Mr. Symes: I would like further clarification. We were talking about the Syncrude deal which was 70 per cent ownership by the private oil companies, 15 per cent by the government of Canada, 10 per cent by the government of Alberta and 5 per cent by the government of Ontario. The minister is talking about Alberta having the first 50 per cent. Is this 70 per cent, 15, 10 and 5 per cent, to apply to the other 50 per cent? I would like that clarification.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the deal is that Alberta gets 50 per cent off the top before the profit shares apply.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to enter this debate at this late stage in order to hold up the bill. I am as interested as other members on this side in getting it through as quickly as possible, it having been discussed rather thoroughly.

In connection with the saving of energy resources that we are going to such expense to develop, has the minister considered lowering the 15 per cent import duty on small imported cars? I ask this for two reasons. First, imported cars generally are the greatest gas savers on our roads. Second, it is the highest import duty today in the industrial world of cars.

In Canada, there are 1,200 small businesses involved in this. In my own constituency of Victoria, there are over 400 people employed in selling or servicing small imported cars. These people are being driven to the wall because of the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, particularly in comparison with the German mark and the Japanese yen. I therefore ask the minister if he has considered removing this 15 per cent duty? Of course he may have to go another step with the removal of sales tax on domestic small cars. If it is too late in the day for the minister to consider making the change in this bill, would he consider further representations by letter?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, an excellent brief and representation have been received in this particular area from the car importers. What we have to do is look down the road if that particular tariff item is removed. Aside from the impact in a positive way, which the hon. member is talking about, on the employees employed by the car importers in Canada, what would be the impact on automobile manufacturers in Canada? The importers are taking the stance that they would give competition to the big three or big four in Canada, and this would not have a detrimental effect on employment. We are not sure that this is in fact the case, but the car importers have made full representations.

I think the hon. member is correct in saying that further representations are being made, and have been made as recently as last week to the department, and I believe an appointment is set up for a meeting during the week of March 3 to look into the matter further.

Mr. McKinnon: As I believe the hon. member realizes, the problem arises from the devaluation of our dollar which means, for instance, that the cost of a Volkswagen has gone up by 30 per cent without there being any corresponding rise in its market value in Germany. I am pleased to hear the matter is being considered. I shall be making further representations myself.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4, as amended, carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No!

Mr. Symes: I should like to make some comments about this situation. We are getting bits of information in dribs and drabs as we discuss taxation of the resource sector in relation to the Syncrude project.

Last night we were treated to the spectacle of the government not having enough members in the committee for a vote to be taken. We saw government supporters standing up and delaying proceedings until there were sufficient Liberal members in the House. They were making all kinds of irrelevant comments.

We have been able to put together, through persistent questioning, a number of facts and to draw some conclusions as to just what is happening in this whole Syncrude project, or should I say Syncrude sell-out. We have learned that the government is putting up money not only by way of direct grants in return for equity holdings. Through the admission of the Minister of Finance last night we discover that during the tax regime that applies to the oil company partners in Syncrude, the public in the end will be paying most of the cost of this project through tax concessions and write-offs in return for only 30 per cent of the action.

Let me review what we have discovered. The project is to cost $2 billion. There has been a fantastic escalation in the price from around $800 million to $1.2 billion to $2 billion, and there is some suspicion it may go even higher. Of that $2 billion we learn that $600 million will be put up by the three governments involved: $300 million by the federal government, $200 million by the Government of Alberta and $100 million by Ontario. That is $600 million for 30 per cent ownership of Syncrude.

In addition, the government of Alberta is putting up another $200 million in loans to the oil companies in the Syncrude project and providing $600 million toward the construction of a power plant and a pipeline, besides a further $230 million for building roads and supplying town services. The federal government gave a commitment as well that it would assume 15 per cent of the cost of the project or, more important, of any future cost escalation. Already we find that the cost estimate has risen by some $200 million since the government committed itself in principle to becoming a partner in the Syncrude project.

Having put up $600 million in direct financing of the Syncrude project, the governments concerned have been telling the people that the rest of the Syncrude partners will be putting up the remaining $1.4 billion in return for 70 per cent ownership. But last night we learned that because of the tax regime applicable to the Syncrude project the oil companies will not, in fact, be putting up $1.4 billion. It will be the public. Mr. Chairman, the public will be financing the bulk of the cost. Let me explain.

We learned last night that Syncrude will be able to deduct the royalties paid to the province from any income which is liable to federal taxation. This will mean a tax saving of vast sums of money. No other oil company in Canada now has the privilege of being able to deduct the royalties paid to the provinces.

The second concession on tax allowance is that the Syncrude oil company partners will be able to claim depletion allowances in respect to the oil taken out of the oil sands. The allowance will have to be earned and it will be up to 25 per cent of production costs. We also know that the Syncrude partners will be able to write off against their tax 30 per cent of the cost of building the mining plant to get oil out of the sands. Again this is worth vast amounts of money to the companies.

The fourth, and perhaps the most important aspect of the tax concessions affecting Syncrude, is that since it is a joint venture any investment can be written off against taxable income gained through other operations. The oil companies, which are making profits through selling gasoline or home heating fuel from conventional reserves, can use their profits in that area for tax concession purposes as a means of offsetting the cost of the Syncrude project. The significance of this aspect of the deal is staggering because it means that their investment of $1.4 billion in Syncrude can be written off against profits on other operations carried out by the oil companies. This is why I say that in the end the public will be financing all the costs of the Syncrude project, not the private companies.

The other concession going to the other oil company partners is that they will be able to charge world prices for the tar sands oil.

● (1550)

We have one oil sands plant already in production, namely, the Great Canadian Oil Sands Plant. It is making a profit now on oil that is selling at $6.50 a barrel. The oil barons of the Syncrude deal twisted the government's arm to get the concession of not charging $6.50 per barrel but being allowed to charge anywhere from $13 to $15, that is to say, the world price. One can just imagine the fantastic kind of profits that Imperial, Gulf and Cities Service will be making under that pricing regime, especially in light of the tax concessions I have described.

It is interesting to note that the Foster economic consultants' report on Syncrude operating costs prior to this sudden escalation of the price of oil estimated that over the 25-year life of the project the operating costs would total $5.6 billion, or $5.45 a barrel. Syncrude will be getting anywhere from $13 to $15 a barrel for this oil.

We should also remember that the Syncrude oil is a synthetic oil, that is to say, it is in a semi-refined state and therefore its real value is greater than the value of the average crude since it is in a higher processed state. That raises the question as to whether Syncrude really needs the world price for its oil in order to make a profit. I maintain that they have misrepresented the real value of the oil, and have exaggerated the costs in order to get the commitment from this government to be able to charge the world price.

I should like to elaborate on how this has been allowed to take place by using, as a comparison, the procedure of the Great Canadian Oil Sands Company that is already in production in the oil sands. Let me refer to an article by Joseph Yanchula in the "Canadian Forum" of December, 1974. The article is headed "The Politics of Petroleum". He outlines the very interesting accounting procedure that Great Canadian Oil Sands used to fool the government as to the real value of that oil the company was producing, and its actual profit picture. I quote from the article as follows:

> Undoubtedly the defence for the giveaway of the tar sands will be the high cost of exploration and the so-called losses of the G.C.O.S. project which were supposed to total $88 million to the end of 1972. During 1972 this company was supposed to have a loss of $680,000. Examination of the 1972 annual report shows an income of $62,284,000 and an operating cost of $48,713,000 which leaves an operating profit of $13,571,000. The loss is manufactured by deducting allowances totalling $14,251,000 for amortization, interest and depreciation. Corporate accounting is an art invented to demonstrate how it is possible to lose money and still grow rich.
> There is a growing suspicion that G.C.O.S. profits are actually far greater and that they are being deliberately transferred to Sun Oil Co., the parent corporation, by underpricing the synthetic crude. G.C.O.S. claims to produce three liquids which are blended together before being shipped to Edmonton.

As a result the actual oil is of higher value than stated by the company. So we see that when the minister talks about real market value he certainly has not been applying that to the existing oil sands company, Great Canadian Oil Sands, because it has been able to declare a loss when it was actually making a profit.

I suspect that the Syncrude partners are using the same kind of mathematics to bamboozle the government, hence the Canadian taxpayer, into giving concessions and higher world prices for the oil that should be set at $6.50 a barrel rather than $13 to $15. We have been misled by oil companies in the past, as demonstrated by the history of exploration for and exploitation of oil in this country.

The government has been misled by the Syncrude partners in the deal the government committed itself to a few Mondays ago in Winnipeg, and it would seem to me that when it comes to the point where the public of Canada is putting up the vast majority of the funds for the Syncrude project, and in return only retains 30 per cent ownership, we should be putting up all the money and getting all the benefits in terms of ownership. We should move toward complete public ownership of the Syncrude project. I suggest we could do this as we are going to put up the money anyway.

We might as well retain control of the project in order that we can develop these oil reserves, which are much greater than the total reserves in the Middle East, in the interest of Canadian economic needs, rather than that of some foreign multi-national oil company. In this way we could develop this oil at a Canadian price for Canadian consumers so they will not be exploited as a result of artificially high oil prices.

This is why we in the New Democratic Party so firmly oppose this kind of Syncrude sell-out that the Liberal and Conservative parties have supported up to this time. It is up to the Canadian people to make their views known to the government in order to prevent this horrendous sell-out.

The Chairman: The question is on Clause 4, as amended.

Clause 4, as amended, agreed to: Yeas, 58; nays, 14.

● (1600)

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of clause 7, as amended. Shall clause 7, as amended, carry?

On clause 7, as amended.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, again on clause 7 I want to say to the committee, and particularly to all the Liberal members who are now leaving to get back to their offices after the vote, that this committee should once again reconsider—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: What I will do is to speak to the ones who are staying.

I will ask them to reflect once again, after what happened last evening, on whether or not there is a possibility of having the clauses of this bill that are relevant to resources and royalties delayed until a date after the first ministers' meeting in April. After listening to the long debate last night in the House, I am sure that the Liberal members will be willing now to reconsider their position.

On the basis of goodwill, co-operation and national unity we, on the opposition side of the House, are suggesting that we should delay the proclamation of all the clauses pertaining to royalties and resources until the first ministers' meeting has been held. I know that I have the agreement of hon. members such as the hon. member for Nipissing, who is generally a very co-operative fellow, and who is concerned about development in northern Ontario.

I know that I also have the co-operation of some of the prairie members. I see here the hon. member for London West. I am sure that those hon. members are concerned about the development of this country, particularly the outlying parts of the country, and in order to allow this development to take place we need the co-operation of all the provinces.

It is about time that we went to the provinces in a co-operative spirit instead of going to them with a club. It is about time we said to the provinces, "If we cut into your resource revenue, we will give you a chance to develop in other ways. We will tax you differently and we will give you a chance to process and develop your raw materials".

For these reasons I want to move an amendment to the clause without speaking any longer. I move:

that clause 7 of Bill C-49 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after sub-clause (6) the following new sub-clause:

(7) Subsection (1) and subsection (5) of this section shall not come into force and have effect as law except upon proclamation of the governor in council following upon the expiration of the fifteenth day of April, 1975.

In effect that is the same wording as the wording of the clause with which we dealt earlier. I think it is very important that we test the feelings of the committee once again. I am sure that the Liberal members, being as generous as they are, might have reconsidered their position since last evening. They might be much more co-operative now when it is earlier in the day than they were last night when they were caught off guard and embarrassed by the parliamentary process. I am sure that they are now in a much more co-operative frame of mind. That is obvious from the fact that we see so many ministers in the House, including the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

This is my last plea, that in a spirit of goodwill and co-operation we ask the Minister of Finance to delay the proclamation of the clauses of this bill that pertain to resources and royalties until after the first ministers' meeting. I am sure that the hon. member for York-Simcoe and others in the Conservative party and the Social Credit party agree with what I am saying. I think that most Liberals also do so at heart, except if they have in mind future Senate appointments, appointments to the cabinet or appointments to the bench. I think they would be happy if the Minister of Finance were to acquiesce.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The amendment of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is before the committee. Is there agreement to it?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. members across the way seem to think we are doing this for fun.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shades of last night.

Mr. Benjamin: But to us this is not fun. We are trying to make a sincere and genuine effort to persuade members on the government side. Whether or not we succeed is not the point. I want to warn hon. members. I predict that what they are doing strikes at the very foundation of confederation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: If a national government, which has campaigned in three successive elections on the principle of conserving confederation and national unity, proceeds to pass legislation that removes the right of the provinces in an area which the constitution reserves to them is not striking at the foundation of confederation, then I do not know who is.

An hon. Member: Let's not be provincial.

Mr. Benjamin: I will not take a back seat to any hon. member—in fact I think I am in the front seat compared to the hon. member who interjected when it comes to being for a strong confederation and a strong central government. It is only the NDP that is accused of wishing to centralize everything. In so far as a strong, national, central government is concerned, I will not take a back seat to any member of this House.

For confederation to function properly there must be consensus, accommodation and mutual agreement. We have had many examples in the last 100 years of matters that have divided us, in most cases, on economic grounds, on grounds of taxation. We have had one region pitted against another region, or all provinces against the federal government. In the present situation, nine of the ten provinces are opposed to what the government is trying to do.

I agree that the federal government must protect the national interest, in the cause of confederation and national unity. It is entitled to a fair share of the revenues. However, this can only be arrived at as a result of agreement on both sides. There has been no accommodation from the government. This is not a one way street. To use this method of disallowing royalties as a deductible expense only in the case of governments and not in the case of private companies—that inconsistency alone should have jarred any fair-minded Liberal because Liberals profess to be reasonable and fair and great democrats.

An hon. Member: We are.

Mr. Benjamin: They all say that our law should be fairly applied, and here they stand up like sheep and support a piece of legislation which openly states that the disallowance of royalties will not apply when it is paid to private companies, but that it will apply when it is paid to a provincial government. How can you have it both ways and call that fair and equitable?

Mr. Nystrom: They have wool over their eyes.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Benjamin: We do not ask members opposite to vote against their own legislation or against their budget bills. We only ask them to hold off for another couple of months. What is unreasonable about that? I have heard a number of hon. members opposite say that they are reasonable men, and here is their opportunity to prove it.

I want to say to the Minister of Finance that the acceptance of this amendment would not be looked upon by myself or my colleagues as any kind of backing down. We would look upon it as a gesture by the Minister of Finance, and by the government, equivalent to the gesture which has already been made by the premiers of the two oil producing provinces. We would look on it as a piece of statesmanship, and evidence of a genuine desire on the part of the federal government and the Minister of Finance to go further to reach accommodation and mutual agreement with the provinces in the interests of our confederation and national unity.

I want to warn hon. members that this has nothing to do with whether we are Liberal, NDP, Conservative or Creditiste, but it has to do with what binds this country together. I just cannot understand the reluctance to do this reasonable thing. I wish hon. members could have agreed to that on clause 4 last night. There is no wish on our part to make this a partisan political matter, but if the legislation is passed as it is, we are left with no choice. This is the time for parliament, the government and the Minister of Finance to demonstrate that willingness to reach accommodation and mutual agreement.

I accept the telegram from Premier Blakeney—which I hope my colleague will hand back to me—and I think the Minister of Finance will as well because he likes and respects that gentleman as much as I do. It indicates that the province of Saskatchewan desires to reach accommodation and agreement. I believe the same is true of Premier Lougheed, and I am certain of the other seven premiers who are opposed to this attempt by the federal government to get what it considers a fair share of these revenues. The government is aware of the desire of the provincial premiers to reach agreement.

Premier Blakeney asks in his telegram:

> . . . I would request that the federal government give consideration to delaying passage of that portion of the income tax bill pertaining to non-deductibility of royalties until after the conference.

He is not demanding that the bill should not pass. He is asking for the delay of the bill until after the conference.

> If it is not considered possible to delay the passage of legislation until that time . . .

Premier Blakeney further suggests that we:

> . . . consider amending the proposed legislation to provide for the adoption of principles similar to those recognized in the recently-announced Syncrude arrangement.

Surely that can only be arrived at by further discussion. This is a perfectly reasonable request, but what is more important is that it is a way of telling us of a willingness to try to reach agreement and accommodation. Our doing an equivalent amount here does not defeat the legislation, does not defeat the budget and does not rule out what the Minister of Finance wants to do. It only delays it for a couple of months; that is all. Surely that is a reasonable and fair request. If it can be done for oil and gas, it can be done for iron ore in Quebec, hydro electric power in Quebec and Newfoundland, nickel in Ontario, forest products in British Columbia, and gold in Ontario.

Mr. Peters: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Had the world price for iron ore escalated as it did for oil, I wonder what members of parliament from Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland would have said in this House when the Minister of Finance tried to disallow the royalties on that iron ore being paid to those provincial governments.

Had the world price of asbestos escalated like that of oil, I wonder how many hon. members from the province of Quebec would have been delighted with the Minister of Finance disallowing royalties paid to the province of Quebec for that asbestos. Had the world price of copper kept escalating, how would British Columbia and Manitoba have felt?

I ask hon. members to think about what they are doing. If hon. members opposite believe and agree with the Minister of Finance that this forever and a day shall only apply to oil and gas, then they really have a fight on their hands. But if they are saying that it will apply to everything, they should think more about confederation, about what the British North America Act says, and about further genuine and sincere effort from all sides to reach accommodation and mutual agreement on this issue because, if they do not, the issue will haunt this parliament and country for years to come. By God, don't do it; but if you insist that it must be done, make another effort first to reach agreement and accommodation. That is the least that can be done.

We must not be guilty of failing to use every possible opportunity and avenue. It is a national concern. It has nothing to do with how good any political party is, or how much better one province or area is than another.

I suppose this measure shocked me almost as much as the government bringing in the War Measures Act. It shocked many thinking people in our country that a national government should use this method.

Mr. Nystrom: Liberals don't think.

Mr. Benjamin: Even for the sake of argument, if one were to admit that the federal government were right in its fears about what would be happening to the financial structure and tax system in this country, surely this is not the way to do it. This is not the way to put an end to those fears and solve the problems the government thought would be created. Surely this is the wrong way to go about it. Even if the government felt that this was the way to go about it, it has not yet exhausted every possible avenue to solve the differences between the provinces and the federal government, and I will not for one minute suggest that Premier Blakeney and the NDP government of Saskatchewan are 100 per cent right. No one is 100 per cent right on anything.

An hon. Member: Least of all this government.

Mr. Benjamin: Surely hon. members opposite do not claim that they are 100 per cent right on everything, or that the Minister of Finance is. Surely he would be prepared to agree for the sake of the country, and not add to the anger, real or imagined, of the people in that part of Canada. The minister should have accepted this amendment last night. This legislation would become law immediately, with just a handful of clauses being delayed for a couple of months.

• (1620)

Members of this parliament and members of the provincial legislatures have worked hard to make this country a success, and generally have succeeded. There are countless examples of leadership at the national and provincial levels in the past 105 years, and here is another opportunity for leadership. I cannot understand why the minister refused it. I do not look upon him as a mean and stubborn man.

An hon. Member: Just stupid.

Mr. Benjamin: What is there to lose?

Mr. Epp: Pride.

Mr. Benjamin: There is so much to gain, and surely there is no harm in trying again. Obviously Premier Blakeney and Premier Lougheed want to keep on trying, so why does the Minister of Finance not try to reach that mutual understanding and agreement that are necessary if federation is to succeed? Instead he undermines and betrays our confederation and nationhood. I wonder what he would say if this oil and gas belonged to Ontario and Quebec.

I hope some other hon. members will speak after me so that the minister will have a few more minutes to think about this.

Mr. Nystrom: A couple of days.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I know that I sometimes appear to hon. members to be frivolous, but I have never been more serious as a member of parliament than I am at this moment. I plead with all members, in the interests of our country and this parliament, to accept the amendment.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, some questions are still outstanding concerning clause 7, and perhaps the minister could deal with them before we have a division on the proposed amendment. I would refer the minister to page 3234 of Hansard where, in speaking on clause 7 as it refers to real estate, I asked the minister to consider my remarks and those of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and to advise if he could amend the legislation to ensure that small builders would not be unduly hurt by the provision. If he did not see fit to do this, I also asked if he would explain his position more fully to this committee.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated to the committee that there is no way we can distinguish between builders, for the purposes of this legislation, in terms of volume or size. I think the hon. member for Broadview dealt with it conclusively, following what I said. I have nothing to add to the full explanation given when the clause was introduced.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think if the minister were candid he would admit that the government does not wish to make the amendment to help the builder who is not a speculator. These people have made representations to the government on the grounds that they are going to be severely handicapped by the minister's actions.

I should like to touch on something that I have brought up twice before. On both occasions the minister chose not to be candid with the House. On February 10 he said that certain figures I used in this debate were misleading, that they were like comparing apples and oranges. On two occasions I have asked him to point out the discrepancy. He has already admitted that he perhaps misled the House with regard to one set of figures, but he has not commented on the more glaring errors he put on the record of Hansard for February 10 to which I have referred.

The last time I raised this with the minister was at page 3199 of Hansard, when I again asked the minister if he would correct the mistake that he had put on the record concerning the figures he referred to, but he chose to take no action. Since that time the minister has told me that he would read my remarks and his own, and would hopefully make a further comment. Again I ask the minister for the third time if he is prepared to make any further comment on the matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have reread the remarks and I have no further comment to make.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, this is something I do not understand about the working of parliament. Here we have a minister—he is winking now because he thinks it is a joke—who, according to Hansard, has misled this House. Three times in a row he has had the nerve to stand up and say that he has no further comment to make, that he does not wish to set the record straight.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: I do not understand how the government can expect to have the respect of this House and the public when the Minister of Finance misleads the House as he is doing.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment to clause 7 proposed by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

● (1630)

Amendment (Mr. Nystrom) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 49.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I regret having to stand up on a question of privilege arising out of the vote taken just now. To my knowledge at least one member voted who was not inside the curtain when Your Honour called the vote. I believe, from what my colleagues tell me, that others did the same. I think such conduct is reprehensible. I note that when a person on our side entered, those on the other side were quick to note his coming in. He obliged, went out and did not take part in the vote. We point out that we saw some members enter. I am looking at the hon. member I have in mind. I was sorry to see him doing that. My colleagues saw others do the same. I think such conduct is reprehensible and unworthy of the dignity of this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for raising the point he just raised. All hon. members, of course, will be aware of the provisions of Standing Order 12(2), which reads:

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members should rise and declare themselves if they were not in the chamber when the vote was called. I think those two hon. members ought not to be included as taking part in the vote.

Mr. Symes: Be honest, stand up.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on clause 7, as amended.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to: Yeas, 73; nays, 25.

Clause 9, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The question now is on the amendment to clause 35.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Clause 35, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 37.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 37 carry?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I will not take up the time of the committee but want to add one comment on the matter of deductibility of capital depreciation and other development expenses, as this question relates to Canada's proven recoverable reserves of petroleum. I think all recognize that we face a potentially serious shortage of petroleum production in Canada. In the near future we may become net importers. This necessitates our increasing the volume of proven recoverable reserves. One of the most promising ways of increasing proven recoverable reserves quickly is by using enhanced recovery techniques in existing reservoirs. These involve development expenses in connection with the drilling of extra wells and the use of water flooding and miscible flooding techniques.

The minister must recognize that changes in taxation policy affecting development expenses will have an impact on the promotion of enhanced recovery methods which need to be adopted to increase our proven recoverable reserves. I hope the minister will consider allowing the deferment of these expenses until costs are recovered because, in view of what could happen, it would be a shame if government action were to compound an already serious situation to do with security of supply. I therefore hope the government will be flexible and consider the possibility of eliminating some taxes, or amending certain tax provisions. As we shall need more oil for Canada's future use, incentives should be provided so that companies will spend money on enhanced recovery methods and recover oil more efficiently from those reserves already discovered. Additional money needs to be spent on reservoirs which have been discovered if extra oil is to be available for Canada's use.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, clause 37 is the fair market value clause, and it is immensely important to the provinces. I should like the minister to clarify the intent of this clause. I understand that the clause works this way: if an operator sells oil, gas or minerals to the Crown, his product will be deemed to have been sold at fair market value. For example, if the operator sells oil or gas to the Crown for $1 per barrel and the Crown authorities resell the product for $11 per barrel, the fair market value of that product will be deemed to be $11 per barrel. This means the resource company will be taxed on that $11, the price it is sold to the retailer, rather than the price at which it is sold to the Crown corporation.

The real object of this amendment is to prevent a Crown corporation, or an agency such as the province, from nationalizing any sector of the resource industry in that province or forcing the resource industry to sell to the Crown at a low price.

The effect of the amendment is to put a tax squeeze on the resource operator from whom the resources are bought by forcing him to declare, for tax purposes, the higher price at which the Crown resells the resource. In other words, if a provincial government, duly elected by the people of a province, wants to set up a marketing system and get a higher return for its own natural resources, it will tell an oil company that it may get the oil out of the ground, but the province will determine at what price the oil company sells the oil to the provincial marketing agency, and the government will decide at what price it will resell the oil to the public or for export markets.

By this clause the government is using the tax system in effect to double tax the resource company to the point of putting it out of business in order to thwart any attempt by a province to set up a marketing agency. If a company is selling the oil for $1 a barrel to the marketing agency and the marketing agency is selling it for $11 a barrel, the company will be taxed as though it received $11 for its oil rather than only $1. This is an infringement on the right of a province to decide what the economic rent will be for its natural resource. As I say, a government democratically elected within a province should have the right to decide at what price its natural resource will be sold.

I do not see any reason for the federal government assuming this method of punitive taxation as an attempt to prevent the Crown corporations or provinces from nationalizing their resource industry. I would like the minister to state whether I am correct in saying that the real object of this amendment is to prevent a Crown corporation from nationalizing any sector of its resource industry.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Symes: I would like the minister to explain the rationale behind this, and why he thinks my interpretation is wrong.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the clause is to ensure that not only a royalty is not deductible, but any disguised royalty. As I explained on several occasions to the House, the federal government was concerned that the royalty was no longer a flat payment against production or volume—against a gallon, a ton, an ounce—but was in effect a disguised tax escalating against profit or price. There are all sorts of mechanical vehicles by which a province can levy its economic rent or impose its tax. A royalty is one. The difference in price that a marketing agency pays a producer and on sales to the consumer is another.

The purpose of this clause is to attach a value against which an imputed royalty is set for purposes of non-deductibility in the case of marketing agencies and in the case of joint ventures between a province and private corporations. That is all it does. It in no way pre-supposes or presumes upon a province as to how it wants to impose that tax or royalty. It just ensures, by whatever method it does, that the market value is treated evenly across the board. That is the only purpose of this clause.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, I find two things wrong with the minister's reasoning. First the minister as a federal agency is setting himself up as judge and jury as to what is a flat rate, a fluctuating royalty or a tax rate. In other words, because the minister is not satisfied with the royalty the province is charging, he can redefine it as not being a royalty, but merely a form of tax. He is taking an arbitrary decision from the point of view of the Minister of Finance. This is an outright attack on one of the fundamental concepts of our constitution, namely, that resources belong to the province and the province has the legitimate right to get whatever economic rent seems justifiable. I object to the minister being the arbitrary judge of what he says is a flat royalty as opposed to a disguised kind of tax.

The minister objects to the provinces getting more income from this method of taxation. I remind the minister he has the power through federal income tax to raise federal revenues. For decades the federal government taxed the resource industry by means of income tax at a ridiculously low rate. If the federal minister now wants to make up that lack of taxation revenue or that lack of foresight, he has a method to do that. That is through the federal income tax legislation. That would be a fair way of doing it.

The whole point that we in the opposition have been objecting to is the federal government's arbitrary decision making with respect to taxation policy. The federal government is arbitrarily infringing upon an area of resource management which, by the terms of our constitution, should be left in the hands of the provinces. This is why we want these clauses of the bill to be delayed until the first ministers' conference in April. In a spirit of co-operation and fair play and upholding the principles of confederation, this whole matter could be discussed and some accommodation reached between the federal government and the provinces instead of this arbitrary and unfair action being taken.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I am always about to forgo asking any questions until I hear the Liberal backbenchers heckling. We can facilitate the passage of this bill if the committee will only listen for a moment or two. I wish to ask the minister one or two questions. I think I know the answers. However, I want to be very clear and to have this on the record.

In Saskatchewan there is the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. It is a publicly owned utility that provides electricity to the people of Saskatchewan. It purchases gas at the lowest possible price and sells to the consumers in the province at the lowest possible price. It is trying to give a service to the people of Saskatchewan.

Is there any way the minister can interpret this legislation to say that the Saskatchewan Power Corporation is not selling gas to the Saskatchewan consumer at a high enough price, or is not selling it at the fair market value? It buys the gas at low cost and sells it to Saskatchewan consumers at low cost. That might be below the fair market value on the free market under this legislation. Would the gas the Saskatchewan Power Corporation purchased be deemed to have been purchased at a higher price than the price for which the Corporation was selling it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is no. The Saskatchewan government is satisfied that the Saskatchewan Power Corporation would not be adversely affected by this legislation as amended.

Mr. Nystrom: That is the assurance I wanted.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Clause 37, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 43.1 agreed to.

Clause 80, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Fairweather: On division.

Title agreed to on division.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Bill reported.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Now!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton), seconded by Mr. Jamieson, moves that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Symes.]

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, there is no bill before us. The bill has not yet been reprinted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point has been well made. Many amendments have been made to this bill. It has to be reprinted before it can be given third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: At the end of April.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO AMOUNT OF INSURED LOANS, TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATIONS, ETC.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 29, 1975, consideration of the motion of Mr. Danson that Bill C-46, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Danson: Madam Speaker, I thought other hon. members would like to speak on this bill before it is passed, but I should like to rise at this time because I am sure that everyone appreciates the urgency—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point is that the minister cannot speak now.

An hon. Member: Nobody else got up.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He cannot speak now unless the Chair informs the House that by so doing he will close the debate. And that has not happened.

Mr. Epp: Wake up over there!

Mr. Danson: I suggested that if anybody else wanted to speak—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Danson: I would have risen on a point of order but there was so much noise that I could not have made myself heard. I rose to speak because I did not see anyone else rising. I thought that everyone recognized the excellence, the urgency of and the need for this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I must advise the House that if the hon. minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I rose to speak on the bill but the minister rose first. It comes as a great surprise to me, and I am sure to many other people, that the government does not have all the answers to the present housing crisis. What with the millions of dollars hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches opposite have squandered on housing surveys, urban planning studies and urban demonstration programs since 1969, one would think they must have the answer to any question or problem which could possibly arise on these subjects in the next 20 years. But this is obviously not the case. The government has come up with very few answers which have contributed significantly to easing Canada's housing crisis.

Whenever I think of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) the image conjured up is that of the fellow in the stands at a professional hockey game. I mean the fellow who walks around shouting "Programs, programs". He usually has little trouble selling his products since nothing else is available, but because the players and the game are changing so fast the program is invariably out of date and inaccurate by the time it is sold. The program seller, being a well meaning sort, immediately has another program drawn up for the next home game. Unfortunately, with player trades, expansions and teams gone out of business, the new program is again out of date. This persists until the man with all the programs finally realizes that he needs one which lists all the players and all the teams, a comprehensive program, as it were.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has not realized this yet. He continues to produce stop-gap, after-the-fact programs which he hopes will hold the attention of spectators for long enough to give him a chance of coming up with a newer one. Admittedly, he is getting better at it. But he does not seem to realize how important, how vital this game is. Bill C-46 is still not sufficient to make reasonable priced housing available to a reasonable number of Canadians.

The housing situation in Canada today now constitutes, as my hon. friend from Kingston and the Islands so accurately put it on January 27, a crisis of major proportions. I hope that all realistic members of the House—and I use a description which the Minister of Urban Affairs repeatedly applies to himself—realize the magnitude and the gravity of the situation. I do not need to quote statistics showing an apartment vacancy rate of under 2 per cent—as low as .1 per cent in some cities—or refer to the fact that fewer than 5 per cent of Canadians can afford to buy a home in urban centres.

The situation is extremely serious and I think the minister must surely realize this. I doubt if Bill C-46 will alleviate many of the major problems. The deficiencies of Bill C-46 have been well articulated in preceding speeches, and I should like to make my remarks in a more positive vein. This minister seems to me to have a very genuine concern for the challenges facing him, and for that reason I am sure he welcomes any and all suggestions that are meant to help him ease the housing crisis.

The first suggestion I would have for the minister is to make every effort to trim the red tape involved in erecting a dwelling. As any developer who has attempted to have a housing sub-division or other major housing proposal approved can attest, there seems to be a conspiracy among the various levels of government to deprive low and middle income families of suitable housing at reasonable cost. I base this statement on the fact that it can take up to two years or more to get a development plan approved by all the legislative bodies concerned. This has to increase costs enormously; costs that must be borne by the consumer.

Major developers have been quoted as saying they could reduce the cost of a house by 50 per cent, if not for bureaucratic red tape and the laggardly, out of date processing procedures employed by the three levels of government. The province of Ontario has made some strides in the last two years to streamline these procedures. Previous to this up to 40 ministries and agencies had to be consulted in order to approve a development proposal. I would like to read some comments from a Toronto newspaper on cutting housing costs in half. This article appeared in the Toronto Star and it stated:

> Single-family housing could be provided in and around Metropolitan Toronto at half the present $40,000-plus average price if only developers were given co-operation by government in place of restrictions and outright hostility.
> That, at least, is the contention of four key figures in the development industry who took part in a round-table discussion of the urban housing problem.

The article then continued as follows:

> Provincial Government financing of water and sewer services for privately held land ready for development, aimed at flooding the market with serviced land so as to drive down the price of a serviced lot—now at a record high $22,000 average;
> Relaxation, at least in specified areas, of a long list of restrictions on new subdivisions such as minimum lot sizes, requirement of elaborate local servicing and stipulations as to the type of building materials used.
> Elimination of federal and provincial sales taxes on building materials totalling 17 per cent.
> They reasoned that an over-supply of serviced lots would soon bring the price of a normal 50-by-100 foot lot back to the $11,000 level current in Mississauga as recently as two years ago during a short period of surplus.
> Beyond that, the price could be trimmed to about $5,000 a lot by permitting single-family homes on lots 20 to 25 feet wide with a bare minimum of services—a good gravel road, open storm sewers and overhead power lines.
> And the cost of the house itself—now about $18,000 to $20,000 for a three-bedroom bungalow—could be trimmed to about $15,000 by eliminating the sales taxes and in some cases substituting cheaper materials, such as aluminum siding for brick veneer.

Another topic to be raised during tri-level discussions is a better system for taxation for so-called agricultural land owned by speculators on the outskirts of or adjacent to cities. Millions of dollars in profit are being made when these properties are sold. It is only fair that a portion of the profit be paid back to the communities in the form of a more equitable tax system than is in force in many locations.

Agricultural lands should be taxed on a deferred basis when they are developed or sold; that is, land which is re-zoned for residential development should be back taxed at the residential land assessment rate. Such an arrangement would not hurt the land owners appreciably since the increased tax could be deducted as an operating expense from their capital gains tax, but it would result in a great deal more money being available to the municipalities for servicing of land. Some provinces and cities already employ such a system, and the minister should endeavour to bring it to the attention of others.

