to begin negotiations to purchase the vehicle.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

AIR CANADA—ATTEMPTED DENIAL OF RIGHT OF MEMBER TO APPEAR BEFORE LABOUR BOARD—REFUSAL TO PAY EMPLOYEES APPEARING AS WITNESSES

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Madam Speaker, what I intend to discuss now relates to the incident in Montreal on December 4 before the Labour Relations Board when an Air Canada representative made representations to that board asking it, in effect, to rule that citizens appearing before the board should not contact their member of parliament, or members of parliament or ministers concerning matters which were before the board.

I think every member of the House readily agrees that that kind of request was ridiculous. Apparently Air Canada indicated to the minister that it had not authorized its representative to make that kind of representation. What is important about this instance is that it reflects the kind of attitude adopted by the labour relations division of Air Canada in the Montreal region; presumably this attitude exists outside the Montreal region as well. Nevertheless it reflects the attitude of Air Canada management to labour relations in general, and to its employees in particular.

This episode, so far as I am concerned, began in the latter part of 1973, when I was informed by several people working for Air Canada, who are constituents of mine, that the Air Canada labour relations division at Dorval was contributing to a serious deterioration in labour-management relations by the handling of the case of Mr. M. J. Morrison, chief shop steward at the power plant shop. Mr. Morrison was forced to work overtime on Dominion Day, 1973, even though it is a statutory holiday and is, by act of parliament, a public holiday. He had also been required to work on St. Jean Baptiste day, 1973, because Air Canada decided that that day would also be a normal working day.

After working five hours on Dominion Day, 1973, from 7.30 a.m. to 12.30 p.m., Mr. M. J. Morrison went home tired, leaving work three hours early. Mr. Morrison was 58 years old at the time and had worked 13 days without a break, and he was tired. But he was also angered by the callousness of Air Canada in misusing the power it has under the collective agreement to call in employees for essential work on holidays. It so happened that the so-called essential work that Mr. Morrison was called in to do could easily have been left until the next day. The call in for work on Dominion Day was purely and simply a show of power exercise by the company officials responsible. In any event, Mr. Morrison was suspended by Air Canada for five days, with a loss of pay privileges and a letter on his file, for being three hours absent without permission.

On January 15, 1974, I wrote to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) giving him the details of the incident and informing him of what I regard as an unsatisfactory labour relations situation at the Air Canada power plant at Dorval.

[Translation]

In that letter I wrote to the minister, I advised him that Air Canada was annoyed that Mr. Morrison had said in the past that the company had not observed public holidays and had asked its workers to put in too much overtime. According to Mr. Morrison's report on overtime, the company wanted the mechanics to exceed the overtime agreed upon, namely 104 hours every three months. I was told that some employees worked from 160 to 180 hours overtime over a three-month period. Mr. Morrison also told about some defective parts of the company's equipment to the federal security agents.

As you can see, according to the above-mentioned events, Mr. Morrison did not precisely win the company's sympathy before this incident and one can easily conclude that the events previous to the incident influenced in some way Air Canada's decision to penalize Mr. Morrison because of his three-hour absence on the 1st of July.

[English]

After some exchange of correspondence with Mr. Morrison, I wrote further letters to the Minister of Transport and to Mr. D. W. Benson, assistant to the president of Air Canada, on July 3, 1974. During the period from January to July, 1974, Mr. Morrison had also contacted the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and had written letters himself directly to the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro).

● (2220)

The hearing of the Labour Relations Board was scheduled for September 23, 1974, and subpoenas were sent to a number of Air Canada employees to attend. The day of the hearing, it was cancelled because of the illness of one of the Board members, I believe the chairman, and Air Canada again demonstrated a reprehensible attitude toward its employees when, in spite of its internal regulations requiring that employees acting as court witnesses be carried on the payroll with pay, Air Canada refused to pay the employees who had appeared on behalf of Mr. Morrison.

I again wrote to the Minister of Transport on October 15 pointing out to him that Air Canada's refusal to pay the witnesses contradicted its own regulations and confirmed to me that Air Canada was deliberately and systematically trying to embarrass and punish Mr. Morrison and anyone having to do with his case. I pointed out that this continuing attitude was poisoning labour relations not only at the Air Canada power plant shop, but elsewhere in the Air Canada Dorval organization.

At the December 4 hearing, Air Canada again refused to pay the witnesses, even though they were subpoenaed by Mr. Morrison and, under company regulations, it was obliged to pay them their salaries.

I ask the parliamentary secretary who is here representing the minister tonight, to deliver strong urgings to Air Canada to rectify this miserable, miserly attitude toward its employees—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Adjournment Motion

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first I wish to draw to your attention the fact that at page 3218 of Hansard for February 14, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) stated:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege concerning a position taken by Air Canada—

I wish to emphasize the words "Air Canada". In a question directed to the minister this afternoon, the hon. member said "It relates to the incident in Montreal on December 4, when an Air Canada representative—". I emphasize the word representative. This evening, the hon. member again referred to the Air Canada representative.

This afternoon, in response to the hon. member's question, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said, and I quote:

[Translation]

> Mr. Speaker, the information I got from Air Canada is that this corporation has never instructed its legal adviser to hold that stance before the Canada Labour Relations Board. Therefore, that stance has been a purely personal one, and Air Canada dissociates itself completely from what has been said.

That is the answer given by the minister.

[English]

I think that even using only the part of the Air Canada counsel statement, as reported in Hansard on February 14, page 3218, it is obvious that the legal counsel was speaking on his own behalf. In fact the statement attributed to the Air Canada legal counsel was made after the union had withdrawn its complaint. It is my understanding that the union has re-filed the complaint and the board is now dealing with it. I do not think I should comment on the specific case.

However, the hon. member for Laprairie this afternoon, in his supplementary question to the Minister of Transport stated that Air Canada was in violation of its own regulations requiring payment of witness fees, requiring payments for its employees as witnesses and refusing to pay employees who appeared that day as witnesses on behalf of Mr. Morrison.

I believe it is the contention of Air Canada that the company regulations do not provide for indemnification by the company of the employee witnesses. Employees are granted time off with pay for jury duty, coroner's inquests or court duty. However, the circumstances in this case do not fall into any of the above categories.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:28 p.m.

AIRPORTS

SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF PLANS FOR PICKERING AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to introduce a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The government has announced its plans for the completion in stages of the Pickering Airport. At no time has there been shown to be any need for this airport. The City of Toronto, through its Council, has clearly indicated its view that there is no need for the new airport. The Pickering impact study shows that the project would raise grave problems of traffic within the whole metropolitan area and that the estimates of cost given so far do not take into account some of the major ancilliary aspects—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Brewin: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to discontinue forthwith any plans to complete the airport or, in the alternative, resign from the ministry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposed motion. Since it is put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated in the absence of unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PROVISION CONCERNING IMPAIRED DRIVERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an extremely urgent matter which needs immediate consideration from this House.

Considering that most highway accidents are due to drivers under the influence of alcohol, that present legislation is not hard enough to dissuade people from driving in a state of inebriety, and that it is urgent to do something in order that drunk people be scared enough by legal reprisals not to take the wheel, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be instructed to study the possibility of amending the Criminal Code to incorporate severe measures likely to dissuade people under the influence of alcohol from driving a car.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO HEALTH HAZARD OF ASBESTOS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent to put a motion of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with the extreme health hazard related to the asbestos mining industry. While the provincial government of Ontario has taken steps to alleviate the problem, the industry in Quebec still exposes miners to extremely unsafe working conditions. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the minister of health—

—whom I am glad to see back in the House after a long absence—

—initiate an immediate inquiry into this matter and report the findings, along with recommendations for solutions to this House upon completion of the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the terms of the motion now being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PICKERING—PROPOSED CHANGE IN VALUATION DATE OF EXPROPRIATED PROPERTIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to raise a question of urgent necessity respecting the Pickering airport announcement of yesterday. The decision that was made yesterday follows two years and 21 days after the original date of confirmation of expropriation which set the values for the property involved. I consider it a matter of very grave urgency that something be done in respect to this, in light of the fact that the government, through the previous Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and others, made statements indicating that that property would not necessarily be needed and that a final decision would be made after the airport inquiry.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That in respect to the Pickering airport properties, this House instruct the Minister of Public Works to take whatever action is necessary to advance the valuation date for those in occupation at the time of the original notice of confirmation to the date that such persons replaced their properties, or the date the Crown takes physical possession of such properties, whichever is the earlier, as one step in assuring that expropriated persons are provided with reasonably equivalent premises to replace those which have been taken from them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PICKERING—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN NAME OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL TERMINAL 2—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to place a motion before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of significant and immediate necessity, namely the importance of saving our quality of life and our tax dollars, and as well, saving the face of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That this House respectfully advises the government to resolve at least one outstanding mess in our national transportation policy by simply changing the name of Terminal 2 at the Toronto International Airport to the Pickering International Airport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have already twice indicated the acceptability of the general subject of the Pickering airport but certainly this motion has a different slant. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR RE-OPENING OF ROGERS PASS ON TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Trans-Canada highway at Rogers Pass is closed indefinitely as a result of this government's failure in its labour relations with its own employees, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That this government take such emergency measures as are necessary to re-open the Trans-Canada Highway and to ease the emergency situation building up at Golden, B.C., and in the national parks of western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it requires the unanimous consent of the House for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF DELIVERING OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES IN CHURCHILL RIDING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to all Canada, and I would urge the unanimous consent of this House.

I have filed this morning with the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) a list of 77 communities in the Churchill riding which will not be receiving old age pension cheques this month because of the postal strike. I would move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Postmaster General deliver the said cheques to my office and provide the services of one of the government's Jet Stars to see that the needy people of my riding receive their cheques on time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion has been proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House to be debated. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED EQUAL TREATMENT AND NO LOSS OF PAY FOR EMPLOYEES APPEARING BEFORE LABOUR BOARD—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under Article 43 of the Standing Orders, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, highlighted by discussions in this House in the last few days and the response of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) in the adjournment debate of last evening, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane):

That this House, without debate, express its opinion that employer and employee representatives of Crown corporations be treated equally when called to appear before the Canada Labour Relations Board and specifically that employees subpoenaed to appear before the board not be penalized by loss of salary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I presume the urgency of the matter must be reflected in the reference in the first part of the motion to remarks made during the adjournment debate last evening. Therefore, I would put the question to the House in respect of unanimous consent. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Fairweather: Nobody said no.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Was there in fact unanimous consent?

Mr. Speaker: I thought I heard a contrary voice. I will put the question again. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is more of a technical point. I believe the parliamentary secretary who answered last night was not the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac). The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There being unanimous consent, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That is the sort of thing that wouldn't happen if Mitchell Sharp were alive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATED COST OF COMPLETE AIRPORT AND INFRASTRUCTURE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's statement yesterday that the estimated cost of land and construction of the proposed Pickering International airport would be $204 million, would the minister indicate if his department has estimated the cost of the completed airport, to which he refers as "other options", and, secondly, would he indicate what is the estimate cost of the infracture that will be required to build Pickering, that is the sewage, the water, the road system, etc., and who will be paying?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there would be a lot of figures but I can supply them. I will ask the department to give them to the hon. member.

URBAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DIVERSION OF FUNDS FROM PICKERING AIRPORT TO INFRASTRUCTURE FOR TORONTO REGION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the comment of the Minister of Transport that there would be a lot of figures and the Prime Minister's comment in Montreal yesterday that soon it will not be possible to give an airport to a municipality, would the Prime Minister indicate whether the cabinet gave any serious consideration to diverting the funds earmarked for the Pickering airport project through the province of Ontario to the municipalities in the Toronto centred region to aid them in building their sewage treatment facilities, their water treatment facilities, their Go train extensions, their roadways and their subways with a view to helping commuters in that region and to help bring down the prices of houses in that area, instead of spending the hundreds of millions of dollars as is proposed at Pickering?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): All these considerations have been taken into account in arriving at the decision.

PICKERING—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSURE AREA RESIDENTS NOT SUBJECTED TO HIGH NOISE LEVEL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): I should like to direct my supplementary again to the Minister of Transport. In view of the government's decision not to accept the Gibson report recommendation with respect to those who live in areas such as Stouffville, and in view of the minister's statement that the government anticipated that the noise level in areas such as Stouffville will not create a disturbance with respect to the residents of that area, would the minister indicate what type of guarantee his department intends to give to those residents who will not be compensated now but may be subjected to noise that they in fact will not have to endure the noise levels that the Gibson report anticipated if the airport were developed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Gibson report gives a certain number of solutions to that problem. I do not know which one will be chosen by those who are interested. If some people are really annoyed by the noise, we are ready to buy their property.

An hon. Member: This is not what you said yesterday.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is what I said yesterday. The hon. member should read my statement again, and he will see that this is what I said. Of course, if those people wanted to move because of the noise level, we will not expropriate them but voluntarily buy their property.

So far as the cost of the airport and the kind of distribution the hon. member proposes are concerned, if he knew the law or the administration he would not have put this question because there is a special fund for airports which is self-sufficient for Toronto, Montreal and Pickering.

PICKERING—SMALL INCREASE IN PASSENGER TRAFFIC MIGHT NOT CAUSE CONGESTION AT MALTON

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I would like to direct also to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the minister has stated that, considering the present growth in air travel, Malton would be seriously congested and therefore other airport facilities are necessary, would he indicate to the House whether or not he is aware of the fact that the International Civil Aviation Organization's annual year-end estimates of scheduled air traffic in 1974 showed that the year's rate of growth for total traffic was the lowest since 1958, and that the volume of passengers registered the lowest increase ever recorded in the industry, and could he tell us something that ICAO does not know as yet?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that fact. I think that the whole world is aware of the fact that there was an oil crisis that year and that it had an impact on all modes of transportation.

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR TABLING REPORTS ON WHICH DECISION TO CONSTRUCT BASED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): In view of the fact that the federal government has spent millions of dollars on inquiries and consultations regarding the proposal for a second international airport for the Toronto area, and because each of these reports recommended that a large, international airport be built, but now, instead, a whole community will be affected and disrupted for one runway only, which is like being half pregnant without ever really wanting to be, could the government now table the reports and recommendations which constitute the basis of its decision, a decision contrary to both the costly recommendations of the inquiry and the majority of the people in the Toronto area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): If the hon. gentleman can bring some kind of evidence to show that the majority of the population is against the airport, I am ready to revise the whole thing.

PICKERING—IF DECISION TO CONSTRUCT BASED ON OVER-ALL TRANSPORTATION PLAN, REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PLAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the minister may well live to regret that statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to ask the minister a question based on what is contained on page 4 of the statement which he tabled in the House yesterday. He spoke—and I am sure there was no humour intended—with reference to what he described as his "over-all transportation policy." I would like to ask him with reference to that over-all transportation policy in which he makes subsequent references to STOL aircraft, high speed trains, and so on, all of which he thought should be put in the context of a serious plan, if the decision for the Pickering airport was made in the light of such a plan? If so, when is he going to outline the details of the plan to the House? If it was not made in the context of a plan which has already been established, when will such a plan be established and provided to hon. members of the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have quite a large budget to operate airports throughout Canada. Some airports are being built now. Is it the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that we should stop everything which is being done now in the field of transportation in Canada because we are preparing an over-all plan?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister a serious question. Does the department have a plan—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Would hon. members on the backbenches on the other side kindly shut up until the question is put.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister inform the House, yes or no, whether there is in existence a national transportation plan which includes as part of its makeup a plan for airport development across Canada? Is there a plan or is there not? If there is not, when can we expect one? It is a pretty straightforward question.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This question of Pickering airport—because this is the one the hon. member is referring to—has been discussed since 1968, more than seven years. There was an inquiry presided over by Mr. Justice Gibson, and it was agreed that at this moment we need something in order to avoid a real mess in the Malton region in a few years. This is what we are attempting to take care of with just one runway, and we will see in these two years what will happen. If we have to go further, we will go further. If we do not need to go further, we will be happy to stop there. So, it is not necessarily integrated into the plan, because at that time there was no general plan for the development of an airport.

Mr. Broadbent: Is there one now?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes there is.

An hon. Member: Where is it?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, at the end of his answer the minister said that there was a plan. Would he either, in the form of making a statement on motions or in some other form in the next few days, provide that plan and outline it to members of the House?

MALTON—REQUEST FOR RAPID INTRODUCTION OF NOISE ABATEMENT DEVICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My last question is with reference to the people now in the Malton area. Would the minister assure us that his department would take the most rapid steps to introduce all the noise abatement devices possible as quickly as possible so the noise effects for the people in the Malton area in the coming two years in particular will be reduced?

● (1130)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what we are doing. We are rapidly building this one runway at Pickering to avoid an increase in the noise level at Malton. We know that aircraft movements are going to increase considerably in coming years and we want to be in a position to prevent an increase in the noise level. We are taking care of this problem, and I do not know why the hon. member complained.

PICKERING—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF THIRD TERMINAL AT TORONTO AS ALTERNATIVE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary for the Prime Minister. A study which was carried out within the Department of Transport and is well known in aeronautical circles shows clearly that a projected increase in air traffic at Toronto International Airport would be provided for if a third terminal were constructed as provided in the original plan. May I ask why the government is going ahead with an airport which the people of Toronto and vicinity do not want—

Some hon. Members: Wrong!

Mr. Hees: —which is completely unnecessary and a waste of hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report mentioned in the premise of the question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister get that report and acquaint himself with its details and, if possible, stop this very foolish waste of money in which the government is participating?

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BILL 22

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Further to the statements he made yesterday to the electors of his riding of Mount Royal, would he indicate to the House what main principle he finds anticonstitutional in Bill 22 and what his government intends to do about this act in view of the unrest it stirs in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never indicated that I find this bill anticonstitutional. On the contrary, I said that, to my mind, the bill is probably not ultra vires, though some parts of it could be challenged before the courts.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

In view of his answer, would the federal government give technical assistance with a view to proving that the bill might be ultra vires?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously did not understand my reply. I said the contrary. I said that we do not think it is ultra vires.

POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO GROUPS CONTESTING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BILL 22—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTERVENTION IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of what he just said, and in view of the fact that private groups in Montreal are bringing action with respect to the constitutionality of that bill which will eventually lead to the Supreme Court of Canada, would the Prime Minister advise whether it is the intention of the government to provide financial assistance to those groups in the prosecution of this section to the same extent as it was provided to the Indians at James Bay with respect to their rights in relation to that project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any group which needed financial assistance to prosecute its case for justice in Canada might make application to the government. As far as I know the question is hypothetical.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. On occasion the Prime Minister has said that it is the intention of the government to watch this kind of action very closely and to intervene where necessary. Could he inform the House whether in this case counsel would have merely a watching brief or would play an active part in the proceedings? What position would the government intend to ask its counsel to take at any hearing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, no action having been taken before the courts up to now, the question is purely hypothetical.

MOUNT HOPE—REASON FOR ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS TO STUDY ADVISABILITY OF EXPANSION AND FOR ACQUISITION OF LAND

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I would point out to him the discrepancy in the estimates tabled for the coming fiscal year which indicate that his department will spend $264,000 on an ad hoc advisory committee to study whether there should be expansion of the Mount Hope airport and also show a $500,000 allowance for the acquisition of land for the expansion of Mount Hope airport during the coming year. May I ask the minister if this means that the $264,000 ad hoc advisory committee is a fraud and an expensive one at that?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, because I understand that all this was printed before we had the Gibson report.

An hon. Member: It is a different airport.

Mr. O'Sullivan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. To be fair to the minister I am referring to the Mount Hope airport in the city of Hamilton which has nothing to do with the Gibson report.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, excuse me.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Perhaps the minister would like to amend his answer.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You know what is happening in Hamilton and it is the same thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Do you know?

Mr. Hees: You tell us what is happening there.

An hon. Member: He doesn't know.

An hon. Member: Where is Hamilton?

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, Mr. Speaker, when we decide at the request of the population to consult with all the organizations, then I wait until I have a report. That is all. I did not receive that report.

Mr. MacFarlane: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is well aware of the price of that study which is in the estimates on the same page—$441,000. He received the report on the airport from me in person.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Where is the fraud?

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Minister of Transport, since it was to him that I posed the question. If I wanted an intervention from the minor league I would have indicated it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: Now that we have established clearly, I hope, with the Minister of Transport that we are discussing the Hamilton Civic airport located at Mount Hope, Ontario, could the minister tell the House why it is that the estimates show a multithousand dollar expansion study on whether there should be an expansion and then $500,000 is allocated for expansion and land acquisition? It would seem that the decision has already been taken.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to put this kind of question. There is not doubt that, following the report, if nothing is done the money is not going to be spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE TO GRAND MANAN ISLAND—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF RATE INCREASE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is of equal importance to the people on the island of Grand Manan in the province of New Brunswick, which has nothing to do with millions or billions but has something to do with people who are isolated because of the sea. Given that the CTC has approved a 90 per cent fare increase to a federally subsidized ferry service will the minister recommend to the cabinet that such a drastic increase be deferred or that the federal subsidy be increased so that these isolated people will be saved from a very real hardship?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman knows whether an appeal was launched to the cabinet on this. I do not know but I can check. If there is no appeal, this is a decision of the CTC.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS ON INTEREST RATE ON LOAN TO CUBA

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I must review the background of this question for him because of his inability to be present in the House yesterday.

An hon. Member: Where is Bob today? He is not sick.

An hon. Member: You are sick.

Mr. Alkenbrack: It concerns a question I raised yesterday in the oral question period. I asked the Minister of Finance for information regarding finances, particularly in relation to bonds. As background, I stated:

● (1140)

In light of this fact, the minister is lending several millions of this money to Cuba through the Canadian International Development Agency at 3 per cent, so how does he justify the economics of taxing Canadians through making them pay high interest rates and then giving the money away to foreign countries?

The minister replied:

The second answer is that Cuba is not receiving that interest rate.

Namely, the 3 per cent figure I stated. Later in the day, at about half past four, during the opposition debate on CIDA—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated that the Prime Minister was absent. Hon. members know that absence was unavoidable. The hon. member indicated that, out of courtesy to the Prime Minister, he was reviewing the background. I hope he will be able to do it in a brief way. However, the hon. member ought to be given that chance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am coming to the point, Mr. Speaker. I know the Prime Minister will co-operate with me. I stated he was unavoidably absent yesterday. We know that he is a busy man. During the CIDA debate yesterday, at about 4:45 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having listened to the minister's comments with interest and heard him speak about the Cuba loan, may I ask, what is the interest rate on this loan?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I have the press release here; it contains all the details. I will be happy to send it to the hon. member.

I have the press release here. The minister sent it over immediately. It reads as follows:

The Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would put the question.

Mr. Alkenbrack: It states that the loan is for $10 million. I quote:

The loan, to be financed by the Canadian International Development Agency over three years, carries interest at 3 per cent per annum and matures in 30 years.

My question is, will the Prime Minister explain to the House why there is such a difference of policy between these two cabinet ministers, and tell the Canadian people the truth regarding the rate of interest on this soft loan to communist Cuba.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I listened as attentively as I could. I see the difference in policy to which the hon. member is referring. After all, the facts are easily ascertainable. They are obviously contained in the press release. As to the policy, the government policy is well known. We have various forms of loans, soft and concessional, to various countries. The policy of the government was discussed by the House yesterday. I have nothing to add to that.

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF AGREEMENT ENTERED INTO WITH INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the proposed pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal. On January 17, the press reported the Prime Minister saying that the government is now willing to offer some type of guarantee to Interprovincial Pipe Line Limited. I wish to ask the minister if any agreement has been reached in principle or actually concluded with Interprovincial Pipe Line. If so, what guarantees, if any have been given and what is the nature of those guarantees?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, after protracted negotiations between representatives of the Crown and Interprovincial Pipe Line, a draft deficiency agreement has been worked out with Interprovincial Pipe Line whereby, in general terms, the government will in the years in which there is no revenue from the Sarnia to Montreal section be prepared to assume responsibility for the fixed operating costs of that section of the pipeline. The purpose is to lay that particular draft agreement before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I will be seeking, by way of a supplementary estimate, authority to enter into agreement on that particular part. At that time the agreement, which as I say has not yet been executed by the parties, will be laid before the committee for committee discussion.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does the proposed agreement contain a provision that the traffic charges to customers on the pipeline which is now in existence to Sarnia will be increased slightly, and the rate from Sarnia to Montreal will be increased substantially? Is that a commitment which the government has made in this proposed agreement?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the government could not make that commitment in this agreement. The tolls and tariffs on the line, as the hon. member knows, are determined by the National Energy Board under the National Energy Board Act. However, the agreement does make provision that if in the board's judgment in setting the tariffs for the two parts of the line, a lower tariff is set between Sarnia and Montreal and a higher one between Edmonton and Sarnia, to that extent the government's deficiency payment would be reduced. Obviously, the exact setting of the tariffs on the line is something the National Energy Board will have to determine. The agreement provides for that eventuality, but of course the administration cannot make that kind of agreement in the absence of the board.

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—AMOUNT FOR WHICH GOVERNMENT LIABLE UNDER AGREEMENT WITH INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that Imperial Oil, which is a major shareholder in Interprovincial, seems to have again stonewalled the government in compelling them to make concessions in order to build this pipeline, can the minister give the House any estimate as to what it will cost the government in paying the cost during the period the pipeline is completed but not in operation. If there is any deadline, has it been established so that the protracted period that has gone on in the past will not obtain in the future while the government is picking up the tab?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The protracted period of what?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The protracted period of negotiations. The Prime Minister announced this project a year ago last September, and it has not even been started. What provision is there for the period between the time this agreement is entered into and the time the pipeline is supposed to be in operation, the period during which the government will be responsible for certain financial commitments? Does the minister have any estimate as to what the financial implications will be?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear to the hon. member the government will not be responsible for any financial commitments in advance of the completion of the line and throughput of oil through it. The government's commitment will only be in respect of a future year in which the revenue from the line, because of a drop in throughput, would not be sufficient to meet fixed and variable operating costs. There is no immediate financial commitment involved, that is for a payment this year. As to how much it will cost in the future, that is something it may be difficult to estimate. However, probably one of the better arenas in which to discuss that would be the standing committee where we can exchange views with the officials.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF BLUE FIBRE ASBESTOS IN PROVISIONS OF ACT

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister consider the inclusion in the Hazardous Products Act of blue fibre asbestos as a material dangerous to health with a view to banning its import into Canada where it is used in the manufacture of asbestos products, such as in the Johns-Manville plant in Scarborough. I ask this in view of the fact that blue fibre asbestos, if inhaled by workers or emitted into the air of the community, may cause a form of cancer which is always fatal.

● (1150)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the authority of the Hazardous Products Act has already been used to ban the use of asbestos in the manufacturing of clothes. The officials of my department, in cooperation with Department of National Health and Welfare officials, are currently investigating the matter and if necessary, we shall not hesitate to invoke the Hazardous Products Act again.

MANPOWER

COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Under the social policy reform program that the Minister of National Health and Welfare proposed to the provincial ministers of social affairs, a community employment policy was proposed and it was reported that the Department of Manpower and Immigration is about to implement twenty pilot projects across Canada. Can the parliamentary secretary tell the House what this community employment program really is? Does it consist in public works or in another kind or project which would result in any production needed by the Canadian people?

[English]

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I believe the hon. member is referring to the community employment strategy concerning which we are holding discussions, now, with all the provincial governments. These talks are at various stages at the present time. The intention is to get at the "hard core" unemployed and provide jobs for them within the community. Discussions are going on within local communities and I would be glad to advise the hon. member of the nature of those discussions in his own riding.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

Could the parliamentary secretary say right now whether the purpose of those projects is to replace the local initiatives program we have had for three or four years?

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: This is a long range concept as compared with the Local Initiatives Program and, hopefully, it will provide more permanent jobs for the hard core of unemployed people.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ASKING PRIVATE SECTOR TO PRACTICE RESTRAINT IN VIEW OF INCREASED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, while this question was alluded to—

Some hon. Members: Leader!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: In the interval since this matter was alluded to in a question put to the Minister of Finance 48 hours ago, we on this side of the House have had a chance to study the blue book of estimates. These estimates, together with supplementary estimates and the current rate of inflation amount to an increase over the last fiscal year of more than 30 per cent. In these circumstances I would ask the Prime Minister how he, together with the Minister of Finance, proposes to continue the government lecture to the private sector to practice restraint.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the figure given by the hon. member does not take into account the estimates and the supplementary estimates. He should compare similar things. If he does so, he will get a better statistical result.

Mr. Grafftey: I can assure the Prime Minister that we on this side have come up with these figures after detailed consultation with many people. The current inflation rate, together with the supplementary estimates proposed by the President of the Treasury Board, bring the increase over the last fiscal year close to 30 per cent and I ask the Prime Minister how he and the Minister of Finance propose to continue to tell the private sector to practice restraint in those circumstances.

HEALTH

ALLEGED DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON CHILDREN OF FOOD COLOURING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that reputable sources indicate that artificial colouring and flavoring in foods may be contributing to hyperactivity and learning disability in children, can the minister tell us whether any studies are being undertaken by his department into the use of these food chemicals and, in particular, into their effect on children?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know that various studies are made on a continuous basis in the Health Protection Branch. As to whether there have been very recent studies on the matter, I shall inquire and report to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Since there is no proof to date that these additives have any nutritional value whatsoever, can the minister inform us whether he would be prepared to remove them from the marketplace, taking into account their possible danger?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I shall give the matter closer consideration, Mr. Speaker, and report to the hon. member.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF FACILITIES SUPPLIED UNDER GOVERNMENT'S ACCELERATED IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State but, in his absence, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. The government's accelerated communications program is a five year crash program which will cost between $150 million and $200 million. Can the Prime Minister advise us what facilities have been installed in the past year since the program was announced and tell us the location of these facilities? Can he supply us with a plan showing these locations and outlining the facilities which are to be established over the next few years?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will agree, on reflection, that information of this type ought to be sought in another way.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY REGIONAL CARRIERS GIVEN MORE SHORT-HAUL ROUTES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Since the chairman of Air Canada, Mr. Yves Pratt, has indicated that domestic short-haul flights may be subject to rate increases of between 5 and 15 per cent in the coming year, has the minister given any consideration to allowing regional carriers to operate more fully in the area of short-haul operations if they feel they can do a better job than is being done by Air Canada at the present time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The question is more complex than it might appear. Most of the regional carriers are anxious to abandon short-haul flights.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Don't say "No", because it is "Yes". They do not make money on them and they are much more interested at this moment in flying south with charter planes than in operating short-haul flights. However, I shall inquire into this. I do not know where the hon. member got his information but I will read what Mr. Pratt said and try to understand what he has in mind.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATE INCREASES IN WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The railways have increased their freight rates on certain products by 30 per cent since the Western Economic Opportunities Conference took place, at which time the federal government expressed support for a policy favouring the rapid growth of secondary industry and, more particularly, the processing of western Canadian resources. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman feels these increases in freight rates are in keeping with the spirit of that conference. Is he about to come up with a policy which will give effect to the views which were put forward on behalf of the government on that occasion?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is, of course, a general question and it should really be answered in the course of a debate on the Transportation Act of 1967. The hon. member talks about the movement of natural resource products. He knows this comes under what we call agreed rates between the producers and the railways. If the shippers and the railways agree on certain rates, they are free to do so under the law as it stands.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Certain reclassification procedures and changes in the freight rate structure in Western Canada have meant an increase of 500 per cent in the rates charged on certain commodities. I would remind the House that at the Western Economic Conference the Prime Minister expressed deep concern that "so many gifted individual Westerners could feel so much discontent with their present and future prospects." He went on to say that the government has an obvious duty to identify the sources of frustration and to act to overcome them. I ask the Prime Minister whether he does not feel that ample time has now elapsed since that conference for positive action, and does he not think he should take it upon himself, if the Minister of Transport does not come up with a policy now, to remove the Minister of Transport and appoint someone who will bring in a policy?

● (1200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: I believe the Prime Minister has an obligation to the country to answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—DATE OF REPORT OF TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Owing to the serious difficulties now encountered by the textile industry throughout Canada, especially in Quebec, could the parliamentary secretary advise the House whether the studies undertaken by the Textile and Clothing Board to determine the causes of the problems undermining that industry which employs 100,000 workers in Canada have been completed and, if so, when the minister will make public the reports of that board?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a report has been received from the Textile and Clothing Board. The minister and his officials are now analyzing it and when they are through the minister will make a statement.

FINANCE

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR REDUCTION IN ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS TO HOUSING

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the low number of housing starts for the month of January—175,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis compared to the target of 210,000 that the minister speaks of—and in view of the government's housing priorities, which mean a drastic cut in the construction of housing for senior citizens and low income families, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the decision with regard to the cut in housing construction was a decision of the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. If it was the decision of the Minister of Finance, would he explain his reason for the decision?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know to which decision the hon. gentleman is referring. I can say only that there is legislation before the House with which we intend to deal as soon as the income tax bill is finished, which will allow us to meet the target that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and I have set before the House.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could advise the Minister of Finance that the public housing estimates for Ontario have been cut from $78 million to $50.4 million, in co-operative housing from $65 million to $55.8 million, and in land assembly from $55 million to $35 million, which constitute drastic cuts. Is the Minister of Finance responsible for that decision and, if so, why?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is a flattering assumption but I should like to check it out.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—STATUS OF HOUSES SLATED FOR DEMOLITION AND ALTERNATIVE PLANS FOR OCCUPANTS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary has to do with housing, but it is supplementary to earlier questions directed to the Minister of Transport with regard to Pickering. Under the original proposal a great many houses in the Pickering area were slated for demolition. Given yesterday's announcement, would the minister say what is the present status of these houses? Are they still slated for demolition and if so, what alternative plans are being made for the occupants?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is a matter for the Minister of Public Works who is in charge of expropriation, so perhaps he would answer the question.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to have the Minister of Public Works answer it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. lady to repeat the question.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the earlier questions regarding Pickering airport. Under the original proposal a great many houses in the Pickering area were slated for demolition. Given yesterday's announcement, what is the present status of these houses? Are they still slated for demolition and, if so, what alternative plans are being made for the occupants?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice; I regret to say I am not sure to which houses the hon. lady is making reference. It is intended to proceed with the expropriation plans as filed. There will be no change in either the area to be expropriated or in the type of compensation offered.

FISHERIES

LOCKEPORT, NOVA SCOTIA—DESTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS BY FIRE AND CLOSURE OF FISH PLANT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST COMMUNITY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain whether I should direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries) or to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but I direct it to the Minister of State (Fisheries) and I hope the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is listening. A recent fire destroyed six buildings in the town of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, while at the same time one of the leading fish plants in the town was forced to close. Is the minister aware of this situation and, if so, are any efforts being made to assist these people during this serious period of economic hardship? Have any representations been made to the minister by the provincial government in Nova Scotia seeking provincial aid to cover this disaster?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of this problem. I have discussed it with officials from the Nova Scotia government and we are doing everything we can from our point of view to help find a solution.

POST OFFICE

CONTINUATION OF STRIKE AT TORONTO—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE—CONTINGENCY PLANS TO ASSURE DELIVERY OF OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Now that mail is being cleared through the Montreal office, and in view of the assurance that mail would be going forward in the Toronto office as at midnight last night, would the hon. gentleman inform the House whether the further delay and continuation of the strike in Toronto is related to the ideological conflict to which he referred on February 17 and, if so, what action is he taking to deal with this growing aggravation?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as is usually the case in a legal strike, there is a certain amount of confusion in the first couple of days. As the hon. gentleman has quite properly pointed out, picketing in most areas is very peaceful. The couriers are obviously not crossing the line for philosophical reasons, though women sorters are quite prepared to cross. We have an obligation to run the post office. As long as the picket lines are peaceful, we will have to find truck drivers who have the courage to cross a picket line. With regard to those who resort to violence and vandalism, the law will be used to the utmost to weed these people out of the post office, because they are not representative of the average postal worker.

In so far as the cheques for senior citizens are concerned, the unions are now working very closely with postal authorities to make sure that no impediment is placed in the way of an orderly delivery of cheques to people who are the innocent victims of labour disputes. In the case of the hon. member for Churchill, if he finds it too onerous to go from door to door and needs a jet, perhaps he will take advantage of the gymnasium in the Confederation Building to get in shape.

● (1210)

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, now that it is understood that the strike in Toronto is continuing into the weekend, which makes the flow of cheques critical, I wonder whether the Postmaster General could be more specific in outlining emergency plans for distribution of these cheques than he was in respect of the tongue-in-cheek proposal he made to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and to the hon. member for Churchill?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the point I was making to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands was a serious one. If we cannot deliver senior citizens' cheques by mail, and the unfortunate part of this situation is that senior citizens are becoming very concerned and abnormally worried about whether they are going to get their cheques, let me assure the hon. member that they will get them. If there is any danger that the cheques will not be delivered by mail, we will place them at appropriate depots in various constituencies. There are certain senior citizens who, for physical reasons, cannot travel to those locations, and my suggestion was that in those cases we would be glad to deliver those cheques through local service agencies and, hopefully, civic-minded members of parliament.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. I have been sitting here for the last four months observing the performance, especially of the Postmaster General, and although I am an auctioneer, a fairly good one I think, I doubt very much if I could even get an opening bid if he were put on the auction block.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get into the auction business, but I am going to raise a point of order that certainly affects my privileges, and one about which I am getting very irritated.

An hon. Member: You are always irritated.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, I am. I have been sitting here for a week trying to ask a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) on a matter which broke about this time last week, or at least it was in the newspapers last Friday. The Solicitor General, unfortunately, was not here on Monday or on Wednesday, on which occasions I did not move out of my seat, but on Tuesday, Thursday and today I have tried to catch Your Honour's eye. I do not know whether the story could still be considered relevant, but I think it is. The Solicitor General did stay in the House today, I think hoping that at least one member would be recognized in order to ask a question on this subject.

With all due respect to Your Honour, I cannot for the life of me understand how you can recognize hon. members in front of me, to the right of me, to the left of me and behind me—some hon. members have not only been recognized once but twice in the last week, and my seatmate was recognized once yesterday in absentia—yet when I was standing at the same time Your Honour could not recognize me. Perhaps Your Honour has forgotten the name of the riding I have the honour to represent. I say to Your Honour that many things have happened in this last month in relation to the decorum and rules of this House which are starting to irritate me. As far as the question period is concerned, aside from any criticism about whether the opposition is handling the question period properly, I believe the question period has been effectively gutted.

I should like to ask, as I almost did yesterday when we were discussing the business of the House, either through Your Honour or directly through the House leader, that Order No. 10 under Government Business, which has to do with the procedures of this House, be referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization. Then, perhaps this charade, farce or, as far as I am concerned, completely irrelevant question period, can be restored to a meaningful thing and we can get some drive or momentum back into it.

I have other points I could mention that reflect upon the Chair, but I am not going to get into them today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: In the ruling you made on Friday last, you said that the House was the master of its own rules, referring to the flood of Créditiste motions under Standing Order 43, yet on Wednesday when we were back on another motion under Standing Order 43 we were unable to discuss it because of procedure; there seems to be a contradiction that must be straightened out. There also have been some other ad hoc decisions which I think have to be straightened out.

The sooner we refer this question of procedure to the committee, the sooner the irritation felt by a number of members on this side of the House can be corrected, and Your Honour can again continue to be the conscience of this House. Quite frankly, as far as I am concerned, my conscience is no part of the collective conscience of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: Having regard to the question of privilege or point of order raised by the hon. member, let me say that, as the hon. member will have observed today, the question period should have concluded at about two minutes past 12, but knowing there were several members who sought an opportunity to pose their questions this week I deliberately extended the question period some 10 minutes in an attempt to accommodate as many of those members as possible. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), whose constituency and parliamentary performance I know and understand very well, is one of those who was unable to be recognized today or yesterday. He joins a number of others I could name, if he wishes me to expose the names, as I have kept a careful record during the last several weeks. The list includes his colleagues sitting in front of him, behind him and beside him.

There is simply a physical limitation to the number of members I am able to recognize in any question period. I deeply regret that the hon. member takes so seriously the fact that he was among those not recognized. He must surely understand that he joins several of his colleagues each day in that category, and this is as much a source of regret to me as it is to him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of the discussion that has just taken place. Perhaps the House would be willing now to pass, without debate, the item of government business which is No. 10 on the Order Paper under Government Business, allowing that committee to get on with its job.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I offered to do this the other day. I do agree with the hon. member that it is time that committee of the House had a look at our rules. For instance, there are many of them dealing with supply and so on that deserve consideration, so I would be very happy, speaking on behalf of members on this side of the House, if we could pass that item now without debate.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure we would be prepared to accept this suggestion, but I would offer this caution. I have had some discussions with the government House leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others in respect of an interim procedure by which we could deal with supply, as this has become an exceedingly sore spot in the operations of this Chamber. There have been some suggestions made as to how we could impose an interim measure to deal with at least those estimates now before the House.

In agreeing to this suggestion, it will be understood that these discussions will continue and that probably we will work out some new method of dealing with at least the current estimates. If the government House leader is prepared to indicate his acceptance, I am sure we are prepared to let the order pass now.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be authorized to consider the Standing Orders of the House and procedure in both the House and its committees;

And that the Committee be authorized to include in its reports drafts of proposed permanent or temporary Standing Orders drawn to give effect, if concurred in by the House, to any permanent or temporary change or changes proposed by the Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 19, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Wednesday, February 19, 1975, clause 73 as amended had been carried. Shall clause 74 carry?

On clause 74.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, our financial critic has something to say in regard to this clause. We would like it to stand until he is in the chamber. We extended the minister the courtesy of sufficient time to bring in a table and we did not think it could be set up in so short a time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps we could stand the clause for a moment, but how many more do hon. members want to stand? The government is ready to roll.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 74 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stood.

Clause 75 agreed to.

On clause 76.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we realize the government is ready to roll but we are not sure in what direction, whether it is sideways, forward or backward. I had trouble with my earpiece and I want to ask what clause we are dealing with.

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 74 has been stood. Clause 75 has been carried and the committee is now on clause 76.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I think this would be the time to bring forward the suggestion I made when we were discussing clause 2 with relation to special dispensations for elderly persons, and to make a correction which friendly members, happily, made for me at the time because I was unable to do so. I had in mind a ceiling on the total exemption on income taxes for persons over 65, a ceiling which I think could be worked out conveniently at $20,000 to $25,000. I was not thinking of an exemption for people with unlimited incomes when entering retirement. I wonder whether the minister has had an opportunity to re-examine this motion of granting broader exemptions to persons over 65. The argument we were employing at the time—which I think is valid—was that far too much of the government's revenue from public funds is being taken from elderly persons in the form of income tax.

Some of our provident workers have managed to put aside revenue, depriving themselves in their working years of some of the benefits of that revenue in the hope that they would be able to take advantage of it when the time came for retirement. They were not free to travel in their working years, and now they are free to travel, or they may have special calls on their income. Some of them may have special calls for medical purposes and if they were to cash in some of their savings, those savings would be subject to capital gains tax.

I think we have here an opportunity to provide for the elderly members of our community additional funds without the government making any outlay. It would mean reduced revenue for the government but not an outlay. We have been charged by the other side of the House with talking from two sides of our mouths, saying that we want restraint on government spending, on one hand, and that the government should pay out more for this, that and the other service, on the other hand. We offered the government a means of restraint today and yesterday with respect to the Pickering airport. We have offered them a means of saving $300 million. The government is not interested in that sort of restraint, so I am offering another one—not an outlay but a reduction of revenue from a very special class of people who have saved.

My other argument for putting forward this notion is that it would encourage the ethic of saving, which is a very valuable trait but somehow has fallen into disuse. Has the minister had an opportunity to consider, since I first put forward the notion, extending more benefits to people over 65; in fact, exempting them from income tax and all other taxes?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the revenue consequences of the hon. member's suggestion, with so many people over 65 in this country, would be quite considerable. I would call to the hon. member's attention the supplementary information issued on budget night, on page 17, which indicates what we have done, particularly over the last three years, for elderly people. As a result of the measures announced in the budget, a taxpayer 65 years of age or over may have as much as $8,258 of income before paying any federal tax at all in 1975.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Make it more.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This figure assumes a married couple, each in receipt of old age security payments of $1,441 in 1975; one spouse also has some pension income as well as some investment income. The figure of $8,258 is determined as follows: basic exemptions, $1,878; net spouse's exemption, $537; age exemption, $1,174; spouse's age exemption, $1,174; interest dividend deduction, $1,000; pension deduction, $1,000; standard medical and charitable deduction, $100—total, $6,863—exempt equivalent of tax cut, $1,395: for a grand total of $8,258. We have moved a great deal in the last two or three years to raise the taxable income up to which elderly people are exempt.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I thank the minister for that clarification. This is a step for which he and the government are to be commended. However, I suggest that more can be done for persons 65 and over. The tabulation, of course, is an oversimplification because it presumes that both the husband and wife are over 65, but it sometimes happens that one is 65 and the other is perhaps 60. I think the breadwinner at that age has to face—in fact, they both have to face—extra charges in terms of trying to maintain their home in habitable condition, which is a very high cost these days.

I hope the minister will for a number of years be capable of carrying out home repairs if they need to be done. But when he gets to age 65 he may find he is unable to climb a ladder to fix a hole in the roof, or to do some other things around the house. It is this sort of thing that our elderly are faced with, and they should be allowed to retain the income they have set aside for those special years in order to meet these charges.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I want to remind both the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich that all this talk about what has been done to exempt elderly persons from income tax is of no help to those who do not receive enough income to be on the income tax rolls. The minister knows I am going to say this, but I say to him again that as a member of the cabinet, if he is concerned for elderly people he should be pushing for a very substantial boost in the basic amount of the old age pension.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, may we go back to clause 74 in order that it may be agreed to, thus dealing with matters in a more efficient manner and allowing the minister to continue?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I remember that the hon. member used to be a "take charge" guy on the field, and now he is a "take charge" guy in the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we return to clause 74?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 74 agreed to.

On clause 77.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I would like to move with respect to clause 77. I move:

That subclause 77(2) of the bill be amended by striking out the figure "8" where the same appears in line 10 at page 195 and substituting therefor the figure "13".

I do not intend to make a lengthy speech on this amendment. I would only point out to members who are here that this is certainly not a typographical amendment such as the minister is proposing. My amendment would mean a tax reduction for the Canadian taxpayer of $500 million.

● (1230)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the House has not already dealt with this 5 per cent tax cut in the amendment at second reading and, if the House has so dealt with it, whether the same issue can again be presented. I would argue and submit to Your Honour that the amendment is not in order for that reason, having been previously dealt with by the House on the same bill.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this issue is too important to be subject to what I can only term specious legal argument. Because the minister has chosen to take this position with regard to the matter, let me say that the House of course dealt with it. However, the House did not deal with it in the terms of a clause of a particular bill such as is now before the committee. Although the outcome and the question could be the same, the procedures are different.

The committee should not be fettered, particularly in view of the fact that this bill will be reported back to the House, where it will again be dealt with by the House. I know of no precedent, and the minister has advanced none, with regard to this matter. My respectful submission is that it would have to be an absolutely clearcut decision, without any grey areas, if there were a precedent that would put the committee in the position where it could not debate and decide an issue that is so important to the people of this country in terms of tax relief. I cannot conceive that the rules were ever considered to be used in a way that would deny discussion by the members of a committee with regard to a matter of such importance.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement briefly what the hon. member has just said. If Your Honour were to give effect to the argument of the Minister of Finance—I think he presented it with tongue in cheek—it would mean that if on second reading of a bill the question was put, the House voted in favour of second reading and the bill was sent to committee, each and every clause in the bill could not be the subject of attack by the committee. That would be a preposterous situation. The committee is certainly entitled to examine with care each clause and decide whether it wants to accept it or change it.

I would point out to the Chair that under the new procedure which has been adopted in the reverse of this situation time after time in standing committees, votes are taken on individual clauses of a bill and the government may be sustained, as it is from time to time, but that does not prohibit our coming back into the House at report stage and moving an amendment in precisely the same terms. Surely that is of some significance. There must be some relationship. If we can do it in one instance, we should be entitled to do it in another. It would be a very grave injustice to deny this committee the right to express its views on the amendment put by my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I support the position just taken by the hon. member for Peace River. It is good to have him back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The amendment moved by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on February 6 was an amendment on second reading of the bill. It was in these words:

—this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-49 because it fails to provide for a further 5 per cent reduction in personal income tax in 1975 and subsequent taxation years despite unprecedented government revenues and the resulting overtaxation by the government.

That was recognized as a reasoned amendment. Thus, it was not an amendment to the bill itself. The House expressed its opinion at that time on the question of whether we should proceed with second reading with or without that change. I do not see where that governs the proceedings of the House from that point on. As a matter of fact, we are not now in the House; we are in committee of the whole.

As Your Honour knows, many times a bill is sent to a standing committee and something that has been argued for and defeated on the floor of the House is nevertheless moved as an amendment in the standing committee. If there were any question about the right of a private member to move a reduction in taxation, that would be a different point. However, it has been pretty well established over the last several years that although private members cannot move an increase in taxation, they can move for a reduction in taxation. Therefore, I think Your Honour should disregard the argument proposed by the Minister of Finance and allow this amendment as being in order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, because of the importance of this matter, Your Honour may want to reserve decision on the admissibility of this particular amendment. I can say that if Your Honour were to see fit to admit it at this time, I doubt very much that we would make much progress for the rest of the day.

An hon. Member: He is threatening a filibuster.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the mover of this motion may I say that I hope you will put the question. We believe there is something very fundamental at stake here. My amendment would mean from $60 to $150 for each taxpayer in this country. The minister is simply stalling for time rather than allowing us to go to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. If there are no further comments on the point of order, the Chair is prepared to make a ruling at this time. I thank hon. members for the contributions they have made. The point raised by the Minister of Finance has been fully taken into consideration. It is quite correct, as he suggests, that the substance of the second reading amendment and this amendment at committee stage are similar. There is a different aspect, however, because of the stage at which the bill is now being considered. The vote taken at second reading stage was on the principle of the bill, that principle being stated in general terms. Now, in committee stage, we are considering items specifically in the clause by clause study and therefore the committee has the right to consider again a particular clause of the bill.

For the information of the hon. member, the Chair has been guided in this regard by May's eighteenth edition which at page 483 reads:

The various stages through which a bill progresses . . . are intended by the practice of parliament to provide so many opportunities not only for consideration, but also for reconsideration. Such stages may be taken to include the passage of any necessary financial resolution. Thus an entire bill may be regarded as one question which is not settled until it is passed. And hence no objection can be taken to an amendment on any particular stage on the ground that it raises again a question decided on an earlier stage.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 77(2) carry?

Amendment (Mr. Stevens) negatived; Yeas, 37; nays, 50.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 77 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, as I understand this clause, it is concerned with the 1974 floor of $150 and ceiling of $550, and the 1975 floor of $200 and ceiling of $750. I want to ask the minister why he does not at this time grant deeper tax cuts, in view of the fact that the tax cuts that were suggested by him in the November budget, and which we are debating in this clause, are now too small in view of the increased unemployment since the November budget. The current rate of unemployment, unadjusted, is 8.6 per cent and the next set of figures from Statistics Canada will probably show an unemployment rate of 9 per cent, unadjusted, and close to 7 percent adjusted. This means that the recession facing the Canadian people will probably be the most severe of all the post-war recessions, even including the one in 1958.

We, of course, recognize that with the current rate of inflation in Canada running at about 12 per cent, this makes the problem all the more difficult; but the Minister of Finance has time and again disavowed the Liberal policy of 1971 which saw the deliberate creation of unemployment to correct the increase in price levels. He says that he does not want this to occur again and this is why the budget, from an expenditure point of view and with the tax reductions, is considered by him to be a stimulus. But surely he should see that in the changing economic situation the stimulus, especially in terms of the tax cuts, is too moderate if he really wants to avoid unemployment figures of 9 per cent, unadjusted, or 7 per cent adjusted.

Why does the minister not come in at this time with a higher minimum tax reduction and a lower maximum tax reduction? Would he not agree that would be a better way to put needed income into the lower and middle income groups? Was that not his idea in giving tax cuts in the first place, that is, to give more, proportionately, to the lower income groups who in the parlance of the economists have a higher marginal propensity to consume? This would result in a greater multiplier effect on income and output in the economy.

It seems strange that this budget puts so much stress on saving and that some opposition members are putting so much emphasis on it in the hope that it will turn into fruitful investment. The fact is that when you have unemployment levels as they are now, and growing, there is a great deal of undercapacity in the economy, and in the short run too much savings would increase the slowdown in the economy at lower employment output and income levels.

We need emphasis on production, as the minister has so often said, and we need it more now to compensate for the growing unemployment. If more income is made available to the lower income classes, then the multiplier effect will ultimately mean that business firms increasing their sales will invest more in inventories and ultimately in real capital goods. That will increase the employment of people and thus increase output and income. The minister knows that his November forecast of the creation of 225,000 jobs in 1975, as against the 390,000 created in 1974, was based on the assumption of a 4 per cent real growth rate. But the minister knows very clearly now that there is going to be no 4 per cent increase and he will do damn well if the economy grows, in real terms, at 1 per cent or 2 per cent at the most.

I want to ask the minister, as of this date in February, rather than the date of the November budget, how many new jobs he is forecasting. Is the minister now prepared to acknowledge that unemployment in Canada is growing faster than he anticipated in November, or is this a repetition of a "planned unemployment" policy to fight inflation? Is he waiting for the United States government to correct our unemployment problems for us?

The minister has been saying that he does not want to amend this clause until he sees whether the American policies are going to work, or until he sees how the tax cuts presently proposed will affect our economy. But is this not also an admission that he is prepared to see an increase of unemployment occur in the next several months and for the rest of the year in this country? Indeed, is this not "planned unemployment" by the minister? Surely he knows that even when the tax bills get past the American congress, it will be at least six months before they will show their effects on that economy because of time and technical lags.

If the minister were truly concerned for the unemployed, would he not take steps to cut taxes more deeply, to offer rebates, increase personal tax exemptions and reduce the tax liability of the working poor of this country? By refusing to do this, coupled with a refusal to offer an adequate guaranteed annual income, is he not just reinforcing the tendency toward unequal distribution of income in this country? In a society with incomes unequally distributed, as they are in Canada, it is important that any generalized tax cut be given to those whose propensity to consume means that the purchasing power is put back into the economy, otherwise it will be stored away in savings, and we must remember that personal savings grew last year by almost 8 per cent. While failing to give adequate tax cuts to the lower income groups, he adds to the inequality in income distribution and defeats the goals of a tax reduction designed to bolster a sagging economy.

The minister seems to be accepting the notion that unemployment is not as painful now as it was in the past because of such things as unemployment insurance. Newspapermen often make this point and say that we have in Canada an unemployment insurance scheme second to none. It is true that our unemployment insurance plan has improved, and we are grateful to the minister presently in charge of the postal services for his fight on behalf of the unemployed in this connection, but I believe the benefits now being paid to the unemployed both in France and in Germany are a vast improvement on those available under our own scheme.

Relatively speaking, when a person is unemployed, even with unemployment insurance he or she is still falling behind in their standard of living. There are others who argue that because unemployment affects women workers and more youthful members of the labour force to a larger extent than the primary breadwinner, this decreases the severity of being unemployed. But is it not clear that today it is family income that counts, and that we do a grave injustice to women in the labour force as well as to the younger workers by taking this stand? This notion usually comes from those who have never faced the personal loss of a job with all its insecurity in financial and emotional terms.

A superficial way of estimating the cost of unemployment is to consider the money paid out in unemployment benefits and welfare. But the more serious economic effect is the enormous waste, as many goods that could have been produced are not. Tax revenues go down as federal and provincial governments are deprived of their share of the workers' income and there is often a loss of corporation taxes associated with the decline. The real tragedy, as we know, is in human and psychological terms affecting people who no longer are wanted to fulfil a customary productive role in society. The deeper the recession—and this is likely to be a deep recession—the more serious the emotional and financial scars suffered by the unwanted. It is also true, as many studies of the behaviour of the labour force in times of recession show, that discouraged workers drop out of the labour force entirely. Unemployment figures do not reveal the serious under-utilization of the human beings in the economy.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, as we debate this clause we face a serious depression which will likely take us longer to come out of than the 1958 one, and may go even deeper as measured by decreases in output and income and increases in unemployment. It is going to be more painful before any improvement will occur. It will be painful for all of us, especially for those who are unemployed and bear the heaviest share of the burden. The recession would end sooner if personal income taxes were cut much deeper, if rebates were provided for those earning lower incomes, and greater exemptions accorded to those at the lower end of the income scale. I ask the minister to act on his humanitarian principles, to do something effective to help the unemployed, and to let us have deeper tax cuts and those other things I have asked for.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 77 carry?

Mr. Nystrom: I wanted to ask a couple of questions, but perhaps we could call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at one o'clock it was considering clause 77. Shall clause 77 carry?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I indicated at one o'clock that I wanted to ask the minister a couple of questions. Clause 77 provides for individual income tax cuts. I remember that when this idea was first proposed a few years ago, it had a degree of progressiveness to it whereby you had a maximum cut of $500 and a minimum cut of $100, which is now being raised to $150. I think this is a step in the right direction in terms of not leaving it open-ended.

I would ask the minister, as I did last year, whether he has put more thought into the tax credit idea which I think is even more equitable than this. Under this idea, everyone, regardless of income, gets a tax credit of $200, $400 or whatever the national budget can stand. Tax credits apply not only to those who pay income tax but to those not even on the tax rolls, the poor people who do not pay taxes now, as the tax laws are presently constituted. I wonder whether the minister would respond to this question and let me know his latest thinking and philosophy in regard to a genuine tax credit.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying there was a lot more progressiveness in the tax reductions in the last three budgets than has been the case in our history. When it comes to a tax credit, particularly tax credits which really constitute payments to those who ordinarily would not pay taxes because of their income level, this is contingent upon proposals advanced by my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Where I stand, he stands; and where he stands, I stand.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would answer the questions I put to him, including why, in view of the changing circumstances, he is reluctant to make any change in his budget. It is obvious that unemployment in this country has increased immensely, as I have mentioned. Personally, I am not satisfied with the answers he has given the committee and would like him to go into a little more sophistication in explaining his reasoning, or in explaining the advice he has received from his officials. We are facing a serious recession in this country and the minister's proposals will not meet it. He will be forced to bring in a mini-budget, so why not do it now?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to respond with whatever sophistication the hon. gentleman demands of me, but I gave a simple answer in some detail to the committee a week ago yesterday when the Leader of the Opposition put questions to me, firstly about the consensus process of getting moderation in demand from all segments of the economy and, second, concerning the required stimulus necessary at this stage.

I said to him in the committee that there were two aspects that I wanted to look at very carefully. The first was the stimulus that we injected on November 18, which is beginning to take effect as of January 1 by reason of the larger payrolls reflecting the lower tax payments for the 1974 and 1975 tax years. Second, I want to see what the evolving situation is in the United States in relation to the administration and congress and what final mix will take effect. I do not disagree with what the hon. member said before lunch, but I do want to make sure that we have analysed the situation in terms of facts and forecasts. If he would be good enough to review what I said earlier, I said it all then and I really do not have too much to add now.

Mr. Hogan: The minister knows darned well that he is going to have to come back here with a mini-budget within the next month, so why not do it now? Even his forecasters can tell him how bad the economy is, and it will take six months, based on past historical recessions since the post-war period, for all the measures proposed for the United States economy to take a grip. Why wait to have them correct our situation? Admittedly, our economies are interlocked in a close way, whether we like it or not. But it should be obvious to the minister and his government, if they are sincere in saying they do not want to increase unemployment in this country or cut down price levels, that they will have to do something more significant to assist our lower income groups and help the total economy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am not disagreeing with the hon. member's remarks, but perhaps he would be good enough to read what I have said. When he does so, then on balance I do not think he will disagree with it too much. I appreciate his patience; I know the part of the country from which he comes and the problems there. Perhaps if we get this bill out of the way, we can look at any new situation as it comes. I do not accept his assumption that I will necessarily have to come in with a new budget; I have not made up my mind one way or the other as to that. But if he could use his good influence on his colleagues to get this particular measure out of the way, then we could look at any new circumstances afresh.

● (1410)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I want to lend my support to what the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has said. I believe we are in one of the most serious economic situations since the 1930s, not just in respect of the unemployment rate but in respect of the inflation rate and the economic recession. We now have some 817,000 people unemployed. Our economy is closely tied to the economy of the United States, and most economists are predicting that the unemployment rate there will soon hit an unprecedented rate of 9 per cent, 9.5 per cent or 10 per cent. If that happens in the United States, it will soon happen here. The minister shakes his head, but historically our unemployment rate has been within 1 per cent or 1.5 per cent of that in the United States.

I urge the minister to give serious consideration to increasing the tax cut. I predict that he will be coming back with a budget in the next two or three months, and if he does not increase the tax cut now I am sure that by then the unemployment statistics will go up and we will be facing an even higher inflationary rate and a worse general situation. What is needed to stimulate the economy is another $1 billion or $2 billion in the hands of the people in the low income bracket.

If these people had the money, they would spend it because they must have the necessities of life such as food and clothing. They will not save these funds, they will spend them, which in turn will stimulate the economy and productivity to the extent of a couple of billion dollars and even more, much of which will come back to all levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal in the form of additional taxes. I strongly urge the minister to seriously consider this because I think that is the right direction in which we should move.

The Chairman: Shall clause 77 carry?

[Mr. Hogan.]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could direct a question to the minister.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not know why those who have already spoken feel they must object when someone else wants to ask a question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Paproski has not said a word.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister take a few moments to answer the questions put before the lunch hour by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond? I think this is important because of the argument put forward, not just in Canada but in the United States, by many economists, not just the chief advisers to Kennedy and Johnson but some who were advisers to President Nixon a few years ago, to the effect that the $20 billion deficit President Ford is proposing is too little and too late to meet the economic difficulties now facing the United States.

Would the minister take some time to compare the situation in Canada with the situation in the United States? I suggest that in his budget proposals of last November and the amendments to the Income Tax Act with which we are now dealing, the minister is essentially proposing to meet the rapid rise in the rate of unemployment in the same way as President Ford in the United States. In the opinion of many expert economists in Canada and the United States, the minister's proposals will have the same disastrous effect in this country as President Ford's proposals and lack of action are likely to have in the United States.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 78.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it has been brought to our attention that apparently the corporation surtax as provided under section 123.2 would apply to the 10 per cent tax on corporations' mining or petroleum profits, or manufacturing and processing profits which are allocated to the Northwest Territories. This result is not the intended policy. This tax in respect of the provinces must be excluded from the surtax, but evidently we are putting a heavier burden on the territories than on the rest of the country. That, taken together with certain technical problems, prompts me to move the following amendment which has already been circulated to members of the committee:

That clause 78 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 196 and substituting the following:

'year (determined as if the expression "in a province other than the Northwest Territories or the Yukon Territory" in section 124 was read as "in all the provinces" and determined without reference to this section or section 126)"

"(ii) l'année d'imposition 1975, 28%, et»

(c) by striking out lines 13 to 15 on page 196 and substituting the following:

"profits from oil or gas wells in Canada for the year,"

(d) by striking out lines 18 and 19 on page 196 and substituting the following:

"resources in Canada for the year,"

(e) by striking out lines 33 to 38 on page 197 and substituting the following:

"taxable production profits from mineral resources in Canada for the year or taxable production profits from oil or gas wells in Canada for the year (in this section"

(f) by striking out line 45 on page 197 and substituting the following:

"case may be, 50% of its taxable income or taxable income earned in Canada, as the case may be;"

"mined under section 123, except where otherwise provided, in respect of"

(h) by striking out lines 2 to 7 on page 198 and substituting the following:

(B) its taxable income earned in Canada, minus the aggregate of its taxable production profits." '

and

(i) by striking out line 19 on page 198 and substituting the following:

"taxable production profits from oil or"

The Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 78 as amended carry?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre is concerned that we are asking questions about these clauses. The corporation surtax applies to a whole series of corporations but excludes another series including investment corporations, mortgage investment corporations, mutual fund corporations, deposit insurance corporations, and so on. I should like to ask the minister why so many in this classification are excluded. There are others, but I do not think I should take the time to read them into the record as the minister and hon. members are aware of them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The exceptions include mining and petroleum corporations which are dealt with separately, so I think there is no problem there in the hon. member's mind.

Mr. Nystrom: That is why I did not mention them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is no problem for that purpose. The exceptions also include manufacturing and processing corporations which have already received a thrust from this government on other occasions. Although the hon. gentleman may have some qualms about that, this is still not his problem. The other few he has mentioned really are flow-through corporations, or corporations which are really individuals and the tax is imposed at a personal level. We see no reason for imposing an additional tax since the tax is picked up there.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 79 agreed to.

● (1420)

On clause 80.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, previously I tabled an amendment to clause 80. That was on February 10. Now I am tabling a new amendment to this clause and I propose that we not proceed with the earlier amendment. I will give an explanation of this amendment but first I will move it. I do not think there will be too many problems because the amendment is mainly technical. I move:

That clause 80 of Bill C-49 be amended

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) are technical amendments; paragraph (e) concerns the eligibility of royalties for extra resource abatement. It is a relieving amendment at line 48, page 200, which will enable royalty income to qualify for the extra federal tax abatement. There was a mistake in the abatement clause. The purpose of the extra federal tax abatement is to recognize the special position of the provinces in relation to resources and to give them tax room to levy taxes on resources. However, if some other taxpayer operated such a resource under a royalty arrangement, the extra tax room would not apply to this royalty portion and consequently the tax room would be incomplete. The first amendment will correct this first deficiency. It is not a change in policy but just a change to cover something that we had not properly anticipated.

Paragraphs (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l) and (m) are technical amendments. Paragraphs (n), (o), (p), (q), (r), (s), (t) and (u) are all technical amendments, just correcting the language.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister a question? Does this amendment have anything to do with the differences between the minister and the provincial governments on resource taxes and, if so, has the intent of this amendment been discussed with the provinces and do they agree?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this amendment increases resource abatement, so I cannot conceive of any province, whether fundamentally it agrees or disagrees with what we are doing, objecting to the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 80 as amended carry?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Nystrom: I have one brief question. Does this clause in any way relate to the clauses that we are standing? I do not think it does, but if it does perhaps we should consider standing it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It deals with resources but really does not get down to the fundamental question of resources. I do not think the hon. gentleman would lose his bargaining position in dealing with resources by allowing this clause to pass.

Mr. Stevens: As this clause deals with mineral resources, I was wondering if the minister would comment on whether he feels there is an interrelationship between this clause and certain of the clauses that we have already stood. I think, in fairness, the understanding was that clauses 4 and 7 would be stood, as would all other clauses related to the general question of the taxation of our mineral and oil resources.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I said that it is related but it provides only the detailed rules defining taxation profits. It is not a "gusty" clause relating to policy; it is only a clause which defines the rules against which the policies apply and I do not think the committee loses any leverage by passing it.

● (1430)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, would the minister, bearing in mind that he has said it is not a particularly "gusty" clause, to use his language, have any objection to standing the clause, in view of the fact that it is interrelated with some of the clauses which we have stood?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I gather the amendment is carried.

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am getting nods from all over the committee. Do I gather the amendment is carried?

The Chairman: Order, please. Is it agreed that clause 80 as amended be stood?

Clause stood.

Clauses 81 and 82 agreed to.

On clause 83.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question on clause 81. I am sure the minister has the answer at his fingertips.

An hon. Member: It has been carried.

Mr. Stevens: If hon. members wish to play it that way, all right.

The Chairman: Order, please. We have adopted clause 81 and 82, and procedurally the hon. member must seek the consent of the committee to revert to a clause already agreed to. Would the committee object to the hon. member asking a question on clause 81?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I thank hon. members for their accommodation. Could the minister give us any estimate as to the number of companies within this clause which are benefiting at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will undertake to get the information for the hon. gentleman.

The Chairman: We will now return to clause 83.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have a short, technical amendment which I have circulated to the committee. I move:

That clause 83 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 2 and 3 on page 210 and substituting the following:

'of the said act following subparagraph

(i) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I assume this clause is just allowing interest receipts from credit unions and dividends to be classed as interest and qualified for inclusion under the $1,000; is that correct? Second, I would like to know why members will be treated in classes. What is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not the purpose of this amendment, but the answer to the hon. member's question is yes, interest paid by credit unions to their members is exempt under that first $1,000 of interest income, but this is not the amendment which does it.

Mr. Benjamin: Subclause (2) states that the members will be treated in classes according to the interest rate charged on their borrowings. I am not clear why it is done that way.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Subclause (2) is a technical amendment which will allow credit unions to deduct from their income interest rebates credited to their own members which are calculated at a rate in relation to the rate of interest on each individual borrowing transaction conducted by the member. Many credit unions are paying interest rebates at a rate in relation to the rate of interest paid. To calculate their own interest rate they rebate to their members on the basis of the interest rate they have to pay themselves. For example, all members who have borrowed money at the rate of 9 per cent may receive a rebate of one-half per cent, and those with loans at 12 per cent may receive a rebate of 1 per cent under the rules of the credit union. Questions have arisen as to whether the present rules enable a credit union to deduct interest rate rebates calculated in relation to the rate of interest paid. This amendment will ensure that deduction of such interest rates is permitted. It was asked for by the Credit Union Association, and this is what we are doing.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, clause 92(3)(b)(i) reads:

—it derived all or substantially all of its revenues from—

Then it lists various things, and paragraph (ii) provides:

—all or substantially all of the members thereof—

Could the minister explain why the rather nebulous term "substantially all" is used? Could a more precise percentage not be used in order to identify, for people dealing with this section, exactly what the department has in mind?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Department of National Revenue has to estimate whether primarily or substantially all revenues are derived from legitimate sources, that is, sources that qualify under the act. The current act requires that the credit union derive its revenues—"primarily" is the word in the current act—from listed categories of income. The hon. gentleman knows that credit unions normally derive their revenues from a variety of sources, and some from other than those listed in the act. Some of them are even deriving more than half of their revenues from some unlisted sources and therefore do not qualify under the current definition.

The amendment which will be effective for the 1972 and subsequent taxation years will replace the word "primarily" with the words "substantially all". I am advised by the Department of Justice that this is a more inclusive term, and since more sources of income will be inserted all existing credit unions will qualify. Again, this was pointed out to us by the credit unions and we are glad to oblige.

Mr. Stevens: If the term "substantially all" is wider than the term now used, can the minister give us some idea what it means? In clear, everyday language what does the department mean by "substantially all"? Are they talking about 51 per cent or more?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, "primarily" would mean a majority of the revenue; "substantially all" means virtually everything. What it really means is that the new, qualifying categories of income will include, first, revenues from securities or loans of or guaranteed by the Government of Canada or the provinces, a Canadian municipality or agency thereof. I might say that the current act restricts this provision to bonds while excluding those of or guaranteed by government agencies. The provision is to allow the credit union more latitude.

Second, the new category would include revenues from funds or deposits with a bank, a trust company or a central credit union and, third, revenues from charges, fees and dues levied against its members. I think the credit union movement will be given more flexibility under this provision.