It is up to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to approach the provinces and the municipalities to improve the situation in this regard. He could do this at the next tri-level meeting on housing and urban affairs.

I am not advocating unrestrained development with no safeguards for the community, of course; but as anyone who has had any contact with the present approving bodies knows, they have a long way to go before their process could be called efficient.

Those two levels of government notwithstanding, I feel the Minister of State for Urban Affairs could go a long way toward unification of his housing programs. With the multiplicity of aid plans and the maze of assistance programs he now advertises, many prospective house buyers are hesitant to attempt to unravel it all without the aid of a lawyer, and we all know how much they charge these days.

The minister cannot possibly say he is happy with the complexity of the present mess. He must develop a comprehensive program, and he must do it soon. Cutting through the confusion surrounding the government's housing policy, and I use the word policy loosely, is a further source of expense to developers. The incentive is not there for them to risk large amounts of capital on plans that may be delayed unreasonably.

Let me refer to a recent newspaper article under the heading "New Housing Index Shows Rising Costs Worse Than Thought". This article refers to Statistics Canada, and it states:

Statistics Canada for the first time has published figures showing the trend of new-house prices in six metropolitan areas of Canada.

The new index confirms what everyone already knew—that new-house prices in Toronto rose almost 80 per cent in the three years ending last August, the latest month for which figures are available.

The selling prices for new houses of equal quality in Montreal rose by 82.5 per cent in the same three-year period, with more than half of this rise occurring in the last year.

The figures also confirm that the "new houses" component of the consumer price index has greatly underestimated the actual rise in selling prices, meaning that the price index has not adequately indicated the rising cost of housing to Canadians in urban centres.

The CPI component for new houses across Canada shows a 40.3 per cent rise in the three years and a 12.5 per cent increase for the year ending last August. This is only about half the increase shown by the figures published yesterday.

The reason for the difference is that the price index for new houses in based on labour and material cost trends and does not include the price of land, which has been the primary reason for rising house prices.

For union workers with wages indexed to the consumer price index, this means their cost-of-living pay increases do not cover the rise in the price of buying a house in the past three years.

There was further criticism of the government's housing plans at a recent meeting of the provincial housing ministers in Ottawa. At that time they stated, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of January 30 this year:

The provincial ministers renewed a demand made by Ontario and some other provinces two years ago for freedom to spend their allotment of housing funds the way they wish.

They said the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp.... should be banker handing out federal money for housing programs that provincial governments consider necessary in their regions.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

At the moment, the federal government is directly involved in a number of social housing programs, setting the ground rules under which federal money can be spent.

The provincial ministers were critical of mid-year changes in CMHC budgets reducing spending in some programs.

"The allocation of these priority funds should be at the discretion of the individual provinces," the provincial statement said.

In a further newspaper article in respect of housing under the heading "New Fiscal Policies Needed to Spur Housing" it is stated, and this article is from the Globe and Mail of January 16, 1975:

A series of new fiscal and monetary initiatives is still required and should be directed particularly toward Canada's housing industry, since the recent budget measures will tend on balance to deter housing purchases in 1975.

Though $500 cash grants are now available from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. for first-time buyers of moderately priced houses, this is more than overshadowed by the negative demand effect of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan (RHOSP).

This new government scheme permits deductible contributions of $1,000 a year to a maximum of $10,000 if applied to the future purchase of a house. This plan will provide a large and expanding pool of savings flows to the thrift institutions. Though the RHOSP scheme is interesting, there are several flaws in its introduction at this particular time. It provides a generous incentive to save and may marginally postpone some housing demand. But as presently constituted, this plan will not likely increase the supply of mortgage funds very significantly. Unfortunately, there is neither a guarantee nor any mechanism to ensure that the bulk of these funds will flow in the desired direction of mortgage loans.

In a recent article in the Montreal Gazette, the following was stated:

As for control of federal housing money, certainly Ottawa has an obligation to exercise some direction here. It must make sure the money does not come under the influence of a developer's lobby once it reaches the provincial or municipal level and that it does not go into the development of chronically underfinanced commuter communities.

On policy matters, however, Ottawa does not speak from a position of strength. Its housing non-policy very likely acts as an impediment to provincial initiatives. Until it straightens out the mishmash of programs that has accumulated over the years, the federal government can expect continuing criticism about its housing policies.

A system like this could cut the initial mortgage payments but allow them to rise as a homeowner's earning power increases over the years. Economists at MIT see this as a large step in stimulating the housing industry in the U.S.; the plan might also prove effective here.

The president of the Toronto Home Builder's Association has listed a number of suggestions for lowering the price of houses. I agree with him when he says that lowering standards is not an acceptable method, but some of his other suggestions are, first, a lower quality of services in new subdivisions. He feels there is no need for curbs and gutters in new subdivisions. Small ditches and asphalt roads would be more economical. Second, builders could build different sizes of houses, but co-operation is required from municipalities for this. Third, smaller lots would allow more houses to be built on a given piece of land. Fourth, municipal governments could help keep costs lower by bringing land on stream faster. Fifth, governments could provide more mortgage money at below market rates. Sixth, establish a unilateral building code so that builders would not be required to change drawings and specifications when moving from one municipality to another. These are matters that the minister could also take up at the next tri-level meeting on housing.

Many notable economists have stated that house price inflation will not be brought under control until the supply of houses exceeds demand for a time. This is only logical, but the call is for a minimum of 275,000 new housing starts this year, as opposed to the 210,000 that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has set as his minimum. The eight provinces at last week's federal-provincial housing conference unanimously called for at least 250,000 starts this year.

If this objective is to be met it is obvious that the minister will have to look very seriously at these suggestions, and others. He must realize that he does not have all the answers, as none of us do, and should begin listening more closely to the other groups involved in the industry.

Earlier in this parliament I made the suggestion that the government look more closely at the mobile home as a source of relief to the housing squeeze. The parliamentary secretary at that time expressed a great deal of interest and assured me the suggestion would be investigated more fully. What has been done in this regard since then?

I think this minister has made some mistakes during his tenure, some of which have had a negative effect on house sales. One persistent miscue is the announcement of programs, such as the $500 bonus on moderately priced new houses, as long as six months before a program will be implemented. This keeps prospective buyers from going ahead with their plans in anticipation of the impending program.

Last fall, $3.6 million were spent on a housing survey that asked questions like: "how many bathrooms does your house have?". Again I must mention the $100 million urban demonstration program that this minister's predecessor freely admitted would not result in any houses being built. That $100 million would go a long way towards supplying municipalities with funds to supply serviced lots. These surveys and studies are not needed.

As the previous minister responsible for urban affairs also admitted, we have a large over-surplus of surveys and statistics in this country. The situation is well known; the problems are recognized. These surveys do not build houses. I say, divert the money toward mortgages, and toward supplying three bedroom bungalows on serviced lots.

The most extensive and useful survey that has been done under the federal government was the 1969 report of the Hellyer task force on housing and urban planning. But how many of this report's recommendations have been implemented? Very few, I think. I would like to suggest that if those recommendations had been heeded and more effective action taken on them, we would not be in the mess in which we presently find ourselves.

But how much money has been spent on studies and surveys in the last six years? The walls of the urban affairs offices must be lined with the results.

What we need from this government and this minister is not more rhetoric, statistics or surveys. What we need is a more unified, efficient policy, some positive action to cut the red tape involved in building a house, and some direct assistance to municipalities to supply serviced lots at a reasonable cost—nothing less, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I am particularly happy to see in the House now both the former and the present minister responsible for housing because, as both these hon. gentlemen will of course realize, in my speech, I will deal with the subject that involves them, namely, the subject of the native and rural housing program in which both ministers, in my opinion, have made some serious mistakes.

Before I speak on that subject I would like to make a few comments about some of the problems that confront me daily in trying to interpret the existing programs and existing legislation to my constituents. I have awaited with great interest the introduction of this bill, but I have not held my breath. Probably that was a good thing because otherwise I would have suffocated.

I believe that if a great statesman had been in this House, such as was in England at one time, he would have said that never have so many said so much about so little. I am as disappointed as every Canadian must be, whether he lives in a metropolitan centre or close to one, whether he lives in an urban centre, apart from the major metropolitan areas, or whether he lives in a rural area in Canada, because the bill does not address itself to the main problems faced by Canadians today.

It is inconceivable to me that the minister can declare that the dream of owning a private home near any of the urban centres of our country is a forgotten dream and that it will not be possible for Canadians to own a private home. With that announcement a Canadian way of life has been abandoned or destroyed. My constituents, as well as those of my colleagues, are responding because we are not reacting to this announcement with any great degree of enthusiasm.

I do not read into the bill, which the minister has introduced and tried to defend, all the things the minister says are there. He said that the bill moves to eliminate, through the removal of the federal sales tax, the high cost of construction. Several of my colleagues have touched on that. Sales tax has been reduced to 5 per cent, but the effect of inflation counteracts this and there is not any real reduction. In order to make any impact, the sales tax should be removed in its entirety.

With regard to the high cost of money, the minister said that he has invited private capital into the market and that there will be a significant breakthrough in the alleviation of the high rate of interest. The minister knows what should have been done with interest rates on housing. It has been suggested to him before what should be done to attract private capital to the housing market.

The idea would have been to allow private capital in the housing market and to allow for deduction of interest earnings on such investment from income tax. I suggest that the minister has tried to get this idea past his cabinet colleagues and has not succeeded because I think that he knows how to reduce interest rates, if he were really serious. I suggest that his cabinet colleagues did not agree with some of his ideas. The program he did introduce will not reduce interest rates and will not reduce the cost of lending to those people who find it difficult to cope with the high payments even for a moderately priced house today.

I would like to touch on the high cost of land for a moment because I am particularly concerned with some of the problems which have recently developed in the province of British Columbia. That province is following a policy of leaseholds, and I have a brochure which deals with provincial rental housing where the federal government shares fifty-fifty in a major new program, such as is described here, to build and operate provincially owned rental units for everyone, not just the disadvantaged. These housing units are built on provincially owned land, and the units will be provincially owned. The program does not describe who will maintain these units, except that the federal government will share that as well.

I do not know whether the minister is as concerned as I am about some of the ideas which have been generated in Victoria lately. In fact a couple of years ago the provincial government indicated that there would be no more private land ownership in the province, that all land will be vested in the Crown, and that there will only be leaseholds for people owning property. I think it should be the responsibility of the minister and Central Mortgage and Housing to see that Canadians in British Columbia have a choice as to whether they want to lease their land from any government or whether they would like to own it.

I take strong exception to the fact that the act and the corporation are being used to further the kind of approach the government of British Columbia is taking toward land.

I would like to leave the metropolitan areas and discuss some of the difficulties people in the outlying areas in mid Canada and northern Canada are experiencing with the implementation of various programs. As the minister and my colleagues know, many Canadians in these areas find it necessary to live in a mobile way. Living in a mobile home is the only way many of those people can have a roof over their heads in some areas, because financing for such units has been available through lending institutions other than those which traditionally lend for housing. It has been a cheaper way of getting into a home. By virtue of their employment and domestic affairs, others find it necessary to be mobile, and they move their homes from place to place. It has been difficult, and is becoming more so for municipalities or private operators of mobile home parks to provide the necessary services to cater to this demand.

The program in the bill does not offer any solution to the problem faced by these private operators or municipalities, and does nothing to assist them with their very expensive installation of services, such as water and sewer. Of course it can be argued that if it is close to a municipality, the municipality can apply for some assistance with sewer outfall lines, but there is no assistance for land development, or for development of these very necessary facilities to municipalities or private developers. That has been a very serious omission. The bill does not deal with or recognize that need.

The $500 acquisition grant does not apply to an owner of a mobile unit unless he has lived on a lot for a period of five years. But of course the mobile home dweller does not commit himself to a lease, or does not own a lot for a period of five years because he may work on a construction site at James Bay or on the Peace River dam. Then of course if he is on a lot for five years he is not mobile, so that discriminates against a very important and significant number of Canadians who find that kind of living necessary.

A rural application of many of the programs simply does not apply. There is the matter of septic tanks. I know that this minister and the former minister have said that local officials can use discretion and can allow for direct lending for homes which are tied to septic tanks. In actual fact it does not work. I can demonstrate this for the minister. I can show him dozens and dozens of letters I have received, and that I have followed up with the office in Prince George, which is responsible for two-thirds of the province of British Columbia, without result.

If one does not have access to one of the traditional lending institutions, there is no direct lending to smaller municipalities which are not incorporated and do not have water and sewer services. There is no direct lending to people who live on the fringes of these areas on small holdings, which is another way of Canadian life, and the buck is being passed all the time.

If I look at AHOP, which has been proclaimed as one of the major breakthroughs and one of the shining examples of how the housing situation can be solved in Canada, as it applies in central and northern Canada I find that it just gets people in these areas into more problems.

What the minister and his officials do not realize is that the cost of building is a minor part of the cost of the house. People up there have to use their ingenuity to find new and cheaper ways of building homes. Maintenance is a major expense, however, and none of the present programs have addressed themselves to this. It costs a great deal more to heat and maintain a house in those regions than it does to build, and although payments under AHOP and other social programs may be low, the cost of maintenance can put a house out of the reach of many families. This problem should be given special attention.

I should like to turn now to the matter of the native and rural housing projects. I made some inquiries of the information service of Central Mortgage and Housing about this program and was told that there was no such program but there was, rather, a combination of all the programs of the corporation. After long and painful deliberations with the native community of Canada the minister announced on March 27 that 50,000 homes would be built within five years for native people.

In answer to my question of November 27 the minister responded that a booklet would be circulated to hon. members concerning the programs maintained by his department. That booklet arrived about a week ago. The various programs are enumerated, but the native and rural housing program was not amongst them. In a later brochure called "Quick Review for Ready Reference" the program is mentioned on the last page. In that brochure the minister said that the program was designed to acquire or to build 50,000 housing units and to rehabilitate an equal number over the next five years.

In reply to my questions the minister said that the program was going quite well, although some of the provinces had not responded. He did not refer at all to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon where there was no requirement for provincial co-operation. He said that 24 units had been built after one season of construction. I suppose you have to start somewhere, but 24 out of 50,000 is not a great achievement.

I received a letter dated April 30, 1974, from the former minister who said:

We have just given a grant of $219,000 to BCANSI—

That is the British Columbia Association of Non-Status Indians.

—to assist them in developing a housing delivery system. Their proposal includes the construction of 3,500 new houses, the upgrading of 1,750 existing houses and the purchase of 1,750 houses for resale or rental to native people over a period of seven years. For the current year they have set as a goal the construction of 200 new units and the acquisition of another 200 existing units. They also hope to undertake an extensive rehabilitation and renovation program.

I should like to know if 200 new homes have been built in British Columbia, and whether 200 homes have been rehabilitated. I should like to know how well that delivery program, which cost $219,000 in 1974, is working. I do not see any activity in British Columbia that would reflect that kind of investment.

The native and rural housing program was promised to the native people in 1971 and 1972. At a meeting with a native group on November 21, 1973, the then minister said he would soon be ready to announce a native program. About the same time a senior official at CMHC who was responsible for that program was accused of showing it to the native people before it was announced. He was dismissed as a result of this, and the program was delayed.

The minister said the program will be worth waiting for and the native people believed him. They have demonstrated patience beyond comprehension over the last 100 years, Madam Speaker. I guess we can wait another two weeks. At one time we were told we had only a month to wait before the implementation of the program, and another time, that we had only three months to wait. Clearly, there is no such thing as a native people's housing program. The native people have been cheated again. As far as I know, there is not any native housing project.

At one time officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation met with people of the native community in the cities and on the reserves. I spoke to the minister about the need for housing for native peoples on reserves. The minister said there would be no problem. His officials were to consult with the natives, and native peoples were to be provided with housing, including low-cost rental housing, public housing and co-operating housing.

When these programs were suggested to native peoples, they, instead of becoming excited, reacted in an unexpected way. They said that the treaties stipulated that Her Majesty would be responsible for providing native peoples with proper shelter. They also said that the minister's programs would perpetuate them as recipients of welfare. For those reasons they were not interested in co-operating with the minister. They did not like his fancy programs.

Clearly, this country lacks a native people's and rural housing program. The $10,000 which is available to people living on reserves for the building of a house is inadequate, considering present conditions. I say this, although the minister has treated me well and granted me private audiences to discuss this problem. He is a new minister and aware of the problem.

I see that my colleague from Skeena is looking at me. Is she happy with what the people at Central Mortgage and Housing have done? I trust she can defend their actions. I know some of the problems in the constituency of Skeena, because they are similar to many of the problems in my constituency and other areas of Canada. I think she will find it difficult to make a good case for the present system, because it does not respond to real need.

You see, Madam Speaker, in Canada there is a dual standard in housing. There is one standard for urban centres where the votes are, and another for rural areas where the need is. I should like to attend some meetings with my colleagues from Skeena and see how she defends this program. I suggest she will find it difficult to defend it.

An hon. Member: No votes, no houses.

Mr. Oberle: Quite. I managed, by scrounging and scheming, to obtain 12 homes out of 24 which have been built so far under the program which calls for 50,000 housing units to be built.

I want to mention an idea that is exciting, looks good on paper, and has to do with new innovations in building construction. Over the weekend I visited a small factory in Prince George which manufactures new types of building blocks. Engineers of Central Mortgage and Housing and private engineers have examined these building blocks and given them a clean bill of health. They are strong, suitable for our northern areas, and ready to be used. The factory has been set up and the person in charge has already built two homes of 1,200 square feet, one costing about $13,500 and built by a contractor, and the other costing about $10,000, and built by a husband and wife.

The blocks are easy to assemble. I asked the factory manager what response he has had from Central Mortgage and Housing. He said, "Well, of course we cannot get financing outside the city". He said that because of local bylaws builders are reluctant to put up homes made of these blocks. I hope that the minister can avail himself of the diligent work which has been done by the engineering department of that factory, so that the people of Canada may benefit. I know of several interesting innovations in housing which could be used, particularly for native housing in rural and northern areas.

I hope the minister will insist that officials serving in various areas of this country will examine various projects and schemes of the type I have outlined, and help to sell them to those concerned. In Prince George we retained the services of a social development officer. She is a capable lady who works out of an office in Prince George. I hope she will visit the factory I mentioned and recommend use of the new building blocks in the Yukon, central and northern British Columbia, and other areas where the need is great.

When this bill was introduced on second reading, the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) said that inadequate housing in Canada is indeed the breeding ground for a lot of human misery in our country. I hope the minister will soon tell us what he intends to do to implement a program for building rural and native people's housing. Unless he implements some such program, the native people of this land will feel they have been cheated once more. I have before me a document showing what has been done in this area since 1971, and it is not exciting reading. Unless the minister institutes an adequate program, the native people will knock on his door again and tell him they have been betrayed. They will insist on an adequate rural and native people's housing project.

If the minister does not intend to participate in this debate, perhaps one of his colleagues will tell us what the government intends to do to meet real needs in this country. It is useless relying on government information services; Central Mortgage and Housing officials know nothing about this program. Frankly, I do not think the minister knows much about it either.

We were promised 50,000 new homes for native and rural peoples in the next five years. We want to be assured that this will happen, that the government recognizes the plight of native peoples and that it has committed itself to solving some of their special problems.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Madam Speaker, this is the first occasion on which I have had the opportunity to speak in the House on this subject since the minister's appointment to his portfolio. May I therefore take this opportunity to congratulate him on his appointment. I would not wish him to think that my congratulations involve necessarily or indeed at all any approbation of the policies that may have been foisted upon him. I hope he will recognize this as a kindly personal wish and not as any political gesture.

Like the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), I wish to speak first about housing problems as they affect my constituency. The hon. member mentioned certain groups of Canadians who have a very real and serious problem in connection with housing. The same is true of people who live in the less prosperous parts of metropolitan areas such as Toronto. Many of them live in Greenwood.

I do not know whether this coincides with the minister's philosophy, but the major way of helping these people is through an extension of public housing. I find no reference to public housing in these amendments. It may be the minister will put his efforts into that field later. However, let me point out to the minister that the real problem we have today is not people who can finance to acquire home ownership. Admittedly that has some importance, but the real problem is that there are many people in existing housing who are threatened with eviction. These people have rented for 20 or 30 years. They are now older and living on pension. Because of enormous increases they are not able to pay the rent.

[Mr. Oberle.]

I have, as do many other members, a constituency office. No week passes without a substantial number of people coming to my office and urging me to try to assist them in getting low cost housing through the Ontario Housing Corporation, which is public housing supported to some extent by federal funds. I am reminded by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), that the funds for this purpose have been reduced. If that is the case, the minister is proceeding in entirely the wrong direction.

Rents for public housing are geared to income. The people who suffer from lack of housing are those who do not have adequate income to pay rentals at the present time. Many of them are older people. They have lived in the same place, paid their rent regularly and, in many cases in my constituency, have maintained the homes in an admirable fashion. Now that they are older, they are being forced out. They simply cannot afford to pay anything close to the commercial rents that are being required. I therefore plead with the minister to shift his emphasis toward housing and not cut down on the funds available for that.

The major emphasis I want to make is with regard to co-operative and non-profit housing which is being defined as the third force. No doubt the minister is aware that his predecessor, who was in the House earlier—

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Brewin: I will not try to distract his attention. I do not think I would succeed. The former minister attended a seminar on non-profit and co-operative housing programs which was held at the Holiday Inn in Toronto on March 25, 1974. He was speaking to representatives of this form of housing programs. His words could not have been warmer or more enthusiastic. He said, and I quote:

> I would like, first of all, to express my appreciation to all of the representatives of community housing organizations who are here today. I congratulate you and I welcome you as partners in an important humanitarian enterprise. I want to assure you of the continued support of the federal government in your work.
> You are in a position to make a unique contribution to the solution of housing problems. As private individuals, living within the community you serve, you are in a better position than any government to recognize and respond to the particular needs of the community. You bring an intimate human quality to the process of planning and managing housing. No one else can do that so well.

I am referring to the former Minister of State for Urban Affairs, now the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford). I am referring to him with high praise at the moment. If he listens to all of my speech, he will find that will be followed by a lack of enthusiasm for the follow-up both by him and the present minister. He dealt with the third force. He said:

> The third sector can never build all of the housing that we will need but it is a creative power and a very sensitive and responsible instrument which works for the many thousands of Canadians who don't have the financial clout to command much attention in the market place but who, with a little bit of financial and moral support, can look after themselves.
> Because I put a very high value on this kind of initiative—
> Non-profit and co-operative groups are in an ideal position to use the rehabilitation program as a self-help exercise.

I want to say that we in my constituency accepted this. We have at least 75 units of co-operative housing. It is extremely well managed. All the nice things the former minister said about the value of this sort of housing are there.

I see that it is six o'clock, Madam Speaker. I will have to wait for the continuance of my speech to explain to the minister why I feel he is not following this through with vigour. I want assurance from him that he not only accepts, but intends to translate these glowing words into action.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, I would like to announce the business for tomorrow for the guidance of hon. members. It is the intention to call first Bill C-49, to amend the Income Tax Act, for third reading. When that is disposed of we will revert to the bill which has just been under discussion, namely, Bill C-46.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 27, 1975

The House met at 2.00 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received from Government House which is as follows:

Ottawa, February 27, 1975

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., in his capacity of Deputy Governor General of Canada, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 27th day of February, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEES—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On Wednesday, February 19, last the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) rose on a question of privilege regarding the matter of members of this House appearing before committees of the other place to make representations to them on legislation which has gone through the stages of consideration in this chamber. The matter was raised subsequently and the question that was put by the hon. parliamentary secretary was whether a member can go to the other place and raise doubts about a piece of legislation on which this House of Commons has already taken a stand.

It seems to me that the hon. parliamentary secretary has raised two questions: first, can a member appear before a committee of the other place? I suppose that amounts to a question of whether a member of this chamber can be prevented from so doing. On examining the precedents that were cited, and the Standing Orders, I can find nothing which bears directly upon the point of an hon. member of this House voluntarily appearing before a Senate committee. In any case, the precedents which would appear to offer some assistance are very early precedents which seem to me to have been overriden by usage common to the practices of this House since 1946, whereunder ministers have appeared in assistance of legislation and members have appeared in assistance of their own bills.

While exceptions are provided in this case under the Standing Orders of the other place, they are not referred to in the Standing Orders of this chamber. Accordingly, whatever precedents there were which might have supported the proposition that a member of this chamber could have been prevented from appearing before a committee of the other place seem to have been overridden by recent practices. Accordingly, I am not able to conclude that there is any authority whereunder the Chair could prevent such a thing being done by a member of this chamber.

The second question is whether, in so doing, a member can cast doubts upon legislation that has already been dealt with in this chamber. It seems to me that is hypothetical. No suggestion is made that such an event has taken place and no specific evidence of any occurrence is offered in support of such an allegation. In fact, no motion or inquiry seeking any action on the part of the Chair is appended to the hon. member's question of privilege. I would therefore conclude that no evidence is offered to support the contention that in any recent or specific case a breach of the privileges or Standing Orders of this House has taken place, and therefore I cannot find that a prima facie question of privilege is involved.

I should add, however, that much of the comment that was made in the course of the discussion—which was very long—on this very important point was valid. I refer, for example, to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that it is a curious anomaly that the other place takes such a grave view of this matter, sufficient to inscribe in its Standing Orders the punishment and penalties that ought to be visited upon one of its members who might condescend to come to this place and appear before this House or its emanations, but it takes a different attitude toward the presence of members of this chamber appearing before that chamber or its committees.

In addition, I am troubled by the fact that a committee of the other place having received, in any particular proceeding, one member of this chamber as a witness, it might find it most awkward to refuse others who wanted to appear. I cannot help but wonder if one day we may see this as a question of privilege of quite another form when a member or members—and, of course, they could be considerable in number—indicate that because one member of this House has appeared before a Senate committee to comment on legislation that has been passed by this House, surely that ought to be a privilege or a right extended to all other members who hold different views. While that would be action outside this chamber, it might pose a thorny question about the rights and privileges of members of this House.

Finally, from our own members' point of view it would seem to me that in doing so, obviously members are putting themselves in a situation where they are inviting a breach of Standing Order 35 which prohibits comment or reflection upon decisions of this House by members of this House, and they are inviting potentially grave affronts to parliament: they are inviting breaches of the privileges of the House. In fact, it seems to me that great care is needed on the part of hon. members appearing before committees of the other place in order to avoid these pitfalls. I can perhaps summarize these sentiments by saying it is to be hoped that neither members of this chamber nor of the other place will want to see that practice greatly encouraged.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH POSTAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Considering that the federal government indicated last year that no layoff would result from the impact of technological changes on the postal system, and that, as reported in the press, 6,000 Toronto postal workers have just been laid off for the purpose of possibly crushing the strike of blue collar workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House discuss this situation now, so that immediate corrective action may be taken to remedy this situation and create as soon as possible a climate truly favourable to meaningful bargaining in this area.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF LABOUR INVOLVED IN ANY CASE OF ILLEGAL ENTRY INTO CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek permission of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 of urgent and pressing necessity, particularly in view of discussions in this House and elsewhere in recent days. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration be asked to tell this House whether the Minister of Labour, since becoming a member of parliament, has ever been involved with the illegal entry of an inadmissible person to Canada, whether any such case was ever investigated by the RCMP, whether the results of the investigation, if undertaken, were ever forwarded to his department and, if so, what action was taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL ELIGIBILITY AGE FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS BE LOWERED TO 60—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

Considering the many requests we receive from people between 60 and 65 years of age, asking that the old age security pension be extended to sixty-year-old persons, and considering that it is difficult for these people to earn an income by working, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House adopt, without debate because this matter is very well known, a motion asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to introduce without delay a bill extending the old age security pension to sixty-year-old persons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED CONTINUATION OF SUBSIDY TO SHIPBUILDING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter.

Considering that STAP—the shipbuilding temporary assistance program—will expire on March 31, 1975, that is in a few days, in view of the uncertainty of the future of this program, uncertainty that naturally affects our Canadian shipyards, and the minister's awareness of the efficiency of the program in maintaining a high level of employment in our shipyards, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté):

That the minister make a statement on motions indicating the intentions of his department with regard to STAP and, should the department intend to drop the program, that the minister advise us what measures are planned to replace it with comparable results.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, it requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

[English]

An hon. Member: Reid said no.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the record will show that a member of the Liberal Party said no to that request.

REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER ACT

AMENDMENT ELIMINATING PROVISION FOR ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS BY COMMISSIONER RESPECTING ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-381, to amend the Representation Commissioner Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is consequential on results of Bill C-370, a private members' bill standing in my name which today will receive royal assent. As a result of that bill passing, there are some consequential amendments which are deemed to be advisable to the Representation Commissioner Act that are contained in this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF OTHER AGENCIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General involving the massive probe by the RCMP and other federal agencies regarding the $21 million contract for the St. Lawrence. Can the minister indicate to the House the scope of the investigation being conducted at the present time into federal dredging contracts? Also, are there any other federal agencies involved and is the investigation virtually completed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that the investigation is still underway. There are other federal departments involved. I have been given no information to the effect that the police are ready to lay charges at this time.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to be followed by a further supplementary, since the minister has indicated there are other federal agencies involved besides the RCMP. Is the minister in a position to now disclose which other agencies these may be?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, to be certain, I better check on that. I will report to the House, possibly later in the question period.

REASON FOR WITHHOLDING PAYMENT TO CERTAIN MONTREAL COMPANIES FOR DREDGING ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Is the minister in a position to report back to the House on a question asked him yesterday concerning the $1.5 million final payment for the St. Lawrence dredging contract? He was asked if the payment was held up because the government was waiting for the disposition of court proceedings in Hamilton? Can the minister answer this question today? Is there a relationship between the two?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I put that question to the RCMP immediately after the question period yesterday. I have not yet received a reply. All these answers are not in Ottawa. It is necessary to check with people in the field.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF MINISTER OF LABOUR IN REMOVAL OF MR. LANZA AS COMMISSIONER

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent statement by the Minister of Labour regarding the integrity of Del Hickey and Joe Lanza of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, can the minister indicate whether it is true the Minister of Labour was instrumental in having Mr. Lanza removed from his position last summer and whether there were consultations with the Minister of Transport in this regard?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on this whole matter—

An hon. Member: There is no answer.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, yes, there are answers. First, I must inform the House in connection with this matter—I probably should have done this before, but I did not have the complete file before me—that I am the one who, in January 1973, two years ago, ordered the RCMP to inquire into alleged Hamilton irregularities. The same is true for the Quebec part of the dredging. I can produce the letters at any time. As Minister of Transport, I asked the Solicitor General to make this—

An hon. Member: Will you table the letters?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I can do that. I have them here. I will have copies made. They are very regular letters. We thought there was some irregularity. There was some suspicion about the attitude of Mr. Lanza and another person; I do not recall the name, but I can get it in five minutes. I said I would renew their mandate for a few months, but I did not intend to renominate them after that. Actually, they were not renominated to the board.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REASON FOR FAILURE TO RENEW APPOINTMENTS OF MR. HICKEY AND MR. LANZA AS COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I thank the minister for his very informative answer. Was there any specific reason why their mandate was not renewed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, there was not. At that time no trial had taken place—there had been no inquiry but there was suspicion and, since those jobs are given at the discretion of cabinet, nothing binds us to nominating someone who might be suspected of not, say, meeting some ethical standards we are supposed to have when we serve the government.

Mr. MacKay: Were there consultations at that time between the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The Minister of Labour was entirely in agreement with what I was doing.

HOUSING

WILLINGNESS OF GOVERNMENT TO INITIATE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM TO GRANT MORTGAGES AT 6 PER CENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Considering that interest rates on mortgages are now in the neighbourhood of 11 per cent, I would like to ask the minister whether, following the decision by the government of British Columbia recently to embark on a program which would provide mortgages at 6 per cent, the federal government would be willing to initiate a joint federal-provincial program with all the provinces which are interested in taking part to provide mortgages across the board to Canadians at 6 per cent?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not know whether the hon. member is aware of the fact that we have already made available an effective mortgage rate of 6 per cent for those Canadians who need it. This has been done under federal legislation, and if we can speed up the passage of the housing legislation this afternoon I hope many more Canadians will be able to take advantage of this rate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am well aware that something like .001 per cent of all the mortgages which go out from the federal government go out at 6 per cent, and that is precisely why I asked the minister whether he is willing to undertake the kind of action at the federal level which one province is prepared to take so that the average mortgage rate charged to the average Canadian would be 6 per cent.

Mr. Danson: I do not, of course, accept the premise of the hon. member's question as far as the percentage is concerned, with respect to mortgages which are supported by the central government through CMHC. However, I would be most interested in seeing what another government has come up with and discussing it with them to see what new answers they have found to a complex problem.

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN FUNDS ALLOCATED TO ONTARIO

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Can the minister explain to the House, in the way the Minister of Finance could not on Friday, why CMHC reduced the allocation of funds to the government of Ontario by the following amounts: from $78 million to $50.4 million for public housing construction; for co-operative housing from $65 million to $55.8 million, and for land assembly from $55 million to $35 million? Can he explain these cuts when, in fact, we are faced with the kind of housing crisis which the minister himself has described on previous occasions?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not have the precise figures before me. The capital budget of CMHC has, of course, been increased by 12 per cent over last year and Ontario's share has been increased as well. I shall be meeting with the Ontario housing minister on Monday to discuss the ways in which we can co-operate to ensure that our mutual objectives are best achieved.

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister has just said that he does not have the figures. I am using figures taken from a CMHC document. I would ask the minister to provide an answer to the House as to why the funds have been cut.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not carry all CMHC's documents around with me. The hon. member may carry one but I would have to carry a great deal more in order to answer questions that are put to me. I would be pleased to discuss it with the hon. member, but I would be much more interested in discussing it with the housing minister for Ontario.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACT TO BOMBARDIER FOR PROTOTYPE RAPID TRANSIT TRAIN—NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

The press just announced that the federal government has awarded the Bombardier corporation a $250 million contract to develop a prototype rapid transit train connecting suburbs and downtown areas. Could the Minister of Transport elaborate and tell the House what is happening to the large urban areas transit systems improvement project and could he confirm or invalidate that news about the award of a contract to Bombardier-Matra?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, let me answer a part of the question only. Otherwise, I would have to make an hour long speech on the development of the transport industry in Canada. I know that the news about Bombardier having been awarded a contract by my department is true.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Bombardier-Matra having been given an important contract of $250 million, could the minister tell how many new jobs will be created?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): How many jobs? Well, I do not know; but I will seek information and I will be told. But at first sight, I cannot say.

AUTHORITY TO SEARCH HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. As reported at page 3535 of Hansard the Minister of Labour said in answer to a question of mine:

> Mr. Speaker, they wanted permission to look at documents in my office, the contents of which I was really not aware. They were in cabinets. I gave them permission to go ahead, even though they did not have proper authority.

Has the minister looked into the fact that the RCMP had no authority to seize documents in the office of the Minister of Labour, and why did they act without authority?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did look into that. What the minister meant by that was that the search warrant the RCMP had on that occasion was for a different address. When the Minister of Labour saw that it was a different address, he felt he would not object to their taking the documents no matter where they were, and he gave them to them in any case.

NATURE OF DOCUMENT AUTHORIZING SEARCH OF HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I know the minister is trying to clear up this matter, but in light of the fact that there appears to be some discrepancy between the Minister of Labour and the Solicitor General, and since this matter is important, has the Solicitor General asked for a copy of the documents that the RCMP did in fact have with them when they entered and made a raid on the Minister of Labour's office; and if he has perused them, what kind of documents were they?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP had a search warrant to obtain certain documents from the Minister of Labour. When the Minister of Labour said that they did not have authority, he meant that they did not have authority to search at that particular address. It was not that the RCMP did not have general authority to search. Consequently, the Minister of Labour turned over all the documents at that address and at other places to the RCMP.

Mr. Woolliams: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House what the documents were? What did they contain, and would he be prepared to table a copy of them in the House so that the matter will then be finalized and cleared up?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the hon. member to be asking for the documents seized or taken by the RCMP?

Mr. Woolliams: Just to clarify that, Mr. Speaker, I am asking for the documents that led to the raid and gave the RCMP authority to make the raid on the Minister of Labour's office. What were those documents, and what did they contain?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there is a criminal investigation underway. Charges have been laid in five instances in this case already. Three men have been found guilty and the investigation is still being conducted. I do not think there are grounds to table in this House documents relating to a criminal investigation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, before we leave this issue, if we should leave it, in the course of giving an answer to my hon. friend from Central Nova the Minister of Transport read from a number of documents which he indicated a willingness to table. I have been waiting for him to do so, and I am wondering whether on a point of order I can ask the minister whether that is his intention.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister did not indicate that he was prepared to table the documents from which he was reading; he indicated that he was prepared to table correspondence in which he ordered an investigation into certain matters two years ago. Presumably the minister, if he indicated he is prepared to table them, will do so.

COMMUNICATIONS

GRANTING OF CABLE TELEVISION LICENCES IN HAMILTON—POSSIBLE POLICE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. I wonder whether the Minister of Communications knows of or has caused any sort of police investigation, or any other type of investigation of a criminal nature, into the granting of cable TV licences in the Hamilton area?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Solicitor General on the same matter. I ask him the same question, and as well I ask him whether he has any evidence, or whether any allegations have yet been brought to his attention, which would lead him to believe that there should be a police investigation into the granting of cable TV licences in the Hamilton area.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no such allegation has been brought to my attention. As far as I know there is no such investigation underway, but I will check into that.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Would he obtain a transcript of a television program this morning called "Canada AM" and the interview of Mrs. Ellen Reinke of Hamilton in which some remarks were made concerning the issuance of cable TV licences in the Hamilton area, and would he report back to the House if he thinks an investigation is warranted?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to get a transcript of the program.

SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF OTHER AGENCIES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to answer a question put to me a little earlier. I was asked whether other agencies were involved in the investigation with respect to the dredging contract in the Quebec City area. I said other agencies were involved. Then, the question was: Could you reveal the other agencies? I checked into that, and the answer is that it would interfere with the investigation if we made public the other agencies that are investigating. That would hinder the investigation.

HEALTH

ALLEGED FAILURE OF PRODUCTS OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES TO MEET STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of health. In view of the fact that Connaught Laboratories are now under the control of the Canada Development Corporation, that the mandate of this corporation in the health care area is one of long term profitability, and that this mandate has resulted in more than one instance in Connaught being forced to compromise their own product quality control standards and to ship products which did not meet regulatory requirements, has the minister taken any corrective action to ensure that quality control is up to international standards and that the quality of the product is up to international standards?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily accept all the hon. member's preliminary comments. I simply say that frequent inspections were made in the Connaught Laboratories; as a matter of fact, the average number of inspections in recent years has been higher there than the average for the whole pharmaceutical industry. Each time deficiencies were found, steps were taken by the Connaught Laboratories at the request of our department to remedy the situation. Each new case brought to our attention has been investigated immediately by officials of my department.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Do I take it from the minister's answer that he is quite satisfied that all products of this laboratory are indeed up to the world standard of acceptability?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering what the hon. member means by world standards. I am not aware of such a thing. There are national standards in each country and it is up to each country to enforce the standards which apply within its territory to imported or locally made products.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUIREMENT THAT CORPORATIONS BE PROFITABLE—SUGGESTED CHANGE FOR COMPANIES PRODUCING HEALTH PRODUCTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): While the minister checks what the standards are, may I direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canada Development Corporation and ask him whether, in view of the difficulties that have arisen because the mandate of CDC requires the corporation to be profitable and this does not appear to be compatible with products of high standard, he would be willing to consider changing the mandate so far as health care products are concerned.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the statute of CDC attempts to reconcile two prime objectives: one is profitability, and the other is the public interest of Canada. I think that with its investment in the Connaught Laboratories it is trying to reconcile the two.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a starred question of mine which has been on the order paper since January 30. It is my understanding that starred questions put on the order paper should be answered within a period of a week. I may be wrong on this, and if I am, I stand to be corrected. No answer has been forthcoming to my question. Yesterday, and previously, I attempted to rise on several occasions on this point, but was not recognized. If I am wrong, I would like to be told about it because I should like to know whether it is the right of an hon. member, when he places a starred question on the order paper, to receive an answer, and within what period of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North raises a point of order about the right of an hon. member to receive a reply to his starred question within a certain period of time. My understanding of the proceedings of the House in respect of starred questions is that a starred question entitles an hon. member to an oral answer when the answer is given, but does not give that member any right to demand an answer within a specified period of time.

Mr. Rynard: Since I first came to the House it has been the custom for a starred question to be answered within the period of a week. If I am wrong, I want to know it because then, I wonder what is the point of placing a starred question if it is left up to the minister to answer it if and when he likes. This is the very point that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River raised.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North raises an interesting point, but again I have to say that I cannot find any authority which would entitle an hon. member to an answer to a starred question within a period of time. What it does entitle him to is an oral answer in the House when the answer is given.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, my question then is, what is the point of placing a starred question on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: That is a good question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This exchange should not become an extended dialogue between the hon. member and the Chair. However, may I say that presumably the reason for placing a starred question on the order paper would be that it would result in an oral answer being given in the House, as opposed to a written answer.

Mr. Rynard: What Your Honour is saying then is that the minister can either give an answer or not give it. If that is what Your Honour is ruling, let us have it so that we know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking me for a ruling on a point of order. Let me make it clear. I have examined the precedents and authorities. I will put it in the terms of a specific ruling on the hon. member's point of order and tell him that I am not able to find any authority which can compel an answer to be given to any question, starred or otherwise, within any specific period of time. The adding of the asterisk requires an oral answer to the question.

HEALTH

ALLEGED FAILURE OF PRODUCTS OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES TO MEET STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, you recognized me on a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that in January of 1973 the Connaught Laboratories were found in breach of regulations covering raw materials, packaging and product stability, but nothing was done, and in February of 1974, Mr. Showalter, the chairman of the drug board, drew this to the attention of the chairman of Connaught Laboratories, Dr. R. J. Wilson, stating that there were violations in the finished products tests and quality control and that none of the other breaches had been corrected, and as governments were the big buyers of Connaught Laboratories products—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rynard: I want to ask the minister if he is aware of the fact that Connaught Laboratories have been selling those inferior products and vaccines all this time, thus subjecting the public to risk and destroying their own good name?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, from January 17 to January 19, an inspection was held at the Connaught Laboratories and some deficiencies were detected in certain drugs. Steps were taken as a result of that inspection to correct the deficiencies and that was it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXPORT OF ARMS TO TURKEY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On February 20 I asked him a question relating to the export from Canada of arms and military material to Turkey and whether licenses were being granted for this purpose. He replied that that used to be the situation, but that the situation had changed and the policy had been modified. He said he would like to refresh his memory in respect of the matter. So now, I ask him whether the policy of not granting licenses for the export of arms to Turkey at this time has been modified and, if so, how has the situation changed to justify this change in policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that at present there is no general embargo on the export to Turkey of arms or military equipment, although shipments of such material were suspended for a time following the events in Cyprus of last July and August. At present, each application for arms or military equipment to Turkey would be examined in the light of the existing and foreseeable political and military situation in the area before an export permit is granted. As the House is aware, it is not the policy of the government to allow the export of arms or military equipment to an area where military hostilities are taking place.

Mr. Brewin: In view of the fact that Canada has peacekeeping forces in Cyprus, would it not be rather shortsighted, to put it mildly, to put weapons in the hands of those who might in certain eventualities use them against our own troops?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I think one would have to agree with the hon. member. If that were the eventuality and if one shipped arms against that eventuality, it would indeed be shortsighted action. I do not regard it as an eventuality.

INDUSTRY

ALCAN—REASON FOR REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION AND LAY-OFFS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As the North American aluminum producers in the United States as well as in Canada have recently announced a total reduction in production averaging about 13 per cent, can the minister tell us as a result of such move by Alcan in Canada, at Arvida, Shawinigan or even Kitimat, if it is an isolated decision or a step taken in co-operation with its competitors, as it sometimes happen now, if in any case he intends to investigate this matter or if at least he has met an authority of Alcan in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member is asking about the layoffs in the aluminum industry, particularly of Alcan Canada. I have met with officials of that corporation, and I have been told that the reason for those layoffs and reductions in production is the slowing down of their markets abroad, particularly in the United States.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since 700 people have been laid off, temporarily or not, by Alcan in Arvida or Shawinigan, can the minister tell us whether he knows when the company will recall its employees and whether he intends to ensure with his provincial counterpart that any potential establishment of an aluminum company on the outskirts of Quebec City by the Quebec government does not result in increased unemployment for Alcan of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean, an area where the rate of unemployment is already 15 or 20 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take the representations of the hon. member as valuable suggestions and bring myself up to date on the details. I will try to get an answer for him as soon as possible.

COMBINES

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF REASON FOR REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION BY ALCAN

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary, this time for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In order to ascertain whether Alcan, especially in the Lac Saint-Jean area, has reduced its production in order to create a scarcity of aluminum products and thus keep prices increasing, would the minister be willing to order an inquiry by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and has he taken any measure in that respect, either on the sole initiative of his department or with his provincial counterpart from the independent government of Quebec?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be well aware that, under the Combines Investigation Act, the director of inquiries and combines looks into the matter every time he thinks appropriate to do so, and that I am not in a position to confirm or deny that an inquiry is underway.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR AID TO PRODUCERS AND TABLING OF MARKETING STUDY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is with respect to the very serious situation in the potato industry in eastern Canada of which I am sure the minister is well aware. In view of the decrease on a year to year basis in terms of the price to the farmer of some 75 per cent in terms of marketable potatoes and the present situation whereby potato growers in eastern Canada are selling their potatoes at about 50 per cent of the cost of production, I wonder whether the minister is preparing with his officials a program under the stabilization plan in order to be of assistance and to prevent a large segment of the industry from going bankrupt.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a question in the House last week that we were looking at the problems potato producers are now facing in the Maritime provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and we are meeting the ministers of agriculture from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick next Wednesday, I believe.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Some weeks ago in response to a similar question by my colleague from Malpeque the minister indicated that his department had made a very serious study of the marketing problems, which are one of the fundamental difficulties in the present situation. I wonder if the minister is prepared to make that study available so that there can be more information in regard to the possible alternatives to help find some long term solution to this problem.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, not before I meet with the ministers of agriculture from the two provinces most concerned.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a supplementary question. Will he look favourably on some emergency solution which might be presented by the governments of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick so that producers will have the financial capability of planting crops this year rather than being forced out of business completely?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, that is one of our intentions when we meet with the provincial ministers next week.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO APPOINT PERSON WITH AGRICULTURAL EXPERIENCE

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister concerning the recent appointment of the new deputy minister of agriculture. While I note that the new deputy has impressive credentials in the fields of finance and internal government administration, his background suggests a complete absence of any experience in agriculture. I ask the Acting Prime Minister why the Prime Minister appointed a man without apparent agricultural experience as our new deputy minister and whether applications were considered from candidates with this necessary background in agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Denis Hudon, who has been appointed as deputy minister of agriculture, is one of the more senior and more experienced civil servants and a man who has worked in many capacities. I do not think it is absolutely necessary that the deputy minister be a specialist in any particular department. Otherwise, of course, it is very difficult to have flexibility within the public service necessary to give a career to intelligent people. I believe Mr. Denis Hudon will do extremely well as deputy minister of agriculture.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF WESTERNER

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Will the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether the Minister of Agriculture was consulted in regard to this appointment and whether he participated in the final decision? Will he also advise whether any serious consideration was given to the appointment of a deputy minister of agriculture from western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Northwest Territories seeking the floor on a question of privilege? If so, perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could be permitted to answer and then I will see the hon. member.

Mr. Wagner: Come on, Mitch.

An hon. Member: Where is the answer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, announcements and appointments of deputy ministers are the prerogative of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Hon. members opposite perhaps do not understand, but in the system of appointments of deputy ministers this is a prerogative which has always been very highly valued by Prime Ministers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: —including the right hon. member for Prince Albert when he was prime minister. I happen to have been a civil servant during those days, and I know how much he protected that particular prerogative and put it into practice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. FIRTH—REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE IN MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Chair should be given notice of questions of privilege, but because of the grave importance of this matter I would like to raise it now. It is a matter which has just been brought to my attention. I would like to read a quote attributed to the Minister of National Defence found in the current issue of Maclean's:

Discussing the fate of the Indians and Eskimos, he will suddenly puzzle, "I mean, what did they ever do for Canada? Did they discover gas? Did they discover oil? They didn't even invent the wheel. Why, when we came here, they were still dragging things around on two sticks."

I think that is shameful.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Firth: I think that the native people of this country deserve an apology, and I think the minister's statements should be explained to the House. Indians and Eskimos continue to make contributions to the Canadian people. The explorers who first came here would not have survived without the help of the native people.

● (1500)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege. The accusation of the hon. member is correct but it should be directed to the author of that article. There was no quotation by me in those terms. I would ask the hon. member to look at the statements I have made which are on public record about the native people of this country. I would ask him to look at the first time I accepted nomination in 1968 and I will send him a transcript because those are my real views and not as expressed in that article. There were many other inaccuracies in that article as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been seen on the question of privilege which he put forward and I permitted the hon. minister who was involved in the question to make a comment as well. The hon. member, of course, is raising a question of great importance. It is difficult to see how it becomes a question of privilege in respect of the operations of members of the House at this moment. In any case, the hon. member has exposed the point and the hon. Minister has replied and this would seem to be as far as it can go in that context. The hon. member may wish to pursue the matter further in another way.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories raised a matter and the Minister of National Defence replied to the effect that he should take it up with the author of the article. I think the way in which the hon. member for the Northwest Territories raised the point demands that the Minister of National Defence, if he did not make this statement, should categorically deny it.

An hon. Member: He did.

[Mr. Firth.]

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I just did deny that in the most categorical and definite terms.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski.

INCOME TAX

JUSTIFICATION FOR THOSE IN HIGH INCOME BRACKETS PAYING LESS TAX THAN THOSE IN LOWER BRACKETS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that certain people with an annual income of $200,000 and over are taxed at a rate not exceeding 10 per cent, that the average taxpayer earning $7,000 a year is taxed at a rate of 12.14 per cent, and that horse owners will be allowed deductions up to $7,000, would the Minister consider introducing legislation designed to protect low income people instead of horse owners?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the question was put to me, I must point out that there was some confusion around me. I will read it and give a more complete answer.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I directed two inquiries to the hon. Minister of Finance, but he did not seem to listen to my remarks.

My question is this: in view of the fact that more than 50 individuals in Canada with revenues exceeding $200,000 were taxed at a rate of 10 per cent or less, that the average taxpayer earning $7,000 a year was taxed at a rate of 12.14 per cent rate, and that people owning race- or other horses will be exempted from tax over $7,000, I ask the hon. Minister if he considered introducing legislation to protect low income people instead of horse owners?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my impending trip to Paris has nothing to do with the problem raised by the hon. member. However, I have received a list of persons in countries having a wealth of data on abortion. I shall certainly contact them, when I am able to do so.

TRANSPORT

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF NEW OVER-ALL POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who has been relieved of some of his extra parliamentary duties. I wonder if he is now in a position to give us some hope that the mess he discovered might be cleaned up quickly. Can he give us a time frame in which we might expect to see some fairly definitive proposals emanating from his department? How long is this likely to take?

An hon. Member: Ten years.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, generally speaking, I think this is a fair question to put to a minister but the hon. member knows the extent of the Department of Transport which covers airports, railways, airplanes, runways, ports and so forth. If he wants an answer on each of these subjects, I hope he will be patient enough to remain in the House next time I speak because an answer would take a couple of hours. I was working hard with the transport ministers from the west last week and we achieved a few things. We are achieving a few things in Saint John, New Brunswick; we are trying to work in Nova Scotia as well and we are trying to get an airport for Prince Edward Island. If the hon. member wants a full answer I can prepare a book and give him that.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister knows my questions are always fair and I am just seeking some information.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This one is fair.

Mr. Stanfield: I am prepared to wait for the book, but the minister has been saying for some time that he was going to produce a fundamental reform in the whole approach to transportation in Canada, that the legislation is not adequate and his department is not capable of coping with what is going on. When are we going to get that fundamental reform, allowing that the minister is working hard doing this in the west and doing that in the maritime provinces. When are we going to get the mess cleaned up that I thought the minister was talking about?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to intervene in this scintillating exchange. Recent comments compel me to say that general questions invite long, general answers. These are made not at the expense at the Chair but at the expense of other members who wish to take part in the question period. I hope this matter will be considered.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR AID TO FISHERMEN AS RESULT OF CLOSURE OF LA HAVE, BROWN'S AND GEORGES BANKS—POSSIBILITY OTHER NATIONS FISHING THESE AREAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State responsible for Fisheries. In light of the economic hardship faced by inshore fishermen in Nova Scotia due to the closure of La Have, Brown's and Georges Banks, what action is the government taking to assist these fishermen during this period of economic hardship, and would the minister inform the House if other nations are adhering to ICNAF regulations by refraining from fishing operations on the three banks named.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, a delegation from the area came to Ottawa for a prolonged meeting on Monday. The meeting involved officials, myself and other interested groups. We identified the problems. There was agreement that the solution would not be in reopening the banks, for reasons of conservation and preservation of stocks for the future. We are now looking at every possible avenue to reduce the hardship—I recognize that there is some hardship connected with this problem and I would like it to be as limited as possible. The delegation which came here appointed three of its members to continue working with our officials to this end.

As to the second question, I have no knowledge of other nations fishing in this area. We have a patrol ship in the area, which is watching it as closely as possible. I will check again; there might be some incidents which have not yet been reported to me.

CLOSURE OF LA HAVE, BROWN'S AND GEORGES BANKS—NUMBER OF SHIPS PATROLING AREA TO ENSURE OTHER NATIONS NOT FISHING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate the number of ships which are carrying out surveillance of this area, which is a vast one, and say how many reports he is receiving on fishing activity. Are they made on a daily, weekly or monthly basis? Also, will he say categorically that Canadian fishing activity is not being restricted while other nations are reaping this resource, because, according to my information, other nations are still fishing on Georges Banks.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, we will look into these allegations. I know that at times more than one ship patrols the area, but I will check and report to the hon. member.

COMMUNICATIONS

ABANDONED PINE TREE RADAR BASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT DAMAGE—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE FUTURE USE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will not ask a supplementary question. Did Your Honour recognize me for a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Marshall: We must be coming to the end of the question period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please ask his question. Many other members are seeking the floor.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I could direct my question to five ministers but I will direct it to the Minister of Public Works. It has to do with a portion of land known as Pine Tree Radar Base, which was left three years ago by the American government to the Canadian government. As several departments and agencies of the federal government are interested in this facility, may I ask what action is being taken to prevent vandalism which is damaging millions of dollars worth of property. What is the government doing to prevent vandalism?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about that particular case but would be glad to inquire and reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As I have received confirmation that the matter is to be investigated, may I ask the Minister of Communications, who answers to this House for Telesat Canada, if his department has investigated the site as being of interest to Telesat Canada? I might say that the property is being vandalized to such an extent that its deteriorated state should be an embarrassment to Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire about the interesting question raised by the hon. member and reply to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. As the department has a particular interest in the equipment at Pine Tree Radar Base and as the matter which I am raising has been brought to his attention for the past three months through my inquiries, may I ask what action the minister has taken in connection with his interest in that site.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's question as notice and see if I can reply tomorrow.

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Earlier in today's question period he said that he had initiated investigations into contracts for the dredging of harbours in Ontario and Quebec. Did he at the same time, or has he since then, initiated investigations into dredging contracts in British Columbia, and has he any reports about those contracts?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, unless the Solicitor General did, but not at the request of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Has he ever initiated in British Columbia investigations of dredging contracts in the way he did at Hamilton.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will check.

PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF GENERAL COMMODITY RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a specific question to the Minister of Transport. Since the view is widely held, I think by the minister as well, that he, his department and the Canadian Transport Commission have insufficient authority to oversee properly areas of transportation involving freight rates, has the minister encouraged, or does he approve, the efforts of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, as reported in this morning's Montreal Gazette, to reduce or eliminate the general commodity freight rates by making them specific rates or agreed charges, a move which will further reduce whatever authority the minister of the Canadian Transport Commission have over freight rates.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, although I had not intended to, I will read the Montreal Gazette and perhaps make some comments tomorrow.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

VIEW OF RAILWAY THAT RATES SHOULD BE BASED ON NORMAL COMPETITIVE PRACTICES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is doing that, would he also look at other publications. In view of statements made during the last year or so by the Prime Minister, the minister and others, is he prepared to tolerate national advertisements by Canadian National Railways, in view of his statement that competition does not work in transportation in Canada. Will he tolerate these national advertisements put out by Canadian National, a public corporation, which state that railway rates should continue to be based on, and I quote, "normal competitive business practices".

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must make a correction. I said that competition alone is not working in that field, and I maintain that. Outside that, I think it can work.

[Later:]

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT THAT CAPITAL OUTLAYS BE RAISED FROM FREIGHT RATES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister share the views of the president of Canadian National, Mr. Bandeen, who says that the $5 billion which will be needed for capital outlays in the next five or six years should be raised exclusively from freight rates. Does the minister agree?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss that matter with Mr. Bandeen.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—REASON FOR RETAINING UNITED STATES FIRM OF R. L. BANKS TO MAKE STUDY—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport to do with freight rates. Why was it deemed necessary to engage, in 1974, for the study of freight rates and future development of western Canada the American consulting firm of R. L. Banks and Associates of Washington.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the last part of the question. Would the hon. member repeat.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I asked why it was deemed necessary to engage the American consulting firm, R. L. Banks and Associates of Washington, D.C., for the study of railway freight rates and the future development of western Canada.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, that firm was retained by the Ministry of Transport and by the governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

[Later:]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question about the American consulting firm's report. Has the study been completed? If so, will its context be made public?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the committee in question is working well, even though some would like to see it collapse. We publish only that on which we are in agreement. In the present case the committee decided that it should be a working paper, to be used for the committee's purposes.

● (1520)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister indicated in his answer that some people wish this whole study could collapse. I want to make it perfectly clear that certainly does not apply to me, if that is what the minister is insinuating.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In the language used by some of my customers in the province of Quebec, I must tell the House that last night there was a settlement of accounts between the House of Commons and the press gallery. In this règlement de comptes, the House of Commons whopped the press gallery in hockey, six to three.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Solicitor General was not thinking of the press gallery as his future customers.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the government House leader the usual Thursday afternoon question. Now that we have prodded the Minister of Finance into facilitating the passage of the income tax bill, will the government House leader indicate what we will be doing for the rest of today, tomorrow and next week. Also, could he give us a list of the bills he hopes will be passed so that we can study them to see if they achieve the high standard this party insists upon for legislation.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in welcoming back the House leader of the official opposition, I must say I was perhaps remiss in not informing him of what went on in his absence.

Mr. Baldwin: Not much.

Mr. Sharp: I am very pleased that we are finally reaching the end of the debate on the Income Tax Act. This will be continued this afternoon. I hope the hon. member will co-operate with the government in getting through the third and final stage of this bill. After we have concluded that, we will return to the second reading of the housing bill which was interrupted to complete the third reading of the income tax bill.

Tomorrow, I would like to call three items that I hope can be dealt with expeditiously. The first is the farm credit bill, C-34. There is a good deal of urgency because there are provisions for the extension of financial assistance and time is running short. Next will be the Northwest Territories bill which provides for an additional member. If we dispose of those items, I would like to move on to the opening, or perhaps even the completion, of the discussion on reference of the immigration green paper. Since we have a date by which the committee is to bring in its report, I think it is very important that we have the committee at work as soon as possible.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Four important committees have been listed for 3:30 this afternoon. I know from personal knowledge that this party has been trying to get one of these activated since the first day we returned after Christmas. On January 22, five weeks ago yesterday, a move was made to have the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence convened to study an important matter. Today is the first day that a sitting of the committee has been arranged. Along with it, there are three other important committees. As fate would have it, I happen to be on three of the committees. I am in a conflict of interest, if ever any member of this House was. I do not know which one to attend. I would like to go to all three.

I consider this sort of arranging of committees an affront to this House. It is wrong and should not be allowed to occur. The blocking system which was intended to avoid this has broken down. I appeal to Your Honour and, through you, to the government House leader to ensure that in future committees of this importance do not meet at the same time, but that they be spread out in an equitable fashion throughout the week so that those members who have the interest of their constituents and the work of this parliament at heart may attend to their business here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

My point of order will be brief. I want to say that the contract awarded to the Bombardier firm is for $1.5 million rather than $250 million as stated a while ago.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order in relation to a bill that was introduced this afternoon by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. In his explanation on the introduction of this bill, he indicated that a bill in his name had been passed, sent to the other place and will receive Royal Assent today.

My point of order is in relation to the second bill which the parliamentary secretary introduced. He indicated it was consequential on the passage of the first bill. I suggest it would be a bad practice to allow the passing of a bill prepared by a private member which would, in fact, change other laws in order to make workable the law which we have already passed. This is a government responsibility. If a bill is passed amending the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, that is the responsibility of the government. The government should bring in the consequential amendment rather than the hon. member.

The reason I am concerned is that if this were allowed, it could do two things. The government could have two forms of legislation, one which they provide to their backbench members to bring forward with their agreement and the other legislation from their normal sources. That would not be in keeping with the use of private members legislation. The second difficulty is if a member has the good fortune to have a private members bill accepted, whether or not that bill had any effect, even though it had received three readings in this House, three readings in the other place and Royal Assent, it would not become operative if there were consequential amendments the government was not willing to put into effect.

I ask Your Honour to look at this because it appears to be a totally different kind of bill from what we normally have from private members. The practice in the past has been that once Royal Assent is given to a bill, it becomes law and the government is responsible for consequential amendments. It would be bad practice if, to carry out the will of this House, it were necessary for a private member to go through that procedure to make the amendments. The responsibility to make it operative should be on the shoulders of the government.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised a very interesting point in connection with the bill of the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council. However, the practices of the House have been such that introduction of a bill pretty much follows as a matter of course. I am sure the hon. member's remarks will be repeated when the hon. member's bill comes up for consideration. In the meantime, he has raised a very worthwhile point that I will be pleased to consider very carefully.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-49, to amend the statute law relating to income tax, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Thanks to the efforts of parliamentary counsel we found a printing error in the bill. I draw the attention of the House to page 269 of the bill as reprinted. In the French version, section 118(1) has been eliminated. I think it should be replaced and the rest of the page re-annotated. Perhaps the House would allow that to be done.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I presumed the Minister of Finance would at least give us the benefit of some remarks at this stage. During the proceedings in committee of the whole many questions were put to the minister which he declined to answer, and many amendments were suggested which he turned down. We are now asked to amend the bill once again, following an error. I had assumed the minister would be speaking on third reading.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this bill had been before us now for four weeks. I was here virtually all the time and responded as best I could to all the questions put to me. I have nothing further to add at this stage.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on this motion to give third reading to Bill C-49, dealing with income tax provisions, I propose to move an amendment which would have the effect of requiring that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be sent back to committee of the whole for reconsideration of clause 4 and clause 7. That wording, of course, is necessary in order to comply with the rules of the House. The purpose of the amendment is to have the committee consider the advisability of striking out parts of clause 4 and clause 7 or, in the alternative, to insert a proviso in each of these clauses by which certain subclauses would not take effect except by proclamation after April 15.

The two clauses to which I refer, namely, clauses 4 and 7, have caused great concern to the provincial governments and great anxiety to the oil companies and to the mining industry. They have also given rise to considerable opposition by hon. members in all parties on this side of the House. As the House knows, clause 4 provides that royalties paid to a provincial government in any form whatsoever are not deductible for income tax purposes. The minister has made it clear that royalties paid to private corporations, or royalties paid to a foreign government in cases where a Canadian firm is engaged in mining or petroleum production in other countries, will be admissible for income tax purposes. However, where royalties are paid to a provincial government they will not be deductible for income tax purposes.

Clause 7 contains a subclause dealing with fair market value. The result is that companies which are developing a non-renewable resource such as minerals, oil or gas will not be taxed on the basis of the price they receive for their products but on the basis of the price which is paid to the provincial government or any agency of the provincial government which sells those products. This looks to me and to my hon. friends like an attempt to prevent a provincial government from deciding how it will manage and market the resources of its province in a manner which it feels is most advantageous to the people to whom those resources rightfully belong.

It is the view of the members of this party that these two provisions in clauses 4 and 7 represent a serious and unwarranted intervention in an area of jurisdiction lying within the authority of the provincial governments. Under section 92 of the British North America Act, the resources of a province come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the province and the province has the right to determine the division of economic rent between the Crown in right of a province and the industry. The federal government has the right to tax the revenue which industry receives for exploiting and developing those resources. It also has the right to adjust the equalization payments so as to take into account revenue which the provincial government gets from the marketing of those resources.

But in this legislation the federal government has gone further and is seeking to intervene in deciding how a province chooses to manage its resources and how it shall decide to divide the economic rent between the provincial government and the industries engaged in resource development. This, in my opinion, is an act unprecedented in the history of Canada. Never before has a federal government sought to intervene in the field of resource development, in the field of royalties or with respect to the price a provincial government will get for the sale of products which belong to the people of that province.

I do not intend to deal, now, with the constitutional aspects of the matter. If the provincial governments decide that the federal government has exceeded its constitutional powers, it is a matter for them to determine whether or not to submit the question to the courts and it will be for the courts to decide the issue. There is, however, a political aspect to this whole question raised by these two clauses. This country has to decide between the concept of co-operative federalism or confrontation federalism. The first prime minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, said that this was not an easy country to govern. That remark will probably go down in Canadian political history as the greatest understatement ever made.

It is well known that Sir John A. Macdonald would have preferred, initially, to see a unitary form of government. As events transpired, we developed a federal system, and I think most of us are convinced that this was probably the right decision for the Fathers of Confederation to make. It is true that there are some advantages in a unitary form of government, but it is equally true that in a federal system of government the advantages, at least in my opinion, far outweigh the disadvantages. In a country of such vast space, with a people extending from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, there is a great deal to be said for having governments that are close to the people, in having governments that take over areas of jurisdiction such as health and welfare, education, resource development, labour laws and agriculture; matters which can be, I think experience has shown, much better administered on a provincial basis than by a unitary form of government which is operated from Ottawa.

Mr. Stanfield: Sometimes you get some very good provincial governments, too.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): However, as experience has shown, there arise differences of opinion with respect to the exercise of the respective responsibilities given to the two levels of government. Conflicts have arisen in the past and undoubtedly conflicts will arise in the future. We have to decide how these conflicts are to be resolved. They can be resolved by confrontation, by taking cases to the courts, and by building up hostility in which the people of Canada are torn between the claims of their provincial government and the claim of the government of Canada.

But there have been a surprising number of instances in our history where federal and provincial governments have been able to resolve their differences and reach consensus in settling conflicts. This has been true in the case of pension legislation, welfare legislation, health legislation. Solutions have been worked out in regard to labour legislation and in the particularly difficult field of agricultural legislation, where the federal government has responsibility for marketing and the provincial government for production. These differences in points of view have been worked out by compromise and negotiation and a solution has been found.

The energy crisis which began in the latter part of 1973 has raised a whole new area of possible conflict and confrontation arising from the fact that the provincial governments have the right to set the price of products such as oil and gas, or the price of a specific mineral, whereas the federal government has jurisdiction in dealing with these products when they cross interprovincial and international boundaries.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), whom I see in his seat, I think will acknowledge that when this whole matter was being discussed in the last session of parliament, we in the New Democratic Party supported the government in its contention that, although the provincial government has the right to set the price on its natural resources, the federal government has not only the constitutional authority but the duty to intervene in the matter in the national interest. For that reason we supported the minister last year when he sought to keep the price of oil, for example—this is equally true of copper, wheat and other commodities—at a level that was fair and commensurate with the economic situation in this country.

Nevertheless, it was not an easy conflict to resolve. The premiers of the provinces which produce oil took the position that they had the right to set the price of a barrel of oil, a depleting resource; that they had the right to build up reserves against future requirements to explore for further resources and to develop new industries when the oil had been completely depleted. Consequently, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called a first ministers' conference which was held last March. At that conference some fear was expressed that the premiers, particularly of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, might take the position that, irrespective of what the federal government did about interprovincial or international prices, they would set the price of their oil and that if they did not get that price they would withhold production.

That would have been a serious step to take, and it is to the everlasting credit of the premiers that they did not take that position. At the conference with the Prime Minister in March, 1974, they agreed to accept the price of $6.50 a barrel. The Prime Minister praised them for their co-operation and assistance in working out a compromise that appeared to be reasonably satisfactory to all concerned. The premiers went back to their respective provinces convinced that this was to be the situation until at least June of 1975, and that they could count on this agreement being carried through.

This House is now confronted with a piece of legislation that projects us into an entirely new ball-game. Naturally, the provinces feel, to put it in the bluntest terms, that they have been double-crossed. They also point out that they, in their turn, have kept their share of the bargain. Premier Barrett of British Columbia announced that he was going to raise the export price of gas on January 1, 1975. At the request of the Prime Minister, he agreed not to raise the price of gas until after the first ministers' conference. He was prepared to be co-operative and to let this matter rest until all the premiers and the federal government had had an opportunity to review the situation.

This is why Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan wired the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on February 18 and asked him to hold back clause 4 and clause 7 until after the first ministers' conference. It is why members of the committee of the whole during the last two or three days have been pleading with the minister to put a provision in both those clauses stipulating that certain subclauses would not come into effect except by proclamation after April 15.

However, the federal government has refused to do this and we are now confronted with a piece of legislation which enables the Prime Minister to go to the first ministers' conference in April with a fait accompli. He will say to them, "Parliament has decided: I no longer have any choice in the matter. This is how we are going to handle resources. This is how we propose to interfere in the management and disposition of the resources of the provinces. The only resort you have is if you want to take the matter to the courts and have a long, protracted constitutional argument".