Mr. Stevens: What we are saying is that under the present wording the department's interpretation of "primarily all" could have meant something over 50 per cent, whereas now we are coming closer to 100 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so, but we are also broadening the class.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister give an indication of the departments's estimate of the total tax benefit to credit unions as a result of the tax accommodation offered to them?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is pretty hard to estimate. It depends how well they do in competition with other financial institutions. This puts them in a better competitive position.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps the minister misunderstood. I am simply referring to the past year, or whatever year he has a relative figure for. Has there ever been an estimate of the tax advantage offered to credit unions as a result of this and similar provisions in the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I must ask, compared to what? It depends on the basis. We could ascertain for the hon. gentleman just what credit unions pay in taxes. The purpose of this amendment is not revenue or loss of revenue; it is to put credit unions in a position to compete with other financial institutions.

Mr. Stevens: The minister asks, compared to what? I mean, compared to how they would be taxed if they were a standard business corporation having to meet the general tax laws that prevail.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because this changes the competition for and the eligibility of funds available to credit unions under the provisions of the law, the answer depends upon how effective credit unions are in taking advantage of it to compete with other institutions. I could not give a solid answer to that question.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps we are not communicating properly. I am asking, not in particular reference to this amendment but as a general point of information, if the government has any estimate of the tax concession being given to credit unions as a result of the lenient tax provision in the Income Tax Act. What would the tax concession be if they were required to pay the same type of taxes as most business corporations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we do not have the figures for the current year; the latest years we have for credit union income are 1971-72. The hon. gentleman would have to attach a 50 per cent rate against that and then allocate income sources and make the calculation. We could try to do that for him, but we do not have it at our fingertips.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister agree to give those figures to the committee?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would agree to do that. I do not know whether I can do it in time to satisfy the committee, but on a later occasion I will do it. This is not a revenue amendment; it is to allow credit unions to compete with other financial institutions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have another technical amendment in order to correlate the two versions. I move:

That clause 98 of the French version of Bill C-49 be amended by striking out lines 8 to 16 on page 228 and substituting the following:

"régime de participation des employés aux bénéfices

● (1450)

On clause 99.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, clause 99 deals with registered retirement savings plans. Has the Department of Finance accumulated statistics on how many people take advantage of registered retirement savings plans and what type of people they are, in terms of income? I am a little concerned about providing a tax loophole for someone who has wealth. Registered retirement savings plans can be written off up to a maximum of $4,000 a year. As hon. members know, most Canadians cannot afford to do that. Members of parliament can write off Canada Pension Plan contributions and parliamentary pension plan contributions which amount to $1,440 this year. They can also invest up to $4,000 in a registered retirement savings plan and write that off. If you total that, it comes to approximately $5,500. Have statistics been compiled with regard to the people who take advantage of these plans, their income brackets, and so on?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we can get the hon. member some totals. I do not know whether we can get for him the income classes affected. The statistics came in by computer a little late on election night.

Mr. Nystrom: Election night?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member's riding result was conclusive too early. I now have an answer for the hon. member for York-Simcoe. There were 92,886 corporations claiming the small business deduction in 1972, the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the minister explain the purpose of permitting such a high amount to be invested in registered retirement savings plans and used when computing income tax? The limit of $4,000 can only be used by those in the high income bracket. These people would be in the 40 to 50 per cent tax bracket. They are already among the wealthiest people in Canada. These people enjoy the highest standard of living of anybody in this country, yet if I understand this correctly they are permitted to invest up to $4,000 in a retirement plan and not pay any income tax on that amount.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a calculated risk.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member says it is a calculated risk. However, we are talking about people with an income which permits them to afford the risk. If these people were not permitted to deduct this large amount from their income tax, according to my rough calculations they would pay between $1,200 and $2,000 a year. The mass of the Canadian people, the millions who pay no income tax, as well as those in the lower income tax bracket, have no opportunity to make a deduction as a result of this clause. If they do belong to a pension plan of some kind, the contribution is so small that the deduction they are permitted might not amount to more than $100.

This is just one more illustration of the way our tax system operates. In fact, we are not moving any closer to a more equitable society than we have in the past. Without again putting the precise figures on record, the figures which we get each year from Statistics Canada clearly indicate that the percentage of the gross national product which goes to the bottom one-fifth of the income earners of this country has not increased for a quarter of a century. Speaking from memory, the bottom one-fifth of the income earners in this country get something in the neighbourhood of 4 per cent of the gross national product, while the top one-fifth get close to ten times that amount.

The reason for this is our income tax laws. With the kind of Minister of Finance we have, they are constantly being changed. I do not say this is the purpose of this minister and I do not want to impute motives or say he is doing it deliberately; however, the end result of what this Minister of Finance and his predecessors have done is to increase the disparity between the haves and the have-nots in this country. Will the minister explain why he is making this figure so high?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not change the figure. Aside from a few technical amendments, all it does is allow the husband or wife who is the income earning spouse to transfer his or her eligibility to a fund for that spouse. It does not change the income limit at all. The limit is still $4,000.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the minister explain why we have the high figure of $4,000? I am sorry that I do not have the details with me, but I can get them and discuss this matter with the minister later. However, I have been told that a husband who is the income earner could borrow from a bank in December, 1974, for example, put the money into a registered retirement savings plan in the name of his wife, get the tax credit for that, and in 1975 pay back the money, dissolve the plan and still have the tax benefit. I am not sure if I have explained this correctly. Has the attention of the minister or his department been drawn to the type of possibility I have just raised?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the figure of $4,000 was set as a tax reform when the House passed the bill effective January 4, 1972. As I recall from listening to my predecessor, Mr. Benson, you have the deductible pension plans, $2,500 maximum by the employer and $2,500 maximum by the employee, for a total of $5,000. On a registered retirement savings plan for an individual, we put it somewhat below that, at $4,000. There was a correlation. Of course, because of the erosion of the dollar since then, the effective amount of the tax reform has been minimized. In so far as abuse is concerned, we watch that very closely indeed. If there is any abuse of the registered retirement savings plan, we will close the loopholes. We are conscious of that.

Income Tax

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the minister just to check one point.

I should like to know whether, considering the erosion of the dollar the minister mentioned two minutes ago, there is a possibility that this amount of $4,000 might be increased to $5,000?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You know, Mr. Chairman, indexing may be a contagious concept, but it is not that contagious. Only some exemptions have been indexed, such as the old age security pensions. For the time being, I believe Parliament is willing to fix the amount from time to time through specific amendments brought before the House.

Mr. Dupras: I thank the minister for his explanation.

[English]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Some hon. Members: Leader! Leader!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I should like to address a question to the minister. A number of those who wish to contribute to an RRSP will do so by mail and the deadline for taking advantage of the tax benefits for 1974 is February 28. Because of present postal uncertainties it is doubtful whether some applicants will be able to take advantage of the plan. Would the minister consider extending the deadline so that mail distribution problems will not prevent taxpayers from taking advantage of this concession?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): When the hon. lady refers to mail distribution problems I trust she is spelling the first word "m-a-i-l". I wish to assure her that the welcome we gave her on this side was not an example of patronizing chauvinism. It was to equalize the welcome we gave this morning to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Nowlan: Your turn is coming, John.

An hon. Member: Let's give a cheer for the leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to say to the committee I probably deserved that! I might tell the hon. member for Annapolis Valley that I shall be in his riding in a few weeks and that I shall have a few things to say about him when I get there. As to the question which was directed to me, I shall take up the matter with my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. I think the hon. lady has a point.

Mr. Stevens: I have a question dealing with the Registered Retirement Savings Plan. The minister has undoubtedly received letters from those who are experiencing frustration over the circumstances they encounter when they are called upon to take out annuities. A person pays in for a number of years. Then, as he approaches the age of 71, he must shop around to find an insurance company to arrange for the annuity he will draw for the remainder of his life. Some of the people affected are now finding that the annuity is much less than they had anticipated. But they must either withdraw the money and pay the full tax on it or, alternatively, leave it in the hands of an insurance company which, they believe, is unwilling to pay them an equitable annuity.

An Ontario taxpayer raised this question with the minister in a letter written, I believe, on January 24. He says the government of Canada passed a law some years ago under which a worker was allowed to put aside from his earnings a stipulated amount in a retirement savings plan, tax on which was deferred. The writer of the letter went to say that he thought this was a useful proposition, acted accordingly, and has accumulated $12,000. But here is where the plan went sour. He says:

> I have to put it into an annuity before I am 71, next May 3, 1975. I have called for bids from insurance companies and the best bid I got was $128 a month guaranteed for ten years, or, if I live longer than 81, until death. I will draw a total of $1,544 a year. By putting $12,000 in debentures at the going rate I could draw $1,290 a year and still the $12,000 would be intact for any emergency such as prolonged sickness.
> I am told my $12,000 would double itself in less than eight years and I would have to live to be 130 to use up all the $12,000 at the going rate of interest. If I draw the money out and invest it in debentures I will have to pay income tax on the $12,000 in one year. The insurance company knows this; that is where the rip-off is. If trust companies could compete the story would be different because of competition.

This man goes on to say he is at a loss to know what to do. May I ask the minister whether he has received complaints of this type and whether he has any advice to give to people in this situation? Has the department considered authorizing some program by which a taxpayer on retirement could obtain the full benefit of the money put aside and not be obliged to go into what he might consider to be an inequitable annuity scheme?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A retirement savings plan is really related to a pension plan. Since the contributions are deductible the capital amount is taxable, when taken out in a lump sum. The taxpayer can either withdraw it in a lump sum, or he can turn it into an annuity in which case he is only taxable on the annuity receipts. Unless we were to look at the entire pension field we would have to leave RRSPs as they are. We are fully aware of the situation to which the hon. member has referred, and we have received a good deal of correspondence to the same effect as the letter he quoted.

Mr. Stevens: Would it not be possible to allow a person caught in this situation to set up a trust with an appropriate trust company, and operate a self-administered plan under which the money would remain intact while the individual got the benefit of realistic interest rates?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The concept of a self-administered fund differs, of course, from the concept of a pension fund. That is where we would find ourselves in trouble from an administrative point of view. Without minimizing the situation to which the hon. member has referred, I say again that I cannot cure it unless we look at the whole of the pension field.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): The problem here is one of interest rates. The law requires these Canadians to wind up their plans by the time they reach the age of 71, and since they are effectively precluded from taking advantage of the higher interest rates available I think it is proper to ask that consideration be given to changing this rule. I suggest this could be handled in much the same way as securities are held under the present rules governing Registered Retirement Savings Plans; securities are held by trustees and are not accessible to the individual.

My question to the minister is this: why does he see such a difficulty in having a continuing trustee administer a plan after the age of 71 when all that the taxpayer wants in these instances is income paid out, and the income would be equal to, or in some cases greater than, the income available to him from an annuity?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the difficulty which the hon. gentleman reflects is that the RRSP has become, in a lot of people's minds, a private savings plan. It was originally conceived as a pension plan which, instead of being funded jointly by employer and employee, was funded primarily by an individual, though it was oriented toward the pension concept. If we were to revise it, we would have to look at a whole new set of concepts; that is our difficulty. We have really put the plan on the books now as a unilateral pension plan.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Perhaps I could ask a final question, Mr. Chairman. Does the minister see it in the same way as I and some taxpayers do, and that is that the government, under the present rules, is giving a benefit to the issuers of these annuities and is penalizing the very people whom it sought to serve in the first place by establishing these plans?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that depends on the interest rates of the day. We will be reviewing the whole pension field, including interest rates and the effect they have on annuities.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise only for a minute. I hope the minister will not say that I am asking him to do something that he has already agreed to do, and that I do not need to repeat my request. In view of what he has just said, I press the point about asking for a review of the position of the pension plan of the International Typographical Union in so far as it affects Canadians who are members of that union.

What prompts me to get to my feet is the minister's statement a moment ago that registered retirement savings plans are, in effect, unilateral plans. The International Typographical Union has that type of plan. Members who are working put money into a fund out of which pensions are paid to those who are retired. There is no employer or anybody else matching the contributions. It seems to me to be unfair that the contributions to that plan are questioned in terms of their deductibility. I thanked the minister the other day for his assurance that he would look into that matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I reiterate it. One of the happiest things that has ever happened to that union is that somehow the hon. gentleman put his thumb in some printer's ink.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 100.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I put before the committee the amendment that was circulated to clause 100, which is on pages 243 and 244. I want to correct a typographical error in paragraph (a) and to segregate the registered home ownership savings plan from the educational savings plan. Therefore I move:

That clause 100 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out line 15 on page 243 and substituting the following:

"or capital losses other than from the disposition of"

and

(b) by striking out lines 20 to 23 on page 244 and substituting the following:

"and subsequent taxation years."

(3) Section 146.2 of the said Act as enacted by this section is applicable to the 1974 and subsequent taxation years except that in its application to the 1974 taxation year the references therein to "60 days" shall be read as "90 days" and where a contribution is made to a registered home ownership savings plan before April 1, 1975, the plan shall be deemed to have been registered on January 1, 1975 and the contribution shall be deemed to have been made on that date."

This extends the registered home ownership savings plan qualifying date to April 1, 1975, and I will ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to see what he can do with the RRSP's.

Mr. Paproski: I have one question, Mr. Chairman. In the French text there is reference to 90 days—"90 jours"—whereas in the English text it says 60 days. What is the reason for that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is not doubt, Mr. Chairman, that bilingualism has its advantages. The hon. member is right. It should read quatre-vingts-dix jours en français, as well as "90 days" in the English version. I think the hon. gentleman has displayed a facility that should get him into the leadership battle over there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the Minister of Finance made reference to my previous involvement with printer's ink. I was a little surprised that so soon after that he referred to this amendment as correcting a typographical error. I do not see any typographical error there. It is a technical error.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct some questions to the minister regarding RHOSP and to ask for some clarification of the plan itself. I think it has raised a number of questions in the minds of people who would like to take advantage of it.

First of all I should ask how many people living in rented accommodation with their families and who hope to purchase a home—the situation in which many potential home buyers find themselves—will in fact be able to save $1,000 a year so as to take advantage of this plan. The program seems to offer a number of tax advantages to people already in the higher income tax brackets but does little to improve the position of low income families seeking accommodation. For example, as I understand the bill, a house now held in joint ownership could be transferred to registration solely in, say, the wife's name. The husband could then set up a registered home ownership savings plan in his own name, save up to $10,000 which is tax exempt over a ten year period, and then proceed to buy the house from his wife. She at that point could establish a RHOS plan of her own to buy furnishings or a new house.

In effect this couple has had the advantage of a $20,000 tax saving, perhaps without any house even coming on the market or having actually exchanged hands. If that is the intent of the bill, or if the bill does permit this to take place, it would seem that it militates against those who are not in this preferred financial position at the outset. Would the minister comment on whether or not this is possible?

● (1520)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have tried to make this incentive for accommodation as generous as possible, particularly for young couples who have not previously owned a home, and what the hon. member suggests is potentially possible. We have treated husbands and wives as separate people under this legislation, giving the same incentive to the wife as to the husband by treating each spouse equally in allowing transferability, if necessary, between them, and also recognizing that if each spouse works, or is in the labour market, the $1,000 a year maximum applies to each for a total of $2,000. In other words, in terms of equality of status we have reflected it in this particular piece of legislation.

Depending on the income level, it may be that people will be able to deduct up to $200, $250 or $500. This all depends on the income level, a couple's savings plans and priorities. This is a new and revolutionary concept and we will have some teething troubles. We will be watching it very carefully, but we have leaned on the side of generosity to ensure that young people are induced to save for their own accommodation.

Having regard to those who have not got that income potential, my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, supported by the Department of Finance, has been given an expanded budget for assistance to home ownership plans, for multi-unit housing, both rental and ownership, and higher leverage incentives to the private sector. We are dealing with both areas at the same time. What we really want to do with this particular measure is help those with income potential by giving them the means, added to by the taxation system, to provide for their own accommodation, or furnishings for their accommodation.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I thank the minister for his explanation, but I am still not at all sure that the people who are in the greatest need of housing will benefit from either plan. Nevertheless, I should like to ask the minister if he would clarify for us more extensively what he intends to include as furnishings. This could very well become a bone of contention if it is not spelled out very precisely. As I understand it, furnishings are to be listed in the regulations, and I am wondering if the items listed will be narrowly defined. Perhaps the minister would give us some idea of the sort of things he has in mind.

When the minister refers to furnishings we realize that he obviously intends that to apply to furniture, carpets, drapes and so on, but does it include such things as linens, dishes, appliances and pianos? Does the minister intend to define this in some meaningful way so that it is perfectly understood what items can be clarified as furnishings for the purpose of the plan?

I would like to go further than that by asking him if he intends to allow items which in some cases might be classified as repairs? For instance, will this plan cover the purchase of a new furnace for an existing home, and will it cover insulation, new wiring and new plumbing? It would seem to me that there is a real need to include these items in the plan. I would suggest that many young couples start out by buying a modest dwelling as a first home, perhaps even an existing dwelling that may need repairs. Would the minister provide some clarification as to whether this kind of repair or renovation will be allowed, because in many cases this could be classified as furnishings. Are these to be included under RHOSP?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The simple answer to the last part of the question is no, this is not a renovation or repair plan, but a plan to encourage people who have not owned a home to buy or furnish a new home. As to the definition of furnishings, this will be defined by regulation and will include such things as furniture, household appliances, curtains and drapes. I doubt very much if it will cover the utensil field.

These regulations will be published and deposited under the Statutory Instruments Act. They will be available to hon. members at the standing committee which reviews that act. If the hon. member finds that the list is not extensive enough under the definition of furnishings she will have an opportunity to challenge it at that time. I am trying to give her the thrust of the plan, which is really to encourage the purchase of new homes, and furnishings have been put in as an ancillary item. Furnishings will include the major permanent items in a home, but will not go as far as to include utensils.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): As I read this clause of the bill I understand it to apply to purchasers of existing dwellings as well as new homes, but the minister has just referred to new homes. Am I correct in that?

An hon. Member: He said it twice.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. lady is correct. It is the first purchase of a home, not necessarily a new construction.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It could be the first purchase of a new home?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In reply to the hon. member for Hamilton West, if I did own a home and I wanted to move to Hamilton and purchase his home and it was for the first time, I would be eligible for the RHOSP.

Mr. Alexander: You couldn't afford it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, I really could not afford to buy the hon. gentleman's home.

Mr. Alexander: You are quite right.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Chairman, I realize that I am interrupting my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, but on this very narrow point I heard the minister say is was for the first purchase of a home, but the way I read this legislation it restricts it to one who does not now own a home. He could have previously owned two or three homes, however. Would the minister clarify that point?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It does not necessarily have to be the first home you have ever owned, but you cannot own a home now if you are going to take advantage of it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Then don't move to Hamilton.

An hon. Member: Why don't you move to Ottawa?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps later if I get the opportunity I should like to deal generally with this Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, RHOSP, or whatever it is called. For the moment I have a narrow point I should like to raise in relation to the answer the minister has just given to questions posed by my colleagues to the right.

Supposing a person owns a home and decides to convey it to a private company, which perhaps he incorporates himself, so that he is no longer the owner, and in the meantime rents the property from that private ownership, and then decides to buy a new home under this savings plan—could he get away with that, or would the fact that he had owned the house before preclude him?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know whether the hon. member is still in practice, but all we are talking about is $1,000 exemption. If the hon. member were to play that game by transferring his home to a corporation he might be successful in that game to the extent of the $1,000 a year, but he would lose his principal residence exemption for the tax-free disposition of the home. I really doubt that he would want to move that way.

Mr. Brewin: I would like the minister to answer my question. I think the answer is yes, but my friend says that if I were in practice I might know of some way of getting away with that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not what I said.

● (1530)

Mr. Brewin: I do not happen ever to practise in that particular way, but I still want to know whether, so far as this tax is concerned, he qualifies if he has disposed of it to a corporation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What you need is a lawyer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What the hon. member says is possible, but he would lose his principal residence exemption for capital gains. I doubt whether it would be worthwhile for him.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of additional points I would like to raise with the minister. Some confusion has been created in this bill as to who would be able to administer the RHOSP. The interpretation of the bill would indicate that these plans would only operate through trust companies, whereas the minister's statements would seem to indicate that it was the intention of the government to have the plans operate through banks or other financial institutions in the same way that registered retirement savings plans do. The minister has indicated through the press earlier that he hopes that the trust companies would come to an arrangement on this with the banks. Could the minister tell the House now whether any satisfactory arrangement has been reached?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, first of all RHOSP can only be administered by a life insurance company or a trust company. Under RHOSP, banks operate on the same basis with trust companies. The difficulty as between RISP and RHOSP is that the fiduciary relationship is far stronger under the RHOSP. As to the RISP, all a trust company or an insurance company has to do is to take the money, invest it, and return it at the termination of the period at age 71 to the depositor, either in the form of a lump sum or converted into an annuity.

But the trust relationship or fiduciary relationship under RHOSP is far more specific. The money can only be paid out for deductible purposes for the purchase of a home if the depositor does not currently own a home, or for purposes of furnishing a home. Therefore the fiduciary relationship is far more clear-cut. For that reason we have provided in the legislation that the vehicle for the fund be a licensed trustee under the provincial legislation. Whatever arrangement those trustees want to make, whether they are caisses populaires, which are registered for trustee purposes under the provincial legislation, or whatever the fiduciary relationship is, it is up to that fiduciary agency to supply its own delegation and enforcement of the trust; We are concerned that, from the taxpayer's point of view, those be not abused.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I appreciate what the minister has had to say, but the question I had was based on the press report in the Globe and Mail of February 11 which said that the Minister of Finance had asked trust companies to review their decision not to act as trustees for RHOSPs being offered by the chartered banks. It went on to say:

In an interview, Mr. Turner said he hopes to have RHOSPs offered as widely as possible and has asked his officials to communicate this to the Trust Companies Association of Canada.

Then it went on to say that the minister replied: "I'll see how they react". I am asking if the minister has had a reaction, and what that has been?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, my assistant deputy minister, who has been good enough to accompany me here in the House, has had conversations with the Trust Companies Association of Canada. They have told him that while the trust industry is confident of its ability to market the plan, its members are willing to enter into agency arrangements with other financial institutions now in RRSP business that now have customers interested in participating. Such arrangements would have to be worked out on an individual basis and might include agreements to deposit funds. Trust companies hope to co-operate with the purpose of this legislation, and we have that undertaking from them.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): There is another point I would like to raise with the minister. In proposed section 146.2(1)(e) on page 237 of this Bill "owner-occupied home" is defined as "a housing unit or a share of the capital stock of a co-operative housing corporation" etc. I wonder if the minister would clarify whether a mobile home would be included under this definition because, as he must be aware, many families who cannot afford housing of any other kind at current prices are turning to large, fixed, mobile homes for shelter. If this plan is to be of benefit to low income earners, it should undoubtedly apply to the purchase of a mobile home. Will the minister clarify whether mobile homes are subsumed under the definition of "owner-occupied home" in this bill?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is right, they are.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): There is one final question I would like to put to the minister. I am concerned about the fact that while an individual can make a provision for his or her RHOSP saving to be paid to the spouse in the event of death, as I interpret the bill, he or she cannot designate children as beneficiaries. This seems to be a clear and unnecessary discrimination against widows, widowers, and single parent families.

I would point out that at the moment there are some 600,000 single parent families in Canada. If a single parent has been saving under this sort of plan for a number of years, but dies before he can take advantage of it, it seems only fair to allow that individual to pass the benefits on to his or her children. Would the minister take this opportunity to clarify what ability an individual will have to pass the money saved under this program on to his children on the event of his death, and will he consider making it possible for children to be included as possible beneficiaries on the same terms accorded a spouse under clause 2(c)(i) and clause 2(b)?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not in his lifetime because the deductibility comes from the taxpayer, and it is the taxpayer who has to purchase the home. But if, before the home is purchased and the fund is built up, the taxpayer dies, then the proceeds are transmitted to the estate. There is no problem, but the taxable deduction cannot be transferred.

Mr. Alexander: I have a couple of questions, Mr. Chairman, and I want to clarify some points found within the minister's press release. It is indicated here that the contributor must be a Canadian resident. I would like amplification of that in terms of residency. I do not know where I got this press release, but it indicates several of the criteria which have to be met. It says that only one plan may be established in a lifetime. I was wondering how the department would check on this, how will it be able to determine whether it is one plan in a lifetime?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer to the hon. member's two questions are, first, yes, it is a once in a lifetime plan. It can only be used once by the same taxpayer. Second, Canadian residency would be defined according to the general definition of residency in the Income Tax Act. Of course the difficulty of administering that lies with my friend, the Minister of National Revenue, who will have to enforce it.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Chairman, I was delighted when this plan was brought forward by the minister, particularly since almost exactly two years ago in my maiden speech in the House I brought to the attention of the minister the plight of young married people who were both working and paying taxes at the highest possible rates, at a time when they were struggling to set up a home and establish themselves. I thought when I first heard the minister announce his plan that he might have been listening that day and that something was going to happen to help these very young people I was talking about.

However, after examination and hearing the questions today and the minister's answers, I think I am correct in my assumption that this plan will not help the very people I was talking about and the very people I thought the minister and his government were planning to help. I say that because the only people who will be able to benefit under this plan are those who can set aside $1,000 or $2,000 or, in fact, any dollars from their incomes in order to take advantage of this plan.

We thought maybe the proposal would help the construction industry by allowing it to build new houses, first time homes. Now it has been revealed that the taxpayer is not required to buy a new house, and the taxpayer may have owned any number of houses before he registers his home ownership savings plan. I suggest to the minister that his plan seems to offer assistance to the wealthy, and any old millionnaire who may have owned umpteen houses in his lifetime and presently lives in an apartment building can take advantage of this plan. I want to know if that is what the government planned to do.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the question was a very important one. Perhaps the minister would like it repeated.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have no comment on that, but I can hardly conceive of an old millionnaire living in an apartment in Shaughnessy Heights using this gimmick to get back into a house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Chairman, I only used the millionnaire as a ludicrous example. Let us use as an example one of the deputy ministers in the minister's government.

Mr. Fairweather: Lots of millionnaires there.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): One would have to be, at least in the office of the Prime Minister, in order to have enough money left over. The point is that the plan is available to any person who has owned any number of houses in the past. It has been illustrated by a question but by my hon. colleague from Kingston and the Islands that trading between spouses can go on, so that two spouses can take advantage of this plan. A wealthy person of whatever residence—not all wealthy people live in Shaughnessy; some live in Westmount—can take advantage of this plan. I do not think that is what the government intended, and I am asking the minister if his plan was intended to benefit these people or if it was a plan to benefit the young people of the country who are struggling to obtain a house?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Primarily the young people, Mr. Chairman. It would be virtually impossible to administer if we were to insist that the taxpayer had never owned a home. We have a voluntary assessment situation. One can check whether the taxpayer at the moment does or does not have a house. To check every taxpayer as to whether he ever owned a house would make the assessment and the administration of this proposal virtually impossible.

My second response to the hon. gentleman is that people really do not organize their affairs in order to move in and out of houses, particularly at the income range the hon. gentleman was describing, to take advantage of this type of exemption, which is really of primary interest only to young people who need it when building up a family.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, it is a rather happy coincidence that we are discussing this particular section of the Income Tax Act at this time in view of the serious housing crisis in Canada, and I am just going to remind the minister of his budget speech of November 18 where he pointed out the seriousness of the housing situation. He then set forth the registered home savings plan, and said:

> . . . this plan will provide an important new source of mortgage funds to finance the construction of the new housing we require in this country.

I am going to remind the Minister of Finance that the Minister of State in charge of housing has indicated that we need 210,000 homes as a target for 1975, and at this stage CMHC has just issued a statement with regard to the January starts, which says:

> Housing starts during January were at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 175,700 for all areas according to preliminary figures released today by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. These figures compare with the rate of 177,500 in December, 174,600 in November, and 177,300 in October.

I hope that the Minister of Finance realizes that there is a downward trend and that we are not even coming close to reaching the target of 210,000. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs in his speech on February 3 to the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada said that we must look at the situation squarely; that we do have a serious challenge to meet; that we have to get this industry moving again; and that we must produce 210,000 new starts this year just to meet growing need and to prevent conditions from becoming worse.

He also indicated in that speech that some private forecasters were saying that housing starts could drop as low as 172,000 in 1975, and he indicated that at the end of January we were achieving in the area of about 170,000 to 175,000 housing starts. This raises a very serious question with regard to the approach of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with regard to some of the gimmicks they are using to increase housing starts in Canada and to alleviate the serious housing situation. I am inclined to think that this gimmick with regard to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan is really a joke to attract rich people across the country and to give them substantial tax savings.

I would like to ask the minister in what way will we increase mortgage moneys with regard to the housing problem. I do not think that the problem at this stage is a shortage of mortgage moneys. I think the real problem is a shortage of housing starts and tremendously high rents and interest rates. I would like to ask the minister just how his proposal helps to reduce the cost of housing across the country. This measure really helps the rich because a couple from a moderate income family at best can save about $200, and on a saving of $200 the tax saving will be about $40 to $50. But someone in the upper income group can save $1,000, and the tax saving will be between $400 and $500.

I am going to draw a comparison between this program and the registered retirement savings plan. In 1972 83 per cent of those who made contributions to registered retirement savings plans had incomes over $10,000, and 60 per cent earned over $15,000. In the province of Manitoba 11 per cent of those earning between $9,000 and $9,999 contributed to a registered retirement savings plan, while 48 per cent of those earning between $20,000 and $25,000 contributed. The simple reason is that there is a greater opportunity for middle and upper income people to save, and it is a greater opportunity for tax savings.

This gimmick should be exposed for what it is worth, because it is really worth very little to moderate and low income people. But it certainly helps middle and upper income people. I think that the minister should be required to answer just how this affects the mortgage supply when the moneys are probably in the bank now. Banks and trust companies are using those moneys, so how does that increase the supply or decrease the price of housing?

● (1550)

This morning I asked the Minister of Finance some questions about the housing situation in Ontario. The minister of housing for that province has indicated that drastic cuts in federal housing programs will directly affect senior citizens and public housing starts in the province. In an article in this morning's Globe and Mail the Ontario housing minister is quoted as saying:

> Funds for public housing are down in Ottawa's allocations from $78 million to $50.4 million. Co-operative housing groups building rental accommodation will receive $55.8 million in federal mortgages, down from $65 million last year—although for ownership units such groups will receive $15.9 million, up from $10 million last year.
> And the federal government will cut the money available for land assembly and development to $35 million from $55 million.

The programs of the federal government are having an adverse effect on public housing, co-operative housing and land assembly, and the minister attempts to bring forth this registered home savings plan as a cure-all for the housing crisis in Canada. I heard him say that this is going to be a revolutionary step, but instead it is only one of the gimmicks in his grab bag of tricks. I always considered the Minister of Finance to be a blue Liberal, but he is becoming a red one. Mr. Chairman, this is a poor way to become a red Liberal. Thank goodness he is not NDP because we certainly would not bring forth a program like this to solve the housing crisis.

When housing starts drop from a projected 210,000 down to 170,000 in November, December and January, the government should be taking steps to correct the situation. Surely the minister cannot claim that this measure will increase the flow of money into the mortgage field, cut the decline in housing starts, and decrease the cost of money? I should like him to explain how the program will effect an increase in starts and how it could decrease the price of housing.

The minister tried to avoid this question this morning when I indicated to him the serious drops in land assembly, co-operative housing and public housing in Ontario. The minister helps to frame the budget of CMHC and helps to allocate the distribution of those moneys, but this morning he was not aware of the serious drops in the three groups I have named. Somebody has to accept responsibility, and if it is not the Minister of State for Urban Affairs then it must be the Minister of Finance. I should like him to tell us how this measure is going to help mortgage funds, increase starts and bring down the cost of housing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, on several occasions the hon. gentleman has heard the initiatives of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs enunciated. When we get this bill under way we will get into the AHOP legislation and some of the other leverage legislation which will allow the private market to get in here. This will help the housing market in two ways. It is not a cure-all, and we never said it was. This is one measure particularly to help young people to save for their own accommodation. By doing that it converts some consumption into savings. It helps the demand for housing, which is slack at the moment, and the funds channelled into this plan will undoubtedly be invested in the mortgage market thus providing more funds for mortgages and having a beneficial effect on interest rates.

Mr. Gilbert: Can the minister tell the House what assurance he has that moneys directed into the registered home savings plan will be used for mortgage moneys? I do not see any such assurance in the legislation, and I believe that the banks and trust companies are going to direct the moneys into those investments that bring the highest return. They are surely not going to direct them into the Assisted Home Ownership Plan.

What will be accumulated in the first and second years is so small that it is hardly worth worrying about, Mr. Chairman. Surely the best approach would be to get the banks, trust companies and insurance companies to direct a percentage of their portfolios into housing. Then the government could specialize in social housing, public housing, co-operative housing and land assembly instead of taking the measures it is taking at the moment which harm these important fields.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what we feel will happen with the increase in mortgage lending by the banks, insurance companies and the trust companies. And by the way the trust companies have indicated that funds from this source will be invested primarily in the mortgage market, attracted by the higher interest rates and subsidies under the AHOP plan to reduce them to concessional rates for those in need of assisted home ownership. The hon. gentleman should recall that the private market in mortgages has gone from $2 billion to $6 billion in four years. I want to assure him that this might work even better than he hopes, and we will have that money for social housing.

There have been discussions, Mr. Chairman, among the parties, and since we are close to four o'clock and the enterprising bill of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth might not take too much time, if he concludes—

Mr. Fairweather: Is the bill or the hon. member enterprising?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Everything the hon. member touches has a certain touch!

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps if we conclude the private members' hour early the House would agree to revert to clause by clause consideration of this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it is correct that there have been discussions along those lines. We would be prepared to come back into committee of the whole and work like beavers on this bill with one proviso, that is, that we would not this day return to any of the clauses that were stood, the ones dealing with resource taxation and so on.

Mr. Baldwin: We feel the same way, Mr. Chairman. After the Minister of Finance sees how rapid progress is made, he may be persuaded to move this bill along rapidly too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am all for that.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

● (1600)

Is it agreed that all bills preceding Bill C-373 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

SOVEREIGNTY SYMBOL

MEASURE TO GIVE RECOGNITION TO THE BEAVER AS SYMBOL OF CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth) moved that Bill C-373, to provide for the recognition of the Beaver (Castor canadensis) as a symbol of the sovereignty of the Dominion of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, my first words in support of Bill C-373 must be those of appreciation to hon. members in all parts of this House who have kindly given the necessary unanimous consent for its presentation at this time.

In asking that it be called for debate I hope to indicate my sense of concern that we quickly correct an oversight of history by recognizing the beaver as one of the symbols of the sovereignty of our country.

In the hope that the favourable and co-operative attitude demonstrated so far toward Bill C-373 will continue today, and that hon. members will advance this legislation, I shall limit my remarks, although one could certainly speak at length in support of this positive and non-partisan measure. Simply, I propose to explain just what this bill attempts to do, to correct some mistaken impressions about it, and then to entrust its fate to the wisdom of this House.

Bill C-373 seeks to give official recognition to a fact of our Canadian heritage, for it is a straightforward fact that the beaver is one of our national symbols. This bill neither creates a new national symbol nor does it replace or in anyway lessen the maple leaf, the coat of arms, or any other symbol of our heritage.

Every man and woman holds dear certain memories and nostalgic reminders of his and her country which cannot be erased easily, if at all. These ties of home are among the most natural and enduring of feelings. In nature each creature has its own habitat, which it protects with a fierce love. In Canada, where people from so many different lands and cultures have come together, what can we all identify with if not those symbols adopted by Canadian pioneers and taken to our hearts, even if we be newcomers to this nation? Search deep into the history of Canada and you will find that the strong, tireless and industrious beaver has always been symbolic of our northern homeland.

The beaver was a clan sign for Indian tribes and was carved on their totem poles. The beaver was on the coat of arms of the Hudson's Bay Company, and as long ago as 1632 was used in Canadian heraldry when Charles the First approved its use for Sir William Alexander, the founder of Nova Scotia. The beaver was on our first Canadian stamp to have a picture.

An hon. Member: Before the Queen?

Mr. O'Sullivan: Before the Queen.

The Canadian Beaver

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the beaver appears on our coins and also on the arms of the City of Montreal. No fewer than 14 regiments of our Canadian armed forces have the beaver as their insignia. For all the young Canadians who took part in the devastating wars of the 20th century, it is a very familiar symbol. Far away from Canadian lands, those young people went to the Somme, Vimy or Passchendaele during World War I. Some of them participated in the liberation of Europe during World War II and others were in Korea. The beaver adorned the badges of Lieutenant Brillant and Corporal Kaeble, both recipients of the Victoria Cross they earned in France in 1918 and both members of the famous Royal 22nd Regiment.

[English]

The beaver was prominent in the posters urging Canadians to buy victory bonds in that defence of our freedom. The beaver is on the collar badges of the Royal Canadian Regiment whose proud motto is Pro Patria. The beaver was on the Calgary Highlanders' badge when they valiantly put down at Dunkirk in 1944.

And so on it goes, to remind all of us, to quote naturalist Frederick Bodsworth:

> It is no coincidence that our national emblem is not a rising sun, a star, a hammer, a sickle, or a dragon, but a beaver and a maple leaf.

The beaver and the maple leaf. They go together, and to give due recognition to them both as symbols of our land and its heritage in no way lessens the importance of either.

There are those, Madam Speaker, who might argue that we should forget the beaver as a symbol now that Oregon has it as a state animal and New York state has a private bill before its legislature to do likewise. Obviously, we cannot prevent others from sharing our esteem for this animal as an emblem, any more than we could stop others from calling the maple leaf their own. However, all the flattery by imitation in the world cannot change the feelings of Canadians; feelings so strong that they have become a fact of Canadian life. For us the beaver is not just an animal to be placed on the back of a flag like Oregon's, or declared a state animal as might New York, but a symbol of national significance, well-founded in history and honoured by generations.

I am, of course, hopeful that the legislators of New York state will find a more suitable alternative to the beaver as their state animal. The sponsor of that proposal, a proposal of similar status to a private member's bill here, has even held back on his motion to see what action the Canadian parliament will take. I think that this courtesy on the part of Senator Bernard Smith demonstrates the friendship which exists between our two countries and the respect with which that neighbouring state will view our feelings and sense of heritage. Those feelings are indeed strong.

Since introducing this bill I have received hundreds of signatures of support, in the form of letters and petitions. Other members have indicated a similar favourable response from their constituents. What is more, officials of CBC radio estimate that over 13,000 Canadians, from every province, both territories, and in both official languages have written to Barbara Frum and Alan Maitland of the "As it Happens" program to support their contention that the beaver is a Canadian symbol and should be recognized as such.

This leads me to touch briefly upon another question that has been raised in connection with this bill. As is evidenced by my questions and speeches in this House, I recognize and share the concerns of Canadians everywhere about the pressing economic problems we all face. However great these problems may be, I do not agree with some that our search for their solution should automatically exclude discussion of other subjects.

I would submit that a nation's true strength is most tested, and its unity most endangered, when individuals grow fearful of the future because of economic unrest. At such times of stress it is all too easy to become overly introspective, and it is a common human failing to place blame on those nearest at hand.

● (1610)

Immediate concern for economic problems can blind us to our long-term goals and aspirations. The suspicion and mistrust which result can make us forget those greater things we have in common.

It is precisely in such difficult times that Canadians need to be reminded of those things we share, and of those common strengths which will ultimately see us through troubled times.

To an individual, to a nation of individuals, there must be more to life than just financial facts and figures. There must be things to touch one's soul and heart and emotions if we are to be complete persons and a whole nation. That is the importance of symbols, their special importance in times such as ours. That is the object of this bill and the special importance of the beaver to Canadians in our history, today, and for tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Madam Speaker, I have no reservations about agreeing with the hon. member who has just spoken that the beaver is a symbol of Canada and has been so for generations. However, I want to put on record one or two points which I believe should be considered before we take any final action on this subject.

The commercial houses of Montreal in particular, until the end of the 19th Century used the beaver on almost everything they could find to print it on. It was a symbol of Montreal, representing all the wealth which Montreal reaped from the fur trade. It meant everything to those who were in control of business in Montreal. After the turn of the Century the use of the beaver as a commercial symbol began to decline throughout Canada. Some had begun to make fun of the emblem. For example, Canadian shipping carried the beaver emblem, and it was commonly referred to around the world as the rat line. This eventually got to people, and Canadians began to back away from the use of the beaver symbol.

I am not saying we should not give the beaver symbol some kind of formal recognition, but we should examine this matter carefully before we take any action. I hope that when the committee does consider the matter it will call in experts who can explain for the benefit of members and the Canadian public the intricacies and mysteries of heraldry and exactly how we should go about giving formal recognition to the beaver as a symbol of Canada, bearing in mind the things the hon. member would like to achieve.

[Mr. O'Sullivan.]

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the discussion of this bill to provide for the recognition of the beaver as a symbol of the sovereignty of Canada.

[Translation]

However, Madam Speaker, I must say to this House that when that question was brought to my attention last fall following the introduction of the private bill by a US senator to have the beaver accepted as the emblem of the State of New York I was surprised and even disappointed that we did not have in the statutes of Canada an act to designate the beaver as national emblem.

I was under the impression that because of the use we had made of the beaver as an emblem for a very long time already, the beaver was indeed recognized in the statutes as the emblem of this country, but such is not the case.

We have been talking about the beaver for a very long time. It was even mentioned in great political debates, and I found in the archives of the government of Québec that the Hon. J. A. Chapleau, premier of that province in 1883, was talking at that time about the political group called Les Castors as a rebel political party, and had more specifically in mind the ultraconservatives of that time.

In 1910, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a speech in Montreal on the Castors calling them people who changed political parties, or even criticized their own party. Indeed, the beaver as an emblem has always been and still is related to our history.

Incidentally, I would like to relate an anecdote. That happened during my first year as a member of this House, in 1963, when I received in Ottawa an Indian delegation from my riding. Outside the Parliament building, after visiting the premises, a member of that delegation remarked: "There are beavers here in Ottawa." He was looking at the top of the door to the Parliament building. Indeed, at the main entrance of that majestic building a beautiful beaver is engraved in the stone.

So, Madam Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I have no objection to referring this bill to committee, and I hope it can then be given detailed consideration.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose earlier today an amendment to clause 100 was under consideration. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Brewin: I have a few brief remarks to make on the generality of this Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. I come from a constituency where we are deeply concerned about housing, and naturally I have looked at this clause to see whether it will help my people there.

I have sometimes been reproved for taking perhaps too broad a perspective of my responsibilities in this House. However, for the moment I want to concentrate on this legislation as it may affect my own constituents. I regret to have to tell the minister that I do not think it will help more than a handful of them. There are very few people in my constituency who will be able to benefit from this particular provision. I think there are very few who can save up to $1,000 in a year to buy a house at present prices. There may be a handful and I do not begrudge them some income tax exemption, but there are so few that in my view this really does not amount to anything.

The real and urgent need is housing for those people whose income gives them no chance of buying a house. The minister says this provision will benefit young people. I wish it would, but I do not know very many young people in my riding who could possibly save $1,000 a year and avail themselves of this tax exemption. If there are such it is a small and exclusive group who are perfectly well able to look after their housing needs without these special exemptions from income tax.

I think every cent available should be poured into two forms of housing for which there is real need. I refer first of all to public housing with rents geared to income. I have people in my constituency who are being forced out of their houses because they cannot afford to pay the rents charged. Many of these people are elderly. Secondly, I know of young people going into co-operative housing, and more funds are needed to assist development of co-operative housing. I regret to say that I find this legislation pretty barren and useless in meeting the housing problem in my own constituency.

Another matter of concern to me which, perhaps the minister can help me on is, that as far as I can make out, if you want to take advantage of this provision you must deposit your money in a savings account in a bank, trust company or similar institution, no doubt at a fee. I do not see any arrangement made regarding the fee charged for holding these funds. Is there no machinery whereby the government itself could accept deposits, which it could then put into bonds or savings accounts that would make a reasonable return while the person concerned awaited acquisition of his new house? There is a resentment among some people about being required to use these particular financial institutions to avail themselves of this provision.

The only other thing I want to say is that anybody who thinks that this legislation is a serious means of dealing with the housing crisis in this country should have his head read. It is nothing of the sort. This is tinkering. The expression the hon. member for Broadview used was that it is a gimmick, and we are not really very much interested in it. It will help a few, yes, but there will be so few in my riding that you could count them on the fingers of your hand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Chairman, before we move on from this clause I have some questions to put to the minister. There is one thing I feel the committee should have clarified. As I understand it, a person contributing to the plan may not own a house in the year he makes a contribution. For example this means that if a person contributed to the plan in 1975 he would not be eligible to buy a house in 1975 because this would be the calendar year in which he contributed and he has retroactively disqualified himself.

Is my understanding correct, and how does this work in conjunction with the post-dated contribution down to April 1? Is this post-dated contribution treated as a payment in 1974, so that he can buy a house in 1975?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman is right on both counts.

Mr. Stevens: I am very encouraged. That is one of the least evasive answers we have had from the minister for some time. My second question is this: in view of that, would the minister not agree that the main impact of this program will certainly not be in 1975 or 1976 but probably in subsequent years? If a person cannot purchase a home in the year of his contribution, there will be a tendency for him to contemplate buying his home in future years. Consequently, any suggestion that this provision will have a good impact in the sense of stirring up money to be used for house purchase in 1975 is not too realistic. Does the minister agree?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, the hon. member is right in the sense that the demand will gradually build up as funds accumulate. But as I have said before, this is just one element in the government's housing program. The other purpose is not only to sustain demand but to allow the tax system to help young people accumulate funds for house purchase.

Mr. Stevens: Following along that line of reasoning, would the minister also not agree that the plan may take money out of the home purchase field in 1975 and 1976 because people who might have bought a home will be attracted to the plan, but instead of going out and using their available cash they will start contributing to the plan with a view to buying at a later date? As a consequence, rather than helping the 210,000 starts objective of the minister, the plan may actually work against the purchase of new homes in 1975.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not necessarily, Madam Chairman. The money invested will probably be immediately reinvested, primarily in the mortgage market.

Mr. Stevens: With all due respect, I use the minister's favourite comment about comparing apples with oranges. When he says the money will be invested in the housing market, presumably he is referring to investment in mortgages. As I understand the main attraction of this provision, it is that it makes it relatively easy from a tax standpoint for people to accumulate money to buy equity in a house. There is the multiplier effect, the leverage given when a person puts down $10,000 to buy a $40,000 house. This is the true result that the government is trying to achieve. I suggest that saying that money invested in a mortgage company is lent out in mortgage funds, is an apples and oranges comparison.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, in terms of equity there will be a gradual build-up. In terms of the debt available having an effect on the market and moving beneficently to lower interest rates, the impact will be immediate.

Mr. Stevens: Then I guess there is a difference of opinion on that point. Could I now shift to subclauses (g) and (h) on pages 238 and 239. As I read these two subclauses it appears that if a person owns an interest in accommodation, which presumably is housing—I think the word used is dwelling place—he may not enter the plan, and as a result that person with an interest in residential rental property will be precluded from setting up a registered home ownership savings plan even if he himself lives in rented accommodation. I think we can understand the point the minister is trying to cover here, and perhaps I should give him the opportunity of indicating whether my understanding of these two subclauses is correct.

● (1630)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Stevens: In view of that, how do the revenue people intend to treat something like a real estate investment trust? Take the situation in which a person has bought into a REIT, and if the REIT in turn happens to buy an apartment building some place, would that person be precluded from coming under the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that the simple answer is that a real estate investment trust is not a partnership.

Mr. Stevens: That may be the simple answer for this committee, but I can assure the minister that a real estate investment trust in a technical sense is a partnership. One of the reasons for setting up a real estate investment trust is to limit the liability of the partners that are part of that trust.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the trust is organized as a partnership then it will not qualify, but if it is a trust it is not a partnership.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps I could just touch on another point for clarification. It is my understanding that this plan will be something both spouses can participate in, in that if a husband and wife both have the appropriate income they will both be able to contribute $10,000, and in that way the family unit, or the husband and wife, will be able to accumulate $20,000 over a period of 10 years. Is that right?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, $10,000 each in his or her own plan.

Mr. Stevens: Is it also correct that you could have a situation in which a husband puts his house in his wife's name and then contributes to the $10,000 plan, that is $1,000 a year for 10 years, and uses the money to furnish his wife's house? You would then have a rather interesting situation in that they both are living in the house, but it happens to be in the wife's name and the husband is able to contribute to a plan, the proceeds of which are used to furnish the house in which he is living with his wife.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If he were to buy the house back, yes, but the house has to be registered in one name or the other. I dealt with the general concept here in answer to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Stevens: I am speaking about a different thing. Take the situation where the husband and wife, for their own good reasons, have the house registered in the wife's name. Is it not true that the husband could contribute to his plan and, when he wishes to collapse the plan, use the proceeds to buy furniture for his wife's home, the home that he has actually been living in?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Put that way, yes.

Mr. Stevens: Is there anything wrong with the way I have put it? Is it not true that this is a type of situation that could exist under the present wording of the proposed amendment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps I could direct the minister's attention to sub-clauses (7) and (8) on page 241. As I understand what is written here, this is like a penalty. If someone is caught putting too much into a registered home ownership savings plan the penalty is that his plan is in effect deregistered, and he must then take into income the entire amount he has paid in, notwithstanding the fact that he may have taken out certain proceeds to buy furniture for a home. Is that correct?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right. There is really no reason for over-contributing. It is quite simple; the maximum is $1,000 a year.

Mr. Stevens: Why was it felt necessary to be so severe? Presumably you could have a person who, through confusion, made an over-payment, and did not correct it within 120 days. If he has used part of the proceeds to buy a home why should he be taxed on that without giving him at least credit for the portion he uses, presumably in the way the government expects him to use it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This covers quite simply $1,000 a year. That is not complicated. He gets the deductibility on the way in, and there has to be some sanction if he tries to over-deduct.

Mr. Stevens: This is a question of degree, I suppose, but I should have thought that the obvious sanction would be to require the man simply to bring back into income the amount of the over-payment and pay taxes on it, which is certainly what happens under the registered retirement savings plan. I am little surprised that this provision would have such a vicious penalty in it for a person who has, for some reason or other, over-paid. Is there any reason why a person who goes into a registered ownership savings plan should be more severely penalized for a mistake, such as I have referred to, than the person in respect of a registered retirement savings plan?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is quite a difference. The RRSP is a pension, whereas this allows a maximum of $1,000 a year. It is not complicated, therefore a sanction is required.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 100, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 101 and 102 agreed to.

On Clause 103.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I have circulated this amendment which replaces the one tabled on February 10. The only difference is in the page reference. Otherwise the amendment is exactly the same as the one tabled. The amendment relates to Clause 103 as found at page 246, and I would move:

That clause 103 of Bill C-49 be amended by striking out lines 34 to 40 on page 246 and substituting the following:

"(6) Subsections (1) and (2) and paragraph 149(1)(v) of the said Act as enacted by subsection (4) are applicable to the 1974 and subsequent taxation years; subsection (3) and paragraph 149(1)(u) of the said Act as enacted by subsection (4) are applicable to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years; and subsection (5) is applicable after November 18, 1974."

This amendment relates to the coming into force of the provisions as they apply to Clause 103.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 103, as amended agreed to.

On Clause 104.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have circulated the following technical amendment to Clause 104, and I move:

● (1640)

That clause 104 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out line 37 on page 247 and substituting the following:

"1974, 1975 and 1976 taxation years, subsection"

and

(b) by adding thereto, immediately after line 41 on page 247, the following:

"(5) Subparagraph 157(1)(a)(i) of the said Act shall, for the 1977 and subsequent taxation years, be read as it read immediately before the coming into force of subsection (1)."

That is found on page 247 of the bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 104 as amended agreed to.

Clause 105 agreed to.

On clause 106.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I move:

That clause 106 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out line 11 on page 248 and substituting the following:

'106. (1) Paragraph 161(4.1)(a) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) the tax payable under this Part by it for the year computed without reference to section 123.2,"

(2) Section 161 of the said Act is further'

and

(b) by striking out lines 26 and 27 on page 248 and substituting the following:

"(3) This section is applicable to the 1974 and subsequent taxation years except that for the 1977 and subsequent taxation years paragraph 161(4.1)(a) of the said Act shall be read as it read immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 106, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 107 agreed to.

On clause 108.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Chairman, as this clause proposes to give the right of appeal from the refusal of the minister to register an educational savings plan or a home ownership savings plan, or from his revocation of registration of those plans, would the minister give us an outline as to whether this provision is one that is also included with respect to standard registered plans? Is it a provision that is unique to the two plans to which reference is made here?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Madam Chairman, there are many similar provisions of appeal to the Federal Court throughout the act.

Mr. Stevens: Does the Registered Retirement Savings Plan allow for the right of appeal also?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister indicate how many appeals have been launched?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, or one of the officials to provide the hon. gentleman with the information.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister give us some indication of the number, whether there are many or few such appeals? I think it is relevant when we are considering the right of appeal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is that there have been no appeals.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 109 to 117 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 118.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, on February 10 I tabled an amendment to clause 118. Now I am moving another amendment to this clause and I propose that we not proceed with the earlier amendment. What I will be circulating now is the new amendment which differs from the earlier one in that it extends exemption for provincial borrowings for another couple of years. They were worried about withholding tax on interest on government securities. I move:

That clause 118 of Bill C-49 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 35 and 36 on page 254 and substituting the following:

'118(.01) All that portion of clause 212(1)(b)(ii)(C) of the said Act following subclause (V) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"issued after April 15, 1966, and before 1979,"

(1) Paragraph 212(1)(b) of the said Act is further amended by striking out the word'

(b) by striking out line 3 on page 255 and substituting the following:

"1978, the interest on which is payable"

(c) by adding thereto, immediately after line 33 on page 258, the following:

'(10.1) Paragraph 212(14)(c) of the said Act is amended by adding the word "or" at the end of subparagraph (i) thereof and by repealing subparagraphs (ii) and (iii) thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) a trust or corporation established or incorporated principally in connection with, or the principal purpose of which is to administer or provide benefits under, one or more superannuation, pension or retirement funds or plans or any funds or plans established to provide employee benefits."

(d) by striking out lines 6 to 10 on page 259 and substituting the following:

"after 1971, subsections (2), (3), (5) and (6), (8) to (10) and (11) are applicable in respect of amounts paid or credited after November 18, 1974, other than an amount referred to in paragraph 212(13.1)(a) or subsection 212(13.2) of the said Act as"

and

Clauses 119 and 120 agreed to.

On clause 121.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Chairman, I have a question for the minister on clause 121, which covers four pages and deals with timber royalties. I wonder if any part of that clause would be similar to clauses 4 and 6 which we stood.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Madam Chairman.

Clauses 134 to 141 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 142.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister give us a brief explanation of clause 142?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman, I understand, wants to call it five o'clock after passing this clause. We could do it now, but I will give him the explanation in any event because I gave an undertaking to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that at the next sitting of the House on Monday we would go back to the resource clauses.

This clause 142 applies in the first subclause to non-resident withholding tax on dividends. The second subclause applies to a life insurer's a net Canadian life investment income. Looking at subclause (1) first, section 10 of an act to amend the Income Tax Act was introduced in 1961-62 to cancel the special preferred 5 per cent rate of withholding tax which applied under Article XI (2) of the Canada-U.S. Reciprocal Tax Convention to dividends paid by a subsidiary in one country to a parent company in the other. Since December 20, 1960, such dividends have been taxed at the same rates which apply to any other dividend. By repealing this section the existing rates will continue to apply after 1975, rather than the 25 per cent rate for dividends paid to residents of non-treaty countries.

Subclause (2) is a relieving measure with respect to the coming into force of a provision of Chapter 14 of the Statutes of Canada, 1973-74, which allowed a deduction in computing the taxable investment income of a life insurer of the interest element of policies issued as registered retirement savings plans or deferred profit sharing plans. This deduction will be made available from the time of the commencement of the taxation of life insurers in 1969 rather than 1972 as provided earlier.

There was an oversight in 1969. We are repairing it as of 1969.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If we have not proceeded to wind things up, I would like to ask if it would be possible to have read into the record the numbers of the clauses which have been stood so that we might have a means of starting off on Monday with a record of those we will be discussing. Perhaps clause 142 should be dealt with first.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think it would be a good idea to put the committee on notice for Monday. Is the committee ready for the question to be put on clause 142?

Clause 142 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member wanted to know the clauses which are stood.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Start with No. 4.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Clauses 4, 7, 9, 35, 37, 43.1, and 52 as amended.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, was clause 80 agreed upon?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is no record of clause 80 standing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is there a record that it was agreed upon?

Mr. Stevens: I believe that the intention was to stand clause 80.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Clause 80 was stood.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Chairman, could we have those numbers repeated?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Clauses 4, 7, 9, 35, 37, new clause 43.1, clause 52 and clause 80.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, may we have confirmation of what has been understood? On Monday will we be dealing with Bill C-49 in committee, beginning with clause 4?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, that is so. It is our understanding that clause 52, which has been stood, was stood because of a sidebar heading which, in the minds of some hon. members, related to resources. It really does not relate to resources.

Mr. Paproski: I agree, Madam Chairman. I think that clause 52 could be carried, if we could revert to it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we revert to clause 52, as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 52 as amended agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being five o'clock the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEES

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I gave notice that I wished to raise a question of privilege concerning the practice that seems to be developing of members of this place appearing before emanations of the other place. I indicated at that time that I thought it was a fairly delicate and difficult subject with which to deal, and having had some time to look at it I am confirmed in my original estimate that it is indeed a difficult proposition for members to focus upon.

I have now had an opportunity to review the Standing Orders of the House of Commons that deal with the other place, and I find that the Standing Orders provide for a form of address and communication which is foremost, distinct and correct. These are found in Standing Orders 22(1), 22(2), 22(3) and 23, and they deal with conflicts between the House of Commons and the Senate.

Unlike the House of Commons, the Senate has a rule that regulates the way in which members of the other place may appear before committees of this place, and I should like to quote it to Your Honour. It is rule No. 104 of the Senate Standing Orders and it provides as follows:

(1) When the House of Commons requests that a senator or any of the officers, clerks, or servants of the Senate attend before the House of Commons to be examined or appear before any committee thereof, such request shall be by message from the House of Commons requesting that the Senate grant leave to such senator, officer, clerk or servant to attend.

(2) If the Senate grants leave, an officer, clerk or servant of the Senate shall attend before the House of Commons or a committee thereof, and a senator may attend if he thinks fit.

(3) Without such leave, a senator, officer, clerk or servant of the Senate shall not, on any account, under penalty of being committed to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod or to prison during the pleasure of the Senate, go down to the House of Commons, or send his answer in writing, or appear by counsel to answer any accusation there.

There is no such complementary rule in our Standing Orders and therefore, in order to find out just exactly what the traditions are, I had to go back and examine the Journals of the House of Commons and the Senate. In passing, I should also like to point out that rule 98 of the Senate provides as follows:

Any person whose interests may be affected by a private bill

(a) may appear before the committee to which such bill has been referred or may make comments to the committee in writing;

(b) if required to do so by the committee, shall appear before the committee.

Further, rule 18 deals with ministers of the Crown appearing before Senate committees and provides:

When a bill or other matter relating to any subject administered by a department of the Government of Canada is being considered by the Senate or in committee of the whole, a minister, not being a member of the Senate, may on invitation from the Senate enter the Senate chamber and, subject to the rules, orders, usages, forms and proceedings of the Senate, may take part in the debate.

Those are the rules of the other place that govern the appearance of members of this House before the other place. Since, as I say, there was no complementary rule in the Standing Orders of the Canadian House of Commons, I went back to investigate various authorities which we use in this House. The first, of course, is Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, and at page 247, citation 312 provides:

Whenever the evidence of a senator is required before a committee of the Commons, it is usual for the Chairman to move in the House that a message be sent to the Senate requesting Their Honours to give leave to... one of their members, to attend and give evidence before the select committee, etc.

A motion that a message be sent to the Senate requesting leave for a senator to give evidence before a select committee of the House of Commons cannot be entertained until a report thereon has been presented by the committee.

Since Beauchesne had no comment at all to make on the reverse procedure, which of course is the one in which we are interested, I went back to Bourinot's Parliamentary Practice, third edition, 1916, where at page 48, citation IX provides as follows:

● (1410)

In the Senate witnesses generally attend on a notice from the clerk of the committee. In case a witness will not attend, application must be made to the House for the necessary power to compel his attendance.

Whenever the evidence of a senator is required before a committee of the Commons, it is usual for the chairman to move in the House that a message be sent to the Senate requesting Their Honours to give leave to... one of their members, to attend and give evidence before the select committee, etc. The Senate will consider the message and give the required leave to the senator, "if he thinks fit". If the attendance of a member of the Commons is required before a committee of the Senate, the same procedure will be followed.

So far that is the only quotation I have been able to find in the documents which we have for our use in this House. However, in May's Parliamentary Practice, eighteenth edition, 1971, there are a number of quotations which relate to the going back and forth of members of the Commons to the Lords, and vice versa, and they are quite extensive in the way in which they deal with this. Briefly I quote from page 99 as follows:

As regards attendance in the other House, one House will not permit one of its members to be summoned by the other, without a message desiring his attendance, or without the consent of the member whose attendance is required.

Under the heading "Other Forms of Misconduct" in May's eighteenth edition, at page 140, we find the following:

Giving evidence elsewhere in relation to any debates or proceedings in the House of which he is a member or officer, or any committee thereof . . .

Attending as a witness before the other House or any committee thereof without the leave of the House of which he is a member or officer.

I would refer Your Honour to a further chapter of May's at page 668. I will not quote it but it does give the full detail of the two quotations which I have already read, under the heading "Attendance of Members of the Other Place". We have gone back and looked at the precedents which have taken place in our House from time to time and I want to raise three of them to indicate just what has happened.

An hon. Member: Couldn't you have done this by letter?

Mr. Reid: On May 16, 1919, the House of Commons gave its permission to the request from the Senate that the Hon. F. Cochrane, P.C., M.P., attend before the Senate committee. Mr. Cochrane at that time was a minister without portfolio. The House of Commons accepted this request as a matter of routine and there was no debate. This will be found in the House of Commons Debates of that date. A more interesting one, however, is the case of Senator Crerar who was at the time leader of the Progressive Party in the House of Commons. On May 11, 1921, the House of Commons agreed to allow him to testify before a Senate committee after the appropriate formalities had been gone through.

In 1931 the Senate received a number of requests from the Commons for permission for a number of members to appear before a Commons committee that was investigating the Beauharnois scandal. I would particularly direct the attention of the House to the Senate Journals of July 14, 1931, where it is reported that three senators were given permission by the Senate to appear before the House of Commons special committee investigating the Beauharnois scandal.

I think those are the main points I wanted to make, with the exception of one interesting precedent which took place in 1961 when the then member of parliament for St. Boniface, Mr. Laurier Régnier, appeared before the Senate Committee on Banking and Commerce. He was dealing with Bill C-129 and claimed, among other things, that the bill was improperly before the Senate; that it had not properly passed all stages in the House of Commons, according to his interpretation. He entered into a constitutional debate with the chairman of the committee. The most important point is that he was not invited by the chairman of that committee; he appeared of his own volition and apparently requested that the committee hear him. I should like to quote the following comments appearing at page 16 of the relevant committee report:

THE CHAIRMAN: Is the committee ready now to hear Mr. Régnier, M.P.?

HON. SENATORS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Régnier, will you come forward to my table please? Are you appearing voluntarily, Mr. Régnier?

MR. RÉGNIER: Yes.

[Mr. Reid.]

Apparently those questions were asked because the custom was, even in 1961, for members of this place to appear over there only in response to a certificate filed in the appropriate way, in the way which I have already outlined to the House. Mr. Régnier then went on to make his case before the Senate committee. As I understand it, not very much happened as a result. However, it is the only case that I have been able to find of a member of the House going over to the other place to make a case, particularly on a bill that had already been passed by the House in the normal way. In doing so, it may be argued that Mr. Régnier was in contempt of Standing Order 35 which indicates that a member cannot cast reflection on a vote of the House of Commons.

Therefore, I would make the following comments. First of all, it is quite clear that in the past there has been a whole series of very clear lines of communication between the committees of the House of Commons and the committees of the Senate when they wished to have witnesses appear before them. The procedure was clear and was practised by both the House and the Senate. The other point I want to make is that there has been a long practice of ministers and parliamentary secretaries going over to the Senate; this has been so in order that they may be permitted to promote government legislation. It is the same right that private members have when they go over to promote their private member's bills whether they be public or private. The fact is that because the bills are begun and processed by private members, those members have the same right to appear before Senate emanations in that regard.

Therefore, there is another point to be made about the Régnier case: it is that he was appearing over there after the House of Commons had given consent for the legislation to go through. In point of fact, the legislation had been passed by unanimous consent through all three stages early one evening.

This means that the question that must be put to the House is whether or not a member can go to the other place and raise doubts about a piece of legislation on which the House of Commons has already taken a stand and upon which it has acted. To do so would seem to me to put the member in violation of Standing Order 35.

The second point—this is my concluding point—is that it seems that a member of parliament should have the right to appear before a Senate emanation only in cases where the Senate is discussing a matter such as in the case of the Davey committee on the mass media, or the Croll committee on poverty, when the subject may or may not appear before the House of Commons in the same way in a reasonable length of time. What I am asking Your Honour to do is to rule on the practice of members of parliament to be heard on a variety of issues, in many cases on legislation which is undergoing study in the Senate on a matter which will be coming here in due course. This would seem to me to be in violation of the well known law of anticipation of what may happen in the House. Therefore, I think it would be helpful if Your Honour were to investigate this matter, take a stand and clear up something that seems to be undesirable in the way in which we are carrying on our business.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) in raising his question of privilege has not mentioned my name, there is no question that he raised this matter initially last Wednesday because that morning I attended the meeting of a committee of the Senate to present a statement of my views on certain aspects of Bill C-29, the Canada Business Corporations Act. The hon. member is extremely capable and hard working, but I think there are better ways for him to use his energy and talents than to attempt to limit the right of action of members of parliament, on behalf of the public, under the guise of protecting those rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I want to begin by submitting that in any event his motion may well be defective on procedural grounds. Standing Order 17 reads:

17 (1) Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

But subsection (2) goes on to say:

(2) Unless notice of motion has been given under Standing Order 42, any member proposing to raise a question of privilege other than one arising out of proceedings in the chamber during a course of the sitting shall give to the Speaker a written statement of the question at least one hour prior to raising the question in the House.

● (1420)

Mr. Speaker, unless I am mistaken—and if I am, I withdraw this point—the hon. member did not give notice under Standing Order 42, which requires 48 hours notice; and he did not, according to what he told me earlier today, give the Chair a written statement of the question he raised at least one hour prior to raising it in the House last Wednesday. I submit that either step is necessary because the matter he complains of did not arise out of proceedings in this chamber during the course of a sitting.

I want to say that I think in spite of this defect, the matter is such that I must say something about it on its merits. The hon. member has referred to some United Kingdom usages and rules, and there is something in our Standing Orders indicating that in cases not provided for in our rules we should have regard to the usages followed in the United Kingdom. Our Standing Order one does not speak of Standing Orders in the U.K., and the hon. member cited a Standing Order of the Senate which, if I am not mistaken, restates a standing order of the House of Lords.

To import the United Kingdom's Standing Orders into our proceedings by rulings of Mr. Speaker would be to do something which we do not ask our own Speaker to do. We insist on adopting Standing Orders by vote of this House. Our Standing Order says the usages of the United Kingdom shall be followed only in so far as they may be applicable in each case. No case has been made by the hon. member upon whom the burden of proof lies in this instance. I submit they are not applicable. Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, page 110, paragraph 119, reads as follows:

Although we may take a leaf out of its book, we have developed a parliamentary practice of our own based on British principles and yet clearly Canadian. While we appreciate the long experience of the United Kingdom House and seek to profit therefrom, we are the absolute and independent masters of our own procedure in accordance with our circumstances and needs.

I say that these usages are not appropriate for Canada, a country with our diversity and variety, requiring wide discussion of issues, particularly if the discussion is intended to be constructive and positive. In any event, I submit the U.K. precedents are not relevant. They apply only where the United Kingdom upper House wishes to formally summon, that is to say, compel attendance of a member of the British House of Commons. This is clear from reading Erskine May's eighteenth edition at the page the hon. member cited but, more important, if one looks at the opening paragraph of chapter 25 of Erskine May where these pages are found, there are the following words under the heading "Witnesses and Parliament":

This chapter is mainly devoted to a description of the practice relating to the summoning of witnesses before either House or a committee of the whole House, and select committees of either House.

This is not relevant here because in my case I sought to testify before the Senate committee of my own volition; I was not summoned to attend. The initiative was mine. The Senate committee accepted my request and agreed to hear me.

The hon. member suggests that there is something wrong with going and testifying in the Senate because it may reflect on votes of this House, but hon. members comment in this chamber in many ways on bills after they have been voted on, without complaint from anyone. In every debate on economic questions, the government's previous budget policy is commented on, often adversely, even though the House as a whole has adopted it.

As I have said in this House, hon. members have called for reduction or elimination of taxes approved by the House. They call for the amendment or replacement of bills on other matters approved by the House. For example, hon. members call for the restoration of the death penalty even though the House voted to abolish it except in limited cases. No one complains that they raise it. Another important example is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has said on several occasions that transportation policy in Canada is a mess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily accept this premise, but I want to say that in making that statement the minister thereby reflects on a decision of this House in passing the National Transportation Act, and no one, least of all the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, has ever complained that he said this.

What we are talking about here is not the comment by a member of parliament in this House on a bill it has voted on. What we are talking about is comment made outside this House, in fact before a committee of another deliberative body independent of this House.

Members appear and speak before city councils; they appear and speak before meetings of mayors, as did the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) recently. If one had time to check, one would probably find that members have appeared before committees of provincial legislatures and federal-provincial royal commissions. There is one instance of this that Your Honour mentioned the other day, that is, the Freedman report on railway run-throughs. Members speak to meetings of community groups and public meetings of all kinds, as well as to the press and on radio and television. In doing so, they speak about matters on which this House has taken formal decisions, and no one complains. Why should they be prevented from speaking in the same way if they appear before a committee of another independent, deliberative body—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: —and if they appear, as in my case, of their own volition and with the consent of that committee? Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member next going to come in here and say that once a bill is adopted in this House, a member cannot comment upon it to a meeting of a community group, a trade union, a service club or some other meeting?

An hon. Member: He might.