I think this a good time for members of this House to realize how fragile the federal system is. I think it a good time for members to realize that a country which faces as many problems as Canada does at present, needs all the good will and all the co-operation it can get from all the levels of government. This is true in many fields. The Minister of Finance, in tackling both unemployment and inflation effectively and aggressively, will need the co-operation of the provincial governments.

Also, the energy question will still be before us. If Canada finally becomes a signatory to the international energy agreement, which may under certain circumstances call for a restriction on consumption of petroleum products in this country, we will need the co-operation of the provincial governments. If in the situation which is likely to confront us in the next few months and the next few years there is an atmosphere of hostility, with the federal government using the big club and the provincial premiers being angry and annoyed, I think federalism will not work as effectively as it should.

It is only natural for disagreement to occur from time to time between federal and provincial authorities. Naturally, they will not always agree as to the exact areas of their jurisdiction, particularly where they overlap. But the hallmark of statesmanship is for the federal government to retain sufficient good will so that it can prevent hostility and alienation from making impossible a co-ordinated approach to the national problems which confront Canada at this time.

Over the years that I have been in public life I have seen at first-hand many instances where previous federal administrations have been able to bring about that kind of co-operation and co-ordination to meet situations in which conflict and hostility could easily have arisen. The test of statesmanship will be this government's capacity to attain national objectives while at the same time securing the co-operation and good will of the provincial governments with whom it must work, which in most cases will be forthcoming if the federal government adopts an attitude of conciliation and good will.

I propose to move an amendment, because I believe that a solution can be found. The Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will agree with me, I think, when I say that so far as my colleagues and I are concerned, we have never tried to play-off federal and provincial interests. It is comparatively easy for any politician to play-off the federal government against his province or local region. We have repeatedly stood by the federal government when it has said that the national interest must come first. But the national interest can only come first if the federal government is able to persuade the governments of the provinces and the people of the provinces to believe that the federal government is doing this in a fair and equitable manner and not by getting out the big club or riding roughshod over the provinces.

I say to the Minister of Finance that of course the government can use its majority to pass Bill C-49, amending the Income Tax Act, through this House. This the government can do by virtue of its political muscle. But the Minister of Finance and the government must recognize that it is possible to win the battle but to lose the war, and in the long run it is more important to win the war against economic stagnation, against inflation and against national disunity than it is to win a battle which in the long run could be self-defeating.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-49 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clause 4 and clause 7 thereof.

● (1600)

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks before this extremely important bill is given third reading. I am told that credit unions are awaiting this legislation impatiently. I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, but I also know that the provinces are awaiting impatiently the result of today's vote. I hope they will be favourable to upholding those provincial jurisdictions we stood for so proudly on this side of the House, as did for that matter the hon. member who spoke for me.

Mr. Speaker, we are definitely going to support that amendment as it meshes with our approach based on respect for provincial rights and provincial jurisdictions.

An hon. Member: There are two founding nations in this country.

Mr. La Salle: Yes, there are two founding nations in this country. It was just pointed out to me, Mr. Speaker. Several immigrants also came here to help us build this beautiful country that is Canada, a country that nevertheless still has its problems.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few more comments on Bill C-49. In view of its importance, I am pleased to participate in the last minutes of this debate. As all hon. members, I recognize of course that this bill is quite important for all Canadians and affects all sectors of the taxation area. I recognize that it makes certain benefits available to several thousands of Canadians, and provides the government with necessary funds.

As several comments were made on those very important points, I would like nevertheless to make a few remarks on that clause designed to prevent from now on resource companies from deducting royalties paid to the provinces from their taxable incomes. I think that up until now, Mr. Speaker, several provinces indicated their opposition in that respect. The hon. member who spoke before me pointed that out by moving an amendment, and it is regrettable that the government remained inflexible on the recommendations of the provinces.

I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that we would answer in the affirmative, that we would wait at the very least until after the federal-provincial conference which will take place very soon, in order to allow the provinces to discuss that very important point. And the question is why this government refuses to defer those particular clauses affecting the provinces in order to allow them to discuss those powers which this government is granting itself in this bill. Recently, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) unequivocally stated that the provisions on royalties are final and will not be the subject matter of negociations at the next federal-provincial conference. I regret to be induced to believe that this is an unacceptable centralizing scheme and I think it is important for members to discuss this matter reasonably and objectively this afternoon.

That is the important point of this bill. We can be accused to oppose a legislation which is hardly advantageous as I said earlier, but I believe that the striking feature of the whole bill is that centralizing attitude.

We heard a good deal about viable, profitable federalism. How could we achieve such an objective by introducing a bill unacceptable to the provinces? It could be suggested that it is for the sake of national unity that we passed this legislation. The hon. member who spoke before me raised that point. I believe that if it is in the national interest, we should respect in fact the provincial jurisdiction recognized in our constitution. Then, I say we could speak of provocation and arrogance against the provinces. Undoubtedly, the premiers or the responsible ministers who will meet in the near future will not be prepared to have objective discussions with the federal government.

I should have thought that the federal government has the responsibility for coordinating the efforts of the provinces. We know full well that the provinces, in their own spheres, are making great efforts to solve the problems of their electors. To my mind, it does not behoove the federal government to centralize, and to take unilateral decisions such as the one it is now taking.

In view of the stand taken by the federal government, through which it will be depriving the provinces of considerable income, I say it is "holding-up" the provinces in broad daylight.

Perhaps, I should at this point put this question to hon. members: What are we doing about our responsibilities? Are we going to betray the people in this way? I hope not, Mr. Speaker. We must reflect on that aspect of the matter, and take into account the objections of the provinces to the clauses of the bill they consider unacceptable.

As for those who talk about national interest and the implementation of a workable federal system, I think their attitude only contributes to undermine our system. We discourage the provinces. As I said, they are making efforts considering the increasing number of problems within their respective territories. I also repeat that the federal government's basic responsibility is to co-ordinate rather than to centralize. I deeply regret that most government members have not been successful in urging their own government to respect the wish expressed by the provinces.

The federal government surely needs funds to run the country, but I do not think it should assume alone that responsibility. In my opinion, when it comes to depriving the provinces of certain taxing privileges or sums of money, I am convinced that provincial first ministers act in good faith. I believe that they would agree with their federal counterpart to give the federal government a fair share of the profits they derive from their natural resources. However, I repeat that it is unacceptable that a decision be made in Ottawa without consulting the provinces. This is definitely not the way we shall conceive a workable federal system, and we shall not as long as the provinces do not feel perfectly at ease within the present system.

I know that similar remarks have been made on several occasions. The failure of the government to listen carefully to the claims of the provinces always makes me sad. There again, we know for a fact that the provinces put forward some claims with regard to the coming federal-provincial meeting, but Parliament is being required and urged to pass this bill which infringes upon very important provincial jurisdictions.

So, as I said, decisions are made here in Ottawa without any consultation and then the provinces are asked to discuss the problems we are now facing. I wonder whether that is not a strange consultation to have before a decision is made.

Later on, one will wonder what happens either in the province of Quebec or in Alberta or in British Columbia. One will wonder why some provinces are not satisfied, why certain provinces are putting in so many claims to the Ottawa government, why we have those pitched battles between the federal government and the provinces.

We of the Progressive Conservative Party will be accused of concentrating our efforts on protecting Alberta's interests.

For once I was very happy to support the claims laid by Alberta's government which was carefully protecting its provincial rights. It was not only a responsibility, on its part, but a duty to protect the rights it has acquired a long time ago.

I think one could also ponder on what is going on in Quebec, on the thousands of Quebecers who are gradually losing faith in this federalism that is being called profitable or viable. Attitudes such as the one shown by this government are things that discourage not only the provincial premiers or the ministers responsible in that field but also the electors in every province. We still have the opportunity to think seriously about what we are going to do this afternoon. Either we say yes to the provinces and show our respect for provincial jurisdictions or, on the contrary, we say to the provinces that everything must be settled in Ottawa. And then we ask them to embrace the system, to have a feeling of freedom.

I venture to think, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members will assume their responsibility, which is not necessarily to support a political party or to see if it could be defeated or not in the House. I think that every member has formally committed himself to serve his constituents' interests at every opportunity. I think that today, we have a unique opportunity to serve the interests of the provinces without prejudice to the national interest.

[Mr. La Salle.]

Then, at the last minute, I appeal for much more understanding and open-mindedness than were shown until now with regard to certain clauses of the bill that are sure to displease the provinces if this legislation is passed.

This government had promised us a just society and started consultations. I hope they will meet their commitments much more honestly than they are doing presently.

The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) made a few remarks. I wish he had spoken to this bill. I should have liked to know if, as a Quebecer, he intends to answer the Quebec ministers who expressed their views. I would have liked to know if, like many others, he intends to replace the Quebec first minister, because there are little problems at present. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec government made representations. The minister, Mr. St-Pierre—

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hear a member from Quebec talking about confusion in the Liberal party and saying that things are going badly. As a supporter of the Union nationale I think that for him things are not only going badly, it's all over. The Union nationale does not exist any more in the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member asks me to speak on behalf of Quebecers. When I have the decency to speak on behalf of Quebecers—they are only three on their side to speak on their behalf and I wonder how he can show such a lack of common decency—Mr. Speaker, I shall try to say something that makes sense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The hon. member will agree that his point is only an argument, I therefore recognize the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, further to my previous remarks, I again urge the Quebec members to take a stand on this fundamental question, namely the respect of provincial jurisdictions. I say to the hon. member for Lévis that despite the large deputation from Quebec in Parliament, if the members betray Quebec's interests today, they will betray them again by passing this legislation which deprives the provinces of a fundamental right. The hon. member from Lévis knows it. He dares not speak on this bill because he will have to follow the party line. That's it!

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Longueuil rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I believe the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) made a personal attack on me, first as a Quebecer and second as member for Longueuil. When he thinks others betray their fellow Quebecers because they do not belong to the Progressive Conservative party, the member for Joliette goes too far. I suggest the hon. member for Joliette should be asked to withdraw his remarks, otherwise the matter will have to be referred to a committee.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would indicate right now to the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) that when I am invited before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I have no hesitation in going.

I did not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is because I belong to the Progressive Conservative party. I said that the duty of a Quebec member in particular, and of all members in general, was to respond to the needs of their province.

And I repeat, members who support the legislation as introduced will betray the interests of their own province. Recommendations made by the Quebec government do not favour the clauses now before us, because they feel the latter do not meet provincial needs.

Therefore, I wish I had seen Quebec members show their respect for provincial jurisdictions, or at least ask the minister in charge to wait until after the federal-provincial conference, in order to try and reach a solution satisfactory to the provinces.

I believe the federal government is in error if it believes it can decide alone in such matters. I repeat it is important that consultations be held before the federal-provincial conference. I believe that after, provinces will be quite ready to give the federal government a certain percentage of resource revenues because I believe the premiers are quite capable of assessing federal needs, in consultation with the federal representatives. I say however that if the federal government acted in this way, this is a unilateral and unacceptable decision.

Because I invite hon. members to examine this aspect, all types of arguments will be raised to lead people to believe that I am the only one who thinks he has got the truth. Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely not the case but, as a member of Parliament, I say that our responsibility is to respond to the hopes of the provinces when we speak of promoting proper federalism and ensuring its continuity. The way decisions are taken in this House will certainly not satisfy the provinces and help them rely on federalism.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I will again invite my colleagues in this House to think well before taking a vote on such a fundamental principle. I believe that a negative answer rejecting my call would not be forgiven by Canadian people; for they are anxious that the jurisdictions granted to the provinces under the constitution should be recognized, jurisdictions which could be totally quashed by this legislation. I believe that we have to look far ahead to understand the importance of this legislation and its implications not only on oil, but also on all areas of resources. I think that every member in his province must think it over to give an affirmative vote and allow the provinces to maintain the rights they have had for such a long time.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Joliette allow a question?

Mr. La Salle: Yes.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the member for Joliette if the advantages which he referred to earlier in his speech and which Quebec got through an agreement on oil with Alberta and the other provinces were to bring the same profit to Quebecers, would he oppose them?

Mr. La Salle: If I understand well, the hon. member asked me if I am going to vote against the legislation. I will certainly do so. I am going to vote for the amendment because we are going to vote on an amendment requiring the federal government to allow the provinces to negotiate on royalties before accepting this piece of legislation.

And I think this is quite important. I said at the outset that this bill contained very good proposals, but one is unacceptable and cannot be supported by a member who honours his commitments.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, we are nearing the end of this debate, but I think there are a few things still to be said. In effect, we are debating the economic condition of the country for the first time in almost two years. I suggest the last budget is a rerun of the May budget, although conditions have changed since then. The May budget was concerned with attacking the resource industries and bringing their profits into the federal treasury, and also attacking the provinces on provincial rights. Both budgets have much in common, although the May budget imposed some conditions on the resource industries which were withdrawn in the November budget.

At the moment, the taxes on the resource industries will seriously cripple them and our economy for the next few years unless further changes are made. This attack was a direct violation of the principle of confederation whereby the provinces would own the resources and the people of the provinces would have the right to enjoy the revenues accruing from those resources. We have heard much about the rights of the provinces, and it is generally considered by students of the federal-provincial situation that the provinces have had decreasing taxation in the last few years, with increased commitments in the fields of health, welfare and social services. It is true that most of the increase is due to the actions of the federal government and it is hard to understand why there would be such action without consultation with the provinces.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made the play that he is the saviour of national unity. There is no doubt that this has sharpened, particularly in western minds, the feeling that they are remote from Ottawa and that the federal government has no rapport with the provinces, particularly the west.

● (1620)

The November budget represents a partial withdrawal in the field of resources but leaves much to be desired in taxation of the oil and gas industries. The president of the Mining Association of Canada said recently that mining firms can expect at least two years of tough times. The mining industry depends greatly on sales to the United States and has felt the effects of the recession in that country. The president of the Mining Association of Canada was also pessimistic about the future of the resource industry because of the squeeze as between the federal and provincial tax systems. He said, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of February 27, 1975:

> If you find anything, you couldn't justify developing it, so there's no use going out and looking.

He also said that federal and provincial taxes combined now range between 60 per cent and 130 per cent of profits.

The budget has not paid sufficient heed to Canada's worsening trade position. Last year our trade deficit went up from $6.6 billion, the 1973 figure, to $9.5 billion. Our high tariff walls and advantages given to the manufacturing industry and processors, by reduced taxation have not reversed the situation. But for the surplus of $5.5 billion in our crude materials trade last year, our trade position would be much more serious. Last year this country experienced a favourable balance of trade in petroleum to the extent of $1.5 billion. According to recent forecasts, our net trading deficit in petroleum products in the coming year will be $750 million. Yet it has been this government's policy to inflict punitive taxes on the oil and gas industry, thus diminishing activity in the search for oil and gas at the very time when such activity should be greatly increased.

By introducing the present budget, the federal government has decided to play fast and loose with our economy in an attempt to break the hold of the provinces, particularly the western provinces, in the field of resource taxation. We can only lose in the short run. The whole of Canada stands to lose much from this move. External forces are reducing the demand for our resources. Trade with Japan is not increasing as was hoped by trade officials who had forecast a $1 million increase in trade with that country. Japan wants to cut back by 30 per cent, purchases of Canadian copper. Copper represents our single most important export to Japan. This country is no longer considered as a reliable supplier of rapeseed and farm produce, and we shall lose markets because of strikes and shipping troubles. We have always tended to think that resources will fetch high prices and be in great demand, but the high prices of our resources on world markets are probably largely the result of devaluation of our currency.

The budget has failed to take into account the difficulties our exporters face in external markets. Further, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) refused the opposition's request for a modest reduction in income tax. Such a reduction would have left more money in the hands of wage earners and thus increased demand for durable goods, sales of which are falling off. The demand for cars and appliances is also soft, and more money in the hands of wage earners and taxpayers would stimulate sales. A modest reduction in income tax would also reduce the government's tendency to spend and institute new programs. Also, it would contribute to savings on the part of taxpayers, something that is vital to our economy. As well, a tax reduction would provide some insurance against renewed inflation which according to some forecasts is to increase markedly at the end of this year.

The thrust of this budget is in the wrong direction. Producers should be given more tax leeway so they can reinvest in more efficient and expansive growth. The government has already done this for manufacturers but has not permitted resource producers to be efficient and productive. Governments, federal and provincial, have taxed resources too heavily. They have failed to appreciate that much of the so-called increase in profits has been the result of inflation. Although we may not like it, we must be painfully aware that as a nation we would be foolish to depend on the manufacturing industry to provide us with a high standard of living—a high standard brought about by external trade. Like it or not, Canada's primary industries, including agriculture, forestry and resources, have not been encouraged by this budget.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion, moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment defeated.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been consultations among the parties and it is my understanding that there would be a disposition to complete third reading of this bill before private members' hour is called. I understand there is just one speaker, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who is making one of his rare speeches. I am sure we will all listen to him with great interest and then complete third reading.

Mr. Stanfield: Unless we are provoked.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has proposed that the House now agree that one speech will be made on third reading, by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and that thereafter the vote be taken forthwith. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the government House leader suggested that I speak on third reading. It being his wish, I will make one of my rare speeches in the House to remind him of some of the facts that have been brought to the attention of parliament and are now reported in Hansard as the result of the debate that has taken place on Bill C-49. Having said that, I should like to direct a question to the government House leader and ask how he was so successful in silencing 107 of his backbenchers who must have wished to speak during committee of the whole stage on this bill, yet they sat mute throughout the entire deliberations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I say that because surely it is strange, when we are considering income tax legislation and budgetary measures which will result in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) taxing Canadians at the rate of $100 million a day, that the backbenchers sitting on the government side would have not been more anxious to participate in the committee of the whole review of the legislation on which we will soon have a third reading vote. I say that because we in the official opposition believe that government spending has got out of control with this government.

The spending spree that has occurred since the present Minister of Finance took office is truly remarkable. In the short period that he has been Minister of Finance the real growth in the country has been only 15 per cent but inflation has been 30 per cent. Government spending, however, has jumped 67 per cent, the money supply is up 56 per cent and credit and bank borrowings are up 82 per cent. Surely it is clear from these figures that this minister has far exceeded the economic excesses of his predecessor, Mr. Benson. Under Mr. Benson, a former minister of finance, inflation in the country was only 11.5 per cent, compared to inflation under this minister of 30 per cent. But, most significantly, spending under this Minister of Finance is up 95 per cent, based on his budgetary figures. In a similar previous period, spending under Mr. Benson was up 49 per cent.

We have made two main thrusts during debate on this bill. The first is that we believe the government can, and should, give a further tax reduction to Canadian taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: We believe such a reduction would result not only in the taxpayer having more money—and I would suggest he can spend his money better than this government can spend it for him—but it would also mean that this government might be restrained in its spending habits. If this government does not choose to discipline its spending, surely at some stage it is up to parliament to begin disciplining it in that respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, our second main thrust was that we believe the royalty taxation provisions in this bill are most unfortunate.

Mr. Stanfield: Calamitous!

Mr. Stevens: We believe it is using a legislative means—a revenue, taxation means—to really distort the constitution of this country. We believe there are serious infringements of provincial rights within this bill. Many of our speakers, including my colleague the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), pointed out the difficulties which will arise. The hon. member for Joliette pointed out the position with respect to Quebec. I reiterate that we as an opposition are diametrically opposed to the revenue approach the minister has shown in this bill with respect to royalties.

We are anxious that the bill be proceeded with. We believe we have had a good debate. I am, frankly, disappointed that in debating the bill—which contains 142 sections and is 302 pages long—we have not had more participation from government backbenchers who must be as disturbed as we are by many of the provisions of this bill. But obviously the whip was out and they were silenced. As a result, some of those hon. members have told me privately that they know amendments will have to be made to the bill, yet they did not feel they could stand up and point out the amendments they believe will be needed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stevens: We are at the conclusion of this debate. I sincerely hope that although the Minister of Finance has walked roughshod over our suggestions to date, he will at least take our arguments into account and act in a more restrained way in future.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Broadcasting—Code governing standards of television programs; the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin)—Agriculture—Request for increased funds for department; the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Public service—Strike of general labour and trades group—Suggested action to ensure mail delivery.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

LETTER FROM MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING GRANT TO WOMEN'S GROUP

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter written by the Minister of Justice to the Secretary of State, dated October 21, 1974, about a grant to a women's group in Saskatoon.

He said: Mr. Speaker, obviously this debate is not about the highly emotionally charged issue of abortion. The reason I wanted a copy of a letter from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) which was leaked to the newspapers—a letter he wrote to the Secretary of State about a proposed grant to a women's group in Saskatoon—was to underline the whole issue of secrecy in government. I believe the leak was a calculated one. I believe that leaks of government information occur largely because of the very restrictive techniques the government uses in classification of documents.

I strongly believe that the system of classification referring to "Secret", "Top secret", "For eyes only", "This letter is a judicial opinion" or "is giving a legal opinion", and so on, is a technique to frustrate the free flow of information from parliament, ministers, and so on, to the public. In the few minutes available to me I hope to develop this theme.

Someone in the government—I wish I knew who it was, because I want to pay tribute to him personally—made a comment in another forum. It was made at the time when parliament was considering what to do about continuing the Canadian contribution to NATO. One of the documents the government used for basing its decision on was marked "Secret: for Canadian eyes only", and some wag on the government benches said that this admonition was for all Canadians except members of parliament. I think this rather hard-hearted statement underlines the much more fundamental problem which faces us as legislators. Here was a decision being made, the document was classified, a parliamentary committee was considering the whole issue, the document itself was for Canadian eyes only—officials and ministers—but the committee of this House charged with the responsibility of making recommendations to the government on the NATO issue could not see the document.

Then we consider the whole issue of papers prepared for the government and its departments by a consultant hired from outside the government service. I think last year's estimates included several hundred million dollars in consultants' fees. My inaccuracy is showing, but it was certainly a very large amount of money.

Mr. Stanfield: Three quarters of a billion.

Mr. Fairweather: Yes, it was astronomical. My leader reminds me that it was three quarters of a billion dollars. That was the figure I had in my mind. It was so exorbitant that my simple maritime mind could not grasp the implications of spending such a vast amount of money on consulting fees. In most cases the papers and documentation produced by these outside consultants are not available to members of parliament. I think the spokesman of the minister is ready to take a very narrow view on this issue and use the technical expression that the letter to the Secretary of State was a legal opinion. I think this is indeed a narrow technical view.

● (1720)

I wish to now develop a couple of other thoughts about the whole issue of availability of documents and the secrecy in which government seems to wrap itself. In an article entitled "On telling people" which is to be found in Essays on Reform, 1967, which is edited by Bernard Crick, Professor J. A. G. Griffith writes:

> The wish to take the lid off the machinery of government, to see how it works, who says what to whom, at what level decisions are taken, what private criteria are used, how far "politics" is allowed to override those criteria, on what statistical and other "facts" the decisions are based: this wish does not derive only from curiosity or from party animosity but also from self-interest, from quis custodiet, and from a feeling—by some—that governments represent another group interest.

Professor Griffith makes some suggestions that I will paraphrase for the purpose of this debate. First, we should be told much more about the background against which decisions are taken. Second, there is a vast, shaded area about which most of us know nothing and generally suspect the worst: flitting in and out of this are those who wish to appear to be of the number in the know. The nearer we are to the source of the truth, the more we will hear—although not necessarily the more truths. Obviously, foreign affairs and national defence are deepest in this shadow that Professor Griffith enunciates. We accept, obviously—who would not accept it—the need for some of this, but surely it is overdone.

Third, when the government consults private interests before finally taking decisions, could we not be told something of the bargains struck, the compromises reached, the promises given? We have an excellent example of this in the very tough decisions that obviously must be taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) on the matter of the severe problems faced by Canadian textile workers and their industry. Obviously, the government will be striking bargains with other governments and with that trade; yet the House, which at some time will have an obligation to make decisions based on those bargains, will know nothing about the background on which they were made.

Mr. Stanfield: We will be in the same position as the minister.

Mr. Fairweather: Fourth, governments could afford to be much more open about their policies. Ministers seem to be genuinely fearful of being specific about the ends they are seeking to achieve. The Minister of Justice, because he also represents a constituency embracing part of the city of Saskatoon, wrote a letter to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). Somehow, in the great system of government, that letter was classified; at least, I could not get it in the ordinary course of events and must take up the time of the House to debate this motion.

I repeat, the issue is not that of abortion or the Criminal Code. A decision was taken by this parliament on that issue. Rather, the issue is whether parliament can obtain an important letter written by one minister to another on a current, topical issue, rather than have the letter leaked to the press because of the frustrations felt by the people—presumably they were servants of the Crown—who made it available to the press.

Professor Griffith ends with a plea for "telling people". Although the article was written for British readers I suggest it is equally apt in this country. We read in the newspapers, we listen to and look at political commentators, we hear ministerial statements and we are conscious of the existence of another world, the other side of the moon. So we become cynical to the point of switching off radio and television during general election broadcasts because, simply, we do not believe what is being said. I think this is crucial to the parliamentary institution. It is a curious fact, Mr. Speaker, that just on Monday of this week the Trilateral Commission attempted to convene a conference on the governability of democracy. It is somewhat ironical that the conference could not be held because of the public service strike which meant there was doubt whether guests from all over the world could get here. However, that irony could be discussed on another occasion.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am flattered that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) is in his seat this afternoon. He and I have been part of this debate since we entered this House 13 years ago. I think we have probably looked at all the same articles and we have come across a rather perceptive little book, written by Professor Brian Champman, called British Government Observed in which he says that the passion for secrecy is a phenomenon that is inherited from Great Britain: it had its origin in the days of Napoleon when the British government was anxious to keep unto itself its secrets.

Mr. Stanfield: I think the Irish have to accept some responsibility.

Mr. Fairweather: My leader mentions the Irish. It is not yet St. Patrick's Day, so I will allow him to make that interpretation. I take the presence of the Postmaster General as encouragement. He sits close to where I am and I have heard him make pretty well the same plea that I make; that is, lessen the incessant secrecy. When I was in Washington recently, for example, somebody told me that the number of classified documents in the possession of the United States of America is so monumental that easy retrieval has become impossible. Classification, of course, is therefore a joke. Mere numbers have looked after the secrecy. There are hundreds of millions of documents in a huge warehouse in Virginia and it is terribly hard to obtain access to them because of the very number.

I suggest the truth is that if anything useful and significant is to be done in this free society, it must be done publicly and in such a way as to consult, involve and carry with it those affected. I suggest this is the core of some of our frustration and the reason people are convening seminars on whether democracies are governable. The government has the responsibility, as parliamentarians have, of carrying the public with it when tough decisions should be taken. If every time we attempt to take the public along with us in this decision-making we are faced with "Classified", "This is a judicial opinion", "For eyes only" or "Top secret", it seriously impedes the work we are called upon to do. Understanding and consent in this instance does not spring from some previous interaction of government and voter at a general election but, I suggest, has to be the constantly renewed product of a continual exchange of communications. This is a stage where the two uglies—I have used the words before—of dehumanization and depersonalization make it more important than ever that legislators should understand the thrust and purpose of government policies and thus are able to communicate them to the public.

I am sorry I have taken so much time. I suggest it is not sufficient to keep repeating—I am guilty of this as well—with boring regularity slogans like "open access" or "executive privilege." We must avoid more than mere sloganeering. We must avoid what Harold Laski once described as the "trained incompetence of the specialist", that narrowness of vision which often comes with immersion in a program or a policy field. Breadth of view must be combined with technical skill in effective policy-making. Generally, the training of information technologists does not overcome their limited social and political sensitivities. That should be particularly true of members of parliament, otherwise every one of the 264 members of this House could sit in his office and never go to Halifax, Nanaimo or any point in between and become immersed in some issue. The danger is that specialists may never hear from elected representatives about the realities of those very decisions which must be made and about how those decisions will affect the specialists themselves.

I am the last man to stand here and criticize the public service. I will not repeat the oft stated compliments. I think our public service is excellent, but I think the best public servants recognize the need for a continual flow of information from what the poet calls "the heartland of this country", because that is where the hang-ups are and where the problems are to be found. We need a process of continuous interchange. Our quest for information is not helped by a very much exaggerated classification system.

My notice of motion really has little to do with the copy of a letter. The letter was made public to the press, because somebody in the minister's office leaked it. I have spent my time pleading for the government to be much more forthright in giving information. If information is given, I suggest there will be much greater public acceptance of some of the policies of the government, and presumably this is what the government devoutly wishes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend of Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) for his quite interesting outline of the problem. He will understand however that he has already obtained an answer from the minister, to the effect that the requested document contains a legal opinion and knowing his experience and his authority, he surely approves the government for not acceding to his request.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) objected to the motion for the production of copy of a letter which he wrote on October 21, 1974 to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) in connection with a grant to a women's group in Saskatchewan, because, according to a well established practice, the opinions of legal officers of the Crown on governmental policy matters being included among privileged documents, they have generally not been delivered. I refer him in this connection to page 272 of the 17th edition of May's Parliamentary Practice as well as to page 338 of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure.

The guideline governing notices of motions for the production of papers was put forward by the government and printed as an appendix to Hansard of March 15, 1973, on page 2288. The fact that all or part of the documents containing that opinion may have been made available to information media does not constitute a valid reason to break away from traditions preventing the disclosure of such secret documents. If mandatory disclosure applied to such papers, the freedom of expression and the frankness that are essential in the good conduct of public affairs would be seriously jeopardized and the exercise of the responsibility of guiding ministers of the Crown would thus be paralyzed.

On December 10, 1945, a member of Parliament introduced a motion for the production of copies of all orders in council, legal opinions, correspondence and other documents kept by various departments concerning the investigation on a suit for damages caused by an explosion at the marine powder depot in Bedford Basin. The minister, Mr. Mahew, replied that negotiations were under way and that it was impossible to give the hon. member a complete answer. He could give specific information, but it would have required several months to give all data. He then asked that the motion be withdrawn. Mr. St. Laurent, the Minister of Justice, added that his department refused to table texts of legal opinions submitted to other departments. This would be an evident departure from the principle of professional secrecy between a client and his lawyer. If it were the client who had to convey an opinion he had received, things might be different, but he would not like it inferred that when a department seeks the advice of the Department of Justice, the latter may not respect concerning these opinions the principle of professional secrecy which exists in all areas covering the relationship between a client and his lawyer. There were discussions on whether or not the motion should be stricken out. The Speaker stated that, since a motion for papers is not debatable, it was not permissible to rise on a point of order about it.

So that my colleagues may deal for a few minutes with this issue, I shall conclude by saying that I have been very much impressed by the arguments put forward by my hon. colleague about the availability of information to members of Parliament.

In my opinion, the hon. member is right. A member's work should be considered as privileged in a certain way; perhaps he should have access to more information than he has now. On the other hand, if confidentiality and public interest often clash with our work as parliamentarians, it will take a smart one to draw a final line.

Perhaps today's debate will make us more conscious of how important it is to look into the matter more closely and with a great open-mindedness, so that we might consider parliamentarians, whatever their political affiliation, as being people who run a country and thus, need more information.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, since I have only a few minutes, I would like to give a brief outline of the situation relating to access to government documents, particularly as far as ordinary members' work is concerned, as mentioned by the previous speaker.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has inherited parliamentary traditions which are cherished and, at the same time, administrative discretion which is one of the greatest barriers between the citizen and the central government and which largely conditions the climate in which the latter carries out its information duties. Canadian scholars are aware of the basic conflict existing between administrative secrecy and the need for information in an active democracy.

At the highest level of our political system, decisions are made in Cabinet, by ministers who swear to keep confidential all issues dealt with, discussed and resolved in Privy Council. The press, the public, the opposition parties and even hon. members often note their powerlessness to get information related to the administration of this country.

In Canada, except for the Official Secrets Act, no regulation prevents or allows access to official documents. A decree is being drafted which will set up the procedures opening access to those documents. On May 1, 1969, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) announced that our country too was getting prepared to adopt a policy aimed at making it easier for researchers and others to gain access to federal government documents dated before July 1, 1939, and this within the limits of the national interest.

The Prime Minister went on to say that this new policy would show the desire of the government to stimulate the interest and participation of Canadians generally in the affairs of state. It has been said in the House of Commons that this was a very trivial measure, and outside the House, that this measure was not going far enough. The Royal Commission of Inquiry on National Security advocated constantly reminding departments and officials of the advisability of lowering the security on documents. However, they add that in doing so, ministers should be allowed as much discretion as possible. For example, direct access to public papers through government publications has always been freer in Canada and in the United States than in most other western democracies.

In a brief dated June 1967 dealing with the implementation of the information act, the U.S. attorney general stated:

—information distribution must be the general rule and not the exception, that all citizens have equal rights of access, that the burden of justifying the confidential nature of a document is on the government and not the petitioner.

The new legislation sets out for the first time legal procedures enabling a citizen who feels that his rights are encroached upon to lodge a complaint against an agency that refuses without apparent reason to disclose papers. Federal courts have the right to punish directors of official agencies for non-compliance.

As far as public access to government papers is concerned, the French system, for example, seems to be more restrictive than the others was examined, including Canada's. Records are no longer confidential or privileged the very day a minister authorizes the communication of documents pertaining to a specific period. In that respect, there are no automatic provisions in France such as the 30-year rule they have in the United States and Great Britain, and that has been in effect here for a couple of years.

Sweden has recognized for nearly 200 years that all government papers are of public nature unless otherwise restricted by the courts. The Swedish system and its open administration are worthy of admiration but are not necessarily easy to adopt to the Canadian situation. The Swedish form of responsible government is far from similar to ours. It might be difficult because of that to transplant successfully in this country the methods of access to public documents in effect in Sweden.

Coming back to Great Britain, a country that gave birth to our parliamentary system, their tradition of administrative secrecy was challenged by academics and was considered by a committee of inquiry on the public service.

Canada is falling behind other countries, including Great Britain, the United States, and more particularly Sweden, with respect to free access to administrative documents by ordinary citizens, members or parliament or newspapermen. But we know from what happened in the United States that legislating is not a panacea. It is possible to get round the law and twist its purpose. A constant watch has to be kept in order to make sure that access to free information, once enshrined in statutes, is an actual fact.

The consequences of that principle of free access to information are sometimes excessively feared. No one ever talked seriously about lifting all restrictions applying to document consultation. Even in Sweden, there are a number of serious restrictions. The advantage of the Swedish system is that citizens can see a practicial application of their democratic system. Yet, in my opinion, it is logical to think that anyone, a citizen and a taxpayer, may have the right to have access to documents dealing with him in some particular way, without necessarily admitting that he should be allowed unlimited access to information concerning other people. In fact, that might be prejudicial to those people, and I think in that respect we should stick to the principle of a basic prudence. In studying this motion put forward by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) I have to conclude my remarks considering the principles that have been displayed here, by saying that if we consider what is going on throughout the world with respect to information, and if we look into our parliamentary system, the democratic system which rules our country, we cannot really find in any other nation a system which might apply directly to Canada as far as access to administrative documents is concerned.