Mr. Gray: Will he next say that we cannot comment on such bills to the press, radio or television, or write letters about them or engage in conversations about them with ordinary citizens? He may say he would never do this and that he does not intend to do it, but what is the true difference between any of these things and going voluntarily as a witness before a Senate committee? In both cases a member of parliament is speaking out about a matter of public concern which may have been the subject of a decision of this House.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Bar Association appear before committees of this House on bills, and they often go on to appear before committees of the Senate on the same matter. Is the hon. member arguing that Canadians who are members of parliament have fewer rights to speak than members of private interest groups who are simply private citizens?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if members of parliament cannot go before Senate committees without formal leave of this House, members who are ministers should not be able to do so either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: But they do, Mr. Speaker, and the other place does not first send a message to the House in every case requiring the minister's attendance, and the minister in every case does not first ask and get leave from the House to attend before a Senate committee. The hon. member's citation of the Senate rules is irrelevant. How can a rule of the Senate be imported as a precedent of this hon. chamber?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the rights and privileges of members of parliament. In this connection I submit the House makes no distinction between members who are not ministers and those who are, and therefore if it is wrong for members like myself to go to the Senate, without leave, to speak about a bill voted on by this House, it is also wrong for ministers to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: If I am not mistaken—and if I am, I will withdraw the point—on one occasion in the previous parliament a minister of the Crown went to a Senate committee and actually urged that committee to strike out a clause the House had voted to put in a bill.

An hon. Member: That was "crazy Otto".

Mr. Gray: The hon. member did not raise that as a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: If the attendance of ministers at Senate committees is a precedent for anything, it is a precedent in favour of any member attending before such a committee if they wish to do so and the committee agrees to hear them. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday you ruled that parliamentary privilege deals primarily with the member's right of free speech within this chamber. Last Thursday, February 20, dealing with a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) and a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) you quoted the words of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on this issue on April 29, 1971, when he said:

> In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a member to discharge his duties in the House as a member of the House of Commons.

Then you went on to say:

> Bearing in mind that very concise reasoning, it seems to me that improvement upon it is impossible and, furthermore, unnecessary.

If parliamentary privilege is limited to free speech within this chamber, then how could a member speaking anywhere outside this chamber harm or infringe on this privilege? Let us remember that there are already many informal ways in which the right to speak of members is limited now in this chamber, and particularly of government members; and the possibility that that right might be further abridged under the guise of parliamentary reform is one that we should all be cognizant of.

● (1430)

Therefore, I submit that if there can be any governing principle of interpretation to apply to the question of members' privileges involving their right to speak, that principle should be that these privileges should be construed in a way that encourages and protects the MP's right, rather than limits it. The presumption should be against limitation. Mr. Speaker, I say this especially because of your ruling of last Thursday, as recorded on page 3386 of Hansard, where you are reported as having said:

> —all of us must recognize that the role of a member of parliament extends far beyond his work in this chamber, that more and more each day in modern times a member is not only invited, but in fact compelled, to become involved in many activities outside the House.

To conclude, I say those who, like myself, want the party now forming the government to be not just a Liberal Party in name but a party of Liberals in policy orientation and action should be concerned about what the hon. member, who after all is parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, appears to be arguing in his question of privilege.

If there is any group which should believe that the encouragement of wide-ranging and constructive discussion, not just of issues but of legislation as well, is fundamental to its principles, that group should be the Liberal Party. I say that all of us in that party who are sitting in this House, and those who support it across the country, should be diligent in seeing that the right of the member of parliament to engage in that kind of discussion is not abridged under the guise of protecting it. In our work for the people of our ridings and the people of Canada, there are times when we must speak in committees of caucus and other groups in which our work is most appropriately carried out under roles of confidentiality and solidarity. But, Mr. Speaker, there are other times when we must express our views publicly when we speak in whatever setting, in whatever forum we consider most appropriate if those organizing the meeting are willing to hear us.

This is the way I see myself carrying out my duties for the people of my riding and our country. I urge that this question of privilege be rejected in order to further confirm the validity of the kind of role I have outlined, not just for myself but for all members of this House who are striving to work in the interests of all the people of their ridings and all the people of Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was speaking, I heard some members behind me saying, "This man should be in the government". I say no, he has been too honest, too frank and shows too much ability to be in the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The parliamentary secretary launched his attack in an attempt to recoup the ground he lost some time ago. He lost it when in a moment of honest exasperation he launched an attack against ministers. Now he attempts to work his way back into the favour of the ministry and I must assume that he spoke with the knowledge and approval of the government House leader and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If they disapprove of what he said, they will say so. If they say nothing, I take it that they not only countenance what the parliamentary secretary said, but initiated the move which he made today.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is only stony silence on the government benches.

Mr. Baldwin: What we have heard today is the first chapter of the book "Reid on How to Muzzle Ex-cabinet Ministers". Considering the reaction we have obtained, I suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who appears not to be paying attention but who I know is listening closely, should fire other cabinet ministers. Heaven only knows what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) might say about financial questions, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about transportation, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) about some of the problems he has encountered. What a great parliament this would be, Mr. Speaker, if these ministers made forthright, frank and honest statements. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) might really tell us what he knows about energy.

Mr. Dinsdale: That would be a short speech.

Mr. Baldwin: We could hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) speak on eggs. What a revelation that would be.

Having disposed of these preliminaries, let me say that I associate myself with the cogent, learned and intelligent remarks to which we just listened by the hon. member for Windsor West. The parliamentary secretary's argument respecting the rules of this House, of the other place and of the English parliament only apply when there is a need to demand compulsory attendance of a member in the other place. There should not be and must not be anything in our rules which in any way provides that a member of this place or of the other place shall not appear voluntarily as a witness before a committee dealing with a bill or any subject. A member should be free to give any such committee the benefit of his advice.

Election to this House should not preclude our being called as witnesses or at least appearing voluntarily before committees of the other place and giving those committees the benefit of our experience. Any suggestion to the contrary should not be countenanced, and surely Your Honour will not accept such arguments. I suggest that the rules which have been quoted provide, under certain conditions, for compulsory attendance. For example, if the parliamentary secretary were called as a witness before a committee of the other place and he did not wish to attend, there are certain ways in which his attendance might be compelled. On the other hand, I suggest it would be completely wrong to say that a member of this House should not have the right to appear before a committee.

Ministers appear regularly. Ministers sponsoring bills or wishing to introduce white papers and green papers which are discussed in the other place appear before committees of the other place and give their reasons for sponsoring what they are doing. If they can appear before a committee and speak in support of a bill, why in the name of heaven cannot a member of the opposition or even a member on the government side speak against the bill and oppose it?

For these reasons, as well as the other cogent reasons advanced by the hon. member for Windsor West, I urge Your Honour to throw this matter out of the window as far as it can possibly be thrown.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things which the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said in his defence which might well be commented on initially. First, the hon. member seemed to be in some doubt as to whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) had given the proper and necessary notice. I take it that since Your Honour recognized the hon. member on this question of privilege, he must have met the rule in this connection.

● (1440)

In the second place, I notice that the hon. member for Windsor West, like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), was concerned about the quoting of rules which apply in the parliament at Westminster. I submit we do not need to fall back on any of the traditions and procedures of that parliament, but that the rules and practice of our own parliament are a sufficient guide to us in a case of this kind. The third thing the hon. member for Windsor West said in his own defence was that a member of this House, even after a matter had been decided by the House, surely had the right to keep an issue alive. All I can say is this: surely the Senate is the last place one would go in an attempt to keep an issue alive!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My main concern about the action of the hon. member for Windsor West and any others who might like to imitate him arises from the fact that my hon. friends and I believe in democracy. We believe in the authority of this House because we are elected by the people to concern ourselves with the affairs of the country, and for an elected member to go to plead his case against this House before a non-elected body is, I submit, a denial of the principle of democracy. I hope that other hon. members who believe they have a right to follow suit will think twice before they do so.

It is no secret that I do not regard the Senate as having moral authority in our parliamentary system, and it is because my hon. friends and I take this view that we think it is wrong to have dealings with that House or its committees in the manner indicated by the hon. member for Windsor West. The hon. member commented that if it was wrong for him to go over there, why was it wrong for a minister to appear on the floor of the Senate or before a Senate committee. The hon. member is a lawyer and I am surprised he does not appear to be aware that there is a Standing Order of the other place permitting ministers to appear on the floor of the Senate or before Senate committees. But there is no rule or any formal arrangement for private members to go over there. My hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), in his usual profound and succinct way, has just stated the whole case by saying: "It was dumb for him to go". When this parliament was set up—

Mr. Gray: Would the hon. member permit a question? A few moment ago he referred to a Standing Order of the Senate. Do I understand that a man with his view of the Senate is citing an order of the Senate?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad to find that my view of the Senate is well known. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that even though I have no use for the Senate as an institution, I have the right to ask the Senate to abide by its own rules.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Fairweather: In support of your own weak argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The rules of the Senate are definite enough when prescribing the conditions under which its own members and staff may come to this House. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River read from Standing Order 104, to be found on page 50 of the latest edition of the rules of the other place. This is not something out of the Middle Ages; this bears the date December, 1969. This is what the other place has set down in its rules regarding members of that place who come over here without permission of the Senate. I shall not read the whole of the Standing Order. I like this one, though:

104(3) Without such leave, a senator, officer, clerk or servant of the Senate shall not, on any account, under penalty of being committed to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod or to prison during the pleasure of the Senate—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

—go down to the House of Commons, or send his answer in writing, or by counsel to answer any accusation there.

Note, they always put it that way—"go down to the House of Commons": they do not say "go over". If that is the attitude of the Senate toward one of its own members coming over here, I suggest the Senate should treat our members in the same way and not invite them to go over there. There is, of course, the rule which provides that a minister of the Crown may appear over there. But there are no rules which provide for individual members of this House to go to the other place.

Our parliament was set up with the two Houses placed on a formal arm's length relationship to each other. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has cited Standing Order 22 of our rules and Standing Order 50 of the Senate rules. I do not wish or need to repeat them. These are the rules which provide for the course to be followed when there is disagreement between the two Houses. That disagreement has to be a disagreement between the Houses as such; we take our decision here, they take their decision there, and when we do not agree there are arrangements for messages to be sent back and forth, for conferences, and so on. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what sort of chaos would we get into if every time a bill in this House is passed in the face of a considerable body of objection, all of those in this chamber who do not like it were to traipse over there—

An hon. Member: That is up to the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We in our party won't do it because we have no use for the other place. But am I to understand that if the Conservatives vote against clause 4 of Bill C-49 when it comes before us this afternoon, and if they lose and the bill carries with that particular clause in it, every one of the 95 Conservatives would try to go to the Senate or appear before a Senate committee to try to get their Honours to agree that the view of the House of Commons was wrong?

The right to appear before the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Bar Association or any of these other associations, to go out on the hustings, to go on radio and television, write letters to the editor, make speeches, all of that certainly is part of the right of a member of parliament to try to keep an issue alive, but I suggest that to try to keep it alive by going to the morgue at the other end of this building is to deny the whole proposition that we are part of a democratic society.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We seem to be complaining about an action which has been taken by a member of this House. I do not blame him if he feels inclined to find a way to press his ideas. I just think he chose the wrong way. He is a very capable member and has shown this very clearly, especially since he left the cabinet. I hope he will keep on doing it. But I do not regard his judgment as very sound in deciding that that is the best way to try to advance his cause. We seem to be criticizing the hon. member for Windsor West, but I rise mainly to criticize the other place. I think the members of the Senate have no right, knowing the rules they have in their books—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —knowing the rules that are in both our books providing for formal relationships between the two Houses, either to invite the hon. member over or to consent to his going over. This short-circuit procedure gets around all the established arrangements. I agree there are not as many rules as one might look for either in their Standing Orders or in ours, or in Beauchesne, but it is clear that the arrangements between the two Houses are on a formal basis. When an individual member of this House or of the other place goes to the other House to try to say that the decision made in his own House is wrong, that is in violation of the way that these two places work. On top of that, my main point is that I do not think it is appropriate for any member of this democratically elected body to go pleading his case before an unelected and unrepresentative body such as the Senate of Canada.

● (1450)

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the matter of privilege on which you are being asked to rule has in my opinion serious implications for private members of this House and for the future of the committee systems both of the other place and of this House.

I listened with a good deal of interest to the argument of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I must say I agree with him that the rules in the two Houses should be parallel with regard to the appearance of a member of one House before a committee or any other emanation of the other House. But there is one matter on which I fundamentally disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. His views on the Senate are very well known, but I do not think they should colour the approach to a rational division of labour between the various committees of the Senate and those of this House.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) attempted to make a distinction in his remarks. He said that he thought it would be in order for members of this place to appear before certain types of committees of the other place. He referred to the committee on the mass media and the committee on poverty, and said that it would not, in his opinion, be proper for members of this place to appear before Senate committees dealing with matters which might come, in the ordinary course of events, before a committee of this place. Such a distinction would be almost impossible to administer, and in my opinion would be meaningless. Certainly the wide-ranging activities of the committee on poverty could well anticipate legislation which would arise in this place.

There is one even more fundamental matter which I hope Your Honour will consider. For example, there is in existence today a committee of the other place looking at cannabis legislation. I understand there are members of the House of Commons who have views on the subject and would like to testify; if I am wrong in this respect, I have been misinformed. In my opinion, it is only fair and proper that an opportunity to give what might be lengthy testimony should be afforded members of parliament if they seek permission in the proper way to appear before the other place, in which case it should be granted.

We are all seeking today to make the committee system work. It is overburdened and encumbered with work. There are conflicts arising over time of meetings, there are difficulties in getting the attendance of members in different places. When a committee structure exists in both the Senate and in this House, and there is a means by which some rational, informal division of labour regarding hearings in the early stage of legislation can take place, then it seems to me prudent that the rules should permit the members of this House to appear before the other place.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this question of privilege, because it has just been stated that the standing orders of the House of Commons are not similar to the Standing rules of the Senate.

It is understandable, Mr. Speaker. If the democratically elected members were not allowed to act freely at the government level, if within a party, as several people have suggested, a dictatorship would prevent a member from acting as the people's representative, democracy would be hindered.

It is not so as far as the Senate is concerned, Mr. Speaker. Restrictions can be laid down in the Senate. It has been pointed out that the consent of the Senate is absolutely necessary to testify before a committee of the House of Commons. Indeed, senators are not elected, but they are political appointees. Thus the Senate can be entrusted with some duties. The politicians can summon the senators, who are not democratically elected but are appointed as a political reward. This can explain the difference between the standing orders of the two Houses.

To prevent a member or a minister from testifying before a Senate committee would merely be an impediment to democratic freedom, because a backbencher is as democratically elected as a minister or the prime minister and he should thus be also entitled to testify before those committees.

Such is the difference which I wanted to point out between the standing orders of the House of Commons and the standing rules of the Senate. I think that members of this House are democratically elected while Senators are political appointees.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that almost daily, in one way or another, we are talking about matters relating to our procedures prior to the question period. It is getting to the point where much of the time of this House is being taken up with matters relating to the rules of the House. Unless we want to waste all our time in this chamber talking on points of order, points of procedure and questions of privilege, something will have to be done, and done quickly, to remedy the situation. At the same time, I think this House owes the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) a debt of gratitude for having brought before the House one of the really key issues concerning any parliament, one that goes to the heart of this parliament—that is, freedom of speech.

Any time we hear a parliamentary secretary raising a question of privilege, he is speaking on behalf of the government, indicating the government's point of view. In this particular instance he was indicating the government's approach to the rules and to the procedures of this House, and he indicated that when discussions take place before a committee, a very hard line will be taken by the government to gag members, no matter what party they belong to, on whatever issue they wish to speak. They will be prevented from putting forward their points of view on anything that is of value and significance to the Canadian people and to the development of this nation.

One of the points that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River seems to ignore is that we are members of parliament and that parliament consists of two Houses, not of one. It consists of this House and the one the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wishes to ignore, degrade or eliminate if possible. Whatever the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre feels about the other place, I want to tell him that he is much better when he rises to his feet to argue, in this tribune of the people, for freedom of speech than when he is trying to gag a member who wants to put his point of view before the Canadian people on matters of interest to the Canadian public.

We in this chamber should do everything in our power to see that the public is kept fully aware of every member's point of view on every piece of legislation, no matter whether he be in this or some other chamber. Further, the government has indicated on more than one occasion in this parliament that it intends to initiate more legislation in the other chamber. Therefore, that chamber should be aware of the particular points of view of its members, especially those with expertise in a certain area.

I do not think I have to go into the merits of the matter since the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) did that so well. I suggest we should support his remarks.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have been many contributions of great value to this interesting point. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was allowed some latitude in talking about support of freedom of speech as opposed to the technical question in respect of which we really are dealing, but I would hesitate to allow other members to debate that subject as well. In spite of the importance of that topic and the fundamental principles it involves, we are really dealing here with a procedural question. There have been some interesting parallels drawn, but the fact of the matter is that there seem to be two questions involved. The first question is whether there is anything in the regulations of this House or its precedents to prevent the action which has been discussed, that is a member appearing before a committee of the other House. The second point is, if that is not so does such an appearance constitute such an affront to this Chamber it ought to be considered a question of privilege, or ought to be prevented in some way. Basically, those are the two questions involved.

If other hon. members want to contribute, I hope they will confine themselves to those questions. Otherwise, I would propose to reserve on the matter and deliver judgment as soon as I can put together all the precedents and regulations that have been cited.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have just one point to add to my support of the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Apparently he was thinking only of the 124 members of the opposition who might want to run to the Senate committee to present their points of view.

In the case of Bill C-29, which is the subject that gave rise to this particular matter, I have done considerable work, but because of a conflict of committee commitments I was unable to appear before the justice committee. I accepted the decision of this House when that bill was given third reading. I suggest that is the issue; whether we do or do not, as members, accept a majority decision of this House.

When the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) appeared before the Senate committee, I applied to appear before that same committee to present a contrary argument. The issue before us is not just whether members of the opposition should fly to the Senate to plead their arguments, but whether any of us should go to plead the arguments we were supposed to plead before our own standing committees of this House.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I will try to follow your stricture about narrowing the focus, and plead guilty to appearing informally before a Senate committee last week. I regret that I did not think it necessary to call the member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) to ascertain whether he would give me permission. The issue before the foreign affairs committee of the Senate last week was that of international relations, in particular having to do with provinces and states, and how they get together under the umbrella of the accords of the national governments of our respective countries.

As I have had a little bit of experience in doing that for New Brunswick and the State of Maine, I was invited to attend. I listened to Premier Richard Hatfield, who I do not think called the member for Kenora-Rainy River either to see whether he could appear, and I thought with great respect to Premier Hatfield he covered the issue very well. However, should the Senate feel there is something more I could say about this particular issue I would be glad to go again.

There are many precedents for this. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), for example, when he was the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development invited many members of parliament to initiate action before the commissions having to do with national parks development plans. It was at the minister's own invitation that members of parliament appeared before commissions in various parts of the country, giving their points of view, without in any way being inhibited by any strange rule.

I really thought today that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) got a little bit mixed. With great respect to him, he has well-known views about the Senate, but they have nothing to do with members of parliament using whatever avenue is at their disposal. The CRTC, a non-elected group, often receives representations, I would hope, from members of parliament. I have appeared before the CRTC asking for improved television in northeastern New Brunswick, for example, and there was no thought at all about infringing the rules of this parliament. I agree with the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that this involves using whatever avenues exist, be they the Senate, the CRTC, boards or commissions or, strangely enough, once in awhile this very Chamber in which we are debating this issue today.

INFORMATION

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF EXPENDITURES ON INFORMATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, because the 28 per cent increase in federal government expenditures in one year demands urgent action by parliament to control spending, and because one of the most outlandish expenditures is the amount spent on maintaining 863 information officers, plus the money spent on contracts with freelance speech writers, public relations consultants and advertising agencies, I move under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the whole subject of government expenditures on information be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and that this committee be instructed to report to parliament on what is the total amount of such expenditures, since without this over-view there will be no way of controlling profligate promotion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE DELIVERY OF MAIL BY SETTING STRIKE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the fact that business establishments across Canada are suffering due to curtailment of the postal service, in particular small businesses, the backbone of our economy, which depend wholly on regular mail delivery, and their very existence is now being jeopardized by postal walkouts. For the sake of our economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the government, through the President of the Treasury Board and/or the Postmaster General, request the post office members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada to begin immediately and continue delivery of all business mail, or force the return of the over-all mail delivery by introducing back to work legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The motion being presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR GUIDELINES CONCERNING GIFTS TO PRIME MINISTER, CABINET MINISTERS AND THEIR WIVES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek leave of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising from a statement by a member of the staff in the Prime Minister's office early in January to the effect that guidelines would be issued in respect of possible conflicts of interest by the acceptance of gifts before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left on his European trip.

An hon. Member: What is his name?

Mr. Cossitt: I wish I knew his name, but the Prime Minister's staff has always hidden behind anonymity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the House requests the Prime Minister and the government to make public in this House, as promised before the Prime Minister leaves this week on his European trip, conflict of interest guidelines in regard to gifts received by, or offered to, the Prime Minister, members of the Cabinet and their wives.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF SAFETY REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the irresponsible and embarrassing attitude of Canadian airlines and ministry of transport officials toward the enforcement of air safety regulations.

● (1510)

In view of the fact that it has now been publicly disclosed that the apparent slogan governing the actions of Canadian airlines and DOT officials towards the implementation and enforcement of air safety standards is "safety doesn't sell tickets"—an attitude which implicity endangers the well-being of the Canadian air travelling public—and because the federal Ministry of Transport has been reported as incapable of administering safety regulations and prefers to "look the other way" when these rules are ignored I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House do now authorize the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications to inquire into and make recommendations on the implementation of Canadian air safety regulations, and that the minister be instructed to immediately take the necessary steps to improve this situation, with a view to ensuring the safety of the Canadian air travelling public.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, even giving him the benefit of the doubt, surely his description of the general situation as opposed to a specific incident of urgent and pressing necessity would disqualify his motion under the Standing Order.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1975-76

REFERENCE OF ITEMS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion pursuant to Standing Order 59 which refers the estimates to the several standing committees of the House. It is a very long motion that has been in the hands of members of the opposition for a few days, and I believe is in the hands of the Clerk at the Table. Perhaps I might, therefore, avoid reading it and simply point out one or two changes of substance that might help the House.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that, as suggested by the President of the Privy Council, the motion be tabled as read and printed in Hansard?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The motion above referred to is as follows:]

Motion Pursuant to Standing Order 59

That the Estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House, as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

Agriculture Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, L30, L35, 40, 45, 50, 55, 60 and 65

National Revenue Votes 1 and 5

Privy Council Vote 20

To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry:

Environment Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, L20, 25, 30 and 35

To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs:

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30

National Health and Welfare Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, 55 and 60

Urban Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, L20, 25, 30 and L35

To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Indian Affairs and Northern Development Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, L20, 25, 30, 35, L40, L45, L50, L55, L60, 65, 70, 75 and L80

To the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs:

Justice Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30

Solicitor General Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25

To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration:

Labour Votes 1 and 5

Manpower and Immigration Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30

To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates:

Finance Vote 15

Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors Vote 1

Parliament Votes 1, 5 and 10

Privy Council Votes 1, 5, 15 and 25

Science and Technology Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 40

Secretary of State Vote 115

Supply and Services Votes 1, 5, L10, 15, 20 and 25

Treasury Board Votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20

To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works:

Energy, Mines and Resources Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, L45, L50, 55, 60, 65 and 70

Public Works Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, L30, 35, 40, 45 and 50

To the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Privy Council Vote 10

To the Standing Committee on Regional Development:

Regional Economic Expansion Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, L20, 25, 30 and L35

To the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications:

Post Office Votes 1 and 5

Transport Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, L35, 40, 45, 50, L55, 60, L65, L70, L75, 80, 85, 90, L95, L100, 105 and 110

To the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs:

Veterans Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50 and 55

Mr. Sharp: For the guidance of members, may I say that in substance the motion is the same as in previous years with two exceptions. It is proposed that all Department of Communications estimates now go to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which formerly received only the CRTC part of the estimates, and that parliament's estimates be designated the miscellaneous estimates so that the procedure committee can proceed with the reference that was approved the other day.

In form, there are some slight differences. For example, Vote 10 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer would now be Privy Council Vote 10. In other words, the chapter headings from the blue book are used. This will make it easier for members and committee personnel to find the items.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we are quite agreeable to this procedure, but I want to repeat the reservation I uttered last Friday that this is done without prejudice to our right to continue to urge that we may hopefully make this House a better, livelier and brighter place by bringing back to the House from time to time some of the estimates. Negotiations are going on now which I hope will end with this result. I just want to say that the motion, to which we agree, is contingent—and I cannot propose that it be made a rule because there can be no amendment—upon the fact that the government and the other parties are willing to work out an agreement of this kind, which I think will be in the interest of the House, of the people, and of the passage of supply by this House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to this motion on the same terms. In other words, it is already settled that we will have a meeting tomorrow to discuss the arrangements suggested by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the government House leader if he is prepared to give the House an assurance because of the provisions of Standing Order 58(14) which reads:

... Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

This applies to the examination of the estimates. Because of the provisions of the Standing Order, and because of the fact that we have in front of us now more than $28 billion worth of estimates, I think the House is entitled to have some assurance from the government,—when we consider, for example, that we have barely two months left in which to examine these estimates and many of the standing committees of the House are now charged with a fairly heavy legislative program—that each committee will be given ample time to examine the estimates so as to ensure that no committee will be charged with examining the estimates one week before cut-off time; and second, that ministers of the House will attend the committees' meetings so that committees may examine ministers on questions of policy which heretofore has not been possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the President of the Privy Council proposes to make any comment on that question, I should point out to hon. members that Standing Order 59, under which the motion is being put, reads as follows:

A motion, to be decided without debate or amendment, may be moved ...

I know of no other interpretation of the procedure we are proposing to follow by allowing questions of the minister except that it would constitute some sort of debate. If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) proposes to make some comment at this stage, I would like to make it perfectly clear that there is no machinery whereby, without the unanimous consent of the House, we can open up the subject for debate at this time.

I allowed the two House leaders of the opposition parties to indicate, in the usual way, that they were prepared to accept the motion. This is customary and permissible. However, I should make it quite clear that I have no power to open up the matter for debate. This motion will have to be passed without debate or amendment.

Mr. Sharp: Having in mind your comments that we should not participate in a debate, may I assure the hon. member that so far as ministers are concerned I have warned them that they are to consider this their first priority so that they can attend the committees.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion put forward by the President of the Privy Council and under those terms agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE OF GREEN PAPER TO SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

February 21, 1975—The President of the Privy Council—the following proposed motion:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider the green paper on immigration policy tabled by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the House of Commons on February 3, 1975; and to invite the views of the public on the issues raised therein;

Order Paper Questions

That 15 members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date be members on the part of this House on the Special Joint Committee;

That the committee have power to appoint from among its members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of advisers to assist in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required;

That the committee submit their report not later than July 31, 1975;

That the quorum of the committee be 12 members whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 6 members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 241, 351, 483, 519, 1,054, 1,055, 1,056, 1,057, 1,058, 1,059, 1060, 1,061, 1,062, 1,063, 1,064, 1,065, 1,066, 1,067, 1,068, 1,069, 1,070, 1,071, 1,072, 1,073, 1,074, 1,075, 1,076, 1077, 1,078, 1,137, 1,218, 1,229, 1,230, 1,239, 1,258, 1,262, 1,264, 1,281, 1,299, 1,311, 1,313, 1,315, and 1,366.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 428, 728, 975, and 1,186 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CANADIAN FOREIGN POLICY

Question No. 241—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. Ivan Head, Foreign Policy Advisor to the Prime Minister, make a statement to members of the Press on Wednesday, September 25, 1974 to the effect that Canada will pursue an activist left wing role in foreign affairs?

2. Did the Prime Minister make a statement to the Press on Tuesday, October 1, 1974 to the effect that it is "pure fiction" that Canada will pursue an activist left wing role in foreign affairs?

[Mr. Speaker.]

3. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs make a statement in an interview with newspaperman Duart Farquharson confirming that Canada will pursue an activist left wing role in foreign affairs?

4. What are all the reasons for these apparent discrepancies?

5. Will the Prime Minister, Mr. Ivan Head and the Secretary of State for External Affairs be meeting together in the near future for the purpose of arriving at an agreed on foreign policy for Canada and, if so, will this policy be, or will it not be, an activist left wing role in foreign affairs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):

1. No.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. In the light of the answers to Parts 1, 2 and 3, Part 4 is non-applicable.

5. Part 5, like Part 4, is non-applicable.

ATTENDANCE OF PERSONS FROM FRANCE AS FACULTY MEMBERS OR STUDENTS AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 351—Mr. Jones:

1. How many persons from France attended universities in Canada from the years 1964 to 1973 in lieu of serving in military service in France (a) as students (b) as members of the staff or faculty?

2. How many persons from France are attending universities in Canada as members of the staff or faculty or as students in lieu of serving in military service in France?

3. At what universities did the persons mentioned in Parts 1 and 2 attend?

4. What were the numbers in attendance in each of the years 1964 to 1973 at the respective Canadian universities?

5. What (a) financial assistance (b) other assistance was rendered by the government to carry out this programme and, in each case, what was the total cost for each of the years 1963 to 1973 inclusive?

6. What other countries have similar arrangements?

7. What department of government and which Ministers are responsible for the conduct and operation of such programmes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1, 2, 3 and 4. Persons entering Canada temporarily as a result of a cultural agreement between the Government of the French Republic and the Government of the Province of Quebec must simply fulfil the immigration requirements appropriate to their category of entry. The Department of Manpower and Immigration treats each entrant as an individual case, therefore no group information or statistics are available for persons related to this agreement.

5. The Department of Manpower and Immigration provides no financial assistance in this regard.

6. The Government of Canada has no similar agreements with any country.

7. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned with this program only insofar as ensuring that individual members meet the appropriate immigration requirements.

NUMBER OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES WORKING IN HULL, QUEBEC AND SURROUNDING COUNTIES

Question No. 483—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total number of government employees working in Hull, Quebec and in the surrounding counties at the end of the fiscal year (a) March 31, 1968 (b) March 31, 1974?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a) 2,095; (b) 4,769.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 519—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Has Canada imported any butter during the first eight months of 1974 and, if so, how many pounds were imported and in which months?

2. (a) From which countries were the imports made (b) how many pounds were imported from each country (c) what was the price per pound?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: 1 and 2. Imports of butter into Canada during the first eight months of 1974 amounted to 24,949,700 pounds for a value of $13,505,000. A further breakdown of these totals by country of consignment by month is provided on the attached table.

Imports of Butter—January to August 1974

	Total	24,949,700	13,505,000	0.54

On account of rounding, individual differences may arise between totals and sums of constituent items.

DREE—GRANT TO WALTHAM CREATIVE PRINTING, ARNPRIOR

Question No. 1,054—Mr. Dick:

1. Was a Department of Regional Economic Expansion grant made to Waltham Creative Printing of Arnprior, Ontario, in the constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton within the specially designated Renfrew-Pembroke area and, if so (a) on what date was the offer made (b) what amount was the offer (c) how many jobs did the offer contemplate (d) was the offer accepted (e) did the amount of the offer change and, if so, what was the new amount?

2. How much has been paid to the Company and on what dates?

3. Of the total capital invested in the new enterprise, what percentage was private capital and, of this, what percentage was (a) in equity (b) debt financing?

4. Is the Company now a going concern, in receivership or did it go bankrupt and, if a going concern, do the original private investors still have control?

5. How many employees does the Company now have?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, an offer of incentive assistance was made to the company. (a) An Agreement was entered into, pursuant to the Govern-

ANNUAL INTEREST ROYALTY CHARGED ON UNPAID ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Are any departments, other than the Department of Transport, presently engaged in charging on their over-due accounts an annual interest-penalty representing 120 per cent of the unpaid accounts and, if so (a) which ones (b) on what dates were these rates established?

2. Are any agencies, departments or other bodies established by the Crown presently engaged in charging a monthly penalty of 10 per cent as is the case with the National Harbours Board as indicated in answer to Question No. 455, on accounts unpaid and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows: 1 and 2. No.

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF INDIVIDUALS HIRED SINCE 1964

Question No. 1,218—Mr. Rondeau:

1. From 1964 to date, how many persons were hired to fill (a) new positions (b) vacancies in each department and Crown corporation?

2. How many of these were previously employed in the field of journalism?

3. What is (a) the date of employment (b) the name (c) the annual salary and expense allowance (d) the type of employment of such persons mentioned in Part 2?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The government does not maintain records which would enable it to trade the subsequent careers of those who at one time were employed in the field of journalism. In order to answer this question, it would be necessary to review the personal files of every individual employed in the Public Service of Canada. In view of the workload involved, the government does not feel justified in undertaking such a review.

CPR—MONTREAL-LAKESHORE COMMUTER

Question No. 1,229—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the Canadian Pacific Railway commuter service along the Lakeshore from Montreal sustain heavy losses?

2. Is this commuter service subsidized by any government body or is the loss borne 100 per cent by CP Rail?

3. What steps are being considered in the form of legislation, subsidy or other means to improve the service so as to encourage greater use of public transportation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: Yes. The service is not subsidized by any government body; the loss is borne 100 per cent by CP Rail.

Ministry of Transport advises as follows: During the summer of 1974 the government announced a capital assistance program designed to enable transit authorities to expand and upgrade their services to Canadian communities, thereby encouraging greater use of public transportation. Policy work on this initiative which encompass both commuter rail and urban transit systems is currently in its final stages.

ANNUAL BUDGETS FOR CANADIAN CULTURAL CENTRES IN PARIS, BRUSSELS AND LONDON

Question No. 1,230—Mr. Bawden:

1. What are the annual individual budgets for the Canadian cultural centres in (a) London, England (b) Paris, France (c) Brussels, Belgium?

2. If there is a difference between the budgets allocated to these centres, what is the reason?

3. Is the hand-out literature in all three centres bilingual and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The budgets for the 1974-75 fiscal year of the above centres mentioned are: (a) London, $97,800; (b) Paris, $130,000; (c) Brussels, $15,000.

2. The Cultural Centre in Paris was established in a building separate from the Embassy in 1970 and has a developing programme which includes concerts, art exhibitions, film presentations, seminars, etc. The Cultural and Information Centre in Brussels, which was created in 1974, is physically part of the Embassy Chancery, and consists of a multiple purpose room for art exhibitions, seminars, film screenings, etc., a music room and a library. The facilities are limited in size and the scope of the programme is modest. In London there is not yet a Cultural Centre as such. The facilities at present available at Canada House consist of a library and an art gallery which was established in the general reception area of the Chancery. Other programmes will be developed when additional space can be converted appropriately for concerts, film showings, lectures, seminars and the like.

[Mr. Sharp.]

3. The hand-out literature of Canadian origin which is made available to all three locations is bilingual. The libraries concerned contain books in English and in French. Catalogues, releases, periodicals and news-letters produced locally are normally in the language or languages of the publics to which they are addressed.

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) 5,968; (b) 6,271.

2. 1974: (a) 4,268; (b) 1,452; (c) 204; (d) 44; 1975: (a) 3,557; (b) 2,253; (c) 416; (d) 45.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of National Revenue on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) 19,403; (b) 20,471.

2. 1974: (a) 8,115; (b) 10,733; (c) 514; (d) 41; 1975: (a) 6,952; (b) 12,824; (c) 639; (d) 56.

DAVIES APIARIES—COMPENSATION CLAIM FOR DAMAGES

Question No. 1,366—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Agriculture receive a letter dated January 3 from the Member of Parliament for Leeds on the subject of a claim for damages against the government by Davies Apiaries and, if so, has this letter been answered and, if not, for what reason?

2. What action is the government taking to bring about immediate settlement of this long over due claim?

3. Is the Minister aware of the difficulties being created for Davies Apiaries by the fact that the government has allowed many months to go by without settling this matter and will the government take immediate action to see that this taxpayer receives the attention to which he is entitled?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. See answer to Question 887. Inasmuch as the claim made by Davies Apiaries involves the question of legal liability of the Crown and an aerial spray company for the damages allegedly sustained by Davies Apiaries, it is considered that no further comments should be made pending judicial determination or a settlement of the claim.

[Mr. Paproski.]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

NAMES OF BOARDS, COMMISSIONS AND CROWN CORPORATIONS WHICH REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Question No. 428—Mr. Reid:

What are the names of all agencies, boards, commissions, Crown corporations, presently in operation who report (a) to Parliament directly through a Cabinet Minister (b) to a Cabinet Minister through a Deputy Head?

Return tabled.

LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 728—Mr. Herbert:

Are public servants listing French as their mother tongue presently taking government sponsored training in the French language and, if so, how many such persons are there in the National Capital Region and what is the reasoning for giving such instruction?

Return tabled.

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OF COMPARATIVE CRIMINOLOGY, UNIVERSITY OF MONTREAL

Question No. 975—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What are all the contributions provided by the government, including the Department of the Solicitor General and the Canadian International Development Agency, to the International Centre of Comparative Criminology at the University of Montreal?

2. What reports have been prepared as a result of these expenditures?

3. (a) Has the Centre, as alleged by the March 11, 1972 edition of the French language publication Perspectives, sent advisors to train the police forces of certain African or South American totalitarian regimes (b) what role did these persons play in the Centre's study of Canadian police, under a reputed grant of $150,000 from the Department of the Solicitor General?

4. (a) What have been the positions of Alice Parizeau at the Centre and what is her relationship to leading separatist Jacques Parizeau (b) what role did she play in the recent study of police in Canada, paid for by the Department of the Solicitor General (c) is the Centre involved in providing surveillance (i) of students at the University of Montreal or elsewhere (ii) of Canadian law enforcement activities (d) what roles have members of the Police Security Planning and Analysis Group, formerly the Security Planning and Research Group, of the Department of the Solicitor General and Canadian Defence officials taken in the Centre's activities?

Return tabled.

PROJECTS APPROVED AS A RESULT OF RECOMMENDATION BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Korchinski:

In each constituency, how many projects were accepted as a result of recommendations made by constituency advisory groups or Members of Parliament?

Return tabled.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, similar to one which I have raised before, concerning certain unanswered questions on a subject that always seems to be so popular on the other side of the House. I refer to question No. 1,145 asking for information concerning the Prime Minister's second opulent $80,000 Cadillac purchased from public funds, and I refer to questions Nos. 1,232, 1,233, and 1,294 on the subject of the mysterious and luxurious swimming pool at Sussex Drive regarding which I have asked for the names of the donors, whether the Prime Minister himself is a donor, and whether the donors are being allowed to deduct the full amount of their donations, regardless of size, for income tax purposes.

It seems to me that these questions have been outstanding long enough for answers to have been prepared, and I think that before the Prime Minister leaves for Europe it would not be too much to expect him to stop hiding legitimate information behind non-answers and flippant replies.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REASON FOR REMOVAL OF PRICE CEILING AND BASING PRICE INCREASES ON SEPTEMBER, 1973

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of a press release which he issued on Friday morning on a subject which was of sufficient importance to announce in the House rather than sneak it into the press gallery. I want to ask him a question with reference to his agreement to remove the price ceilings upon petroleum products, and more particularly I want to ask him why he has agreed to allow the oil companies to raise their prices to reflect increased costs of gasoline, home heating fuel and related products on the basis of their cost in 1973 in view of the fact that 1974 was a bonanza year for the oil industry and that Gulf Oil Company showed profits that year of an increase of 61 per cent, although their sales revenue went up by only 50 per cent. I want to ask the minister why it was necessary to remove these price ceilings on petroleum products, and particularly why they were based on September, 1973.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the hon. gentleman's opening comment, he may recall if he looks back, that in May of 1974 when a similar authorization was permitted for non-crude costs, it was handled in the same way, that is to say, by Telex to the trade after informing the provincial ministers and then by the press release.

With regard to the non-crude costs involved since 1973, as the hon. gentleman would realize upon reflection, there have been these increases both in the costs of labour, other inputs in the refining process, and in particular of significance for the independent dealers, additional costs in transportation. It is on the basis of that, since they have not been able to take advantage of passing on these costs except for the increase allowed last May, that we reflect right back to that date, and that using that as the base date for monitoring their increases, they will of course not be permitted to go beyond the actual costs encountered, and which of course we will audit.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—SUGGESTION COMPANIES DEMONSTRATE NEED FOR PRICE INCREASE—METHOD OF MONITORING PRICE INCREASES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the minister is concerned about any increased cost or alleged increase in cost for refining and marketing the petroleum products, I want to ask the minister why he has not required the companies to demonstrate in each case where they want an increase in price that increased costs actually warrant an increase in the price of gasoline, home heating fuel and bunker 'C', rather than removing the ceiling completely and leaving the Canadian consumers at the mercy of the oil industry without any defence whatsoever.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We have required the companies to do that. It was on the basis of these particular cost figures that the decision was made. The cost figures varied so much from company to company and from sector to sector that rather than allowing a single increase, as was allowed in May of last year, it was decided it was preferable to allow each individual refinery to take the increases which it had alleged had occurred in that period of time, to monitor those in the case of each particular company and to let competition take care of the level between them.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister has said that he is going to monitor those increases. I would like to ask the Minister what agency in his department will do the monitoring, whether they will monitor each individual company which raises its price, on what basis will he allocate the increased cost to gasoline, to home heating fuel and to bunker 'C', what share of the cost will go to each of these commodities, and on what basis will he allow increased costs for marketing. Is this to include the political advertising now being carried on by Imperial Oil? If the Canadian people are going to pay more for petroleum products, surely they have a right to know from the minister how they are going to be protected, what monitoring will take place and what actual cost increases will be allowed to be reflected in the price which Canadians have to pay.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the monitoring system has been fully described to the parliamentary committee, and the process followed by my department and the Energy Supplies Allocation Board have been fully set out along with provision for audit. I appreciate the question, however, and in the first place the department seeks and obtains the lists of posted prices from the individual refiners. We also obtain net revenue per gallon for major products such as gasoline and heating products from major wholesalers. We have commissioned a special Statistics Canada report on indexed price information related to petroleum products, and it is prepared for the department on a monthly basis.

We survey as well all large industrial and commercial consumers as to whether they believe that their supplier has been conforming to the federal product price guidelines. There has been a very high response level. They have, in many cases, confirmed our previous knowledge. As well, we intend to initiate periodic surveys at the dealer level and there have, since the program started, been audits of all eleven companies made, and no major discrepancies have been uncovered between costs and actual prices charged.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REASON FOR ALLOWING PRICE INCREASES RATHER THAN CHANGING NON-DEDUCTIBILITY PROVISION FOR ROYALTIES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I would like to follow along the same line of questioning as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and ask the minister quite succinctly whether he would please explain to the House, in his sudden concern for oil company cost increases, why he has chosen to place further pressure upon the Canadian consumer by authorizing home heating oil and related fuel price increases and refused instead, in conjunction with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, to alleviate the cash problems and cost increases of the petroleum companies by eliminating the non-deductibility of provincial petroleum royalties clauses in Bill C-49 now under study by the committee of the whole House. Why did he choose that method against the consumer and not take a reasonable method in reference to this tax situation raised in my question?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. gentleman's question ignores the very important fact that a critical section of the Canadian petroleum industry is made up of the independents, particularly the independent wholesalers, and that in order to keep this section viable—and they, of course would not have the benefit of any production income as the majors do—it is important to have the allowable cost structure bear some relationship to the actual costs which have been incurred.

The debate on the tax bill has been an extensive one. We feel on the whole that there is a fair share of the revenue being received by these companies which should go to the national purse, that there is a fair share which should go to the provincial purse, and it is fair enough to leave some in the hands of the companies for the purpose of further development of resources. We think that the distribution of 20 per cent to the federal sector, 50 per cent to the provincial sector and 30 per cent to the industry is a reasonable division of the oil dollar revenue.

Mr. Woolliams: Can the minister explain to the House and to this country why the burden has now been put on all the consumers in reference to the cost of gasoline and the cost of heating fuel? Can he really justify the statement he has made in reference to passing the burden to every consumer in Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we think we can, and indeed we will be quite prepared to go into this again before the standing committee. I would remind the hon. member that the members of his party in Alberta would like to pass on to the consumers the world price for crude, which is something this government has resisted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CABINET MINISTERS OR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT NOT INVOLVED IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I think it is a very important matter and we should have full disclosure at this particular time, knowing that this is what the Prime Minister would want. Has the Prime Minister had any discussions with his ministers regarding court proceedings involving the Hamilton Harbour Commission, and if so, what were the results? Can he advise that members of his cabinet or members of parliament are not involved by way of subpoenas or otherwise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to the last part of the question, I know of no subpoena having been issued to any minister or member of the caucus. On the first part of the question, of course proceedings were taken at the provincial level. They were not taken through any consultation with me.

● (1530)

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—POSSIBILITY PAYMENT FOR DREDGING BEING WITHHELD AWAITING COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has answered the question in part. I would now ask if the Department of Transport is holding up final payment for dredging operations which are satisfactorily completed on the St. Lawrence because of improprieties in tendering and because of the need for final disposition of the Hamilton harbour court proceedings? Is the Prime Minister aware of this and if so, are the allegations true?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the allegations. I will look into the matter.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—ALLEGED STATEMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL MINISTER OF LABOUR NOT IMPLICATED IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In the Toronto Star of February 22 the minister was quoted as saying that the preliminary transcripts thus far relating to the Hamilton harbour matter do not implicate the Minister of Labour. This is reassuring but I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether in making that statement he is aware of that part of the evidence in the transcript referring to the telephone conversation recorded on April 2, 1974 between Mr. Elliott and Mr. Rindress of J. P. Porter Company, Limited?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I did not say what I was quoted as saying. I said I had not been advised. As a matter of fact I had not asked the RCMP about the proceedings in that particular case. I will have to check into the second part of the question.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLIES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Every year about this time fertilizer dealers and some farmers take advantage of the United States market to sell fertilizer which normally might be used in Canada. Can the minister assure farmers that there will be adequate supplies of fertilizer this year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, according to information which I received during the past week, it appears that there will be adequate supplies in most parts of Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. Because sales of fertilizer across the border to the United States seem to have doubled since last year and because certain shortages, particularly in northern areas, result in higher prices, may I ask the minister if he has inquired whether fertilizer producers might be able to distribute their fertilizer in a more equitable fashion so that people in northern areas may avail themselves of any supplies which may become available at reduced prices?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Speaker; we discussed all this with fertilizer manufacturers a few weeks ago and I am asking for an updated report on their progress. I am also told that because of the depressed prices of crops, in the United States, there is not the demand for fertilizer in that country that was expected, so the cutback in exports to the United States will make more fertilizer available to Canadians.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION IF EMPLOYEES DESIGNATED ESSENTIAL LEAVE THEIR POSITIONS DURING ROTATING STRIKES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question for the President of the Treasury Board. I believe that certain positions at airports are designated essential for purposes of safety and security and these are held by members of the GTL group. Can the minister advise the House whether some of these people have recently left their jobs during rotating strikes? If so, what measures is the minister taking to impress upon the people who occupy positions designated essential that they must remain on the job during rotating strikes?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we intend to take action against every employee who is designated to stay in his job who has not done so. We respect the right to strike for everybody but those who do not have the right to strike should report to their jobs. If they do not we will prosecute as is provided under the law.

An hon. Member: You will lay them off.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary. Of course, I am only asking the minister about those employees who do not have the right to strike because their positions are designated essential. In view of the fact that such action does not seem to have been particularly successful in the past, can the minister give any assurance that what he proposes to do now will be any more effective?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not put the mechanism in place myself. I follow the law as it is. I hope the prosecutions will be carried out very quickly so that they will be as efficient as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether he can assure the House that the measures he proposes have any promise of being effective in view of the probability of weather conditions becoming more seasonable and the difficulties that would immediately arise as a result? Is the minister simply telling the House that he will do the best he can, but that the machinery in his hands is inadequate or can he give the House an assurance that he is in a position to take measures that would enforce the actual legal position?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to achieve the same results as I do. I will take all measures under the law to ensure that essential services are protected.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RE-OPEN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I hope it does not take the ten or twelve months that it took in the last instance to get action. In view of the fact that the Public Service Alliance spokesmen have indicated the strike will intensify by the end of the week unless the government reverses its current stand on wage demands, can the minister tell the House of the efforts he has made over the weekend and during today with respect to the reopening of negotiations between the Treasury Board and the alliance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am informed there were informal talks going on today between the parties. I hope they will bring some resolution of the problems.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—REASON FOR FAILURE TO CONSIDER CONCILIATION REPORT OF UNION NOMINEE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House whether the government has given consideration to the conciliation report prepared by a union nominee which represented a somewhat modified version of the original demands, requesting a 20.98 per cent increase for the first year and 12 per cent for the second year? If not, can the minister inform the House why this matter was rejected?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it was because we have decided it advisable to take the majority report given by the chairman, who is a responsible person, who looked at the arguments on both sides and came to a conclusion.

WAGE OFFER TO GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF OVER-ALL WAGE POLICY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. It was reported, and the President of the Treasury Board has just confirmed, that the government is sticking to its earlier position of 26 per cent over two years. Is this because the government realizes that it must set an example to the rest of the country? If this offer to the GTL group is supposed to be an example, would it be fair to assume that it is related to some over-all policy? Does the government have an over-all policy on wage increases generally at this time and if so, what is that policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government did not stick to its original position as the hon. member alleges because, as the President of the Treasury Board has just indicated, we decided to accept the majority report. The government policy is contained in the acceptance of the majority report.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister suggesting that the majority report ought to represent increases and other dealings in the economy for the coming year, and is he directing the effort in formulating an over-all program for which this is the foundation for the balance of the economy?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows each report is written in the particular circumstances of the case before the chairman of the board. Obviously, that is the way our labour laws work. When you set up a mediation or arbitration board it deals with the case before it, not some hypothetical case.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXPORT OF ARMS TO TURKEY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In answer to a question I put last Thursday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that it had not been the policy of the government to approve licences for the export of arms to Turkey during the recent conflict but that the situation had changed. He believed the policy had been modified but said he would like to refresh his memory before giving a definitive answer. May I now ask the minister whether the policy of not granting licences for the export of arms to Turkey has been modified? If so, how has the situation changed to justify this?

● (1540)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the question which was put to my colleague was in relation to American arms being shipped through Canada to Turkey.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, it had to do with Canadian arms.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer that I have here from the department is an answer to the supposed inquiry of the hon. member. May I take the hon. member's question as notice.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister cannot answer the question, would he look at last Thursday's Hansard and see precisely what the question was. It dealt initially with export licences for Canadian arms and materials to go to Turkey. That is the question to which I should like an answer. If he cannot answer today, I guess we will have to come back some other day.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—DATE OF REPORT OF TEXTILES AND CLOTHING BOARD

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could the minister indicate to the House whether he has received the report of the Canadian Textile and Clothing Board, commissioned to inquire into the four sectors of the textile industry where there has been evidence of dumping by certain countries, and if so, could he tell us whether that report will be submitted this week as promised?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have received a number of reports from the textile and clothing board. These reports will be made public. At present they are undergoing intensive examination from the point of view of recommendations. I hope to be able to make a statement on the matter shortly.

TRANSPORT

BELL ISLAND, NEWFOUNDLAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE FOOD SHORTAGE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in his capacity as Acting Minister of Transport. What steps has the Department of Transport taken to alleviate what appears to be a critical shortage of food on Bell Island, Newfoundland, as a result of unseasonably heavy ice blockage.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, as a result of which I have been able to determine that the Humphrey Gilbert, an icebreaker, is loading today with a cargo of supplies for Bell Island. It is expected that she will arrive at the island by noon, tomorrow. As the standard icebreaker, the John Guy is in drydock now and as the replacement vessel is not equipped for icebreaking, not even behind an icebreaker, the Humphrey Gilbert has been pressed into action, to take care of supply requirements.

INCOME TAX

RULES GOVERNING CANADIAN ISSUE OF A PERIODICAL

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. It has to do with the content rules for Canadian magazines. If I may editorialize, I should think that statement was so important that it ought to have been made in this House. Having said that, let me ask this: What is the basis for the percentages announced by the minister? Is that decision supported by Order in Council. What regulation gave the minister the authority to bring in those percentages? What is the jurisprudence behind the decision.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we endeavour to avoid giving legal opinions in the House and the question which the hon. member asked is important. The news reports to which he referred are about statements I made relating to the general administrative advice that income tax authorities have given to those who inquired as to the meaning of "substantially the same", as used in reference to a Canadian issue of a periodical, as referred to in section 19(5)(f) of the Income Tax Act.

I emphasize that each periodical mentioned in that section must be judged on its merits. That is the kind of advice the administrators have been giving since 1965, when that section was first written. I might underline also, in view of the words used by the hon. member, that that section, as I am advised, does not speak of Canadian content and makes no reference to the word "content".

POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF NEW PROVISIONS TO NEWSPAPERS OWNED BY BRITISH INTERESTS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the statement the minister made about proposed legislation affecting Time and Reader's Digest, is it correct to assume that this legislation will not apply to the four western Canadian newspapers owned by interests in Liverpool, run with Canadian managers and editors and published by Canadians for the benefit of all Canadians; and is it also correct to assume that, as far as they are concerned, "it will be business as usual".

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my statement on Friday, and the statements which have been referred to, related to intepretations which had been made as to the section as now written, not as to any proposed legislative changes that my colleague, the Secretary of State, will be introducing. Therefore, in that sense, the question is hypothetical. I understand that there have been discussions between those four western newspapers of which the hon. member spoke, and officers of my department, to see whether they can comply with existing legislation or possible proposed legislation.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CHANGE IN GRADES OF BEEF PURCHASED FOR ARMED FORCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. As all beef purchased for the Canadian armed forces so far has been grades B-1 and B-2, and as new tenders call for all carcasses to be of grades A-1 and A-2, carcasses of these grades each to cost the Canadian taxpayer between $60 and $70 more, may I ask if it is now government policy to purchase grade A-1 and A-2 beef carcasses for the Canadian armed forces. Is this the new policy?

An hon. Member: Don't give us a bum steer.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMPULSORY ARBITRATION COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

He has been repeating for the past week that blue collar workers have the right to strike, and that their strike is a legal one. This is true, but could the minister advise the House whether his government is considering the possible, and perhaps necessary setting up of compulsory arbitration, in order to finally put an end to these abuses which this series of strikes throughout Canada are, including those within the public service.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member had the opportunity to state his position on this issue when the relevant legislation was adopted in 1967. Such an opportunity will present itself again shortly, since a Joint Committee is looking into the recommendations of the Finkelman Report. Hon. members will debate this issue, and the hon. member may appear to make his position known to the committee.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I thank the minister for his kind invitation. I shall certainly go to committee to discuss the problem. But, in the meantime, might the minister not be well advised to turn to the good offices of Louis Laberge, Dédé Desjardins and Fernand Daoust of Montreal?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to do with those three union leaders. They are in no way concerned with the civil servants' associations. I am happy to learn that the hon. member for Témiscamingue will be willing to appear before House committees in the future.

SUGGESTED TABLING OF DOCUMENT SHOWING INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES BETWEEN 1962 AND 1972

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I regret that I did not give him notice; I hope he will bring in an answer within the next little while. As the level of federal government expenditures is being attacked more and more and as it is assumed by many that federal government spending is the major cause of inflation, will the minister soon bring before this House information showing the increase in federal government spending between 1962 and 1972, corrected for inflation, to show that government expenditures are not the greatest cause of inflation, as has been alleged?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the hon. member, on reflection, will realize that information ought to be sought in another way.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY ON IMPACT OF PRICE INCREASES ON INFLATION

Mr. Jim Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask him whether, before he issued the new price guidelines with respect to fuel, he was in communication with the industry as to the effect the change in diesel and fuel oil prices is likely to have on the inflation picture?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We received requests from the industry on the basis of actual costs, and as I indicated in response to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands these vary a great deal from company to company and quite substantially as between regions. Instead of authorising an across-the-board increase this time we agreed that each party could increase prices to the extent requested on the assumption that competition would exercise a levelling effect. And of course, there would be different circumstances which would warrant varying prices rather than a single price.

Mr. Gillies: Were any calculations made by the department as to the impact of this change on the rate of inflation? How does this change fit in with the general thesis of the government that the proper way to deal with inflation is through some sort of voluntary program? This action seems to be running counter to the general policy of the government, that of trying to deal with inflation through voluntary guidelines.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, we are dealing here with prices which, except for a minor change in May, have been restrained for the past 18 months. Of course this particular industry does remain an anomaly through the country as a whole; there is price control in this particular industry which does not apply to industry in general. We don't need the same hortative techniques with regard to the petroleum industry because, in effect, the government has been exercising control over petroleum prices at the wholesale level since December, 1973.

Mr. Gillies: Did the minister's department or did the Department of Finance calculate before this change was made, the inflationary impact on the Canadian economy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We could not be sure as to the extent to which this would be passed on. It was recognized that at the current stage, with a very substantial surplus position in both crude oil and petroleum products internationally, it is very likely that the full costs would not find their way through into the retail prices. It is difficult at this point to make a precise calculation. Some small escalation is likely but nothing near as much as would result if we followed the demands of those who want us to go to international crude prices.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—POSSIBILITY REMOVAL OF PRICE CEILING ANTICIPATES INCREASE IN WELLHEAD PRICE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Has the decision of the government to remove the voluntary guidelines on oil and gas prices at the consumer level been taken in anticipation of a sharp rise in the wellhead price after the April meeting with the provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would remind the hon. member that we have never exercised control at the consumer level but at the wholesale level. I would also point out that the press release does not indicate a release from control. Rather, each refiner or wholesaler will be confined to the increase on account of his costs he has requested. So there is still a control and the accounts will still be audited.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE REAR ADMIRAL WILL CONTINUE TO COMMAND WEST COAST FORCES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. It appears that Rear Admiral Pickford, Commander Maritime Command Pacific is to be replaced by a junior commodore. This will be widely regarded as a downgrading of the importance, the role and probably the equipment of forces on the West Coast. Can the minister assure the House that these fears are not justified and that a rear admiral or person of equivalent rank will continue to be in charge of our forces on the West Coast?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member that assurance. It is not our intention to downgrade Esquimalt. The Deputy Commander, Maritime Command, will remain on the West Coast at Esquimalt.

SPORTS

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT OF HOCKEY LEAGUES NOT TO SIGN PLAYERS AS PROFESSIONALS BEFORE AGE 20—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the hon. gentleman received any representations from the National Hockey League, the World Hockey Association or the CAHA with respect to supportive action by the government with respect to an agreement between these bodies to restrict the ability to sign professional players before they reach the age of 20 and, if so, is it the government's policy to dissociate itself from this particular request or does the government intend to take the supportive action requested by these groups?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed the representatives of the three groups concerned, some of my high officials and myself have met. I explained the position of the government on this matter in a speech to the Canadian Sports Federation in Vancouver a few weeks ago.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry but I do not recall the minister indicating the position he put forward with respect to the request made by these groups.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that the position of the government was explained in a speech made to the Canadian Sports Federation which met in Vancouver; I then said clearly that the government looked with favour upon an agreement under which no players under 20 years of age would be signed up.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—LENGTH OF TIME TO GET PERMISSION OF PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BOARD TO PROSECUTE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if I could bother the President of the Treasury Board with a question. In any instance recently with regard to public servants, employees in the GLT group occupying a position designated as essential, have the minister or his officials sought permission from the Public Service Staff Relations Board to instigate prosecutions, which I believe has to be done, and has the minister any reason to believe that a decision will be reached in less than the eight to ten months during which these applications for permission have been under consideration in the past.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): As the Leader of the Opposition knows, before Christmas there were about 900 cases of illegal striking and I took action against them. The present strike started on Monday of last week and, of course, we have to gather information before we institute the prosecutions. When we have this information we will proceed. We are in touch now with the different departments gathering information.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister agrees, I assume, that he needs the permission of the Public Service Staff Relations Board before he can launch prosecutions. Has there been any change in the length of time it has taken in the past to get such permission which I understand is eight, nine or as long as ten months usually?

Mr. Chrétien: I have to ask permission and I then will prosecute. I cannot state how long it would take to obtain permission because I have no control over this board. I hope it will render a decision quickly because it serves no useful purpose when a decision is delayed for eight or ten months.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—USE OF PAY RESEARCH BUREAU FUNDINGS TO SETTLE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that the confidential report prepared by the Pay Research Bureau on salaries, on the request of the Treasury Board, emphasized that employees within the general labour and trades group of the Public Service are paid salaries substantially lower than those paid for similar work in the private sector, and considering that elimination of this anomaly would be a condition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since the oral question period is almost finished, I would like the hon. member to ask his question, if possible.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is the minister prepared to use this report and its findings to reopen negotiations with the striking union, proceedings which would protect public interest?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what report the hon. member alluded, but inaccuracies happen to creep up sometimes. A worker employed by the federal government and assigned to maintenance as a plumber must be compared with a plumber working at maintenance in the private sector. He must not be compared with a construction worker, because of course construction workers are not engaged in maintenance and earn higher wages. Their job is seasonal and they do not have the job security of public service employees.

Right here in Ottawa not one day goes by without construction workers asking to enter the federal public service at the working conditions we offer.

● (1600)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Is it true then that the minister denies the existence of a confidential report to that effect?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a report. We receive all kinds of reports. It may sometimes happen that certain views are expressed in the way described by the hon. member in the House today, but such is not our impression. We try to offer wages comparable to those in private industry and we are sure that we do offer them.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—SUGGESTED ACTION TO ENSURE MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Because of the fact that the very existence of the small businessman is being threatened by the postal walkout, particularly in the Toronto area, an existence which has become vital to our over-all economy, would the President of the Treasury Board, perhaps with his colleague the Postmaster General, consider suggesting to the post office members of the Public Service Alliance that they make it possible for all business documents to be delivered along the same lines as the old age pension cheques, since the small Canadian businessman depends in many cases totally upon regular mail deliveries?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when the right to strike is given to the public sector it obviously disturbs the economy, and I do not see now how this problem could be solved in the way suggested by the hon. member. We might as well simply propose to withdraw their right to strike, as suggested earlier by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) on reflection I believe made reference, as did another hon. member, to preliminary hearings being held in Hamilton. Many of the names that have been mentioned have been known to be involved for many months in this preliminary hearing, though they are not permitted to be given any publicity whatever. I have been aware that my name has been mentioned—

Mr. Alexander: So has mine.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —and so has the hon. member's. The fact of the matter is that I did not refer the matter to anyone because, as far as I am concerned, the substance of the allegations are totally false with regard to myself, and I am satisfied with regard to the hon. member himself. For this reason I made no mention of the matter whatsoever to anybody.

Mr. Alexander: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) is saying. Perhaps he wants to tell this House or the Canadian public something, but I cannot understand what his question of privilege is. Let me just rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker, if that is required, and I think it is. I think we are all very much aware of the circumstances in Hamilton involving the harbour commission and the reading of matters that have come to light. I still have a copy of my question, and although I do not recall the preamble to it I should like to repeat it. This is why I am concerned that the minister has raised a question of privilege. I asked whether the Prime Minister had had any discussion with his ministers regarding court proceedings involving the Hamilton harbour commission and, if so, what were the results. I also asked him whether he could advise that members of his cabinet or MP's are not involved by way of subpoenas or otherwise. What is the Minister of Labour attempting to do? I suggest he has no question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am equally convinced by both hon. members that no question of privilege exists.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Labour sought the floor on a question of privilege in connection with a question put this afternoon. The hon. member who asked the question made a contribution to the question of privilege. Clearly, the question was perfectly legitimate; there was no content in it that I could recognize as a question of privilege. The matter has now been laid to rest. Orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I think the minister wants to indicate that he is very sorry that he commenced his remarks by referring to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Alexander: Don't get so nervous over there. Whenever you people are on the ropes you get nervous. The Minister of Labour unquestionably stood up and made reference to the hon. member for Hamilton West. It now appears from exchanges across the aisle—I say this with respect—that he really did not refer to me but to the questioner who asked a question subsequent to mine. This is my short question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I think the Minister of Labour understands me very well.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. I referred to the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton West, which were followed by comments by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. Speaker: In any case, I recall the content of both questions to which reference has been made. The question from the hon. member for Hamilton West was addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister, and if I am not mistaken the supplementary question of the hon. member for Central Nova was directed to the Solicitor General. In any event, my recollection of both questions and both answers is that there was no ground for a question of privilege on either side.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, February 21, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Friday, February 21, 1975, the following clauses had been allowed to stand previously: clauses 4, 7, 9, 35, 37, 43.1 and 80. It has been agreed that the committee will consider first, today, clause 4 as amended.

• (1610)

On clause 4.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, my proposals today will contain an amendment that covers clauses 4, 7 and all related clauses. I would also hope before completing my remarks to put a question to the Chairman as to whether we can deal with these clauses under one amendment rather than dealing with them separately. I know this will require a little thought on the part of the Chairman, so I will come back to it later in my remarks. In the meantime I will assume that the one debate will cover clauses 4, 7 and related clauses.

First of all, in dealing with Bill C-49 I think the main point is that parliament is now facing the crunch. The minister has been kind and a good parliamentarian in agreeing to allow these clauses which are controversial to stand, that is clauses 4, 7 and those related to them as listed by the Chairman. The clauses all deal with a dangerous innovation of Canadian constitutional practices and the practices of parliament which deserve careful consideration by members of all parties in the interest of this parliament.

Fundamentally, what we are talking about is that we want to give time to the executive of the federal government to discuss proposals with the provincial governments and the various resource companies affected, so that when the first ministers meet on April 9 and 10 of this year there will be enough progress made to give the country the assurance that there will be an amicable understanding and agreement. This is the way the parliamentary system works in this country, and it is the way the federal system has to work if we are to carry out federal operations when two or more levels of government have an interest in the same subject.

The Minister of Finance will recall that on January 30 I gave him in private—I also spoke to him in the House publicly on behalf of this party—a proposal that simply provided a basis on which the provinces and the federal government could sit down with the resource industries and all could make more money out of our resources. This proposal could not be put forward by me in the House because of its detail.

I asked the minister, first, to have his officials study and analyse this proposal from the point of view of the remarks I have just made, namely, that the various parties sharing in these resources could get more money and, second, I asked if he would turn the proposal over to the provincial governments and the private companies which are very much concerned, for their study. This is what I meant a moment ago when I said that the crunch is here. Every time, in the history of the House of Commons, the matter comes up which has a serious impact on the great mass of Canadian people, namely, the best use of our resources not only to provide jobs in Canada but to use the income from those resources in carrying out the functions of government in this country, parliament is supposed to respond in a way that forgets partisanship but remembers only what is good for the country.

The amendment I intend to propose this afternoon is a simple one; it is to not proclaim these controversial clauses until after the meeting of the first ministers on April 9 and 10. That is all I am asking. I am asking members on the government side and members of each party in this House to consider the import of what I am saying on behalf of the official opposition, to consider its importance to the people of Canada and to accept the amendment.

This amendment will not in any way reduce the power of the federal government in the forthcoming negotiations. What it will do is enable the federal government's negotiators to take part in conversations with provincial government negotiators on a basis in which there is room for the federal government to be flexible. If this House of Commons passes this legislation, it becomes the law of the land and federal ministers cannot offer anything less than the law: they would have to come back to this House and ask for amendments to the budget and this is very difficult to do. I repeat what I have tried to emphasize throughout, namely, that we in the official opposition in trying to do our duty have proposed two things to the Minister of Finance; and I will have a third later on. These two proposals can be laid on the table for the provincial governments and given to the companies for consideration, to see if there can be a better deal for all concerned.

At the conclusion of my remarks I will ask the minister a couple of questions dealing with what he has done since January 30 when I first made this proposal. In the meantime, I want to put on the record of this committee the fact that some people in the country have heard about what is being proposed. I have a sheaf of telegrams in my hand, one of which happens to be from the Premier of the province of Saskatchewan, mentioned the other day in the House by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. He simply says in this telegram, addressed to the Prime Minister and to ministers of the Crown:

> In view of the forthcoming first ministers' conference, I would request that the federal government give consideration to delaying passage of that portion o` the income tax bill pertaining to non-deductibility of royalties until at er the conference.

He goes on, but that is the main burden of his telegram. The others I have are from private companies and I do not know where they operate in all cases. One is from Wesfrob Mines Limited; another is from Sturgeon Lake Mines; another is from Falconbridge Copper; another is from Falconbridge Nickel. I do not think those are in Saskatchewan. Another telegram is from Giant Yellowknife Mines, which seems to me to be the Northwest Territories; another is from United Keno Hill Mines, which is in the Yukon; another is from Quebec Raglan Mines, and I have one from McIntyre Mines.

I am trying to emphasize to the minister and to the committee that it is not only the oil industry that is caught in this battle between the two levels of government over resource taxation; it is the mining and forestry companies as well. Just to bear out my contention, let me say I did not get a telegram from one of our great giants, Noranda, but I have a statement from their president as reported in the Globe and Mail as recently as February 4 in which he concludes by stating:

> In Noranda's case, he said, the effective tax rate this year will vary from about 60 per cent in Ontario and Quebec to more than 100 per cent in western Canada, compared with an average tax rate in 1973 of around 40 per cent.

I quote that to illustrate that a large conglomerate like Noranda, which represents a mix of manufacturing, processing and mining, has had its taxes raised to 60 per cent in the eastern part of Canada and over 100 per cent in the four western provinces. If I put on record the information I have been getting from the smaller companies, it would prove that the statement I made earlier in this debate, that the income tax liability would range between 80 per cent and 120 per cent, was an understatement. The information that I am now getting, as accountants go over the year's figures, is that the tax liability under this budget, on top of provincial taxes, is running to over 120 per cent, and I have one figure of 130 plus per cent. You cannot operate these mining companies with a tax liability to both governments of over 100 per cent.

● (1620)

So, quite frankly, my pitch is, first, to end this quarrel and, second, to remind the committee that the people who are doing the real bleeding and suffering today are the small Canadian companies. Those which are international such as Noranda can survive by moving out of the country, but the smaller ones are taking a beating.

Mr. Baldwin: Only the government can operate on a deficit.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I say to the minister that this is not just a matter of saying, as I mentioned earlier, that they can afford to pay it when the factual evidence before us is that this is not so. The companies do have the right to live, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources keeps reminding us. But when the total tax liability of the potash companies in Saskatchewan and the mining companies, producing a product desperately needed by the world to produce food, is at the 87 per cent level, you know there will be no more expansion in that industry and this forces governments into doing it themselves. Some people would like that, but I shall not go into that question now. I am simply saying that I think I have made a case on the basis of the economics of the mining industry which is suffering mortally today. The small Canadian companies cannot stand this bleeding much longer. The big companies can hang on, but not the small ones.

When the minister allows his government to continue the budget as it is, every member of this House stands condemned, if we put this legislation through, of destroying small Canadian business in mining, oil and gas in the interests of speaking up for the great international giants which can stand off and watch this fight come to its conclusion and then come back in. So this amendment deals with clauses 4, 7 and all the related clauses. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, if you can find it within your power to rule that the amendment I propose will be allowed to amend all these clauses that are related to clauses 4 and 7 and can be debated and voted on as one amendment. To help you out, I will read the amendment I propose to move and let your officials advise Your Honour. I propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley:

That part I of the said bill be amended by adding thereto, next after line 31 on page 268, the following:

"127. Subsections 4(2) and (5) and subsections 7(1) and (5) and any other provision of this act to the extent that it is necessary and incidental to or consequential upon those subsections or any of them shall not come into force and have effect as law except upon proclamation of the governor in council following upon the expiration of the 15th day of April, 1975.".