I therefore had, Mr. Speaker, to thank the hon. member for Fundy-Royal for his remarks which I agree with mostly. However, I cannot say I fully endorse the representations he made this afternoon, and which in fact he had already made several times during other parliaments. They really are very interesting, and I dare hope the government, the departments and the whole cabinet will take good notice of them to help us devise and pass once and for all regulations governing access to so-called social and administrative documents.

I thank the hon. member for his participation. The House may rest assured that if, in the near future, the government is in a position to take a definite stand, I will be most happy about it.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I enter into the few remarks I would like to make, I wonder if I could raise a point of order. In view of the fact that the time in this hour is limited at both ends by the fact that we started late and may be interrupted at any moment by a knock on the door, I wonder if there could be unanimous agreement that this order retain its position at the top of the list for the next day that this type of order is called.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) puts forward the suggestion that in view of the fact this hour today did not begin until well after five o'clock and will conclude before six o'clock, this motion retain its priority at the top of the list instead of dropping to the bottom, as it normally would, in order to ensure that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) is given the benefit of the full hour before reaching the time limit. Is there agreement?

Mr. Caccia: As a large number of private members' bills are awaiting discussion, it seems to members on this side of the House that it would be more desirable to permit other bills that have not yet been called, to be discussed.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can only be accepted with unanimous consent.

Mr. Fairweather: I think I have the right to speak. When I was approached by the government House leader to facilitate third reading of the government's bill, I agreed to do so because I believe in the system and in helping the government proceed with its legislation. I could have said no, but I did not. I ask the same courtesy now.

Mr. Speaker: We are on the same point or order. I now propose to ascertain whether or not there is unanimous consent forthcoming for the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre whereby the notice of motion in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal would retain its position on the order paper.

[Mr. Guay (Lévis).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sure the House appreciates the decision which has just been made. May I just say to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that returning to this motion on another day when it is called does not prevent our dealing with private members' bills. This motion can only be dealt with on a day allotted to notices of motions for the production of papers.

I want to support wholeheartedly not only the position taken by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) but the excellent statement he made on this important issue. I am afraid I cannot be so complimentary about those who have spoken from the other side. Every time this theme comes up, we hear about the guidelines which were announced by the former president of the privy council, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), guidelines which were appended to Hansard the day they were announced. Mr. Speaker, those are the government's own rules by which it determines whether or not it will make papers public.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-39, an act to amend the Customs Tariff (No. 2)—Chapter 23.

Bill C-40, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act—Chapter 24.

Bill C-370, an act to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter 25.

Bill S-18, an act respecting International Air Transport Association.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The House has heard the request of the hon. member to return to motions. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO AMOUNT OF INSURED LOANS, TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATIONS, ETC.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 26, 1975, consideration of the motion of Mr. Danson that Bill C-46, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had ten minutes in which to start my comments on second reading debate of Bill C-46, and at that time I emphasized the importance of public housing if the most urgent needs of Canadians for housing were to be met.

I also spoke of the important role to be played by co-operative and non-profit housing as the third force in the housing field, and I quoted some words of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford), who at the time was the minister of state for urban affairs, on the subject of co-operative housing and non-profit corporations in the field of housing. I noted that he mentioned the fact that neighbourhood groups in these organizations have a vital role to play. I also mentioned that in my constituency Forward Nine Community Development Co-operative set up a housing co-operative, which now has 75 units, which they have rehabilitated and rented at moderate and low rentals. The project, I pointed out, was well managed, highly successful, and provided a model which others could copy.

I asked what the government had done. Last year parliament passed an act to amend the National Housing Act, and by section 18 of that act it amended section 44 of the previous NHA to provide in subsection 1(b) that CMHC might enter into agreement with non-profit corporations and co-operatives to make contributions for the purpose of assisting to provide housing accommodation to individuals, or families with low income, at rentals that were less than those required to meet the cost of amortizing and operating the public housing project.

It seems to me that with the passage of that act a little more than a year ago there was a clear direction by parliament to the government to proceed in the field of assisting co-operative housing, nor was the legislation in any sense restrictive as to the nature or manner of assistance. However, its implementation clearly requires the allocation of adequate funds. So far as I can make out, no such funds have in fact been allocated under section 44(1)(b). To be fair I must say that I have corresponded with the minister on this subject, and one of his assistants assured me on the telephone that when other difficulties—which I will come to in a moment—were solved, such funds would be provided. I would like, at some stage during the discussion of this bill, to hear more from the minister on this point.

Another problem which has arisen in connection with co-operative housing concerns the contribution of the federal government in respect to rental supplements. I have already referred to a seminar which took place in Toronto on March 25, to which were invited the representatives of non-profit and co-operative housing. I mentioned that the former minister was present there and gave an enthusiastic endorsement to the section dealing with co-operative and non profit housing, which he called the third sector.

The then Ontario minister of housing, Mr. Sidney Handleman, spoke of the close consultation between the two senior levels of government in respect to this third sector. He went on to describe the necessity for a rent supplement, and the federal minister sitting there expressed no dissent, at least judging from what he said. Later a committee was formed to discuss the need for an adjustment of the supplemental program and to work out its details. On this committee were a large number of community developers representing projects in different parts of Ontario, a municipal liaison committee, and representatives from the Ontario regional office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

This committee made a report on May 10 of last year setting out a number of guidelines in regard to these rental supplements, and further progress was made. One agreement was reached involving a modification of the rule that no more than 25 per cent of the non-profit project would be supplemented and would be subject to supplemental assistance. The CMHC representatives were there, and apparently went along with that agreement.

In December the plans of the Forward Nine Co-operative, and no doubt, of many other co-operatives, to take advantage of the rent supplement plan, were advanced when their project was approved by a provincial order in council. There was a provincial order in council approving the projects involving rent supplements, after several months of discussion. But difficulties intervened. Where did the difficulties come from? They came from the representatives of the federal government.

People were told that the federal government regulations were not in place. This was more than a year and a half since legislation had been passed providing for assistance to co-operatives, but their regulations were not yet in place at the beginning of this year, and it was stated that under the federal regulations senior citizens were to be excluded from rent supplemented accommodation. This was put forward on the grounds that there were other forms of legislation dealing with senior citizens.

If it is true that this objection was made, to my mind it is utterly unreasonable. Everyone knows that the integration of senior citizens with the rest of the community is highly desirable, and in a co-operative low rental project this was obviously a sound and a necessary thing.

So desperate was the situation that the Forward Nine Co-operative sent a telegram to the minister. I had it here, but I don't know where it is at the moment. I will paraphrase it from memory. In that telegram the co-operative said that their whole co-operative project was threatened with disaster unless these matters could be cleared up quickly. No doubt while I am quoting this one project in my own constituency, there are many more of these projects which are in exactly the same position.

I wrote to the minister on January 16 telling him my views on what I called a crisis for co-operative housing in Canada. He has not yet had time to respond to my letter, but one of his assistants was good enough to phone me and tell me that considerable progress had been made and that settlement of outstanding problems in regard to the regulations and the methods of operation of the rental supplement in co-operative housing was expected shortly.

I do not know whether as yet the regulations are finally in place after these months of delay. I do not know whether the funds have been made available, or when they will be made available. I acknowledge that this so-called third sector, of which the minister's predecessor spoke with such enthusiasm, is only beginning to emerge, but I plead with the minister—I notice he does not have the time to listen to me now, but perhaps he will read what I have to say; or perhaps his attitude reveals the degree of his interest in co-operative housing—that if any real meaning is to be given to the words of his predecessor and to the provisions of parliament in respect to co-operative housing, then we must have promptly the necessary regulations, and the necessary funds made available.

I say it would be tragic if the detailed plans made by the co-operatives themselves in agreement with the Ontario government—and apparently acquiesced in by the representatives of CMHC—should be allowed to fail. I ask the minister to make it clear that he adopts the same enthusiastic attitude as his predecessor to the role of the third sector, namely, co-operative and non-profit housing. I want to make sure that he tells us that he agrees with the words of his predecessor about the vital importance of this particular sector of housing.

I do not believe that co-operative housing is the total solution to this problem, but it has an important contribution to make. I think it would be a betrayal of the whole co-operative movement, of co-operative principles, of the plans which have been made and, indeed, of what parliament has authorized, if we are to have further delays and inadequacy of response to this need.

I understand that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), the parliamentary leader of my party, is going to speak in this debate on the reason for our opposition to this bill. I will not attempt to go over that ground, but I do want to put my views in a nutshell.

The direction of the bill is once again the wrong direction. The emphasis is on assistance to financial institutions. The beneficiaries are once again those who need it least. We reject the philosophy that housing aid should be denied to those in most urgent need and provided for those who need it least. We must oppose this legislation which exemplifies the application of that philosophy which we reject.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this House to express my concern regarding this totally inadequate amendment of the National Housing Act. My hon. colleagues have spoken well and criticized the amendments, and they have proposed substantial improvements such as legislation to allow taxes and mortgage interest payments to be deducted from federal income tax, which is of more help for rural homeowners who, under the present system, cannot get mortgages from CMHC unless they are hooked up to municipal sewers. I wonder what is wrong with a good septic tank? If the land has the capacity, this is an adequate means of disposing of sewage.

The other ideas brought forward, the extension of the $500 grant to first time buyers of existing homes, the extension of the Veterans' Land Act past March 31, 1975, the increased availability of mortgage money at reduced interest rates, are commendable. Tonight my concern, however, is the apparent and even reasonable suspicion and fear that Canadians feel when government sponsored housing projects are proposed. Too often in the history of public housing, here and in other countries, government sponsored and developed housing units stand as monumental examples of high density, low income, low cost, substandard ghetto-type housing which creates a host of social and economic evils.

We should not be surprised at the reaction of local politicians and citizens as the senior governments come bearing these questionable gifts. The only surprise we should feel is that people did not realize much sooner the type of development that was proposed. Some of the biggest housing disasters in the world have occurred as a result of the actions of well-intentioned governments. There are many slums as a result of this type of thing.

Municipalities have not just occasionally suffered as a result of the actions of developers but have suffered even more through governments promoting this high density, low quality concept as a pragmatic and expedient political answer to housing demand and need. Now that the community has experienced some of the side effects of creating and repeating this destruction of liveability, not only are municipal governments resisting development but so are the residents who naturally, and rightly so, want to protect their life style and the environment. This suspicion is accompanied by delays and escalations in construction costs. These will continue until the government shows innovative leadership in reaching beyond the mere creation of a housing unit and begins to concentrate on placing and integrating homes within highly desirable communities and environments.

The tools and the opportunities are available in this country now, Mr. Speaker, and I am optimistic that the minister and his administration have the expertise to do the job. If they have the will and the energy, they can lead the way in innovative housing for Canada and the world.

I hope the government will never be so total that it has the capacity to provide all the housing units required by Canadians. I would say, however, that it has an obligation, through example, to show the way in innovative housing development, and I would say that the opportunity is available here and now.

I call tonight for a concerted and co-ordinated effort by all levels of government to demonstrate leadership in the area of housing through the construction of a model community as a demonstration project in conjunction with the upcoming United Nations Conference on Human Settlements—Habitat—to be held in Vancouver in 1976.

What I propose is the construction of a model community which would incorporate the best ideas and efforts of all levels of government in co-operation with experts in the fields of urban planning, transportation, sanitation, construction, the environment and finance. Input would also be sought from sociologists, psychologists, recreational experts, consumers' groups, and tenants' associations. Hopefully, the result would be a community concept which stresses low density and an interrelationship of man and his environment to their maximum mutual benefit.

The people in my constituency were recently alarmed by a government proposal to develop a 5,000 acre city at Burke Mountain, adjacent to the greater Vancouver area. Through past experience with government proposals they feel they have good cause to fear that their lifestyle will be destroyed and replaced by high density, low cost, low income housing, with all its social and economic disruption. This need not be the way, however. The Burke Mountain area qualifies in every respect for a world model demonstration project. Canada shows leadership in many fields. I think we can be justly proud of the World's Fair in Montreal, and we are again showing leadership in promoting the Olympic Games in Montreal. But I think Canada can do more than that. We can show leadership in housing as well.

A conference has been arranged to be held in Vancouver to talk about human settlement. I think it is important that this should not just produce another pile of paper to be recycled. We should be taking advantage of the expertise that will be coming from all over the world. We should have a model ready to be presented to the conference, and we should welcome the input from people from older civilizations. They could travel out to see this beautiful site. Burke Mountain is a low level mountain, with forests, ravines and rivers. It has a tremendous potential for development, but of course many people would prefer that it remain in its present condition on the periphery of development of one of Canada's largest cities. But it is inevitable that the area will be developed, and it has already been marked for this by the municipal and provincial governments.

Instead of creating another housing project with more dwelling units, I think we should take this opportunity to create something in tune with the environment, and develop this project as a world model. There will be other models at the conference, of subdivisions and so on, but I am talking about a major world innovative project based on the best planning available in Canada, and supplemented by the expertise available at the world conference.

I am pleased that the response to this project has been positive, and I commend the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) for showing interest. Mayor Tonn of Coquitlam and the council are most enthusiastic as well. I have also spoken with the premier of British Columbia and his minister of housing, who have both expressed interest.

I am pleased to announce tonight that I have arranged a meeting for March 5 to be chaired by Dr. Walter Hardwick of the University of British Columbia, to consider this proposal further. I should thank the ministers involved for making the expertise of their staffs available to us, and I should thank as well members on all sides of the House who will, I hope, be represented at this meeting. I think it is important to note that the province of British Columbia, the regional districts and the municipalities are co-ordinating their efforts in a non-political, non-partisan way in order to try to do something about a major problem in this country.

I call on the minister to examine the ideas I have put forward. Let him apply money and expertise to the solution of our housing problems. Let him confer with the head of Central Mortgage and Housing. A good beginning has been made in Ottawa with a model development. Similar developments ought to be encouraged. I hope the minister will encourage other similar programs and make them realities, so that he, as the housing minister for all Canada, will lead the way in bringing about solutions.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in talking on this bill on behalf of my party let me state precisely how we look on housing.

We begin by assuming that housing is not a commodity, not a chattel, not a service like any other in society. It should not be a resource which we can or cannot buy, depending on income. We do not liken it, for instance, to something like colour television, which one can or cannot afford, depending on income, or to an expensive automobile, which one can or cannot buy, again depending on income. We do not think housing can be regarded as a commodity of that kind.

We believe that housing, like medical services and like education, at least up to university level, should be available as a basic social right. Housing is a right to which every Canadian family is entitled by virtue of being part of our society. We test housing legislation by asking how it conforms to this general principle. We ask does the legislation recognize that housing is a social right, that houses are not a commodity like any other in society? Second, if the legislation recognizes housing as a right, does it do something to fulfil that right? If the legislation meets either test, particularly if it meets our first point, we supported it, even though it may not go far enough in providing all the necessary details. Certainly the first test is crucial. The measure before the House completely fails to meet that test. There could not be a more clear revelation of Liberal philosophy on housing, a philosophy which has certainly continued since 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office.

Of the many ministers and departments which have been given responsibility for housing, not one has brought forward legislation clearly embodying the notion that housing is a social right. Actually the legislation which has come forward has suggested just the opposite, namely, that the market will ultimately determine whether a Canadian family will obtain a house. Any mechanisms introduced by the government for providing housing have been aimed at the banks, trust companies and other financial institutions. The aim of the government has always been to give incentives to these basically market-oriented institutions to provide services.

It is morally absurd and economically fallacious to pretend that our housing needs can be, or ought to be met by policies of this kind. Legislation of this kind is as outdated as legislation would be which tried to reverse the principle of medicare. But that is precisely what this government continues to do; I shall show later exactly how it does so.

First let me say something about the real housing needs of Canadians. What is the situation? The minister himself, according to an interview reported in the Ottawa Citizen last October, acknowledged that Canada still needs to establish a minimum of 800,000 new housing units, which includes new housing as well as rehabilitated units. Altogether we need a minimum of 800,000 newly established housing units for the people of Canada. That figure was mentioned by the minister; he was not far wrong, and I give him credit for acknowledging the need. On the other hand the Canadian Council on Social Development says that we need one million units if we are to meet the housing needs of Canadians.

What is the human meaning of the figures mentioned by the minister and by the Canadian Council on Social Development? They mean that four million Canadians are inadequately housed. That is what the figures mean in human terms. They mean, as the minister knows very well, that more than 50 per cent of our native people are grotesquely under-housed. They mean that people in the Maritimes are inadequately housed to a disproportionate extent, and that people in our large cities, in Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal in particular, are inadequately housed. They mean that four million Canadians, men, women and children of every racial origin in our society, are inadequately housed. Surely in a society enjoying one of the highest per capita incomes in the world in 1975, this situation is unjustified. There is no excuse for it, considering our present economic potential. I am not talking about Utopia. I am talking about the state of our economy in 1975. The fact that four million Canadians are inadequately housed should make us, as legislators, ashamed.

What about housing starts? The minister himself acknowledged the need. But what has been the record of the government and of the minister? In 1974 we saw 222,000 housing units constructed. That figure does not represent an increase. It is the lowest number of new units built since 1970; it is the lowest number built in four years. Instead of increasing, our housing starts are declining. The minister expressed the hope that in 1975, 210,000 units will be built. That is a lower figure than the one applying to 1974. He is not increasing the number of units which are to be built each year. He acknowledges as a target a lower figure, a lower number of units than was built last year.

We discovered, when we saw the figures for January, that if the present rate of construction is projected forward for the rest of the year, instead of even 210,000 units being built to meet the minister's target, only 176,000 will be built.

Mr. Railton: How does that compare with what is happening in the U.S.A.?

Mr. Broadbent: The Liberal member opposite asks how this performance compares with what is happening in the U.S.A. Liberals always try to compare what happens in the United States with what happens in Canada. I rejected such comparisons long ago.

Mr. Railton: We have done five times better.

Mr. Broadbent: The United States does not have medicare—does that mean that we should reject the principle of universal medicare? We have all kinds of social programs in this country that they do not have in the United States.

Mr. Railton: Tell us more about the 210,000 proposed units. How does that compare with what they are doing in the United States?

Mr. Broadbent: It is characteristic of the Liberal party that it has always looked to the United States for its ideas. That is a crucial part of its problems.

Mr. Railton: That's rubbish, and you know it.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not want to deal with what is happening in the United States. I am speaking about Canada.

I suggest that if the January rate of construction is projected forward for the rest of the year, we will build only 176,000 units in 1975. One might say, "Oh, that is only the January figure, the situation will improve as the year continues." The fact is that compared with last January the number of units constructed this January was down 49 per cent. I remind hon. members that last year was the worst in four years. In short, the rate of construction at which we are now proceeding will mean that the minimum target acceptable even to the minister will not be met.

What about the overall budget? Three or four days before the last election the Prime Minister said in a speech in Vancouver that we have a housing crisis. He said there was a housing emergency in Canada. When I asked him questions about housing in the first month of this parliament, his answer was that somehow the crisis had disappeared because he had been elected for at least a four year term and had that amount of time to deal with it. That is typical of the Liberal party when it comes to carrying out serious social objectives.

Let us apply the test by looking at this budget to see what kind of money the government is putting up for what the Prime Minister described as a crisis. For 1975 the budget is being increased to $1.2 billion from $913 million last year. On the surface this looks like an increase. In fact the minister is quoted as saying it is a 12.5 per cent increase.

I wish to make two points. If you take the estimated rate of inflation for 1975 which was provided to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) by his advisers, it is in the neighbourhood of 10 to 12 per cent—and that is a conservative estimate. You must also consider that the inflation rate in housing has been higher than the general increase in the cost of living. The inevitable conclusion you would draw, keeping both those facts in mind—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If we could have order, Mr. Speaker, it would be nice to hear some substance instead of wind from the Conservative party. I would be interested in getting a serious question from them at any time.

If you take the rate of inflation in general and the rate of inflation in housing in particular, there is in fact a reduction in real dollars in the government's housing budget for 1975. The minister must admit that. I look forward to his comments on that later in the debate.

One provincial minister of housing estimated that, far from being an increase, there has been a 20 per cent reduction in real dollars allocated for housing. I do not necessarily say it is 20 per cent. However, I do say there is no increase in the amount of money to be spent on housing by the government. Surely that is totally unacceptable.

Let me say something about mortgage rates. In 1974 mortgage rates went as high as 13 per cent. They recently came down a bit, and are now about 11 per cent. Second mortgages are still going at between 14 and 16 per cent. What does this mean in basic human terms?

On the average mortgage a family has to pay approximately $250 a month just for the interest rates. They are paying some bank or other financial institution $250 a month. How many people in Canada can afford that? The question is rhetorical. The minister knows that in terms of income, it excludes about 80 per cent of the families in Canada. They simply cannot afford to pay that. Surely it is an unacceptable situation. If we regarded housing like we regard medicare, we would make a change in our financial administration so that families do not have to get into that kind of bind, and the majority of families would be able to buy houses.

What about housing costs? In 1974 the average price of a home in Canada was $42,000. From west to east the provincial averages are as follows: British Columbia, $43,200; Alberta, $37,200; Saskatchewan, $24,000; Manitoba, the data is not yet available; Ontario, $46,900; Quebec, $32,900, and the Atlantic provinces, $30,500. I again ask rhetorically, how many Canadians can afford homes in that price range? The answer, of course, is very few.

What is the general conclusion? After considering the supply of housing the government hopes to bring on the market, the mortgage situation, prices for 1974, and what they are likely to be in 1975, the conclusion is inevitable. The poor in our society, that 20 per cent of Canadians who live below the poverty level, are right out of the picture in terms of being able to afford housing in this country. There is no way they fit into the market. That is the first point.

The second question is where does the average family of the lumberman on the west coast, the packinghouse worker in Toronto and the steadily employed person in Halifax, find itself in terms of being able to purchase a house? I am talking about the regularly employed family which is not afflicted by unemployment or living on an inordinately low income. The fact is that it too is excluded from the housing market.

Young families simply cannot afford to buy houses in most places in Canada, even though their incomes are quite reasonable in terms of existence in society in a general way. In short, whether we consider the poor or the average family, housing is by no means a social right. It is still very much a commodity in the market place, to be bought or not bought by those with a substantial amount of income at their disposal. Housing is far from being a social right. It is still the privilege of the affluent in society. It is out of reach for the vast majority of Canadians, but so far the government has not done anything about it.

I have referred to the past and current market situation. Now, I ask what about the minister's bill? It deals with four areas. First, there is AHOP, the Assisted Home Ownership Program, that marvellous election promise of the Liberals. This legislation provides a subsidy of up to $600. However, who gets that money? It will not directly benefit the low or average income earners. The Liberal party, true to its historic traditions, has decided to subsidize the banks. It is a continuation of the corporate rip-off.

The typical solution of the Liberal party is to help the poor by giving money to the rich and hoping it will trickle down. I see the minister shaking his head, the implication being that this is not a subsidy to the banks. I will point out how I think it is a subsidy, and the minister can correct me.

Let me use the example of a mortgage rate of 10¾ per cent. A family may qualify for the AHOP loan and receive the maximum $600. What procedures are followed? This may bring down the mortgage rate that family has to pay by two percentage points, to 8¾ per cent. Does this mean the bank gets only 8¾ per cent? Of course not. The bank will still get 10¾ per cent because the great generosity of the Liberal party is going to provide that $600 to the family on condition it is passed on immediately to the banks.

All this program does is provide money to the banks from the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada, and channel it through the hands of the people who need housing. It does nothing at all to force the banks to bring down interest rates. It does everything to increase their profit margin.

The program is harmful, too, inasmuch as it takes the pressure off the banks to bring down mortgage rates. To put it in blunt terms, why the hell should they? Why should they bring down mortgage rates if the government is going to subsidize them at present levels? So they keep them high, and hope the government will continue to pay people money to pass on to them. Apart from that, it is a waste of money. It is estimated that for 1975 the cost of this marvelous, new, progressive legislation will be about $35 million. I say it is a gift to the banks.

If the government wanted to make a sensible amendment to the AHOP program it could borrow money at 9 per cent. I should like to get the minister's attention so that he could reply to this point.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Say something worthwhile, then.

Mr. Broadbent: The only time a Liberal thinks anything is worthwhile is if you agree with him.

An hon. Member: Are you any different?

Mr. Broadbent: If it really wishes to benefit the people instead of the banks why does not the federal government borrow money at 9 per cent, which is the current rate it pays for funds, then apply the subsidy itself and put the money out at 7 per cent, instead of getting it through the banks and subsidizing the high mortgage rates? The government can get money at 9 per cent. Why should it subsidize the banks at 10¾ per cent? The method now proposed is totally unjustified, even accepting the basic assumptions of the Liberal party.

Next, the bill provides financial incentives for private developers, encouraging them to build more rental accommodation. Once again this program is a direct subsidy to the developers so that they will build more houses. It is a giveway to the developers.

The third aspect of the bill is that dealing with non-profit housing corporations. I must say that when I read this part I thought there had been a terrible mistake in the legislation. I reached that conclusion because the bill seemed to make sense. How, I asked myself, could the Liberals be proposing to acquire land for non-profit housing? I thought there had been a grotesque error somewhere—that somebody on the Treasury Board or in the department had made a mistake. However, reading on, I found my prejudices about the Liberal party were confirmed.

I discovered that though they had decided to acquire land for private housing they intended to remove the 10 per cent capital grant which was formerly available. In effect, they were saying to the poor people right across the country, "We shall buy this land for you, so go ahead and build your housing units; at the same time we are taking away the 10 per cent capital grant we formerly provided." That is a typical piece of shifty work by the Liberal party. They give with one hand and take away with the other to make sure there is not redistribution of wealth in the country—that would fly in the face of everything that party stands for, Mr. Speaker.

Next, the government is to provide assistance in connection with sewage systems to municipalities. Here I am glad to say the Liberals have done something which in principle one cannot object to, and the amendments in this area make sense. One could quibble about detail, but I will rest there. I think it makes sense. Even though it is brought in by the minister responsible for housing I still think it is good, and he must be given credit.

To sum up, three of the four aspects of this housing legislation are totally contradictory to the principle that housing should be a social right.

What is an alternative approach, in 1975, which recognizes that we need a million new units and acknowledges at the same time that behind the statistics are four million Canadian lives? What if we took housing seriously as a social objective, recognizing that housing is a social right, and that unemployment is running at 7 or 8 per cent? First, instead of $1.2 billion for housing the budget should be at least twice that amount for 1975. This would also mean a serious commitment to creating thousands of jobs in a year which will likely be the worst in terms of numbers unemployed than any year since the depression. So, in terms of facing up to a social responsibility it makes sense, and in terms of creating the number of housing units we need it makes sense. That is the first step we should take.

Second, instead of relying on the private sector, instead of providing financial incentives and all kinds of rip-off opportunities, the money should be channelled through public hands and kept entirely in public hands until it gets to the people who really need housing. How could that principle be implemented?

Let me deal first with land assembly, which represents a major cost of housing. The federal government should duplicate on a national basis what the Manitoba government has done.

● (2100)

The Manitoba government in Winnipeg—I see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) listening to my remarks and perhaps he will interject on this point—through the means of public land assembly found it could buy land, provide the servicing required in the form of sewers, water and so on, and sell lots for $7,000 a unit. That is exactly half the price that the commercial market has established in the city of Winnipeg today. The kind of financial incentive, the free market wheeling and dealing that is supported by the Liberals and Conservatives sees lots selling in the same city of Winnipeg for $14,000, twice the price of land assembled publicly by the government of Manitoba.

That demonstrates that a government that wants to regard housing as a social right, and which uses governmental authority in the interest of the people, can bring down land costs by 50 per cent. I should like to see this kind of program duplicated across the country on a national basis, and a government committed to this would put up the funds that would enable such a program to be implemented.

The second point I want to make is connected with mortgages. Instead of providing charity to the banks and using millions of dollars of taxpayers' money under AHOP to subsidize the banks, as the minister is in this crass legislation, what the government should do is to amend all legislation pertaining to the Bank of Canada and financial institutions so as to make it mandatory that banks place a certain percentage of their investments in mortgages at 6 per cent.

I see the minister shaking his head in bewilderment, and I do not doubt it, because what is involved in this suggestion is the taking on of the banks in our society. It is exactly analogous to what the government of Saskatchewan did a few years ago when it brought in medicare. The NDP government said that medical care was a social right. Every other reactionary force in society, including the Liberal party of Saskatchewan and the Tories, said no, we could not do that. They said we could not challenge the medical profession in that kind of way. But we did in Saskatchewan, and within a few years all other parties across Canada suddenly discovered that you could take on the medical profession. They suddenly discovered that the majority of Canadians liked medicare.

I say that the majority of Canadians would like more money at 6 per cent, but the only way to give it to them is to say to the banks that on a certain part of their investments, they are not going to make a profit. They can make a profit on colour television sets, electric tooth brushes and other gadgets, on the financing of shopping centres and so on; but on any money that they put up for housing for the people of Canada they will not make a profit. Over all in their operations they would still be profitable. A 6 per cent mortgage policy could be implemented on that kind of basis, and on no other. However, I do not expect the Liberal party, which has never been known as a party willing to take on the banks, to understate the position a wee bit, will move in that direction. But if it wanted to it could, and it should.

Finally, the new emphasis on housing policy for low income people in particular should be placed upon co-operative housing. In 1973 the budget for co-op housing was $2 million. It has now been raised to a paltry $4.5 million. If the government wants to make it possible for poor Canadians to get housing, then this is the sector into which it should move. Yet it has allocated a paltry $4.5 million. If the government wanted to express a genuine concern on the part of this parliament for the real housing needs of the people, it should expand this sector of its housing budget beyond what it is at the present time.

I conclude by saying on behalf of my party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Tories will have an opportunity to express their eighteenth century philosophy as soon as I sit down. The New Democratic Party a few years ago fought the battle for medicare.

An hon. Member: And lost.

Mr. Broadbent: And won. Every damned Tory and Liberal government in the country copied it, once they found it acceptable. We fought the battle for medicare a few years ago because we believed it was the social right of every Canadian. From this year on we have every intention of fighting the battle for housing. I believe that in a few years housing will become the social right of all Canadians, and the snickers and sneers that we are hearing tonight from the two old line parties will be laughed into history.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity of making a few comments on a bill which strikes me as very important for all Canadians, and which, in addition, represents an element of prime importance in our economy.

I am sure the government recognizes the urgency of intervening quickly in this problem of prime importance to all Canadians, but again, I feel the government proves incapable of implementing the required measures.

I should like to point out to the House, Mr. Speaker, that though the bill now being studied is not bad in itself, it does not meet the real needs of Canadians where housing and urbanism are concerned. We are at grips with what seems to me to be a fundamental economic problem in Canada, which needs to be resolved as quickly as possible. As I said a moment ago, this bill falls far short of suggesting the solutions needed to the housing problem in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, a housing policy for Canada has been for many years part of the Social Credit Party platform. Everybody knows that this is a serious problem which affects all Canadians, and this is one of the reasons why the Social Credit Party of Canada strongly supports the development of a housing policy.

I suggest that, although it may be sound theoretically, the housing policy which is set forth in this bill would not work. The grants will benefit people with above average income, while small earners will not be eligible. It is high time, Madam Speaker, for the government to become aware of this problem. The government should unquestionably increase the grants to small earners, thereby giving them once and for all access to single dwelling housing. I feel that the changes to the bill are very important and acceptable as a whole, but that this bill is still incomplete, imperfect and, as such, fully out of touch with the needs of the underprivileged.

I am delighted to see that the bill provides increased assistance to non-profit making housing projects and to housing co-operatives as well as federal programs of land rentals for non-profit making and co-operative housing. Moreover, I think that the latter will enable the corporation to purchase and improve lots and rent them at a very low price to non-profit making corporations. Another amendment which seems to be important but only for some people is the aid granted by the government to facilitate the purchase of a house. On the other hand, I consider that the low amount of $500 granted for that purpose will be insufficient for individuals with low incomes.

Since housing is essential for all, that it is a consumer's item which is costly, it is undeniable that we must deal with the matter in order to help the underprivileged as soon as possible.

I think it would also be advisable for the government to provide and build homes for senior citizens, because most projects are on a cost-share basis and unfortunately, funds are often earmarked for this or that project and the province of Quebec, particularly, uses them according to its own priorities. We all know that there is a lot of confusion and unrest in Quebec now. I think that the federal government would be well advised to assume its responsibilities and build homes for senior citizens and for people with low income. It should build moderately priced housing, as is more and more the case now.

As recent statistics show, in many families, 30 per cent of the budget goes to housing. This means that the cost of housing represents about a third of the consumer price index. The most affected by this remain citizens with a low income.

Madam Speaker, housing is essential to all Canadians. He must fight against the hardship of winter and have a home where he can fill his needs.

Today, it is almost impossible to buy a house, considering loans are for a 40-year period, and this only tends to sink people into debt for 40 years. We all know that under current standards houses have a guaranteed life span of 20 years. But contrary to logic loans are made for a 40-year term. After 20 years, the house is finished and the sad owner is left with another 20 years of payments. What for? Absolutely nothing. The house is uncomfortable, and he might as well live out in the open.

As I indicated, it is almost impossible to own a house today, considering loans are granted for a 40-year period. This is discouraging for people. I feel someone wishing to build a house of any type should be able to repay in ten years. But it is the opposite way. A great many people own houses guaranteed for 25, and even 40 years, still carrying mortgages higher than their value, to the point that owners cannot even repay, and let them go.

Madam Speaker, I would like to discuss some ways of giving each Canadian the opportunity of getting decent housing on normal terms.

As a first solution, interest rates should be brought down, since they are very high, and money should be made more readily available to every citizen, because each one of necessity must find shelter.

One of the points the government has finally understood is the lowering of the sale tax on building materials from 12 to 5 per cent. That reduction is most likely to end in a smaller increase in the cost of a house, rather than in an immediate lowering. Moreover, Madam Speaker, are we Social Crediters not the ones who have been calling for that for many years? Yes, Madam Speaker. This example has been followed by builders and real estate agents as well as by consumers. One thing is sure: that reduction does not immediately really influence the price of a single-family house, and the next increase will certainly be countered or less steep.

Once again, we urge the government to encourage Canadians to build single-family houses by guaranteeing them long-term loans at an administrative rate. Furthermore, we would like single-family house owners to benefit as well from a tax reduction equivalent to the interests they pay on mortgages and the amount of their school and municipal taxes.

I would like to make a digression to stress that the government now seems to give $50 on the interest the borrower has to pay. It would be better if the government would give this to those who borrow. The way it acts now, it encourages loan shark and usury and I am convinced that this is a bad thing.

Once again, we invite the government to spur Canadians to build their own family house, as I said earlier, by providing them with long term loans at low interest rates.

Madam Speaker, I hope wholeheartedly that the bill now before us is for the benefit of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Madam Speaker, this is the first time since he was appointed I have had an opportunity of speaking in the House while the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) has had a bill here, and I want to congratulate him on his appointment to office. It certainly is refreshing to have a minister who can get mail answered more quickly than the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Basford) used to answer his mail, and it seems that he is making some progress in the housing field.

Mr. Danson: It's the Post Office.

Mr. Reynolds: Perhaps the minister should be made Postmaster General.