May I have a ruling on that proposal, Mr. Chairman, or do you wish to wait until later?

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member has raised a number of questions related to procedure. One has to do with debate on the clauses that have been stood. Hon. members are aware of the clauses to which I am referring. Since there is a similarity in the subject matter of all those clauses, there would be, of course, little procedural difficulty in the way of hon. members of the committee debating the subject related to all of them: that should not pose any problem.

In terms of introducing an amendment which would have some effect on each of the clauses, and dealing with the matter by a single division of the committee, it would pose considerable difficulties. I would draw to the attention of the hon. member Standing Order 75(1) which clearly indicates that the committee must deal with clauses in their order. In this case we are dealing with clauses that have been stood, but they must stand in sequence and I think they will have to be dealt with in that particular way, that is, separately as if there were an amendment to each clause which would have to be considered and disposed of by the committee.

The final matter raised by the hon. member concerns the acceptability of the amendment that he has introduced. That raises a number of complexities. If hon. members of the committee will permit it, the Chair will reserve its judgment about the acceptability of the amendment and rule on it as soon as possible. In the meantime, the debate on clause 4 and the subject matter of all the clauses can be proceeded with.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I have one comment to make. I know you have made a ruling, but as I understand the amendment—and I have spoken to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain—it does not change any of the individual clauses that have been stood and deal with the same subject matter, namely, taxation of the resource industry and how it is implemented, but it asks that they not come into effect until there is an order in council implementing them all.

Surely we should reach consensus to facilitate the debate. May I say, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, that you might be interpreting the Standing Order too narrowly. This situation is slightly different and it is anticipated by the rule. The amendment covers all the clauses. They will not be implemented until an order in council is passed. Surely it would be very cumbersome if every time one of the clauses came up on the same subject we had to move the same amendment. This would delay proceedings. It seems to me it was never intended that the Standing Order should be so interpreted. Believe me, Mr. Chairman, I am not being critical of what you have said: you have raised a very thoughtful question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I do not argue with your ruling and I am prepared to move this amendment to each of these clauses, simply making a slight change in the wording every time, if that will help you. But for the convenience of the committee we could decide on one vote. That would clear away a lot of the difficulties.

May I conclude the rest of my remarks? I ask the Minister of Finance if he is aware that the precedent for what I have been proposing is in the Foreign Investment Review Act, where part II was not proclaimed by reason of amending a section at the end of part II. I think he is aware that one of the most fortunate things parliament did was to agree not to proclaim part II until there had been consultation with the provinces. It turned out that when there was consultation with the provinces, all ten provinces urged the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce not to proclaim the section at all. I will quote from an article by Peter Cook in the Financial Times of February 17, 1975. Speaking of part II of the act, this is what Peter Cook had to say:

● (1630)

Mr. Gillespie told the Commons as recently as last October he would proclaim part two of the act before the end of last year. He said this was possible because the government screening body, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, was working well and provincial governments were co-operating with the new controls.

In December, a meeting of provincial ministers asked for a postponement of part two. Mr. Gillespie has since agreed to put off implementing it until after next month's talks.

That meeting is in March, and I point out to the minister, if he is not aware of it, that here we have a situation where one minister of the Crown is taking advantage of what parliament, in good sense, did with respect to the Foreign Investment Review Act by putting in an amendment saying that part II would not be proclaimed until the government had consulted with the provinces. This has saved the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce being put in the impossible position of having to come back into this House and asking for amendments to a law which parliament has passed. I am suggesting that the Minister of Finance not get himself into the position the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would have been in if parliament had not put in that amendment saying that part II of the Foreign Investment Review Act should not be proclaimed. I think the Minister of Finance would recognize the political danger of this and realize that he would be trapped entirely if these clauses were passed without this amendment postponing their proclamation until after the meeting of the first ministers.

I will now ask the minister the questions I promised to ask. On January 30, and again on February 13, I asked the minister if he would examine my proposals dealing with sharing the economic rental from resources as between the provinces and the federal government. I asked him to have his officials examine this hypothetical cash flow for an oil sands plant which would have given the province 50 per cent of the take, the federal government 20 per cent of the net, and the equity people 30 per cent, all of which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources mentioned today because these figures of 50 per cent, 30 per cent and 20 per cent are the figures proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as a fair sharing of the economic rent. Has the minister, in the last three weeks, contacted the provincial governments, or have they made contact with him on any of these proposals?

Mr. Nystrom: That's you, John.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I will repeat the question, Mr. Chairman. During the last three weeks has the Minister of Finance taken this hypothetical way of dividing the rent as a proposal to the provinces and received their reaction?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman. We have studied it ourselves and have not been able at this stage to accept it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Has the minister taken this proposal—there are two proposals, actually—to the companies and received their opinions; that is, any of the companies?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, nor have we received their opinions. Although the hon. gentleman says he has had some communication with them, we have not.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This means that the official opposition, acting in good faith on January 30 and again on February 13, made a proposal to the Minister of Finance which he should consider and which was a modern method of dealing with capital-intensive industry to give more money to the owners of the resource, the province, and more money to the federal government by sharing the profits of the companies, or the equity people; at the same time there would be enough money going to the companies to enable them to continue. In this particular proposal which I made to him, the province of Alberta, for example, on an oil sands plant would get double the amount it is getting now under the present Syncrude deal. The federal government, which will get very little or nothing from the Syncrude project, would get $90 million per year, and the equity people would get about 18 per cent or 19 per cent on their equity. That is fair enough. It seems to me that the idea which I put forward was not taken seriously by the Minister of Finance. Apparently he did not pass it on, by his own admission, to the provinces for discussion; and apparently he did not, by his own admission, pass it on to the companies for examination.

Here we have the provinces and the federal government in a confrontation situation, the companies in a state of frustration—spinning their wheels and not going anywhere—and the minister did not even bother to put the proposal before them. I shall try once again to put another proposal before the minister. This time it is not mine. Perhaps that is the reason my first proposal was not passed on. This proposal comes from the London Economist of February 15, 1975—last week.

Mr. Nystrom: Herb Gray wrote it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This proposal deals with the North Sea oilfields and gasfields. It is a proposal put forward, in effect, by the government of the United Kingdom and it is now before the companies operating in the North Sea. Under this proposal, instead of all the money going to paying interest on the capital, the government of that country takes a small royalty of 12½ per cent and then deliberately offers the company an accelerated, immediate write-off of 150 per cent of its earnings, which has the effect of paying off all debts, according to this hypothetical cash flow, in about five years. Coincidentally, these are the same figures I came to in my hypothetical cash flow.

Here we have a hypothetical situation in the North Sea where the investment money pours in to the extent of $2.3 billion, mostly in the first five years. The money begins coming back out slowly at the end of five years and builds up to produce enough income, because the companies are allowed to write off such a large amount, to enable them to pay all their debts during the ninth and tenth years. This table shows that even though the government is getting—as I will point out in a minute—large sums of money, it is allowing business to take 25 per cent on their investment, which is a larger amount than I proposed three weeks ago. I proposed only 18 per cent or 19 per cent. At the same time, the government of the United Kingdom, after the money is paid out and the capital debt is repaid, takes up to 65 per cent of the returns. It is called a petroleum revenue tax.

Without going into all the other causes, I am simply saying that it is roughly a division of about 70 per cent of the value of that oil, if the North Sea operation goes to the people of the United Kingdom, and the companies with 30 per cent are able to make a return on investment of 25 per cent. The reason the government can be so generous with the companies and with the people of the United Kingdom is that the debts are paid first: it is as simple as that. The minister had this proposal in his possession over the weekend. He has seen the projected cash flows. I think he has a duty to this country and to the House of Commons to put that proposal into the hands of the provinces and ask their opinions. Personally, I do not like this type of deal because I do not like the concept of a write-off that is too fast. I like the concept of a contractual arrangement where one agrees that the main enemy of the people—that means the government and business today—is the tremendous amount of capital required and the tremendous amount of interest which must be paid on it. If we could agree to be partners on a contractual basis and get rid of this capital debt quickly, then the amount of interest to be paid would be very little.

● (1640)

Under my proposal, instead of spending between $8 billion and $10 billion in interest payments over the 30-year life of the tar sands fields, we would pay it off in five years and only $2½ million would go into capital and interest payments. Under the present Syncrude proposal, unless the price were to go up to about $12 per barrel or more, it would be impossible for companies and the federal government to get anything out of it. We have wired this country into high-cost oil just as the Americans are doing with their huge expenditures for new sources of energy.

Surely it is hypocritical of the Minister of Finance to say now that he believes in lower prices for the people of Canada when just last week he announced a deal that means we are wired to high prices forever. The people get nothing out of the resources, Mr. Chairman. I would say, as I said at the time, that is not only a marginal deal but it is a dangerous deal for Canada. I think the minister would do his party and the House of Commons a favour if he remembered that this House has a record of making adjustments to proposals put forward by the opposition. The minister has two choices. He can say, "I am not going to do anything but let time go by, and eventually the bill will go through" or he can say, "I am going to agree with this moderate, constructive proposal of the opposition, which is supported by all parties, and I will consult the provinces and the companies. It is not up to us in parliament to suggest which of these two proposals is the best—the resources belong to the provinces—but if I take this course and do not proclaim this controversial section there will be a better chance of success for the first ministers' conference in April." Above all, this would show that the minister is a parliamentarian.

Mr. Chairman, I have searched my memory of the last ten years and it seems that five or six times the government of the day accepted suggestions made by the opposition, and each of those suggestions was beneficial to the people of Canada. In 1966 the government made the wrong decision about the Great Lakes pipeline. The arguments in this House were accepted and the government reversed its position. As a result, Ontario and Quebec benefited by a lower gas price. In the same year, 1966, on a motion of no confidence from this side, the government said they were not opposed to the motion, and the National Energy Board did its duty: American buyers of our gas were forced to accept a raise in price of 50 of per cent and give Canadians living in British Columbia, the Peace River area, a fair price for their gas. I congratulate the government for making the changes on both those occasions. Canada benefited in both cases: in one case British Columbia got a fair price for gas, and in the other case Ontario and Quebec got cheaper natural gas for ten years.

In 1966-67, on the national transportation bill, now the National Transportation Act, over 70 opposition amendments were accepted. It is a lousy act still, of course, because the government should have accepted two more amendments, but this at least showed some willingness by the government and the legislation was a little better than when it was originally introduced. In 1970-71, when I was not in the House, a group of members on this side fought for two sessions on the national marketing act. They saved this country from having a mess something like CEMA for every agricultural product in the country. Parliament was doing its duty then.

Last fall the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, realizing the weight of arguments put forward by the opposition, pulled back the petroleum administration bill for later presentation which meant, in effect, until after the first ministers' meeting. Surely this minister can be a parliamentarian too, Mr. Chairman. We are not asking the federal government to give up any power; we are only asking that they not proclaim this controversial section until they have met the other ten governments.

The other choice for the minister is to sit there and risk the failure of the first ministers' conference on April 8 and 9. If the conference should fail, he will know in his heart who carries the responsibility. If there is some sort of deal made there and he has to back up on his budget, he will be looked upon as a lousy Minister of Finance. Before he is pushed into that position he should admit that the opposition has a good point, and accept the amendment. If the minister does not accept this proposal, which is supported by all parties on this side—and, I am sure, by many Liberal members in their hearts—it will lead me to suspect that there is a deal. That suspicion could be squelched, however, if the minister were to accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have received very many telegrams, but not one from the large, international mining companies or the large, international oil companies. I have wondered why. I get many wires and phone calls from desperate Canadian companies complaining about two levels of government overtaxing them. If the minister persists in his flippant attitude toward this moderate proposal that the opposition is asking him to accept, I can only conclude that he has made a deal and that there will be a budget in May to bring in what he has agreed with them privately. He has not told the provinces about his deal and he has not told parliament or the people.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister has not made a deal with these large companies. I hope he will remember that there has been in this House of Commons a willingness to look at things reasonably and to accept amendments. If he should accept this amendment, he would not be giving away anything but would be able to walk into the conference without blood on his hands. I hope he will put these proposals before his new deputy minister and the provinces and let them decide. Under the circumstances, I think the minister would be well advised to accept the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Chair has ruled on the proposal made by the hon. member. There may be middle ground on the procedural aspect of it which the government may want to consider. The Chair has indicated that there is no problem about debating these clauses together because they are consequential, one follows the other. At the appropriate time we might move a motion relating to clause 4 and it may well be that following the eloquent argument of my hon. friends government members will see the light of reason and intelligence, although that may be too much to expect considering the inflexibility of the government. If by any chance the motion on clause 4 is defeated after full debate, that may be the end of it.

● (1650)

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. Is it understood that the matter stands? Is that the suggestion?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I propose that the committee should participate in further debate. I imagine that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Témiscamingue wants to participate, as I do. We might debate all the clauses which are hinged together. After debate ends, we might take a vote on the proposal of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and resolve the matter of clause 4. If that proposal is defeated, that may be the end of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, speaking on the point of order, may I ask if the Chair has made a final ruling on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain? The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has in his hand a version of the amendment which applies to clause 4. Of course, we would accept what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain wishes to move. We agree at this stage that it would be better to vote on one amendment to the bill which would carry this principle with respect to all the clauses to which it applies. If that is not so, we could move amendments to clause 4, clause 7 and other relevant parts of the bill. Actually, my point in rising is to ask Your Honour to tell us precisely what the Chair's ruling is at this moment.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for inviting me to comment at this time. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, who is an able and experienced parliamentarian, must realize that his motion as presented presents certain difficulties to the Chair. The hon. member for Calgary North tried to help the Chair and the committee by referring to Standing Order 75(1). The hon. member suggested that perhaps the Chair has interpreted Standing Order 75(1) too narrowly.

I suggest to him, with the same respect that he accorded the Chair, that the Standing Order itself is narrow and restrictive, but that is not the interpretation. It is narrow and restrictive simply because it says that the committee should deal with the business in hand in a clearcut and precise way. That is how we should deal with this matter if we are to avoid the difficulties which might follow by adopting any other practice. In this case it will be unwise to deviate from this practice and ignore the strictures of Standing Order 75(1).

The amendment is couched in general terms and is not specifically applied to clause 4. As it is phrased in this fashion, the Chair would find it difficult to accept the amendment at this time. Let me add that it is not for the Chair to anticipate which amendments may come forward relating to clause 4 or other clauses.

The terminology of Standing Order 75(1) indicates that consideration of a bill by the committee, clause by clause, is in order; and consideration means both debate and amendment. If we move away from this language, I think we will be in violation of the Standing Order and this will lead to difficulty. For these reasons the Chair finds the amendment in general terms not acceptable.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, as I understood your ruling, you said the amendment is not in order because it is too general in its terms. If the amendment were to zero in on one particular clause, would Your Honour accept it? We could then take one vote. I think the hon. member for Peace River was talking about this. If we are successful in that vote, we can move on to other clauses, but if we fail, that will be the end of it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, may I propose wording which will bring the proposed amendment into order? I have prepared a new copy of the amendment, a copy of which I have sent to the Minister of Finance and another copy of which I will send to the Chair. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley:

> That clause 4 of the bill be amended by adding thereto, next after line 43 on page 6, the following:
> (6) Subsections 4(2) and (5) and any other provision—

And as on. I have simply deleted certain words to make this motion in order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has looked at the proposed amendment to clause 4. If the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain looks at it again, he will see that the difficulty has not been entirely avoided as the words "and any other provision of this act" are still there. Does the hon. member wish to comment?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, for all intents and purposes I am prepared to move this amendment to other clauses. Let me put this on record: if we are not successful with our amendment to clause 4, so far as my party is concerned we will not move any more amendments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, now the hon. gentleman is talking. If he could cross out the words "necessary and incidental to or consequential upon", and also "subsections 4(2) and (5)", he will be bringing forward an issue which comes under the clause. If the hon. member would be willing to follow the suggestion of the eminent member for Peace River, that would be agreeable to us. As it is, we have some difficulty with the words "necessary and incidental to or consequential upon" because we do not know what they mean and their inclusion leaves the matter open to argument.

The Deputy Chairman: If the changes suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain are incorporated, the Chair will be prepared to put the amendment. Certain other words which were mentioned by the Minister of Finance and which may or may not require explanation cannot be the concern of the Chair because they do not involve procedural matters. Therefore, the motion as moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is the following:

> That clause 4 of the bill be amended by adding thereto, next after line 43 on page 6, the following:
> "(6) Subsections 4(2) and (5) to the extent that it is necessary and incidental to or consequential upon those subsections or any of them shall not come into force and have effect as law except upon proclamation of the governor in council following upon the expiration of the 15th day of April 1975."

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps the committee will consider this for a moment or two. Suppose we say "subsections 4(2) and 5 shall not come into force and have effect as law except upon proclamation", etc. Then let us say that the decision of the committee on this clause shall govern how we are to treat the other clauses.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, if the minister wants to move that motion, I will second it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will be glad to have that remark on record, for future use.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A seconder is not required in committee.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, ignoring the preamble for a moment, the amendment would be satisfactory to us if it read:

"Subsections (2) and (5) of this section shall not come into force and have effect as law except upon proclamation of the governor in council upon the expiration of the 15th day of April, 1975."

● (1700)

If he can accept that wording, it seems to me it falls within the purview of what we have in mind.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is exactly what I was trying to say.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the suggestion that the amendment be revised. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We accept that for its admissibility. We shall argue it tonight.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-Ste. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Manpower—Opportunities for Youth program—Suggested increase in funds to combat unemployment in Atlantic region; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Transport—Increasing Canada's share of maritime traffic under United Nations accord—Government position; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air transport—Defect in Pratt and Whitney jet engine—Compliance of Canadian airlines with modification.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion, public bills.

It is my understanding there is agreement that the House will proceed to consideration of notice of motion No. 16 in the name of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR MORE STRINGENT LEGISLATION AND GOVERNMENT ACTION TO DETER CATTLE RUSTLING

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat) moved:

That this House, recognizing that cattle rustling is now a big-time criminal racket aided by modern methods and encouraged by high profits and low risk, and has become a serious problem to western cattlemen and the cattle industry, urges the government to enact deterrent cattle rustling laws and to mount an RCMP enforcement offensive against such criminal racketeers.

He said: At the outset, Mr. Speaker, may I say I am pleased that this subject, a favourite of mine since it deals with the cattle industry, is before us for discussion during the private members' hour. Let me begin by briefly recounting the history, the background of cattle rustling in Canada. "Theft" would, of course, be another way of describing it, but cattle rustling is a term which has been glorified, in a way, over the years.

There is nothing new about cattle rustling in western Canada where its incidence is traditionally much higher than in the eastern regions of Canada. As I say, there is much folklore relating to this subject. There are many stories, for example, of cattle herds becoming established as a result of a fast horse and a long and sure loop. There are other stories of unbranded calves being tied by the neck to another calf and trained to follow a new mother cow, resulting in a supposedly very prolific cow herd, with a strong tendency for twins! The owners of such herds were usually considered to be top hands with a rope.

In the early days before fencing, when great cattle herds were the rule, branding was often delayed until mid-summer giving ample time for the unauthorized branding of apparent strays or for the altering of existing brands by means of a quickly heated "running" iron—usually a wagon endgate iron rod with a round eye that could be used to make any combination of brands. Considerable folklore is attached to these stories but there is also concrete evidence that rustling along these lines—and in other ways—did indeed take place. One dramatic piece of western cattle rustling folklore that I have been unable to obtain positive proof of is the stringing-up of the cattle thief on the end of a rope, hung from a convenient limb of a cottonwood tree, out in the middle of the bald prairie where trees just do not grow.

Be that as it may, theft of cattle in various forms still presents a serious problem to the industry and there are clear indications that cattle rustling is on the increase. Rustling in modern days, at least in western Canada, falls into three categories. The first involves the theft of very young calves, usually less than a week old and still unbranded. Most calves are not branded until they are between two and three months of age. These young calves usually spend most of their first few days lying down in a concealed spot not far from their mothers. It is an easy matter to catch such a calf, on foot, without a horse, and toss it into the trunk of a car. A young calf like this must be immediately transplanted to another cow if it is to live. This is a difficult job but not an impossible one for an experienced stockman. The insidious part of this form of theft is that the thief is usually someone from your own neighbourhood. It is difficult to sell such young calves because most auction markets have regulations for bidding sales of very young calves.

The second category concerns the shooting of cattle, mainly in the fall of the year, usually during the hunting season. When meat prices are high—and they have been high over the last several years—it is a strong temptation for a hunter who has been unsuccessful in a game hunt to shoot a young, grass-fat steer, or heifer, or a cow, dress it out on the spot and put the carcass in a deep freezer at home. Very often such crimes take place near our larger cities and in far too many cases liquor is a factor in the deliberate actions of these unsuccessful game hunters.

The third category of cattle theft is the most daring and deliberate and it is premeditated and planned well in advance. In this type of theft any number of cows, from one or two to complete truckloads, are brazenly stolen for disposal later, usually in another province. In most cases they are trucked many miles, usually to another province—and in one case they were trucked across the United States border; this occurred within the last year—to a distant, live cattle market where they are sold and the covering brand on the stolen cattle is claimed as the legal brand of the thief.

● (1710)

Some provincial brand departments now have computerized brand records, and this is definitely helping to contain this form of rustling. In other cases the stolen cattle are trucked or even trailed on foot to another location where the brands are altered or "worked" into an entirely new brand. A conviction was recently obtained for this kind of theft in southern Alberta, and the thief was caught because he did not allow the altered brand time enough to heal properly with a new hair coat before he tried to sell the cattle. In this particular case a considerable number of cattle were involved; he got a little overconfident.

In still further cases these animals are privately butchered and the meat sold privately, or goes into the deep freeze again. These kinds of thefts can occur anywhere in Canada where cattle are confined for feeding. Just recently there was a case of some six to ten head reported stolen from a farm not far from Ottawa. These cattle were out of a herd of about 300 head, and the thefts took place over a one-month period.

I should now like to comment on the specifics of cattle rustling, convictions, and sentences passed on these cattle thieves. In earlier days punishment on conviction was much more severe than it is today. Today a person convicted of rustling or theft of cattle usually receives a sentence of one day in jail and a fine, or a suspended sentence, or jail from one day to six months. Very seldom does a convicted rustler receive a sentence of over six months unless he had previous convictions of some note.

Cattle theft charges are usually brought under section 294 of the Criminal Code. If the value of the property, in this case cattle, is over $200, the penalty can go as high as ten years' imprisonment. In other words, the traditional sentences passed on modern-day cattle thieves are completely unrealistic, as in most cases all mature animals stolen are worth well over $200.

Under section 400 of the Criminal Code, sentences for killing, maiming, wounding, poisoning or injuring cattle allow up to five years in jail. In comparison, breaking and entering under section 306 calls for a penalty of up to life imprisonment if the premises broken into are a dwelling-house, and up to 14 years if the place is other than a dwelling-house. Most breaking and entering convictions involve far less value than the value of cattle stolen or killed.

I suggest that consideration should also be given to the small cattle producer who raises only a few head, or feeds a few head, for whom cattle theft represents a loss of a large part of his profit considering the size of his operation. I must say that it must be most discouraging to law officers, provincial brand offices and cattle producers when the penalty imposed is very light or the case is dismissed. In some cases, such as in the area of the foothills country west of Calgary, cattlemen have organized viligante groups to patrol their own areas at night, especially during the hunting season. The purpose is, of course, to protect their own property and cattle.

In only one case that I am aware of has there been a more realistic sentence for cattle theft, and this was very recently. It was a case that occurred north of Edmonton and a sentence of two years was given for butchering a cow on an Indian reserve. The accomplice in this particular case was sentenced to nine months. Both were charged under section 294 of the Criminal Code for theft of property over $200.

In Alberta over the last five complete years—that is, from 1970 through to 1974 inclusive—there were 10,859 cattle reported missing, another 1,248 reported stolen; 196 cattle were recovered and 161 convictions were obtained. This figure for convictions applies only to the first four years, not to the year 1974; I presume they were not available for that year. During 1974, the final year within the bracket, in Alberta some 225 cases showed some evidence of cattle offences, as a result of which 45 charges were laid by police. I have been unable to obtain the number of convictions in Alberta in 1974.

Over the same five year period—1970 to 1974 inclusive—in Saskatchewan some 5,457 head were reported missing, of which 1,479 were recovered. These Saskatchewan figures are higher—that is to say, the incidence of theft is on the increase—in spite of increased surveillance by farmers, provincial stock inspectors and the RCMP. In 1974, in Saskatchewan, only three persons were charged with theft of cattle; two of these were convicted and the third case is still outstanding. I have been unable to obtain the number of charges laid in Saskatchewan during 1974; I presume there were a fair number.

In British Columbia, the B.C. Cattlemen's Association have assured me that the incidence of cattle rustling is still probably on the increase and they want to see heavier sentences on conviction. They suggest that if longer jail sentences are not appropriate for the courts—and sometimes we seem to think that is the only reason for not giving longer jail sentences—then the B.C. Cattlemen's Association would like to see much heavier fines handed out as a meaningful deterrent, and in this respect I certainly agree with them.

I want to read a resolution that was passed at the last annual meeting of the Western Stock Growers Association, which is the Alberta commercial cattlemen's group that met in Edmonton earlier this month. One resolution that is right on this subject reads as follows:

> Whereas it is our understanding that special livestock investigators of K Division, RCMP are unable to advance in rank beyond corporal while remaining on this assignment,
>
> And whereas this encourages good experienced men to accept transfer to other assignments at about the time that their accumulated experience could be most useful to the lifestock industry
> Therefore be it resolved that we continue to request the formation of a separate branch within the RCMP for livestock investigators.

They pointed out during the discussion of this resolution that lack of advancement for special stock investigators is a real factor in getting good, qualified RCMP officers to specialize in this type of work.

In drawing my remarks to a close, I wish to suggest very seriously that there is a twofold need in our Canadian cattle industry to reduce cattle theft and other unaccounted for losses that cannot be documented. First of all, I suggest there is a genuine need for much stiffer penalties, either jail sentences or fines, or both, by our courts of law. Secondly, we need stepped up surveillance and inspection by the RCMP with the formation of a separate branch within the RCMP for this purpose.

If it would be in order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest that I would be willing to withdraw my notice of motion to allow this subject matter to be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for further decision and referral for action to the two departments concerned, the Department of Justice and the office of the Solicitor General. I would truly hope there is enough broad interest on all sides of the House that this subject will be allowed to go to the committee this afternoon.

● (1720)

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, after hearing some of the comments from my colleagues here I am a little tempted to go into some of the folklore to which the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) referred a little while ago, but I will not do that. I do want to state that I made a commitment to the cattlemen in my riding following the last two elections, and I represent a number of cattlemen in the constituency of Kamloops-Cariboo. I assured them that there would be at least one little Indian down here who was concerned about the cowboys out there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I am not going to take up too much time during this debate, as the hon. member for Medicine Hat has very adequately and eloquently put the position of Canadian cattlemen with regard to cattle rustling. There is a lot of concern about cattle rustling in the provinces where cattle raising is practised. I have received a number of representations from cattlemen in British Columbia, particularly after my introduction of a private member's bill at the session before this and at this session. I have received a number of calls from all over the prairie region in respect of that bill, most of which were in favour of seeing the contents adopted.

My particular bill would stiffen the penalties for cattle rustling. This has been one of the greatest concerns of cattlemen, that the penalties being dished out have not been stiff enough to act as a deterrent to future cattle rustlers. My bill would have done the following:

> Every person who commits theft of cattle is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable
> (a) to imprisonment for ten years, where the value of the cattle exceed fifty dollars, or
> (b) to imprisonment for two years, where the value of the cattle does not exceed fifty dollars provided that a minimum sentence in either case shall be imprisonment for one year.

I am not going to be dogmatic about this as I know the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) are giving this consideration. Private member's bills do not always see the light of day, but I suggest the purpose of bringing these bills forward—and I suspect this is the purpose of the hon. member's motion—is to make sure that the government of Canada realizes that the cattlemen in this country are concerned about this serious problem of cattle rustling. It is still a problem in this country. I have a copy of a press release by the British Columbia Cattlemen which points out that ranchers in that province each year lose between 200 and 400 head to cattle rustlers. This is still a very serious problem and I would concur in the words of the hon. member for Medicine Hat in respect of this problem.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, coming from an area where cattle rustling is a very recent thing, I am pleased to support this motion. I am also pleased that the parliamentary secretary has indicated there is little disagreement with the suggestion that it be referred to the committee. I would like to see that action taken, but I would offer a word of caution in respect of the use of the RCMP in a special way under this legislation, particularly in Ontario and Quebec where we have provincial police forces which enforce the Criminal Code. It would be rather difficult for the RCMP to get involved in an investigation that normally takes place under the jurisdiction of the provincial police force.

Cattle rustling is a very insidious type of theft, the type that does lend itself to vigilante action. I think this is an additional reason for providing strong enough penalties to discourage this type of theft. I know of the case of a farmer who left his farm under the care of his 15 year-old son. The son heard a truck back up to the barn door. He got a gun and went out to see what was happening. When the driver of the truck had finished loading cattle, he advanced toward the son, who shot and killed him. It was finally decided that the son shot in self-defence because the man advanced toward him; therefore, the boy was being attacked. I would suggest that this is not the way to solve the problem. We must come up with a better solution. If this motion should become a legislative act of this parliament, we should include in it some way of forcing insurance companies to live up to their insurance bargains.

I live in an area where we have a federal community pasture. The cattle put into that pasture are insured against loss. The government does not supply continuous supervision of the pasture and each year four or five head of cattle are lost. When the farmer learns of the theft, which is usually when he takes the cattle out of the pasture or when the supervisor informs the farmers collectively that according to his count there are not enough cattle in the pasture, he reports it to the insurance company and makes a claim. However, in no case of which I am aware has the insurance company been willing to accept its responsibility. They decline to pay on two grounds. First, they say that the claim was made too long after the fact for there to be any effective police action and therefore the company has not been notified by the farmer within a reasonable time or in time for the police to carry out an investigation. For that reason they renounce their responsibility and refuse to make payment.

The second ground on which the insurance companies refuse to make payment is that the farmer cannot prove that the animal he put into the community pasture is the animal that was stolen from it, or that he no longer has possession of the animal. In other words, the suggestion is that he may have taken it home, and the company refuses to pay.

As a result, it seems to me that we are faced with a problem in that the farmer is not able to defend his own property, particularly in the way the young lad did to whom I referred. I suggest that we are not prepared to allow farmers to protect their property in that way. In addition, I am not in favour of establishing in Ontario vigilante groups of farmers to protect their cattle either during the hunting season or during the off-season. If we are not willing to allow that, then we must assure the farmers that somebody else will do it.

● (1730)

I think our police forces should have the assurance that, if they do the work that is necessary leading to a conviction, that conviction will be a deterrent to others. It is quite easy, regardless of whether it is in western or eastern Canada, for a person to drive by a field with some cattle in it and to take one animal without any difficulty. In most instances cattle are domesticated and not hard to catch. The rustler can put the cattle in this truck, be on his way, and later slaughter the cattle for his own use or for limited commercial use. The reward is considerable and the risk fairly small.

Protection must be given in a number of ways. We should develop a system of marking cattle that is more effective than the one we use now, namely, the system of ear tags. As soon as the ear tag is removed, the evidence is gone. It is quite true that a farmer, if he has only 200 or 300 head of cattle, can tell whether one is his cow or not. But it is difficult to prove in court. It can be proven by the hide, but in any case it is difficult.

Farmers must be protected by law, from this type of theft, and I agree with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) that the penalties for this type of theft must be increased. The difficulty that I see with this motion—and of course the committee would be able to deal with the problem—-is with regard to jurisdiction. As I said, in Ontario and Quebec different police methods are used from those in western Canada, and therefore the act as it affects Quebec and Ontario would be limited in scope unless a change where made in the administration of the RCMP. Since I do not think such a change is likely to take place, I think the act will have to be amended to include other police forces in those areas.

The other point is with regard to the valuation of the animals. The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) mentioned a minimum of $50. Perhaps this might be effective now, but it would certainly not have been effective in the case of a dropped calf a day or two old, a year or year and half ago. So if we accept the minimum of $50, the animals that are being stolen would not even be worth carrying away. Cattle should be valued fairly highly. It is hard to tell what the figure should be when you are dealing with a carcass, even if the carcass is available, which in most cases it is not.

My main concern is that one of the ways in which the farmer has tried to protect himself has been through insurance. The second way has been to have his animal graze on a community pasture where there is some supervision. In my area a number of farmers have been disappointed in both respects. They have not been able to collect insurance on the animals they have had in the community pasture, and the insurance companies have held the federal government responsible for negligence in supervision. The companies have argued and debated the point successfully as to whether or not a farmer can prove that the animal he put in such a pasture is no longer there. Although they agree that the total count has been reduced, they are not willing to accept that a particular animal has disappeared, because of the difficulty in proving when it disappeared.

I hope that the notice of motion put forward by the hon. member will receive the approval of the House and will, in time, become legislation because, in view of the high cost of meat today and the inability to supervise pastures or even stables, there has been a great increase in rustling in Ontario as well as in western Canada. If we allow the legislation to remain as it is now, farmers will be inclined and strongly motivated to defend their own property in their own way. If we allow this, those who condemn the use of fire arms, will find an increase in their use because farmers will be forced to defend their own property. Accidental shootings will occur when farmers decide to defent themselves against a fairly organized group of people engaged in rustling.

There are indications in my area that many of the thefts that are taking place are well planned and well thought out. Some organization moves in from another community and a number of thefts take place in one night. There was a case in the Toronto stockyards this year of the provincial police being able to give a description of the truck used by rustlers. The truck was stopped in the stockyard, the owners of the truck were apprehended and the cattle returned to the area. But that was an exceptional case.

Most of the thefts are successful, and for that reason farmers are overly apprehensive about the thefts that take place, about the inability of the police to do anything and the willingness of insurance companies to compensate for the thefts. Farmers are in a mood to take matters in their own hands, so I strongly urge the committee to consider seriously accepting the motion before us today.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate not because I believe I am an expert on farm or animal matters, far from that, but to indicate on behalf of the department I am representing the legal aspect of the matter now before us.

But let me first commend the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) for the truly honest and interesting way in which he explained the problem, a very serious one as may easily be concluded.

Statistical data submitted by the hon. member clearly show the problem has reached alarming proportions, so it seems quite normal for the government to consider the question and look for a possible solution in a relatively near future.

Sections 283 and 294 as well as paragraph 298(3) of the Criminal Code apply. Section 283 gives a definition of a theft.

Under section 294, where the value of what is stolen does not exceed $200 the penalty is imprisonment for up to two years. Where the value of what is stolen exceeds $200, the person who committed the theft is liable to imprisonment for a maximum ten years. Paragraph 298(3) provides that where an accused is charged with theft of cattle, the burden of proving that the cattle came lawfully in the possession of the accused rests with the latter.

In addition to sections applicable to theft of cattle, paragraph 298(3) of the Criminal Code states the act of fraudulently taking cattle that are found astray or fraudulently defacing a brand or mark on cattle is an indictable offence. Such offences entail imprisonment for five years.

Cattle industry representatives, in their briefs, suggest sentences imposed for theft of cattle do not have the adequate preventive effect needed in this type of criminal act. The hon. member also made representations to that effect. The representatives of cattle breeders also expressed the opinion that the Criminal Code should impose a minimum penalty on cattle rustling.

At their meeting in May 1973, the attorneys general tried to see whether the Criminal Code might be amended concerning cattle theft. Unfortunately, we could not come to an agreement. While representatives of a province recommended imposing a minimum penalty, spokesmen for other provinces proposed to amend the Criminal Code so that cattle rustling be made a crime liable to ten years' imprisonment.

For some time, there has been a clear tendency in amendments to the code to avoid minimum penalties. It results from the fact that the people in charge of the administration of justice generally believe that courts should be left the freedom to impose the sentence that they feel is the most appropriate in each case. If the attorney general considers the sentence inappropriate, he may appeal.

Fully aware of the problems created by cattle rustling, the government hopes to move a bill to amend the Criminal Code appropriately during this session.

Although it is up to Parliament to enact criminal legislation, enforcing the consequential regulations and the provisions of the Criminal Code rests with the provincial authorities, as my hon. friend knows.

Thus I must say to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) that his problem, as he knows, has already been examined by the government, but the representations he made today may urge them to act more rapidly and, as I think we should do, without any referring to a committee. I believe that this study makes it unnecessary to refer the problem to a committee for the time being, as I hopefully think—and of course this is not a commitment—we may admit among ourselves that it is quite likely this matter will soon result in concrete measures.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) for bringing forward this most worth-while motion concerning cattle rustling, and to note as well the comments by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand), who has a private member's bill on the order paper of similar portent that is, directed toward stiffer fines for cattle rustling and action by the government to provide some deterrent with respect to this very serious problem.

The hon. member outlined the representations he had received from groups in western Canada, the various stock producer groups, and I think that he had it very well documented, but I believe that this problem exists—perhaps not on as broad a scale because the cattle populations may not be as great—in Ontario as well. Of course the policing there is done by the Ontario provincial police.

It seems to me that this motion should be given serious consideration by the government. I know that in my own area, especially during this past year and a half when cattle prices have risen to very high levels—of course they have fallen off somewhat since the peak period—there were many cases of animals being rustled. I refer not only to the classic example of an animal being driven away, or loaded and carried away, but often animals were slaughtered right on the farm and the Carcasses taken away. Sometimes it seemed to be a more wasteful and senseless situation, where the more valuable rear quarters of the animal would be taken away and the remainder left to rot on the ground.

It seems to me, when we look at all the difficulties of farming today and the disparity in prices, that often the most valuable animal, that is, the fat, finished animal, is the one which will be stolen or rustled and slaughtered. It is not just confined to the beef animal. Often in my own constituency of Algoma dairy animals are stolen and slaughtered. Of course in this instance the animals involved are valuable. The farmer is not only losing the animal but also the milk which would be produced over the years.

I am very happy to join with other hon. members who are looking toward stiffer fines and deterrents with respect to this serious problem for our farm population.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute laws relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.51 p.m. the committee took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, in making some comments and asking some questions on clause 4 of Bill C-49 I want to begin by supporting the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. It seems to me that the suggestion that certain subclauses of clause 4 and certain subclauses of clause 7 should be held in abeyance until the first ministers' meeting has been held would not only be appropriate but, I think, would be only common courtesy. The Premier of Saskatchewan, Premier A. E. Blakeney, wired the Minister of Finance on February 18 suggesting such a procedure, and I imagine that other premiers would also welcome the government's agreement to this request.

I think it should be kept in mind that almost a year ago now the Prime Minister met with the premiers of the provinces in this city in an effort to resolve a very difficult problem. That problem was that the oil-producing provinces, facing a rapid depletion of their oil and gas resources, wanted higher prices to buttress them against the very serious crises that were facing them for the future, whereas the federal government wanted to keep prices below the world price. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that we in this party in this House of Commons supported the government in every possible endeavour to keep the price down, and exercised what little influence we had with some of the provincial governments to keep the price down.

Out of that discussion between the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces, the oil-producing provinces agreed to a price of $6.50 a barrel despite the fact that the international price was much higher. The Prime Minister, who was very glad to succeed in getting such a concession, came out of the conference saying this was a great day for Canadian federalism, and he praised the premiers of the two provinces for taking steps which we all, including the government, welcomed.

The premiers of the provinces went back to their respective capitals convinced that an agreement had been reached with respect to the matter of resources and that an agreement had been reached with respect to the revenues they could anticipate getting from their resources. They were hardly home before the Minister of Finance, who must have been privy to those discussions at the first ministers' conference, brought down a budget which changed the whole picture with respect to the revenues which would go to the different levels of government from resource taxation. It is little wonder that the premiers were indignant and hostile—little wonder that they expressed the opinion that they had been double-crossed and that no information had been given to them that the government intended to bring down the kind of provisions which are in this legislation, particularly in clauses 4 and 7.

It seems to me that it would fair and proper that the government should agree not to proclaim these clauses that are so controversial until after the first ministers' meeting. It would do the premiers the courtesy of allowing them to have their day in court to present their case to the Prime Minister and his colleagues. If they can persuade the Prime Minister and his colleagues that the measures contained in Bill C-49 are detrimental to the best interests of this country and are harmful to the international community, then the government does not need to proclaim these controversial clauses.

On the other hand if the government is not convinced, it has lost nothing; it can then, by order in council, proclaim the offensive clauses and they would come into effect. All the government will have done then will have been to show some courtesy to the premiers, having given them an opportunity to express their opinions.

It is rather significant that when the matter was one of deciding how much or how little revenue the provinces would get, there was a conference. Everybody was appealed to on the grounds of national interest. Provinces were asked to take less money than they could otherwise have secured. But when it comes to how much revenue the federal government is going to take in resource taxes, that is done without consultation, without any opportunity for the provinces to sit around the table to develop and present their respective points of view. I can understand why the provinces feel very resentful about this matter.

● (2010)

As has already been said, a precedent was set last year in the government's handling of the foreign investment review bill. I think all opposition parties asked the government not to proclaim Part II until the matter had been further investigated and the provinces had been consulted. The government acceded to that request. It has not proclaimed Part II, and whether that decision is wise or unwise is a matter for debate. At least the government recognized that the provinces have an interest in what is done in this House, particularly in matters which affect their jurisdiction.

For as long as I have watched the Liberal Party at close quarters, that party has held itself out as the champion of national unity. It is the party which "can hold Canada together." Yet some actions the party has taken recently have done more to destroy national unity than anything else that has been done for many years. It is difficult to explain that attitude.

I listened to the Minister of Finance say on a radio interview, that we would not agree to postpone the proclamation of any part of this bill because, after all, the government had been given a majority, it had introduced the May budget, and the people had given their approval. I doubt whether the public was aware of the implication of the clauses we are now discussing. I doubt if this was a public issue. I doubt if even the premiers are fully aware of the implications of clauses 4 and 7. The position of the Minister of Finance that the government, because of its majority, can ride roughshod over the rights of this House and of the provincial governments is a shortsighted one.

This country is in trouble. This government is in trouble; it must deal with unemployment, with inflation, with transportation which in the words of one of its own members is in a mess, and with housing difficulties. It needs the co-operation of provincial governments and it is not doing what it should to secure that co-operation.

Why do I say that? In March, 1974, the government obtained concessions from the provinces. Then, some months afterwards, the government did something which could do nothing but antagonize and hurt the provinces, and discourage the kind of co-operation which is necessary if there is to be unity in this country.

Let me deal briefly with some other matters. First, let me ask the minister; what is the rationale behind refusing corporations the right to deduct, from their income tax payments, royalty payments and taxes paid to provinces? This has never been done in the history of Canada. For years it has been recognized that royalties paid to the Crown in right of a province were to be exempt from income tax. Now, without warning, an unprecedented step has been taken. In the second reading debate the Minister of Finance said that the government is doing this because it has the right to a share of resource revenue. I submit that there are other ways in which the federal government can obtain its share of resource revenue.

I also point out, that the Minister of Finance has overlooked something else. Royalties are not taxes in the ordinary sense of the word, in the sense that they are income that can be repeated over a period of years. The royalties to which this legislation applies, that is, royalties on minerals, oil and gas, are paid on rapidly depleting resources. They are payments which are made to the provinces for the loss of an important part of their public domain which cannot be replaced. It is interesting to note, and if I am wrong I hope the minister will correct me, that we do not adopt this position with renewable resources. But with respect to non-renewable resources, resources with respect to which the federal government ought not to deprive provincial governments of revenue, the government has adopted its position as outlined in this bill.

The minister has also lost sight of something else. The royalties which a provincial government receives do not represent a net gain. Not only do they represent payment for a depleting resource; they represent also payment for the infrastructure which the provincial government must supply if resources are to be effectively extracted. You cannot put down a mine or set up an oil industry or gas industry without building roads, establishing towns or villages, or without building houses, schools and hospitals. In short, in order to make such industries effective and productive, the province must provide almost the entire infrastructure. So the money which a province receives from royalties is not clear gain, is not "buckshee" as it were. A good part of these revenues must be spent by the province, either to build infrastructure or to provide funds for future exploration and development.

On examining this legislation one gets the uneasy feeling that there is a sinister motive behind it, and that the non-deductibility of royalty payments is merely a step to discouraging provincial governments from moving into the ownership and the control of the oil and gas industry. After some of the provinces said, "We might as well take those industries over for ourselves", the minister, either on radio or television said, "Well, we can tax Crown corporations". If this legislation represents the first step in preventing provincial governments from moving into the ownership and control of resource development, it is very sinister legislation indeed. All over the world, except in north America—Mexico is an exception because that country nationalized its oil industry long ago—governments are moving to take over control of the oil and gas industry.

Despite anything the federal government may do, the provinces may be forced into this field. Actually, the federal government itself is being forced into it. The great oil companies which used to talk about standing on their own feet, not depending on the government, and opposing government intervention, now say, "We shall put up a plant to extract oil from the tar sands, provided you give us $1 billion. We shall build a pipe line from Sarnia to Montreal provided you guarantee us from any loss." So we are getting government intervention already, except that it is intervention on the terms of the oil companies.

● (2020)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Come on, Tommy, you are just romancing us now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The chances are that when the first ministers meet in April, the federal government will insist on its share of the pie and the provincial governments will complain that this will mean reduced revenues from their royalties, and the whole affair will finally be settled by an agreement to raise the price of crude oil, thus allowing for all the parties to keep the share they presently have. That may well be the solution adopted—to raise the price of crude oil from $6.50 to $8.50 a barrel. The federal government would do well, the provincial governments would do well, but the consumers will pay through the nose.

Much as I sympathize with the oil-producing provinces I say to the minister that we shall oppose any increase in the price of crude oil unless the increase is to be set aside in a fund to provide for exploration and development. If this is not to be the situation, if even greater profits are to accrue to the oil companies, then I say the federal government and the provincial governments are simply conniving to settle their differences at the expense of the consumer. The oil companies have made fabulous profits at $6.50 a barrel, and at $8.50 a barrel their profits would be even more obscene.

It is not my intention during the discussion of this clause to make any speeches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Those were just preliminary remarks?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If hon. members across the way are yelling "encore", I will be glad to oblige. I have five or six speeches in my desk if hon. members want to listen. However, I think it would be more productive if I could ask the minister some questions. I should like him to tell us whether the royalties are to be non-deductible either on a flat rate basis or on an accelerated basis. The claim has been that it has been these accelerated or graduated royalties which have eroded the federal government's share. Are flat royalties to be deductible?

I should also like the minister to tell us whether the oil companies which have leased land from the CPR, from the Hudsons Bay Company or from any private corporation on which they pay royalties are to have the benefit of deductibility in respect of those royalties. I understand they are deductible. But if royalties paid to private corporations are deductible, how does the minister justify insisting that royalties paid to the Crown are not deductible?

I want to ask the minister whether Canadian companies operating in a foreign country and paying royalties to the host government will receive a similar benefit in respect of those royalties. If those royalties are deductible, how does the hon. gentleman explain a situation in which royalties paid to a government in Canada are not deductible?

I should like to ask the minister a question with respect to a letter he wrote on January 24, 1974, to the presidents of Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil and Cities Service Limited, in the last paragraph of which he stated:

> Bill C-49 does not provide for the tax treatment of the Syncrude project as outlined above, but I assure you that the necessary measures will be taken to achieve this result before any relevant federal income taxes become exigible. In all other respects the provisions of the existing income tax law and the other recently proposed amendments thereto will, of course, apply to the Syncrude operations.

I want to ask the minister how he proposes to keep that commitment. Will he bring in amendments to this legislation? Will he, perhaps, use the instrument of the Financial Administration Act which, in my opinion, would be a dubious and devious course to follow?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I think he ought to tell us also what he meant by his statement in the House during the question period that, as far as the Syncrude project is concerned—I notice that in his letter he talks always about the Syncrude joint venture—not a corporation.

Mr. Benjamin: Some joint. That is a low joint.

An hon. Member: Get back into your space.

The Deputy Chairman: I have to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. Perhaps he might now resume his seat and allow the minister to answer some of those questions.

Mr. Guay: That is question No. 22.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If I could complete this question it would save me getting up again, and the minister could probably answer them all at the same time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You have a pretty loose-jointed supporter there in Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: I won a lot of ball games.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If I could get the hon. member for St. Boniface to play ball with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, perhaps I could get on with my question.

The minister said during the question period that the tax situation applicable to the Syncrude project would remain as it was in 1973. I should like him to clarify that statement. I should like to know whether the Syncrude partners will get the 100 per cent depletion allowance rather than the 30 per cent allowance—whether the 33 per cent depletion allowance will be automatic, as it is under the old legislation, or whether it will have to be earned as is the case under the new legislation? Most important of all, I want to ask the minister whether the concession which the government has granted to the Syncrude partners will apply to the over all operations of the corporations engaged in that joint venture. In other words, will Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil and Cities Service be able to write off their Syncrude investment against their other operations? The minister shakes his head. I can hear it from here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I shall have to tighten it up.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I want to tell the minister that if this is not the case he had better tell the President of Gulf and the President of Imperial, because they have both said on the electronic media that they will be able to write off their investment and thus save Imperial Oil $150 million a year and Gulf Oil $75 million a year—that it will save them almost $1.5 billion in four and a half years.

● (2030)

Either the minister has not made himself very clear to these people, or they are mistaken. If they are mistaken, the minister had better tell them. However, I suspect they are not mistaken and that they do have a firm undertaking that they will get this kind of treatment. If they do, then it will be one of the most shameful sell-outs ever seen in this country. If we hand these people $1 billion over four and a half years this will mean that the Canadian people will be paying for about 80 per cent of the cost of the Syncrude plants.

These are questions that we would like answered. We will not hold up these clauses, but we are going to ask questions. We do not want suave evasions or flippant irrelevancies; what we want are answers, and we are prepared to stay here until we get answers. I hope the minister will clear up the points which have been raised, and we will have other questions to ask as we go along.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Chairman, as I represent a fairly important mining area of our country, I feel I must say a few words on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) which strikes me as very reasonable at this point. The hon. member is not asking that the act be changed, nor that part of the bill be deleted; he merely suggest postponing the passing of clause 4 of Bill C-49 dealing with mining corporations' taxes with regard to royalties or subsidies paid to them.

Mr. Chairman, I see in that clause a direct attack upon private enterprise. We are advised that, in my area alone, dozens of new mining companies will hesitate to set up operations, because they know Bill C-49 will paralyze their activities. A while ago, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said that some companies would be overtaxed to the extent where they will be unable to operate.

But the hon. member should have told the House that if he were sitting in the minister's seat, he would suggest immediate nationalization of those companies; but such is not the case now. They will not be nationalized, but the robbing advocated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with regard to mining and other companies is not much better.

Yesterday, I got a telegram from a mining company operating in my area, the Falconbridge Copper Limited, Lake Dufault Division.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Welfare bums.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): We have 450 people living out of that exploitation, whereas if we had your kind of government not one of them would be working.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, in Lac Dufault, where I live now—

[English]

This mine says it is most concerned over the impending proclamation of clause 4 of Bill C-49 and suggests—

[Translation]

On this point, I would like the hon. minister to hear.

[English]

It suggests that a separate proclamation date be set for clause 4; such date would be determined after further consultations between the federal government and the governments of the provinces. I think it is fair to say that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said he was doubtful whether the minister had some links outside this country with multinationals, so that they cannot do anything for our internal companies or for the Canadian people. I do not think it is the case, having known the minister so well for so many years. He even gave me the chance in the last election to be re-elected. He made some good comments about me when I was in hospital, and that was quite a help. For that matter, the NDP did exactly the same thing.

Mr. Benjamin: We love you.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Except that they did not have a chance up there.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): And they knew it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not like the Liberals; they did not have a chance and they did not know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Chairman, I think that this suggestion by Falconbridge, of Lac Dufault, is worth its weight in gold. We do not ask the government to delete clause 4, but we ask them to hold meetings with the provincial authorities before coming to a final decision because, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said, it is true that there is now some disagreement between the provinces and the federal government. It is so true that, in other areas, Quebec Liberal members in Ottawa are being accused by the premier of Quebec of plotting behind his back to defeat him as leader of the Liberal party in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Everybody knows that. I saw the premier on television the night before last, I read the newspapers yesterday morning. Is the premier right or not? I do not know, it is none of my business, but the premier goes after the Quebec Liberal members in Ottawa saying that they are the ones who challenge his leadership in the province of Quebec. So the Liberals from Quebec are displeased. Mr. Lougheed of Alberta is displeased. Mr. Schreyer of Manitoba is displeased. Mr. Barrett of British Columbia is displeased. Mr. Davis is not pleased either. That one is never pleased!

Mr. Chairman, if at a new meeting or the next meeting of premiers with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that issue were discussed so as to allow for an expansion of our naturel resources it seems to me that would help the whole country. Assistance for Alberta, favourable fallouts for Quebec or the Maritimes, favourable fallouts for western Canada, that is what needs to be examined.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill prevents the creation of new industries and jobs which would promote the development of our resources, could it be that the government is more interested in paying out unemployment insurance benefits, welfare allowances than granting tax exemptions to help private enterprise—I do not say free enterprise, free to exploit and rip off everybody—but an honest private enterprise?

An hon. Member: That makes a difference.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): That makes a difference.

● (2040)

[English]

Government or private enterprise; there is a difference between the two and they don't know it.

Mr. Benjamin: You have to find a lamp to find it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): All right, you help me and we will find it.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I think instead of contributing social welfare allowances, we should do like the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and say: From now on, we assure you that you will get a $5,000 guaranteed annual income. If you earn $4,000 a year, you will be paid $1,000, and if you earn $5,025 a year, you will be paid nothing.

Instead of contributing social welfare allowances and unemployment insurance benefits, the government should grant tax exemptions which would enable private companies to create new jobs and expand their industries. If the creation of 15 new mining sites were made possible in my area, there would not be one unemployed worker left; we now have a 14 per cent rate of unemployment instead. The companies that might develop a copper, zinc, silver, nickel or gold mining prospect do not want to move their little finger because they think the government will snatch everything away. That is an important matter which the Department of Finance should look into. The minister with his top advisers, the government in cabinet should study the possibility of actually helping fight not only unemployment, but inflation too.

Mr. Chairman, a good fifteen new mining companies would suddenly spring into existence in my area. But we keep getting the same shilly-shallying, the same procrastination, and the government, as soon as there is some talk about establishing such a new company, comes up with its threats: "We are going to increase your taxes, to tax your royalties, to tax subsidies, we are going to crush you down." That is what provinces are fighting against now.

Those were the few comments I wanted to make. I would like the Minister of Finance to take into consideration the suggestion I got from Mr. Wright, the Manager of Dufault Lake Falconbridge Copper Limited Company. He made that suggestion, but other corporations might have as well. The mining industry is worried. They are waiting for the government and the Minister of Finance to assure them that they will be able to operate their mines with a profit, instead of at a loss.

And profits in the mining industry are not so exorbitant either. The price of copper is down. In the case of gold, nobody knows. Its price on the world or so-called open market is quite high, but it is still in a tight or restrained situation on the official or legal market.

Mr. Chairman, if the minister contemplates the possible creation of new mining industries, let him wait until he has had discussions again with the provinces, especially if the meeting is to take place on April 15 at the latest. This question should be settled once and for all, so that each and every province may be assured that its autonomy will be respected. They need the assurance that the federal government will help them and provide them with the necessary means for their full development. Then the Minister of Finance will have been of great service not only to provincial governments, but to the whole Canadian population as well.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain as I believe that clauses 4 and 7 should not be proclaimed until after the first ministers' meeting. I think that when the minister spoke to the Canadian Club in Toronto he had this in mind. He was speaking of the economy, and when he came to the oil and gas industry he said that the third problem involved providing incentives for the development of new energy reserves without permitting oil and gas prices to rise more quickly than is appropriate or necessary.

The minister stated, as reported in the Globe and Mail of January 28:

> We have long recognized the need to narrow the differential between the domestic and international price of petroleum to encourage both the development of new reserves and the conservation of existing stocks.

The minister also suggested at that time that the timing and extent of increases in domestic oil prices would be a foremost concern at the federal-provincial meetings in April. He said that within a reasonable period the major elements of uncertainty in the resource field, including taxation, pricing and markets, should be resolved.

Keeping this in mind, what is the point in proceeding with these taxation measures at this time, because quite obviously the price of oil, gas and minerals depends on what takes place at the meetings in April? I should like the minister at least to comment on this situation. I know he cannot be specific, but he said that the differential between domestic and world prices should not be too great, or that the difference needs to be narrowed. It would be interesting to find out what the government feels the price difference should be in order to make sure that the oil and gas industry is healthy and can provide Canadians with a reasonably secured supply.

With the realization that the number of rigs drilling for conventional oil in Alberta has been reduced, it seems important that this resource taxation field be straightened out. By passing these two clauses it would seem that the government in effect is saying to the provinces that this is the federal government's stand, it cannot or will not back off, and if there are to be any changes the provinces will have to make them. Certainly the passage of these clauses can be construed as nothing else but a provocative and antagonistic attitude toward the provinces. This attitude might not be so bad if we did not face the prospect that we are running behind in respect of cheap conventional oil.

Let us consider our balance of payments problems. We had a deficit on current account for 1974 of $2.5 billion, and it is estimated that we will have a deficit of $3 billion this year. Last year there was a surplus in petroleum, oil and natural gas of $1.6 billion. Oil imports are expected to bring to the petroleum trade alone a deficit of $2.3 billion in 1980, and $4.4 billion in 1984. Surely this will have a significant effect on the future of the country, and what the Prime Minister will decide with the provinces when he meets them will be of great importance, because overcoming oil deficits is an important and difficult problem for Canada to face. We would be less than prudent if we did not make sure that the oil industry had a reasonable return and there was reasonable activity to bring on new supplies.

With regard to minerals, again it seems here that these resources are not in as short a supply around the world as are gas and oil, and that the price of these products has decreased.

When it is stated that in 1975 the effective rate of tax in Ontario and Quebec will be around 60 per cent, added to the more than 100 per cent tax rate in western Canada, it becomes certain that investor confidence will be eroded, and the capital intensive mining industry will be even harder hit than it has been by inflation. The president of Noranda suggested that the cost of developing a new mine in February of 1975 is more than double what it was three years ago, and five times what it was ten years ago.

There is a question that I would like to put to the minister. I believe that in clause 7 there is a formula according to which royalties will be computed, based upon provincial gas company rates. I assume that this is specifically designed for the British Columbia Crown corporation. If the minister has not already done so, and to my knowledge he has not, I would like him to explain how this formula will be worked out and on what basis the fair price will be established. Will the price be based on the U.S. price at the border? I think this is a most important question, particularly if there is to be a proliferation of Crown corporations involved in oil and gas energy.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that we delay the proclamation of clause 4 until after the meeting of the first ministers in April. I also want to say that I thought he made a brilliant speech today laying out the reasons why this is the position that the government should take.

It is very difficult to understand the comments which the Minister of Finance is reported to have made this evening, or why the government is taking such a rigid attitude with regard to this tax situation. It is really incredible, when all the opposition parties and nine of the provinces are very much opposed to this proposal, as well as practically all the industries involved, that the government insists on moving ahead.

We are not debating this evening a simple tax clause. We are coming to grips with an issue that is affecting everyone in this country. One can find no support for the government's position. It is arguing its case alone, and one finds it difficult to know what its case is, because it is not as if the federal treasury badly needed money at this time. It does not. It has been a long time since it has been in such a liquid position.

Surely the government must understand, and the minister must know what a fragile thing maintaining confederation, operating a government, and operating a country like Canada is and how much it requires co-operation and not confrontation.

Ever since the so-called oil prices development in the Middle East, we have lived through a series of confrontations in this nation—confrontation between the provinces, and confrontation between industry and the provinces, and confrontation between industry and the federal government. Surely this is no way in which to run a country, and surely the minister must realize that the hon. member this afternoon gave a very logical and rational reason why this clause should not be proclaimed until the conference of the first ministers has been held, or why indeed it should never be proclaimed at all.

The government's action has created enormous uncertainty within industry, which has had an adverse effect on the production of our ressources, and will have a great effect on future production. And again one wonders, why the government takes such a position since its policy in the last three years has been to fight inflation by increasing supply. The minister will recall that the opening lines of most of his budget speeches have been that we will fight inflation in this country by increasing supply. If there has ever been a proposal which has done more negatively to affect the supply of important resources in our nation than the proposal before us now, I do not know what it has been. Industry wants certainty. People in industry want to know that they will be able to make a fair rate of return on invested capital in order to be able to progress. It is abundantly clear that while the resources are here in Canada, the fact of the matter is that the capital, the know how, the knowledge to develop those resources and to get the supply that we need in this country, are found throughout the world. If industry cannot earn a rate of return on the development of the resources in this country, of course it will invest that capital elsewhere. It will move to other places where the return, in its view, is more appropriate.

This evening we are trying to find an effective solution for taxation of natural resources. It is a problem that affects everybody in the world. If anybody is paying any attention to what we are doing in this country, it must really amuse them to see, at a time when everyone is trying to find a way to increase the supply of oil and petroleum, that here we are in a country of 20 million people, one hundredth of the whole population of the world, locked in combat between one province and the federal government because we are not capable of working out a mutually agreeable system for developing resources.

Surely the confrontation approach that the minister has taken is no answer to the serious situation in which we find ourselves. I hope the minister will spend some time, when he answers questions explaining why he has been rejecting out of hand the "Hamilton proposal," if I may call it that. The shortages which we are going to experience in the future will not only be in oil and petroleum but also in capital which must be used more effectively. With the rate of inflation that is being experienced everywhere in the world, the amount of capital that will be available for investment opportunities will be greatly decreased and the amount needed will increase.

One of the most challenging things we have to do is to find a way to use capital much more efficiently. All projections for the development which is going to take place in Canada during the course of the next quarter of a century suggest that we must make more effective use of capital. All the projects we are talking about are capital intensive; for example, the James Bay project, the Mackenzie River Pipeline project, if it goes ahead, and all the development which is going to take place in the tar sands. We will not be able to raise the capital we will need to develop these projects as inflation continues, and the government is going to have to participate in greater degree. The time will come when we must find a way to use capital much more efficiently and intelligently, not only in Canada but all over the world.

It is going to be an impossibility to undertake the sort of resource development we are talking about if it is intended to finance it in precisely the same way it was financed in the past. One can say there is going to be abundant capital available from the Middle East. That may be true. There have been large transfers of resources to the Middle East from the western industrialized countries, but surely we are not prepared to depend on financing from the Middle East in order to get our projects under way.

How can we use capital more efficiently? That seems to be almost as significant a problem for the minister as the entire conflict between the provinces. The real question is whether we can get these developments under way by turning capital around in a much more efficient and effective way. The proposal put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain strikes me as providing one answer. What is being proposed is a simple matter of the government foregoing its tax revenue and the equity holders foregoing their rate of return during a period of time in which the proceeds from the investment are used to retire debt.

Briefly the net result of applying this proposal is that the debt is wiped out early in the life of a project. No matter how the arithmetic is applied, the net result for both industry and government is that they are infinitely better off because all the front end costs are disposed of. A large debt structure unfortunately absorbs a unique proportion of the output from any particular project, and it would be much better if this revenue were used as a rate of return for the equity investment, much better used as a source of tax revenues for the government of Canada in the interests of the people of Canada, than to service debt.

It is quite true that there is nothing more difficult to bring into effect than a new idea, particularly in the area of finance. It is interesting that the proposal of my colleague has now picked up independently developed support. I do not suggest it is coming from the same source, but it was referred to this afternoon. The British government is now looking at a proposal not altogether different which is outlined in The Economist of, I think, February 14. All round the world people are searching for a way to make more effective use of capital and to achieve a more rapid turnover.

I would like to know what is wrong, when a proposal is put forward of this dimension and significance and which is so important because we are going to be so short of capital, with taking the time to examine the proposal, to put it to the provinces and to industry for consideration. Why not postpone the proclamation of Clause 4 so that the federal government, the provinces and the industry may study the proposal?

I do not know what the government really wants, but unless it really wants to see this nation moving into a situation where the private enterprise system is not able to finance any of the major resource projects we have before us, it must find some new way of financing these particular projects. Is it really the aim of the government to make sure that practically all the major proposals in the future are going to have to be financed partially or entirely by government? If they are, we are going to be moving toward a type of economy which I do not think the people really want. We must explore new methods.

I cannot over emphasize to the minister and his advisers that this issue is not important only to Canada, it is not important only to the resource industry, it is not important only to the provinces, but it is really important all over the western industrialized world. Surely if there is a country where we could make an effort to make a breakthrough on this particular problem, it should be Canada. What is the need? What is the rush? Why is it important that we have an immediate solution?

I find it quite inexcusable to dismiss out of hand, without any real care or study or presentation to a single province, a serious proposition put forward by the opposition in this parliament. It seems incredible that the government should take that attitude. I have to agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that it is almost as if agreement has already been made that there will be a new budget which will satisfy some of the people involved in the current confrontation, but agreement certainly has not been made to help the hundreds of small Canadian companies suffering so much under this situation.

The proposal put forward by my colleague this afternoon seems emphatically logical, emphatically forthright and would get around the dilemma with which we are faced at the present time of confrontation that is bound to increase without solving any particular problem. The government may win this confrontation, but it really will win nothing in the long run because it is not dealing with the basic issues. I find it almost inexcusable that the government would not take under consideration the proposal made by my hon. friend this afternoon.

The proposal was made actually on January 30 in this House. It has not been discussed with the provinces or with other groups, and I would urge that the minister reconsider remarks he has made in the past and the remarks he made today that the government will insist on pushing forward with this clause of the bill in face of the fact that the provinces, the opposition and most industries are opposed to it, in face of the fact that it can bring only difficulties to the fabric of confederation at the present time, in face of the fact that it is running counter to the policy of the government of trying to increase supply, in face of the fact that it will not do anything to solve the fundamental problem we will face, and are facing, of how to use capital most efficiently, and in face of the fact that a serious proposal of an alternative approach to financing has been put forward with the request that it be considered by the provinces and industry. What can the government lose by waiting and by accepting the proposition put forth today? It would seem to make good sense for the government to accept this proposition today.

● (2110)

Why go ahead and bring about confrontation which will not do anything for the country except great harm? When it comes time for the Minister to reply I hope that he will not dismiss the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain out of hand but will give it serious consideration.

There is no advantage in the government doing what it has planned to do, and there is a tremendous advantage to the country by it accepting this amendment, and I hope it will do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I was going to speak in this debate anyway—the fact that the government House leader came and sat beside me should not be construed as encouragement to speak.

I want to support the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I am going to take another view of it, however. The grounds advanced by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain have been harrowed and cultivated and there has been a little fertilizer from the government side so I am going to approach the question from a different direction.

Before doing so, however, I want to congratulate the government whips. There are members here on the government side from the province of Quebec, which has the traditional position of defending the constitution, and the fact that the government whips have been able to keep them quiet is a tribute to the way they operate. I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that if a number of members from Quebec had their way they would oppose the way in which the government, through this particular clause, has been trampling on the constitution. I think this is a real tragedy, Mr. Chairman, and my remarks will therefore be along those lines.

What is proposed by this clause and the related clause is looked upon by the Minister of Finance as part of the numbers game that he and his officials play with this question of the percentages of tax, and the refusal to accept the royalties of the provincial governments with regard to petroleum products or minerals as being a deductible item. The question of how to divide up the pelt of the skinned taxpayer has been a continuing battle between federal and provincial bureaucrats for many years. Ever since the Rowell-Sirois commission reported and the government of Canada started to intervene—in many cases with the support of the provinces—this game has been going on. I do not suppose it will ever be concluded.

As I have said before, I think the government has gone a little too far. We may be now looking at the fall and decline of the federal system. Surely a federal system, particularly one which is to be successful and is to survive, must march in tune and in sympathy with regional and provincial aspirations—geographic, economic, racial, religious, and, of course, linguistic. For eight or ten years the present government has pursued a vigorous policy tied to the fact that linguistic differences must be maintained. It is far less accommodating, however, when it comes to other things.

Natural resources are not something over which the federal government has jurisdiction, or the provincial government has jurisdiction. The natural resources belong to the provinces, to the people of the provinces.

If one examines the confederation debate, or the debate which took place in 1930 when resources were returned to the western provinces, one will find that it was made abundantly clear at that time that those resources were to be the property—the royalties were to be the property of the people of the provinces.

In the course of that debate the late Mackenzie King was asked if royalties were going to belong to the people of the provinces, and the answer was yes. We are not dealing merely with the federal government invading a matter with respect to which the provinces have jurisdiction, Madam Chairman—this is property which the people of the provinces own. Now we find the federal government intervening and attempting to take something which does not belong to it. If someone had come to me with that story when I was practising law I would have said that the federal government had engaged in the act of theft—straight theft, and conversion of property belonging to someone else.

Now I must ask if we want the federal system to be continued in Canada because I think that is the problem we face. By a series of fortuitous circumstances, a bit of luck and some skill, over a hundred years ago we put together a document called the British North America Act. We have added to this from time to time, and it has preserved this country in pretty good shape in spite of the fact that we have been cursed with a Liberal government in 35 out of the last 40 years.

I suggest, Madam Chairman, that diversity and distinctiveness remain the basis of social progress—diversity between individuals and diversity between regions and provinces in a federal system. I know this is a doctrine which is an anathema to many of the social scientists who manage to burrow into the bureaucracy—I am going to read this and, because I think the committee should have the full benefit of it, I will repeat it. This business of diversity and individual distinction remains the basis of social progress. This is a doctrine which is an anathema to the social scientists who burrow into the internal processes of government and shortly set to work to produce the usual garbage-like litter of documents which is the centrepiece of all bureaucracy. In this way they manage to restrain the over-inquisitive natives when they get restless, and permit the elite high priests of the government civil service to practise their trade and pursue their inclinations without hindrance.

I wish I could take out of the statutes of Canada the various amendments made to the Income Tax Act in the last three or four years. I see the hon. member for Edmonton Centre here. We all remember the occasion in the House some years ago when, with a superhuman effort, he managed to tear up that huge monument, the Income Tax Act. Even as the hon. member was doing that, the then minister of finance was given his reward. He became Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, and he has made as great a shambles of that job as he did of the finance portfolio. This is what may happen to our present minister. I am sure the Prime Minister has something in mind for him. Even if the CTC is demolished, another agency will be established in its place, and a spot will be found in it for the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Prime Minister will be glad to see him there.

● (2120)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now let's get back to the script.

Mr. Baldwin: I say to the committee, without fear of successful contradiction, that few understand these voluminous income tax amendments. The distinguished gentleman sitting in proximity to the Minister of Finance, and I do not mean his seat mate, is one of the few in the chamber who understand this bill. I hear that many people who have tried to understand it have been on the psychiatrist's couch, and many are in institutions. I do not think anybody really understands this legislation, which is one of our difficulties.