It is always a pleasure to speak after we hear the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) speak because it always seems that his party has a great ability to distort some of the things the government or the opposition says. I certainly think that the Leader of the New Democratic Party distorted the part of the bill dealing with AHOP. For just a few moments I thought that the NDP was accepting the financial philosophy of the Social Credit Party when its leader spoke about solutions in financial areas.

It is interesting that we have a bill before this House on housing just two days after we received in the mail a brochure from the government of British Columbia which, as everyone is aware, is a New Democratic Party government, and to hear members of that party applaud in this House for their leader, and to hear their sanctimonious views on solving the nation's problems, we wonder why they cannot solve those problems in the province of British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Hang them all.

Mr. Reynolds: Hon. members of the NDP wish to interrupt and talk about the hanging bill instead of about housing, because it is something which bothers them and something which is very unpopular in their party. I can only remind hon. members that in the last parliament they had some 30 members, and now they are down to 13.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That's a persuasive argument.

Mr. Gilbert: How many Tories are there in B.C.?

Mr. Reynolds: Thirteen Tories in B.C. and only 2 NDP. NDP members are really upset when they are told the truth and given the facts. I can only say that the New Democratic government of B.C. will probably reduce their numbers in B.C. just as they did federally in the last election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Tories and Liberals are cheering each other again.

Mr. Reynolds: It is nice to see that they are finally listening to something. After two and a half years in my province—and I am not saying the provincial government is completely to blame because the federal government has some responsibility in housing, although I personally believe it should be giving that responsibility to the provincial governments and municipalities and supplying the money to do the job—but after two and a half years of a socialist government in my province, it was interesting to read in The Province, a Vancouver newspaper, on Saturday, February 22, under the headline "City Leading in Home costs":

> Vancouver has replaced Toronto as the most expensive residential real estate market, according to a chart prepared by the national service of A. E. LePage Ltd. . . .
> The company said that a house that cost an average $50,831 in Toronto would cost $52,356 in Vancouver, a difference of $1,525.

I think that is a great example of some of the ideas of socialism.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank free enterprisers for that.

Mr. Reynolds: After two and a half years, a home in my riding which could have been bought for $35,000 now costs $55,000. If that government stays in power much longer the cost will be $75,000.

After two and a half years all that the great provincial government in my area can bring out is a nice brochure called "Housing for People", published by the British Columbia department of housing. I just want to read the first page, written by the Hon. Lorne Nicolson, who is our great provincial minister of housing. He says:

> Most British Columbia communities are proud of their residential areas lined with attractive homes and well kept yards. But there are still far too many households living in deplorable accommodation.
> The goal of this government is to provide access to adequate and reasonably-priced housing as a basic human right for every citizen of our resource-rich province. As with health care, education, and the other social services, it requires all levels of government to work together to make this possible.
> The provincial government, through the new Department of Housing, is attempting to meet its share of this challenge with its HOUSING FOR PEOPLE programs.
> In its first year, the Department has chalked up an impressive record. But this is just the beginning. Our programs will be improved and expanded.

That "impressive record" is the highest cost of housing anywhere in Canada, and the lowest rate of apartment availability of any province in Canada. That is the record of the government of the province of British Columbia, and I think it is pretty poor. The rest of their brochure is filled with pictures, including one of a poor child eating spaghetti, a great public relations job by a public relations firm, but it certainly has not solved housing problems in British Columbia.

This bill will not really solve all the housing problems in Canada, although my party approves of the bill in principle. The only part of the bill that has any real relevance is the sewage treatment assistance, which is certainly needed in many areas of my riding and throughout Canada. One of the problems we have to relate to in housing—I can remember at a committee meeting on the last estimates asking the minister and the president of CMHC a very simple question, and I hope the minister, either in this House or when he speaks on this bill in committee, will be able to give us some answers—is that the government could not tell us a few months ago how many serviced lots were needed in the city of Vancouver to keep the housing market at an even trend.

Nor could it tell us how many housing lots were needed in the city of Toronto to keep the market at an even trend. If the government cannot tell us how many lots are needed, that is where the problem lies. I hope the minister will be able to answer that question in committee because I do not see anything wrong with being a free enterpriser, however much the gentlemen to my left seem to think there is something wrong with it. I think the people in the free enterprise building market can solve housing problems in Canada as long as they do not get the interference that are getting from all three levels of government right now. All they want to know is that there are lots available—

Mr. Broadbent: Subsidizing the developers.

Mr. Gilbert: Barney is going to subsidize you, don't worry.

Mr. Reynolds: We have had a short interruption from the New Democrats, and again they are distorting things. I did not mention one word about subsidization. Free enterprise in this country can build houses without government subsidies. It does not need government interference either. It galls me to stand here and listen to these people talk when, for a year and a half, they sat in bed with the government and approved all its policies, and now they are saying they are bad.

Mr. Gilbert: Check your record of voting on housing.

Mr. Reynolds: All we need in this country to solve the housing crisis is for the free enterprise builders of this country, and we are not talking about all the large developers—

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, I wonder if the hon. member made reference to the fact that this party—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is this a question or a point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. member suggested that the New Democratic Party supported all the policies of the previous government. I just want to point out that it was his party which voted with the government on the mortgage mechanisms bill, and it was only the NDP which voted against it.

Division

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This is a matter for debate and not a point of order.

Mr. Reynolds: It is interesting to watch the N.D.P. members after a year and a half of voting with and keeping the government in power, now blaming this party for keeping that government in power.

Mr. Broadbent: Don't get confused by the facts.

Mr. Reynolds: This country needs serviced lots so that houses can be built. It needs a federal government which is willing to negotiate with the provinces and tell the provinces that, if they expect to receive federal money, they had better make sure there are enough serviced lots on the market every year to maintain the housing market in Canada. That puts the problem right into the hands of the builder and the developer.

All we hear from our friends to my left is about big developers. I want to tell them I come from a riding which is one of the largest in Canada, and the big, bad developer in my riding builds only six to ten houses a year. He is a small Canadian businessman, and he is having a hard time because of government interference.

I want to close because we want to get this bill into committee so that we can receive some answers to these questions from the minister. We hope he will be prepared, because this party is prepared to do anything to get housing going in Canada, and we are not prepared to stand around and make phony statements, as does the N.D.P. party to my left. We want to get some housing built in this country, so we want to get this bill to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the acting prime minister if he will reverse the order of business which he announced for tomorrow. Is it a fact that the Northwest Territories bill will come forward first and that, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) will pilot it through?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, since there seems to be a better chance that the Northwest Territories bill will get through rather than the other bill during the course of the day, it is my intention to call it first, which I hope will elicit a very short debate, and then we could go on to the farm credit bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

BROADCASTING—CODE GOVERNING STANDARDS OF TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, on February 13, as recorded at page 3185 of Hansard, I directed a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) regarding the need for regulations putting into place guidelines to govern sex and violence on Canadian television. My question was prompted by a number of questions raised in the House by a number of concerned members of parliament over the growing tendency by Canadian television, and especially CBC, to depict violence on programs and to portray explicit sex scenes and offensive language.

Like most decent people in this country, and especially parents in this country, I am becoming fed up, as, I am sure, many hon. members are, with this tendency. I can say that I am growing extremely impatient with the failure of the statutory authority, in this case the CRTC, to enforce regulations in accordance with the mandate they have under the Broadcasting Act that would specifically prohibit broadcasters, especially CBC, from offending the morals and mores of the vast majority of people in this country. Hardly a week goes by in which there is not such an offending program that contains offensive language, explicit sex scenes, and violence bordering on sadism.

I will be the first to admit that there is little or no evidence to indicate that explicit sex on television is harmful to young minds, but there are few who would disagree that sex on television offends our Judaeo-Christian moral standards, whether it is the Friday night blue movies in Toronto or what passes off as Canadian content on CBC television. I doubt very much if there is a member of this House who has not received a letter from an irate constituent who was shocked by what he had seen on Canadian television, and especially in recent years on the CBC.

But there is a real case to be made about the harmful effects of violence on television. Violent crime is on the increase in Canada as well as in the United States. The Surgeon General of the United States, when he appeared before a U.S. senate subcommittee a few months ago, reported on a study that had been made by a scientific committee covering a period of two years. This was his blunt conclusion:

"The overwhelming consensus and the unanimous Scientific Advisory Committee's report indicate that televised violence, indeed, does have an adverse effect on certain members of our society . . . It is clear to me that the casual relationship between televised violence and anti-social behaviour is sufficient to warrant appropriate and immediate remedial action . . .

A research scientist at Stanford University said that there is exposure to violence on television and that:

. . . aggressive behaviour on a one-time basis can be repeated in free play by as high as 88 per cent of the young children seeing it on TV.

Even in our own country there is concern. A few weeks ago the Solicitor General for Canada (Mr. Allmand), in a speech in Toronto said, and I quote from a press report:

. . . that his department is studying television violence and may limit programs containing violence if it concludes they encourage aggressive behaviour.

I quote again from another Canadian source, and this is a recent press report:

Chief Justice George Gale of Ontario's Court of Appeal has urged entertainment industries purge themselves of excessive violence as part of an attack on urban crime.

He went on to say:

. . . "it's little wonder children eventually go out and try to practice what they have seen."

In the very few minutes at my disposal on this adjournment debate obviously I cannot go into the arguments in any substantive way. I believe that the evidence is in, and it warrants action on the part of the government through its agency in this regard, the Canadian Radio Television Commission. I might say that the counterpart of the CRTC in the United States, the FCC, recently asked the United States congress to enact legislation to sharpen up the definition of obscenity so that that commission can put into place regulations which would govern the growing tendency on the part of United States broadcasters to use programs which exploit sex and violence. I believe that there should have been some action on the part of the CRTC in Canada.

There should be regulations, and the least the government should do is immediately embark on a program of public hearings which would have, as the end result, the promulgation of guidelines which would govern the use of sex, violence and offensive language on television, and which would have the effect of satisfying what I believe to be the very great concern of a majority of people in this country.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the government does not intend to legislate on the matter of forbidding televised violence, nor to impose in the near future a code of ethics in that respect. As for obscenity, it is already dealt with in our legislation. However, considering the importance of that matter and the interest it has aroused, the CBC has informed me that they are looking into the possibility of having a special public hearing, as the hon. member just suggested on that matter of televised violence.

I also got the following representations from the CBC: the matter of a relationship between televised violence and violence as it has been witnessed in human behaviour has been discussed and studied for at least 15 years. The most significant contribution in that respect was made by the United States Surgeon-General's Scientific Advisory Committee on Television and Social Behaviour. That five volume report encompasses more than 50 different studies. Broadly speaking, its conclusions are that televised violence may cause some children to have anti-social behaviour under particular circumstances. The report states for instance that the effects of repeated televised violence may appear on a long term basis or indirectly. However, there is a tendency among a minor group of people to argue that televised violence would attenuate instead of stimulate aggressive impulses, but here again depending on environment and conditions.

No such extensive survey has been undertaken in Canada. However, it has been shown that Canadian television programs display a lesser amount of violence than American made programs. The Canadian Radio-Television Commission recently carried out a detailed analysis of the contents of 53 television programs broadcasted by Canadian television stations in a major Canadian city to determine the proportion of violence in Canadian made programs as compared with American programs. All the programs analysed were aired at times when the greatest number of children are known to be listening. The analysis dealt with 28 entertainment programs made in Canada and 25 in the United States. According to the standards of reference, the analysis showed that out of a total 103 scenes of violence, 95.1 per cent happened in the 25 American made programs, and 4.9 per cent only in the Canadian made programs.

The matter of violence on television is therefore linked with a problem which faces all countries of our western hemisphere since all of them, at least occasionally, buy American series.

Consequently, two conditions will probably become indispensable, over the long term, to remedy the proliferation of scenes of violence, namely: a significant increase in the quantity and quality of Canadian production; and, a change in the influence of marketing strategies on production, the choice and scheduling of programs.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Madam Speaker, quite recently, I have on a few occasions drawn the attention of the House to the serious problems which are creating upheavals on every hand in our Canadian agriculture. Since the situation seems to be deteriorating almost constantly, I return to the charge once again today with criticism that is meant to be constructive.

Energetic steps must be taken immediately in agriculture. The situation has now really become alarming for our farmers. In 1974, we witnessed a swift increase, without parallel, in the cost of production, namely an increase of 23 per cent. On the other hand, the increase in income amounted to only 17 per cent. To that, for farmers as well as others, a 12 per cent rate of inflation must be added. So this means that especially in Quebec, despite the few millions of dollars injected by the government of Quebec, agriculture stood in a very precarious situation at the end of the year.

On the one hand, in the budget speech of this year, there was no special provision to support agriculture, which is already depressed, as I clearly indicated at that time in the House. On the other hand, since the beginning of this year, the cost of inputs has been rising steadily.

Besides, the conference on Canadian agricultural outlook for 1975, held in Ottawa last January, indicated that feeds, fertilizers, chemicals, energy, fuel, binder twine, agricultural machinery, electricity and some other items will contribute to raise production costs this year. Furthermore, the economist of Agriculture Canada, Mr. C. R. Phillips, has emphasized that we have every reason to believe that inflation will play the same part in 1975 as it did last year.

This means that the government must act as soon as possible, if we want to avoid an irreparable disaster in agriculture. According to a Department of Agriculture press release on the outlook for 1975, the gross agricultural income will increase by 4 p. 100 in 1975, but the net agricultural income could fall by 12 per cent, mainly because of the increasing cost of production factors.

Madam Speaker, this only means that unfortunately we shall soon be witnessing many bankruptcies and a massive exodus of farmers going to welfare offices, as the list of forthcoming auctions already shows, even in winter. If I must be accused because of my speech, I would rather be accused of saying the truth than hiding it. In any event, nobody could stop things from being what they are.

Besides, Madam Speaker, I would like to give two or three examples showing that agricultural producers will go belly up if the government does not act. First, I must say that most farmers in Quebec now have to pay $100 or more a hundredweight for the hay which they will need until the end of winter. It is a real disaster when you think that it used to cost $30 or $35 a hundredweight.

On the other hand, I have been informed recently that binder twine for hay is selling at $33 a two-roll package. After all, it is not gold twine to reach such an incredible price. Two years ago, the package was selling for about $6.

And what about feeds whose prices keep increasing steadily? In that respect I want to point out that the government must set profiteers straight as soon as possible, even if they are farmers in certain cases. The balance of the whole Canadian agriculture depends on it. I must point out here that I do not want to be the only defender of Quebec farmers but I must expose injustice where I see it. That is why the federal department of Agriculture must intervene vigourously. I quote from an editorial by François Dagenais in the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous of January 22, 1975:

> Western Canada is certainly the primary cause of the increase of input costs. Feeds prices spiralled in 1974. Indeed, since the majority of grains come from the West, producers in those provinces experienced revenue increases of around 36 per cent in 1974. Quebec producers contributed in part to that balance which is more than positive.

Madam Speaker, how can the federal department of Agriculture allow such a disparity? I agree that farmers should make profits but not to the extent of some living at the expense of the others, and with impunity. I am not afraid to say that in the area of agriculture, we are close to an emergency. If we refuse to admit it today, the events in coming months will undoubtedly bring it home to us.

That is why the government must act as soon as possible and require the co-operation of our western grain producers so that grain prices will be acceptable to eastern producers. We can only support our agriculture if everybody co-operates.

There are other solutions on the very short term. I point them out to the minister because I want my criticism to be positive. If, for example, the Department of Transport must greatly reduce freight rates to move grain from the West to the East, let it do so. Emergency measures are needed to deal with an emergency.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, the government must really expose some large businesses who run monopolies, build up inventories to boast prices, and take undue advantage of the difficult situation in which our agriculture finds itself. That is one of the major factors of the stagnation now facing agriculture. Those large businesses must be put in their place, and quickly.

Furthermore, a bank of farm products should be created as soon as possible and I congratulate the minister who said he intends to do so. It was pointed out in the Globe and Mail of October 11, 1974. In fact, I would like to ask the minister what has since been done? We need that bank as soon as possible to ensure our national security.

The Minister of Agriculture stated that he was in favour of establishing a world system of food security through large-scale stocking. It is true to maintain that we have no right to consider Canadian agriculture apart while severe starvation is experienced in extensive areas throughout the world.

For all those reasons, we should no longer hear the following in Canada: "Do not produce too much; avoid production or avoid overproduction." Those words were said again recently and it immediately reminded me that the same Liberal government repeated them in 1971 to western grain producers and even paid to prevent them from producing. We see today the fine results: they are disastrous. Madam Speaker, our country has no reserve and eastern farmers must pay excessive prices for grain.

The situation is urgent. Moreover, the country cannot be administered as it was 15 or 20 years ago, when a politician or a minister could allow himself to consider a problem for months and years knowing that one way or another, the problem would solve itself with time. We can no longer say: Time will mend things. On the contrary, it has become obvious that time worsens the situation and heightens the problems. We cannot delay, we must take immediately drastic measures to preserve our agriculture.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it will be difficult for me to answer in two and a half minutes all the things the hon. member raised in his speech this evening. Let me say, first, that in less than two years the government has granted industrial milk producers increases of approximately 40 per cent.

Some of the things the hon. member said this evening have little to do with the question he raised in the House the other day, and I feel I can add little to what I said when the hon. member opposite raised his question the other day. I must advise him that I am not completely certain what he means when he refers to the need for special subsidies.

I remind all hon. members that there are several important bills before this House which are designed to enable farmers to receive a more stable return for the products they produce. These bills are needed and must pass if we are to see continued expansion in Canadian agriculture. One that I hope receives quick passage tomorrow deals with farm trade. Maybe members could even pass the farm stabilization bill so that we can get on with the business of running agriculture in Canada.

I remind the hon. member that general stabilization is provided under the terms of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. This act provides for a revolving fund of $250 million and can be drawn upon as required to stabilize producers' returns. The revolving fund is then recouped through supplementary estimates.

I note the hon. member's concern about the supply and price of hay. I can advise my colleague opposite that my officials have checked on the situation and are following it closely. Our reports indicate that sufficient supplies are generally available. It does appear that to coax out supplies farmers must pay prices which are above those they are normally accustomed to paying.

I cannot agree that the government should take action at this time to import hay from the United States since there is nothing to stop producers from arranging on their own to buy hay in the United States and transport it to Canada, duty free. Our information is, however, that prices in the United States are the same as or higher than those prevailing in eastern Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE—STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—SUGGESTED ACTION TO ENSURE MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, the disruption of mail service in the Toronto area as well as other parts of Canada is threatening the very existence of the small businessman, an existence which has become a vital part of our overall economy as it is the small businesses that form the backbone of our economic and industrial way of life.

It is the small businessman who has to depend on regular mail delivery to keep his establishment operating on a day to day basis. Without regular mail delivery, there are literally thousands of businesses in the Toronto area alone which are finding it impossible to meet their payrolls, with many of them already laying off employees due to the curtailment of orders being received. They cannot, without regular mail delivery, keep their flow of cash moving and be expected to adhere to their budget requirements.

On top of this, and the sagging economic climate Canadians in general are being asked by the government to accept as a way of life, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Basford) has the gall to instruct federal sales tax offices to demand of business establishments the delivery of their federal sales taxes at their own expense to the government by any means other than the post office mails.

As if this were not enough, and with a general post office strike a likely possibility in the near future, the national representatives of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, who were to attend the Joint Senate-House Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada this afternoon, did not attend because, as stated in a brief presented to the committee in their stead, and I quote from that brief:

> The responsibility for this decision can be attributed to the recent actions of the Treasury Board of Canada which is trying to use the postal workers to break the strike of the general labour and trades component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

Earlier this week the post office, although shut down in Toronto, delivered over one million cheques to old age pensioners and other welfare recipients in that city because many of these individuals could not get by without them. That was indeed a very heart-warming gesture. However, let me assure you that there are many, many small and medium size businesses which cannot get by without regular mail delivery either.

With a continuation of this strike, and others that will inevitably follow unless some immediate alternate course is taken by the government, we will only add to the complete destruction of the economy in this country. It is plain to see that the suggestions I made last week, as well as those made in the memorandum to cabinet by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), relating to the fragmentation of union power should be seriously considered. Let me suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this permissive government is hesitant in dealing with single public sectors, or is hesitant in asking the post office through the Public Service Alliance of Canada to deliver all business documents along the line welfare cheques were delivered, and surely we cannot be expected to wait for the Finkelman committee to conclude its deliberations, then I believe it is time that serious consideration be given to introducing legislation which would eliminate the right to strike in essential services, but which would instead, for the sake of the working man, establish an automatic annual cost of living increase, with an additional yearly adjustment in the form of a bonus.

It is clear that unions in this country have become more powerful than the federal government, which seems to be becoming weaker. This is obvious from the failure on the part of the government to prosecute individuals taking part in illegal strikes. Although it may be beneficial in the long run for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to go prancing around Europe, it is hard to believe that in these troubled times at home, with growing militancy within the labour force in many sectors of the economy, the Prime Minister of Canada should turn his back on problems which should and must receive the total attention of the head of the government. The example set by the leader of the government will not help matters.

Continued work stoppages of this kind, which last year resulted in the loss of approximately 10 million work days, and are expected to give rise to an even worse situation in 1975, can no longer be tolerated unless Canadians, two-thirds of whom do not belong to unions, are prepared to live in conditions of economic disaster.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the disruption of postal service in the Toronto area results from the current General Labour and Trades strike. Members of that union who maintain equipment and vehicles in the Post Office in Toronto are engaging in a lawful strike, and have set up picket lines at certain postal installations in Toronto and elsewhere.

Treasury Board has been informed that a number of mail service couriers who work for the Post Office Department have refused to cross the picket lines. This has resulted in internal transportation facilities not being available to the Post Office in Toronto. The ultimate effect is that mail cannot be delivered to or from the postal processing facilities, thus disruption and eventually causing the shut-down of the Post Office in Toronto.

Picket lines are not intended to deny people rightful access to buildings and installations. Employees who do not have the right to strike and who work in buildings picketed by striking GL and T employees have an obligation and a right to report for work and perform their assigned duties.

With respect to claims by employees that they have attempted to cross picket lines but have been unable to do so because of threats or intimidation, an employee should be considered on duty only where it is clear that an attempt was made to cross the picket line, and the employee concerned was either barred from entry or threatened with violence by a member of the picket.

The answer lies not in the solution proposed by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) but in the return to work at the Toronto Post Office of all employees who do not have the lawful right to strike so that the postal service may be restored to the public.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE IN "MACLEAN'S" MAGAZINE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which was originally brought to the attention of the House yesterday by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). A minister of the Crown has made statements, or it has been claimed that he has made statements which are clearly racist and discriminatory in nature and which, if true, put this parliament and all its members under the cloud of racism.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that in this House yesterday the minister in question denied that he said what was attributed to him. Subsequently, outside the House, however, the author of the article in question, who is herself an associate editor of Maclean's magazine, asserted that the minister not only made the statement attributed to him in her article, of which she has records, but made others even more damaging which were not included in the article. Mr. Speaker, if you agree there is a prima facie question of privilege, I would move:

That this matter be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that both the minister and the author of the article can appear to clarify this most serious question.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, I thought I had made it clear to the House yesterday that I personally regretted the words that were used in that article just as much as the member for Yukon regrets those words—

An hon. Member: The member for Northwest Territories.

Mr. Richardson: I meant the Northwest Territories. But the words are not mine. The words did not express my sentiments. They did not express my feelings about the native people of this country. I said that in the House, I said it last night on television and I repeat that today. I can produce other statements I have made in which I said it is my hope that we can achieve a better life for the original Canadians, the native people of this country, within our society. Those statements reflect my true sentiments. That article, to which reference has been made, does not reflect my sentiments and I repudiate the statement as being mine.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has put forward what he suggests is a question of privilege. I cannot emphasize too strongly, of course, the seriousness of the matter with which the hon. member is dealing. However, the type of statement complained of does not, in my opinion, come under any of the definitions of privilege as I understand them. I do not want to discuss what other approaches may be taken if the hon. member feels that the matter should be dealt with further. But it does not, in my opinion, come within the confines of any definition of privilege, as I understand that. In any case, for the second time the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has denied categorically responsibility for the statement and, therefore, there does not seem to be anything further that the Chair can do about the question of privilege at this time.

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED RACIAL SLUR BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. I was tempted to speak on the question of privilege just raised but felt that the matter might better be covered by a motion moved under Standing Order 43. This matter has to do with the serious allegations which have been directed to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) with respect to statements he is alleged to have made about the native people. I find the alleged statements particularly disturbing, as I know that many native people, not only in my constituency but from all over Canada, have distinguished themselves in our armed forces in the defence of our country. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the minister provide proof clearly indicating that he did not make these statements or, alternatively, make a public apology to the native people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is provision for motions of this sort to be moved pursuant to Standing Order 43. The motion requires unanimous consent of the House. I will, therefore, ask if there is unanimous consent for this motion to be debated at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—POSSIBLE LENGTH OF STRIKE—WILLINGNESS OF MINISTER TO RE-OPEN NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the President of the Treasury Board about his position on strikes in the public service now under way among the general trades and labour group arises from the fact that a good many Canadians in business, as well as others, are being seriously hurt or inconvenienced by the continuation of the strike. The Minister indicated he did not propose to budge beyond the position taken by the majority of the conciliation board. How long does the minister intend to maintain his position and let this strike continue? Can the minister indicate how long the strike will continue so that those people being inconvenienced or hurt will try to make some alternative arrangements?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long the strike will last. I am happy to say that this morning the people at Terminal A in Toronto returned to work. There is some inconvenience when there is a strike, but the right to strike has been given to these employees by the parliament of Canada. I respect that right. At the same time, I think we have come a long way. I hope the union will recognize that the conciliation report was made by an outsider who, in fact, tried to offer them a fair deal. That is my position. I hope that talks will be resumed in order to try to find an acceptable solution. However, if they do not want to return to work, I do not intend to introduce legislation to that effect at this time. I respect the right that all members of parliament have given to those employees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister has made it clear he is not prepared to bargain with regard to his position. I am not necessarily criticizing the minister for that. However, the minister having taken that position, in his judgment what is the point of continuing? Is this simply a war of attrition between the government and the unions with the people of Canada, in the middle, getting hurt? How long is this war of attrition going to continue? With the minister taking the firm position he has, what meaning does the right to strike have in these circumstances?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long the strike will last. The employees are entitled to strike. I maintain and repeat that the Treasury Board and the government have not been adamant, on the contrary. We had made some proposals which were quite lower than those suggested by the mediator and we have been willing to meet the mediator's requirements. We are ready to negotiate on the basis of that report. I hope the union will recognize that we have done our share and that they should do theirs and consider the report as a satisfactory basis for agreement. My conciliators are ready to meet the union at any time.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Do I take it that the minister is in fact prepared to negotiate and that his position is not the apparently rigid position that he announced? Is he in fact prepared to negotiate? What steps are being taken to have negotiations reopened so that some progress can be made and the strike does not appear to be meaningless with the minister refusing to give any ground, if that is his position?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that my conciliators are willing to meet with the union any time. They invited the union to meet with them these last few days, but the union did not think fit to do so. I hope consultations will soon resume, because we are prepared to settle the dispute. Far from having been rigid, on the contrary we have been very flexible, but we believe the conciliation report represents a good basis for settlement. I hope the union will consider this position as being a considerable improvement over what the government offered at the beginning of the negotiations.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE STRIKE AND ELIMINATE THOSE EMPLOYEES WHO USE VIOLENCE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My supplementary is for the Postmaster General. It relates to the situation in the Toronto terminal—we are pleased to hear the employees are back on the job there. Arising from reports that truckers have refused and are refusing to cross the picket lines in Toronto because of threats of tire slashing and other acts of violence from the ideological element which is a small minority in the Tronto Post Office, and in view of the expressed desire of the majority of the workers there to stay on the job, what steps are being taken to weed out these bad apples?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Perhaps I could expand my answer in order to be more precise. The couriers or truck drivers were notified by me as Postmaster General that if they respected picket lines which were informational picket lines on philosophical grounds, that was their right, but the Canadian public was not to suffer because of their philosophy and if they refused to cross informational picket lines they would be suspended and replaced by drivers who did not necessarily share that basic philosophy.

As to the second question relating to violence on trucks to which the hon. gentleman quite properly referred, the violence occurred during the evening when the trucks were in the care of a private protection agency which has since been charged with negligence. There is no evidence that the damage to the trucks was caused by radical elements in the union; it could have been caused by radical groups outside the union. The point is that the truckers cannot have it both ways—respect picket lines on philosophical grounds and expect the Canadian public to suffer financial losses as a result of their conception of what is right and wrong.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the concern expressed by the president of the postal union which resulted in his absence from the Finkelman committee yesterday, is there any possibility of a rapprochement with the union to deal with the tendency toward violence in the Toronto strike situation?

Mr. Mackasey: There is another and not unrelated issue and that is the negotiations within the Post Office itself. When I assumed the role of Postmaster General eight months ago my aim was to increase the efficiency of the Post Office by improving the morale of the workers, by introducing some form of industrial democracy at plant level and by reducing the unintentional interference of other departments of government. I had presumed I would get the co-operation of the union leaders who should be seeking the same thing. When the president of the union on one hand cancels an appearance yesterday before a committee of the House in order to go to Toronto on the ground that he has to prevent violence and at the same time issues a circular or bulletin inciting violence to begin, one wonder whether the leaders are working in the best interest of the members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When you add to this the fact that the union negotiating team has placed certain prerequisites before me, through our joint negotiating team—the Treasury Board and the Post Office—before they will sit down and bargain on behalf of the workers, conditions which are impossible such as that we become a Crown corporation, that we give them retroactive money, that we prevent all automation during negotiations, conditions which are impossible, it is obvious they have no intention of bargaining in good faith and the people who will ultimately lose by this are the 98 per cent of the postal workers who are basically decent, honest Canadians who simply want to get on with the job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED RACIAL SLUR ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE IN "MACLEAN'S" MAGAZINE—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday in the House, in reply to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northwest Territories concerning the quotation that was attributed to him in Maclean's magazine, the minister said as reported at page 3628 of Hansard:

> There was no quotation by me in those terms.

I ask the minister—and I choose my words with care—is he saying, when he said that, that he did not say the following sentences even in a context which was somewhat different but which were run together in paragraph form, with reference to Canada's native people:

> I mean, what did they even do for Canada? Did they discover gas? Did they discover oil? They didn't even invent the wheel. Why, when we came here, they were still dragging things around on two sticks.

Did the minister or did he not utter any of those sentences?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not utter those words in any way resembling the sentiment that is expressed in those words. I talked again last night with the author of the article and she admitted to me that we had not discussed native people, or my views of native people, in any way during our interview. She said that while we were talking of the Mackenzie valley pipeline I had made some remarks about the fact that American companies had helped develop Canadian oil, and that some of us in Canada had walked over the oil for a long time. But that was not directed toward native people. I repeat that the whole quotation is completely out of context. We were not talking about native people, according to the author, at the time that she made this report. What I am trying to tell the House is that those are not my feelings or my sentiments in any way. In fact quite the opposite.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Just listen to the question, because this is a serious issue.

An hon. Member: Make a charge then.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the minister correctly, he said he did not utter these words in the context of the discussion or with reference to what he considered to be the main purpose of the interview. He is not denying that he uttered these sentences in some form during the discussion. I put it to the minister that on national television last night the author in question said that she has a record in some form, either notes or in some other way, in quotation marks, prepared in the course of an interview with the minister, of words along these lines, and she said that other words which were not used are even more damaging. Is the minister saying that this may have come up in the context of an interview on a broader subject, and that he made passing reference of some sort to this issue and uttered words of this kind?

Mr. Richardson: Not passing reference, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that that quotation would lead one to believe that it was my view. I was not talking about native people. I did not use the specific words—whatever they are—about the two sticks.

Mr. Broadbent: What about the others?

● (1130)

Mr. Richardson: I just do not think in those terms and I have never used that expression.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is not just an ordinary reporter, but an associate editor of the magazine who has a serious claim—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is asking a question on a very important point. However, it is also a point that has some limitations and restrictions regarding the use of the question period. One thing is absolutely certain; I cannot permit the hon. member to get into a debate at this time. If he has a final supplementary question he should put it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will put my question to the government House leader, the Acting Prime Minister. I would ask him most seriously, in view of fairness to the minister, and I say that with great care—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In fairness to the minister and to the native people of Canada I should like to ask whether the government House leader will refer this matter to a standing committee of the House before which the minister can appear to explain his comments or make clear that nothing of this kind was said, and before which the reporter who wrote this article can be called for testimony in order that this whole issue can receive the serious clarification it deserves?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know it is familiar to you, as it is to all of us, that in this House we accept the word of other members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we would not be able to conduct our business as the people of this country would wish. If, however, the hon. gentleman wishes to lay charges to say that the Minister of National Defence uttered those words, and wants to take the responsibility for that statement, then let him lay his charges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has raised a very important question, stating that if one member of the House openly questions the honesty of another there is the well-known tradition that he take certain serious risks if he is willing to make a charge. I want to make clear that I am not—

An hon. Member: Make the charge then.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am not making that charge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down then.

Mr. Broadbent: I am saying that if one reads Hansard and looks at the answer the minister has provided he will see that he said with care, I take it, that he did not utter those words in a certain context.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Broadbent: The conclusion I draw from that, Mr. Speaker, is that it is at least possible that he uttered those words of a racial and discriminatory nature that have been attributed to him in a different context, and I think in all fairness both to the minister and to the native people of Canada the issue demands clarification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think it would be fair to all hon. members if the leader of the New Democratic Party would now say whether the Minister of National Defence uttered those words, otherwise he is simply spreading stories and promoting gossip. I challenge him to be fair to the Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLISHING

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF TAX PROVISIONS RELATING TO "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of the obvious muckraking style of Maclean's, as carried into this House, I would ask the Secretary of State whether he will reconsider his position in regard to Reader's Digest?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I would point out that I ask this in regard to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has put her question quite legitimately, but I do not think she is entitled to make a comment on it, having put the question.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it absolutely clear that there is no connection whatsoever between the legislation I am proposing in respect of Section 19 and the sort of article that has been written about the Minister of National Defence in that magazine. The sole intention of the legislation I am proposing and putting forward to this House is to provide general support to magazines in Canada.

An hon. Member: Like Maclean's.

Mr. Faulkner: I would seriously hope that the intention and the initiative on the government's part will not be compromised by that rather distasteful article about the Minister of National Defence.

STOPPAGE OF GRAIN SHIPMENTS BY STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—EFFECT ON NATIONAL INTEREST—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in May of last year the government invoked the law to forbid grain handlers from going on strike because of the effect on the national interest, and in view of the fact that the government introduced legislation in October to end the grain handlers' strike, again because of its effect on the national interest, will the government House leader advise this House whether in the view of the government the national interest is being affected by the present stoppage of grain shipments due to the present legal strike?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is undoubtedly true that the strike is interfering with the movement of grain, but I support the position of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, that this is a time for negotiation and not for the kind of action proposed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that since August 1, some 70 days have been lost because of work stoppages, and in view of the answers given to the hon. member for Marquette by the Minister of Justice on Wednesday, would the government House leader advise the House whether the number of plans being looked at to move grain include legislation to get grain shipments moving again, and also advise what form this legislation might take?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of this question in order to have the opportunity of discussing it with my colleague, the Minister of Justice.