I submit that passage of this clause will endanger the future of confederation. Even since the Rowell-Sirois Commission reported, federal governments have meddled increasingly with matters of provincial concern. This has been done through the Income Tax Act, and through general welfare and social security programs. It is somewhat strange that at the very time when provinces face tremendous financial burdens as a result of social security programs initiated by the federal government, the federal government is saying to them, "You people in the provinces will have to restrain your costs". The provinces must make expenditures at provincial levels because the federal government, which initiated these programs, has cast the burden on the provinces.

Passage of clause 4 would impose on the people of this country a pattern of rigid conformity which is not conducive to the future development of Canada and its people. I reject the principle of the unitary state. If we had wanted a unitary state, we could have provided for it 100 years ago; and I strongly resent the government's attempt to establish a unitary state by passing measures such as the one we are debating.

Speaking in defence of measures of the kind introduced in this bill and in the petroleum administration bill, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that when the rights of the provinces, conflict with the rights of the people of Canada as a whole, the rights of the provinces must yield to the rights of the people. Let us examine that statement which sounds good and reads well.

What are the ministers saying? When they speak of the people of Canada, they mean people concentrated in central Canada. Obviously since the people of Quebec and Ontario outnumber the rest, the representatives of those people, through their preponderance of numbers, will be able to introduce programs which will be acceptable in their provinces. True, you can do that; but you cannot do that and still have a valid federal system.

If there is to be a federal system, a system which will give effect to the rights of people living in the four corners of any province, we must heed the constitution. When that constitution says that natural resources belong to the people of a province, it does not lie within the competence of this or any other federal government, by using measures of this kind, to take away from the people of a province their rights of ownership and their right to deal with resources as they see fit.

The people who lead our provinces are reasonable and decent, and when they sit down at a federal-provincial conference they will work out programs and compromises which will be for the benefit of the people of Canada as a whole. This has always been the case, but it takes time. One can liken this process to some industrial disputes. The parties sit down at the bargaining table, then get up, but come back again. I have enough confidence in the people who lead the governments of this country, the governments of the provinces, to believe that compromises can be worked out.

But I say to this committee that this consensus cannot be achieved by the federal government's securing passage of legislation of this kind and then going to the bargaining table and saying, "We have this legislation on the statute books; you do what we tell you, or else!" That is not the way to secure understanding and compromise on which the resolution of these difficulties must be based. I suggest that there are people in the west, in the east, and in central Canada who say that if this is how the federal government operates, it is time we re-negotiated the conditions of confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I will not spell out how this could be done; it could be by means of weighted votes, changes in the other place—to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might agree—or changes in this chamber, whereby the party system which has been inflicted on our parliamentary structure since confederation might be altered to provide for a greater measure of independence. This could be done in many ways. But I say to the members of this committee that demand for change will continue until it becomes a clamour which cannot be ignored.

Given these conditions, would the government not be sensible in saying, "We are prepared to defer proclamation of these objectionable and controversial clauses until we have sat down at the bargaining table and worked these matters out with the provinces, in the spirit of reasonable compromise which must be achieved if we are to survive and prosper as a country and if these difficulties are to be resolved"?

Confrontation is not good enough. I believe strongly in the adversary system, as a lawyer and member of this House. Under the adversary system we can examine an issue from all angles; the opposition can challenge the government and examine its programs from all angles. But when the adversary system is changed into a system of confrontation politics for political purposes, so that the dominant level of government can say to provincial governments, "We have the power; you do this or that, or else", I say that we have gone a long way down the road in deteriorating Confederation. If they, representing the majority of the people of Canada, decide that a certain thing should be done in the interest—in their opinion—of the nation, then apparently it does not matter a damn whether that action comes within federal jurisdiction or not; the government will take action regardless of the feelings of the provinces.

● (2130)

I have watched the minister as these speeches have been made. I feel the government is set in its position and I think it is tragic that its attitude cannot be changed. I can only urge the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the others who will be at that bargaining table in April to bear in mind what I have said. The hour is growing late. There is not much time in which to work out this problem.

Mr. Symes: Madam Chairman, I want to comment on the amendment and reiterate our support for it, and then move on to a series of questions which I hope the Minister of Finance will answer.

We are dealing with the resource sections of Bill C-49, especially the clauses which prevent royalties being deducted from revenue earned by corporations. This has the effect of inhibiting provinces in raising tax revenue as should be their natural right. It forces the provinces to back down on the attempt to gain through the imposition of royalties a fair return for their resources, many of which are non-renewable. I would like to mention for, the minister's edification, a fundamental concept which was stated clearly in the report of the Royal Commission on the Transfer of Natural Resources of Manitoba in 1929. This royal commission stated, and I quote:

> At confederation it was decided to make natural resources the cornerstone of provincial sources of revenue. The provinces transferred to the federal government most of their other sources of revenue including, notably, the collection of customs duties, but they retained for themselves the use and control of Crown lands, mines, minerals and royalties as sources of income.

It seems to me that the government, through the budgets of May 6 and November 18, is making a determined attack on that fundamental right of the provinces. I think the amendment which was proposed to delay proclamation of these sections of the income tax bill relating to resources until the first ministers of the provinces and the federal government have been able to sit down and talk is quite justified. It is better we should talk about this vital issue rather than the Minister of Finance should in a high-handed way impose a tax scheme which is contrary to the very fundamental precepts of confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: The whole issue of resource taxation is a fundamental one. We have been dealing into the non-deductibility of provincial royalties, but there is one glaring omission from this income tax bill, a glaring omission on the minister's part to state clearly and precisely what the government's intentions are in terms of taxation policy toward the Syncrude project recently approved in principle by the government.

The minister has been telling us that the Syncrude deal and the oil company partners in Syncrude will be exempt from the provisions of this tax bill relating to resource taxation. But he is fudging the issue. He is not telling us precisely what is to be the tax regime governing the Syncrude project.

I have five very important questions which I should like to put to the minister; we in this party want clear and distinct answers before we dispose of this bill. We are prepared to sit here and debate it until we get clear answers from the minister.

The minister has been stating publicly that the Syncrude project will be exempt from the royalties non-deductibility provisions of the November federal budget. He is exempting this multi-million dollar Syncrude project yet he will not exempt other resource concerns in this country. If should be clear that Syncrude will be exempt from the royalties non-deductibility provisions which, of course, means it will enjoy an important tax concession as compared to other resource industries.

As my second question, I want to know if it is correct that Syncrude will also retain automatic depletion allowance of up to one-third of production profits instead of having to earn the depletion allowance and instead of being limited to a maximum of 25 per cent of production profits. That is a very important distinction, and we need a clear answer.

As my third question, will Syncrude be able to continue to claim 100 per cent write-off of development costs instead of being limited, as in this budget, to 30 per cent only for development write-offs? The Minister of Finance is saying that Syncrude will work under the 1973 tax regime; as I read it this means Syncrude will enjoy a 100 per cent write-off on development costs.

As my fourth question, under the provisions of the 1973 tax regime, as stated by the President of Imperial Oil and the President of Gulf Oil, is it correct that if Syncrude has insufficient profits to absorb all available tax write-offs, these write-offs can be passed back proportionately to the partners to be written off against their income from other sources of operation? As I read the bill, and as I understand the officials from the oil companies, they will be able to do this. This means a tremendous tax loophole exists for these companies. If Imperial Oil, for example, invests in Syncrude a sum of $300 million it can write off against its other operations taxable profits in an amount of $400 million odd dollars. It follows that the government will tax that much less of the profits of the oil companies from their other operations. They will be able to use Syncrude as a great tax deductible haven.

A further question I wish to ask: is it correct that the Syncrude consortium, because it is exempt from certain provisions of the November budget, will be assessed at a lower federal tax rate of 48 per cent for 1974? Will the rate be 47 per cent in 1975 and 46 per cent in 1976, compared with the 50 per cent corporate tax rate which will be in effect for the other resource industries in this country?

● (2140)

Before the recent deal was made in Winnipeg that fateful Monday, the president of Imperial Oil was saying that if the government did not come through with equity financing he would be happy to revert to the tax scheme of 1973 for the oil company partners in Syncrude. Mr. Armstrong, according to the Globe and Mail for January 23, calculated that if the oil company partners in Syncrude could work under the 1973 tax regime, they would have a saving of upwards of $1 billion over a four and a half year period. If that is correct—and I have no reason to doubt the president of this oil company—it means that the Canadian people will end up financing 90 per cent of the Syncrude project.

We have been told by the government that the Canadian public, through the provincial and federal governments, is putting up 30 per cent of the costs, or $600 million. The government of Alberta has given the Syncrude partners a $200 million loan. That totals $800 million. If the tax regime of 1973 were applied to Syncrude then, in the words of the president of Imperial Oil, the Syncrude partners would get another $1 billion in tax concessions. In other words, the public would be putting up $1.8 billion, or 90 per cent of the cost of Syncrude, and would get in return only 30 per cent ownership. The companies would have 70 per cent ownership; the public, putting up 90 per cent of the financing, retains only 30 per cent ownership.

No wonder we call this the greatest sell-out in the history of Canada's resources. This is something that the minister has a duty to clarify for the benefit of the public of this country. He must let people know exactly what they have got themselves into. The public of this country has been duped; we have been sold out by this government and by the multinational corporations.

The other point the Minister of Finance and Minister of Energy do not like talking about too much is the rip-off in the Syncrude project in the form of a more than doubling of the price of oil coming out of the oil sands. This was another part of the agreement—that oil which is now being produced at $6.50 a barrel will be sold at the world price, which could range anywhere from $11 to $15 a barrel; that has been guaranteed the Syncrude partners. Yet they are going to be taxed at an even lower rate, according to the Minister of Finance, than any other resource company in this land.

Canadian consumers will not only pay outrageous prices for the privilege of using their own oil; they are, as I say, going to be financing this project through direct public funding and tax concessions which the government has given the Syncrude partners, for all of which they retain only 30 per cent of the ownership and decision making in this vital project. The Minister of Finance must come clean and tell the truth about this aspect of the Syncrude deal which he has so far failed to clarify in any speech made to date. We await with interest his defence, if he has one, of this outrageous sell-out.

[Mr. Symes.]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to preclude the minister from standing up and explaining this outrageous sell-out, or whatever was the term used at the end of the remarks of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. Certainly I will defer to him in tonight's debate if he so chooses.

I feel somewhat intimidated in rising to my feet after the quality of the debate today. This afternoon the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain stated in very eloquent terms that there was a better way of accomplishing the goals that the minister, the government, and I think every member of the committee would like to achieve. Then the hon. member for Don Valley indicated there was really no need for the minister to proceed in the manner he chooses to proceed now. The hon. member for Peace River also pointed out that continuing to proceed in this way could be dangerous to the goals he indicated he would like to see Canada achieve, and which I think are shared by all members of the House.

Yet in face of all this reason, logic, rationale and superb debate, the minister sits Sphinx-like and unimpressed, indicating he still does not concur in the amendment to the clause proposed by my colleague for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. That is regrettable. I am sure the hon. member for Peace River is entirely accurate when he says that continuing this stubbornness in face of reasoned and rational argument and positive alternatives that are clearly superior, is dangerous to the economic future of this country, as well as to confederation because of the tensions that are created.

Indeed, Madam Chairman, I am a little confused about the real purpose of this particular proposed section of the Income Tax Act providing for non-deductibility of royalties. I listened attentively, as I always do, to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance during the budget debate when he outlined the reasons for this provision. These were along the lines that the greedy provinces had taken too much money, that there would not be enough money left for the oil companies to continue their exploration and development, hence this proposal. This convoluted reasoning I find a little difficult to understand since I fail to see how the oil companies, or anybody, will be able to maintain a viable operation in the face of taxation rates that exceed 100 per cent.

Perhaps the reason was more accurately stated this afternoon by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who stated that the goal of this government was first, to achieve more revenue for the federal treasury, second, to allow some revenue to go to the provinces and third, if there was any left, to provide some revenue for the industry so it may maintain exploration and development programs to discover the oil and gas we need.

I suppose that is the nub of the problem and is an indication that security of oil supply in this country is the third priority of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who should be concerned about Canada's long-term security of supply. Evidently he thinks it far more important to have revenue for the Turner-Trudeau empire, or should I say the Trudeau-Turner empire, so it might continue to grow at the rate of 28 per cent a year.

The whole story of how this particular aspect of this bill—the provision relating to non-deductibility of royalties—was introduced into the fiscal scheme in this country is in itself a sad one. The method used in the budget of May 6 has been described accurately by my leader as a deceitful, dishonest approach.

● (2150)

At the January, 1974, meeting of the first ministers a uniform price for crude oil across Canada was agreed upon and there was no indication given at that time that the government contemplated the introduction of a measure such as this, but out of the blue on May 6 we found this proposal in the budget. Faced with the description of this by my leader, as a matter of deceit and dishonesty, the Prime Minister indignantly replied in a speech in the House of Commons, to be found in Hansard at page 1726:

> Let me remind the House, for the record, of the earlier approach that we adopted at the end of January this year at an open conference televised for everyone to see, an approach which precisely was one of trying to get an agreement on the sharing of production profits. We have proposed a sharing.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources brought into that conference a document entitled "A Presentation to Provincial Premiers of Suggested Distribution at Alternate Prices of Revenues on Crude Oil Production". There are a number of suggestions here based on various wellhead prices for crude oil. There is a suggested wellhead price of $6 and the suggested distribution, and a wellhead price of $7 with another suggested distribution. If we average the $6 and the $7 we arrive at $6.50, which is the currently existing price. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I am sure with the concurrence of the Minister of Finance, or certainly of Jack Austin, indicated a sharing and suggested that the oil producing provinces should receive 31 per cent of total revenue, including export taxes. The minister suggested that the federal government should receive, excluding the amount it uses to subsidize eastern consumers, 7.8 per cent of total revenue.

What does this budget do in the face of that suggested sharing? Prior to the budget the province of Alberta introduced a new royalty scheme which gave the province 23 per cent of the total revenue, in other words something like 8 per cent less than the federal government suggested. The province of Alberta under this scheme was to take 8 per cent less of the total petroleum dollar than the federal government suggested it should take at that January conference.

This budget, according to the Minister of Finance, would provide the federal treasury with 18 per cent of the petroleum dollar as opposed to the 8 per cent which was suggested at that time as being a reasonable figure. Faced with these facts, how could anybody describe the actions of this minister and this government in introducing these provisions as being anything but deceitful and dishonest? Certainly this is deceitful and dishonest, and totally out of keeping with the suggested distribution at that conference.

The Prime Minister had the gall to suggest that this document gave the provinces fair warning. That is an incredible suggestion. What is even more incredible is that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should raise their eyebrows and suggest that the provinces are just being greedy and selfish. They suggest they are just protecting the interests of the people of Canada against these greedy and selfish provinces which have not acted in good faith and will not discuss the matter with them. They say they would like to discuss this with the provinces, but the provinces cannot be counted on to sit down at a conference table and negotiate in good faith, but will go back and rob the kitty before they have a chance to get to it. The facts simply discount that suggestion. The facts will not substantiate that claim.

I should like to know whether the government has ever repudiated the sharing as suggested in this document that was tabled at the first ministers' conference. I suggest that one item on the agenda of the first ministers' conference on April 9 and 10 might be the re-discussion of this question of revenue sharing. If that is to be the case, the government will not want to be burdened with the restrictions in Clauses 4 and 7. It would serve the interests of the government, the country and everybody else, to have these restrictions set aside until after that conference.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, has pointed out, we have reached the point where Confederation itself is being threatened by this type of activity, with commitments made and borken, and unilateral moves by the federal government into areas which clearly lie within provincial jurisdiction, without so much as a by your leave or anything that could be considered as fair and just warning, and without even so much as a rational reason. As the hon. member for Don Valley has pointed out, it is not as though the federal government is strapped for cash. The Income Tax Act currently in existence is bringing in revenue almost as fast as the government can spend it, although nothing could bring in revenue that fast.

There a few other points I should like to make, but we have reached the hour of adjournment. May I call it ten o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I was just about to say that my question on the late show tonight is important enough to have both the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and his parliamentary secretary here, but I notice that the minister scurried out as quickly as he could. I am glad the parliamentary secretary is still here.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are listening to you, Jack.

Mr. Marshall: I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is here.

● (2200)

Perhaps the parliamentary secretary might be able to give me a more positive answer than the one I received from the minister last week in the House when I requested the consideration of an extension of the funds allocated to the student summer employment program, and particularly the Opportunites for Youth Program. My reason for concern is that the steadily increasing unemployment rate in Canada, which will tend to worsen this summer if projected trends are correct, will cause intense hardship and discouragement to those who are affected most at that time. I refer to the age group between 14 and 24. None of us are proud of the fact that the national unemployment rate in this category is 11.8 per cent, seasonally adjusted, with the actual rate being 14.4 per cent.

Neither are we very proud of the over-all unemployment rate in the Atlantic region which, in January of this year, was 10.6 per cent, nor am I particularly proud of the over-all rate of unemployment in my province of Newfoundland, which in January was 16.1 per cent.

What concerns me in particular, Madam Speaker, is the fact that the number of persons between the ages of 14 and 24 in Newfoundland is well over 100,000, most of them in secondary schools or at university. Also, many of them must find jobs this summer to enable them to return to their studies.

As of January 1975, some 31,000 of our citizens are unemployed. This summer this number will multiply due to the many more thousands from the group I mentioned who will be seeking employment.

Certainly the same or similar figures hold true on a comparative basis right across the Atlantic region, and all across Canada in the slow growth areas.

The present OFY, funded at some $27.5 million, is expected to employ some 20,000 students. It is obvious that that amount of money and the projected number of jobs will not even scratch the surface of the problem. Even if we add the other programs, such as job exploration for school drop-outs, providing 550 jobs at $300,000; student community services providing 2,100 jobs at $5.7 million; youth hostels providing 550 jobs at $1.3 million; cadet training for 2,350 young people, and the portion of the 3,200 in the age category between 17 and 24 who will train with the militia; the 392 students who will be employed under community assistance; the 9,300 students who will be employed in the public service; and the many other programs such as drug research, street agencies, parks Canada, native summer employment, tourist surveys, improvement agriculture, many thousands of young people in this age category will be unemployed.

So we have programs which have proven successful in the main, and we have those that were wasteful and useless. What is needed is better control by experienced officials who will not only monitor the projects but create more employment. Even though it is hoped that the Canadian business community will employ thousands of students this summer, I plead with the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, to try to impress upon his cabinet colleagues the necessity of increasing the funds for the students summer employment program, even though I was pleased to hear that the matter was under review.

This will allow more of our young people to follow the criteria laid down which will be of benefit to participants. The program will involve our youth, will allow them to use their initiative, not only to benefit the community but to relieve the pressures on them to finance their education, and provide them with the opportunities which they deserve. Most important, it will provide the many more jobs that are required for the youth of our country.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to reply to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). He and I share the northern peninsula of Newfoundland; we share the many communities which find themselves in a similar situation, and we share a concern for the young people in that area. We both know that the people in rural Canada will probably have less opportunity to take advantage of many of the programs offered than will young people in urban Canada.

While I share that concern, I think it is important to put on record what is being done. The hon. member of course has indicated many of the programs that will be in existence this summer in addition to the OFY program. He has mentioned that the total budget of the Students Summer Employment and Activities Program is $67 million, to be divided among 12 different federal departments, including the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Department of the Secretary of State, and the Department of National Defence.

The Public Service Commission will receive the majority of the above amount, with the OFY program being the single largest recipient program. The total for the OFY program is $27.5 million. That is open to question, of course, but a line has to be drawn on the amount somewhere. If more money is put into those, perhaps more money has to be taken from somewhere else. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says it is a little early to see the bite of the budget. We will have to see what effect the budgetary measures taken earlier will have on the situation.

The hon. member has mentioned the cadet reserve training programs of the Department of National Defence, the student community services of the Department of the Secretary of State and the student employment offered by the Public Service Commission. These are going to offer summer employment to 37,000 young people. Of that 37,000 jobs, 20,000 will be created by Opportunities for Youth. There is a program, a comprehensive program, a widespread program with many different options for unemployed people in Canada, and in fact, unemployed people in the Atlantic area.

I would like to put on the record that under the 1974 OFY program 12.3 per cent of the budget was allocated to the Atlantic provinces. This year the amount is 20.7 per cent, a substantial increase to the Atlantic area. I may say that the same kind of increase was evident in the Local Initiatives Program, and if I know the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe—and I believe that I do—I am quite sure that he is going to get at least his fair share of that program.

The $27.5 million allocation to the Opportunities for Youth Program this year was set after applying statistics of past demand and—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

TRANSPORT—INCREASING CANADA'S SHARE OF MARITIME TRAFFIC UNDER UNITED NATIONS ACCORD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my rising tonight is made possible by Mr. Henry Brown and flows from a series of questions I placed upon the order paper directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) on October 31, 1974, and again on November 4. These questions referred to the proposed code of ethics for the liner conference agreed upon by 72 of the member nations at Geneva in April, 1974. The principle purpose of this agreement, for the edification of the hon. gentlemen here, is to seek to express to the international shipping concerns the growing lack of ease felt in the world exporting and importing communities as to the level of service rendered and the extent to which this service reflects the national interests of those nations concerned.

It would seek to guarantee for the exporting or importing country an amount such as 40 per cent of the trade each way, with some 20 per cent left open for third parties. This proposal has a long way to go before it is ratified by sufficient member states to have the force of law on the seas, but is a step and a warning to the world that all is not well in the exporting and importing countries which have up until now relied so heavily upon international and foreign shipping concerns.

Canada, probably predictably, took no position. We have no fleet. We have, according to Howard Darling, not even an identifiable ministry responsible for maritime shipping policy.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Forrestall: We depend for 99 per cent or more of our export and import trade on foreign shipping. Put another way, Canada relies almost exclusively on the whims of the foreign shipping cartels, and these cartels, according to Howard Darling, are increasingly becoming owned or directed by the foreign governments through whose subsidies alone much of the world's fleets survive.

● (2210)

Canada's foreign trade is simply too vital to be left up to the interests of foreign powers. It is, in a word, under attack from increasing bilateralism, increasing foreign national ownership and financial participation, increasing specialization and increasing nationalism.

Our defences are weak, almost pathetically so. There is no responsible ministry, no responsible minister. Is it External Affairs? Is it Industry, Trade and Commerce? Is it the Department of Transport? No one seems to know, and I suggest no one in government seems to care.

One per cent of our trade is carried today in Canadian bottoms. The UNCTAD proposal would give Canada an immediate option to insist on upwards of 40 per cent. What does this mean? Again no one knows.

Standing on the order paper in my name are the following questions:

No. 1130: Has the government established any interdepartmental groups to examine the impact upon Canadian shipbuilding, ship repair and merchant seamen and officers of the possible ratification by Canada . . .

I am referring here to this agreement.

No. 1131: How many ships would be required to accomodate the movements (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations; (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 per cent of the present liner conference rated cargo?

No. 1132: How many merchant seamen would be required to accomodate the staffing of the number of ships required . . .

This would be related to the answer to question No. 1131.

No. 1133: How many (a) general cargo (including passenger cargo); (b) container type vessels were employed in the liner conference rated international inbound or outbound seaborne shipping to serve Canadian ports within the most recent 12 month period?

All of these questions have been on the order paper of the House of Commons for almost three months with not a trace of an answer to one of them. This is a disgrace, born of neglect.

I put down a motion for the production of papers. The government said that the convention was hypothetical and therefore Canada had done no study of it. But what then is to guide the decision with respect to ratification that Canada must take for itself? There is no answer.

I want to know what Canada is going to do. I suggest that the present stonewalling is a result of callous, foolish, bungling neglect—a neglect born of ignorance and fostered by a naive trust in foreign shipping concerns. This is not good enough. We must end the somnolence and sleepwalking that this minister and this government satisfy themselves with and act now to ratify a code of ethics.

I seek information tonight. On November 6 I wrote the Canadian Transport Commission seeking the size of the Canadian fleet. I have never received a written answer to this day, although I had a phone call which said that they did not know. They did not know, Madam Speaker, the size of Canada's fleet.

I wrote to Statistics Canada for some informations as to the impact this agreement would have on our fleets. They did not know, but for what they could provide they wanted me to pay $1,000. One thousand dollars for irrelevant material! Sadder still, the Dominion Marine Association never even acknowledged my inquiries.

I want to know how much money Canada loses in foreign exchange for shipping charges to foreign fleets. It has been estimated at over $1½ billion each year—each year we have no fleet in Canada. Canada's history under successive Liberal administrations has been one of lost opportunities. I hope tonight we can start the long trail to a safe, predictable, profitable and constructive national flag fleet for Canada's international trade.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will answer solely the question put by the hon member. It is unfortunate that time does not permit me to answer all the comments he made this evening which were not included in his notice.

Even though the United Nations convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences concluded in Geneva on April 7, 1974, and a majority of countries voted in preference to accept the code, it is by no means certain that the code will ever be ratified by the necessary countries so that it can be enforced. As the member is probably aware, the code would become effective with the accession of 24 states with at least 25 per cent of world registered cargo tonnage.

I think it would be useful to point out the main reasons why Canada abstained. The approved code requires compulsory cargo sharing which would effectively remove competition in setting rates. The code provides for the establishment of a new structure for compulsory arbitration. The Canadian position was that this arbitration should be established within the existing United Nations structure. The code, however, provides for an elaborate new structure with the prospect of elaborate new costs which would have to be provided by the trading nations.

At the present time Canada is considering certain factors which will determinate whether or not Canada accedes to the code. I think it should be pointed out that only two countries, Iran and the Philippines, have signed. Another factor that Canada must consider is the attitude of her main trading partners. Thirdly, we must look into the compatibility of this code with other Canadian international agreements. Bilateralism and the 40-40-20 formula, to which the hon. member referred, may diminish the role of cross-trading and increase costs of intercontinental transportation. And last, but not the least important, we must look very carefully at the effect on Canadian domestic interests.

I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is on record as being inclined to support the idea of a Canadian merchant fleet. The circumstances which dictated Canada's abandoning its merchant marine fleet after the Second World War have changed greatly. The convention promotes national shipping lines, but the definition embraces even foreign ships under charter. Hence, accession to the convention would not in itself imply any commitment to develop a merchant marine.

AIR TRANSPORT—DEFECT IN PRATT AND WHITNEY JET ENGINE—COMPLIANCE OF CANADIAN AIRLINES WITH MODIFICATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, the topic I am speaking on tonight is one that concerns directly or indirectly a great number of Canadians. I refer to the subject of safety on our domestic airlines. This is a subject I have been investigating for some time.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

I received confirmation from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) that a Pratt and Whitney engine modification I had inquired about was to be performed on Canadian airline planes. I was gratified by this, but I am very concerned about some other problems in this field. In 1974 we saw a sharp rise in the number of fatalities on commercial flights abroad. In the United States more than twice the number of passengers and crew lost their lives in 1974, as compared with 1973, the number of deaths per 100 million passenger miles rising to .256 from .122.

I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a number of questions, for the purpose of ensuring that this rising fatality rate does not spill over into Canada's air industry. We have been fortunate so far, but a number of recent occurrences have given rise to a growing belief that the ministry of transport is not doing its job as far as air safety is concerned. One example was the revelation last year that dangerous air cargo was often being transported while improperly packaged or labelled, and with the air and ground crews being unaware of its contents.

The Ministry of Transport has also apparently failed to monitor certain problems with some air systems on domestic airlines. I have in my possession an Air Canada maintenance document that states that flight 526 out of Quebec City on March 26, 1974, depressurized, and that 40 per cent of the oxygen masks failed to supply oxygen. The company management has subsequently claimed that all oxygen systems have operated "within design tolerances". They have admitted, however, that the Douglas Company held a meeting in October, 1974, with a number of airlines on the subject of the DC-9 pressurization and oxygen systems, which are termed much "more critical" than those of other aircraft. As a result, Air Canada carried out 22 modifications on these systems with which, two months earlier, they had claimed there was "no problem". These discrepancies in information demand investigation.

● (2220)

Last Monday evening, Winnipeg International Airport was closed for three hours. Yet during the period the airport was closed an L-1011 belonging to Air Canada was given clearance to land—the airport management stated that the aircraft had an engine out, making it an emergency situation. Simultaneously, Air Canada stated there was no problem with the plane. Even if other sections of the Department of Transport are in a mess, the particular facet of the operation we are considering involves a regulatory body which is responsible for thousands of people's lives every day where mistakes can be tragic and fatal.

This morning's Montreal Gazette carried a front page story headed "Profits go First Class as Airlines put Safety Second." It states:

> Safety regulations are being sidestepped routinely on most commercial flights in Canada including Air Canada and CP Air as airline officials and federal authorities turn a blind eye.

The well researched article goes on to quote a number of airline employees as saying that regulations concerning the taking on board of baggage that will not fit under the seats and forbidding passengers to sit beside emergency exits are ignored as a matter of course. Pilots complain that passenger bridges are withdrawn before the pilot gives the okay. All employees agree that the management of the airlines stress no delays and no ruffling of passengers' feathers long before they stress conforming with the law.

It is further reported in this and an accompanying article that employees have been reprimanded for delays caused by their concern for safety regulations and at least one purser, who is named in this article, has been asked to resign twice by his direct superiors because of a pet concern for safety.

When charges such as these, combined with the examples of ministry of transport negligence I have cited, appear on the front page of a respected Canadian newspaper, the government has no choice but to initiate an independent investigation into the enforcement of MOT regulations and the conduct of our domestic airlines in complying with those regulations.

I would also like to ask the Minister of Transport whether or not his department has plans to require a device known as the ground proximity warning system to be installed on all Canadian airlines. This device senses an aircraft's rate of altitude change and height above the ground, signalling when evasive action is necessary to avoid a collision. It costs between $10,000 and $15,000 per aircraft, and is to be made mandatory by the FAA in December.

The subject matter of my speech could be discussed when Bill C-226 comes before the Standing Committee on Transport. Bill C-226 is an act to provide for the constitution of a federal transport commission of inquiry which would impartially investigate traffic accidents, safety standards and regulations. The United States is setting up such a safety board. It is no longer proper for the ministry of transport to be investigating itself.

I would like to say, in conclusion, that it has been brought to my attention today that the Ministry of Transport fire trucks at Vancouver Airport do not have ladders long enough to reach the second deck—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has chosen to deal with a number of matters other than the one involving the Pratt and Whitney aircraft engine of which he gave notice. In any case, I believe the hon. member is to be lauded for his continued concern in the area of passenger safety.

As he is aware, aircraft and aircraft components such as engines are strictly monitored, and regulations concerning safety are strictly enforced. Indeed, I can say they are religiously adhered to by Canadian airlines. All Canadian air carriers have taken the appropriate action specified by the aircraft engine manufacturer, Pratt and Whitney. The United States Federal Aviation Administration is issuing an air worthiness directive on this subject which will require inspections of the shaft. Compliance with an air worthiness directive issued by the aeronautical authorities of the country of manufacture of an aircraft is a condition of a Canadian air worthiness certificate. It is not necessary for our ministry to duplicate such directives.

In view of the fact that the hon. member made reference to the Montreal Gazette, I should like to point out that many of the points made in the newspaper article are grossly exaggerated. As a matter of fact there is some evidence that the individuals selected for interview by the reporter, David Tafler, are not aware of MOT's increased activity and the several meetings that have taken place with the air lines during the last six months. I do not believe that the marketing personnel of the air carriers have the authority alleged by Tafler.

In regard to the suggestion that certain of these members have been speaking in an irresponsible manner, I have been in touch with the head office of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association and they are equally surprised by the appearance of the article in the newspaper, and are attempting to ascertain who among their members have been speaking out in such an irresponsible manner. Probably more facts will emerge, but I am pleased that this point was brought out.

I would remind the hon. member that Air Canada has always considered safety of its passengers before any other consideration. I think the safety record of Air Canada speaks for itself; it has one of the best records in the world.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF PROCEDURES DURING ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising out of the debate that took place yesterday on the alleged question of privilege of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid). Your Honour will clearly understand from my question of privilege and my explanation that I certainly would defer my question of privilege at this time, in order that we can proceed with the regular business of the House, at least until after the question period if it is understood that I might then intercede and develop this point. It will become very clear from my point that what I am trying to do is facilitate our proceedings.

I wanted to bring this matter to Your Honour's attention at the earliest possible moment. I came in late yesterday, while the debate was on, and I was in and out of the chamber a couple of times. But on checking Hansard today I find horrible confirmation of what I heard yesterday, and that is my reason for the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Will it be in order for the hon. member to raise his question of privilege after the question period is completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF SUBSIDY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion concerning an extremely urgent matter.

Since the retail price of fluid milk will be raised to 51 cents a quart as of March 1, 1975, which represents a considerable increase in expenditures for large families; considering that between October 1973 and January 1975, the government paid $109 million in grants for the consumption of fluid milk and that this amount represents an increase in the purchasing power of consumers amounting to $7.3 million a month; considering that inflation more particularly affects large families with low or average income; considering that this action would be beneficial to the consumers as well as to farm producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House ask without debate to the Minister of Agriculture to undertake immediate negotiations with the provincial governments to come to an agreement on the re-establishment of the subsidy on fluid milk and to suggest thereafter to the federal cabinet that a 10 cents rebate or subsidy a quart be applied on the consumption of fluid milk.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR SUBSTANTIATION OF ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION NO. 241—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt: It arises from the answer given yesterday to my order paper question No. 241 on the subject of the reported statement made last September by Ivan Head of the Prime Minister's office on the subject of a new left-wing foreign policy for Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: —and the subsequent statements by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the House request the Prime Minister to make full disclosure of the powers and duties of Ivan Head and further, in view of the fact that the answer to order paper question 241 in effect casts reflections on the integrity and truthfulness of the reporting of two respected members of the press corps and on the Canadian Press and the Southam News Services, the House requests those involved in answering question 241, namely Ivan Head, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the President of the Privy Council, to immediately substantiate with evidence the correctness of the answer or otherwise to forthwith withdraw the answer as unfortunate and inaccurate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and therefore requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—SUGGESTION EXCESS OF LAND EXPROPRIATED BE RETURNED FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter.

Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) stated that thousands of acres of expropriated land for the purpose of Mirabel airport at Sainte-Scholastique would not be used and that the government was considering reselling this land.

Since there is absolute need to protect our fertile land, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That the responsible minister be requested to call a meeting of the transport committee or of a special committee to return this land to their original farming vocation.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House; is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put at this time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GRANTING OF BONUS TO ALL QUALIFIED BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since a number of civil servants who speak both English and French, but who have been classified as unilingual and who are in positions classified as unilingual, are compelled to serve Canadian taxpayers in both official languages, without having their particular ability duly recognized, which comment applies also to others, with the exception of House of Commons employees, who are not entitled to the bilingualism bonus, in spite of their knowledge of both official languages and ability to serve Canadian taxpayers in both official languages; and since such a situation is unfair to these civil servants, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House look into the possible granting of the bilingualism bonus to all civil servants who successfully complete the public service bilingualism tests, so that all civil servants who went to the trouble of learning both official languages and can serve Canadian taxpayers in both languages may be rewarded for their special ability.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF ADVERTISING OF MODEL HAND GUNS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is brief and to the point. I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I do so because of the urgent and pressing necessity of investigating or controlling the advertising of hand guns as contained in an advertisement in the Trail Times of Friday, February 14th, 1975. That date was Valentine's Day, a day which is significant in the history of crime. The advertisement shows four different pistols and two different revolvers of known type and make and states that they are precision machined metal models which look, feel, weigh and even disassemble like the originals. They are perfectly legal. They cannot be fired. Even dummy cartridges are available.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the national concern about the increase in crime and violence and the concern of the government for the control of hand guns, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That the Minister of Justice immediately investigate and act upon this form of advertising.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and therefore requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Without there being unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

DISAPPEARANCE OF PREFERENTIAL INTEREST RATE FOR SMALL BUSINESSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance who will recall that he associated himself, at least, with a preferential rate on bank loans to small business substantially below the rate for larger business. I have received a complaint that this preferential rate for small business has quietly disappeared. Can the minister indicate whether this is so, and whether the disappearance or abolition of this preferential rate for small businesses carries his approval?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when interest rates were going up I asked the banks to consider a preferential rate for small business, which they did. As the interest rates continued to go up, that differential between the prime rate and the prime rate for small business of course increased at the same time. As interest rates come down, that differential diminishes, and I see nothing abnormal in that.

Mr. Stanfield: Do I take it from what the minister says that he approves of the disappearance of this preferential rate for small business at the banks? If this is the case, may I ask the minister what the difference is in the present situation compared with the time when this two tier system was introduced with the encouragement of the minister? At that time, in May of 1973, the prime rate was, I think, two full percentage points less than it is today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, at the peak of interest rates the differential between the small business loan rate and the prime rate for other business was anywhere from 1¼ to 1½ points. As the rate comes down, that differential diminishes. The fact that that differential is diminishing in no way lessens my feeling, which I have conveyed to the banks, that they ought to continue to give preference in their credit allocation to Canadian-owned small business across the country, as well as to farmers, fishermen and to those areas of the country less reasonably favoured by economic circumstances.

INTEREST RATE ON CONSUMER CREDIT—POSSIBLE MAINTENANCE OF RATE TO CONTROL VOLUME

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): One further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The minister does not make it clear that the two tier system is, in fact, being preserved. Perhaps I might ask him a question about interest rates on consumer loans which seem to have held steady in spite of the reductions in the prime rate. I would like to ask the minister whether this is something approved as an appropriate method of containing the growth of consumer credit. Is it government policy or the policy of his department to encourage the banks to maintain the same level of interest rates on consumer credit from the point of view of containing the volume of that credit?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not government policy or the policy of the Bank of Canada to restrict consumer credit, particularly in view of slackening demand in durables in this country. But the hon. gentleman, if he looks over the figures as they developed over 1974 and into 1975, will recall that while the prime rate went up 4 points, the consumer credit on a contractual basis went up only about 1 to 1½ points. In other words, the consumer loan rate moved up far more slowly, and it will move more slowly down. The prime rate will be reflected not only in mortgage rates but in consumer rates and other rates as the reduction works its way through the system.

● (1420)

CONSUMER LOANS—SUGGESTED LOWERING OF INTEREST RATE AS MEANS OF LOWERING INVENTORY OF DURABLE GOODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the growing inventory of durables in Canada, and since the interest rate on consumer loans has held steady in spite of reductions in the prime rate, does the minister intend to meet with the chartered banks and discuss with them the possibility of bringing consumer loan rates more into line with the new prime lending rate as a means of lowering the durable inventory and thus avoiding a recessionary trend?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): If the demand does not strengthen for consumer durables the rate structure will reflect it.

CONSUMER LOANS—SUGGESTION MINISTER INSTRUCT BANKS TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the fact that prime rates have now declined to about 9 per cent and that consumer rates have not fallen correspondingly, may I ask whether the minister has been in contact with the banks instructing or asking them to lower consumer rates, and if not, whether he intends to do so?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In my conversations on a weekly basis with the governor of the Bank of Canada I conveyed this submission to the banks but, as I told the Leader of the Opposition, the consumer rates did not move up to nearly the same extent as the bank rate and other prime rates did—when interest rates moved four points, the consumer rate moved one point up. As the interest rate structure embraces the whole of the rate structure, I think one can assume that the differential between the consumer rates and the prime rate will again readjust.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—POSSIBLE LEGISLATIVE ACTION TO CONTROL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Has the minister spoken to the banks about mortgage rates? Can he tell us at what level he wants the banks to set mortgage rates.

If the banks fail to act quickly enough to bring down mortgage rates and consumer rates, bearing in mind their important bearing on inflation and unemployment does he propose to take legislative action to control interest rates in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mortgage interest rates have softened by between one and a half and one and three-quarter points in the last month and a half, reflecting the total movement of interest rates. The specific answer to the hon. member's question is, no. We do not intend to legislate mortgage interest rates. We are interested not only in a reasonable rate for the potential home owner; we also want to ensure a reasonable rate which will attract the amount of money into the mortgage market which, of itself, will have the effect of reducing mortgage rates.

CONSUMER LOAN AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS TO BANKS TO LOWER IN VIEW OF LOWER RATE ON DEPOSITS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the fact that the interest rate has dropped drastically on savings deposits in the last few weeks, has the Minister of Finance made any representations to the banks asking them, since they are lowering the deposit rates, to lower immediately the consumer loan rates and the mortgage rates?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): What particularly concerns me is the differential between what a bank pays for the money it borrows and what a bank charges for the money it lends. Those differentials have not changed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GRANTING OF BONUS TO ALL QUALIFIED BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

In view of the fact that there is trouble in the federal public service, in view also of the motion moved earlier by my colleague, the hon. member for Rimouski, relating to a bonus for bilingual federal public servants, and finally in view of the fact that the minister declared recently that only the employees related to Parliament, like secretaries, were entitled to the 7 per cent bonus if they were bilingual, does the minister not agree that we should extend this 7 per cent bonus to all the federal public servants throughout Canada? As it is French-speaking employees object to speaking English in federal offices, and English-speaking employees object to speaking French. In my opinion, this 7 per cent bonus would settle those conflicts in all the provinces of Canada. Does the minister intend to do something along these lines?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this problem. It is extremely complex, as I told the House of Commons last week. We are now reviewing this situation. The 7 per cent bonus has been instituted because of particular circumstances, because of the fact that the supply of and demand for secretaries did not favour the government. We have been forced to add an extra bonus to find bilingual secretaries, but we do not intend to extend this principle to all public servants. Besides, in relation to the current problem in Montreal, we are reviewing it and we hope to find a solution acceptable to everybody.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Does the minister know whether, in Montreal, those who are against the use of the French language are asking for the 7 per cent bonus? I am wondering if the minister admitted yesterday that federal civil servants had the right to strike. Is the matter of the 7 per cent bonus now being looked into by the negotiating committee which has been meeting, after a fashion, day after day, far too long?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is confusing two situations. The blue collar workers' strike has nothing to do with the bilingualism problem.

With regard to the situation at Montreal and bilingualism, the workers are not on strike but working to rule. I trust the employees concerned will realize that they are not improving the situation by so doing. They should co-operate. We will try to find an acceptable solution.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask one last supplementary question.

Would the minister tell the House whether it is true that the Unemployment Insurance Commission has harassed and threatened its employees classified as Francophones who refuse to speak English in the performance of their duties, as reported in an article published in Le Jour, which is not my favorite newspaper? Is the minister aware that Unemployment Insurance Commission officials are alleged to have threatened some employees?

Mr. Chrétien: I know nothing about those threats, Mr. Speaker. The Unemployment Insurance Commission tries to give the services all Canadians living in the Montreal area are entitled to. Francophones as well as Anglophones must be dealt with in the official language of their choice. I trust the employees will understand that creating such difficulties does not improve the climate.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IMPLICATED IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General further to my question of yesterday concerning the Hamilton harbour matter. Can the Solicitor General now say with certainty that he has acquainted himself with the transcripts of the preliminary inquiry to which I referred, and can he now assure the House and country that no members of parliament or ministers of the Crown are implicated in such a way that there is cause for concern about their role in the matters under investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the tapes, although I consulted the Commissioner of the RCMP about them. He assures me that the matter is still under investigation and if any action is to be taken, the RCMP will take it.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked if the minister has access to the transcripts of the preliminary inquiry to which I referred. If he has, would he not agree that it would be a good idea if he could read the transcripts at this time, to satisfy himself along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I can have access to the tapes but I rely on the advice given to me by the RCMP in this matter. I have lots of things to do, and if they suggest to me that it is important that I should consult these tapes, I will, of course, do that.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, which is perhaps not of great consequence. I ask the Solicitor General to study my question. I was not speaking about tapes; I was referring, in my questions, to transcripts of the preliminary inquiry.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I meant to say "transcripts" instead of "tapes" and I am sorry. I made a mistake in that. I do have access to the transcripts, which I understand are voluminous. The RCMP have read to me some parts of them. I have not read all of them, and I would rely on their advice. I asked them to inform me if they think I should read more of them.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—DOCUMENT SERVED ON MINISTER OF LABOUR TO AUTHORIZE SEARCH OF OFFICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Labour whether he was served with any documentation at the time the RCMP allegedly had authority to search his office. Was the minister served with an affidavit or any other documentation which led to the authority for his office being searched sometime during the election? The minister knows the time.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP did come to my office. They had a document, but it did not pertain to my particular office. In any event, I gave them access to what they wanted.

Mr. Woolliams: Has the minister seen any documents which gave the RCMP authority to search his office and take certain files or whatever else they did at that time? Has the minister read any documentation which the RCMP had or which was filed in the court house to give the RCMP that authority?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think anything was filed in the court house because the documentation was not applicable to my particular headquarters. I just saw what they had. They agreed it was not applicable.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it that no search was made of the minister's office because the authority they had did not pertain to the office of the Minister of Labour or any material or documentation the minister may have had? Also, did the minister read what the RCMP had in their hand which gave them some authority, either in his office or that of someone else?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, they wanted permission to look at documents in my office, the contents of which I was really not aware. They were in cabinets. I gave them permission to go ahead, even though they did not have proper authority.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR OF CONTENTS OF TRANSCRIPT OF PRELIMINARY HEARING

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Since the Minister has indicated publicly that he knew he was involved in some way or another with respect to this matter at least as early as last June, and therefore I know this must be of great concern to him and his friends, will he be good enough to tell us if he has read or has had read to him either the transcript of the preliminary hearing in question or parts of the transcript of the preliminary hearing.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Obviously from my answer yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the transcript. However, I am aware of certain references therein.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR OF POSSIBILITY OF BEING WITNESS IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Would the minister then be good enough to tell the House whether any indication has been given to him or, for that matter, if he believes he is going to be a witness respecting a criminal trial that will take place in respect of this matter?

Hon. Pierre Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister is being extremely helpful in answering these questions. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, is this really proper? The minister is not being asked any questions relative to the administration of his department. In my opinion, this line of probing is not within the rules of the House. I do not find it very dignified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I rise very briefly on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has a perfect right to rise and suggest how the House should be operated. I know Your Honour makes your own decisions. It was the failure of the Solicitor General to give a frank and full response to the question put to him by the hon. member for Central Nova which led to the additional questions. That is my impression. Had the Solicitor General indicated an intention of examining all the evidence and giving the House some assurance with regard to that, the matter would have ended.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am sure it need not be pointed out to you, Sir, and the House that at least in other jurisdictions this is an extremely important matter affecting the honour and integrity of people in public life. Certain allegations have already been printed in the newspapers. This is important enough that I find it almost inconceivable for the minister concerned here to not even bother to take a look at the transcripts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Pending a trial or not, because the matter has been raised in the public press, and is now in the public domain through the raising of this matter in another parliament in addition to this, there should be no reason at all to be hesitant about asking the minister questions in relation to his own involvement in the matter. If the minister is not involved, and if there is nothing wrong with it, then how in the world can a question of whether this matter is relevant or in order be raised by the Prime Minister at this stage? No one is making any charge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: That should not prevent me or others from attempting to find out the truth of the matter. I have asked my supplementary question of the minister, and regardless of whether the Prime Minister is touchy about it or not, I have every right to ask that question and every right now to expect the minister to reply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the House that I am not the attorney general with respect to this matter. This matter is subject to prosecution by the government of Ontario. It is under the attorney general of the government of Ontario. The RCMP have been reviewing the evidence with their officials, not with mine, with regard to a prosecution.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I suggest that under all the circumstances, the Minister of Labour should consider tabling in the House or making available to the public the basis for the extraordinary legal procedure that justified the RCMP at a very critical time going to his office and making the types of inquiries and requests it has been indicated were made. Such a procedure would only have been justified by an affidavit—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect to the hon. member, the point of order before the House at the present time is whether or not questions put by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham are proper questions within the precedents as we understand them, not what kind of answers or information the minister ought to or is likely to give. Are there any other hon. members who want to contribute to the point of order?

This matter was first raised yesterday. I listened carefully to the questions that were asked. The Minister of Labour first intervened in this subject matter yesterday by raising a question of privilege as to his alleged involvement on the basis of questions put to him. Questions are being asked today as to whether the Minister of Labour has an indication or information that he is likely to be subpoenaed, summonsed or called as a witness concerning certain things that took place in the Hamilton area.

It is difficult for me to conclude that these questions do not somehow relate to his ministerial capacity as the Minister of Labour. I would intervene to prevent questions that go beyond the bounds of his capacity and administrative responsibility because that is the areas within which questions should be directed. Since he is Minister of Labour, and is being asked in that capacity whether or not he has any information to indicate that he will be called as a witness, it seems to me the question relates to his capacity as minister rather than to his personal capacity as a member of the House. I have no basis upon which I can disallow the questions that have been asked of him.

● (1440)

Mr. Lawrence: Then, in case the minister has forgotten my question, Mr. Speaker, shall I repeat it, or is he going to reply?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham repeat his question.

Mr. Lawrence: Would the Minister of Labour now care to tell the House whether or not he will be called as a witness in a criminal trial respecting some allegations that have been made?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order concerning this question?

Mr. Horner: Are you after the leadership over there, John?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think I should draw to Your Honour's attention and to the attention of the House two citations from Beauchesne's Fourth Edition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the Minister of Finance seeking the floor on a fresh point of order or on the propriety of the question that has been asked?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He wants to be Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have already ruled that I find no basis upon which I am able to disallow the question that has just been put by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I invited the participation of other members before coming to that decision. If this is a fresh point of order, I will hear it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not my point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not submitting to Your Honour that you should disallow the question; I am simply submitting, through you to the hon. member, that he ought to take responsibility for his question. I should like to recite to Your Honour citation 178 of Beauchesne:

> Questions addressed to Ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in Parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the Minister is responsible. Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the Government, but not an expression of opinion upon matters of policy.
>
> It is not in order to ask merely whether certain statements made in a newspaper, are true; but attention may be drawn to such statements, if the member, who puts the question, makes himself responsible for their accuracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should also like to read to Your Honour, for the benefit of the House, citation 179:

> If, for instance, a member's question is based on a newspaper report to the effect that a serious offence has been committed by a certain government officer and the member vouches for the accuracy of that statement which later on is found to be untrue, he will suffer the consequences of having induced the House into error and may be censured or sentenced to a penalty which the House may deem proper to impose upon him. Should the minister concerned answer the question before the falsehood is detected the House would be justified in punishing the member with the utmost severity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance has sought the floor on a serious point of order. It is a matter of some considerable importance, so I wonder whether the minister might be allowed to make his point.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Citation 179 continues:

> If the member refuses to make himself responsible for the accuracy of the facts reported by the newspaper, the minister is not bound to answer the question.

My point of order is this, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, who has tried this tactic before, wants to put this type of question to any minister, then he impliedly or explicitly must start to take responsibility for the statement he is making. If he does so and he makes a charge to back up those allegations, then he puts his seat on the line and takes the consequences.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want unnecessarily to cut short discussion on this particular point, but I have listened carefully to the question that has been put to the minister, which is simply whether or not the minister has any information which would indicate to him that he may be a witness in certain proceedings. Surely, there can be no insinuation regarding the character of evidence or the nature of it, or the minister's involvement, beyond the fact that he is a witness in a proceeding which might take any kind of character when he is there.

If an insinuation of any sort were contained in the question then I would disallow the question. It is because the question does not contain such insinuation that I have allowed it. Accordingly, the point the Minister of Finance has now raised, being based necessarily upon the content of some insinuation, I would equally disallow; but I assure the House that I have watched the questions carefully, and if they do reach the point where they do contain such insinuation, I will intervene at that time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I readily agree with what you have just said, and if there were, in effect, any insinuation along the lines stated by the Minister of Finance, then I would be the first to accept it. But this is not the first time that this party has been subjected to the blackmail tactics of members on the other side. I will leave it on this basis, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be suppressed by these attempts to muzzle members on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: All that having been said so eloquently, could we now return to the point where we had put the question by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Lawrence: Right on, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF VETERANS HOUSING LEGISLATION—SURVEY OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSING IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, returning to an area of our society that does not seem to hold too much interest, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question. While he has indicated on a number of occasions that veterans' housing legislation is in the offing, in view of the fact that there is not too much time left before March 31, 1975 is upon us, I wonder whether the minister could now disclose to the House something concrete by way of veterans' legislation which is being considered; and when will the legislation be introduced so as to allay the fears of those who may have an opportunity to qualify under the Veterans' Land Act before March 31?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the authorization that I, along with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, received to study the need for veterans' housing. I should like to inform the hon. member that things have progressed very well and the study is nearing the final stages. When we have the final report I will be glad to make an announcement in the House.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that many of our veterans who are receiving war veterans' allowance and disability pensions are on fixed incomes, and in view of the fact that a survey is being made by the province of Newfoundland of the status of substandard housing for veterans, would the minister indicate whether consideration is being given to rehabilitating substandard housing for veterans, and if indeed those on fixed incomes will be able to apply under the new legislation so they can provide themselves with the homes they need in line with the incomes they receive?

● (1450)

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the status of that study on housing in Newfoundland, the first phase has been completed, we have received it and have looked at it, but to my knowledge the second part of the study has not as yet been received.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBILITY INCREASED EXPRESS RATES CAUSED LAY-OFFS—REQUEST FOR RESCINDING OF INCREASE PENDING RATE NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport, and I hope he is feeling well. I provided notice yesterday of this matter I wish to raise. In view of recent additional increases in rates, in this case express rates by the CNR, to the ridiculous point where shipments are going to be—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question to put to the minister I would be grateful if he would put it.

Mr. Benjamin: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I am going slowly—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Paproski: Come on Benjamin, get with it.

Mr. Benjamin: I am proceeding slowly so that the minister can hear me over this rabble, or is it babble.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the impending lay-offs, notice of which the CN has already given to express employees in Winnipeg, and undoubtedly at a number of other points in the country, will the Minister of Transport inform the House if the reasons for these impending lay-offs of CN express employees in Winnipeg, to take effect this Friday—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Benjamin: Would the minister explain to what extent these lay-offs are the results of the CN's new express rates which have resulted in an increase of up to 600 per cent in respect of some shipments, which in turn has driven the business to competitors, including Canadian Pacific?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am feeling very well, especially as the people of Calgary welcomed me warmly yesterday and I am fully rested. I thank the hon. member very much for having sent me a letter indicating that he would ask me this question today. The only thing I can do is try to get some information from the Canadian National to know why 15 people have been dismissed and why the rates have been increased. Therefore, I shall ask the CTC and give the answers I get.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, will the minister undertake to meet with the senior officers of Canadian National, including the general manager of express and—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I didn't say that.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I asked if the minister would undertake to meet with the officers of Canadian National, including the general manager of express and international mobile services, with a view to persuading or compelling the CN to rescind its new express rates pending the outcome of negotiations with the provinces on rate structures?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I discussed all these increases in rates with the western ministers of transport all day. If the hon. member is interested, I can table the press release I signed with all the western ministers of transport. I think there was general agreement. As for the dismissal of 15 persons in the Canadian National, I think there is a union looking after its members and if there is some injustice, I trust as much the union to defend its members as the hon. member for Calgary.

[English]

FREIGHT RATES—AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES PROHIBITING ACROSS THE BOARD INCREASES—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister really evades the questions I put to him. I will put another question to him. In view of the fact that there was a transport ministers' conference yesterday, at which the minister met with the four western provinces, yet he failed to make any kind of statement on motions, and it was impossible to get a copy of the press statement from his office—

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the agreement in principle reached yesterday at the meeting of transport ministers in Calgary, prohibiting across the board increases in freight rates, will the minister take whatever steps may be required, in terms of legislation or otherwise, to ensure immediate implementation of that agreement, and to roll back the increases already put into effect, prohibiting any further increases that will further exaggerate these inequities?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not object to there being serious debate in this House. The hon. member talks about an increase affecting only one group of commodities and refers to an agreement reached with the western ministers of transport on general increases—

[English]

—across the board, as he says, so it is not the same thing at all. If you want to have the communiqué that has been signed by all ministers of transport and myself, I am ready to table it anytime.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the House would be very willing to return to motions following the question period, or later this day, so the minister could do what he should have done; that is, make a statement on motions today reporting on that conference of yesterday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROTEST AGAINST IMPORTATION OF CHICKENS FROM UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT REACTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since an American truck carrying live poultry from the United States has been intercepted by members of the cooperative of Saint-Damase as a sign of protest against imports, while they see their own quotas considerably lowered, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether those imports are absolutely necessary, whether that incident provoked diplomatic reactions, and whether the American consul asked for explanations from Canada on that matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely not aware of that matter, but on the basis of the hon. member's question, I will refer to the Department of External Affairs to see whether I can give an answer.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—NATURE OF DOCUMENT SERVED ON MINISTER OF LABOUR AND OF DOCUMENTS TURNED OVER TO RCMP

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Minister of Labour and deal with statements made not outside the House, but two which the minister made today. In a procedure unusual for a man learned in the law he did not look at the document presented to him by the RCMP when they asked for documents. Secondly, the minister said that he turned over to the RCMP the documents—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, I wonder if he would put it to the minister directly.

Mr. O'Sullivan: I certainly will. The minister indicated he did not know what was in the documents.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what hon. members opposite are afraid of, but I will ask the minister this question. If he did not know what was in the documents that he so freely handed over to the RCMP, how can this House be sure that he did not turn over secret Cabinet documents, holus-bolus, or personal records and private files relating to constituents of Hamilton East? Why did the minister turn them over if he did not know what he was turning over, and have they been returned to him or are secret Cabinet documents now floating around somewhere?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, I do not believe so, because I believe that all my Cabinet documents were back in Ottawa. I do not believe that was the case. I should correct this by saying that the RCMP had the document and they said it was not applicable, as I recall it.

An hon. Member: When was that?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That was sometime ago. It was not applicable to where I was operating. While I think there was an acknowledgement that it was not applicable, I told the RCMP that I would co-operate with them in respect of what they wanted to obtain.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, how can the minister tell us now it was not applicable when he told us earlier he had not read the document?

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order please. That is not a point of order.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, it is if he is misleading the House.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am correcting myself, then. It was some time ago and I recall glancing at it. I recall some agreement that it was not applicable.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—POSSIBLE CONCERN OF PRIME MINISTER ABOUT INVOLVEMENT OF MINISTERS IN POLICE REPORTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's intervention on a point of order when I understood him to say, in arguing the point of order, that certain questions may not have related directly to the administration of the department of the minister who was being examined, am I to understand then that regardless of the administration of the department of one of his ministers if, in some other way that minister is under investigation or police reports have been made about him, this would not be of concern to the Prime Minister and involve discussions between the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General to see what course of action should be taken?

Right. Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is of concern to the Prime Minister and to the Solicitor General under whose jurisdiction is the RCMP. I fail to see the relevance of the rest of the question.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER RCMP SHOWED SOLICITOR GENERAL REPORTS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In view of the answers of the Solicitor General given on December 4 when certain questions were asked about the SIU and about reports of the RCMP on certain matters relating to the Minister of Labour, as recorded at page 1939 of Hansard, when the Solicitor General said that at that time he was shown a transcript of the RCMP reports and it was his duty, as he felt—and quite properly so, I think—to discuss this with the Prime Minister, would he inform us whether on this occasion he had been shown any reports on the investigation of the RCMP involving any minister of the Crown and whether he had discussed those reports with the Prime Minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, It is difficult for me to remember what I said then. They did not show me a transcript of the trial at that time. They showed me an interim report on the SIU investigation and I conveyed the contents of that report to the Prime Minister. In this particular case, after the revelation on Friday that the solicitor general for Ontario had resigned, I checked with the RCMP and asked them if there was something that should be brought to my attention on this matter, and they said there was nothing of great importance to be brought to my attention. Yesterday, I called them again and they read to me certain parts of the transcript which had been discussed around the parliament buildings in recent days. I asked them if there were any other parts they should bring to my attention as well. They may bring further parts to my attention, but so far they have not.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF GUIDELINES ON GIFTS TO PRIME MINISTER, CABINET MINISTERS AND THEIR WIVES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to direct a question to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: —arising from the statement made earlier in January by a member of his staff that conflict of interest guidelines with regard to gifts received by him or by members of the cabinet or by their wives would be issued in all likelihood before he left on his trip to Europe this week. Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether these conflict of interest guidelines will be presented to this House before his departure and, if not, can he say when they will be?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Right. Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, those guidelines have not been completed yet, and they will not be presented to the House before my trip to Europe. Perhaps I should inform the hon. member that, in the likely event that I receive some gifts from heads of government while I am abroad, I intend to follow the international custom and to bring them back without paying duty on them. I will indicate also that with regard to the gifts that I am taking abroad to offer to heads of government whom I am visiting, I do not intend to declare them at the border of the country I am entering and I do not intend to pay duty on them either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that I am following what I believe is not only an international custom but one which has been followed by heads of government in previous times. Of course, I am willing to comply if the House gives me a direct order.

Mr. Cossitt: I feel that the Prime Minister is avoiding the issue. He is talking about customs duties. In my question I never referred to customs duties.

I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will the guidelines, when issued, specifically cover the possible or alleged gift of a swimming pool, which is still kept a mystery from everyone?

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO NECESSITY OF PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO EUROPE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it really necessary for the Prime Minister at this time to take this extended excursion to Europe and, if it is, would he leave this chamber with his blueprint to fight inflation and to deal with the civil service strikes so that the House can consider his long or short-range plans during his absence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have been urged by members of the hon. member's party to travel to Europe and to—

Some hon. Members: Stay there.

Mr. Trudeau: —and to visit some countries. I have been so urged also in a Senate report to which hon. members opposite have referred and to which they enjoined me to pay heed. I feel that this trip is important at this time. But here again, if the opposition has any policy on this, I would be interested to hear it from the Leader of the Opposition, not from a backbench member opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Since I received this invitation from the Prime Minister, I will simply express encouragement—he has been paying some attention to some suggestions from the opposition—and express fervent hope that he pay a little attention to some of the serious suggestions we have made with regard to some of the serious domestic problems.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF PROCEDURES DURING ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member previously referred to a question of privilege which he has. He has the floor now.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise, as I indicated earlier, to raise a question of privilege resulting from the alleged question of privilege raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid). I will be very brief. I am glad I waited until after the question period to raise my question of privilege which is basically directed at the rights of hon. members.

My question of privilege relates to the incredible performance, outlining in graphic form the distorted parliamentary priorities of the government, in name, but which has yet to show any purpose, direction or conviction about the basic problems of this land. If ever there was a parliamentary example of the ship of state wallowing in a sea of indecision, charting a course on a false compass and without a captain at the helm, yesterday's alleged question of privilege by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader was it. In relation to the other pressing problems facing this country, it makes one wonder whether in fact there is a government House leader; or is he just a loss leader, discharging his duty to his philosopher king captain to make this institution completely inane and irrelevant so that members can really be nobodies and the machinery and machinations of the Prime Minister's office can have full sway?

What other explanation is there for making the floor of the House of Commons the washroom of the nation as the government, perverting privilege, attempts to muzzle one of its own members by washing its political linen in public. Surely, Your Honour, if permission of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is required before an hon. member is allowed to appear before the Senate, then an invidious precedent will be established. Not only will all forms of future privilege be relevant, but we may even have to ask his blessing for the absolutions of the day—especially if it is in a Senate washroom.

As for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indulging in this parliamentary hoax to generate more wind in his assault on a sterile Senate, the best that can be said is that rarely has an individual been so blinded by the amber light at the crossroads of parliamentary rules that he fails to see that red and green lights control the flow of traffic. His time, as with other House leaders, might more usefully have been spent in raising a valid question of privilege affecting this House in the present paradox of this Parliament of Canada having television in one of its parts even though the whole has made no decision on the matter, notwithstanding the fact that reform of the rules and television coverage were high priority items in the Speech from the Throne many lost moons ago. Of course, the fact that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has not even met in a substantive way to discuss the matter is not, I suspect, a matter of parliamentary privilege but just another example of the ineptitude of this government in the management of its own affairs, let alone meeting the responsibility of the mandate it received albeit by masquerade and misrepresentation.

● (1510)

The only privilege at issue yesterday was the insult to hon. members who convened to discharge public business and were exposed to a sideshow over which they had no control and the people of Canada had no concern. Let us get on with parliamentary business, and not the who, when, where and how this government lost its grit.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

> That the matter of the question period and the priority and placement of other routine proceedings be referred forthwith to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization with instructions to report back before Easter so that the House can maintain and develop relevant rules for this incompetent government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member earlier gave the Chair notice of his intention to move this motion pursuant to a question of privilege. I am sure the hon. member will realize that the question is very much one for debate and very much a topical subject relating to the priorities which ought to be given to daily routine business and the question period. The fact that the matter was so quickly referred, after the hon. member's intervention last week, to the standing committee will enable that committee, with a very wide reference—in effect, a blanket reference on the procedures of the House—to begin work at once, which would include the recommendation contained in the motion.

I say that not because of the redundancy and repetitiveness involved, but the fact is that there is machinery already at work which through the regular channels is empowered to do what the hon. member has in mind. For that reason, since at the present time routine proceedings take place before the question period and this is sometimes an inconvenience, this matter is certainly worthy of examination. But the fact is that it is in conformity with the rules and as long as those rules are being enforced I cannot regard it as a question of privilege.

I do, of course, accept it in the spirit in which it is intended, that is, urging that committee to see if there is consensus to experiment with other ways of ordering our priorities. I am sure that all of us are comforted by the blanket order of reference which gives the committee authority to start that work at once.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This morning, there was an electrical failure at the Vanguard building during parliamentary proceedings. These proceedings were suspended because of that trouble. We are told that this afternoon and tonight the committees of the House will not be sitting. I want to ask the Chair if it is possible, at this stage, to know when the suspended proceedings of the committees will resume.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member makes reference to the mechanical and electrical failure of the facilities used by the standing committees in the Vanguard Building. I hope that whatever inconvenience has been caused in the scheduling of meetings will be rectified by such immediate repairs as are necessary and I certainly hope I can inform the hon. member later in the day about that.

Orders of the day.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, February 24, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose last evening, clause 4 as amended was under consideration, the amendment having been proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

On clause 4.

Mr. Andre: When we adjourned the debate last night we were discussing the amendment by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain to clause 4 of Bill C-49. I had commended this amendment to the minister for his serious consideration and requested that he pay special attention to the three speeches which preceded mine last evening. In his speech the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain proposed his amendment. Also in the course of his remarks the hon. member identified far superior fiscal policies and legislative actions which could be followed to achieve the goal of reasonable revenue-sharing between governments and maintain a healthy and viable resource sector in our economy.

The hon. member for Don Valley indicated that it is absolutely unnecessary for the government to proceed with the kind of measures included in clause 4. The hon. member for Peace River indicated that indeed it is very dangerous to the economy of the country, to confederation and to national unity for the government to continue to pursue the line of reasoning it is now following.

I would like very briefly to review the history of the development of the energy confrontation which currently exists, not from the point of view of rubbing salt into old wounds but from the point of view of attempting to identify the lessons which are to be learned. The day this issue began to grow into national proportions can be explicitly identified as September 4, 1973, when the cabinet, after a Labour Day weekend meeting, felt that it must introduce a measure to demonstrate, primarily to the then leader of the New Democratic Party, that it was fighting inflation and it was going to do something to impose a freeze on the price of domestic crude oil produced in western Canada.

This, I might add, came after two other moves by the government that summer to control inflation: price controls on wheat and beef. Wheat, beef and oil were the three commodities on which the government attempted to impose price controls, the three major commodities of importance to western Canada. The reason is quite obvious: this allowed the government the maximum political benefit and the minimum political damage. The fact that this ploy worked is the major reason behind the suggestion by the hon. member for Peace River last evening that it is time we had a renegotiation of confederation. The fact that this so-called national party could get away with alienating that part of the country in the manner it did is evidence that it is time we looked into the whole question of renegotiating confederation, because if some attention is not paid to that matter in the near future, I and many other sincere, concerned Canadians worry about the direction in which this confederation might go.

However, as a result of that unilateral move by the government on that day the producing provinces reacted. This being the third such move, they felt they had to protect their economic interests and they reacted with legislation to protect those interests. The federal government reacted to that legislation; the provincial governments reacted again; the federal government reacted again, and the escalation grew and grew and became very heated until the agreement of March 27 at 24 Sussex Drive when it appeared as if, finally, a solution had been reached. Instead, the government showed that it had no intention of acting in good faith. It acted in a manner which my leader has described as deceitful—this was an accurate description—in introducing the budget of May 6 which merely increased the tensions within the country.

What is the situation in the oil industry? There is now substantial evidence that Canada will be a net importer of oil in the near future. There will be shortages of oil, yet there is no reason why this should be so since Canada is a petrolific country. The net result will be a slowing down of development and an increasing rate of unemployment. These losses to the economy cannot be immediately recouped.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources enjoys taking occasional potshots, along with the NDP, at the multinational companies. In fact, though, the companies most affected by the government's tax policies are the Canadian independent companies which have been doing most of the drilling in the west. Much concern has been expressed by the Canadian government in the past about the need to encourage and preserve Canadian ownership, but no such concern has been shown when it comes to adopting policies which hurt the small portion of the industry where Canadian content is most in evidence. The need to rely on imports of foreign oil in the future will probably result in balance of payments problems, a serious state of affairs. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that you about to rise. I shall have to seek the floor at a later date to complete my remarks.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Chairman, yesterday we read that the Minister of Finance is shortly going to the Middle East in his capacity as chairman of the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund to talk about oil, oil production and the reinvestment of profits by oil producing nations. This gives me a point of entry at which to begin certain comments I wish to make. At time like this when I look around the committee—the chamber is not well filled—I feel like suggesting to the minister that he and I should repair to our old Sandy Hill haunts since we might be able to get as much accomplished in the course of a private discussion. However, since this must be done in public I intend to advance a serious argument for the minister's consideration.

I have already addressed myself to the energy situation and tried to present arguments based, not on an "Alberta first" but on a "Canada first" position. I intend to ask the minister how he reconciles his position as Minister of Finance, putting through a bill which will be so injurious to the resource producing provinces, with the other position he holds as chairman of the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund? The situation we face with respect to the use and the development of the resources of Canada was put very plainly by Mr. Maurice Strong, formerly in charge of the Canadian International Agency, in his capacity as head of the United Nations environment program. He said:

> To put it in its starkest terms, Canadians must face the prospect of having to defend before the world their continued right to exclusive sovereignty over a disproportionate share of the world's territory and its resources . . .
> What does this mean for Canada? What should we do about it? In my view it means that Canada has a special responsibility for the way in which it manages the disproportionate share of the world's territory, its resources and the natural environment that it commands.
> It must regard itself not just as a sovereign owner and possessor of these advantages but in the larger sense as their trustee. It does not mean that Canadians should be denied the benefits of these resources but they must be prepared to share these benefits. "Canada first" cannot mean "Canada only".

The great question which all of us must resolve as we try to steer our way through a world in scientific, technical and cultural explosion is how to bring together the two great themes of modern times, that is, growth, the development of resources for a suffering humanity, along with conservation. These two things must be developed into a national policy. The minister himself in his budget speech of November 18 when he addressed himself to the subject of Canada working toward international co-operation—the concept he personifies as chairman of the IMF committee—had this to say:

> Our ability to co-operate will be severely tested, but we see nothing to be gained from policies of confrontation . . .
> I am deeply troubled by the potential disaster facing many of the poor countries of the world. A number of them can no longer pay for food, fertilizer, fuel and many other essentials. All countries, including Canada, must review their foreign aid programs in the light of these tragic developments.

I wish to recall to the minister the words he himself used, that there is nothing to be gained from policies of confrontation. That sentence was applied to the field of international relationships: surely, though, he would not deny its applicability to the domestic scene. Nevertheless, I suggest the government is determined to put through a bill taxing corporations in a way which disallows their royalty payments to the provinces for income tax purposes, and that this will place us in a situation in which the regional strength of the country will be greatly hurt, as a result of which our national strength will be impaired, thus leaving Canada in a weakened position when it comes to playing the role we should be playing internationally.

Last week there was a debate on CIDA. I tried to point out that foreign aid as such was not in question; what was important was a restructuring of the world economy along lines which allowed the developing nations to plug themselves in to interprovincial mechanisms of trade, financing and distribution. I take it the hon. gentleman is going to the Middle East to try to put some pressure on the resource producing states to accept their responsibility to help work out satisfactory solutions to present difficulties. Does the minister not think that he is undermining this country's position internationally by perpetuating a policy, as reflected in legislation, which will hurt the resource producing provinces of this country and weaken their own development?

● (1530)

What about Alberta? We know that 85 per cent of Canada's oil is produced in Alberta. I think Canada should be in a stronger position to meet international commitments for the sake of a more just world order. Naturally, I speak as an Albertan who recognizes that much of the resource strength of this country, strength which depends on the development of oil and gas, is vested in my province. I think that a bill which will diminish Alberta's capacity to produce oil is a bill which will weaken Canada and Canada's international position. I ask the minister to take these facts into account. As he suggested in his November 18 budget speech, international confrontation will get us nowhere. I suggest that confrontation within our own country will, likewise, get us nowhere. This argument is endless.

What does the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain seek to do? It asks the government not to proclaim a certain part of the bill until after the first ministers' conference. One hopes that that conference will be held in a co-operative and flexible spirit and that pricing as well as the constitutionality of the issue we are dealing with will be discussed. One hopes that debate on the constitutional issue will not have been foreclosed, if I may use that word, by action by the Parliament of Canada resulting in provincial royalties no longer being allowed as tax deductions.

I am arguing that we need more time for Ottawa and the provinces to come to an agreement in a spirit of compromise. Already certain things have been done. The November 18 budget is significantly different in certain respects from the May 6 budget in the area of resource exploitation. The Alberta government has introduced a drawback with respect to provincial royalties. Such moves on both sides reflect a spirit of flexibility, a spirit in which both sides are trying to reach out and compromise. The Syncrude partnership is another illustration of my argument. The deal which has been worked out will be in the best interests not of the people of Alberta alone but the people of all of Canada. Again, I say by so doing our governments are working in a manner which will enable Canada to meet international responsibilities.

My argument for delaying the implementation of certain parts of this bill until after the first ministers have met, which is what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain suggested, is reinforced by what happened recently at the two hour meeting in Calgary when the Prime Minister met Premier Lougheed. I want to recap briefly what took place. The Prime Minister implied at that meeting that crude oil price increases are viewed by the federal government as another factor which will have its effect on conservation of energy supplies. On the matter of incentives to the oil industry, the Prime Minister stood firm on taxation policies now in effect. The federal government, he suggested, does not feel that changes in this policy are required and therefore no change in the deductibility of royalty payments to provinces in computing federal tax would be contemplated. The federal government's position, of course, is reflected in the bill before the committee.

For his part, Mr. Lougheed noted that the discussions had centred on energy, transportation, agriculture and petrochemicals. The premier said, again, that Alberta would not move unilaterally on crude oil price adjustments before the first ministers' conference in April. I ask the committee to note that. He suggested that Alberta maintains the opinion that crude oil prices should move closer to world prices, but just how great the first move will be was not stated. The premier expressed the viewpoint that federal government encouragement for the industry was certainly required. Another concern expressed by the premier dealt with Alberta's potential petrochemical industry. Petrosar, in the premier's opinion, could jeopardize development of a viable petrochemical industry in Alberta.

Mr. Cullen: That is not correct.

Mr. Roche: I bring that opinion to the attention of the minister's colleague and seatmate. What is the significance of the Prime Minister's meeting with Premier Lougheed in Calgary. The significance, I suggest is this: these two leaders have obvious differences of opinion on energy matters relating both to crude oil prices and federal-provincial tax jurisdiction; that is, they have obvious differences on the two central questions, the constitutionality of the federal encroachment on provincial royalties, and prices. As well, the Prime Minister and the Premier expressed a difference of opinion on the degree of progress made thus far in resolving these matters.

Would it not be better for the Minister of Finance to tell the committee that the government is willing not to implement certain parts of this bill so that there can be discussion without prejudice at the first ministers' conference, discussion in a spirit of co-operative partnership and co-operative federalism in order to resolve the difficulties which involve not only the premiers of two provinces but all the people of the country? These words are not meant to be rhetoric. In preparing myself for this debate I studied the report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution, presented in June, 1972. The thrust of that report is this: our constitution needs to be updated and modernized. I will not argue about how that can be done; the minister knows the arguments as well as I do. The thrust of these arguments is that we must not only take into account existing relationships between Ottawa and the provinces; we must also remember the conditions under which the constitution was drawn. By upholding the position which says that the central government is the dominant government vis-à-vis the provinces and that this is the modern reality, the minister is not heeding the thinking which went into the making of the joint committee's report on the constitution.

The speech made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, referred to yesterday by the hon. member for Don Valley when he spoke about what he called the "Hamilton proposal", or the velocity of capital concept, was one of the most exciting speeches I have ever heard in parliament. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain introduced the velocity of capital idea on January 30 and it is an idea of which private industry and governments should take cognizance. I do not say that the minister's budget speech was not exciting, but the speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was very exciting. Yet the minister came to the committee yesterday and said, in reply to the hon. member, that he had not proposed the idea to the provincial governments and had not discussed it with private industry but that, yes, he recognized its importance. Perhaps too much has been happening. What I am arguing is that: it is wrong for the minister to take unilateral action and ignore the ideas brought forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Yesterday the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain reflected on his ideas for dealing with capital-intensive industry in order to give more money to the owners of the resources, the provinces, and more money to the federal government by sharing the profits of the companies, the equity. At the same time, there will be enough money going to the companies to enable them to continue. Those are some of the large issues at stake now as we consider whether we should move ahead with the implementation of clauses 4 and 7 of Bill C-49.

I want to conclude by repeating for the minister, before he goes abroad, a very interesting story which appeared in the International Economic Survey of the New York Times for January 26. The title is, "The world, as wealth shifts, is shaken by uncertainty". We know there is great uncertainty as to which way we should go to repair some of the global problems. The story concludes with a quotation by John E. Sawyer, an economic historian who has taught, if you please, at both Harvard and Yale. He said:

> No society can prosper on a divergent course with reality. There can be no escaping the accelerating pace of change, the fact of interdependency or the inevitability that public processes will govern crucial sectors of activity from now on.

I bet the minister will say "amen" to that quotation. Here is the last sentence:

> The challenge will be to keep these processes honest, enlightened and effective.

Does the minister really think that clauses 4 and 7 of Bill C-49 are enlightened with respect to the world conditions we face today? Are they really effective in stimulating resource development in Canada, which is the key to a strengthened Canadian economy, and diversified regional growth so that all parts of this country can plug into making our country strong? I ask this seriously. Will the minister take a moment to answer my central, dominant question? How can he reconcile his position on clauses 4 and 7 of Bill C-49 with his international responsibilities, going into the IMF, helping to restructure the world economy with justice?

Mr. Nystrom: This afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I want to make one last appeal to the minister.

An hon. Member: The last one?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The Quebec Liberal backbenchers should be very interested in this bill. My purpose in rising is solely to address myself to them and try to persuade them to take a second look at the bill before us. We are talking about one very fundamental issue, namely, how do you divide the resources of this country between the federal government and the provincial governments? We have had a whole history of fighting on clause 4 whereby the government will disallow the deducting of royalties.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: We have had applause from a British Columbia member and no applause from the Quebec members. I suspect that if the Quebec Liberals were to check with Premier Bourassa and his cabinet, they would find that almost every one of them is opposed to this clause in the bill. They would also find that every premier in this country is opposed to the clause which disallows the deductibility of royalties. Royalties are a bit different from other taxes in the country. Under our constitution the provinces have a right to impose royalties. This is not only with regard to gas and oil; it affects all minerals that we produce such as nickel, gold and potash. Therefore, every province in this country is affected. Disallowing the deducting of royalties as a legitimate expense is like telling a farmer in Quebec or Saskatchewan that he cannot claim municipal taxes as a legitimate expense, or telling someone who rents land from a landlord that he cannot claim the payments made as a legitimate expense.

What will happen if the federal government undercuts the provinces with regard to resource revenue? How much room will there be left for the provinces to develop? There have been a lot of moves in the province of Quebec, in particular, for economic, cultural and social nationalism and, indeed, independence of Quebec as a separate entity and a separate province. If the provincial governments are denied further revenues, the federal government will be playing into that sentiment of alienation in one part of this country against another. If hon. members do not vote for this amendment, they will be making René Levesque very happy. He will say that this is another example of the heavy-handedness of Ottawa. All the premiers and all the provinces are opposed to this particular clause.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister will not even delay this clause for two months until after the first ministers have had a chance to meet. This is a very reasonable amendment. It says that this House will pass the clauses—and I do not agree with them all—if their proclamation is delayed until the first ministers meet. That would not be a great sacrifice for this government to make. If the provinces are all opposed, why cannot we wait another two months before putting these clauses into law? They will pass the House of Commons and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance would have the extra clout at the conference in early April. It would be a sign, signal or symbol of good faith if they were not proclaimed until after the conference. Is that asking too much?

Why is it that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are right and all the premiers are wrong? Is that a demonstration of the divine right of ruling this country which seems to have affected the minds of so many Liberals? I know as a fact that if the Liberals were allowed to stand up in this House and say and do what they believe, many of them would vote for the amendment before us. I speak to many Liberals from Quebec, as well as the hon. member for Nipissing who represents part of northern Ontario. I know they are very concerned about development in their areas. There are also members from the prairies and the maritimes who want more development in their regions. However, we cannot have that development without a spirit of co-operation, consensus and working together as a team rather than pitting one region against another.

I have always believed we should have a strong central government. However, if we are to have that it must be with the co-operation of all regions and all provinces. In order to have a strong central government, there must be a certain amount of decentralization with regard to decision-making on issues important to the various provinces and regions. That is what we need if we are to keep Canada together. For too long there has been development around the golden horseshoe, particularly the Toronto area, to the detriment of other regions. A bill such as the one before us will only escalate that type of development instead of narrowing regional disparity.

Yesterday information was provided to me and my colleagues in caucus about recent increase in freight rates. The premier of my province and the premiers of other provinces said they would be willing to give a little more in terms of oil and gas revenues if they could get a little more in terms of some of the things they want, settlement of the grievances they have in confederation.

● (1550)

One thing that grieve us in western Canada is a freight rates system that discriminates against people on the prairies. The same is true for the people in northern Ontario, parts of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. The people of Saskatchewan are providing low-cost oil to people in other parts of the country, generating tremendous revenue for the federal treasury. What do we get in return, Mr. Chairman? I have here the latest figures showing the increase in freight rates and I should like to give the committee two examples of how the freight rate system discriminates against the province of Saskatchewan.

If you ship 610 pounds of meat from Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, to Hudson Bay—not a long distance, only some 200 miles—the cost under the old rates a few days ago would have been $21.80, or $3.57 per hundredweight. A couple of days ago the freight rates went up to $5.40 per hundredweight, representing an increase of 52 per cent.

The cost of shipping 40 cartons of plants from Winnipeg to the city of Regina under the old rate was $33.55 per thousand pounds; under the new rate it will cost $65.80, an increase of 99 per cent.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have been very patient in listening to this debate for some time, but I cannot for the life of me see how freight rates enter into Bill C-49. I should like to have this debate continue on Bill C-49; I am sure we will be able to discuss freight rates at some other time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I will tell you why freight rates are very relevant. The province of Saskatchewan produces 75 million to 80 million barrels of oil per year. We have only about ten years' supply of oil left in the province. In good faith the province of Saskatchewan agreed to sell oil to Canadians at a lower price and to export oil to the United States at a lower price, thus allowing the federal government to collect an export tax. As a result, the people of Saskatchewan are losing $5.20 per barrel of oil. They sell their oil at $5.20 below the international price. If that is multiplied by 75 million barrels, it means $400 million per year is being lost by the province of Saskatchewan which would not be lost if the oil was sold at world prices or the export tax was channelled back to the province.

The premier and the people of Saskatchewan have agreed to live with this situation. They are making a substantial contribution to confederation in order to keep down the price of oil and to preserve national unity. In return for this, we expect a trade-off, a quid pro quo. We have grievances against the present transportation structure in this country, against the present freight rate structure and the lack of an industrial strategy. If we had action on those fronts we would be much more willing to allow this clause to pass, but we see no evidence of action. Freight rates have increased over the last two days on commodities that affect the people in the small towns, villages, cities and farms of Saskatchewan. In some cases the freight rates have increased 52 per cent, in other cases 99 per cent or even more.

At the same time, the committee is expecting me to vote approval of a clause that is going to take away more money from the people I represent, and I cannot acquiesce to that. If the Minister of Transport were to tell the House that he will remove the anomalies in our freight rate and transportation systems so as to give the people of Saskatchewan a chance to process food and develop the resources of the province, then I would be willing to compromise and accommodate the government when it comes to gas and oil. Gas and oil don't grow on trees and in ten years' time there will be none left. Then where will we be in the province of Saskatchewan? The federal government and consumers of Canada have taken half our money and we have nothing to show for it.

This clause is vitally important to the province of Saskatchewan and to many other areas of the country which at the present time are underdeveloped. Members of all parties should pay attention to this fact and should ask the Minister of Finance to be reasonable and delay proclamation of these clauses until after the first ministers' meeting. That is not asking him to do very much. He still has the club, the sanction and seal of the House that the legislation will become law whenever he or the cabinet decide to proclaim it. But this would be a gesture of good will on his part and the whole country would be the better for it, including the Minister of Finance and the government he happens to represent. This country must be built on co-operation and honest intentions. If the minister took this action it would go a long way toward improving the spirit of confederation.

There are many other items in the bill that interest me as a private member. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie yesterday raised several questions on Syncrude. We all know the Syncrude project has been exempted from many tax provisions made in the last few years. But we want the Minister of Finance to answer these questions as fully as he can and to tell us how much of a concession in terms of taxes will be given to the Syncrude consortium. This is a vital issue at this time. I think the members of the Liberal party sitting opposite should be very concerned at the great sell-out of the oil sands in Alberta to a private concern. This project is being financed by public risk money without any guarantee of profit. Canadians are going to pay the world price for this oil. Costs are skyrocketing and we have little information and very few facts to estimate what the project is going to cost the Canadian people.

I resume my seat after appealing to the Minister of Finance, and particularly to the Liberal backbenchers to show a bit of spunk, to show that they are not puppets on a string who are sitting here in case there is a vote. I ask them to show courage and to tell their minister that the opposition parties on this side of the House are making a reasonable suggestion, namely, that we will pass the bill but delay proclamation of the clauses pertaining to royalties, mineral resources and gas and oil until after the first ministers meeting. I assure hon. members that their own provincial politicians would support them. They do not have very many in Alberta, but I see the hon. member from Battleford-Kindersley is here, and he is from Saskatchewan. I ask them to vote with the opposition and to support our proposition. The Premier of Saskatchewan has been willing to accommodate the federal government, so I would ask them to compromise.

Most of us in our party would like the amendment to go even further. We would like to see these clauses delayed until after the first ministers' meeting or even brought back to the House in a separate bill, but in the spirit of national unity, co-operation and good will we are willing to compromise. We will go halfway and I hope my friends on the other side of the committee will meet us halfway. If they do, it will be better for all of us and there will be political kudos for no one but the people of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I want to complete the remarks that I started the other day when these clauses were allowed to stand. I want to refer to one sentence in the minister's speech on second reading of the bill in which he said that the issue is: what constitutes a fair sharing of revenue from petroleum and mining as between the industries, the provinces and the federal government? I do not disagree with that; that is certainly one of the issues, if not the issue. I have yet to hear a case made by the minister or anybody else on the government side to justify or support the suggestion that the federal government is not getting a fair share. There may be some argument as to what constitutes a fair share, but that has to be sorted out between the federal government and the provinces. The federal government is now getting, and I submit will continue to get, a fair share of these revenues.

● (1600)

Let me refer to some figures I have regarding the federal government's share, on a per barrel basis, of crude oil from Saskatchewan. These figures indicate that the federal government is doing fine in respect of getting a fair share. Medium crude from southeastern Saskatchewan that is exported to the United States, sells at $10.62 a barrel. The federal government's share of that in royalties and federal corporation tax amounts to 58.1 per cent. That is substantially over half. Surely not even the minister would try to tell me that is not a reasonable or a fair share. In fact, I have yet to hear what he would consider to be a fair share in light of figures like that. Since half the crude oil produced in Saskatchewan goes to the United States, that is a pretty significant share, I would submit. Out of the $10.62, the province of Saskatchewan gets 31 per cent in royalties and income tax and the industry gets 5.1 per cent.

In addition, the Saskatchewan government has made available for some period of time an additional 30 cents per barrel to the industry, provided it is used for further exploration and development. Just a few days ago the government improved that position even more by increasing the figure to 50 cents a barrel. That money comes out of Saskatchewan's share of these oil revenues. That gives the producer additional funds. Surely the basic issue is a fair sharing of that revenue between those three groups, the federal government, the province and the industry. Surely that is more than fair.

In addition, the government of Saskatchewan has lived up to its side of the agreement or bargain. As others have said, it agreed to forgo in the neighbourhood of $400 million in revenue that could have been the province's in respect of oil sold at world prices. The government of Saskatchewan was willing to forgo that as a contribution toward equity for all Canadians and as a contribution toward confederation and national unity. That was evidence for the federal government that the province of Saskatchewan cares about a strong confederation and a united country. I suggest that is a good contribution by the people of Saskatchewan from the resources that are theirs under the constitution. I do not want to brag overly about the people of Saskatchewan, but they are the best in Canada and this is a very significant contribution.

The people of Alberta were also willing to forgo in the order of three or four times that amount of potential revenue for the sake of confederation, accommodation and mutual agreement. Saskatchewan and Alberta have lived up to the bargain. These additional revenues which Saskatchewan obtained from royalties were set aside in a capital fund to be used for exploration and development of resources.

I just do not understand what the minister is complaining about or why he found it necessary to put this kind of measure in the budget. I could understand it if the government of Saskatchewan took that money into general revenue and started to spend it on roads, health care or even for political purposes: I could understand the minister feeling that some measure such as this was necessary because Saskatchewan would then have broken its part of the bargain. It did not do that, but lived up to its bargain to the letter. To get kicked in the face by these clauses in the budget, I submit, is no contribution on the part of the federal government toward confederation, national unity or, for that matter, toward future agreements.

The industry has been claiming it has not been getting enough of the revenue, but there is nothing new about that. It is quite true that until 1958 the industry in Saskatchewan put more into the industry than it took out, but since 1958 there have been increasing net cash outflows from Saskatchewan each year. In 1972 the industry had a net cash outflow of $96.5 million, and in 1973 a net cash outflow of $126.8 million.

From December, 1972, to December, 1973, the price of crude increased by 90 cents a barrel, or 35 per cent, and almost all of that increase went to the producers. Because of events in the Arab countries it was apparent that the price of crude was going to increase at a dramatic rate and that prospect gave rise to legislation in Saskatchewan. It also gave rise to the export tax levied by the federal government, 40 cents a barrel to begin with. I will not go over the whole history of this—I have pages of it here in chronological order—but I suggest if one looked at the whole picture one would not understand why the minister is so excited about this and feels it necessary to have this kind of clause in the income tax bill.

At the end of last March the provincial premiers left a first ministers' conference believing that the taxing agreement in respect of oil would be observed until the end of June, 1974. Certainly no one spoke about tax changes at that conference. The Premier of Saskatchewan wrote to the Prime Minister asking specifically if the federal government intended to disallow the royalties paid to the provinces by the oil producers as a deductible expense when calculating income tax. The Prime Minister did not answer the question at the conference and at no time has he answered it in writing. No wonder all of us in Saskatchewan, at least, were shocked when the budget proposals of May indeed disallowed royalty payments to the provinces as deductible expenses. The people in the industry were shocked. This move came without warning.

We also find it passing strange that the minister is not consistent in how the law will be applied. I still think he is a fair man, although at times unreasonable, but I cannot understand why he does not apply the law in the same way in all cases. If this is such a good idea and is so necessary, then why are royalties paid to private owners such as Canadian Pacific Investments and Hudson's Bay still allowed as deductible expenses when calculating income tax, yet not allowed when paid to the provinces?

● (1610)

Canadian Pacific Investments hold acres of mineral rights in Saskatchewan and lease some of those rights to PanCanadian Oils. PanCanadian Oils can deduct the royalties they pay Canadian Pacific Investments as an expense when computing their income tax. PanCanadian Oils is a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific Investments, which is a subsidiary of CPR. The CPR can benefit from royalties being deducted as a tax and a subsidiary of CPR can also do so, but not the people of Saskatchewan or the people of Alberta. Surely this is inherently unfair. Surely it is an injustice of the first order.

My first choice, as it is of my colleagues, is that these clauses be left out of the bill now, reintroduced in a separate bill and dealt with as a separate matter after the first ministers' conference. If no agreement can be reached and the government still feels it has to use this kind of measure to get what it thinks is a fair share of the resource revenue, that would be the best way to go about it.

My second choice is to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I do not think it is an unreasonable request. So far as I am concerned, it is a minimal request. I hope the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley will agree that it is not all that horrendous a problem to delay the proclamation of these clauses for a couple of months, if for no other reason than to give all the first ministers an opportunity to meet, without rancour, in an effort to reach mutual agreement and understanding, so that the government will not do something which I predict they will regret many years hence and which parliament will regret whatever party happens to be in power.

The legislation which we are considering strikes at a fundamental part of our constitution. It strikes at something that all provinces have held dear since confederation. The opportunity for additional time that this parliament must provide for the federal and provincial governments to reach agreement is one that I hope we will not pass up. I hope that the Minister of Finance will rise in his place and say, "O.K., fellows. I am an agreeable fellow". The provinces have made some concessions. They brought in some measures subsequent to last May 8 to indicate that they are willing to reach an agreement which will benefit the whole country as well as individual parts of it. There have been numerous examples of this, particularly from the premiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Surely it is time the federal government responded, if only in this small way, and provided the additional time and opportunity necessary for agreement and understanding to be reached. There may even be time to throw the equalization formula back on the table. The Minister of Finance could say, "Well, fellows; how about doing some adjustment here?" Perhaps he has already done that; I don't know. But surely the couple of months' time that is being asked for is not an unreasonable request. I plead with hon. members from all parts of the country and in all parties to take into account what has been said by myself, by many members of the House and by several provincial governments and I urge them to pass this amendment. I say to my hon. friends on the government side that it will do no irreparable harm to the budget of the Minister of Finance; it will just delay a few parts of it for a couple of months. Since no harm will be done to the budget as a whole or to the government that they support, I hope that hon. members on all sides will support the amendment and bring about the delay for which we and the provinces ask.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to the amendment proposed to clauses 4 and 7 of Bill C-49 by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, first I would like to say that I recognize the predicament of the provinces and their responsibility for the problem that they generated, particularly my own province. I say that with candour and dismay. But there are limitations to the control which must be exercised in this matter, limitations which are of vital concern to the national interest. After all, the provinces all look to the federal government to provide leadership in developing a fair and just compromise and to re-establish a climate in which employees and employers in the mining industry can continue to contribute to the economy of this country.

The state of the economy of this country is a matter of vital importance to every one of us and certainly to the Minister of Finance. If the minister is to demonstrate his concern for that vast segment of our economy, namely, the mining industry, he will accept the amendment which has been proposed, thereby restoring the faith of the public sector in the industry. I refer to investors in the mining industry.

There is time for further eyeball to eyeball negotiation with the first ministers of the provinces, rather than the confrontation which has generated so much verbiage in the House in the last while. We have been assured by the Minister of Finance, by the NDP, hon. friends to my left, by the NDP in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, as well as by Conservatives in Ontario, that heavy taxation, combined federal and provincial, will not cause existing mining operations to close down prematurely. I heartily agree and so does the mining industry and the Minister of Finance. There is no argument about that. But as sure as blazes there is some argument and some concern about the future.

The Minister of Finance knows, even if some provincial ministers obviously do not, that it takes years and years, and frequently millions of dollars, to prove out a mineral possibility, to establish a mine and to staff the enterprise with miners, engineers, technicians and the necessary equipment. The recent federal and provincial taxes motivated by the higher prices of metals have brought about this greedy confrontation between the provincial and federal governments to the detriment of the entire mining industry and of the people who work in mining areas. Consider the price of copper. Surely the government and the Canadian people recognize that more than any other commodity on the market, the price of metal is subject to major fluctuations, brief high and extended low periods. With rose-coloured glasses they only look at the high prices. This is precisely what was done in the province of British Columbia, and now they are reaping the sick benefits of their political machinations in that regard.

● (1620)

Consider housing in the United States and what it has done to the B.C. lumber industry. Forecast what the same type of thinking and the same trend in the economy, plus federal legislation and provincial legislation, will do to thousands and thousands of men and women who work in the mining industry. This is part of a cycle which the minister proposes to inflict upon British Columbia and miners, smelter workers and all the ancillary services of the mining and smelting industries. We have already been pilloried and damned by the National Film Board in Trail, and now we are getting this piece of cake served to us. Frankly, we are not at all impressed.

I suspect that the federal government has some sort of death wish for Kootenay West, an area of heavy mining industry, an area of smelting, an area which has provided billions of dollars in taxation for this nation, with nothing in return except this kind of federal legislation to further drive down the economy of this country in general and my riding in particular. I rather suspect that Ontario and Québec—those two monoliths in the middle of Canada—treat the maritimes, with their coal and iron ore industries, and British Columbia as colonies. When we look at this legislation, what else can we assume?

Canadian mining cannot make an effective contribution to the economy in a climate of this nature. What we must have—and we will not have it unless this amendment is accepted—is the orderly development of the mining community and the mining economy, not cyclical change subject to the whims of provincial and federal ministers, subject to the whims of the marketplace and subject to the whims and economies of other nations with mineral resources and industries. Federal and provincial co-operation is a must. It must be held out to us. The olive branch has been extended and we urge the minister to accept it. Is there any basis in fact for what I have said? The mineral output alone—not the oil or gas output—rose from $475 million in 1946 to $3,278 million in 1969. Production and productivity were up three times the rate of the economy of Canada as a whole. And we are speaking of one industry. What a magnificent achievement and a symbol of industry both for the miners and the mining companies.

There is no evidence on which to assess the short-term and long-term effects of this proposed taxation measure; I think this is the point which disturbs me most. We have yet to hear, from the government side, concrete evidence as to the effects this taxation will have on the mining, oil and gas industries. I ask the minister what the spin-off effects of this particular proposal will be. I urge the minister to tell us what his proposal will do to the mining industry, the oil industry and the gas industry, and what it will do to their employees and to the economy generally. There has not been a word. What is the long-term effect? Has it really been pondered? Has it really been studied? Or has it been popped into a computer for an immediate answer?

Perhaps more than the oil and gas industries, the mining industry needs a long time in order to develop. Capital diverted from the mining industry in Canada is now flowing and will go on flowing to other parts of the world where the same metals are available. Tax and royalty rates in some cases, when we look at the federal and provincial structure of these taxes, reach 100 per cent; yet there is no surprise expressed by or comment from government members at this 100 per cent taxation. I wonder how hon. members opposite would feel if each of them was subject to 100 per cent taxation. There would be a bill before this House pretty damned quick to increase salaries.

I must admonish the minister with reference to the proposal in the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, because the amendment was submitted with sincerity and integrity as a solution. An hon. member with years of valued experience contributed a valid proposal for the government. Did the Minister of Finance consider it as a solution? No. Did he suggest for a minute that he might invite opinions from the first ministers? Did he ask the mining companies what they thought of the proposal? He could not be bothered; therein lies the shame of the whole thing. It is a valid proposal, developed with sincerity and honesty—and no one bothered with it, least of all the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has said:

—the federal government should recognize the "special position of the provinces with respect to the taxation and charges on resources within their boundaries"—

That is a strange statement in light of present events, is it not? What did the minister mean by the "special position of the provinces with respect to the taxation and charges on resources"? He meant exactly the opposite of what everyone who read those words thought he meant. He went on:

—the federal government must ensure that provincial royalties, taxes, and other arrangements do not "unreasonably erode" the federal corporate income tax base—

I agree. This has to be part of the discussion between the first ministers of Canada and the Minister of Finance. I agree that some of the mining taxation and royalty proposals of the provincial governments are not conducive to the federal government's receiving its fair share, but I also believe there must be consultation and that any imaginative minister would accept the proposed amendment and at least feed it into the machine for feedback from the provinces and the mining industry. But somewhere along the line the minister's fingers were jammed in the letterbox and the mail was never sent out. The minister also said:

—over-all Canadian tax policy must have regard for the competitive international position of the industry and the financial resources it requires to bring forward production needed in future years.

That is a motherhood statement, if ever I heard one. But what is it doing for us? It might do something if the amendment is accepted; otherwise it is a useless piece of rhetoric and we all know it. If we do not, we should. The fundamental conclusion which can be drawn from the main budget is that the federal government decided it was not prepared to leave taxation and regulation of the resource industries primarily to the provinces. We would accept that, but on the basis of the present proposals how can it possibly be accepted? I know the minister has a bit of a headache over problems in the west, but the west has always been known to generate a headache now and again. Perhaps an olive branch type of aspirin would relieve the headache.

● (1630)

There is little doubt that British Columbia mining royalties were designed to extract as much revenue as possible from the industry as well as to deny a measure of taxation to the federal government. The result is that the B.C. mining companies are placed in the middle of a ham sandwich, a fight between the province and the federal government. The poor mining companies and those who work for them and value their jobs are the ones who are being gobbled up.

What about the effect on the mining industry? What are the implications? I have mentioned the time it takes for a mine to develop, the amount of work that goes into prospecting, into development, into the raising of capital, equipment and manpower. And I would venture to say that 90 out of 100 claims go down the tube. The increase in federal taxation of the mining industry, in consequence of all the measures which have been proposed, will only become effective, really, after the mining industry exhausts its depletion arrangements. Once this concession, dating back to November, 1969, has been used up, the ball-game will be a sad one indeed for the economy of this country. I say this even in the light of major mining developments. Tax benefits under the new completion rules will not be nearly as favourable as under previous provisions.

What are the implications for resource development? We know that governments, federal and provincial, with an eye to the high prevailing prices wanted to seize on to the bonanza. Lord knows, we have heard enough about this bonanza from members of the party to our left. But under this type of taxation there is no possibility of putting funds aside for the lean years. Of course, there is no scientific way of determining what is an appropriate level of taxation, but it has been my experience that the best way in which to reach a reasonable conclusion is to sit down and talk things out. There just hasn't been enough of that.

What are the effects of taxation at this level? There are three points that could be made about the higher tax burden faced by the Canadian mining industry. The first concerns the dogfight which has been going on for some months between the federal government and the provinces for a share of the resource profits. Each level of government has imposed its new tax without regard to the position taken by the other, in some cases in an obvious effort to pre-empt the other in the tax field. The resource sector found itself in the middle of this dogfight and as a result it is really suffering. In particular, it is suffering from lack of investor confidence.

The structure of the new federal-provincial rules has had a particularly disastrous impact on new resource development, and that is saying a lot right now. Where are the new resource developments in Ontario, in British Columbia, in Alberta or, for that matter, in any of the other provinces? I will give just one example: while the average tax burden on a large, integrated Ontario mining producer could still be less than 50 per cent, additional income obtained from operating economies or the expansion of existing mines is charged at a marginal rate of 73 per cent. That is not too bad, but move a little farther west and you will hit 100 per cent—a grim batting average.

The whole structure of resource taxation is in chaotic confusion. There is complete absence of form or unanimity. There has been no dialogue, federal or provincial, and no valid considerations put forward affecting the entire topic, though this is long past due. I conclude by imploring the Minister of Finance, as I did on another occasion, to recognize the sincere manner in which this amemdment has been put forward. This is an opportunity for a lot of good mileage to be gained for the provinces, the mining industry and the government itself.

[Mr. Brisco.]

We know that the mining industry has been expressing its concern to the minister; however, I doubt that the minister has been expressing his concern to the mining industry. I suggest that since the minister will have an opportunity to discuss this matter thoroughly with the provincial premiers, it is incumbent upon him to sit down with leaders from the mining industry and talk it out with them.

Mr. Bawden: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions regarding a number of points which arose earlier in the debate. The attitude taken by the hon. gentleman has, of course, been that the provinces were claiming an undue share of the tax base, thereby eroding receipts by the federal government. On February 5 I asked him if he could tell us what the percentages would be if they were revised to reflect the export tax as a receipt by the federal government. The minister has advanced the argument that receipts from this tax were assigned as a subsidy to the eastern provinces. The fact of the matter is that this amount was relinquished by the western premiers last March in return for certain concessions and a total package.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps I should do my best at this point to answer some of the questions that have been put to me. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain again put forward the proposition he raised on second reading, namely, that clauses affecting resource taxation should be postponed, in effect, until proclamation by the government, the governor in council, following the expiration of the 15th day of April, that date being chosen to allow the meeting of first ministers to take place.

I gave my reasons on second reading for rejecting that proposal of the hon. member. Basically, the budgetary proposals which were introduced on May 6 and were defeated in the House on May 8, along with the rest of the budget, formed the topic of the meeting of first ministers at 24 Sussex Drive before the November 18 budget. They were reintroduced to a certain extent in the November 18 budget, with two fundamental changes involving the restoration of the 100 per cent deductibility for exploration, as against the 30 per cent figure in the May 6 budget and, of course, the additional abatement for petroleum, from 25 per cent to 30 per cent; or, putting it another way, we reduced the federal tax from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.

There was a thorough discussion of resource taxation measures between all ministers of finance, provincial treasurers and the federal Minister of Finance on December 9 and 10 in Ottawa. The taxation aspects of the budget have been thoroughly discussed by those ministers since their introduction into parliament. Such discussion took place after consecutive budgets had been introduced.

Mr. Stanfield: But did they all agree with you?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, there were legitimate differences of opinion.

Mr. Stanfield: Did any of them agree with you?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes. The provinces were divided in their approach to the budgetary provisions.

Mr. Stanfield: One out of ten may have agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I remind the Leader of the Opposition that members of parliament represent all parts of the country and there are bound to be differences of opinion between members representing areas of federal jurisidiction and others.

Mr. Nowlan: Who represents the west on the government side?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are bound to be differences of opinion between those representing provincial and federal jurisdictions. What I am saying is that these budgetary measures were introduced to respond to unilateral taxation measures introduced by several provinces, including Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia. Those provisions were introduced without prior consultation with the federal jurisdiction. I am not complaining. They acted within the scope of their jurisdiction. We are acting within the scope of our jurisdiction and we are putting these meausres before parliament.

I am saying that the conference of first ministers on April 9 and 10 can deal with the two negotiable sides of the issue. They are negotiable because we are not talking about provincial taxation on one hand and federal taxation on the other. They are negotiable because they deal with the fundamental issue of price, which will be of immense revenue consequence for the federal government, the provinces and the industries concerned, and with the issue of access to markets and guarantees as to markets. These subjects are still open for negotiation.

Mr. Andre: But they were decided on March 27.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If, as a result of that first ministers' conference, other measures must be taken, each jurisdiction will govern itself accordingly. One of the issues which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain brought forward at second reading and at committee stage had to do with a problem of certainty. It is clear, and I agree with him, that we must over the next decade get our taxation, pricing and marketing mechanisms in place so that the petroleum, natural gas and resource industries know where they will be going in the next ten years. I do not think his suggestion with respect to the proclamation vehicle adds to that certainty or resolves the issue of certainty. I think his suggestion would prolong uncertainty. I said so on second reading and I say it again. As I said, we must dissipate the climate of uncertainty which has arisen in a number of quarters for a number of reasons in connection with a number of issues.

The hon. member for Calgary South asked me what the percentage of division as between provincial and federal jurisdictions is to be in relation to the export tax. I do not have the figures with me. The province of Alberta has already made them public. I said to the hon. member in the House and in committee on several occasions that we do not consider the export tax to be part of a mature system of taxation for the next decade because it will be self-liquidating and a diminishing phenomenon as the domestic price more nearly approaches the international price.

If I may deal with the substance of the question dealing with front-end loading as raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain—

An hon. Member: Is the minister dealing with each question raised?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I want to finish my comments. I will not take very long. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain put a proposition to me and to the committee. He proposed that the government should levy no tax or royalty on new resource investment until the initial capital cost had been recovered, and that resource corporations should pay no dividends until all their debt had been retired. That is how I understood his proposal. In this way, so he argues, the total burden of debt charges over the life of the investment would be reduced. The fraction of the total operating income over the life of the investment which would accrue to holders of equity, and government, would be increased and the fraction which would apply to credit would be reduced. At any rate, that was his argument. He proposed in his speech that the federal government should take the lead in reducing the front-end loading, as he put it, of taxation. The argument was restated by the hon. member for Don Valley.

The government submits that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain did not take into consideration three important aspects of resource financing: first, that virtually all investment in oil and gas is financed on the basis of equity and not by debt capital. Actually, the petroleum industry resists debt capital.

Mr. Gillies: But this has to be changed and Syncrude is the perfect place to change it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I agree. The industry will have to consider debt capital. Debt service costs at the moment amount to less than 13 cents per barrel of oil produced in Canada, which represents less than 2 per cent of operating income. The second point is this: because exploration expenditures may be written off for tax purposes in the year in which they are incurred, because other production development costs may be written off at 30 per cent per year for tax purposes, and because exploration and development expenditures are in depletion at the rate of $1 for every $3 of expenditures, taxable corporation income is reduced by $1.33 now for every $1 of investment and most of this reduction takes place before production even begins. So the front-end loading argument is diminished considerably for these reasons. In general, no corporation income is eligible until income for tax purposes exceeds the cost of the original investment. Hence there exists, in our opinion, no front-end loading of income tax such as the hon. member suggests.

That brings to mind the argument on the other side of the coin which is that perhaps those incentives are too generous. That is what some hon. members may think. I do not want to deal with that argument. At the moment I am trying to deal with the argument raised by the hon.

member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. My third point is this: the holders of equity capital always have the option to use net earnings in any one year in a variety of ways. They can reduce outstanding debts, undertake new investments or pay dividends. In the past, the petroleum industry has financed its new investment almost exclusively with equity capital either in the form of new issues of shares or retained earnings. I agree with the hon. member for Don Valley. I think too little use has been made of debt markets to finance new investment. Less than 20 per cent of net earnings have been paid in the form of dividends.

It is true, however, that bonus payments, lease rentals and royalty payments to the provinces have represented in the past a type of front-end loading to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain referred, although this burden has been somewhat reduced recently by provincial drilling incentives, particularly in Alberta. I suggest that it is to provincial governments that the hon. member ought to direct his argument about front-end loading because the biggest front-end loader of all is the royalty concept which pays no regard to general profits and considers only production. If there is any front-end loading, the royalty concept exaggerates it.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked me a number of questions with which I will attempt to deal not suavely but as frankly as I can. His first question was, are all royalties non-deductible? The answer is yes, no matter what the rate of the royalty might be. Then he asked, how does one distinguish between royalties paid to provinces and royalties paid to corporations? My answer is, as I said to Premier Blakeney, to Mr. Cowley and to Wes Robbins, that is a contractual payment freely negotiated by both sides. So there is a difference between a royalty which is contractual and a royalty which is a disguised tax.

Then he asked me this question: How do you distinguished between a royalty paid to a provincial government and a royalty paid to a foreign jurisdiction, the royalty paid to the foreign jurisdiction being deductible? My answer is this: If a royalty to a foreign government were to be escalated against price or profit instead of being a flat payment levied against production, and that is how these payments are still made, I would have to rethink that question, just as I had to rethink the question as it applied to Canadian provinces when they changed royalties from flat payments against production to escalated payments levied against profit or price.

● (1650)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does the minister propose to allow a royalty which is paid on a flat rate per barrel in Canada, if any province decides to adopt that procedure, to have that deductible for income tax purposes?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We probably will be caught on that, Mr. Chairman. Because there are so many varieties of royalties and disguised taxation payments, I will have to look at it very carefully. It is hypothetical now, except in the maritimes. Most royalties of other provinces, except in timber, are escalated now against price or profit.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands also asked me whether any other deals had been made with the Syncrude operation. The only concession, to use his word, and I have not used it, or exemption from the budgetary provisions of November 18 available to the Syncrude joint venture is that the royalties are deductible because I allowed the regime applicable before May 6 to apply. This was because when Alberta and the four partners signed the joint venture agreement I undertook to them that the regime in force at that time with respect to royalties applied. In other words, what I am saying to him is that the earned depletion allowance, the 30 per cent for development costs, the 100 per cent for exploration costs and all the other aspects of the regime now before the committee, will be applied to the Syncrude operation. The only special arrangement has to do with deductibility of royalties.

The hon. member then asked me if it were possible for the partners to the Syncrude operation to write off whatever incentives they got from Syncrude against other income. My answer is that Syncrude is not an entity in itself. Syncrude itself bears no tax. This is a joint venture. The rules of partnership on a joint venture apply, so that any of the partners to the Syncrude arrangement can write off whatever incentives they have as a result of their participation in this joint venture or partnership against their other income. There is no difference in the taxation law as it affects the joint venture or partnership.

The hon. member for Dauphin asked me how royalties are calculated for the purpose of the B.C. Petroleum Corporation. The fair market value is determined quite easily. We take the gross market value or price of the natural gas or petroleum. We subtract the transmission or other charges of getting it to market. That figure becomes fair market value, which is considered to be the royalty value, against which the amount of the deductible provision is applied.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie asked me five questions. The answers to those questions, in order, are yes, no, no, yes, no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will be a little more explicit, to make sure I understand the questions. The first question was, what arrangement was made with respect to Syncrude? It applies only with respect to royalties. I have just given an answer to the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The second question had to do with an exemption from the earned depletion rules. The answer is they are caught by the earned depletion rules. The third question was, what about the 30 per cent depletion costs: would they be exempt from that: would it be 100 per cent? The answer is no, they would be caught by a reduction from 100 per cent to 30 per cent of development costs.

The fourth question was the same as that asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. My answer is, it is a joint venture. Of course, income is calculated on a joint venture basis. The joint venture rules apply. Syncrude in itself is not a taxpayer; it is merely a joint venture or partnership creation. It is the partners, except the province of Alberta, who are taxed. The fifth question, what is Syncrude's tax rate? My answer is that Syncrude is not a corporation. Syncrude itself is not taxed. It is the partners who are taxed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will the minister permit a question? From time to time the minister has mentioned the dividends which the government will get from Syncrude. I understand Syncrude will not pay dividends. It is not a corporation. The federal government and the governments of Alberta and Ontario are simply partners. They will pay their share of the operating costs. They will get their share of the oil. There will be no dividends paid. The Canadian people will get their return from the oil which the Canadian government receives as its share and which it can market.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is correct in the sense that if the Government of Canada is in for 15 per cent subject to a $2 billion figure more or less, to use the words of my colleague the President of the Treasury Board the federal government's obligation is for 15 per cent of the costs and its return on whatever the return is over costs is profit at the rate of 15 per cent. That 15 per cent will be satisfied either in oil or in cash, whichever is the case.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Syncrude is not a corporation, but a joint venture. From whom will they get the cash unless they sell the oil to one of the partners?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The oil will, of course, be sold to one of the partners, that is, the Alberta marketing board. Whatever return there is will be divided as the hon. member and I would divide it if we were in business together. Knowing the hon. member's shrewdness, I think we would more likely make a profit rather than endure a loss. I would not insist on an agreement with the hon. member; I would take his word.

Mr. Hogan: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am now answering questions put to me earlier, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Strathcona said here I am, going around the world trying to cushion the effects of petro-dollars. It was because of the problems in microcosm within our confederation that the policies we introduced in the past 18 months, to share the benefits and burdens of confederation, attempted to cushion within our country the same effects that some of us now, on the international scene, are having to cushion because of the movement of money and transfer of real resources.

The final question was that of the hon. member for Calgary South. I have not answered it to his satisfaction but I have answered it in the only way I can.

Mr. Hogan: I just want to get this clear. Is the minister saying Syncrude will not retain automatic depletion of up to one-third of production profits?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What I am saying is that the partners of Syncrude are obligated by the new rules of earned depletion.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, the minister spoke about calculating the export tax amounts as non-deductible because proper long-term taxation policies demanded this, and that export taxes over a period of years would in fact be eliminated or minimized. Does the minister take the view that this must be dealt with on a long-term basis, when in fact the agreement with the first ministers was on a short-term basis? It was something like only 15 months. The minister should explain why the government saw fit to deal with this export tax as non-deductible within the 15-month period when in fact it was a long-term taxation measure.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is in the bill before the committee reflecting the budget. We are looking for a mature, long-term tax arrangement as far as the federal government is concerned, although any subsequent parliament can do with it what it will. The first ministers' meeting, of course, dealt with a pricing situation which had a limited duration. On the basis of the long-term taxation arrangements now before the committee, they are proved. The Prime Minister and the premiers will deal with the short and long-term pricing and marketing arrangements. I say to the committee, let's have the taxation fabric in place; let's leave the flexibility for the revenue features attaching to price and market.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m. it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Harbours—Hamilton Harbour Commission—Request for assurance no members of parliament implicated in court proceedings; the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Harbours—Hamilton Harbour Commission—Document served on Minister of Labour to authorize search of office; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Request that responsibility be removed from Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Alleged conflict of interest.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions. Is it agreed that the bills standing before Bill C-222 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO EXTEND FRANCHISE TO INMATES OF PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved that Bill C-222, to amend the Canada Elections Act (prisoners enfrachised), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to have a matter that I have had on the order paper for some three years now discussed, if only briefly, by the House since it is a matter that touches very basically upon the whole system of incarceration as it presently exists in this country. Hon. members may be surprised to know that during the past three years a bill has stood on the order paper which would give inmates in both federal and provincial prisons the right to vote. Or, to put it negatively, perhaps members are unaware of the fact that at the present time under the Canada Elections Act those serving time in prisons or penitentiaries are disenfrachised by the act, along with children, foreigners and those who are mentally ill.

I believe the continuing and fundamental denial of political responsibility to those who are presently serving time in municipal, provincial or federal institutions to be not only a bad situation but one that consistently leads to a lack of effective rehabilitation and reincorporation back into productive society of those who, for short or long periods of time, have been removed from society to serve a sentence in one of the three institutions to which I have referred.

This whole business of depriving prisoners of certain civil rights is one that goes very far back into history. I am grateful for a brief recollection of this from a work by a professor of law, Stuart Ryan, which was published by the John Howard Society in March of 1962 under the title "The Laws of Civil and Political Rights on Conviction of a Criminal Offence". In reviewing the situation that existed in earlier times, Professor Ryan comments as follws:

Another consequence of conviction of treason or felony was attainder—

That is a new word in my lexicon.

—which was a kind of "civil death". The attainted person forfeited all his property, real and personal, and all his rights of inheritance, and his wife and descendants were deprived of all right to inherit by or through him. This loss of inheritance was supposed to be the result of "corruption of the blood". The convicted person could not sue or be sued and lost all civil and political rights. These consequences did not follow at common law on conviction of a misdemeanor or summary offence but by various statutes a number of disabilities were imposed on persons convicted of certain misdemeanors.

Professor Ryan then describes some of the medieval processes of torture that were used to extract confessions or indications of guilt on the part of an accused. I believe that conditions in the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries are in no way comparable to the world of today's inmate or to the thinking which in the present age should govern the way in which we should define the prisoner-to-society relationship. Just as there are no, or perhaps I should qualify that and say very few people who would argue that we should banish criminal offenders to Devil's Island, or impose some form of banishment that would remove them from society, both psychologically and physically, so we have gradually adjusted our views as to what is the correct and proper treatment of those who are criminal offenders and inmates of our public institutions.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The interesting thing is that while so much has happened with respect to the civil and legal rights of the inmate in today's institutions, there has not been much opportunity in the past few years to question the fundamental right and responsibility of a person to vote. Professor Ryan goes on to quote in this publication, which is now somewhat dated since it was written about 12 or 13 years ago, the fact that even at that time—and other rights have been added since—a convicted person, whether undergoing imprisonment or not, and even a person under sentence of death, may agree to buy or sell property, give or take a deed, mortgage, lease or other transfer of property, give or receive gifts and make a will. He may also receive rent, interest, dividends or other income from property and will be liable to pay income tax on it, although his enjoyment of such income will obviously be postponed until his discharge, and it must accumulate to his credit in the meantime. He may even take out a patent for an invention and grant licences to work under it. He may assign such income to his wife or dependants or to others who may enjoy it while he is in prison.

We are all aware today that there is an increasing amount of social activity among inmates in our institutions acting on their own behalf to improve the collective good both with respect to their eventual rehabilitation in and release to society. We know of specific instances where inmates today are writing and publishing books, even contributing plots and material for the production of motion pictures. Even more interestingly, we are aware of the clearly defined right in this country of an inmate in an institution to have free access to and correspondence with members of parliament.

All of this means that there has been a substantial change regarding the actual civil liberties of inmates in institutions. But the fundamental right to vote and to select or support a candidate for public office seems not to have been considered seriously up until very recently.

Mr. Alkenbrack: And it should not be.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hear one of my colleagues say that it should not be. I suppose that is the purpose of this debate, to enable us to discuss some of the aspects of this question. Surely at the present time our laws with respect to the rights of inmates are at least inconsistent and may in some way be one of the reasons for the sorry state of recidivism in this country. The fundamental question this raises is surely to what extent are inmates to be deprived of rights that are normally accorded to every citizen, and to what extent are such rights to be infringed both in terms of the public good, which is a basic responsibility we share in this institution, and in terms of the individual good of the inmate involved?

● (1710)

The fundamental fact is, of course, that we have continued in respect of our laws, in a sense, to think that a person who becomes an inmate, either for a short period of time in a provincial institution, a few weeks, or for a longer period of time in a federal institution, is in effect a non-person. In other words, we are continuing to effect some kind of rejection of that person, more than just removing him from society so he will not commit any further crime or anti-social act. We are also suggesting that we do not regard that person in a sense as a citizen in the same way in which we regard any other adult 18 years and over in our society. I think much of this is based on a continued confusion about the prime purpose of imprisonment.

What is the purpose of imprisonment? There is not the opportunity today, obviously, to debate this question but I think there are a number of unspoken assessments that exist in respect of imprisonment which we have to look at very carefully. Obviously, from the very earliest times one of the fundamental assessments of imprisonment and the loss of rights was that this was a form of retribution. If a person had committed an offence against society and against one's fellows, he should in a sense pay for this by serving a term during which he would lose a considerable number of rights, not the least of which would be his own personal freedom.

More recently, the aspect of retribution has almost entirely been rejected as being one that made no sense whatsoever. But there are other aspects of imprisonment that we still believe are important. One I hear mentioned very often is that of deterrence—that imprisonment and loss of certain rights will serve as a deterrent upon one's fellows to perform similar anti-social or criminal acts. Unfortunately, the fact is that this has not really been proven conclusively by any evidence produced recently. Indeed, most of the research that has looked at this question has come increasingly to the point of view that deterrence, at least from the point of view of imprisonment and punishment, is really not effective.

There are two other aspects I will mention but briefly, to recognize that they are in the conscience of some people in respect of imprisonment. One is of general abhorrence, where criminal acts are considered to heinous or so abnormal in the generally accepted state of social behaviour that we should indicate by terms of imprisonment or punishment that they are simply not socially accepted. That, too, does not have a great body of proof to support it in this day and age.

Finally, there is the feeling—sometimes it is used to support forms of punishment all the way up to and including capital punishment—that there must be some community catharsis, where the community has the right to release its own anti-social behaviour within the individual sentence of an individual. I believe, however, that all of these, either collectively or individually, offer substantially little factual information or support to indicate we are in fact achieving a very desired result. The fact of the matter is that if we look at our present prison system in this country, it is not one that can encourage us. We know, for instance, that it is fantastically expensive, certainly at the federal level. The average cost of maintaining an individual in a state of imprisonment federally is more than $12,000 a year.

It was suggested to me somewhat facetiously the other day, although somewhat seriously by one person I talked some of these matters over with, that perhaps the answer to our problem in respect of the great number of people serving time in federal institutions would be to give them all a guaranteed income of $10,000 to $12,000 a year, which would certainly close down a number of institutions and even save a good deal of expense for the federal treasury. That is an idea that perhaps should not be treated too seriously at the present time. One thing we should consider very seriously is the fact that in our present penitentiary situation, in fact in our situation of imprisonment generally in this country, roughly three-quarters of the people who are or will be serving time will at the conclusion of their sentence, either through final release or parole, be faced with the likelihood of being convicted of further criminal behaviour and serve more time in institutions.

We cannot stand by and beat our breasts because our system is working wonderfully well and achieving tremendous results, particularly in light of the fact that there are other experiments and other experiences in other developed countries which would indicate they are having a much higher degree of success in respect of rehabilitation and in lowering the rate of recidivism. This is mentioned in the most recent reports and we have had numerous reports over the past 25 years regarding our prison and parole systems. In the Ouimet report of 1969, in reflecting upon the performance of the prison system it is stated:

> —the clear purpose of the prison system was (1) to hold the individual inmate in custody for a period of sentence subject to remission or parole and (2) to prepare the individual for permanent return to the community as a law-abiding and contributing citizen.

I would argue that to achieve these minimal goals as set out by the Ouimet committee in 1969 we do not do so by continuing a situation in which we suggest very clearly, both explicitly and implicitly, that prisoners are non-persons. Because I have had this bill on the order paper for the last three sessions of parliament, there has been a fair bit of public response. As can be imagined, some individuals have written condemning me for the fact that I am going soft on people who are out to do society in. There are others who have offered more thoughtful comment, and I want to quote from two or three letters. Perhaps the most interesting of them comes from the Canada Junior Chamber of Commerce, which cannot be regarded as a wild-eyed radical or left-wing institution in this country. This is a letter from the chairman of the correction programs within the Canada Jaycees.

I should here like to say that the Canada Junior Chamber of Commerce has done more practical work within the penitentiaries of this country than almost any other institution I can think of, having active chapters on both the east and west coasts of this country. This individual tells me that as a result of their national meeting last summer—and he encloses a copy of the resolution put forward by the Springhill Jaycees in July, 1974, regarding the right to vote for inmates—this matter was passed by quite a large majority at the general assembly of the Canada Jaycees so that the Canada Jaycees are now officially on record as supporting the right to vote for inmates in penitentiaries.

I have had other expressions of support from individuals within the John Howard Society, the Canadian Corrections Association and also from the St. Leonard's Society, all of which have indicated that this is a matter of concern and study, and on an individual basis they support very much this initiative. I should like to read, however, from a letter from one of the inmates on the west coast who wrote me more than a year ago now. He stated:

I am an inmate at William Head institution, attending the University of Victoria. I hold several positions of trust at the university, yet I am unable to vote. Most of the prisoners at William Head probably would not be too certain how to vote but in all likelihood would vote for the party that enfranchised them.

Perhaps that would be a good argument for my colleagues opposite to take the initiative and make this the law immediately. This individual goes on to state, and I think this is of utmost importance:

I wish you success in your bill. One of the problems prisoners face is that they are rejected as much by society as by their immediate families. Many of the dismal failures leaving our institutions are products of the institution itself. A small thing like this bill can give a man self-confidence; a feeling that someone in society is still interested in him. I hope that other members realize that prisoners would not abuse the right to vote; it would only make us feel more human.

I think that is the real issue we are facing. We are not going to solve all the problems that exist in respect of our penal system in this country or the whole criminal justice system as it now exists. I am well aware of the fact that there are a great many problems and a great many changes that must take place with respect to the whole system of incarceration and the way in which we treat those who perform anti-social or criminal acts. But I share the view expressed recently by Mr. Chief Justice Berger of the United States Supreme Court when he said that the prison system is the most neglected, the most crucial and probably the least understood phase of the administration of justice.

● (1720)

I believe that if we were to recognize, through this rather modest change in the Canada Elections Act, the right and responsibility of inmates to participate in federal elections in this country, we would be taking one step forward to publicize and explain to people the extended changes that must take place if we are to achieve the two essential goals set forth by the Ouimet committee, that is, the ultimate protection of society and the rehabilitation of the inmate directly involved.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine): Madam Speaker, the bill introduced by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), although having its place in the current reform process of our penal institutions precisely because it comes within a rehabilitation plan for common criminals, brings me to ask a number of sensitive questions originating from the very foundations of our present system and ultimately ending in a certain notion I have of the reintegration of ex-inmates in our society.

The measure proposed is clearly a liberal one in the ethymological sense of the word and I am personally very pleased to participate in this debate because the proposal questions certain basic principles concerning the treatment of inmates. Those principles gave rise to strong polemics ever since the beginning of the world, that is the retribution-vs-rehabilitation alternative. Retribution, as the hon. member for Egmont explained earlier, is designed through chastisement only to punish a criminal and keep him from relapsing.

The first question that comes to my mind is why? Why allow individuals who admittedly rejected certain values accepted by society by transgressing ad libitum the provisions of the Criminal Code which is in fact or should be only the reflection of said values? So why allow them to avail themselves of that basic right that is the right to vote? Why allow those individuals to participe in the decision-making and election process designed to delegate to a government the power to regulate that society they often reject but that actually serves them?

Why finally punish on the one hand and offer on the other an opportunity to participate actively in social life? All the elements to the answer are found in the word rehabilitation.

Up to about fifty years ago little case was made of the plight of inmates when they reintegrated the free world following a stay in a penitenciary. The only true philosophy of the present system was to have the offender pay for his mistakes and make him pay so much he would not relapse. It is the retributive notion of sentencing, and all experts in the treatment of delinquency now agree that new avenues have to be explored for the treatment of criminals in view of the current tendency among experts in penal sciences and delinquency to consider the criminal not as a deviate but rather as a victim of a deficient psycho-social conditioning.

I used the word "treatment" because that is what we are dealing with here, in fact, since the criminal is indeed sick from a social point of view. In spite of much good will, rehabilitation in Canada has not given expected results, for various reasons it would take too long to go into; from this admission to wholesale condemnation there is but one step, we must at all cost refrain from taking it. Without going into lengthy comments on the causes of delinquency, I should still like to quote an excerpt from the book written by Richard Cobetz, The Police Role and Juvenile Delinquency. I quote:

[English]

No one element can explain delinquent behaviour. Man's nature is so complicated and his total environment so intricate that it is impossible to understand delinquent motivation by examining only one part of its totality.

Delinquent acts must be understood in terms of many variables, each influencing the individual in varying degrees of intensity in a particular situation at a certain time.

[Translation]

This short excerpt indicates clearly that the criminal must be looked upon not as a marked man but simply as someone who was poorly conditioned by his milieu, his environment, which eventually led him to act in reprehensible fashion, either through revolt or cynicism.

Consequently, we see that the concept of rehabilitation is still in its infancy, that we still have a long way to go before the harmful elements which condition man are eliminated. Indeed, our penal institutions, though making praiseworthy efforts to train the prisoners, have still not explored in depth all avenues open to treat the delinquents.

I feel that the Canadian public is willing, to a certain extent, perhaps not to do away with the element of retribution in the sentence, but at least to graft on it the positive aspects of rehabilitation and all it entails: parole, day parole, probation and the hiring of former inmates. Here, our responsibility, that of the federal government, is considerable and we quickly understood our responsibilities in that field. Rehabilitation also involves community impacts on prison life, vocational training of inmates through easier visits and within the same concept of non-rejection by the community of prison people, and also voting rights for inmates.

The second question arises by inference. How? Prisoner voting must remain within the other qualification criteria set forth in the Canada Elections Act. The main objection to such a liberalization move is the residence concept. Where is an inmate's residence? His last permanent residence or the prison itself? In either case impossible problems arise. First, most prisoners have no permanent home, and second, after they have been in prison for four or five years, they no longer have community links with their original abode. And often they live away from their family. On the other hand, if they elect domicile at the penitentiary, how do multiple transfers from one institution to another fit in, and in what way can we minimize the enormous impact of massive prison voting in one constituency?

More than a simple question of procedure is implied here. It is very well to give prisoners an opportunity to have an interest in public life and actively state their preference for such or such government but this should not entail an abrupt change in our electoral habits. And then, what would we do in the case of provincial institutions? Because the administration of justice is to a large extent on provincial responsibility. There should therefore be a consensus among all levels of government. There are indeed so many obstacles in the way of granting prisoners voting rights, not on principles because I am in complete agreement there with the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), but as far as practical procedures are concerned, I suggest Bill C-222 in its present formulation cannot be accepted at this point.

Let me indicate I certainly anticipate the day when the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) will rise to announce an overall reform policy for our Canadian penitential system, as the Governor of California did recently, in order that permanent status be given to the rehabilitation principle and that at long last the effective means be taken to translate rehabilitation into action for those who have an earnest desire for it. I see a double-headed penitentiary system including on one hand, standard penitentiaries for hardened criminals who emphatically refuse any rehabilitation or treatment for effective individual revalorization and, on the other hand, a new rehabilitation system based on reconditioning for delinquents who would freely accept a complex and sophisticated program for the effective and generally final reintegration in the community. Those delinquents would be willing to follow very strict rules for a set period during which they could fulfil their vocational or educational yearnings and they would be treated accordingly, because they would then be given all necessary mental or physical tools for the implementation of those programs.

Our present system indeed has a serious flaw, because it is very difficult to motivate the inmates of our penitentiaries. This condition is the direct consequence of daily contacts among unworthy individuals who are interested only in getting out to relapse into crime and it is moreover useless to try to regenerate offenders who have realized their mistakes and are willing to mend their ways. Such promiscuity generates an unhealthy atmosphere which acts as a negative counterpart to the beneficial principle of rehabilitation.

Here now is the last question to be answered: Who should be granted the right to vote? With a dual type of penitentiary system in mind, I would suggest it makes no sense to allow inmates who are totally maladjusted to vote, for all they care anyway. On the other hand, with the prospect of a possible rehabilitation still in mind, that privilege should be granted inmates who enroll in the training program, and I believe the above described impact on the electoral process and the risk associated with it would then become far less significant and would also be far more welcomed by all parties.

As a conclusion, common law convicts should be granted voting rights in so far as that innovation would be part of a global reform of our penitentiary system, a reform which should be undertaken and carried out without delay.

I would however make a distinction as to the nature of the crime. To this day offenders have been deprived of their voting rights owing only to their personality since it was considered that their conviction made it obvious that they were not to enjoy the same civil rights as ordinary citizens.

With my system, the granting of voting rights would be geared to a certain extent not to the personality as such of the offender, but to his desire to resume the position he might be led to keep up after completion of his training period. And I would add a supplementary restriction based this time on the character of the offence. I consider indeed that with respect to any offence against the state, such as sedition, spying, bribery attempts on public officers, etc., convicts should be deprived of their voting and other related rights throughout their terms. For indeed no one who deliberately acted in such a way as to undermine the foundations of our democracy should be granted such a basic privilege.

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for raising this subject at a time when it is not particularly popular to do so. I think it is to the hon. member's great credit that he raises the subject of penal institutions, and particularly the conditions of convicts within them, at a time when there is very clearly a backlash in the country against prison laxity. I must say that it does the hon. member and the House great credit that we are now debating how we treat prisoners.

The question of granting the franchise to inmates of a federal prison has within it some inherent technical problems, which the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) has raised, but which I think are not insurmountable. If prison inmates voted in the riding where a prison is situated that would mean that all of us who come from ridings containing prisons would have to spend much time there, trying to make sure our vote was solid, rather than doing other duties and this might be a problem. The absentee ballot, however, if it were incorporated into the federal elections act, would solve that problem.

The real questions we have to ask ourselves are whether we should deprive those who act in an anti social way and violate the laws of this country of the right to vote; the reason we deprive them of the right to vote; and whether giving them the right to vote will provide them with any assistance in their rehabilitation, or will give protection to society in any way. I would argue that by providing inmates of federal institutions with the right to vote we would start them on the very slow road back to a feeling of responsibility for society.

Most of those now in federal institutions have probably never bothered to vote. Very few of them cared enough about society before they were charged and convicted, and usually they have a long list of convictions. Very few of them ever bothered to exercise their ballot because they really did not care. One of the reasons they are in prison is that they do not care. Our duty, in terms of protecting society and rehabilitating these offenders, is to give them something to care about.

It is not mandatory that they vote, and they may still have that same attitude and decide not to vote. But there is no purpose, for the protection of society or to punish the prisoner, in denying a person the option of voting, whether or not he wishes to vote. To encourage an inmate to take some interest in the political process so that by the time he is released he has a chance to continue that interest, it seems to me does a great deal to improve conditions within prison to some extent, and increases the amount of liaison the prisoner has with society, which is one of the key questions in this whole problem of what to do with prisoners.

I am so tired of listening to people on open line shows talk about how we coddle prisoners in our institutions. I do not think they have ever gone and seen maximum security institutions, the segregated cells in the B.C. pen, or in Millhaven or St. Vincent de Paul. Those are places of horror of which this country should be ashamed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: We do not coddle prisoners in this country, but we do a number of things which I think are wrong. One of the things we do with prisoners in maximum security prisons is to bring social workers in to tell them that it is not their fault that they are there; that it is society which put them there; and that all the prisoner has to do is blame his problems on society and he will be fine. I think that contributes nothing whatsoever to the rehabilitation of those who have offended. The main reasons they are there maybe societal reasons. Perhaps they got a rotten break from society. It is our duty to improve those conditions which send people there, but once they are there it is no good telling them it is not their fault.

I believe that a person incarcerated, particularly in a maximum security institution, must come to the realization that he has a responsibility for his own actions. It is pointless for those involved in progressive penology to avoid the consequences of that particular issue, and it really is the issue of whether we ask those in jail to feel guilty for their sins.

I suppose it is almost a religious thing. The hon. member for Egmont might be interested in the religious significance. In any event surely it is time we ask those who commit offences against society to feel guilt and a sense of personal responsibility for what they have done. In that process surely it is incumbent on a civilized society to treat those people in a civilized way and to put them into institutions, if they have to be under security, under conditions which are reasonable and at least modestly comfortable, instead of the kind of dark ages institutions we continue to have across this country. These institutions contribute nothing whatsoever to rehabilitation, and in fact contribute to the terrible recidivism rate we have because if inmates were angry with society before they arrived there, by the time they are released, they are spitting nails.

● (1740)

I had the opportunity, along with Your Honour and several others in the House, to tour some of the maximum security institutions in this country a year or so ago. Mr. Francis Fox was with us and he said something which I thought was very astute—"We are bound to come to the conclusion that there is a war going on here, three groups at war within a single institution—convicts, guards and administration." It seems to me that communication between these groups is an absolute prerequisite. We should at least see that there is communication and a general acceptance of the approach we take.

The approach of the guards, in general, is punitive; they believe people are there to be controlled and to some extent punished. Incidentally, that view makes their job a little easier.

The position taken by the administration is often a very progressive one, but they lack the mechanism by means of which they could work out their ideas. I might point out, in this connection, that we are hiring guards at salaries which should make everyone in this House ashamed. We are hiring people to go into situations often of real danger at wages one would not offer to a hamburger stand attendant. No wonder some of these guards feel we are not interested in their situation or in their problems. They see themselves regarded merely as turnkeys, and that is what they become. Until we take a realistic look at salary levels, until those levels are substantially increased—and I am thinking in the range of 40 per cent or 50 per cent—we shall make no progress in the present system.

The bill before us calls for an important step in inculculating a sense of responsibility. It is valuable in terms of rehabilitation. Recognition of a sense of responsibility is an important step and voting is part of this process. In British Columbia, when dealing with juvenile offenders the intention now, is to divert the offender from the prison system entirely while making him responsible for compensating the victim—he comes face to face with the person in society he has damaged, and when he does so he begins to feel a sence of responsibility. In my view this is the beginning of the rehabilitation process. I hope such a program can be carried out in areas of serious crime among adult offenders.

Finally, might I express the view that it is not right to continue to imprison people under the Criminal Code for failing to pay fines. A person with money, a person with a position, has no trouble; another fellow, a man who does not have a job, goes to jail. There are many people presently serving sentences who did not have enough to pay a fine. Most of them are native Indians whom it was completely unnecessary to send to jail. I think it is time we amended the code to give those who cannot pay fines under the present system an alternative opportunity to compensate their victims or repay some kind of debt to society.

Again I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Egmont for introducing in this House a subject which, though unpopular, is very important to the health of our society. I hope that the bill will not be talked out; it could be amended in committee with respect to the technical objections raised by the hon. member for Lafontaine.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Madam Speaker, in discussing any matters dealing with the inmates of penitentiaries we must be careful to avoid any atavistic impulse to punish and, indeed, to overpunish offenders. In fact, in what I like to think of as a more enlightened society it is imperative to steer a course well clear of a vindictive and punitive approach to prison reform. Our main emphasis must be rehabilitation and reformation. It is also important that while aiming at these goals we do not allow ourselves to become permissive to the point of exaggeration.

We must bear in mind that these people have not been convicted because they respected the laws of this country but because they defied them. In this context I would quote the Canadian Bill of Rights which affirms that men and institutions remain free "only when freedom is founded upon the respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law." Our society, through the concept of parole, now gives prisoners the opportunity to prove their new respect for its values and the rule of law. Indeed, I believe those on parole are given the right to vote. This is an enlightened approach to penology and I welcome it.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) raises another point with which I find myself in considerable sympathy. He refers to the degree of crime and the degree of punishment. It might well be that we ought to review the wording of that clause. I do not think, for example, that I would readily grant the privilege of voting—and it is a privilege—to anyone who committed treason, that is to say an act by which the guilty party sought to destroy our country. Then again it would seem pointless to give the vote to anyone serving a life sentence, for the reason that he is permanently removed from society and is therefore unable to improve it. I would be inclined, also, to include drug pushers in this category on the ground that, in their greed for money, they destroyed minds and in so doing the very fabric of society.

There are those, however, who are guilty of lesser crimes not so much by deliberate choice but by force of circumstances. I would use every means in our power to help these people in their rehabilitation, although I am not convinced that granting them the right to vote while still in prison would in itself facilitate the rehabilitation process.

My main objection to the Bill is, however, more ethical than legal. Clause 20 of the Canada Elections Act states that anyone who is qualified as an elector may be a candidate—I must say that if one of the people we are considering were elected I could foresee some interim difficulty in his taking his seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Appolloni: We would also have to look closely at the question of the compilation of the voters' list which is, of course, a public document. I feel this could cause real hardship and embarrassment not only for the inmate but for his family, especially where publicity surrounding the initial trial has long since been forgotten.