HARBOURS

PAYMENT OF GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES BY HARBOUR COMMISSIONS TO MUNICIPALITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the chairman of the National Harbours Board to myself in committee, later confirmed by a letter, to the effect that the National Harbours Board does pay grants in lieu of taxes, and in order to clear up the situation and have some consistency under harbour policy, will the Minister of Transport direct the harbours commissions to pay grants in lieu of taxes to municipalities consistent with the policy of the National Harbours Board which does make such grants; for example, the municipality of Delta under the National Harbours Board does receive a grant in lieu of taxes, but the municipality of Surrey and other adjacent municipalities cannot collect these taxes under the harbours commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered this question a few times in the House. As the hon. member knows, the status of harbours and ports everywhere in Canada is not the same. Some of them are owned by municipalities, and I do not see how we can ask the National Harbours Board to pay taxes or allow grants for a port that is owned by a municipality. Other ports are owned by private interests, while some are under the National Harbours Board.

As far as the National Harbours Board is concerned, we do have a policy of paying grants in lieu of taxes. For the others I think we will have to await the review which the hon. Leader of the Opposition is expecting very soon. I think that we can have perhaps a more uniform policy so that those questions will no longer be put.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—NOTIFICATION TO GOVERNMENT PRIOR TO PRICE INCREASE BY IMPERIAL OIL—COMMENCEMENT OF MONITORING

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the minister tell us whether Imperial Oil consulted with his department before it announced the increase of 2.2 cents per gallon on a variety of products to come into effect on February 26th?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Imperial Oil gave notification of its intention to increase prices following, of course, on the information that they had previously made available with regard to their costs over the previous period.

Mr. Gillies: Can the minister inform the House whether the monitoring system was in effect before this increase took place?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN SERVICE STATIONS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): My supplementary is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the wide discrepancies in the price of gasoline which now varies as much as 14 cents per gallon between service stations for regular gas, will the minister look into this ridiculous situation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government has never attempted to monitor gasoline prices at the retail level. It seems to me that, as the hon. member is aware and other hon. members will be, because of the current surplus of products, there is an extensive competition, at least in some communities, at the retail level. On the whole that kind of competition, I would think, would favour the consumer rather than work against him.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED DELAY IN ESTABLISHING BROADCASTING STATION FOR OKANAGAN VALLEY UNTIL FRENCH TELEVISION STATION ESTABLISHED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. I ask the minister if the proposed CBC broadcasting station for the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia is being held up because a suitable site is being sought for a French television station?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into that. I will do so and report to the hon. member right away.

Mr. Whittaker: My supplementary is for the Acting Prime Minister. Is it government policy to continue holding up a CBC broadcasting station which would serve 150,000 people in order to put in a costly French television station to serve one per cent of the people?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel that in this country it is desirable that we should have national television coverage in all parts of the country to serve all language groups. That is the principle that I support.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When did you change policy?

Mr. Sharp: Both of the official languages of Canada should be served by national television service.

INDUSTRY

LUMBER—POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA OR TRADE DELEGATIONS TO OPEC COUNTRIES TO STIMULATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my question by wishing a speedy recovery to the former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That will get you re-elected.

Mr. Anderson: I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Because of the serious layoffs in the B.C. forest industry due to the weak American housing market, can the minister advise what discussions have taken place between his department and the department of economic development of the province of British Columbia on matters relating to the forest industry in B.C.? Have any trade delegations been sent to the OPEC countries to encourage exports of lumber to this very prosperous area?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there have been regular consultations with the B.C. government and with the Council of Forest Industries for the province of British Columbia. This week there was discussion with respect to progress on the five year overseas market development program and the benefits which have accrued from it. They have been substantial in opening up new markets for B.C. products.

As regards mission activity, on the last mission that I took to the Middle East two members of the Council of Forest Industries were present, and there have been other missions in other parts of the world, all of which are aimed at increasing the market for B.C. products.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—ACCEPTABILITY OF PRICE INCREASE BY IMPERIAL OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, regarding the announcement by Imperial Oil that effective immediately they have introduced an increase of 2.2 cents per gallon for gasoline, home heating fuel and diesel. In view of the fact that I take it for granted that before removing the price ceiling the minister's department had estimated what increase would be justified for increased refining costs and increased marketing costs, I would like to ask the minister whether the 2.2 cents per gallon comes within the formula which his department has devised as being acceptable in light of the statement he made when he announced the removal of the ceiling.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR BREAKDOWN OF PRICE INCREASE BY IMPERIAL OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister, if this is acceptable, what part of the 2.2 cents per gallon increase is attributable to increased refining costs, and what part is attributable to increased marketing cost including, I assume, such things as the very extensive advertising campaign which the oil companies have been carrying on for some months?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the figures are broken down on a percentage basis, but I can certainly inquire from the administration to see to what extent that has been broken down, and perhaps it can be discussed in the committee if the hon. member would like.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REASON FOR TIMING OF REMOVAL OF PRICE CEILING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that, as the minister said in answer to another question a few moments ago, there has been a gas price war going on in various parts of Canada, I would like to ask the minister why he chose to remove the ceiling at this particular time which raises the wholesale price by 2.2 cents, which may not reflect itself in the retail price, but which will have to be borne at the expense of the retailers of petroleum products in this country.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It seems to me that when there is pressure on prices and competition, that is the best possible time to move from the situation of control on the basis of costs, or a flat control on the basis of costs, to one where we are willing to allow prices to vary from company to company. It is true that in some cases the independents will be faced with higher wholesale costs. In the case of other independents—and we have had some pressure from the independent part of the industry—there had been the request that the increases be put through.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM IN SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder if the minister can hear me. I would like to ask him whether he has recently met with the representatives of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians in regard to extending the provisions of the community development program and whether he has yet made a decision to extend it.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There are three other provinces whose agreements expire at the end of June, so I have taken the decision, and the message has gone out to the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians indicating that we will extend theirs from the end of March to the end of June prior to making a final decision.

SPORTS

SIGNING OF UNDERAGE PLAYERS BY PROFESSIONAL TEAMS—REASON FOR FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As we are aware of the government policy regarding the hiring of amateur hockey players under the age of 20 by professional teams, as enunciated by the minister in Vancouver a few weeks ago, could the minister advise this House whether he is in fact afraid to protect our minor sports leagues in this country from deterioration and perhaps eventual extinction by not taking any direct action regarding the signing of under age players by professional teams as he did to protect, in his opinion, the CFL? Is the minister afraid because such action—which is in fact government policy—is in fact inconsistent with section 32 of Bill C-2 of the Combines Investigation Act presently at committee stage, which would in fact allow all individuals to play for the team or league of their choice?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, I explained first of all the position of my department on the matter. Secondly, the parties concerned, that is, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the two professional leagues, agree with this policy; it seems there is disagreement within one of those leagues but I feel it is up to the leagues themselves to exercise whatever control is necessary over their members. As for the second part of the hon. member's question, the answer is no.

● (1150)

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's answers, and because of his past record in dealing with sports in general, could it be taken for granted that his interests lie more within the professional sports field than with amateur athletes and the grass roots physical fitness development of our youth in general, where it should be?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

LOOTING OF CONTENTS OF WRECKED FREIGHT TRAIN—REASON FOR FAILURE TO SALVAGE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Transport is in regard to a matter of which we, as Canadians, I am sure are not very proud. In light of the present very bad publicity regarding the recent train wreck of the CNR in Northern Ontario in which there were heavy losses from looting, will the minister or the CTC now lay down firm regulations for the security of private property exposed in any subsequent train wrecks?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I hope so, Mr. Speaker. I think I can promise that we will try to have some kind of independent inquiry that will bring out the facts in this case. I agree entirely with the hon. gentleman, and I hope this is not going to be repeated.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary. Why did the CNR not immediately salvage the contents of the wreck that were exposed?

An hon. Member: Because it was insured.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will get in touch with the CNR and they will tell me why.

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO CONSTRUCT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that federal government policy is resulting in a cutback in oil exploration in western Canada which will result in a shortfall in Canada's requirements in the foreseeable future, and in view of the fact that according to the minister the tariff on the Edmonton-Sarnia pipeline might be used to offset the operating deficit of the proposed Sarnia-Montreal pipeline, the cost of which the government is committed to underwrite and there may not be sufficient oil for maximum use of the Sarnia-Montreal line, will the minister be taking another look at the advisability of constructing that line?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the supplementary estimates to be tabled on Monday there will be an item for discussion by the standing committee on the question of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline. We will be glad to go into the full details of that agreement and the implications of the shortfall at that time.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question. If the government decides to proceed with the construction of the proposed pipeline, will it be constructed in such a manner that it will move oil in either direction?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—EFFECT ON THE ECONOMY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board and it arises out of questions put to him by the Leader of the Opposition. The answers would seem to indicate that the minister is contemplating a long strike by the GLT. In view of the disruptions in the public service, and in view of the future negotiations being faced by the minister with respect to the public service of Canada, may I ask if he has formulated any opinion as to what the effects of the GLT strike will be on the economy in the long term? Also, will he be making a statement to the House so that the country will know in economic terms and in terms of wages, what it is going to be faced with as a result of this strike and others that will follow?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think statements of that nature will add to the situation at all.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—EFFECT OF ADOPTION OF COLA CLAUSE—WILLINGNESS OF MINISTER TO RE-OPEN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think the minister is misjudging the situation. With a view to settling the strike has he obtained from the Minister of Finance a definitive statement on the effect of a COLA clause in terms of this particular group of striking public servants in order to weigh the effects of that clause against the eventual disruptive effect on the Canadian economy? Has the minister done those things?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at all possibilities. I am willing to negotiate with the union and I do not think I have to make any other statements than that. I hope the strike will be settled as quickly as possible, but at the same time I say, and I have to repeat, that the federal government does not intend to be the pacesetter in the country. We want to be good employers, but we do not want to give away the store.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect, the minister seems to be going around in circles. If he is willing to negotiate, as he says he is, he seems to be doing it through his conciliators and that is not working. Would the minister consider picking up the telephone and giving Claude Edwards a call in order to get these negotiations going again?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a mechanism in place for negotiations. We have the unions talking with my negotiators and I hope the talks will resume soon. Of course, the strike is disruptive, but it is a right the employees received from the House of Commons many years ago and we intend to respect that right. It was their choice. I might tell the House that I am very pleased to resume talks and to try to find a settlement. We have shown a lot of flexibility so far, and I hope the union will do likewise.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DECISION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT NOT TO INTERVENE IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment and her parliamentary secretary may I put my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment has decided apparently at the last moment against intervening in the Berger Commission hearings in Yellowknife on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, can the minister indicate whether this decision was preceded by discussions with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern development and, if so, what was the nature of those discussions?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there were discussions with me rather than with the department. The understanding was that professional staff would be made available to participate in the hearings and that they would make all their environmental studies available. It was felt that this would be the proper role.

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING OPERATIONS AT HAMILTON AND QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION TO OTHER PARTS OF COUNTRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question yesterday, the minister indicated that he had ordered an investigation into the irregularities at Hamilton and as well had ordered an investigation into dredging in Quebec. That appears to be inconsistent with what the minister said outside the House. I should like to know if the minister did, in fact, order an investigation into dredging operations in the province of Quebec and in keeping with his responsibilities, has he ordered an investigation into dredging operations in other parts of the country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned in the House or outside the House—I think I said exactly the same thing in both cases. In January, 1973, I ordered an inquiry following a report by the RCMP into Hamilton Harbour Commission activities. Later, while the inquiry was taking place, the police thought that the same thing might be found in the deal that took place on Îles d'Orléans and Ste. Pétronille. They asked to extend the inquiry. We then asked the RCMP to extend the inquiry to those places, I think between November 12 and November 18, 1974.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he is ordering an inquiry into dredging operations all across the country instead of waiting for the RCMP to request such an inquiry as happened in the Quebec situation. I might say this is completely at odds with the reply the minister gave yesterday.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any contradiction. I do not believe that any person who has any kind of objectivity will believe there is a contradiction. I said there was an inquiry. I ordered the inquiry not only in Hamilton but in Quebec as well. I do not know if the gentleman is serious, however, when he asks if I am going to order an inquiry everywhere there is dredging in Canada.

● (1200)

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the federal government spends millions of dollars every year on dredging contracts all across the country could the minister, in order to set the public mind at ease, establish such an inquiry, to determine that this practice is not widespread across the country in cases where the federal government is involved in dredging.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is in this country a body known as the RCMP which makes inquiries all the time in various fields. If there is any kind of report which shows that there has been wrongdoing somewhere, I am going to order an inquiry.

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF PERSONS CHARGED AND NATURE OF CHARGES USED AS BASIS TO OBTAIN WARRANT TO SEARCH HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answers of the Minister of Transport, may I direct a serious question to the Solicitor General which is related to problems concerning the Hamilton Harbour Commission. As the RCMP raided the Minister of Labour's office in Hamilton during the last election campaign and seized certain documents from that office, can the Solicitor General say what are the names of the persons charged with any offence or offences and what was the charge that enabled RCMP officers to take that unusual course; and it was unusual.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first part of the hon. member's question seeks information which ought to be sought some other way. However, the Solicitor General apparently is prepared to answer.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am told that the procedure adopted was not unusual. There was investigation into irregularities concerning the Hamilton Harbour Commission and the RCMP were pursuing their investigation. They were seeing witnesses and seizing documents. They felt that the Minister of Labour might have some documents which would be useful to the investigation. That tied in with other information they had. They obtained a search warrant to obtain those documents, and that is what they did.

As I said in the House the other night, charges have been laid against five persons, three of whom have already been found guilty, which shows that the investigation has been successful up to this point. Two others are to go on trial shortly, and the inquiry is still continuing.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to know the nature of the case, or the evidence. I am asking a serious question. Under the Criminal Code, before you can issue a search warrant, particularly if it is to be used against a distinguished member of the House of Commons during an election campaign, a charge has to be laid and an affidavit or an information sworn. The necessary forms must be completed. I am asking, against whom were the charges laid and what was the nature of the charges that enabled the RCMP to obtain that warrant?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking for specific information. I will try to get it and give it to him afterwards.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am asking the Solicitor General to measure up to his responsibilities, to stop acting in a cavalier fashion, to examine the facts and to let us have the information by Monday, so that the Minister of Labour may return to this House and deal with strikes. At present, there is almost economic anarchy in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In all fairness, the hon. member for Calgary North is making a representation and not asking a specific supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question. Is the Solicitor General prepared to examine those documents and give us the information?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will do that, although I have some doubts about the correctness of the statement the hon. member made about the law.

POSSIBLE PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN MONTREAL COMPANIES FOR DREDGING ST. LAWRENCE RIVER SUBSEQUENT TO ORDER WITHHOLDING PAYMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport arising from the answers of yesterday and today. He said that on the advice of the Minister of Justice certain payments were held up. I ask the minister if, subsequent to the date when he ordered the investigation of these companies, moneys were paid to the company in respect of which payment has now been held up?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday is that for the Quebec dredging, and I think this concerns only what we call the line north of Ste. Petronille, at the end of the island, the government owed, I think, $1.3 million or $1.4 million. I regret that I do not have the exact figure. It was thought, rightly or wrongly, in Hamilton, that the same kind of deal might have taken place in Ste. Petronille and they decided to withhold the money. That is all.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister cannot give me the information I seek today, perhaps he can take the question as notice and provide the information later. Were moneys paid to these companies subsequent to when an investigation was ordered?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, they were not paid after the time the investigation was started in Quebec.

CLOSURE OF LA HAVE, BROWN'S AND GEORGES BANKS—NUMBER OF SHIPS PATROLLING AREA TO ENSURE OTHER NATIONS NOT FISHING

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I undertook to give the hon. member for South Shore additional information on the closed ICNAF area, Brown's and La Have Bank. Georges Bank, as the hon. member knows, has been open to fishing during February. This bank closes for three months, commencing tomorrow, to protect haddock stocks.

As for violations in the closed area, I can advise that we have escorted three vessels, two Spanish and one Russian, out of the closed area in the last two weeks and filed a citation of this closed area to the flag state responsible. Reports on fishing activity in this closed area are received from our Maritime regional office by my office on a daily basis.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING—TRANSFER OF SUBSIDY PROGRAM TO FISHERIES DEPARTMENT—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF OVER-ALL POLICY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of State responsible for Fisheries for his information. May I direct a supplementary question which is related to his answer to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the cabinet decided yesterday to transfer responsibility for the construction of 75-foot and longer ships from his department to the Department of Fisheries, does the minister intend to inform this House of any comprehensive program covering the government's over-all shipbuilding policy? If so, when can we expect this type of announcement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think, very likely, it will be made by next Wednesday.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION—DATE OF DECISION ON CONDUCTING INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Has the government decided to conduct an inquiry into the operations of the SIU, into violence on the waterfront, and into related matters. I understand that the minister has considered this question for many months. I am asking the minister this question as I find it difficult to understand how a minister pursuing this matter conscientiously would not have come to a decision by this time.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asks if any kind of inquiry is going on or whether a decision has been reached with regard to any kind of inquiry. The point is that an inquiry, in the sense of an investigation, is going on, but there has been no decision about a specific inquiry under the Inquiries Act, which was mentioned at one time. There has been no decision on that so far.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have always regarded the minister as a stubborn but straightforward man. Can he explain why it is taking him so long to decide whether there is to be an independent inquiry? I am not a suspicious man, but I find it difficult to accept this kind of delay.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will try to help the Leader of the Opposition by making the point that a formal inquiry is not the normal way in which we proceed in matters which may be the subject of the criminal process. Instead, investigations leading to charges constitute the normal way. If he would like another adjective to associate with what we are trying to do, the word is thorough. We want to be thorough, before reaching any conclusions, just as we ought to be thorough before laying any criminal charge. I think the Leader of the Opposition knows that it is important not to jump to conclusions without full and adequate examination of the issues.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning a number of responses given today to a question asked by the hon. member for Peace River about dates, payments to particular dredging contractors, and contracts. It also relates to a series of questions by the hon. member for Central Nova which appear at pages 3621 and 3622 of Hansard. They relate to certain correspondence. In order to refresh the minister's memory, I quote from page 3622:

● (1210)

—I am the one who, in January 1973, two years ago, ordered the RCMP to inquire into alleged Hamilton irregularities. The same is true for the Quebec part of the dredging. I can produce the letters at any time.

An unidentified member then asked:

Will you table the letters?

The minister replied:

Yes, I can do that. I have them here. I will have copies made. They are very regular letters. We thought there was some irregularity.

Later in the question period, as I recall it, there was an indication that the Chair had interpreted that as an undertaking given by the minister that he would in fact table the letters. In view of what was said yesterday, and in view of the question put today by the hon. member for Peace River, I now ask the minister to fulfill his undertaking and table those letters in the House.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On the same subject, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member says is true. However, I had not read all the file yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I tell you this in all honesty. If you want me to tell you a lie, I can tell you a lie. The problem is as follows and I hope the hon. member will accept the explanation. I have to consult with the Department of Justice and the Department of the Solicitor General because there are some names in these letters which may concern some individuals. As far as the letter is concerned, the date is there. I have it here. However, I want to be sure there are no legal implications for persons who might suffer if this letter were tabled.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like the unanimous consent of the House to expand on a question that I answered on February 20 to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley which I think is ambivalent and misleading. I would like to expand on it at this time, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: The Postmaster General can only do so with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: I believe the question should be answered as fully as possible. The hon. member asked about the effect of the strike by Mint employees on series three of the olympic coins. My answer leaves the impression there is no problem. I should make it clear that we have possession of all series III coins that had been completed at the time the strike began. It is a subtle but very important difference. The other question in his preamble was whether or not we had contingency plans for supplementing the unexpected losses being encountered in the overall coin problem. I would say that in my department we have certain contingency plans. They are unofficial in nature and not prepared at the request of the government. They are simply for my own benefit.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE REPRESENTATION AND ESTABLISH A COMMISSION TO READJUST ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-51, to increase the representation of the Northwest Territories in the House of Commons and to establish a commission to readjust the electoral boundaries of the Northwest Territories, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide an additional representative for the Northwest Territories in the House of Commons, commencing with the next parliament, and to establish a means of dividing the Northwest Territories into two electoral districts. More generally, the bill is intended to complete the process begun with the Representation Act, 1974, of according equitable representation in the House of Commons to all provinces and territories of Canada, and to complement Bill C-3 which provides for representation in the Senate for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory in giving a greater voice in parliament to the territories.

The present constituency of the Northwest Territories is unique in Canada today. Its outstanding feature is, of course, its immense size; its area covers over 1,300,000 square miles and is far greater than one member of parliament can physically be expected to visit and to be thoroughly acquainted with. Communications and transportation difficulties add to the problems faced by the member for the Northwest Territories despite considerable advances in recent years.

Members are well acquainted with recent economic and social developments in the north which have been rapidly expanding the role of the Northwest Territories in the life of the Canadian nation. These developments have been accompanied by accelerated population growth. The population of the Northwest Territories was approximately 16,000 when the original constituency of Mackenzie River first came into existence in 1952, and was recently estimated by Statistics Canada to be 38,000 in July, 1974. This is double the estimate for the Yukon territory. Finally, it is well to remember the special federal presence within the Northwest Territories and the special federal role in the development and government of the Northwest Territories.

Many proposals for the division of the Northwest Territories into two constituencies have been studied by the government, including those suggested by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) in private members' bills. Cultural and economic kinship among the people of the eastern and western regions, as well as geographical differences between east and west, seem to provide almost natural, though rough, constituency boundaries. The government has found, however, that the exact position of optimal constituency boundaries would be most difficult to establish without a comprehensive examination of all relevant factors. More importantly, it is our belief that it is of the utmost importance to give the prime role in the determination of the boundaries to residents of the territories themselves and to provide a mechanism through which interested residents may present their views.

For this reason, the bill provides that this task be entrusted, under amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to an independent commission chaired by a judge and with two members to be chosen by the Speaker of the House from among the residents of the Northwest Territories. The representation commissioner would be the fourth member. The duty of this commission would be to consult with the residents of the Northwest Territories and to make recommendations for the setting of constituency boundaries with reference to ease of transportation and communication, to community of interest within constituencies and to maintaining a rough balance in geographical size between them. These factors have been selected as being of particular pertinence to the Northwest Territories.

In conclusion, I think we may be confident that the passage of this bill will, in conjunction with the Representation Act, ensure a distribution of seats in this House which not only will be just and equitable but also will provide Canada with a representative House equipped to face the challenges of the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I say at once that this party will give its support to the passage of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Before I give some of the reasons why this is the case, may I make a suggestion to which the government House leader and my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might give some thought. In light of the fact that the standing committee is seized with problems concerning other matters, in order to facilitate the passage of this bill I suggest some thought be given to considering it in committee of the whole and giving it third reading today. I offer the suggestion that on this interesting Friday afternoon we might deal in that way with this very important matter. We might speed its passage here and get it to the other place so that it may become law in ample time to carry out the studies to which the minister referred. I make this proposal on behalf of our party.

The Northwest Territories has always presented a very difficult problem with regard to representation. It has been fortunate, though, in getting good quality representation. I think back to the first member for the Northwest Territories, the late Merv Hardie, a friend of mine and of many people in this House. He was a good and effective member who did a great deal for the people of his constituency. Mr. Gene Rhéaume, a member of this party, in the face of serious handicaps caused by the size of the constituency and other factors did a most effective job of representation in the opinion of most members of the House and, I believe, of his constituents.

● (1220)

The Northwest Territories needed people of this calibre because of its very nature, its vastness and extent. I have travelled through much of it. My hon. friend from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), a minister at one time, is familiar with the stresses which can result from the sheer size of this constituency which, in itself, is enough to cause a tremendous amount of anxiety in those who represent it. I notice that clause 7 of the bill refers to certain criteria which are to be borne in mind. It provides:

> In preparing its report the commission for the Northwest Territories shall be governed by the following rules ... the commission shall give special consideration to the following factors:
> (i) ease of transportation and communications within the electoral districts;
> (ii) geographical size and shape of the electoral districts relative to one another; and
> (iii) any community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the Northwest Territories.

I come from a constituency to which those words could aptly be applied, as do many of my colleagues in this House. I recall that when the first bill dealing with the readjustment of boundaries was going through its various stages, words of that kind were used by myself in an attempt to persuade the commissions to make certain dispositions as to constituency boundaries. I am sure other members made the same point. It is comforting to know that at this stage the government has recognized that these are matters which have to be taken into consideration when drawing up electoral boundaries. I would hope that some time when we are reviewing the provisions of the general legislation, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, criteria of this sort would be inserted because they constitute a very strong recommendation and one to which heed should be given by the commissions.

Representing, as I did, the old constituency of Peace River which occupied almost one third of the territorial mass of the province of Alberta, I can say that it presented, on a smaller scale, the same challenges in the way of representation as do the Northwest Territories, and these guidance rules would have been most useful.

We approve the legislation because we agree with what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has said. In addition, for too many years the affairs of the territories have been dominated by a form of neo-colonialism on the part of many of the officials of the department. I see signs, now, that this is disappearing but there is still a certain amount of it present. It constitutes a further problem for those who represent the constituency. I recall an old friend and colleague, the late Jack Sissons, the first judge of the territorial court of the Northwest Territories, engaging in a legal battle with the administration in an attempt to bring about an examination of a judicial matter of which he was fully seized so as to secure equity for the native people of the territories. One needs to read the autobiography of this distinguished jurist in order to understand how difficult it was for him, as it must have been for all the members from the Northwest Territories, to cope with this department. I am glad to see that some of the old attitudes are disappearing, and I think the process should be expedited. I believe the minister's intentions are good; the test will be his capacity to overcome the resistance which can still make itself felt in his department.

After long years of isolation because of conditions over which they had no control—I sometimes think they were fortunate—the native people of the territories have suddenly been faced with the impact of the twentieth century. In comparatively recent times the Northwest Territories have shown signs of yielding a number of valuable products which the outside world appears determined to discover, develop, process and send away to other parts of the country and the world. This has placed the Indian and Innuit people in immediate proximity to the benefits and also to the drawbacks of modern technology. They have not had an opportunity to prepare themselves over the years, and it has come as a tremendous shock.

Having spoken with the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), and from my own experience travelling there and talking to the people, I know precisely how difficult this transition has been for them. It will take a great many years before the difficulties of adjustment are successfully overcome. Conflicts of a social nature as well as of an economic nature have been emphasized to an extent unknown in other parts of Canada, and it has been exceedingly difficult for one member representing such a constituency to do the job that needs to be done.

Let me seize the opportunity on this occasion to suggest to the government that it expedite Bill C-3, which adds Senate representation for the Northwest Territories and Yukon, as soon as possible. These two bills are companion measures, and I am sure the government House leader will agree with me, especially if he can get the kind of co-operation that this party is offering from the party of my hon. friend to my left, that this course should be followed. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is just aching to urge that the distinguished body that is known as the other place should have among its membership a representative from the Northwest Territories.

For these reasons and a great many more that I could talk about for hours as a result of my knowledge of the needs in the north, we urge the House to give rapid passage to this bill at all stages and to send it to the other place.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to make one of the suggestions that has been put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It certainly was not my intention to make the other one. If there is any doubt about what I mean by the one and the other, I shall make that clear in a moment. At any rate, we do favour referring this bill to a committee of the whole House instead of to a standing committee. We think that the bill can be given approval through all stages in a matter of a very few minutes.

I want to pay my particular respects to my colleague the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) for the persistence with which he has worked on this matter. As a member who has had to represent people spread over 1.5 million square miles, he is very much aware of how difficult it is for one person to represent that vast area and its far-flung population. He has felt that one of the best contributions he could make to his area and to his people is to insist that the Northwest Territories have two members in the House of Commons, and we are delighted that his goal is being achieved.

I appreciate the reference made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) to the bills that the hon. member for Northwest Territories has placed before parliament, both in the twenty-ninth parliament and in this one. Bill C-299 is the hon. member's bill in this parliament and it calls for two seats for the Northwest Territories. The hon. member for Northwest Territories would like to compliment the government on finally having seen the wisdom of this proposal, and we are glad that this present bill, C-51, is to be put through all its remaining stages today.

I believe my colleague would agree with the suggestion made by the government—in fact, I know he agrees—that there be an independent commission to draw the line between the two seats. There are certain problems that must be looked at. In his bill my hon. friend suggested the names Mackenzie and Franklin for the two ridings. He tells me that since then he has been thinking about it some more, and that perhaps the logical names for the two ridings would be Western Arctic and Eastern Arctic. At any rate, this will be a matter to be decided by independent commission that will be appointed under the terms of the bill, after it hears from the people of the north, and we are glad that this action is being taken. We think this is an appropriate way to bring the people of the Northwest Territories, whose population is growing, as the minister pointed out this morning, into the mainstream of Canadian life, and we look forward to the fact that in the thirty-first parliament we shall have in this House of Commons two members from this area as well as a member from the Yukon.

I could have stopped here and resumed my seat, Mr. Speaker, but for the reference that the hon. member for Peace River dragged in at the end of his remarks. I have too much respect for the people of the north to palm off on them members who would be appointed by the government to sit in a house that is not elected by the people of Canada. Therefore, we shall give unanimous consent to this bill going to committee of the whole and to its being given third reading today, but don't ask us to deal today with Bill C-3. We want the north to be represented where the action is—here in the House of Commons.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some brief comments on this significant occasion. What is happening here today represents decades of effort toward achieving broader representation for the Northwest Territories. I think what is happening today would not have occurred had not the present member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) been elected. He is the first member from this great, vast geographic territory who is of native descent. I have long felt, both as a former minister of northern affairs and also as one interested in the development of the north before being appointed to that position, that the need for broader representation was recognized particularly by the native population.

My real purpose in participating in this debate today is to refer briefly to some of the historic facts that have emerged in the pursuit of more representative democracy in the north. It is only 22 years since the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was established, with its first minister being the Hon. Jean Lesage. It was only in 1959 that the Indian population received the franchise, a very recent historical development. Only as recently as 1962 did the Eskimo population receive the right to vote in this country, a quite recent development.

I think tribute should be paid to a former prime minister of this country, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who is not with us today, because he more than anyone else can claim the credit for constantly keeping in view wider and more responsible representation for the north. It was under his administration that both groups of our native people received the right to vote for representation in the Parliament of Canada. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) long sponsored a bill providing for two members for the Northwest Territories as well as for the Yukon territory, and his name should be mentioned in passing this morning.

To deal specifically with the bill that is before us, it is actually going to accomplish what we attempted to accomplish in 1963. Those members of far off days who are still in the House will recall that a bill was before parliament at that time to divide the Northwest Territories into two territories—not two electoral districts but two territories. The idea was to achieve adequate representation from the eastern Arctic which is made up primarily of native peoples. The complaint had been heard repeatedly that it was impossible for the native people to receive adequate representation in the House of Commons because, in the first instance, they did not have the vote until 1962 and, in the second instance, they would be overwhelmed by the voting strength concentrated in other parts of the country.

As I said in my opening remarks, that problem has been overcome by the fact that we have representation in the House of Commons by a member of the native people. This is a tribute to the comparatively rapid development that has taken place on the basis of the great upsurge in education as well as in the economy. It is a tribute that this situation has come about within the short space of two decades since this parliament and the Government of Canada became specifically interested in the development of this 3.5 million square miles that make up the Northwest Territories.

One point I should like to make before concluding is that there is ample information available as a result of the consultations which took place in preparation for the division of the territories contemplated in the legislation before this House in 1963. Prior to the defeat of the Diefenbaker Conservative government, consultation had taken place over a long period of time. A lot of information was accumulated which would provide the helpful background information required as the government contemplates the establishment of two electoral districts in the Northwest Territories. In those days, consultation was the order of the day. When there was a change in government, the new government decided to establish a commission, namely, the Carrothers commission, which moved around the northern half of Canada and brought in recommendations that resulted in the disappearance of the idea to divide the territories into two areas.

Proposals have been made about naming the new constituencies, calling one Eastern Arctic and the other Western Arctic. I do not think that is good enough, in view of the romantic and historic past of the Northwest Territories. I would suggest that the name to be chosen for the new territory should be retained in the name of the electoral district. It is an Eskimo word—Innusiaq. I think it would be ideal for the purposes contemplated in Bill C-51.

There are many problems in the Northwest Territories but there has been tremendous progress as a result of policies introduced in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Now that, at long last, some dozen years after the proposition was first put before this House, we are achieving the kind of representation that has been urgently required, I hope we will be able to move forward in dealing with some of the problems well known to those in this chamber.

I again congratulate the hon. member for Northwest Territories on his initiative in this regard and trust that the bill will receive speedy passage.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to say to those who have spoken on behalf of other parties that as far as this side is concerned, we would be agreeable to amending the order so as to have the bill considered in committee of the whole and, if possible, given third reading today.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Indian Affairs and Northern Development Committee, I would not agree. If it requires unanimous consent, I will not give that unanimous consent as I feel it should go to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion is not designed to send the bill to that committee; it would send it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to make the same point, that this bill would not go to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. To do that would require unanimous consent, so I hope the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) will give his consent and allow us to conclude the discussions on this bill today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let us give it a try. Does the House give unanimous consent to modifying the order so that the bill will be referred to committee of the whole House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Sharp moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

● (1250)

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill at this time. From the bottom of my heart, and on behalf of the people of the Northwest Territories, I would like to thank each and every hon. member of this House for giving speedy passage to a very important bill for the Northwest Territories and indeed for all of Canada. Thank you very, very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, having in mind the co-operation which has been shown here today, I think there should be the reward of a slightly longer lunch hour. May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this afternoon.

At 12.53 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATION AND PRESCRIBE REGULATIONS FOR LOANS

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-34, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting Bill C-34, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is this the best in the world?

An hon. Member: It is the biggest.

Mr. Epp: It is the only thing in the world.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked, is this the best in the world? Compared to other programs, I would think it is one of the best in the world; and is for the best group of farmers in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize the importance of these proposals. The Farm Credit Corporation has administered this act for about 15 years and has made about 120,000 loans to farmers, totalling about $2¾ billion. That makes the Farm Credit Corporation the biggest single source of mortgage money for Canadian farmers, and it means that this piece of legislation is so important to Canadian farmers that it must be amended periodically to respond to the changing credit needs of the farm community. That is why these amendments are before the House today.

At the outset I must put in a plug for the pay-back record of farmers who have borrrowed under this program. In its 15 years of operation the Farm Credit Corporation has lost less than four cents on every $100 it has lent. I think this is something to brag about: we can brag about the honesty of the farmers who borrowed this money from the country, because they have been working under extreme conditions in order to pay back these loans. It also indicates that perhaps the Farm Credit Corporation was not taking the risks it should; just as the banking institutions do not take the risks that they should. Under the Bank Act they are allowed to charge interest rates that will cover a certain amount of risk, but if you ask them what they lose, the ratio is so small that you wonder if they are taking any risk at all. In this new Farm Credit Act we will be asking the Farm Credit Corporation to take more risks. I therefore ask the support of the House for the five major amendments which I propose.