I am also concerned as to how we would determine the residence of an inmate for voting purposes. In the absence of special procedures for determining the ordinary place of residence the results in some constituencies might well depend upon the inmate vote, and I do not believe this would be desirable.

I feel I would be remiss if I did not draw attention to another and perhaps more pressing problem. Others among us cannot exercise the right to vote because of the sheer complexity of our system of proxy voting. I refer to the elderly and to the severely disabled. I stress that these are not people who have deliberately chosen to live on the fringe of society. Indeed, all too often they have paid an inhuman price for their very contribution to our society. Yet, as I said, the very complexity of our proxy system all too often denies them their rights and always denies them their right to a secret ballot. For the sake of these people I urge the adoption of a mail ballot system.

● (1750)

In conclusion, although I agree in principle with the spirit of penal reform as expressed in this Bill, I do not agree that this Bill is suitable legislation.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I had not intended speaking in this debate but feel compelled to make a few remarks in opposing this bill. The bill before the House seeks to amend the Canada Elections Act, which is probably one of the oldest acts on our statute books. It seeks to enfranchise prisoners. I point out that a prisoner is disenfranchised because he cannot fulfil certain functions. For example, he cannot be an elector, since an elector can hold office. How can a person serving time in prison hold office and perform the duties of office? As the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) asked, what would be the address of a prisoner holding office, assuming that is possible? If this bill were to pass, certain prisons could become constituencies and Madam Speaker might be called on to recognize "the hon. member for Millhaven". Millhaven happens to be in my constituency.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) said prisons are places of horror. That is not altogether correct. At certain times and under certain conditions, for instance if there is trouble in penal institutions, prisons may become places of horror. But Millhaven, which is certainly one of our most modern prisons built with the most up-to-date concepts in mind, is not normally a place of horror. A prison like that can be a place of harmony and bring profit to those serving time in it, as well as to guards and members of the administration.

The hon. member for Lafontaine also made the point that prisoners are not non-persons. Nobody says they are. On the other hand most of us think that convicted prisoners must lose some of their rights, such as the right to personal liberty, to family association, and the right to the franchise, in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: There are only a few more minutes left, Madam Speaker, but very well, I will accept the hon. member's question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, in view or comments made a moment ago and again recently by the hon. member, may I ask him if he is aware that in Manitoba, in the first provincial election after the 1919 strike, certain persons—I believe there were three—were elected while in prison? They walked out of prison and into the legislature. One of them later became mayor of the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Alkenbrack: That was certainly to the later credit of those persons and to him who became mayor. Of course the hon. member comes from Winnipeg. There must be some reason behind the fact that certain people were elected in prison, and then walked out of prison and took their seats in whatever body they had been elected as members. I imagine that the present provisions of the Canada Elections Act did not apply. I do not know why this happened. The provisions of the act could not have applied, or what happened would not have been possible.

The Canada Elections Act is on our statute books, and has remained there for a number of years, obviously for a good reason. I oppose the enfranchising of prisoners. I cannot see any advantage at this time in enfranchising prisoners; neither can I see any advantage in paying them the minimum wage which this Government proposes to do soon. We are told this is only an experiment. I think it is an experiment which is being conducted at the expense of the citizens of Canada who have been able to stay out of prison and retain their freedom. May I call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): As the hour appointed for private members' business has expired, does the House agree that we should revert to committee of the whole, and then call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As it is six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: When the committee rose, clause 4, with an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, were under consideration.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I did not know word had gotten around that I would be speaking on this particular amendment. The interest is somewhat surprising. I know that on other occasions I have looked at the other side and have seen only the member speaking, the leader and few others.

I want to respond to a comment made this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I think he missed the point when he alleged that the Petrosar project would somehow be detrimental to the development of the petrochemical industry in Alberta.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not think the Petrosar plant has anything to do with the amendment on which we are now ready to vote.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I see the hon. member for Calgary Centre did not pay as close attention to the debate this afternoon as I did. I am somewhat surprised, because it was one of his members who raised the Petrosar project and the development of the petrochemical industry. I thought he was in error, and that is why I intend to respond to his comments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is having difficulty hearing the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Cullen: I thank you for your courtesy, Mr. Chairman, which you have seen fit to extend to me. Unhappily, it is not coming from—

Mr. Roche: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If the parliamentary secretary intends to kill 15 or 20 minutes waiting for his colleagues to return from dinner, would he mind not responding to just one sentence from my speech today and answer some of the real questions raised this afternoon? Would he answer my question as to how the Minister of Finance can reconcile his position as chairman of the IMF committee, trying to cushion the effect of petro dollars, with his responsibilities in pushing through this bill which will do so much damage to the development of regional an economic expansion in Canada?

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member will agree that the point he is raising is far from being a point of order. If he wishes to argue some of the implications of the legislation, he will be invited to take the floor after the parliamentary secretary has completed his remarks.

Mr. Cullen: I thank the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona for his intervention. I did intend to deal with other aspects of his address. He made specific reference to Petrosar. I thought he did it in a serious vein, without filibustering and wanted some comment from this side on this subject. It seemed that through his comments he was doing precisely what he said he did not want the government to do, namely, to act in some form of divisive way.

The hon. member's argument could have had some merit back in 1967 or 1968 when the petrochemical industry decided there was not room for a world-scale plant in Canada and Canada could not support it. As a result of the problem that was faced by the petrochemical industry, I am happy to say that the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, established a committee to look into the problems of the petrochemical industry as they affected both western Canada and eastern Canada. Coming out of that was an excellent report which, as the president of Petrosar said only recently, indicated there is now room, and by the end of the 1980's will be room for three world-scale plants in Canada, including the one in Sarnia, Petrosar. The Dow-Dome operation, or something comparable to it, should be built in Alberta. There will be spin-off industries from that.

I do not think there is any necessity to fight among the petrochemical companies or the provinces. I think adequate opportunity will be given the petrochemical industry to develop. For hon. members to say we should not have Petrosar because it will not operate to the benefit of the petrochemical industry in Alberta is just not in accordance with the facts. The hon. member had better update his history of the petrochemical industry and read what is said by the people involved in that particular enterprise.

● (2010)

The other question raised by the hon. member had to do with how the Minister of Finance could dovetail his approach in Canada with the one he has had to adopt at the International Monetary Fund. The minister handled that question this afternoon. I think the hon. member was in his seat when the Minister of Finance responded, and I think responded appropriately. The problem is that the OPEC countries have these many billions of dollars which in some way have to be recycled. We are facing a situation where a province has many millions of dollars in its coffers, appropriately enough, and we have to decide how to handle them. It is the responsibility of the federal government to see the money is used not only to the advantage of Alberta but also that it is not used to the disadvantage of other provinces or to the disadvantage of the Canadian economy. Surely that is the minister's role as Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cullen: I thought for the moment, Mr. Chairman, that another cabinet minister had walked in. I knew they were very popular, but I did not realize how popular. It must have been a good party over the supper hour.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona misses the point if he feels that the stance taken by the Minister of Finance in Canada and that taken by him at the International Monetary Fund are not consistent. In point of fact we have the advantage of a Minister of Finance who operates, and is asked to operate, as the chairman of an interim committee in the field of international economics. Not only does he chair this committee but he chairs what is probably one of the most important and strongest committees in the international economic field. This is not only to his credit, but in a vicarious way all Canadians can take pleasure from the fact that a Canadian minister of finance was asked to chair this particular interim committee. I have enjoyed the privilege—

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think we have had a very useful, instructive and entertaining debate on this issue, or we did until about 15 minutes ago. We are now ready to have this matter tested in this committee.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: You people are holding up the committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What arrogance.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair also has a point of privilege; it would like to hear the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: I want to say to the Minister of Finance, and to those other hon. gentlemen who are intervening in this debate, that we are prepared to bring this matter to a vote. However, if they are determined to continue this debate, it may continue for some time. I want to say the decision rests with them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): More threats.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. Now that he is back fit and fresh for work, the hon. member for Peace River wants to pose as an authority on the time we spent considering this bill. I would like to indicate to him that, during his absence, when there was no leader to conduct the debate in the House, we were giving Bill C-49 in-depth consideration—

The Chairman: I understand very well, but still—

[English]

Two wrongs do not make a right. I think the hon. member's point of privilege is no more valid than the one raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at my hon. friend from Peace River. He has not enjoyed the advantage I have had of sitting here and listening to all the speeches from the other side of the House on almost every clause. I was moved on more than one occasion to interject a comment but I bit on my tongue. I listened very carefully to some of the suggestions made on the other side, some of which reflected in appropriate amendments.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Let us get on with the vote.

Mr. Cullen: Having extended that courtesy, as I have over this long period of time, I think one should be entitled to make a few comments on some of the representations that have been made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: You have been up for 20 minutes now and you have not said anything yet.

Mr. Cullen: Once again, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, who is half asleep, says that I have not said anything. I thought we would hear from the hon. member again. In view of the pressure of the public press I thought we would have him bounding to his feet asking more questions on allegations that are unfounded.

I think that the department, through the Minister of Finance, has endeavoured to listen to each and every address. The minister responded this afternoon to many of the questions raised, not only by those who are making such noise now but by the quiet members of the New Democratic Party who asked questions and, I think, were sincerely looking for answers. This afternoon the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie was so stunned at the excellence of the responses that he nodded his head in agreement with the minister, indicating that he was correct in what he said.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is what astonished him.

Mr. Cullen: The problem is that hon. members are not prepared to listen. We sat here for two weeks, and when the minister was responding that hon. member was sitting in his seat. It will come as a surprise to no one, Mr. Chairman, that I intend to vote against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. Surely what the industry is looking for is the passage of this bill so it can live and work with it. There are many advantages built into the bill, something which even the industry is prepared to concede, even though members opposite are not.

● (2020)

We have moved a series of amendments, many of which have been technical, but I suggest with respect that if this amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is allowed to carry the industry will again wonder where it stands. If we pass this bill and do not proclaim these clauses until some date after April 15, what will be the situation? If we proclaim the clauses after April 15 does the effect go back to the May 6 budget or the November 18 budget, or just what will be the situation? How are these energy companies and producers supposed to operate in this state of limbo, wondering where they stand, how they should plan, what the provinces will do, and what the federal government will do? Surely the industry deserves better than being left in the kind of limbo suggested by the mover of this amendment.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: You have got your trip, what are you working on now?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I would hope that your ruling of sometime ago, which somewhat shortened my intervention on the point of order being discussed by the hon. member for Peace River, was not the result of some preference to a member with the seniority of that hon. member for Peace River. I do not intend to allege that, but I wanted to point out that I thought that the point of order was not well taken. In my riding the people are beginning to feel that the delay tactics we have watched during the debate on this bill are now turning against those who are using them, and they are now trying to rush the bill through the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, now that the government whips have awakened all the halt, the lame, the blind and the others on that side who have spoken to hold up these proceedings long enough to get a majority, let us get on with the vote and get done with this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I should have recognized that something was up when I saw that unholy alliance being formed when the hon. member for Calgary South was talking with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Before recognizing the parliamentary secretary I must advise the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance who had the floor, of the fact that his time has just expired.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, in view of the comments—

Mr. Fairweather: Speak up.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In view of the comment—

An hon. Member: Speak French!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referring to our side—he was present in the House a few moments ago—I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact for almost two months he has not attended the sittings of the House.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, may I say quite sincerely that I do not blame the responsible parliamentary secretary for holding the floor until there were enough people here to carry the vote, but I would ask my hon. friends in the House to remember that this, after all, is the parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Isn't that what we were last week?

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

An hon. Member: Don't be sanctimonious.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You're a pinhead, Macdonald.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I am not trying to be sanctimonious. As I said, I do not criticize the parliamentary secretary at all. In fact I should have thought there was something wrong with him had he not held the floor. I just think that things have gone far enough and we should remember where we are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the point made by the hon. leader of the opposition is well taken. Hon. members have as much responsibility in this House and to this country as does the Chair, and I suggest it is not the function of hon. members to ask the Chair to rule on abuses and the extravagance of certain speeches. I think it is the responsibility of every member of the House of Commons to keep up our standards. This is the responsibility of everyone here, whether he sits in the chair or on one side or the other of this chamber.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying now for at least a month or a month and a half to speak on this bill, and I welcome the opportunity tonight to say a few words about resource taxation and the relationship between resources in this country and the federal and provincial governments.

There has been a great deal of small bickering going on in the last six or eight weeks that this bill has been kicking around, but I think a number of things have been missed. It is true that, under the British North America Act, resources for the most part are the preserve of the provinces. However, I think we must begin to think of ourselves in a very different way than we have in the past.

We are told that in the next 10 years capital investment intentions amount to about $107 billion. In today's terms that amounts to the construction of 35 St. Lawrence Seaways over the same period of time. That is why I suggest we cannot afford the luxury in this country of all kinds of separate jurisdictions divvying up resource income. This $107 billion will go into such projects as the James Bay project which will cost $15 billion, the Mackenzie Valley gas pipe line, which is supposed to cost $10 billion, and possibly an oil line which will cost $10 billion or $15 billion. This is what we are really talking about when we have before us bills concerning royalties or taxes in the long term in this area.

I believe firmly that the federal government and the provinces must come together to deal with this large amount of money, which may by now total $120 billion or more. I think that this is what hon. members should talk about in this debate on royalties, the kinds of things that happen when this sort of money is being spent, the kinds of things that are happening, for instance, in the province of Quebec today when simultaneous activities are talking place such as the massive effort in the James Bay area and the preparation for the Olympics in Montreal. The impact of such activities on the construction industry and on capital funds is tremendous.

One must consider that the $107 billion will amount to a doubling of energy capital expenditures over the 10 year period. In other words, 3 per cent will be doubled to 6 per cent of the gross national expenditure. This represents something like 15 per cent of the total capital dollars, and 15 per cent will be doubled to 30 per cent in the course of years in an economy that is fairly tight. This will inevitably create serious problems, and it is to this we should be addressing ourselves.

In my opinion, and I think in the opinion of many people, this $107 billion to $115 billion to $120 billion is a ridiculous sum. Somewhere along the line governments in this country, the federal government representing all the people of Canada, and the provincial governments, must try to reach a consensus. They must sit down and say, "No, we cannot take that route". At some point along the line some of these projects must be cut off. When we are talking about resources, this will be the real crunch.

Let us take a look at some of these projects. Some of them are very important. Syncrude for instance, is absolutely vital. We must have a list of priorities, and I would put Syncrude at the top of the list because we must continue to develop oil where it is found. Some of the other projects, such as the nuclear enrichment plant, I would put low on the list because it is of little merit to Canadians. Another project, such as the diversion of the Churchill River into the South Indian lake, I would put very low on the list, especially if the mighty Churchill river is to be dried up in the process.

Some hon. Members: What are you saying?

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Churchill rising on a point of order?

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I want to clarify one point. It is not the diversion of the South Indian river into the Churchill, it is the diversion of the Churchill river.

Mr. McRae: I was talking about the mighty Churchill river being diverted into the South Indian lake and down into lake Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: No, no, you are still wrong.

Mr. McRae: The mighty Churchill river is being diverted into the Nelson river.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McRae: Some projects must be reconsidered on the basis of our need. Do we in effect need that diversion? What will that electricity be generated for? Will it be generated for domestic use or for sale to the United States?

Mr. Epp: You don't know what you are talking about.

The Chairman: Order, please. We are experiencing some difficulty in trying to keep order. The hon. member raised a point of order which the Chair did not hear because of problems with communication. However, I think that if hon. members would address themselves to the Chair instead of directly to one another, it would simplify matters and might bring more progress to the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest one or two things that we must do in order to cut this $107 billion down to a manageable amount. One of my suggestions has to do with the conservation of resources, a matter which has been discussed in the House for the last few weeks. Another has to do with the cutting back of exports. I am not just talking about the export of oil and gas, because this has been dealt with already. I am talking about the export of electricity not only in the pure form but in semi-processed form as in enriched uranium. Somewhere along the line we must take a long look at how we are going to cut this $107 billion.

Some hon. Members: Time is up.

Mr. McRae: I could go on for a long time, but first I would like to ask the minister if he would comment on the long term effects of these royalties and on whether or not he forsees a situation where the federal government will have to cut back on some of the projects. I would like him to comment also about working with the provinces and sharing the results of these royalties with all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): As I listened to the hon. member for Fort William I realized that he knows nothing of this subject which he spoke about, namely, the diversion of water in the Churchill constituency. If he did his homework he would know that the federal government is involved in this project, as is the provincial government. I think he should do his homework before he starts running off at the mouth on things that he knows nothing about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McRae: I want to say that I may have been mistaken, but I must say that for two or three years I have been greatly concerned about the Churchill river, and also about the fact that the Indian people in that area have not been given any guarantees or recompense for the flooding. I am also concerned that a mighty river like the Churchill will be dried up.

The Chairman: Order, please. Although part of the question might have been out of order, it is certain that the answer is also.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal directly with the amendment before the House—

An hon. Member: Take your time.

Mr. Blais: —because, to my mind, the whole debate, which has now lasted for over 12 days, hinges on this amendment to Bill C-49. Indeed, the amendment, moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) is a manifestation of the wishes of the Progressive Conservative members from Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, you will remember that, last year, in 1974, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) introduced in the House a bill on oil administration intended to legislate, and set up the system agreed upon by all the provinces and the federal government. At that time, the hon. members from Alberta wanted to oppose the adoption of that bill because they feared somewhat the provisions of the Turner budget announced for the month of May.

Once that budget was introduced by the government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), they opposed the bill on oil administration and the budget because, under the circumstances, neither the bill nor the budget were acceptable to the hon. members from Alberta because those nice gentlemen considered that the federal government was intervening needlessly in a field of provincial jurisdiction. Which was absolutely untrue. And why do I say that it is untrue, Mr. Chairman? Simply because, even though the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democrats have tried again and again to bring the people to their ideas, they failed completely. They have had all the chance in the world, Mr. Chairman, because since May 1974, we have been discussing only these blasted provisions in the House. Since 1974, we have been making legislation only in the interest of the province of Alberta. In spite of all the respect I have for that province and its people, I do not think the House ought to think only of them.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that if you gave us another fortnight, we would still be discussing this same amendment.

[English]

I appreciated the comments of the Chair a while back, that each and every one of us has an obligation to this House. I have been strongly advocating Standing Order 75C to limit the debate in this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: Both this piece of legislation, Bill C-49, and Bill C-32, which has been long delayed, are essential for the distribution of wealth in this country and the proper administration—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I can understand the silence on the part of hon. members from eastern Canada. I can understand that because it is detrimental to their own interests, to refuse to pass Bill C-32 and the provisions of this particular legislation. There is no question that it is because the revenue for transfer payments which are made to the eastern provinces and to other parts of Canada comes in part from the natural resources of this country.

Let no one be fooled about the effect of the resources and the amounts derived from them. The province of Ontario has nearly doubled its tax revenue in the past year as a result of resource taxation and royalties. The province of Alberta has salted away over $2 billion this year as a result of royalties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: If I can shout loud enough I might run for the Tory Party leadership.

Mr. Nowlan: You had better run after the Prime Minister's plane.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: That is probably the only way hon. members can distinguish me from the hon. member for Calgary South who, I am told, bears a remarkable resemblance to me—but only in appearance, Mr. Chairman. It has nothing to do with my own point of view and philosophy, I can guarantee that.

I am receiving a lot of assistance from the backbenchers on this side of House. We have been neglected as a result of the irresponsibility of hon. members opposite.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Calgary South rising on a point of order?

Mr. Bawden: A question of privilege, but I will withdraw it and let the hon. member continue, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nowlan: Just on a very brief point of order, I thought when the hon.member for Nipissing began to speak that he was looking for a pair to cover the fact that he may be away a few days on a trip to the European countries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: But now, having listened to him for ten or fifteen minutes, I know that he will be able to participate in the debates even over in Europe, and we will be bound to hear him here.

The only question I wanted to ask the hon. member for Nipissing is whether this fillibuster continues due to the fact that the minister in charge of housing does not yet have his housing bill ready to proceed, or is it because hon. members on the government side have not yet shown up?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order, please. I really do not want to reflect on any hon. member, and certainly not on the last remark, but I think that the committee should consider the proceedings here this evening. I think hon. members should practise a little more what they preach and I hope that this debate will proceed in a more orderly manner so that the Chair can hear what is said.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, in view of the indication that the Chair is having a difficult time hearing me, I will try to speak up.

● (2050)

[Translation]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have a lot of respect for the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) but I think he is mistaken when he suggests the amendment involves people from Alberta only.

Yesterday I read in the House a telegram from my area in northwestern Quebec from Falconbridge mining asking me not to repeal clause 4 of Bill C-49 but to resume consideration after the forth coming meeting between the first ministers of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I think mining companies in the area represented by the hon. member for Nipissing are exactly in the same case and are asking the federal government to take its time and to meet with the provinces before approving Bill C-49.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Témiscamingue who was recognized on a point of order knows as I do that he could have contributed to the debate in a perhaps more effective way had he waited for the hon. member for Nipissing to complete his remarks. I think hon. members will agree with me that the committee is not making rapid progress tonight. We are hearing points of order and questions of privilege.

As I said earlier, it is not up to the Chair to limit or restrict the right to speak of hon. members but hon. members have as much responsibility as the Chair to ensure that the procedure we must follow and which governs our proceedings be respected, otherwise progress would be impossible.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, for the information of the hon. member for Témiscamingue I will say to him that there are no mines in the riding of Nipissing, but that is not why I took such a position. Indeed, several industries in my constituency rely on the mining industry.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that mining companies should be subjected to double taxation. Indeed, an agreement should be concluded between the provinces concerned and the federal government. I entirely agree about that; readjustments are probably necessary. I have to say so.

However, the hon. member for Témiscamingue who I know is a sincere centralist, a first-rate federalist who has been our defender in Quebec for almost a generation knows that at the federal level the prime responsibility for the good of the community rests with the federal government. When the provincial and federal governments do not see eye to eye, we must as federalists give the benefit of the doubt to the federal government.

I realize that effectively we will find a fair solution to the problem which we are now facing. Still it hardly justifies delaying passage of the legislation under consideration, owing to the interest of some areas of the country while we also find in Bill C-49 some clauses beneficial to our citizens. There are some amendments dealing with registration for the purchase of a house and registration for buying into pension plans. In connection with those bills, my constituents constantly ask me: "What is happening? I want to file my income tax return, but I cannot do so, because you have not yet passed the bill." I answer: "Do not blame us, but blame rather those awful Progressive Conservatives!"

[English]

I am glad to have had the opportunity to say these few words. They are essential. I have spent much time in this House because I like this House and the work it is supposed to be doing. But it is not doing that work. As backbenchers we wanted to contribute sensibly to the discussion of this bill. We have not been able to do so because we knew that the need for this legislation was pressing. We wanted to get it out of the House. However, knowing this, members of the opposition took advantage of the fact that we were sitting back wanting to get this piece of legislation through the House.

Some hon. Members: Sit down and vote on it, then!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Blais: I hear a comment from one of my friends at the back—"Let them know what it feels like!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Chairman: I am willing to let the hon. member complete his remarks but I would invite hon. members to stick as much as possible to clause 4.

I must admit, and I hope other hon. members will join me in this, that there is some degradation in the House and that our business does not progress very much. Therefore I invite hon. members, without wanting to hurt anyone, to examine thoroughly the matter before us and to prepare a decision which will perhaps be taken later this evening. Now I recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member surely has an obligation to stick within the rule of relevancy. I call attention to Standing Order 34(2). The hon. member's remarks were totally irrelevant to the clause before the committee and we should rule that the committee vote on the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: The hon. member's point is well taken. I made the same point even before he raised it. I did not relate it to Standing Order 34(2) but I invited hon. members to pay attention to their own responsibility for the application of the rules and not to leave it only to the Chair. Now that the hon. member for Nipissing has resumed his seat and a number of hon. members have indicated that they wish to take part in the debate, it is difficult for me to put the question. I have to accept the fact that the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands have indicated that they wish to contribute.

Mr. Stollery: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for St. John's East has brought it to the attention of the committee that we on this side evidently did not have occasion to speak about the bill in general in the way we have heard members of the opposition discuss it for the past three weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stollery: We were talking some time ago about taxation. I should like to draw attention to the fact that the taxpayers of Canada have been waiting for a long time now for this bill to pass. I think the hon. member for St. John's East should be ashamed of himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member would agree with me that the subject he has just raised is a matter for argument and debate. He may have wished to have expressed those opinions during the past week; tonight might not be the appropriate time to do so.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is perfectly apparent that the Liberal members of the House do not want a vote to be taken either on the amendment or on the clause, clause 4, in spite of the fact that they say they want to pass this legislation. The committee has been held up for one hour—

Some hon. Members: Three weeks.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —by irrelevant speeches by parliamentary secretaries and those who hope to become parliamentary secretaries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (2100)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance—

An hon. Member: You are leaderless.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And the hon. member is like Horatio holding the bridge while the government Whip goes out to see if he can arouse the Tuscan hordes from their deep slumber.

I want to comment on some statements the Minister of Finance made in committee. The Minister of Finance should not criticize the opposition if the clause we are debating does not pass this evening or tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We have as much time as the government, and if we cannot carry on this debate in a sane and sensible way, we can wait for another day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We will not be intimidated by the howls and jeers of those who had to be dragged in by the neck in order to save themselves from ignominious defeat.

Mr. Andras: What did the hon. member say just now?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I said "in order to save themselves from ignominious defeat."

Mr. Andras: That is what I thought he said.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Before five o'clock the minister answered some questions I asked yesterday. I shall comment on what he said and ask another question or two.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I point out to the hon. member for St. Boniface that nature gave him a voice, but he need not use it on every occasion, especially when he is sitting down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Nowlan: Let us bring the television cameras in and capture what is happening on television.

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Chairman: Order, please. I was under the impression that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands had completed his remarks and that is why he sat down.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for St. Boniface rose on a question of privilege and I yielded him the floor. I was merely pointing out to him that he seems to speak more effectively when sitting down than when standing up. I assume that this is because when he is sitting down he gets concussion of the brain.

Mr. Andras: Would the hon. member mind clarifying that remark.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You keep out of this. The Minister of Finance answered some questions I had asked. I want to comment. First, the minister agreed that royalties paid to a corporation will be deductible, but at the same time royalties paid to a government will not be deductible. He said that the reason is that royalties paid to a corporation are paid as a result of a contractual agreement. He also agreed that royalties paid to a foreign government will be deductible, but that royalties paid to a Canadian government will not be deductible. The reason, according to the minister, is that foreign royalties are usually paid on a flat rate. They are not always paid that way, I point out. This legislation does not provide for royalties collected by a provincial government on a flat rate to be deductible.

I am glad the minister made one point clear concerning the Syncrude agreement. Actually, a number of points are now clear. It has taken weeks of prodding to get all the information regarding Syncrude which ministers have made available. First, we struggled to discover if the agreement was open ended, or if it was limited to a commitment of $300 million. Now we know that it is open ended and that the government is committed to pay 15 per cent of the cost, not matter whether the cost is to be $2 billion or, as the Price Waterhouse report suggests, possibly as much as $2.9 billion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is false.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister had lots of opportunity to participate in the debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have already answered that in the House. Do not try to obscure the matter.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can understand the minister being excited. If I had been taken in by the sort of bunkum he swallowed in entering into the agreement, I would be excited too.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You know what you are saying is false. You know you are speaking a falsehood.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister knows perfectly well that the Price Waterhouse report estimates that the cost can go as high as $2.9 billion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not what we are paying for. That is not being paid for by this government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We don't know what this government is paying for.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We do.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): All the minister has to do is table the agreement, let us have the agreement, so that we can know exactly what the people of Canada are paying for.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You know that already.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The fact is the government entered into the agreement without knowing all it had committed itself to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not true.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It did not know all the conditions. The companies, having suckered the ministers into signing the agreement, are now tightening the screws and the ministers don't know what they have committed themselves to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is another falsehood, a contemptible falsehood.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What did the Minister of Finance tell us? He said that the partners in Syncrude, Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil and Cities Service, will be able to write off their investment against their other earnings. This is a strange attitude, in view of the minister's attitude last night. Last night he said, as reported at page 3516 of Hansard—

Mr. Andras: Are we up to that number?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the minister of immigration and resources—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Now who's excited?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the great Minister of Manpower and Immigration would do a little work on unemployment insurance, he would be much more useful than he is now; he's sitting there and chattering about something he knows nothing about.

As recorded at page 3516 of Hansard I asked the minister the following:

In other words, will Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil and Cities Service be able to write off their Syncrude investment against their other operations?

Then I said, "The minister shakes his head."

An hon. Member: It rattled. He shook it in the negative.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, of course I shook my head. I agree with the hon. member. He said I shook my head, and he could hear it from where he was sitting, the implication being, that I had a screw loose which needed tightening, or something like that. The point is the hon. member did not say whether I shook my head negatively or affirmatively. He cannot read that into Hansard. I gave him a clear answer today.

● (2110)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, let it then be put on the record that when the minister shakes his head from side to side he means yes, because yesterday he certainly shook his head from side to side. However, today it will be clearly on the record.

The minister has now said that Imperial Oil, Shell Oil and Cities Service will be able to write off their expenditures in Syncrude from their other operations. The Canadian people should know that. They should know that the three governments are going to put up together in equity and a $200 million loan from Alberta some $800 million. The province of Alberta will put up between $500 million and $600 million for a pipeline and power plant. Over a period of four or five years, the three private partners in Syncrude will be able to write off their investment from the profits they make. This means that nearly 50 per cent of that writeoff will be paid by the taxpayers of Canada. That is what they should know.

The people of Canada will probably pay 80 per cent of the cost of the Syncrude project, and they are going to own 15 per cent. The Syncrude partners, apart from the governments of Alberta and Ontario, will own 70 per cent of the project. That is what should be known.

I would like the Minister of Finance, who is a very able financier and very competent in his field, to tell the House if he thinks it is a good deal for the people of Canada through increased prices, loans and grants from the respective governments and through tax writeoffs to put up most of the money, and the three oil companies in question are going to have 70 per cent of the profit.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources keeps mumbling in his seat. He is much more effective in his seat than on his feet. I suggest he get into the debate and tell the House what are the facts.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have told them, but you misconstrue them. You tell falsehoods.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The other point that comes to mind—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Tell the truth now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am telling the truth. The truth is the minister is so mixed up he would not know the truth if he met it in broad daylight.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You know the truth.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In addition to all these handouts, the Syncrude partners are going to be guaranteed the international price for the oil they sell, which at the present time is about $11.70 a barrel. That fits in very well with what the Minister of Finance said this afternoon.

When the Minister of Finance was replying to the question as to whether the revenue from the export tax would be taken into consideration in computing the federal government's share of tax revenue from resources, he said no because the export tax would diminish as the domestic price gradually rose to the international price.

There we have it in a nutshell. I ask the minister is it now government policy to move steadily toward the international price? Surely that is in line with the commitment that has been made with the Syncrude partners. It is in line with the steps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been taking, that the government has now committed this country to moving steadily toward the international price. The lower domestic price of $6.50 a barrel, from which the oil companies have made exorbitant profits, is to be abandoned. That was merely a gimmick of the minority government days.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance if he would answer the other question which I asked him. He did not deal with it today. In his letter to the Syncrude partners the minister committed himself to keeping legally the commitment which he made with respect to deductibility of their royalty payments and other payments to the province of Alberta. Yesterday I asked the minister how he proposed to do that. So far he has not introduced any amendment in the course of the passage of this bill through committee of the whole.

Does the minister propose to do this by using the Financial Administration Act? If so, does he propose to do that annually? By what means is he going to keep that commitment? The minister made a commitment, not just on his own behalf but on behalf of the government, which involves very large sums of money. Surely this House, this committee and the people of Canada have a right to know how he intends to keep that commitment. How is it going to be kept? Will it be done legally, or does the minister propose to go around the back door by orders in council which have had a very dubious history in the past of making rebates which are very difficult to assess properly. Is that how the minister proposes to do it?

The minister ought to tell us at this time the method he intends to use to ensure that the commitment he has made to Imperial Oil, Shell Oil and Cities Service will be carried out in a proper, legal and parliamentary manner.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I can give an undertaking to the hon. member that it will be carried out in a proper manner. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I said that the Syncrude operation was carried on its merits. The only exception from the present budgetary regime is the deductibility of royalties. However, future arrangements will have to be considered on their merits. Because of that position, we are considering the ways in which to implement it, either by a bill under the Financial Administration Act, or in some way reportable to the House of Commons. I tell the hon. member quite categorically that the only distinction is the deductibility of royalty provisions. All the other provisions of the law apply across the board to the Syncrude arrangement.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hon. members seem to be in a great hurry to vote. They were not in that hurry at eight o'clock, so why now? I want to ask the Minister of Finance if he is telling this committee of the whole that he, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the President of the Treasury Board have made a commitment to guarantee the three private partners in the Syncrude project that their payments to the Alberta government will be deductible for income tax purposes, without any clear idea how he proposes to do that? Surely the minister must know how he is going to do that. Surely the place to do that is in this bill or by a special bill. The minister should tell the committee of the whole which of those two methods he intends to use.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have been entirely specific with the committee and the hon. member. It is not merely deductibility of royalties. In this particular situation we are dealing with a joint venture or partnership. The proportion of the revenue of that partnership attributable to the government of Alberta, the government of Ontario and the government of Canada will not be attributable to the other three parties in the arrangement. That is how the deductibility feature is fulfilled. It can be remitted either under the Financial Administration Act or by a special appropriation of parliament. In any event I have clearly defined the limits of the situation and of the government's commitment for the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) took a rather clear stand on this bill. We know that this bill, dealing with natural resources, entails some problems of interprovincial and federal-provincial nature.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. As a federal-provincial conference will soon be held at which natural resources and energy generally will be dealt with, perhaps after this bill has been passed, can the minister tell us whether clauses 4(2) and 4(5) of the bill are an integral part of the negotiations with the provinces, or whether his proposals to the provinces, on the conservation and use of energy, are separate questions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, some of the provisions of this bill deal with conservation. In the excise bill, that was introduced before this bill, a special tax was levied on motorboats, private aircraft, etc. In the bill before the House, means are found to share the proceeds from the development of our natural resources, and the energy conservation program depends on other measures which are not contained in that part of the bill.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), who honours us with his presence, if he can tell us whether the royalty tax repealed with respect to oil companies is an essential condition of federal-provincial negotiations to come in order to make the federal government's position clear with regard to those negotiations, or whether clauses 4(2) and 4(5) are incidental to those negotiations and not essential to the progress and finalization of this debate?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I must tell the hon. member that those items play an essential part in the federal position. It is a fundamental condition of our situation to the effect that the federal government must get a certain level of revenue in view of the increase in provincial taxes.

An hon. Member: How many times did you attend the debates since the beginning of the month?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I can understand hon. members opposite wanting to rush the passage of this bill, but I would like to investigate this matter thoroughly. If you want to make me lose time, I can play the same game as you do. Go on, enjoy yourselves!

Mr. Chairman, now that we have silence, I will ask my question. Since the minister just said that passing subclauses (2) and (5) is an essential condition, I will not question his answer. I would now like to know, in case this House would pass the bill, whether the minister can give us some indications of the federal government's position with regard to eastern provinces as far as consumption and preservation of Canadian energy is concerned?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, this is a very broad question, but I must say that we have the same acts with respect to minerals in eastern and western Canada, and we must get a minimum amount of income taxes at the federal level. It is then up to each provincial government to determine the level of taxes for each province. For that reason, taxes are higher in Ontario for instance, than in Quebec.

Mr. Fortin: I am very grateful to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for his reply. He is apparently willing to co-operate. Therefore, for my own information, I should like him to tell me whether, before the introduction of Bill C-49, he discussed the application of clauses 4(2) and 4(5) with the Quebec minister of natural resources, and since Progressive Conservative members appear eager to defend mainly the interests of Alberta, I feel it is my duty to defend those of eastern Canada. I suggest that the minister's reply at this time will weigh heavily on my vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, my colleague the Minister of Finance had discussions with his provincial counterparts. As far as I am concerned, I have met with the provincial ministers of mines and the Quebec Minister of National Resources, after my colleague's speech of November 19—but before the bill was introduced. Therefore, the talks were held before the introduction of the bill but after the budget speech.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, thank you for your courtesy and patience.

Does the minister mean he obtained explicit agreement from the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces as to the contents of clauses 4(2) and 4(5) of the bill before us, and if not, does the minister expect this agreement will be forthcoming during the next federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I must state there was naturally no unanimous consent to such projects. There was difference of opinion among the ministers represented, but we indicated this was a basic condition as far as the federal position is concerned. I believe this position is now recognized by every province.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, as a last comment I would indicate I am very much disappointed with the inadequate cooperation on the part of, not the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but rather from the Liberal members in general who—

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: How often have you been here in this House?

Mr. Fortin: As you wish then, if you want it over at ten o'clock, "straighten your tunes".

Some hon. Members: Question!

[Mr. Fortin.]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, when a Liberal member rises in this House we, in the Social Credit Party of Canada, have the courtesy and manners to listen. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that when a member from the Social Credit Party of Canada rises in the House, the Liberal members should display the same kindness we display for them, particularly on such an important subject as oil and energy consumption in Canada. In this regard, they could be teached manners by the Progressive Conservative members, the members of the New Democratic Party and the Social Crediters.

Mr. Chairman, if they do their job superficially, that is their problem. As far as I am concerned, as the representative of Lotbinière, and as far as my colleagues from the Social Credit Party of Canada are concerned, we have the right to know the very elements of the matter. That is why I have asked the Ministers of Finance and of Energy, Mines and Resources to answer me. If the Liberal members had the same concern for professional ethics as the Ministers of Energy, Mines and Resources and of Finance do, this debate would probably have ended long since.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources just said that the provincial mines and natural resources ministers were disagreeing with the federal government's position, which is a normal thing in a sound federalism. Could the minister tell us exactly what the position of the province of Quebec was? In our constituencies of Quebec, we hear all sorts of stories about the bad federal government.

Mr. Chairman, I would be happy if the minister would help members from Quebec do their job and show to their constituents what the federal government really is in relation to the government of Quebec.

Progressive Conservative members have delayed the proceedings of the House, raised points of order and made long speeches. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the members from Quebec did not take unfair advantage of the situation, yet it is the people of Quebec who for many years have been the losers in the oil situation in Canada. Mr. Chairman, national unity will be achieved only when all provinces sit around a table to reach a consensus.

Mr. Chairman, that is why I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to state the position of the federal government toward the province of Quebec. What exactly was the official position of the Quebec government, if it had one? Is Quebec in favour of or against the bill, particularly as regards clauses 4(2) and 4(5)? Did that government undertake to cooperate with the federal government?

● (2130)

Did the government commit itself to help enforce the act or was it against it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we discussed the matter in December and I cannot remember the exact words used by my counterpart in Quebec. As far as I can recall, he pointed out the importance of the matter from a constitutional point of view.

I believe he supported the view expressed by the ministers of other provinces with regard to the constitution. To the best of my recollection, he was not exactly against another position. I think it was really from a constitutional point of view that he stated Quebec's position, but he did not express opinions on my colleague's theory.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, it is a shame to witness such disorder in the House!

An hon. Member: That's the way it goes in Quebec City!

Mr. Fortin: Indeed, that's the way it goes in Quebec City.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to put one last question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He probably knows that in some ridings of Quebec, but particularly in the riding of Lotbinière which I have the honour to represent, several oil companies are making exploration on enormous oil resources. Would the minister tell us whether these companies will be affected by clauses 4(2) and 4(5), as the companies in the western provinces of Canada will be? Did the minister assess the implication of those clauses on the eastern provinces, where exploration is now being made? Did employees of his department consult with the representatives of the companies, which, in fact, are the same as in the west? Did the minister have any discussions on that matter with his provincial counterpart, the Quebec minister of resources?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I must say that for the time being and from all our available information, the exploration he mentioned is under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, which has no wells, oil or gas resources at this time, be it in the riding of Lotbinière or elsewhere in the province. If such discoveries take place, this law will apply in Quebec as well as in the other parts of Canada. In fact, there may be a 20 per cent federal tax and a provincial levy as established by the provinces. But general taxes in Canada will apply to Quebec as well as to the other provinces.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, while this general discussion is taking place on Clause 4 and the amendment thereto, I should like to ask the Postmaster General what arrangements he has been able to arrive at in order to handle the delivery of pension cheques. It seems to me that this is a fairly general debate in which the Minister of Finance and other members have taken part, and I do not see why I should not be able to put my question to the Postmaster General.

The Chairman: Order, please. I would hope the hon. member would not substitute himself for the Chair in respect of the matter of relevancy of debate. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked a direct question relating to Clause 4. That does not permit the hon. member to ask questions of the Postmaster General at this time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, to bring this within relevancy I should like to ask if there are any royalty cheques being handled by the post office at the present time? It may be that some of these companies have sent out their royalty cheques in that unorthodox way.

An hon. Member: And unemployment insurance cheques.

Mr. Peters: Yes, perhaps there are some unemployment insurance cheques in the mail as well, and they are certainly the product of one of these resources we are discussing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: I was going to add, Mr. Chairman, that there are no royalty cheques coming from Saskatchewan since they have effectively killed the industry in that province.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have heard little complaint about the health and the wealth of one of the adjacent provinces. Perhaps I could ask if there are any royalty cheques going out in Alberta?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amemdment to Clause 4 as proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Amendment (Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)) negatived: Yeas, 77; nays, 107.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 4 carry?

● (2140)

Mr. Symes: Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is here and who has been answering questions related to resources and to this bill, tell us whether the oil produced by Syncrude will be in any way exempt from any kind of export control?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Sir, it will not.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the remarks by the hon. member for Nipissing not as related to oil but as related to mineral production. As has already been pointed out by the hon. member for Témiscamingue, a large number of companies have been in touch with members of the House indicating that some of them are really hard pressed to meet the commitment that is demanded in this bill in terms of the double taxation of those companies.

The government has indicated that it does not have too much sympathy for the oil industry and, if it is necessary for the provinces to get a reasonable tax from their resource, then the federal government will take its share anyway. Some charges have been made that as a result oil rigs are leaving Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is my opinion that that is not so. I believe that no new oil development will take place in either of those provinces. All the oil reserves are probably well known.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peters: Members of the Conservative party are saying that that is not so. Let me ask one of them what he did with his rigs. He put them on a truck and took them to the United States.

The mining industry finds itself in another situation.

An hon. Member: There is no work there.

Mr. Peters: I always thought that development companies are making work. There are many mineral deposits in this country.

An hon. Member: You are contradicting yourself.

Mr. Peters: If that is my only sin, it is pardonable. There is much development in the mineral field throughout Ontario, Quebec and in the northern parts of the Northwest Territories. These areas can be developed.

I am interested in the answer that the minister gave a few minutes ago, from which it was obvious that he is not interested in any input from the provincial premiers. They might have been able to suggest other ways of engaging in the development without undue taxation being imposed. But he did say that in the case of Syncrude he was going to use the Financial Administration Act. I suggest that if that happens, we will be in a sorry mess in this country.

I can see INCO coming down here, putting on the screws to try to make the government concede. It has many concessions to make, because the total royalty will be a concession. Even if they get part of the royalty, they will have gained. If the minister will exempt them by the simple practice of amending this through the Financial Administration Act, he will be engaging in political football beyond par.

I suggest that the reverse situation might be very interesting. The Minister of Finance may have given his word. He did not give it in the bill because nothing is said about it in there, but he may have given his word that the act will not apply. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources might also have given his word. However, those two ministers will not always be here, and surely the Syncrude project is not here for only four years. We expect it to be here for a long time, at least until the end of this century.

If all it takes to change that agreement is to make a change in the Financial Administration Act, then I would be surprised if Exxon or any of the other companies did not divide such a short term agreement on a four year basis. I also suggest that many of the mining companies are extremely limited. As the hon. member for Nipissing said, the mining companies in northern Ontario are extremely limited if the taxation structure is such that they must return to the treasury over 100 per cent of their earnings in the form of taxation to both the provincial and federal governments.

I have never had to carry a brief for the mining industry. We have gold, asbestos, nickel. Almost any mineral you can name has been mined in the district of Timiskaming, but very seldom have I had to make representations to the government on their behalf, with the exception of the gold mining industry.

There is uncertainty in the development industry in nothern Ontario and northern Quebec, both of them areas with which I am familiar. This uncertainty will not end until the federal government and the provincial governments stop their bargaining and come to a conclusion which will not kill the goose which laid the golden egg. This does not just affect the gold mining industry but the mining industry as a whole.

● (2150)

I am shocked that the minister, who has had two or three years to deal with this matter of a fair share of return to the provinces and a fair share of return to the federal government, has not been able to work out an equitable arrangement. What is needed is an arrangement which will not be prohibitive to the exploration and development of additional mineral resources. I suggest that even the oil companies are dependent on the whims of the minister and the political whims which put ministers in their particular portfolios—and move them just as readily. I think it is safe to say that most ministers do not like to stay too long in a portfolio, and I think enough mess has been made of this one.

Whatever decision may come, it will be the decision of the minister who happens to administer the act. It was pointed out by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and was repeated by the Minister of Finance, that Syncrude was in a unique position because it had three partners who, I suppose, are not much interested in the problem of royalties because they are governments themselves.

The minister did say that the government was going to allow the participating companies to write off all the profit on that operation. Many have not yet realized it, but Syncrude is a very unique company. Its president spent two hours telling us why Syncrude would never make a profit. It was rather unusual to hear this from a businessman and a promoter. Some of my colleagues said that he was a crook, but I said he is a promoter like some mining people in my area who think they have a good thing and who go out and try to sell it. The president of Syncrude certainly was trying to sell it, but the difficulty was convincing me and a number of other people that this company, with money coming from three or four major oil companies, was not going to make any money.

Yet one of our provinces went into partnership under the law with that company, and stayed in that partnership about two days before it had to withdraw the law because it found that the amount which it had agreed to take in profits was not going to be available. In fact the president was telling us there never could be a profit because, no matter how much money is spent by Syncrude to stay in the game, we have to pay our share. Every oil company has to pay its share, and the oil companies pay the bills and in return receive the product.

But there is in effect no way that Syncrude as an entity can write off any kind of profit because, as a company, it does not exist. As the Minister of Finance said, it is a joint venture or a partnership, or something else, but it is certainly not a normal company. It appears to me there will be a lot of paying on our part and not very much collecting. Any collecting on our part will be in a product which will be difficult for us to handle, and we will have to give it to one of our partners at the regulated price mentioned in the agreement, the international price, whatever that may be.

We may have to develop the facilities to handle that product ourselves. I suggest that the moneys put into this company under this joint venture will yield huge profits to those companies putting up the money, and the federal government and provincial governments in the joint venture will not take advantage of those same concessions.

Syncrude will go down in history without a doubt as an immense sell-out. My colleague has said it is a greater sell-out than the CPR scandal. I am not sure if it will be in the same league at all. It will be 100 times larger than the CPR scandal, and we will have to stay in it. I think that if we are going to make an exception through the Financial Administration Act of providing rebates to the companies, then we should have no rebate at all. Instead that money should be Canadian money and it should cover the whole operation of that corporation.

If there were ever a good time for public ownership, it is now for Syncrude because it would be in the interest of the public, in the interest of development in an orderly fashion of a totally new form of energy resource for the Canadian people. Even more important, it would keep this government honest and prevent it from having to use exceptions under this act, the Financial Administration Act, or through some other act.

If the government allows an exception in this instance, I suggest that there will be immense pressure on it to allow that kind of exemption for all companies. I suggest that that is not fair or reasonable taxation, and that we should not force this government into it.

I would like to call it ten o'clock and continue my remarks at another time.

Mr. Young: On a point of order, Madam Chairman, since we are just reaching that point, I would like to move under Standing Order—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader who is—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is no doubt which one is the leader on this side of the House. In any event, in the spirit of friendship which has prevailed in the House this evening, may I ask what is to be the business for tomorrow?

● (2200)

Mr. Sharp: I had hoped to say that the next order of business would be the Housing Act, because I know the people of Canada are very anxious to get it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: In the circumstances we shall continue in committee of the whole on the Income Tax bill, and I do hope the House will co-operate in getting it through as quickly as possible in order that we can move on to the housing bill, which will be the next item of business.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I say that the opposition will not emulate government supporters tonight with respect to co-operation in getting the business through the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They will find I do not sit down too easily.

An hon. Member: Or shut up!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We intend to co-operate with the government but we have been subjected to a spectacle which has been a travesty of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It does not become the government House leader to ask for co-operation on this side, something he has always received, when he has no control over his own supporters.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HARBOURS—HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IMPLICATED IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, today when I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) a question about a transcript at a preliminary inquiry involving the Hamilton Harbour Commission, his answer disappointed me because I felt he was being unnecessarily vague. I realize the Solicitor General has a difficult role to fulfil. On the one hand he must give guidance and direction to the RCMP, and on the other hand he must not interfere in a purely political sense.

I am tempted to refer specifically to names and events in connection with this transcript but, after much reflection, temporarily I believe it would not be responsible to use my position as a member of parliament to contravene the spirit of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and, by so doing, possibly prejudice the rights of people who have been charged or who may yet be charged. I have thought about this at some length.

I have even considered an interesting case recorded in Ontario Reports of 1971 involving two eminent personages. The case is that of Roman Corp. Ltd. et al. v. Hudson's Bay Oil & Gas Co. Ltd. et al. His Lordship, giving judgment, said:

> This is an application by the defendants, the Right Honourable Pierre E. Trudeau (hereinafter called Trudeau) and the honourable John J. Greene (hereinafter called Greene) (a) to strike out certain paragraphs and parts of paragraphs of the statement of claim (b) to strike out the whole of the statement of claim and (c) to dismiss the action against the said defendants.

The ruling was interesting.

> No person can have a judgment awarded against him in civil proceedings arising out of statements made in the House of Commons and this privilege attaches also to extensions of the statements contained in a press release concerning them and a telegram to a person affected by them. Hence, allegations contained in a statement of claim that such statements and their extensions have been made by defendant prime minister and defendant cabinet minister will be struck out under rule 139.

I mention this to show that I have given considerable thought to whether I should give the type of information tonight that I could give. But I am not convinced it would be a responsible thing for me to do. Having said that, I want to say to the Solicitor General that, even taking into account the difficult role he plays in this House, his answers have not been as frank as they might be.

If I may speak again about the transcripts relating to the delicate Hamilton harbour matter, I suggest that the Solicitor General should, if he has not already done so, acquaint himself fully with the contents of these transcripts. I refer him particularly to volume I, pages 118 to 127, and more particularly to that part beginning on line 18 at page 127 and ending at line 12, page 129.

I suggest that the Solicitor General should consider his position as an important law enforcement officer who answers to this House, and act, or cause his colleagues to act with greater dispatch when the public interest requires specific decisions to be made in connection with inquiries.

On December 4, 1974, as recorded at page 1939 of Hansard, the Solicitor General, answering a question asked by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) concerning another matter which also involved tapes and investigation, said:

> I have shown the transcript of the tape to certain members of the government, and I discussed it with the Prime Minister as it was my responsibility to do so. This is not a report that should be tabled in the House. I showed certain aspects of the report to the Minister of Labour to determine whether he was in fact involved in such conversations, and he admitted that he was.

When questions arise concerning judicial inquiries and situations involving people who have been charged, people whose rights are specifically protected by the provisions of the criminal law amendment legislation, as incorporated in the Criminal Code, and people who may be collaterally involved because they hold a public position, the government should make every effort to satisfy the House and the country that nothing has been done which may give rise for concern.

[Mr. MacKay.]

For the present, I propose to leave the matter at that. I hope, in the days ahead, more information will be made available by those on the other side of the House and that a decision will be made as to whether the sort of public inquiry which many responsible people feel is necessary will be undertaken.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the case referred to by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is one which resulted from an investigation into certain irregularities with respect to dredging contracts in Hamilton harbour. Since the Hamilton Harbours' Commission is subject to federal jurisdiction, the investigation has been carried on by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

After more than one year of serious investigation, charges were laid on May 29, 1974, against five individuals, one of whom was a member of the three-man Hamilton Harbours' Commission. The charges—30 counts on 12 informations—were: conspiracy to defraud, fraud, conspiracy to forge, uttering forged documents, and forgery. Three of those charged pleaded guilty and were fined a total of $62,000 on February 5, 1975. Two others pleaded not guilty. Their cases went to preliminary inquiry on October 28, 1974, and they are now awaiting their trial which should take place soon.

In his questions of February 24 and 25 the hon. member for Central Nova asked me questions about the transcripts of evidence relating to the said preliminary inquiry. He asked me if I was acquainted with the transcripts and, if so, could I assure the House that no member of parliament or minister was implicated in the matters under investigation.

First of all I should point out to the House that under the law, under section 467 of the Criminal Code, the evidence at the preliminary inquiry is not to be published or broadcast, in other words, not to be made public. The purpose of this provision is to protect the names of persons who might be mentioned at the preliminary inquiry when they have not been found guilty or even charged with an offence. This is an important provision to protect civil rights. After all, it is one thing for a witness to make statements or allegations; it is another thing to make proof and to be found guilty.

Under the British system of criminal law, a person is innocent until proven guilty, and that proof must be beyond a reasonable doubt. But what is the member for Central Nova and certain members of the press trying to do? They are trying to circumvent Section 467. The law will not allow them to publish the transcripts. Therefore, they are trying to get out the information in the House of Commons so it can be made public through the back door, it appears for the sake of sensationalism and partisan politics, certainly not for the sake of justice.

● (2210)

Let me say this, Madam Speaker: these transcripts of evidence, eight volumes, only became available in part to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Toronto a few days ago from the Crown prosecutor and they are not yet available to the force in Ottawa. Since that time I have consulted with the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police about them, and he read to me by telephone those parts where the names of certain political figures were mentioned. I could request the entire transcript and read it once it becomes available, but that will depend on the circumstances. In cases where members of parliament, ministers or senior civil servants seem to be implicated in a criminal or subversive matter then, of course, I would read the evidence in greater detail and report it to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). However, I would not at that stage of the proceedings make my findings, conversations or advice public.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If it would be permissible, Madam Speaker, we would be glad to hear the minister's answer further.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This can only be done by unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank hon. members of the opposition. This is a serious matter. I will take only another minute.

The hon. member for Central Nova has asked me to tell the House that no member of parliament or minister is implicated in the Hamilton Harbour case as a result of the preliminary inquiry transcripts. I can say that, at this time, there is no evidence to lay further criminal charges against anyone. I will not say more about the transcripts because I think to do so would be contrary to our general principles of justice and, in particular, to the principles in Section 467.

In the Hamilton Harbour case a thorough criminal investigation has been carried out by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Criminal charges have been laid against five persons. Three have been found guilty, two are going to trial and a further investigation is still possible.

Furthermore, the assessment of evidence and the decision on prosecution are under the attorney general for Ontario and his crown prosecutors. Thus far they have deemed it proper to charge only five persons. If there are to be further criminal charges and prosecutions, then that will be their decision with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, not mine.

In any case, I am quite prepared to let justice take its natural course and will not, at this stage, do anything which might be prejudicial to innocent persons or contrary to the principles of our criminal law.

Adjournment Debate

HARBOURS—HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—DOCUMENT SERVED ON MINISTER OF LABOUR TO AUTHORIZE SEARCH OF OFFICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, in my position as the chairman of my party's justice caucus, I asked certain questions today of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I would say at the outset that in addition to being responsible for labour this minister, as does every minister of the Crown, has certain other responsibilities. He has responsibility as a member of the House and responsibility in his position as Minister of Labour.

If there should be any suggestion that there is any inpropriety, it is up to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to make certain observations and carry out certain research work.

I just want to review the questions I put today. I put them as gently as anybody could. At that time I asked, "Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Labour whether he was served with any documentation at the time the RCMP allegedly had authority to search his office? Was the minister served with an affidavit or any other documentation which led to the authority for his office being searched sometime during the election?"

As I understand it, the RCMP entered his office in Hamilton during the election.

The minister answered in this way, "Mr. Speaker, the RCMP did come to my office. They had a document, but it did not pertain to my particular office. In any event, I gave them access to what they wanted."

We have no information as to what they asked for or why they were there.

Then I asked a further question, "Has the minister seen any documents which gave the RCMP authority to search his office and take certain files or whatever else they did at that time? Has the minister read any documentation which the RCMP had or which was filed in the court house to give the RCMP that authority?"

The minister replied, "Mr. Speaker, I do not think anything was filed in the court house because the documentation was not applicable to my particular headquarters. I just saw what they had. They agreed it was not applicable."

The question I want to put to the minister now is this—I will come to the procedure under the Code in a moment or two—is the reason that the documents were not filed in the court house because the minister said they did not pertain to his office?

I then asked the minister, "Do I take it that no search was made of the minister's office because the authority they had did not pertain to the office of the Minister of Labour or any material or documentation the minister may have had? Also, did the minister read what the RCMP had in their hands which gave them some authority, either in his office or that of someone else?"

Then there was this very unusual answer, "Mr. Speaker, they wanted permission to look at documents in my office, the contents of which I was really not aware. They were in cabinets. I gave them permission to go ahead—"

The minister never read the documents that the RCMP had in their hands, although to the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) he said he had.

I should now like to refer to the Criminal Code. If the RCMP did not have any authority, I would ask the Solicitor General, who is in charge of the RCMP, to make an investigation in order to protect the Minister of Labour. But if the RCMP did have authority, what did they have to be armed with? Section 443 makes it very clear:

A justice who is satisfied by information upon oath in Form 1—

I do not have time to get into a discussion of Form 1.

that there is reasonable ground to believe that there is in a building——and that in that building are documents which might lead to some impropriety or illegality, in which case they would then be armed with an affidavit and a search warrant. Either the RCMP had the documents and the minister knows, or if they did not have the documents the Solicitor General should then inquire why the RCMP acted illegally against one of the ministers of the crown.

I speak tonight as a member of parliament, not as a Conservative speaking against a Liberal. If the RCMP did not have the proper documents, then the Solicitor General has a responsibility to find out what went on.

These are the questions that I want to ask. The minister said the RCMP had certain documents which did not pertain to his office. How did he know that if he did not read them? Secondly, why did he give them access to what they wanted if they did not pertain to his office? If somebody came into my office and said: "We are taking your files, Eldon"—

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): That is a mere play on words.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not intend to get into a debate with the hon. lady, but if they came into my office and said, "Look, we are taking your files", I would ask what was their authority. I would then ask for a lawyer or examine the documents. But what did the Minister of Labour do? He said: "Help yourself to anything you want". I want to know what they took, what authority they had to take it, and why were they there. Would a lawyer or an experienced cabinet minister act in that way? The Minister of Labour is a lawyer, not a layman. He knows the Criminal Code as well as I do. He knows the RCMP are supposed to be armed with a warrant if they make a search.

The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth also asked whether there were any cabinet documents there. If so, why did he hand them over? What was going on?

I have two further questions to ask. First, if there is nothing wrong, why did the Prime Minister get into the act today and attempt to say that we were trying to lay charges? We were merely seeking information. In addition to that, why did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the former Minister of Justice, get up and try to read from Beauchesne, which really had nothing to do with the situation at all? They were ruled out of order, and Mr. Speaker ruled that there was no point of order. I must not discuss his ruling, but it was right on the point.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

• (2220)

Those are all the questions I want to ask. If there was no authority and no documentation, or if there was documentation and the minister did not read it, then how does he know they did not pertain to his office? What was in his office, and what did the minister surrender?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, going back to the time the RCMP came into my office, I recall looking at a form they had, and I recall vaguely some comment to the effect that it was not directed at my particular office. That recollection on my part was the basis for my statement. Let me say that I made a decision, rightly or wrongly, to let the RCMP look at the documents they wanted to look at. I did not know at the time what they were looking at, or what documents they were taking. I did not know what documents in fact they did take. I have had some opportunity subsequent to that time to examine some documents they took, but perhaps not all. That is all I can say, Madam Speaker, in the way of answer to the hon. member's questions.

NATIONAL PARKS—REQUEST THAT RESPONSIBILITY BE REMOVED FROM MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, the parliament of Canada has passed the National Parks Act which provides that the parks, as outstanding natural areas of national interest, are to be maintained unimpaired for the benefit, education, and enjoyment of present and future generations. Obviously, hunting or commercial activities like mining and lumbering cannot be permitted because of the great changes that would result. Does that sound familiar? It should, because it is a statement from a publicity brochure put out by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Yet once again people across Canada concerned with the preservation of our national parks face a confrontation with the hierarchy of this same department. Land is being withdrawn from Wood Buffalo National Park without the benefit of full public hearing, before the fact, despite previous promises that this sort of thing would not be allowed to happen.

A land use project, funded by the government through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, found approximately 75 square miles of land in a national park suitable for an Indian reserve to be used as part payment of a land entitlement totalling 97,280 acres to the Cree Band, granted under a treaty signed in 1899. The department has already approved in principle the transfer of 41,824 acres of land out of the park in two parcels—one at the Embarass Portage, which has lumbering potential, and the other at Peace Point in the centre of the park where a large gypsum deposit is located. The balance of the entitlement will come from outside the park boundaries.

Peace Point is located in the central area of Wood Buffalo National Park slightly toward the east. It can be reached down the west side of the loop road approximately 77 miles south of Fort Smith.

Travelling down the road in the late spring or the early summer a person can see herds of 30 to 40 bison along or across the road every few miles, particularly in the early morning. Peace Point itself is one of the most beautiful areas in the park, with white poplar stands overlooking the Peace River and a panoramic view of sloping banks on the other side, with its forest of pine showing green and black against the usual blue sky. The Embarass Portage is located in the southeast corner of the park.

Wood Buffalo National Park was established in 1922 to protect what remained of the wood bison, which is slightly larger and darker than the plains bison. Later on in the 1920s, beginning in about 1925, plains bison were transplanted in the park where they mixed freely with the wood bison, producing large and vigorous specimens. Since 1967 natural factors such as drownings, severe winters, predators and disease have controlled the herd sizes.

The present bison population is approximately 9,000 to 10,000, down somewhat from just a few years ago. It is estimated that Wood Buffalo Park could at present maintain 30,000 to 40,000 bison under natural feeding conditions. The park presently covers 17,300 square miles.

The land will be removed from park status by transferring it to the province of Alberta, which in turn will transfer it back to the federal government as an Indian reserve. This transaction will require an amendment to be passed to existing parks legislation by the federal government. In addition, alternate methods to transfer this land cannot be discounted.

A spokesman for the Alberta Indian Association has stated publicly that the band eventually intends to strip mine the gypsum at Peace Point and carry on wildlife ranching and agricultural pursuits in the centre of this park.

Under these circumstances it is inevitable that sooner or later additional roads as well as barge traffic, heavy machinery, housing and domestic cattle will find their way into what used to be a park. It is not difficult to determine the events to follow this proposed plunder. Information has also been received from reliable sources that development interests have been encouraging native people for over a year to pressure for the land at the Peace Point gypsum deposit.

This land is being transferred unilaterally without a public hearing and will set a precedent for all such transfers in national parks. It is of concern that this land is being transferred from park status without the general public across Canada being made aware of what is happening, with all the attendant ramifications.

On February 3, 1975, during a television interview on the CBC program "Hourglass" the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. Buchanan) again confirmed his department's intention to transfer the 41,824 acres of land out of park status in Wood Buffalo National Park.

The struggle to establish and maintain the integrity of Canada's national parks is difficult at the best of times without this dangerous precedent. The transfer of land from a national park for this purpose is clearly not acceptable. Land in our national parks has been set aside by law to be preserved unimpaired, for the benefit of future generations. The obligation to ensure this natural heritage for the present as well as the future rests in the hands of all Canadians.

Yet the government does not want public hearings to be held to give the Canadian people an opportunity to voice their wishes. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the other day that the people would govern Canada. Is this the type of governing he is talking about?

On December 16, I asked the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs the following question:

> Has the minister's department approved the turn-over of approximately 40,000 acres of land within the Wood Buffalo National Park . . .

He stated:

> Mr. Speaker, a request has been made for this land, but no decision has yet been made on this request.

In a supplementary I asked the minister why is it that his Edmonton regional office confirmed that the land was to be turned over. He replied that he was not aware of it but that he would be happy to look into the matter.

This leads me to believe one of two things. Either the minister does not know what is going on in his department, or he does not want the public to know. I believe that he does not want the public to know that truly a conflict of interest exists within the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs which has jurisdiction over Parks Canada, for what is good for the department can be disastrous for Parks Canada. This is tanamount to self negotiation, and therefore the dispute is primarily focused upon this department, and this should be corrected.

In closing let me state that I believe that our treaty agreements with our native people must be lived up to, but not at the expense of our national parks.

● (2230)

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in responding to the question of the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) I feel it would be helpful to get a sense of perspective in the matter. I refer to the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development of December 18, 1973, at which the then minister, now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), is on record as stating the following:

> I would like to inform members of the Committee that in Wood Buffalo National Park we had the same problem. There is a group of Indians living in the park and I have told them that their rights to the land there will supersede the parks control of the land and these Chipewyans in Fort Chipewyan at this time are trying to identify the land that will remain their land even if it is within the park. We recognize that their rights were prior to the establishment of the national park.

In addition he said that:

> . . . under the Expropriation Act, if we sometime need land for parks, we will take the negotiation route with the Indians.

Returning to the current situation which has prompted this question, under treaty No. 8 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) has a responsibility to ensure that the Indian people of Fort Chipewyan are provided with 97,280 acres of land. The people of Fort Chipewyan have asked that 40,000 Acres of these lands be selected from lands in Wood Buffalo National Park. The balance of the lands will be selected in other areas which have not been identified.

The 1930 transfer of resources agreement with the province of Alberta requires that any lands no longer required for national park purposes be transferred to the government of Alberta. This is one essential step in the transfer of lands to the Indians. A second essential step is that lands cannot be removed from a national park without the concurrence of parliament.

The minister must arrive at a decision after weighing all of his responsibilities. All ministers must do this. Where major issues are involved a collective decision is taken by cabinet. In the case at hand the approval of parliament will also be necessary. Thus, without accepting the proposition that any conflict of interest exists, it is clear that full public consideration and debate will take place before any steps are taken to alter the boundaries of the park.

Mr. Paproski: After the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FORRESTALL—ALLEGED WARNING OF NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD AGAINST COMMUNICATING WITH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will try not to take up too much of the time of the House. In the ten years that I have been in the House, this is the first time that I have intruded upon the goodwill of the House and Mr. Speaker's patience with respect to what may be a grievance but in fact appears to be a very clear question of privilege. I rise on a matter of privilege concerning the position taken by the National Harbours Board which affects my rights as a member of this House and which, indeed, strikes at the most basic historical and traditional privilege of this House, namely, that of being a representative institution.

The incident arises from an attempt, or rather a series of attempts, over the past year on the part of the National Harbours Board to impose on the port of Halifax and Dartmouth a system of shed rentals. This policy has been universally condemned by each and every segment of the port communities, including the mayors, members of parliament and members of the Shipping Federation of Canada.

As a final effort to see if the deadlock could be broken, the Shipping Federation of Canada requested a meeting with the National Harbours Board. The board accepted, but insisted that this meeting take place in Montreal, and the federation agreed. Its members travelled there on Monday, February 24. The meeting was not chaired by the chairman of the National Harbours Board but by the vice-chairman, and representative on the board of the St. Lawrence river ports, Mr. Guy Beaudet, acting as the official spokesman of the National Harbours Board.

After what has been described as a stormy meeting, aggravated by the fact that the St. Lawrence board member was in the position of ultimate authority over the Atlantic port system, as reported in the Halifax Mail Star of Tuesday, February 25, a warning was issued to those in attendance.

The gist of what I have to say follows. On the front page lead story in the Halifax Mail Star referred to, the following paragraph appeared:

> Halifax representatives of the Shipping Federation of Canada were "warned" by the vice-chairman of the National Harbours Board that they were not to release details of the policy (already in circulation) to the public or members of parliament.

Since there appear on the order paper of this House several unanswered and, incidentally, starred questions on this matter in my name, I can only conclude that this threat of dire consequences was directed at me and at my fellow representatives of the Halifax and Dartmouth port community, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Inasmuch as ministers of the Crown are also members of parliament, I think that this exclusion would have applied to them as well. Mr. Speaker, I have since verified that these comments were in fact uttered, although no recording of the meeting was kept.

I submit that it is incredible that an agency of the federal Crown with the authority and absolute power of the National Harbours Board should make such a statement, attempting to enjoin responsible citizens from communicating with members of parliament and with ministers of the Crown. I would suggest that this threat, this intimidation, this senseless coercion, affects my privilege and affects materially the privilege of the House. If this institution is to keep its cherished representative value, then I would submit it is a logical and physical prerequisite that representations must always be able to be made freely and without impediment to members of this chamber.

● (1410)

When that ability is strangled, the ability of this House to continue to represent is dead. Our trust is to preserve that ability, a trust which weighs most heavily on the first commoner. Every member of this chamber has taken an oath. There is no reason why members of the Shipping Federation of Canada cannot communicate with a member of parliament. The oath of a member of the National Harbours Board is no more sacred than that taken by hon. members of this House. Our interests are common, in fact.

I refer Your Honour to your own comments the other day in speaking to questions of privilege somewhat similar—although different in some aspects—raised by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). With respect to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa Your Honour said, and I quote:

In the final analysis, it would be almost impossible for the House to say that the complaint . . .

And I take this to mean a complaint or any complaint.

. . . against government services would not qualify as a question of privilege. I hope hon. members would be unanimous that questions of privilege are not suitable for that kind of grievance.

A little later on Your Honour goes on to say:

Some of them will amount to legitimate grievances that ought to be brought to the doorstep of the minister responsible. Therefore, the only vehicle we have now is the question of privilege. If we accept a question of privilege in its classic terms as not suitable for accomplishing this objective, then we must surely begin to ask ourselves if we ought not now, in recognition of the many important areas into which members have to bring themselves, to be examining new effective and direct procedures to air those grievances that are legitimate grievances which arise outside the House but which do not qualify as questions of privilege.

I would suggest that Your Honour not comment necessarily on that ruling but to apply your own admonition, perhaps Your Honour might be better serving the needs of parliament if the Chair were to recognize that in fact we have no other method of bringing what may or may not be legitimate grievances before this chamber and before responsible ministers. Without elaborating on that, because we do not have any other vehicle, it may well be that Your Honour could again reiterate or suggest that a way out of this dilemma is a provision within the rules of the House for other methods of dealing with matters of this nature. But in the absence of that, I had no resource but to raise this question of the propriety of a senior member of the public service threatening members of a Canadian constituency, whatever their responsibility, and in fact warning and threatening them not to communicate with members of parliament.

If it is found that there is a prima facie case, I would be very pleased to move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to forthwith give a full and frank explanation of his department's and the government's policy with respect to the warning and conduct of the National Harbours Board, before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was good enough not only to give the Chair the required notice under the rules of this question of privilege, but indeed, to give within that notice sufficient detail to enable the Chair to be somewhat prepared for the argument which the hon. member has so ably put forward.

I think the hon. member has pointed out the similarity to those questions of privilege put forward a few days ago by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa and the hon. member for Laprairie and it is more than I could overlook. Accordingly, as I said on that occasion, the classic definition of a question of privilege does not fit circumstances in which a member in his duties outside this House finds that his scope is being restricted or attempts are being made to restrict his scope of intervention and effective work on behalf of not only his own constituents but his point of view as a member of the federal parliament. It is, nonetheless, another example of the serious problems which can arise when the scope of activity of a member is restricted in that way or when attempts are made to restrict it.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

For the moment, I feel absolutely certain that the classic definition of a question of privilege as we know it does not fit because it does not affect the right of speech of the hon. member in this House. Indeed, his right of speech in this House to complain and to raise this grievance is unquestioned. The doctrine of ministerial responsibility is very important to the parliamentary system. The minister ought to be questioned about this. Within the limits of the powers available to me I will recognize the hon. member in the question period today, and if the answer of the minister is not sufficiently expansive to satisfy him, he will receive priority treatment on the adjournment debate. That is the least the Chair can do at the present time.

It is to be hoped that the procedure committee, which has a blanket reference, might take cognizance of this very important development and try to find a way through which meaningful confrontation between the minister and the hon. member might take place. I might add that not only do I feel the classic question of privilege does not cover the situation, I am not even sure that if it were accepted as a question of privilege the result would give the member any satisfaction. A finding by this House that a question of privilege exists, or a subsequent finding by a committee that a question of privilege exists, might be the legal result but might not be very effective in remedying the situation. Surely a direct, one to one confrontation, is more effective.

Within those limits I will take all possible steps to see that the hon. member is provided with that opportunity within existing procedures.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF TIME LIMIT FOR PAYMENT OF SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent and pressing matter is the incredible order issued by the Minister of National Revenue to business establishments to deliver their federal sales tax collections before the end of February at their own cost and expense to the government by any other means than the Post Office mails—a government run monopoly. This order is issued under threat of reprisal for late delivery of collections and is a flagrant repudiation of the law that posting in a mail drop is delivery to Her Majesty. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the government accept the consequences of the failure of the Post Office to deliver the mails, as Canadian citizens must, and extend the time limited for federal sales tax payments by business establishments until postal service is back to normal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD REPORT ON NUTRITION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I too ask the unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The Food Prices Review Board today released its study on nutrition. The report found that there are serious deficiencies in the diets of Canadians, especially protein deficiencies among older men and women and calcium deficiencies among all age groups except the very young. In my view this is exacerbated by the increase in the price of meat products and milk. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the report of the Food Prices Review Board on Nutrition, released this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. As it is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent question.

Owing to the terrific increase in crimes and murders in Quebec, especially in Montreal, and as it is urgent to bring correctives to the problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed immediately to inquire whether capital punishment should be restored in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF BILINGUAL LABELLING REQUIREMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing concern to Canadian businessmen, namely, the requirement that all package labels be printed in both official languages as of September 1. The sudden urgency arises from the recent decisions of a number of foreign exporters not to comply with the law, thus effectively cutting off supply and, hence, the livelihood of a number of Canadian businessmen who are under the impression that the government is doing nothing to alleviate the problem. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the House direct this matter to the Standing Committee on Consumer Affairs for complete study of its effects on small and large businesses and the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent for the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PROPOSED MEASURE TO REDUCE NUMBER OF IMPAIRED DRIVERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

Given the fact that alcoholism at the steering wheel is responsible for the great majority of fatal road accidents, and since Holland, in the face of this plague, has implemented legislation aimed at freeing Dutch roads of 99 per cent of the drivers under the influence of alcohol, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs review the legislation implemented by Holland to face this plague of alcoholism at the steering wheel and report to the House on the advisability of passing similar legislation to free Canadian roads of the plague of drunken drivers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE GUIDELINES RESPECTING THE PORTRAYAL OF SEX AND VIOLENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-380, to amend the Broadcasting Act (guidelines respecting portrayal of sex and violence).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to clean up the jungle of sex and violence that is becoming characteristic of Canadian television.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Question No. 1—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Will the reasons for permitting or not permitting proposed foreign investments in Canada under the Foreign Investment Review Act be made available to the public in the form of published decisions?

2. Will the continuing rules or restrictions on any foreign investor allowed to make an investment in Canada under the Foreign Investment Review Act, any applications to modify such rules and regulations and any decision by the Cabinet to vary such rules and regulations be made available to the public in published form?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. All decisions under the foreign Investment Review Act will be published in summary form in the Canada Gazette. In addition, from time to time, there will be issued news releases which, in the case of allowed investments, will provide whatever information can be made available as to the reasons for the government's decisions to allow without breaking the confidentiality of the information supplied to the government, in confidence, by parties to the transaction or jeopardizing their legitimate commercial interests. Past practices in that regard are now under review with the object of making public more information than heretofore about the reasons for decisions to allow.

GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT USED BY PRIME MINISTER FOR VACATION

Question No. 25—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What government aircraft transported the Prime Minister and his family at taxpayers expense to the Caribbean for a 1974 Easter vacation and (a) what is the cost per hour of keeping such an aircraft in the air including fuel, crew, etc. (b) how many flying-hours were involved in this case (c) on what date and time did the aircraft leave Canada and on what date and time did the aircraft return to Canada (d) how many gallons of jet fuel were consumed and what is the cost per gallon of such fuel?

2. For what reason did the Prime Minister and his family not travel on regular scheduled commercial airlines to their Caribbean destination?

3. What was the entire total cost to the taxpayers for any and all aspects of this trip on the part of the Prime Minister and members of his family?

4. Did the government pay any portion of the cost of the Prime Minister's holiday trip to Antigua in 1974 and, if so, what was the total figure involved and for what specific items?

5. Did the government pay any portion of the cost of the Prime Minister's skiing holiday trip to Switzerland in 1974 and, if so, what was the total figure involved and for what specific items?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of Transport and the Prime Minister's Office as follows: 1. (a) $650; (b) 12 flying hours; (c) Departed Canada 9035 hours, April 12, 1974, Returned Canada 2200 hours, April 17, 1974; (d) 6,700 gallons at 42.5¢ per gallon.

2. See page 8618, House of Commons Debates, Volume 117, Number 189, 1st Session, 29th Parliament and page 2136, Volume 118, Number 50, 2nd Session, 29th Parliament.

3. MOT total costs $9,085.

4. MOT Viscount used Ottawa—Toronto—Ottawa on two occasions—one at start of trip, one upon return of Prime Minister—total cost of $2,940.

5. MOT Viscount used Ottawa—Montreal—Ottawa on return of Prime Minister from Europe—cost of $690.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—COMPENSATION

Question No. 286—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a flyer published on January 1, 1974 offering summer employment for the period May 1 to September 3, 1974 for young men to participate in the Changing of the Guard ceremony on Parliament Hill at a salary of $1,800?

2. On March 31, were those enrolled informed that the pay was to be $1,500 and, if so, will the Department of National Defence live up to its original commitment?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. A flyer was issued by the Governor General's Foot Guards (Militia) (GGFG) late in 1973 for the purpose of recruiting militia men to serve with the Public Duties Detachment (PDD) which performs the Changing of the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. The salary quoted, "approximately $1,800", was based on the new rates of pay for Reservists but erroneously applied to the old system of pay which permitted members of the PDD to advance in rank and trade during their period of employment, whereas under the new rates of pay incentive pay increments are granted only after completion of one year of service. Mobile Command advised the GGFG of the inaccuracies contained in the flyer in February, 1974 and directed the unit to remove the pamphlet from circulation.

2. The GGFG contingent was assembled the weekend of March 31, 1974 and advised that the information relating to pay contained in the flyer was in error. They were all informed more than a month before their duties commenced that the minimum pay for the period May 1—September 3, 1974 would be $1,512. Subsequently this information was confirmed in writing to all members of the PDD, and 49 out of 50 agreed to serve at the announced salary of $1,512.

AMHERST DAILY NEWS

Question No. 346—Mr. Coates:

1. Was a DREE grant awarded to the Amherst Daily News of Amherst, Nova Scotia and, if so (a) on what date (b) what was the amount of the grant (c) what were the funds to be used for specifically (d) has the payment of the grant been made by the government?

2. Who is the publisher of the Amherst Daily News and who is the President of the company and the members of the Board of Directors?

3. Was the publisher of the Amherst Daily News a candidate in the federal election campaign of October 30, 1972 and, if so, for what political party and what were the official results of that election campaign?

4. Have similar DREE grants been awarded to other daily newspapers and, if so (a) what daily newspapers have received such grants (b) in what amounts (c) for what specific improvements?

5. Have similar DREE grants been made available to radio and television stations and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) to what radio and television stations (c) for what specific purposes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Chief Electoral Office as follows: 1. Under the authority of the Regional Development Incentives Act, an offer of an incentive grant to the Amherst Daily News was made on February 19, 1974, and accepted on February 22, 1974. The estimated amount of the development incentive to be paid is $28,164, based on expected eligible costs of $140,818. The offer was made to assist the applicant to expand and modernize its printing facility at Amherst. No funds had been expended as at October 8, 1974.

2. The publisher of the Amherst Daily News and the president of this company is R. M. Van Snick. The directors are: B. Murphy, Vice-President and General Manager; Mary K. Brown, Secretary; and H. B. Rhude, Director (Lawyer).

3. Yes. Voting results were as follows: Cumberland-Colchester North: Robert C. Coates (P.C.), 19,455; R. M. Dick Van Snick (Lib.), 10,163; Allan McLean Marchbank (N.D.P.), 3,635; Robert Kirk, 245.

4. (a), (b) and (c) Under Section 2(2) (c) of the Regional Development Incentives Regulations, a manufacturing or processing facility, for the purposes of eligibility under the provisions of the legislation, is defined as follows: "Manufacturing or processing operation means an operation whereby any goods, products, commodities or wares are created, fabricated or refined or made more marketable but does not include . . . publishing other than printing." In reply to Question No. 223, asked during the Second Session of the 29th Parliament, an alphabetic listing was tabled on March 27, 1974, of companies that had accepted incentive grant offers from the Department under the Regional Development Incentives Act, or Section 10 of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion Act, as of August 31, 1973, for the establishment, expansion or modernization of printing or related facilities. It was noted at that time that, while a certain number of the firms listed also operated publishing facilities, the grants were operated with their printing operations only. That listing included the names of four firms that publish daily newspapers. These four firms are: Sun Publishing Co., Brandon, Manitoba; Gazette Canadian Printing Company, Montreal, Quebec; Le Soleil Ltd., Quebec, Quebec; and Publication du Journal de Québec (Offset) Inc. Other details relating to the grants offered and accepted by the companies concerned are shown in the listing. There have been no similar incentive grant offers made and accepted between August 31, 1973, and October 9, 1974, except as indicated in 1 above.

5. No; (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

CANADIAN RESIDENTS LIABLE FOR INCOME TAX OF LESS THAN 10 PER CENT

Question No. 785—Mr. Kaplan:

For the most recent year for which figures are available, how many Canadian residents had incomes within the levels shown and were liable for income tax of less than 10 per cent thereof (a) $25,000 to $50,000 (b) $50,000 to $100,000 (c) $100,000 to $200,000 (d) $200,000 and over (e) $50,000 and over?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): (a) 2,486; (b) 327; (c) 75; (d) 49; (e) 451. This information is based on information derived from the 1972 Statistical Master file (the most recent year for which figures are available). Total income is defined as total income assessed for tax purposes, and includes income for employment, adult training allowances, research grants etc., pension income, income from other sources (including unemployment insurance benefits, dividends, interest, etc.) and net incomes from self employment. Tax payable includes federal and provincial Taxes assessed but excludes Quebec provincial taxes.

Order Paper Questions

EMPLOYEES OF THE ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 811—Mr. Stevens:

1. As of March 31 in each year 1968, 1970, 1972 and 1974 (a) how many were employed by the Economic Council of Canada (b) what would have been their aggregate salaries if all were employed for a full year (c) how many had salary levels of (i) $20,000 or more (ii) $35,000 or more (iii) $50,000 or more?

2. What was the salary or the salary range for each of the five highest paid employees of the Council?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1.

		March 31, 1968	March 31, 1970	March 31, 1972	March 31, 1974
(a)		104	111	110	127
(b)		1,138,311	1,265,985	1,516,978	1,855,692
(c)	(i)	16	18	23	21
	(ii)	Nil	Nil	2	2
	(iii)	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
2.	(1) 32,600	35,000—39,000		40,000—45,000	44,000—54,000

USE OF THE NATIONAL FLAG

Question No. 838—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What is the protocol determining which officials of the government, or those accredited as diplomats or otherwise to Canada are entitled to show national flags on their official vehicles?

2. Among Canadian officials, is that right restricted to representatives of the Head of State?

3. Does the official vehicle of the Prime Minister carry a national flag and, if so, on what date did that practice begin and what is its justification?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. In so far as the Departments of External Affairs and of the Secretary of State are concerned, the answer to part 1 is that there are no Canadian regulations concerning the flying of the national flag on the official vehicles of officials of the government. The international rules, which are accepted by Canada, appear in Article 20 of the Vienna Convention of Diplomatic Relations and Article 29 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations. These declare that the heads of diplomatic missions and consular posts may fly their national flag on their "means of transports", at their place of residence, and at their office premises. As a matter of courtesy and international custom the benefits of this rule are extended to heads of state, heads of government, and ministers of foreign affairs visiting Canada as guests of the government, whose national flags are displayed on their official vehicles and at their places of residence (except Rideau Hall).

2. With regard to Part 2 the answer is, no. In so far as local protocol permits Canadian heads of post abroad may and frequently do fly the Canadian flag on their official vehicle and at their residences and office premises. Of the various heads of post, only ambassadors and high commissioners in commonwealth countries where the Queen is not sovereign are representatives of the head of state. It may be noted in this connection that the Governor General as the representative of the head of state in Canada flies his personal standard rather than the Canadian flag at his place of residence and on his motor vehicle. When in office the Administrator of the Government of Canada follows the same procedure.

[Mr. Basford.]

3. The Prime Minister's official vehicle carries a flag when the Prime Minister is in the vehicle on official occasions. The date on which the practice began is not known. In 1967, the Prime Minister was assigned an official vehicle and a flag was used on the vehicle on official occasions. It may be that prior to 1967 a flag was used on official vehicles assigned occasionally to the Prime Minister however records are not available to accurately verify this point. It is an international custom for heads of government to fly their national flag on their vehicle.

REPORT ON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY EXPORTS

Question No. 900—Mr. Herbert:

In reference to the answer to Question No. 208, will the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce make public the Report on Construction Industry Exports and will the Department announce any actions taken or contemplated resulting from the submission of this Report?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, and the department has taken the following steps: Initiated the Multilateral Project Information System to alert the Canadian construction industry to forthcoming projects financed by the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank; Working with the Export Committee of the Canadian Construction Association to inform companies of opportunities for construction exports; Encouraged the industry to use the Program for Export Market Development. (Part of this program is designed to encourage the formation of consortia for overseas projects); The Trade Commissioner Service has been alerted to notify interested Canadian construction companies of overseas projects.

SECURITY—INVOLVEMENT BY DIRECTOR OF SECURITY

Question No. 972—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Which members of the Security Branch, the Military Police or the Intelligence Branch of the Canadian Armed Forces are at or have attended or instructed at the CIA-sponsored International Police Academy in Washington, D.C.?

2. Is Colonel Dabros, the present Director of Security, Canadian Armed Forces, a former student or instructor at the Academy and (a)

if so, on what date and what subjects did he cover (b) if not, what was the nature of his duties during his posting to Washington?

3. Is it customary to have a Canadian Military Police or Security Officer posted to Washington, a city where Canada has no troops to police?

4. With reference to the answer to Part 17 of Question No. 1,849 of the First Session of the 29th Parliament, where it is stated that Colonel Dabros held responsibilities in relation to receiving "reports on student unrest" in 1969 and 1970, will the military be stepping up its surveillance activities of colleges and universities?

5. Has Colonel Dabros, or the Armed Forces Security Branch, been engaged in ascertaining voting patterns of Canadian Armed Forces personnel?

6. (a) How many staff, including reserve, full-time and part-time military and civilian, does Colonel Dabros have under his command (b) where are the major security units and staff located (c) how many and which ones and which staff members are located on or near a university or college in Canada (d) does Colonel Dabros have a university degree (e) what staff, facilities or equipment does the Security Branch possess for electronic surveillance?

7. (a) Is the present Director of Security (i) a former member (ii) currently a member of the Police Security Planning and Analysis Group of the Department of the Solicitor General (b) does he share membership with a member of this group on any interdepartmental or security committees and, if so, which ones and what access has he to the Solicitor General who may legally authorize wiretapping or electronic surveillance of subversive groups?

8. (a) On what date was Colonel Dabros, present Director of Security of the Canadian Armed Forces, appointed (b) what is his present salary (c) at the time of his present rank and/or appointment, how many officers in the Security Branch and in the Armed Forces were equal to him in his previous rank and possessed seniority over him?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. None.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Colonel Dabros was the Executive Staff Officer to the Commander, Canadian Defence Liaison Staff, Washington, D.C.

3. No. However, staff appointments in Washington or elsewhere are opened to officers of any classification, including officers from the Security Branch.

4. No. The Department of National Defence is not engaged in this type of activity.

5. No.

6. (a) Presently none. (b) and (c) It is not considered to be in the public interest to disclose the location of these units. (d) No. (e) It is not considered to be in the public interest to disclose this information.

7. (a) (i) and (ii) No. (b) No.

8. (a) Colonel Dabros was appointed Director of Security on July 1, 1973 and relinquished this on August 4, 1974. (b) Salary range $27,000-$30,600. (c) At the time of Col. Dabros promotion to his present rank no officers in the security classification were senior to him and two officers possessed equal seniority.

CANADIAN SECURITY—CONFIDENTIAL BRIEFINGS

Question No. 973—Mr. Rodriguez:

Did any senior member of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group, formerly the Security Planning and Research Group, and/or the RCMP Security Service and/or the Armed Forces Security Branch and/or the Security Branch of the Department of Supply and Services, ever deliver a confidential briefing on the threat to Canada's security by subversive elements to any group of industrialists in Toronto and Montreal and/or Vancouver and, if so (a) who were these government officials and on what date and where did the briefing take place (b) did the briefing concentrate on labour problems and promise to provide industrialists with confidential data on subversive organizations, including labour unions (c) which organizations were named (d) who were the industrialists present (e) was any solicitation made in any way in connection with this briefing for funds for the Liberal Party (f) does the government regard such appearances by public servants as partisan (g) what other organizations have received such briefing (h) did the resignation of Mr. John Starnes as Director General of RCMP Security Services result from his being coerced into taking part in such practices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General as follows: Yes, (a) Mr. Robin Bourne, Assistant Deputy Minister, Police and Security Planning and Analysis Branch, Ministry of the Solicitor General; and Mr. John Starnes, Director General, Security Service, Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The briefings took place in Toronto and January 31, 1972, Montreal on February 2, 1972, and Vancouver on May 25, 1972. (b) No. (c) and (d) These were briefings which were similar to those given by the RCMP during the last decade to various interested groups. They were more general in nature than those delivered in camera to the parliamentary committee on justice and legal affairs. It would not be appropriate to discuss either the organizations named or those who attended these briefings. (e) No. (f) No. (g) See answers (c) and (d) above. (h) No. The briefings were made in full cooperation between the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the RCMP Security Service since the briefing of concerned citizens is considered to be a part of the role of the Ministry of the Solicitor General and of the RCMP.

PRIME MINISTER'S STAFF

Question No. 1,015—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what date did Mr. Jim MacDonald, Liberal candidate in the July 8 election in Grenville-Carleton, become a member of the staff of the Prime Minister's Office?

2. (a) What are all his duties (b) what is his annual salary (c) what are all his qualifications for this employment (d) was the fact that he is a former Liberal Party candidate a consideration in the obtaining of such employment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. September 9, 1974.

2. (a) Policy assistant; (b) $20,000—$25,000; (c) Overall suitability of the individual's professional, academic and personal qualifications in relation to the job requirement. (d) All appointments are governed by statutes and this appointment falls in the area of appointments of personal ministerial staff—party affiliation may or may not be a consideration in this instance just as has been the practice followed by ministers of governments in the past. This applies not only to personal ministerial staff but also to personal staff of leaders of opposition parties.

BEEF GRADING

Question No. 1,049—Mr. MacLean:

1. What action is being taken by the government to assure that meats which are graded "C" or "B" in the abattoir retain the same grade rating throughout the distribution system until purchased by the consumer?

2. What action is being taken by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to assure that the differential in price of "A" and "C" grades of beef is retained throughout the distribution system until purchased by the consumer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: 1. Graded beef carcasses are appraised for maturity, quality and fat level and the appropriate grade stamped on each carcass 10 times (five on each side)—on the short hip, sirloin, short loin rib and chuck. When the grade stamps have been applied, the plant applies a registered coded ribbon-brand, which is a continuous ribbon-like brand which runs from the hip to the front portion of the chuch. This brand must be applied at the time of grading and under the general supervision of the grading inspector. The ribbon-brands designate grade both by words and colour. Grade stamps and colour-coded ribbon brands are carried through the merchandising chain, however, at the retail level during breaking of carcasses into retail cuts, all or part of the stamps and ribbon-brand may disappear due to cutting and trimming.

2. There is no legislation administered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which regulates the price differential between grades of beef to ensure that such differential are retained throughout the distribution system. These differentials have been established by competition in the market place and recently selling practices have changed at the retail level, that have given more prominence to the maintenance of these differentials. The beef inquiry recently announced by the government will be examining this question. If there are recommendations to the department on this matter, the department will be prepared to respond at that time.

DOCUMENT ADVERTISING OPENINGS FOR SEASONAL EMPLOYEES IN THE ONTARIO POSTAL REGION

Question No. 1,097—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a document advertising openings for seasonal employees in the Ontario Postal Region circulated showing the new pay rates would be $3.84 per hour for inside (sorting), $4.02 per hour for heavy work (mail handler) and $4.21 per hour for outside (letter carrier)?

2. Was a further document sent to each accepted applicant showing a change in pay rates to be $2.50 per hour for inside work and $2.75 per hour for outside work?

3. What are all the reasons for the discrepancy shown in the rates of pay?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. Yes, however this was issued in error.

2. Yes, a further document was sent to each accepted applicant showing a change in pay rates to be $2.50 per hour for inside work and $2.75 per hour for outside work except for some 17 candidates in the Ottawa Post Office who were not notified of the rate change, consequently, they were paid at the higher rate until they were notified of the change in rates on December 6, 1974.

3. The rates $3.84, $4.02, and $4.21 are contract rates established for employees carrying out the full range of duties. The rates $2.50 and $2.75 were established for Christmas helpers who are not required to carry out the full range of duties.

[Mr. MacLean.]

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,109—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of the Solicitor General have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Solicitor General and the Secretary of State as follows: Ministry Secretariat, Canadian Penitentiary Service, National Parole Board & Service: 1. All documents such as forms, stationery, employee directives, etc. are translated into the appropriate official language. Records, such as employees' files or correspondence on any other file, are translated only if required.

2 and 3. Past records are translated only as required. Many documents in the past, such as employee directives, forms, stationery, etc., were bilingual. However, because of the government's official languages policy, they have been reviewed and, where necessary, changes made to bring them into line with the Federal Identity Program. As the Ministry of the Solicitor General has only been in existence for seven years, the amount of translation required on past records is minimal.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of the Solicitor General, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 607,442; for 1973-1974 it was 713,000. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the translation bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. Due to the number and variety of factors involved, such as the time required for translators to complete each item or task, the continuously increasing cost for personnel, accommodation and material, no reasonable estimate of cost can be determined.

6. No comparative costs are available.

NOTE: Translation services for the Ministry of the Solicitor General are provided by the Secretary of State Department. No charges are attached to this service.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police: 1. All directives, forms and stationery must be printed in a bilingual format.

2. Not applicable.

3. September, 1976.

4. 1972-1973: $264,722; 1973-1974: $314,083.

5. It is impossible to estimate what the total cost will be.

6. Approximately $325,868.97.

NOTE: The RCMP have their own translation service and are able, therefore, to provide the above information.

PERCENTAGE OF TAX AUDITS RESULTING IN INCREASED ASSESSMENTS

Question No. 1,151—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 578, of the tax filers audited in each group, what percentage, if any, of the audits resulted in increased assessments and, if there were increased assessments, what proportion of these were not contested?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The information necessary to answer Question No. 1,151 is derived from a different source to that used for Question No. 578. The two data sources do not compare exactly due to a different time frame basis for extracting the data. They may be considered however, to be reasonably comparable. The second part of the question dealing with contested assessments cannot be answered exactly as requested. We do not have information available on ones and how many were contested. Further, we can only provide information relating to contested assessments for each range as specified, where the subsequent action results in a change. The accompanying table indicates the number of contested audits completed in each fiscal year which resulted in a change from the previous assessment.

Audits of Large Corporations—Increased Assessments and Appeals or Objections
Gross Income Range

	200,000,000 and over	25,000,000 to 200,000,000	5,000,000 to 25,000,000
1971–1972
Audits with Increases All Audits (per cent)	70.3	56.6	58.9
Audits Not Appealed or Objected* All Audits with Increases (per cent)	69.2	61.7	73.8
1972–1973
Audits with Increases All Audits (per cent)	58.5	54.0	56.8
Audits Not Appealed or Objected* All Audits with Increases (per cent)	25.0	72.5	76.2
1973–1974
Audits with Increases All Audits (per cent)	69.7	55.1	53.4
Audits Not Appealed or Objected* All Audits with Increases (per cent)	43.5	68.6	79.5

*This percentage reflects the complement of the number of audits that are appealed or objected to that result in a change in the original assessment.

COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY

Question No. 1,164—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

How many commissions of inquiry (a) have been appointed since 1963 (b) are still in operation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Commissions of Inquiry under Part I of the Inquiries Act. (a) 30; (b) 5.

GRANTS TO TERRA POWER TRACTOR CO. LTD., OF SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

How much in government grants of all kinds from all departments was allocated to Terra Power Tractor Co. Limited of Saskatoon and, in each case (a) from which department (b) for what purposes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): None.

MR. PITFIELD—DAYS ABSENT

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 982 to the effect that Mr. Michael Pitfield was not absent from duty as Deputy Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs "except as provided by Public Service Regulations", on what days was Mr. Pitfield absent from his job as Deputy Minister since January 1, 1974 and, in each case, what specific Public Service Regulation permitted such absences?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See reply to Question 445 answered December 18, 1974, Hansard No. 56, page 2350, regarding Executive Development Leave, August 10, 1974 to January 10, 1975. It is not customary to make public detailed personnel information such as an employee's use of sick or vacation leave as provided by Public Service Regulations. A copy of Order in Council P.C. 1973-1/2128 of July 17, 1973, "Guidelines on non-salary compensation (including leave) for deputy ministers and other persons appointed by the Governor in Council" will be forwarded to the hon. member for Leeds.

EXECUTIVE DEVELOPMENT LEAVE—MR. PITFIELD

Question No. 1,197—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 446 to the effect that total expenses for Mr. Michael Pitfield from April 20, 1968 to October 24, 1974 totalled $27,142.52, does any portion of this amount include expenses in connection with Mr. Pitfield's education at Harvard University or any other institution, travelling to or from any educational institution and, if so, what is a complete breakdown of such items with costs?

2. What is a complete breakdown of items and costs involved under "Executive Development Leave" totalling $2,163.63?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Yes. Includes the $2,163.63 referred to in part 2, plus travel expenses of $146.99 relating to Executive Development Leave at Harvard.

2. Accommodation and utilities, $969.00; Rental security deposit, $551.00*; Salary equalization, $643.63; Total $2,163.63.

*NOTE—Security deposit refunded to Receiver General on completion of course.

REGIONAL RATE OF PAY FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,252—Mr. Forrestall:

How many people as employees of the government or its agencies were paid a regional rate in 1974, 1969 and 1964, expressed in absolute terms and as a percentage of the total government employment?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): In September 1964 there were 25,376 full-time employees paid on a regional rate basis. This represents 15.5 per cent of the total number of full-time employees under the Civil Service Act, Ships' Officers and Crews Regulations and the Prevailing Rate Regulations. In September 1969, there were 41,402 employees paid on a regional rate basis. This represents 22 per cent of the total number of employees under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, Schedule 1, Part 1. In September 1974, there were 48,300 employees paid on a regional basis. This represents 19.5 per cent of the total number of employees under the Public Staff Relations Act, Schedule 1, Part 1.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

ABOLITION OF REGIONAL PAY RATES

Question No. 1,254—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the government envisage the day when the present system of paying government employees regional rates will be abolished or eliminated and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): If it should eventuate that existing regional pay differentials outside the Public Service disappear, then the government, as employer, in keeping with its policy of pay comparability, will cease to pay regional rates. Since it is impossible to predict if and when regional pay differentials in Canada will disappear, the government, as employer, cannot specify a date for the abolition or elimination of regional rates.

CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM 1975—DARTMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,261—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the construction programme for the City of Dartmouth for the Department of Public Works for the year 1975?

2. What is the projected construction programme for the Department for 1976?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. There was no contruction program undertaken in the city of Dartmouth by this department during 1974/75, either chargeable to its own funds or on behalf of other government departments.

2. The projected construction program for 1975/76 fiscal year includes the following projects, all of which will be funded by other government departments: (a) Project, Bedford Institute of Oceanography Laboratory; Department, Energy, Mines and Resources; (b) Project, Wharf Extension; Department, Ministry of Transport; (c) Project, Prison Hospital; Department, Solicitor General.

ADDITIONAL RCMP SERVICES—NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,263—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Province of Nova Scotia made any requests for additional RCMP services along the Eastern Shore of Nova Scotia?

2. What would be the attitude of the government to such a request should it not already have been forthcoming?

3. If a request has been made, what action is the government taking in that respect?

4. Would the government take unilateral action to increase RCMP protection for the Eastern Shore of Nova Scotia if no request is forthcoming from the provincial government and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. No. Increases in man-power were initiated by the Commanding Officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Nova Scotia in consultation with the provincial attorney-general.

2. Any request would be studied and, if the increases were warranted, the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would include them in his program forecast submission to Treasury Board.

3. Additional positions, with he concurrence of the provincial attorney-general, have been programmed for April 1, 1975.

4. As was pointed out in the reply to Part 1, requests for establishment increases are normally initiated by the Commanding Officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Nova Scotia and, with the concurrence of the provincial attorney-general, are included in the program forecast. It is impossible to theorize as to what action would be taken should the provincial attorney-general not agree to proposed changes as each case must be judged on its own merits.

SUBSIDY ON MILK

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Robinson:

What was the total cost of the subsidy on milk in 1973 and 1974?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Subsidies paid on powder and fluid milk were:

	1973	1974
Fluid	$21,659,898.06	$87,112.299,12
Powder	1,209,264.19	8,358,507.37
Total	$22,869,162.25	$95,470,806.49

PRICE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN POWDERED AND FLUID MILK

Question No. 1,279—Mr. Robinson:

What is the price difference for powdered milk as compared to fluid milk?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Skim milk powder is sold at the retail level in various sized packages with savings per pound as the package size increases. Similarly, fluid milk is sold in various sizes of packages with savings per quart as the package size increases. Fluid milk prices per quart are generally less than half the price of a pound of skim milk powder Skim milk powder, which receives a federal subsidy of 29 cents per pound, however, is reconstituted to make four quarts from one pound. Thus the cost of one quart of reconstituted skim milk is approximately 20 cents as compared to recent Toronto prices for fluid milk of approximately 50 cents per quart. While these prices may vary across the country, the large price difference for reconstituted skim milk compared to fluid milk is always evident.

FULL-TIME EMPLOYEES—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 1,298—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of Agriculture on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) 9,494; (b) 9,774.

2. 1974: (a) 4,629; (b) 4,216; (c) 602; (d) 47. 1975: (a) 3,378; (b) 5,477; (c) 830; (d) 89.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—FULL-TIME EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,314—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer to this question for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. (a) 1678; (b) 1790.

2. In 1974: (a) 874; (b) 562; (c) 225; (d) 17. In 1975: (a) 725; (b) 706; (c) 302; (d) 57.

NOTE: The over-all increase during this period stems from the fact that in anticipation of the decentralization of the department a temporary freeze was placed on new appointments in 1973 and there was little or no replacement of personnel lost though normal attrition until the decentralization took place. It should also be noted that between 1974 and 1975 there were revisions in basic salary scales that affected the numbers in each salary range specified.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,322—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of Veterans Affairs on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. (a) 8,836; (b) 7,107.

2. 1974: (a) 7,322; (b) 1,380; (c) 79; (d) 55; 1975: (a) 5,347; (b) 1,609; (c) 101; (d) 50.

CHAUFFEUR FOR PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 1,353—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names and job designations of all persons who have been employed in the capacity of chauffeur for the Prime Minister since April 20, 1968 (a) on what dates were they hired and on what dates did they leave, if applicable (b) what is the salary in each case (c) what is a complete list of any previous government employment in each case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. D. J. K. Dempster—GLMDO 4 (General Labour Machine Driving—Operating). (a) November 15, 1968; (b) $3.77 per hour; (c) For the period April 20, 1968 to November 14, 1968, Mr. Dempster was a member of the Canadian Armed Forces and was on loan to the PMO from National Defence Headquarters. Mr. Dempster served 28 years in the forces prior to his present appointment.

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,367—Mr. Robinson:

Has the government any programme to encourage the sugar beet industry in Canada as a means of reducing the price of sugar and the necessity of importing sugar at high inflationary prices?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as the Agricultural Stabilization Act is concerned sugar beets is not a mandatory commodity and a support program is not currently in effect.

SEVERAL GRADES FOR PRODUCE

Question No. 1,368—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of providing several grades of produce, apart from Canada No. 1, etc., so that up to 30 per cent of production will not be wasted as unfit for market, particularly when there is nothing wrong with the produce nutritionally, but primarily only in appearance of the vegetable, meat, etc.?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In general, grades are provided beyond Canada No. 1 to cover all wholesome products. For meat there are grades to cover all livestock carcasses. For fresh fruits several additional grades are provided. For vegetables, the great demand is for Canada No. 1 and in case of most fresh vegetables one additional grade only is provided to cover the rest of the wholesome product.

COMPETITION FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGE OFFICERS

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to Public Service poster number 75 ASP CCID AS 5 advertising a competition for Official Languages Officers, for what reason are there no minimum educational requirements outlined or required in the poster for such positions?

2. (a) Is it not customary for certain minimum educational standards to be required in connection with government employment depending on the nature of such employment in each case (b) is the only requirement in regard to government employment in connection with bilingual matters that the individual speak both languages at least to some degree regardless of education?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. The minimum educational requirements of the administrative services group are "an ability normally associated with completion of secondary school education and demonstrated capability, through work history, for administrative work in related areas". Except at the lower levels of the groups (levels 1 to 3), where the minima apply, or in special circumstances, where the particular requirements of the job demand higher or specialized educational qualifications, no reference is made to "educational" requirements as such. At more senior levels the "basic requirements" include an "ability" level more demanding but inclusive of the educational equivalent of lower levels. Poster competition 75-ASP-CCID-AS5 involves the AS7 level.

2. (a) Yes, it is customary for certain educational standards to be required depending on the nature of the duties in each case. However, the requirements are, in some cases, stated in terms of the knowledge or ability acquired through education, rather than in terms of formal certification. (b) Bilingual positions have the educational, knowledge and ability requirements typical of the group and level to which they belong, except for additional requirements necessitated by special cases. The linguistic requirement of a bilingual position is the only requirement that does not apply. Once the successful candidate is chosen, language training is provided if needed to meet the linguistic requirements of the position.

AUSTRALIAN REQUIREMENTS OF VISAS FOR CANADIANS

Question No. 1,469—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the government's attitude to the decision of the Government of Australia to require visas for Canadian and Commonwealth citizens wishing to visit that country?

2. Has the government in any way discussed, or made objection to, this move on the part of Australia and (a) if so, on what date and what are the details (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Has the government considered, or will it consider, reciprocal action to deal with this step taken by Australia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The decision of the government of Australia was taken in the light of that country's interests on which it would not be appropriate for the Canadian government to comment. The decision applies to all countries except New Zealand.

2. No objection has been registered. However the implications of this Australian decision have been discussed by officials of our two governments.

3. The government has no plans at present to take reciprocal action in respect of Australia.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—OBJECTIVE OF AND RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROGRAM SEEKING CONSENSUS OF VARIOUS GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister who, I believe is leaving for Europe where he will remain until the middle of March. I, of course, wish him a pleasant and successful trip.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the statement by the Acting Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think that is the shortest trip the Prime Minister has ever made. I will not repeat my good wishes. I expect they have been related to the Prime Minister by the government House leader. My question is with regard to the mysterious program of consensus toward inflationary restraint. The other day the government House leader told us that if it is under any general direction, it is under the direction of the Prime Minister. During the time the Prime Minister is in Europe, from now until the middle of March, will he be giving this program general direction from there or has he reached a consensus with the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his good wishes. I believe this is an important trip from the Canadian point of view and that domestically it is important that we protect our markets there and seek co-operation in all the areas I will be discussing. Insofar as the fight against inflation is concerned, yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been in very close contact with the Minister of Finance. We were again discussing this very subject over the lunch hour. I feel very confident in his ability and the ability of my other ministers to continue this phase of the exploration while I am away.

Mr. Stanfield: Who will be responsible for pursuing these explorations in the Prime Minister's absence? Briefly, can the Prime Minister advise what they will be exploring? We have been trying to find that out for a couple of months. Before the Prime Minister leaves, will he advise us what the government is trying to reach a consensus for and who will be looking after it in his absence.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the meetings that are going on are, of course, going on under my direction. I am the one who has invited the various representatives of the labour, business and agricultural marketing sectors to meet with groups of ministers. I again issued some invitations recently. The meetings will be going on while I am away.

INFLATION—REASON MINISTER OF FINANCE CONTINUES TO BE ASSOCIATED WITH PROGRAM SEEKING CONSENSUS OF VARIOUS GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who has the reputation of being an honest man. I wish to ask him very bluntly why he lends his name and reputation to such a farce and why he continues to accept the responsibility when the government treats his responsibility for his department with such contempt.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to tell the hon. member why, although two weeks ago tomorrow we had a fairly thorough exchange on this just after Orders of the Day. I need not recall to the hon. gentleman what was said because we were parties to that conversation, but I suggest to hon. members that it would be useful if they would look up those pages and see how fully I treated the answer at that time.

● (1430)

Basically, the government has rejected as an antidote against inflation a deflationary posture in terms of Draconian monetary and fiscal policies which would provoke massive unemployment in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We reject, as I think the Canadian people appear to have rejected, a compulsory system of income and price controls. The alternative before the country is for governments at all levels and all segments of the economy—business, labour, agriculture, the professions, owners of property—to seek some consensus voluntarily to moderate our demands on the economy. The hon. gentleman has often said that in his view inflation is the No. 1 problem in this country. I hope we can count on his co-operation in dealing with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFLATION—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT STATE PROPOSALS FOR COUNTERACTING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture on national television was quoted as saying that at the conference he attended recently in Toronto dealing with the question of inflation they were looking for good ideas. Will the minister indicate whether at that meeting he or his colleagues offered any ideas on behalf of the government as to how inflation might be curbed in this country?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been looking to the opposition for quite some time and that's why we are going out to other places.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I did say in that interview following the meetings that if one good idea came from these meetings, the effort would be worth while. These people are very appreciative of the fact that we are meeting with them, and this exchange of ideas may help us do an even better job of fighting inflation than we are doing at the present time—and we are doing one of the best jobs in the whole world as far as that goes right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I take it from the minister's answer, then, that there are certainly no ideas being offered from the government side at this conference inasmuch as he says he is looking for the opposition to supply the ideas.

Mr. Whelan: I said they seem to have run out of ideas because they haven't given us any that are workable so far. There is input both ways. They make suggestions to us and we make suggestions to them.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Agriculture said that they made suggestions at these meetings. That was my first question. Would he tell the House what those suggestions were?

Mr. Whelan: We have agreed with these people that everything would be in camera until the meetings are over.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: A secret anti-inflation policy!

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PAYING WAGES COMPARABLE TO THOSE IN PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of Treasury Board. Since in both the private and the public sector the wage demands workers are making are principally related to the high rate of inflation, has the government abandoned its traditional principle of paying its employees wages and salaries comparable with those paid in the private sector and, if not, why has it rejected the legitimate claim of the general labour and trades group who are asking not even parity with the private sector but only for 90 per cent of that level?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have stated that we are in favour of a policy of comparability with the private sector. However, we must be careful to compare apples with apples and not with oranges. For instance, we compare government employed plumbers with industry employed plumbers, and not with plumbers working on a temporary basis on construction sites who lack job security and are not eligible for the pension plans offered by the government.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Is the minister telling the House that the wage proposals put forward on behalf of the government in all the categories of tradesmen in construction meet the traditional test of comparability? Is he saying that what the government is offering meets traditional comparative standards?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there have been arbitrations and settlements over the years. This is nothing new. What we are offering government blue collar workers today is about the same comparison basis we have offered them in similar circumstances over the years.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—POSSIBILITY OF FUTURE RECRUITMENT PROBLEMS IF WAGES NOT COMPARABLE TO THOSE IN PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Is the minister aware of a report done by the pay research bureau in the Public Service Staff Relations Board which reaches a conclusion contrary to his own and suggests to the government that if it continues widening the gap between what it pays its employees and what is paid by the private sector, quite apart from the question of equity the federal government might well encounter recruitment problems of a serious nature?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): I have been talking with a lot of members of parliament who would like some of their people to work for the government. I am not afraid we shall be short of labour in the next few years, because we treat our employees very well.

AIRPORTS

PROBLEMS RELATED TO ROUYN AND VAL-D'OR AIRPORTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Like the Leader of the Opposition, I wish the right hon. Prime Minister a good trip to Europe. May it be profitable to Canada on the international scene and especially to our Canadian economy. I am sure I speak for all hon. members when I say that we are not ashamed of our Prime Minister when he goes abroad.

I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport. We have all heard that he has resigned as leader of the Quebec wing of the Liberal party. He has fairly often done good work with his students and I trust the new incumbent will be able to instill somewhat more seriousness into them.

Will the resignation of the minister allow him to devote a little more time to the solution of the serious problems of the Rouyn and Val-d'Or airports?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since I heard that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi will seek the leadership of his party, and since I know he stands a good chance of being elected, I did not feel it necessary to have as strong an organization as we had in the past in the province of Quebec.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF RECESSION—ADVICE OF PRIME MINISTER'S ECONOMISTS TO COUNTERACT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Speak right up George.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, obviously the natives are again restless. They feel that the lion is moving in for the kill. As figures released yesterday by Statistics Canada show that real domestic product has been falling steadily for the past three quarters, thereby establishing this country firmly in a recession, I should like to ask whether that group of outside economists, with which the Prime Minister has surrounded himself, and who have been working for him for the past few months, have come forward with any concrete suggestions to restore the pace of the economy to a satisfactory level and, if so, could the Prime Minister very briefly mention those suggestions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Then I take it, Mr. Speaker, that these very high priced economists who have been on the public payroll for several months now are taking no interest in the country's number one problem. I would ask the Prime Minister whether it is a fact that the only task which has been allotted them by the Prime Minister is to pass judgment on the policies put forward by the Minister of Finance and his department?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, although the opposition would need some help on that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGED WARNING BY VICE-CHAIRMAN TO HALIFAX REPRESENTATIVES NOT TO DISCUSS SHED RENTAL POLICY WITH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport aware of the statement attributed to the vice-chairman, Mr. Beaudet, of the National Harbours Board to members of the Halifax branch of the Shipping Federation of Canada after or during a meeting held in Montreal, to the effect that these responsible corporate citizens were warned not to discuss the proposed shed rental policy about to be imposed on the port of Halifax-Dartmouth on May 1 with members of the public or members of parliament and, if so, is this particular style of coercion and irresponsible conduct on the part of senior public servants acceptable to the minister?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am worried about the question put by the hon. member but, unfortunately, I am not aware of the facts. Let me check and tomorrow I will indicate exactly what the situation is.

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF SHED RENTAL POLICY AT HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in light of recent events, is the minister prepared to order or direct the National Harbours Board to shelve for the time being this particular policy in respect of shed rentals until such time as the Halifax port authority is given expanded authority, as has been done in Montreal and Vancouver and, if so, would the minister assure the House that the revamped Halifax port authority will be given a veto power over the imposition of such facile and discriminatory policies aimed allegedly, and again I quote from Mr. Beaudet, "equalizing all ports east of Montreal"?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will answer at the same time tomorrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S VIEW OF RIGHT OF MEMBER TO ACCESS TO BOARDS, COMMISSIONS, ETC.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the frustrations experienced by many members of parliament in dealing with boards and commissions, as evidenced by my colleague's point of order and others in recent days, I wonder if the right hon. gentleman when he returns from Europe might consider making a statement on motions giving the government's view that it in no way wishes to restrict access by members to boards, commissions and public servants generally? In this way the right hon. gentleman could clear up what is obviously a very frustrating matter to those of us who are trying to do our jobs here.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the point of order the hon. member refers to, but I will gladly look into his theoretical suggestion to see if I can give an adequate reply.

ABORTION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will he clarify which statement reflects the government's position on present guidelines governing therapeutic abortion clinics operating in Canadian hospitals, one as expressed in a letter dated August 6, 1970 from the present Minister of Finance in which he wrote:

> Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity.

The second statement expressing government policy was a statement of the present Minister of Justice in October, 1974 as follows:

> I advised the appropriate authorities, including therapeutic abortion committees, that the Criminal Code provisions regarding abortion were to be applied strictly: that social and economic considerations were not to be taken into account in determining whether a pregnancy lawfully could be terminated.

Would the Prime Minister indicate which of those statements reflects government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the quotation by the hon. member gives the entire position of the Minister of Justice. He has taken the quite proper position that the Criminal Code should govern this matter, and the Criminal Code refers to health as involving many considerations apart from purely physical ones. This is the way the judges are presumably interpreting the law.

An hon. Member: Is that the final view?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASED EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION IN DISCUSSIONS WITH PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I also offer the right hon. Prime Minister my best wishes for a very good trip. His important work will certainly help our country.

[English]

My question to the right hon. Prime Minister in no way involves the matter of transfer of payments to the provinces or payments under social programs. Since government expenditures for goods and services alone have risen 37 per cent in two years, by the government's own figures, how does the right hon. Prime Minister explain this to the private sector, management and labour, during his consensus talks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the hon. member for his very statesmanlike wishes to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As to his very serious and important question, Mr. Speaker, without admitting the statistics the hon. member has put forward, it is of course a necessity on the part of the government when we meet the private sector to explain and justify the expenditures we embark upon, and to reassure them that the opposition will do its duty in examining the estimates put before it, making a judgment as to whether they are justified. Hopefully, there will be restraint shown by everyone in the House in not putting on more pressure to increase expenditures.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. During these talks has it been brought to that minister's attention that this kind of an increase simply in goods and services is the number one reason in Canada for the kind of domestic inflation we have, and for the crippling of economic expansion?

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON ALL FREIGHT RATE INCREASES UNTIL CALGARY AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct some additional questions to the Minister of Transport arising out of the recent transportation conference in Calgary. In view of the agreement in principle to remove some of the inequities in freight rates, and in view of the fact that increases now as well as future increases in rates will aggravate those inequities, is it the intention of the minister to impose a moratorium or a freeze on all rail express rates until such time as the Calgary agreement is embodied in this legislation?

● (1450)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

FREIGHT RATES—METHOD OF PROHIBITING FURTHER HORIZONTAL PERCENTAGE INCREASES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Referring specifically to one of the agreements reached in Calgary that "immediate action will be taken to achieve the goals that have been agreed upon", may I ask the minister when and by what means he intends to prohibit any further horizontal percentage increases in the freight rates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, by the same means that I use when I ask the railways not to increase certain rates for a certain period.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

FREIGHT RATES—METHOD OF REDUCING RATE DIFFERENTIALS BETWEEN RAW AND FINISHED PRODUCTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Since the minister spoke of the method, could he say when he will use it? Also, in respect of the same agreement to reduce rate differentials between raw and finished products, can the minister tell us when he expects to introduce the necessary legislation, and also what measures he will approve in the meantime to reduce those differentials, particularly with regard to beef and rapeseed products?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The CTC is still in operation and many of those cases can be solved by the commission. As to the rest, of course we will have to introduce legislation, which is what I intend to do. I cannot say exactly at what moment that will be.

RAILWAY LINE ABANDONMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONTINUING FREEZE AND IMPLEMENTING AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport in connection with the matter of rail lines abandonment that is being discussed in western Canada. Can the minister say whether or not Ottawa is prepared to continue the freeze on the approximately 6,200 miles of railway beyond the end of 1975 if it can be demonstrated that further inquiries and further discussions will be needed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): We have an agreement on this with the ministers of transport of the western provinces. There is a certain number of miles which are frozen and will be frozen up to the year 2000, if my memory serves me well. Certain lines will be abandoned with the consent of the provinces, and others will be studied in order to find a better way of handling the grain.

Mr. Murta: My final supplementary is on the aspect of the legislation itself. Since there will have to be parliamentary approval for some of the proposals that the minister and the western ministers spoke about, can the minister give us an indication as to when he will introduce the necessary legislation to implement what was implied in the press release, or will this be part of his total transportation policy which he hopes to bring forward in May or June?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): So far as branch lines are concerned, I do not think we have to await any legislation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DATE OF DISCUSSION OF POSSIBILITY OF TELEVISING PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council, the government House leader. Now that the other place has undertaken to have some of its committee proceedings televised, when can we in this House expect to discuss televising the proceedings of the House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacFarlane: If I have not been heard, perhaps I could put my question again.

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is the government's intention to bring before this House a resolution recommending the broadcasting of certain parts or all of its proceedings on television. In the meantime, I have been preparing material that I think is necessary for the proper conduct of the debate as to the necessary changes to the lighting, and so on, in this chamber. As soon as that is completed, it would be my intention to put a resolution on the order paper for that purpose.

BILINGUAL LABELLING—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH BUSINESSMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As members of parliament are receiving complaints from businessmen across Canada who are opposing any legislation which requires bilingual labelling on pre-packaged products, is the minister planning any changes in this legislation and would he meet with the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen to discuss their problems in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered a similar question asked two weeks ago by a colleague of the hon. member, the hon. member for St. John's East.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: I do not know whether the minister has an answer to the following supplementary question. As a number of Canadian business firms are seriously concerned about foreign manufacturers stating that they will not comply with Canada's bilingual labelling regulations and will stop exporting to Canada, can the minister inform the House what action he will be taking to resolve this problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the question, and I expect to make a statement shortly on the matter.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AVAILABILITY OF TRANSCRIPT OF PRELIMINARY INQUIRY INTO HAMILTON HARBOUR CASE TO FORCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): My question is for the Solicitor General. As recorded at page 3575 of Hansard yesterday, the minister indicated that the transcript of the preliminary inquiry in Hamilton became available to the RCMP in Toronto only a few days ago and was not available to the force in Ottawa. In view of the fact that two Toronto newspapers, the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star, have had the complete transcripts for many days, the Star since February 19 and the Globe and Mail since February 21, does the minister not now feel that he should request the entire transcript and either read it for himself or have his legal advisers, not the RCMP, prepare a summary for him? In this way he will have as much knowledge about a matter under his jurisdiction as the newspapers apparently have.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): It is an interesting question how the newspapers got it before the RCMP did. I should point out that the RCMP in Toronto requested a copy of the transcript from the Crown prosecutor in Toronto as soon as it became available, which was approximately ten days ago, to the Crown prosecutor in Toronto. Even now the RCMP in Toronto do not have a full transcript, although they obtained parts of it from the Crown prosecutor in Toronto. The RCMP in Ottawa also requested a full copy of the transcript ten days ago, but we have not yet received it. As soon as we receive it, I will take steps to examine all the parts that relate to the question at hand. I might say that there are six volumes of this transcript, a lot of this material being irrelevant to the parts that are being questioned. But as soon as we get it, we will consider that question further.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—POSSIBLE IMPLICATION OF MEMBERS IN COURT PROCEEDINGS—DISTINCTION BETWEEN CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY AND POLITICAL MISCONDUCT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I am very pleased that the minister will eventually get this evidence.

Since he stopped short yesterday of answering my question fully about members or ministers being implicated in such a way that there could be cause for concern about their role in the Hamilton harbour matter, and later in the day confined his answer to saying merely that there was no evidence at that time to lay further criminal charges, is he making a real distinction between criminal responsibility and political misconduct. If he is making that distinction, will he say so and answer my question more fully?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I have made that distinction, but I will not say anything further at this time. As I pointed out in the House last night, section 467 of the Criminal Code states that we should not make public the proceedings at a preliminary inquiry, and I intend to respect that provision of the law.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AUTHORITY TO SEARCH HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is also directed to the Solicitor General. Has he looked into the possibility that the RCMP did not have the authority, as stated by the Minister of Labour, to make the raid on the minister's office—whether or not it was his campaign office—search it and take certain documents, with consent or without consent? Has he looked into this matter in view of the fact that the RCMP is under his jurisdiction?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I did not understand the Minister of Labour to have said that last night.

Some hon. Members: He certainly did.

Mr. Allmand: I will re-examine his words in Hansard. If they are as the hon. member says they are, I will certainly look into it.

● (1500)

Mr. Woolliams: I could help right now. At page 3535—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has undertaken to examine the words, and if there was another question, perhaps the hon. member would like to put it.

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUANCE OF RECEIPTS FOR DOCUMENTS REMOVED FROM HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I would like to ask the minister whether he made the statement at page 3535 of Hansard. Can the minister now say frankly whether he had enough presence of mind at that time when the RCMP came in without authority to demand copies of the documentation which justified the raid and whether he received receipts from them at that time covering any files, documents or any material which they removed from his office.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the precise date, but subsequently I received documentation, copies of which the RCMP may or may not have kept at their headquarters, wherever that might be.

PURPOSE OF SEARCH OF HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wonder if the minister will confirm that the RCMP raid during the week of May 27, 1974, with or without authority, was relating in some respects to the alleged impropriety and possible fraudulent dealings with reference to the Hamilton Harbour Commission. Was it relating to that commission?

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point was raised yesterday about the propriety of questions touching the minister's responsibility as a minister of the Crown, which is the subject for which he is responsible in the House of Commons. I indicated then that questions which were posed yesterday which were brought under objection were not objectionable because they did not contain insinuations against the conduct of the minister in that way. Obviously, if questions are to raise that kind of insinuation, they carry with them a much different character than simply a question in the question period. I indicated at that time that I found no such insinuation but that when I did, I would indicate that I thought the question improper, and I must confess that I find that insinuation in the last question of the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, I am not suggesting for one moment by the question—and possibly it was my fault in the way I phrased my question—that there was any impropriety. However, a certain raid was made on the minister's office, and it was in reference to either some impropriety within the Hamilton Harbour Commission itself or something illegal, otherwise the RCMP would not be in the office. My real question is: was the raid made to seek documents in reference to the impropriety or illegalities connected with other people; nothing to do with the minister.

Mr. Speaker: In that sense the question would appear to be proper.

Mr. MacEachen: The question is absurd.

An hon. Member: How would he know?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I believe that would be a matter for the Solicitor General to answer. I cannot determine what is in the mind of someone else.

REASON FOR WITHHOLDING PAYMENT TO CERTAIN MONTREAL COMPANIES FOR DREDGING IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is very intimately related to these matters, but it is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that there have been ministerial statements attributed to the minister outside the House that the final payment under a $21 million dredging contract to the J. P. Porter Company Limited, the McNamara Company, (marine division), and Marine Industries Limited, all, I believe, of Montreal, on the Îles d'Orleans or north traverse project in the St. Lawrence Seaway has been held up by the minister, would the minister confirm in the House that this has been help up and tell us why it has been held up.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): It has been held up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence: I did not hear the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The answer is yes,

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Lawrence: My question was why has it been held up?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It has been held up on the advice of the Department of Justice.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN MONTREAL COMPANIES IN CONNECTION WITH CONTRACT FOR DREDGING ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—POSSIBLE PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): My final question is to the Solicitor General, because I gather the RCMP has been seized of this matter at least since June of 1973, and the investigation has been taking place since that time. Would the Solicitor General inform us if the investigation has to his knowledge been completed and if charges or prosecutions are now pending.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the investigation is still under way, and the RCMP is not ready at this time to lay charges or prosecute.

REASON FOR WITHHOLDING PAYMENT TO CERTAIN MONTREAL COMPANIES FOR DREDGING ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I wonder if the Solicitor General could advise whether in fact one of the reasons for the non-payment of the $21 million contract is that the government is waiting for the disposition of court proceedings in Hamilton.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will check on that.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I must say that we should not deal with this matter. It is sub judice because the department is being sued to get this money.

PROTEST AGAINST HIRING TEENAGERS TO PROFESSIONAL HOCKEY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does the minister intend to intervene once more in the current dispute between the Junior Hockey League and the Professional Hockey League about players who are hired at 18; has he taken or does he intend to take any steps to oppose the hiring of Toronto Toros' Mark Napier, aged 18?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the two professional leagues involved and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association have agreed on the content of the new contract signed between these leagues and the association. As for measures adopted by individual members of such and such a league, it is a matter that comes under the responsibility of the leagues involved.

FISHERIES

FAILURE TO GET AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON WEST COAST SALMON—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the problems Canada is now encountering in completing some kind of agreement on U.S. interception of the 1975 salmon catch on the west coast, and in view of the likelihood that without a change in the U.S. position there will not be an agreement in 1975, would the minister advise the House what plans his department now has to protect Canadian salmon stock from excessive U.S. interception this year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, while recognizing that this problem is a long lasting one and a difficult one, I am not ready to arrive at conclusions which are as pessimistic as the hon. member indicated. There are meetings going on today in the Canadian group, and I will await the outcome of that.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the reluctance of the United States to come to some agreement even on the present Canadian bargaining position, would the minister advise if it is his intention to withdraw from those negotiations and return to the principles agreed to in May of 1971 in which there would be an equality of interception of the total catch on the west coast rather than the present Canadian position? Also would the minister advise if he will seek the help of the Secretary of State for External Affairs so that we can put some pressure in to this bargaining situation and arrive at some solution?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, those are suggestions which I will undertake to consider very carefully.

CHARLOTTETOWN—REQUEST FOR DECISION TO CONSTRUCT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that he has lightened his packsack of problems, will the minister galvanize himself and his department and have construction begin on the already long delayed international airport at Charlottetown?

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF TIME LIMIT FOR COLLECTION OF SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver the mail, will the government extend the time limit for federal sales tax payments by business establishments until postal service is restored, and if not, why not?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Excise Tax Act requires payment of those taxes to be collected by the end of the month. I would ask businesses which are holding sales tax to use their best efforts to remit the sales tax. Obviously, if they are unable to do so we will examine those cases and waive the penalties as provided under the law.

ABORTION

ALLEGED INCREASE IN NUMBER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the subject of abortion which was opened by the hon. member for Provencher, and which I think requires a more precise answer. May I ask the Minister of Justice if he will unequivocally state the criteria for abortion to be used by therapeutic abortion committees in Canada in considering the health of a mother—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must surely realize that both in terms of questions and general policy in terms of seeking a legal opinion this question is clearly out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot think of any way of allowing the hon. member a supplementary to a question which I have refused.

Mr. Roche: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not claim to be expert in the rules of the House, but I think the people of Canada deserve a precise answer. If allowed to do so, I would try to form my question to elicit a precise answer on the matter of admissibility of abortion which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice. I will rephrase my question if you will permit me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may try, but if it seeks the same opinion it is going to be met with the same result.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Because the abortion rate in the three richest provinces, British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta, is the highest in the nation by far, which indicates that abortions are being done for social as distinct from health reasons, what is the minister doing to reduce this needless escalation of abortion which is a continuing violation of the civil rights of the unborn child?

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it should be perfectly clear to the hon. member and all hon. members that enforcement of the Criminal Code is in the hands of the provincial Attorneys General. Under the law which this House adopted several years ago certain specific grounds relating to the health and life of the mother are set out as the basis upon which an abortion committee can operate. Certainly, it is up to the provincial Attorneys General to see to it that the law in all its terms is upheld in accordance with the wishes of parliament.

GRAIN

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO ENSURE EXPORT MOVEMENT IN VIEW OF PUBLIC SERVICE STRIKE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that there are approximately 14,000 boxcars locked in the prairies because of the current public service strike and, because there are about 28 ships now waiting in Vancouver harbour with escalating demurrage charges being calculated on a daily basis, would the minister indicate to the House whether he has formulated any contingency plan for the movement of this export grain in an effort to ensure that Canada's international reputation as a grain supplier is not subject to further humiliation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a number of plans are being looked at, both in connection with the immediate period and also in connection with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible when conditions return to normal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. My colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) put several questions to the Solicitor General with respect to the $21 million dredging contract. I followed with a question to the Solicitor General asking whether one of the reasons for non-payment was the government awaiting the disposition of court proceedings in Hamilton. If I recall correctly, the minister said no, he did not think so, but he was going to check into it. Subsequently the Minister of Transport stepped in and indicated that this matter is being dealt with by the courts. This led me to believe that perhaps the Solicitor General will not be looking into this matter. He has already answered, but now he wants to check it out. I am trying to determine whether the Solicitor General will not proceed because he has already answered the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Solicitor General has given an undertaking that he will check the facts and give an answer. I presume he will do so.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for waiting so long to raise this point but it deals with a correction to Hansard of yesterday. This was brought to my attention at the beginning of the question period today, but the Minister of Labour was not in his seat at the time and I thought it better to wait until he was. When the question period started I did not want to interrupt. My point deals with a question I put yesterday. I had some difficulty in posing the question but I thought I got the answer from the Minister of Labour yesterday. That answer was no. The minister's answer, which I thought was no, does not appear in the Hansard of yesterday, however. I would draw Your Honour's attention to page 3537 of Hansard. The minister's answer does not appear. I may have been mistaken, Mr. Speaker, but I thought he said "no". If he did say no, I would like the correction to be made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is quite correct. I was watching the minister very closely for his answer and his answer to the final supplementary was clearly no. If Hansard did not record that it should have.

[Editor's Note: See page 3537 for correction.]

Mr. McGrath: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has tried on at least 30 occasions today to get the floor.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 25, consideration in committee of Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the House rose last night clause 4 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 4.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, despite the reluctance of the government to vote yesterday and the amusement of last night, I think the discussion produced some very new and interesting facts. One of the things that came out of that discussion was the fact that Syncrude was set up in a way totally different from any other company. I think it is fair to say that it was set up through the participation of the provincial and federal governments and, I presume, on the basis of our demonstrated need for oil in the east. Because Syncrude would be coming on stream to alleviate the developing shortage, the government used extraordinary methods to establish it, even taking equity in the company.

Although we passed a law, which I presume will be back dated, not to allow tax exemptions for royalties, we are making an exception in the case of Syncrude. If we do this, by a private bill or under the Financial Administration Act, we will establish a precedent. If the reason for doing it is so Syncrude can develop in the national interest, then I think this clause which would exempt Syncrude from the provisions of the act should not be included unless it be extended to cover companies such as Shell Imperial, Gulf and others that have indicated a desire to participate in the development of other segments of the tar sands.

Considering that the tar sands contain probably the largest known oil reserve in the world, and considering that our oil needs will be vastly greater in the 1980's and 1990's, why should the government limit its concession to Syncrude? Why not give concessions to other companies as well? I think the minister could do this easily by amending the bill before the committee. If he does not so amend the bill, every company which will want to explore and develop the tar sands will lobby in this House, until more concessions are granted. In any event, concessions granted through use of the Financial Administration Act lead to inequalities.

Surely we are not saying that the government is interested in seeing only Syncrude develop the tar sands. Other companies, perhaps privately owned, will also want to take part in tar sands development. They will exert pressure. Therefore, will the minister not consider amending the bill in order to provide for orderly development? I do not think the Financial Administration Act is an adequate mechanism for controlling development. I think the minister knows that members of parliament oppose the use of the Financial Administration Act for the accomplishment of purposes which can be achieved by other legislation.

Clearly, other companies in this country will want to develop the tar sands. They, too, will ask for Syncrude-type exemptions. Surely the minister is not saying, as I said just now, that only Syncrude should develop tar sands, that other entrepreneurs should not. If that is what he says, he has become a socialist. As surely as I stand here, the government will eventually pay for all Syncrude development, even before this parliament expires. The government will take over the operation because oil companies will find that such development without government help is not feasible.

If we are not to depend on outside suppliers of oil we shall need to bring on stream, by the year 2,000, at least eight additional tar sands plants. Such development will not be possible unless other companies are given Syncrude-type concessions. This can only be done through legislation. If the minister does not amend the bill, companies will seek exemptions through the introduction of private members' bills, or through use of the Financial Administration Act.

I think most agree that the Financial Administration Act is not the proper vehicle for the granting of such exemptions, and everyone knows how difficult it is to secure passage of a private members' bill. Further, there will not be harmony in the industry if part of it operates under one tax structure, and another part under a vertical partnership, joint venture, or whatever you may call it—what do you call it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Don't worry about any prompting. Make up your own speech.

Mr. Peters: The English language is developing week by week. The new term is "joint venture". Unless the bill is amended the minister will be subjected to tremendous pressures. I remember, when the Conservative government introduced amendments affecting pensions, INCO representatives came to Ottawa, exerted pressure, and induced the government to change those provisions. Unless the exemption provisions of this bill are changed, INCO and other similar companies in this country will ask for Syncrude-type concessions.

That procedure will be untidy, and unwieldy. At least eight other companies will seek exemptions. No reasonable person will stand for this sort of inequality in the tax structure. Consequently, the government will be subject to immense pressure. Judging from what has happened in the past, the government will not withstand the pressure—former governments have not withstood it—and grant exemptions to those powerful enough to demand them. Therefore, as the minister knows the limitations of the Financial Administration Act and the difficulties of securing passage of a private member's bill, he should amend the bill in the way I have suggested. If he does not the government will be subject to pressures from companies like INCO, Falconbridge and others involved in exploration, which can come to Ottawa with funds at election time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can deal the point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. He dealt with some matters mentioned by his colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. First, the arrangement with Syncrude is a joint venture. "Joint venture" is a construction or industrial term for a partnership. There is nothing new about it. A joint venture, as the hon. member's legal advisor, the hon. member for Broadview, knows, is a common term in the construction industry, in which companies bind themselves together for a particular project to which they dedicate a certain percentage of capital in return for a certain percentage of the profit, or agree to bear a certain proportion of the loss. But they remain separate units, just as members of a law firm remain separate individuals, and share profits or bear losses, as the case may be.

An hon. Member: Since when do lawyers lose?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can say, on behalf of a number of lawyers in the House of Commons, that this has happened in the last 10 or 12 years.

An hon. Member: You mean, lawyers have lost?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let me say, in response to the laughter from the NDP side of the House, that some of the most successful practitioners happen to be sitting on that side of the House.

Let us get down to cases. First, the Syncrude joint venture and the arrangement that is reflected in the taxation situation are not retroactive. When the minister of finance of Alberta approached me, he said "Look, we got this joint venture setup with four companies getting together. Alberta will have 40 per cent of the deal. We want to ensure the tax arrangement under which we are setting it up has some reasonable permanence so we all know what we are doing. We in Alberta consider this a very important enterprise. Would you give us this undertaking?" I said fair ball, and I did.

● (1530)

I am talking about the fact that the royalty deductibility in the sense of not attributing to the four companies the 40 per cent of the income that goes to the province of Alberta, as one would under a fair market value sort of proposition, under the present arrangement applies to whatever share of the income that now goes to Ontario or the federal government. It will not be attributable to the private sector.

There is nothing unusual in that insofar as partnership law is concerned because one is only taxed on one's percentage. Because of the non-deductibility features and the fact we extended it to the fair market value rule, we have to make it an exception under this bill. This is not a retroactive deal. It is an arrangement I made on behalf of the government of Canada, at the request of the province of Alberta, with the four partners concerned. It is not an under the table deal. It is right out here on the floor of the House of Commons. It is confirmed in writing by me to the partners concerned.

I do not like the sometimes under the table operations of the Financial Administration Act in terms of its remission authority any more than the hon. member. According to the Statutory Instruments Act, any order in council under the Financial Administration Act would have to be publicly examined by the statutory instruments committee. That will be the case. The hon. member asks why I, as Minister of Finance, do not put myself in a position where I can resist similar pressure by putting in an amendment to this bill. He has got an arguable point. I do not minimize it. I tried to think this through the way he has. What I need now is a bit of flexibility until we see what the final contractual relationship is as the Syncrude project develops.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about future Syncrude type deals. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said we would have to look at them on their merits. It may be that, as we see the Syncrude or tar sands development mature, we will have to come back to the House in a more definitive way. I concede that. At the moment I need the flexibility of the Financial Administration Act, subject to its publication by an order in council, reviewable by the House, until I see how the tar sands operation in its entirety develops. I repeat that it may be we will have to come back in a more definitive way before the House. I concede the force of the hon. member's argument. However, I ask him to put himself in my position at the moment because we are in a pioneer venture. We do not really know how it will mature in legal, financial or taxation terms.

Mr. Peters: I am not too clear. In the joint venture is there a difference between how the royalty applies to the government percentages as against the company? For example, if one of the companies has 20 per cent, is the royalty calculated only on the 20 per cent and the total added up to 70 per cent because the governments have 30 per cent? Do I gather there would not be any royalty on the government 30 per cent, that the other percentage would only be on the partners which are in a position to depreciate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. In the original Syncrude arrangement, to which later partners were added, Ontario and the federal government, that really does not enter into the taxation scheme. First, Alberta takes 50 per cent off the top. Then, for their equity participation, they get 40 per cent. The remaining 60 belongs to the four partners, now three partners, whatever it is. The partners will only be taxed on that 60 per cent, depending on their participation. That is all.

Mr. Benjamin: I think I have this, Mr. Chairman, but I am not sure. Let me put it another way. For example, if you take their share of the product and one of the private companies receives as its share 10 per cent of the product, will clause 4 apply to that 10 per cent in that any royalty they pay on that to the province of Alberta cannot be deducted as an expense?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is no, Mr. Chairman. What happens in the joint venture is that Alberta gets the first 50 per cent. It is against that 50 per cent that there is no deductibility of royalty or the equivalent of a royalty. With regard to the remaining shares, suppose Imperial Oil gets 15 per cent, and that is not the accurate figure, but suppose they elect to take it in oil, there is no further royalty paid on it because Alberta already has its 50 per cent. The non-deductibility feature is really to exempt Imperial Oil from paying its share of the non-deductibility feature of the 50 per cent already paid to Alberta. That is the only feature of it. The remaining profits have nothing to do with royalty because Alberta has taken its share, not by royalty but by percentage of the deal.