The first amendment will increase the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from $66 million to $100 million. This is important because the Farm Credit Corporation can borrow 25 times its capital from the federal Department of Finance. This, in effect, will allow the corporation to loan more money than in the past. This change is needed because farmers need more long-term capital today than ever before. Between 1951 and 1971, the total value of farm capital in Canada increased from $9.5 billion to $23.7 billion. The number of farms with annual sales of $5,000 has more than doubled. The number whose sales exceeded $10,000 increased by more than 500 per cent.

The second amendment is a technical one. Right now, the Farm Credit Act demands that the corporation take a first mortgage on land as security for loans. If this bill is passed, the Farm Credit Corporation could make loans on second or subsequent mortgages. It would give the farmers who already have a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation, or from some other loan organization, the option of getting a second and separate loan on a second mortgage. The first would not have to be renegotiated. A farmer who already has a first mortgage against his farm held by a lender other than the Farm Credit Corporation would also be able to borrow additional funds from the corporation on a second mortgage. If the first mortgage has a preferred interest rate, he would not have to change this. This would mean a saving to farmers who are lucky enough to have lower interest rates or better pay-back arrangements on their first mortgages than the Farm Credit Corporation could arrange if the two loans had to be consolidated as has been the case in the past.

Now we come to the most important part of the bill. There are three major amendments that will help young people to get started in farming. Look at the need. Between 1951 and 1971 the percentage of Canada's farmers who were under 35 years of age dropped from 22 per cent to 15 per cent. This country cannot afford to let that trend continue. The demand for food will increase in our country and all over the world, so it is important for us to encourage more people to enter agriculture.

In recent years the Farm Credit Corporation has done a lot to tackle this problem. Between April 1, 1974, and December 31, 1974, 53 per cent of the corporation's loans were made to people under 35 years of age. We hope to make more than 5,000 loans to farmers under 35 years of age during 1975. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that according to letters received in my office and letters received by the Farm Credit Corporation and its district offices, many young people are waiting for this legislation to become effective.

Let us look at the three main features aimed at helping young farmers. Now, young farmers under the age of 35 who show above average management skills can get loans for up to 90 per cent of the productive value of their farm land and chattels. The amendments before the House call for even more, namely, for the making of loans of more than 90 per cent of the productive value of these assets to young farmers who have the drive and ability to make farming pay. In other words, we shall be lending money to young men according to their ability to farm, not according to how much money they have in the bank or in equity. That is the way most people think it should be.

We need this change because the market value of much of our best farm land has been forced to a much higher figure than its productive value. If we were to tie all our loans to the productive value of farm land, I am afraid this legislation would become worthless to many people wanting to buy a farm in the future. With the cost of land and chattels going up, it is also common sense to lift the maximum on our loans. This bill calls for maximum loan to farmers under 35 years to be increased to $150,000.

The bill also calls for a real breakthrough in our federal farm credit program. At present, loans can only be made to those whose main occupation is farming or will be farming once the loan has been made. That is no longer good enough. Many young men are able to get the backing they need to buy farm land, but need time before they can afford the livestock and equipment needed to make the farm generate enough income to cover both their farm bills and living costs. That is why we are proposing a new part to be added to the Farm Credit Act. Under it, we want to give loans to young people on condition that they become full-time farmers within five years. During this five-year period these young farmers will be able to hold regular jobs off the farm; this will help them get their farm operations under way.

As I have said, young farmers will be able to borrow as much as $150,000 under this legislation, plus an additional $50,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for land, equipment, and so on. I think we should pass our stabilization legislation as quickly as possible so that both pieces of legislation can complement one another. If we lend money to young farmers, they must be assured that they will be able to pay back the money they have borrowed for land, equipment, and so on.

Some people in Canada have suggested that the state should own all the land. It would be terrible if that were to happen in Canada, if somebody decided that our farms should operate under such conditions. Our agricultural industry is the most productive industry in Canada; it has increased its productivity by 100 per cent per man in ten years, whereas the average industrial and commercial operation has only increased its productivity by about 40 per cent per man in the last ten years. Our people deserve the right of private ownership. Most Canadians favour ownership of land. Most people who come to Canada from Britain, Europe and other parts of the world come here with the idea of owning land and being free to create something for themselves. To see that I am right all one has to do is examine conditions in countries where the state owns the land. Where the state owns it, there is not much incentive to produce: people are not prone to work so hard if they are not creating something for themselves; there is no incentive to work beyond a set time; there is no desire to run a combine all night if the weather for the next day is not promising. People on state-run farms prefer to stop in the middle of the afternoon. The same happens with the planting of crops. It is people who have pride of ownership, who want to create something, who are willing to work hard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: It is this, as I said earlier, which makes the 6 per cent of our people engaged in agricultural production our most efficient members of society. They have become so productive because there is the incentive to produce and create. Passage of this legislation, as well as of the stabilization legislation, is important if this momentum is to continue. Further, we can only guarantee the consumer that he will have a constant supply of high quality food at reasonable prices by passing legislation which will ensure a strong agricultural base in this country. The agricultural industry is extremely important for one third of our population in one way or another depends on it for jobs.

Any nation which does not have a healthy agricultural industry faces problems; its society is not healthy. So it is most important for us to pass this and other farm legislation as soon as possible. Our future food producers are the young farmers of today. They need this legislation which is important to all members of our society and I urge hon. members to give it to them.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has said in introducing this bill. He said this is one of the most important pieces of legislation on our statute books. I think most members of the House would concede that 20 years ago agriculture in all parts of Canada was in desperate straits. The government which assumed power in 1957 introduced a number of bills which still serve as guides for farm legislation: measures providing for stabilization of prices, for the Farm Credit Corporation, and so on, first introduced by the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) stand as landmarks for all western countries to behold. A social scientist who examined legislation in the western world listed farm programs which we introduced as the most revolutionary type of legislation passed by any country in the western world in the last 70 years. I am glad the minister recognizes this.

We must deal with agriculture on a non-partisan basis. Agriculture is our main force for solving the world's biggest problem, that of feeding the hungry people of the world. This will call for maximum effort in which our agricultural industry must play its part. That means it is our duty to work in a non-partisan way, in the interests of the people of Canada and of all the world, and make sure that agriculture is given the tools and the freedom to finish the job.

The minister's comments about the importance of young farmers deserve to be dealt with at length. I would like to add to the views expressed by the minister by saying that we have not begun, in the western world, to farm the way we will have to farm in the next 20 to 30 years. We have always had unlimited land to develop. We have become very expert in extensive agricultural techniques. By "extensive" I mean extending over large areas of land and farming them with the techniques we have learned in dry land farming. It has been a great evolution in the field of science to see areas of the world that were once considered desert, like Saskatchewan, become among the most productive areas of the world. This great evolution of moving into dry areas, mastering the difficulties there and producing food is one of the great wonders of the modern world, particularly in respect of the people who did it. However, it is not enough. We must turn, now, to techniques of intensive agriculture in order to multiply two and three times the quantities we produced before with the same amount of land, water and air. Young farmers will be essential in this task. I know something of their flexibility, staying power and willingness to take the chances that will be required and, above all, I know the willingness of farmers to work, because I know something of the difficulties that we face in this field.

I am glad the minister recognizes that you cannot deal with a single item like farm credit and think that is the answer to all the problems. It has to be related to other fundamental parts of the program. The first fundamental part is marketing. It is on this most important, first function of agricultural policy that this government is weakest and has been for many years. Second is the question of stability of prices. There will shortly be a bill dealing with this before the House. We look forward to it; it is a move in the right direction.

The third principle is stability of income. We have a bill before us this session which deals with that problem for western farmers but not for eastern farmers. The fourth principle is a modern system of farm credit. That is what we are discussing now. The fifth principle is redevelopment. That is another subject on which I will have a lot to say during the next few months, and on which I think this government is very weak. I ask the minister, with regard to redevelopment, to take back into his department the branches and divisions that have been stolen from agriculture and have downgraded the department over the past ten years. These five principles are the test for measuring gauge that we in this party will apply to all policies produced by the government. If they meet the test of forward motion, the official opposition will support them.

With respect to these Farm Credit Act amendments, I support the legislation. I wish to point out that we in the Diefenbaker administration started this type of modern farm credit program in 1959. However, three years after we passed the legislation it was in need of reform because changes occurred so rapidly. I recall some of the reforms brought in under the regulations whereby farmers were allowed to pay a share of crop payments instead of a fixed interest payment and capital repayment. We discussed the need of Indians on and off reservations having access to this legislation. We discussed the problems of city people, ex-young farmers who found no opportunity on a group farm of several sons moving to the city and wanting to come back but not being able to do so because the legislation insisted that a man had to be a 100 per cent farmer to get any money.

All these things began to be apparent within a few years of our passing this legislation. The tragedy is that it has taken us so long to get to the stage where knowledge of the need has been translated into legislative proposals. In the life of a nation, ten years is not very long. However, in the life of a young person on the farm or in the city whose hopes and ambitions have been frustrated, ten lost years do not refer to the recession or the depression; they refer to how long parliament took to reform this farm credit legislation.

I recall the changes brought in by the minister who succeeded me. His proposal was that we should increase the maximums. However, it was he who broke the original pledge of the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. In return for asking farmers who borrowed from the Farm Credit Corporation at 5 per cent interest when money could be borrowed at lower rates from other sources, we said if interest rates ever went above 5 per cent we would make sure that the farmers of this country could borrow at 5 per cent. It was an averaging or stabilizing device. The minister of agriculture who followed me broke the pledge and let interest rates rise. I will come back to that. Since that time we have had several amendments, mostly dealing with the size of loans, which have been of importance. However, today we have Bill C-34, before us. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we have several speakers on this side who will be making positive and, I hope, constructive proposals that will help improve this bill when we get it to committee.

My particular proposal deals with potential types of loans as opposed to loans on assets. I gathered from the minister's remarks that the criticisms of the Farm Credit Corporation in the past few years have dealt with the question of assets. We work like a group of bankers, on the assumption that before you lend any money you must have assets to equal the amount of the loan. Even though the proportion of assets is now down to 50 per cent or 60 per cent, I simply point out to the House—as I am sure thousands of farmers have pointed out to the government in the past ten years—that a young person, by no stretch of the imagination or in his wildest dreams, can ever accumulate the assets necessary for him to assume a huge loan.

What has actually happened is that the young man who wants to farm has had to ask his parents, uncles or neighbours to pledge their land in the taking out of a loan, even though he is using the farm he is buying as one of the items of collateral. This means we have tied up the assets of the older generation who would like to move on to a little easier life after many years of hard work, but cannot get off their farming operations because their land is tied to backing a loan for a son or neighbour. The improvements in the bill really do not grapple with this problem. They do reduce the asset requirements and allow for second mortgages and other types of collateral. Instead of this, I ask the minister, who has always spoken up for agriculture, now to speak up loudly and clearly on this matter and say that he will see to it—he can do this without amending the act but through the regulations—that loans will be granted to young people without assets; that loans will be granted on the basis of a young man's ability to farm, to produce a good plan, to demonstrate that he knows how to succeed.

Is this idea so revolutionary? In 1934 the United States Congress during the Roosevelt period put such legislation on its books and it is still there. Any private lending agency in the United States is empowered to lend to any young farmer without assets the amount the lending agency feels fit for the type of operation contemplated. The only limitation placed on the application of that legislation is this: the young man has to bring in signatures of ten neighbouring farmers who know him and will vouch for his integrity and ability. They are supposed to put a nominal sum on the line as a guarantee of good faith when signing that document. I doubt whether in the last 25 years a United States bank or other financial agency has ever asked an individual to forfeit that deposit. When any young man can get ten farmers behind him, he is not very likely to fail: they do not do this to help a neighbouring lad unless they intend to ensure that he makes a success of what he is doing.

Here is another example. In the period between 1948 and 1959 the Ontario government had the young farmers loan act on its books, and even though the loans were not large they were granted mainly on the basis of the recommendation of neighbours of the applicant. I have not looked at that legislation for years, but my recollection is that in the 11 years of the operation, losses amounted to about $2,000. Millions of dollars were lent, yet there was only this minuscule loss. So these are not new ideas.

A third precedent was in 1958 when Canadian money was given to a foreign government, the government of Malaysia, for clearing the jungles for the farmers of that country as a means of preventing the infiltration of communists from the north. On selected ten-acre plots, bred rubber trees were planted on about seven acres and a variety of other plants on the remainder. Canadian money provided these Malaysian farmers with a monthly sum on which to keep their families alive until the rubber trees began to procedure seven years later. When these men obtained a cash flow equal to the cost of their farming operations, equal to the cost of looking after their families, the rest of their income was considered net income and the Canadian government asked for 15 per cent in return payment of the loan. That debt is now paid. Isn't it about time we did the same sort of thing for young Canadians?

I could go on to give other examples. However, I hope my proposal is acceptable to the minister. Let us see whether we can get away from all this red tape, tying up acreages all around the young people we are trying to help. Free the older generation to do as they like with their own farms. This is a matter which is on my conscience. I tried to make this change when I was minister of agriculture in 1962. I put it before the advisory committee of the Farm Credit Corporation on two occasions, but on both occasions it was turned down. I have regretted ever since that I did not use the power the people had given me to push it through: we could have had the legislation in place for the last 13 years. I urge the minister not to carry the load on his back that I have carried through my failure to get this help to our young people. I realize there have to be advisory committees. But they are only advisory committees; they are not our masters. The electors of this country are the people to whom we are responsible.

A similar thing happened to the minister of agriculture of Ontario. He proposed a scheme under which young farmers could go into the livestock business provided they stuck with it for seven years, at the end of which he would forgive them a large protion of the capital debt. His advisory board turned him down. I am saying to the minister, "Thirteen years ago I had my opportunity and I tried to push this proposal forward. I have carried this on my back for 13 years, and I hope you do not have to do the same thing."

It is about time we moved ahead in this field of loans and got away from the worshipping of assets. Other institutions, other interest groups have done so. The Bank of America, in California, developed its whole banking operations on the concept of lending money on the basis of cash flow, the earning power of the people to whom it was lending money. I would like to see this done for the young people in Canada who want to farm. If this was important 13 years ago when the average farm loan was around $10,000, it is even more important today when the average farm loan is around $45,000 with a ceiling of $150,000. It is not the amount of the loan which kills a borrower; it is the interest he has to pay because of high rates tied to the lending rate of the government with its inflationary ways of doing things. The effect is that over a 30-year period a young farmer will pay $3 in interest over and above the $1 he has borrowed; in other words, if he borrows $100,000 he knows he will have to pay $300,000 in addition by way of interest, under the present set-up.

I do not say farm productivity will not be able to afford this in the future, but it means that 75 per cent of a man's effort goes into payment of interest and only 25 per cent into repayment of money borrowed. The same thing applies to a person buying a home. The price of a home in Toronto now is $57,000. A person buying it will have to pay another $150,000 in interest. This is the logic of the capital-intensive economy in which we live.

I hope the minister is sincere when he tells us we have to support young farmers. I do not care whether the young man comes from a farm or from a city. With the tremendous emphasis today on knowledge of business techniques, some of our best farmers are coming from the cities. In the past we have discriminated against these people on the ground that they were city people, and very often they could get no help at all. This bill takes a big step forward. A young man may, if he wishes, continue to work in the city, but if it is understood that he intends to become a full-time farmer, money can still be lent to him. As I say, that is a big step forward. I hope we can tie it in with the proposal I have just made and remove this silly asset requirement. The asset requirement makes it impossible for nine out of ten young men to get a farm today; only one in ten has an uncle or a father on a farm.

Sitting in the gallery at the present time is a farmer with three sons who has already tied up his holdings to get two sons started. He has a third son now ready, but the farmer is still young and he wants to keep on farming. At the same time he is helping a neighbour lad. I know he is a young farmer because he is the same age as I am, but he has three sons and a neighbour boy who are ready. All his assets are tied up for all the years the sons will take to pay off the debts. So I plead not only for the sons but for the old man too.

Secondly, I suggest that besides the concept of potential lending, which has a record of little or no losses, we should look for a new method of payment. My second proposal is that if a farmer comes into a plan, particularly a livestock plan which means a five-year to seven-year pay-out period before he can get going, during that period we should not take any repayments from him. Then when he does get a cash flow, the first charge on that cash flow should be the cost of operation and an agreed amount for his living. The balance will be considered net.

I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and those gnomes who advise him will argue very strenuously against this type of proposal, but I also know that it is actuarially sound. If you allowed the farmer his cost of operation and family living, the government would get more money back at a faster rate if it took 15 per cent of the net rather than a 6 per cent interest rate. With a loan level of 8 per cent, perhaps it would have to be split 18, 19 or 20 per cent to the 82 to 80 per cent to get your money back; but there would be peace of mind for the young man who borrowed this huge sum of money. He would have the knowledge that his family would be looked after, that his operation operating cost would be looked after, and when he gets a cash flow he would not object to paying 15 to 18 per cent of his profit to the Farm Credit Corporation which lent him the money. This figure would have to be projected on a percentage basis, a calculation the Farm Credit Corporation is well qualified to make.

This new type of repayment proposal would mean that during a period of two or three bad years, such as the livestock producers are now experiencing, they would not lose their shirts or their farms. When crops and returns are exceptionally good, as they were two or three years ago in the livestock industry, a return of 15 to 18 per cent of the net to the government would be much greater than it would with a 6 to 7 per cent interest rate. As I say, this has been done in Malaysia and it can be done here. It would be up to the minister to fight it out with the Department of Finance to see whether it could be done.

We are talking here, admittedly, about young people. How many will there be? I have looked over the tables but I do not think the number of young people demanding these loans at the beginning will be more than 2,000 or 3,000, with perhaps an additional 1,000 a year from then on in, though I may be wrong about that. I suggest the Minister of Finance would be better off to take 15 per cent or 18 per cent of the net profit, though the exact percentage would of course have to be agreed upon. I would particularly recommend this proposal for those who come off reservations or farm on Indian reservations. In my district a farmer and his associates saved for ten years while on an Indian reservation. Finally they saved $10,000 and in 1974 received a very large loan; Indian Affairs was very generous to them. However, the interest rate and a fixed rate of return in the livestock business could break this man's and his wife's heart over the next two or three years. There are five or six other families on the same reservation fighting now to save a few dollars and their life's dream could also be destroyed. What I am describing in my own constituency I am sure could be described by other members with Indians in their areas.

I think the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), with all the willingness in his department to help if they only knew how, would be sympathetic to some kind of repayment scheme based on a share of the profit. I ask them not to worry about incentive. If you give a guy 80 to 85 per cent of the profit, he will work. I suggest these proposals are worthy of consideration and I hope they will be matched by other proposals from our side of the House. I conclude my remarks by saying that Bill C-34 is a good bill. The amendments in it are good amendments. All I ask is that in the committee the minister sit down on a non-partisan basis and try to make it a heck of a lot better.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be such a congenial atmosphere this afternoon that it almost seems like a love-in. Certainly a partisan politician would almost hate to participate in the debate. First of all, I must say that I am very happy to note that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was his usual very modest and humble self when he introduced the bill. Certainly he spoke in a sincere and low-key manner. At the outset I want to say that I and those of my party who are here endorse the bill before us.

An hon. Member: Where are all the others?

Mr. Nystrom: Stanley and I are united on this point. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, we can deal with this bill very quickly. We support the amendments, particularly those relating to additional loans that are now being made to young people. They are worth while and they are, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said, long overdue. A debate like this gives us an opportunity to stress once again to all members of the House, particularly those from rural Canada, that we have an obligation to say to those from urban Canada that it is very important to build a strong agricultural industry; particularly in a country such as ours where agriculture is the economic base.

Canada is one of the few countries of the world that produces a surplus of food, and it should be our moral obligation to produce as much food as we can. This is our obligation to mankind, particularly at a time when so many people in the world are dying from lack of food. We see expanding populations in all nations of the world and diminishing agricultural producing areas due to the madness with which mankind plans cities today by putting concrete over good agricultural land and topsoil. Thus, this country and the parliamentarians in this House are obligated to make the number one priority in this country the maximization of food production, not only for the people of Canada but for all mankind.

I urge upon the government that the only way it can do this is by providing farmers with a stable economy and price guarantees so they will know in the spring what they are going to get in the fall. The farmer, like anyone else in our society, is faced with many things he cannot determine. He is faced, first of all, with world climatic conditions; he cannot determine rainfalls and he cannot determine frosts; he cannot determine what conditions will be in China, the Soviet Union or elsewhere. He cannot control international markets. Because of these uncertain and unknown factors, the farmer needs from the Government of Canada and the provincial governments as many guarantees as they can possibly muster. These guarantees must be of the following order. There must be, first, a price guarantee for his produce. That is a basic necessity. Second, and this is where I disagree with members of the Conservative Party particularly, there must be very strong marketing boards so the farmer has some clout in the marketplace. The marketing board should be for the farmer what the trade union is for the worker, what the professional association is for the lawyer and the doctor, what the real estate association is for the real estate agent, and so on. The farmer needs that type of clout in the marketplace and he needs that type of vehicle to enable him to bargain for the best justifiable future. He does not have that advantage in the market structure of today.

If the farmer is guaranteed those things, he will produce food. If he produces all the food possible, Canada can make a real contribution for the hungry people of the world. In the past we have been faced with the disgrace of food surpluses in this country. It was scandalous a few years ago when the government paid farmers not to grow wheat. I think most members of this House now realize that was a mistake. Instead of putting money into growing wheat, the funds should have been put into storage facilities in this country and into developing programs to help farmers diversify into other areas of food production. I think it was a tremendous mistake to pay farmers not to grow wheat.

Last fall we experienced another surplus. That was the CEMA surplus of eggs which resulted in great controversy. We would not have had a surplus of eggs in this country if there had been proper storage facilities and a proper delivery system in order to channel the eggs to countries where they were needed. We could have powdered and processed those eggs for storage and provided them as part of our foreign aid program to countries which needed them. We can use all the surpluses of food we can produce in this country, through foreign aid, by establishing a world food bank, a Canadian food bank or what have you, and feeding the starving people of the world. That should be our number one priority. When it comes to food production, we must maximize that production in this country for the sake not just of the agricultural economy but for all people in the world.

The bill before us contains a number of important amendments which, as I have said, all of us are willing to support and endorse wholeheartedly. We in this party have been suggesting for years that we should make credit available at lower interest rates, easier terms and fewer restrictions for our young farmers. If one looks around the farming economies, including my own riding, he will find that the farmers' average age is 57. What does that say about farming today? I am sure the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and members from other cities in this country realize that when the average age of the workers is in the area of 57, something must be wrong with industry, in terms of planning.

If this trend continues in agriculture, for instance, we will have fewer farms and farmers. If that happens, we will have fewer small, rural communities, towns and villages and it will destroy the whole fabric of this lifestyle. That destruction will occur even if there is affluence in some farming areas because of the high price of wheat, but when that happens there will be an economic change. What will happen then is that the large farms will become larger because the owners or the farm corporations will buy out the small farms, put in bigger equipment and machinery and continue to expand their operations. That will continue unless we adopt programs which take chances on young farmers, giving them more money—hopefully, interest free. We must give them all the encouragement we can in order that they can firmly establish themselves in the farm business.

If I can get the minister's ear for one minute, I should like to tell him that the one thing he should be very concerned about is trying to get the Farm Credit Corporation and other branches of his department working in that way to improve the situation in practical terms. The land bank development program and the storage program in Saskatchewan are good examples of this. We must maximize co-operation between the provincial governments and the federal government. These programs in Saskatchewan are working very well, but they would work even better if we had more co-operation from Ottawa. I think the people of Saskatchewan will endorse these programs pretty heavily this June or July, whenever the election is held in that province, and I believe the minister is very much aware of that.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the Minister of Agriculture referred earlier to the great contributions the various parties have made to agriculture and the farming economy. I think it goes without saying that this party has always been concerned about the welfare of the farmer. In fact this party was, basically, born among the farmers and the urban workers on the prairies. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the late Mr. Coldwell and others of our party have represented farming constituencies and were elected basically because the farmers of this country wanted a change and a new political régime. They wanted some clout in the marketplace, some bargaining power. Our party fully realizes that if we are to have a sound national economy we must fulfil our obligations in respect of world humanitarian values, and the farming economy is where we must start.

I hope this bill passes second reading today, is moved expeditiously through committee and third reading stages and becomes law as quickly as possible so that the farmers of this country can enjoy the benefits of these amendments.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): After the statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) referring to possible improvements in farm credit, I realize this is needed in the present system and I shall certainly support the legislation, which is capable of improving the farmer's state of affairs.

He mentioned our young farmers, and I commend him for that. I also appreciated his reference to collective farming in certain European countries and all the drawbacks involved in such a system. He gets there my wholehearted approval. However, I should be very much pleased if we could have here in Canada a system where farmers would get some return from their farming operation without having to go into debt all the time. That is the current situation.

I realize that under present conditions loans are needed because the system is inherently stupid. But nonetheless, farming, as any other operation, should be organized in such a way that the operator could get his living out of it. How come it was found some 40 years ago that families of 12 children could live on the land but nowadays they cannot make ends meet with reduced families? All the problems they have come from somewhere. I find amazing we do not stop long enough to analyze that situation.

Credit is vital to many of our good operators, and even more so to the average farmer. I will give an example of how the Farm Credit Corporation's attitude can influence rural development in one area. One appraising criterium that biases the whole long term credit philosophy is the market value. The Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Credit Board are similar agencies. Being in essence the only lenders, it may be concluded that they determine the market value of farms. If they do not lend, or not enough, clearly the selling price will be directly influenced by the amounts made available to borrowers. We are in a vicious circle. The officials will cynically say at times: "There is no buyer." Indeed, they are the only buyers, because no other business can compete with a Crown corporation funded with public grants. I wonder sometimes whether for the sake of profit we are not altering the objectives sought by the sponsors of this bill. Are the welfare measures which are mostly financed by the federal government not used to counterbalance the irresponsibility of some departments, such as the Department of Agriculture, and more specifically the Farm Credit Corporation?

When will the various branches of the federal government and the Crown corporations consider themselves as part of a single enterprise serving all Canadian citizens? Then, those mighty brains who work in complete isolation like independent private concerns and insist above all on profitability and efficiency would make the federal administrative machinery more profitable and efficient, and especially more acceptable to all Canadians.

Since now we see how rural life can avoid the miseries of urban life, the on-going crises between capital and work, the moral downfall of the capitalistic economy, we are still reluctant to grant the farming community full social and economic equality and allow them to organize their own environment and institutions.

Consequently, since the industrial organization of agriculture inevitably results in the disappearance of thousands of family farming operations at a time we should be filling the country with free and happy people, Montreal residents come down to settle in Kamouraska. Five families left the city to settle in Kamouraska in a rural environment. If I took a little time to relate the history of Kamouraska you would see that for a little over 50 years certain facts have been reminding us of circumstances which surrounded the establishment of the experimental farm in Ste-Anne-de-la-Pocatière. I could quote debates in this House relating that the then federal member for Kamouraska participated in the establishment of the experimental farm in Ste-Anne-de-la-Pocatière. Those are facts and, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, what is sad about all that is that farmers contributed to enlarging rural areas. I am talking about Kamouraska but that is also taking place in the whole province of Quebec, at least in the areas I had an opportunity to visit in Canada. Farmers managed 50 years ago with quite ordinary means to raise their families on lands of 100 acres or even sometimes 30 acres. Today those same families can no longer live without sinking deeply into debt. We must expand, we need pools to borrow, to organize the whole farming apparatus because very expensive machinery is required.

I am not against evolution, I take part in it, at least I try, and I keep up with the times. I try to follow the current evolution. But we must face facts as they are, considering the situation.

At this point in time, we should be populating our rural areas with free and happy citizens, to cultivate the soil instead of exploiting it, because there is a difference between the two. We should be taking care of the small and average units, according to their strength and the requirements of modern work and play. Instead, we are advocating solutions adapted to the industrial world, that is, increasingly cumbersome operations, which are economically delicate and humanly crushing.

Could it be that simply to decrease the democratic freedom and strength, the first for money and comfort of a class of society far too long deprived of them is being exploited? But what will be the ultimate results of such a policy on rural citizens and society as a whole?

One cannot go into debt indefinitely. It is unthinkable that a just society should stem from general indebtedness. To my mind, that is just common sense.

At a time when agriculture as a whole seems terribly complicated, where the answers given by the technocrats and politicians to rural problems seem increasingly remote from the needs and aspirations of a growing part of the population, might it not be advisable to come back to the basic principles of the social order our institutions strive to maintain, if only in an attempt to see whether the changes brought about through "a shower of laws" may not be contrary to the philosophy that has guided the organization of our rural society?

A society cannot be changed overnight. As any living organism, it can adapt itself to new conditions but gradually. To go too fast would threaten the organism with destruction from stress. In politics, contrary to what happens in the biological world, antibiotics cannot be used to cure ills quickly. That is why the passing of legislation must be approached with caution.

Social order is the result of thousands of painful situations experienced by mankind. Through the ages man clung to a certain number of principles. They enabled him to survive, guide his actions and bequeath a moral code to his descendants.

Today as yesterday, bread, science and religion are the three sources of human wisdom. Little by little man came to see himself as sociable, that is dependent upon others to fulfill his needs from birth to death. He thought necessary and best for him that individuals formed groups and took the responsibility of meeting various needs. Social classes defined themselves more or less successfully, with more or less control over the political power having become ever more necessary.

In this great scheme, farmers have always been the losers, in spite of the important part they were playing. As providers of physical necessities, isolated in their fields, farmers had to stay away from the market place where social and political deals are made and where the complex relations within the governing classes are established.

I remember the good old days of my youth in Kamouraska. We had politicians who apparently were high quality speakers. There is a sentence, among others, which still sounds fresh in my memory. A speaker was trying to win voters over to his side during a political meeting. Because these voters were farmers, he had chosen his words accordingly. Here is this sentence: "What profession is as noble as that of the farmer who, in the shadow of the parochial church steeple, ploughes a straight furrow to feed his family and mankind as well."

Such were the sentences used by Grit or Tory politicians in Kamouraska over 40 or 50 years ago. The man who uttered it was elected and was eventually appointed minister. Later, they came to realize the adverse effects of the current system: a whole population in debt. Try and prove me wrong!

The farming community shouldered more than its share of the nonsense of privileged classes, by letting them do sometimes the greatest stupidities. That is probably why the tyrants, who were aware of the farmers' restrained patience, have always attempted to maintain them in slavery. Without the latter's docility, the laziness and social vices of the groups in power would have not been possible. Let us mention incidentally that things have hardly changed, but for the refinement of methods and language to achieve the same purposes.

It is worth noting that farmers have never been able to get from society the proper price for their work. It is true. Let us just look at the current fight in all provinces in an attempt to establish a reasonable price, a reasonable salary for the land worker.

A society can be considered free when its citizens can assume by themselves the responsibilities deriving from their lives, the lives of their families, from their paying taxes, and we know there are lots of those! They must assume the cost of the institutions necessary for the maintenance of their culture, their own social and economic progress, but without deeply sinking into debt.

One only has to look at what is going on to see a true reflection of our society: deserted farms, migration to the cities, which do not always give people the security they wanted.

One need not be surprised then that such a society finds it difficult to provide sound legislation made for free people but only offers to farmers as well as to other citizens the limitations of its industry and the instability of its liberal economy.

More serious still, it no longer provides farmers with the instrument of corporations, which encouraged responsibility and initiative, but with unions which can unfortunately be dominated and put to silence more easily because they invariably challenge an order they did not contribute to build.

We remember what happened last fall. I have here copies of newspaper clippings showing farmers killing animals and hanging them along the national highway. I say this myself. Cattle was killed by the hundred! They somehow repeated here what was done in the United States. Is this a normal situation? People complain, and it is true that a part of mankind is starving, and here we bury hundreds of animals, fattened calves that are ready for the market and that are destroyed. This happens here in Canada, in our system based on debt, which people do not want to change. We are going to suffer the consequences of that system, because it can certainly not bring about a just society. Again, we cannot found a just society on debt.

In the present circumstances, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, and with such a stupid system, we have to try to find the means to allow the farmers, the young people who want to go into farming—and I know there are some—to get the money required to purchase a property, develop it, put it in debt if they want. Everyone is in debt in our upside down system. This is not the answer.

In such a stupid system, we sometimes have to support legislation which can bring a bit of help and some temporary relief. This is not the answer. Can anyone think: My problem is solved because I am in debt. Come on! When you are in trouble and that a loan comes in handy, it might prove helpful, but does it solve the problem?

I shall conclude my remarks since I believe that I have said all that I wanted to say this afternoon about this bill. In passing, I would like to tell the minister that he can make all the necessary amendments to the bill to improve it, and particularly to avoid this famous bureaucracy and red tape. He should improve the bill so that the farmer who needs a loan may obtain it and so that the young man who wants to get into farming does not have to wait for months and go through a lot of red tape. Now, you have to wait indefinitely before obtaining a loan.

I would like the procedures to be more flexible and I would like this bill, that I will support even though I am against running into debt, to be flexible enough to benefit the greatest possible number of Canadian farmers.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure, and with hope for the future of young farmers and of agriculture that I rise to take part in this debate. I can certainly give my whole-hearted support to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who has presented this bill, to amend the Farm Credit Act, in order that long term mortgage credit may be made available to farmers, particularly young farmers. It is important that young people be given the opportunity to enter agriculture, and indeed we must try to divert some from other fields of endeavour that they may have chosen as their life's work.

Many pages have been written in the press, and the volumes of Hansard have recorded the words spoken in this House about the outstanding ability of the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Gillies: Usually by himself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Especially by him.

Mr. Epp: Only by him.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce): Of course there have been some words to the contrary, but they have been shown to be weak and insipid when tested against the measures brought forward by the minister and put into practice by the government. Politics aside, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that a man's true worth is explained and upheld by his accomplishments. If the minister continues to bring in legislation such as the bill before us today and the Farm Stabilization Act, which attempt to rectify serious problems in agriculture, then the future of that industry and the future of this country are in good hands.

We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that the future of this country depends on the stability of the people engaged in agriculture. We can make all manner of brave and gallant statements about petroleum requirements and the problems of people in that industry, of the people who build our cars and who run our trains but, when it comes down to it, unless we have a stable agricultural industry all else is meaningless.

People in this country and indeed throughout the world can do without many things now regarded as necessities. We do not all need an automobile or two television sets—but we all have to eat. I think the best thing that we, as a nation, can do to help world conditions is to ensure that our agricultural industry remains stable. It is an industry which should be capable of meeting the food requirements of the world population.

People have talked about what causes wars. We have seen wars, develop in the past. Basically, wars have been brought on because nations have been unable to feed their people. If we are to play an auspicious part in preventing war and hate between nation and nation, we must look to the future and encourage our young people to take up the business of agriculture. Let us remember that, no matter what we say or do, agriculture is the backbone of our national foundation.

We can get along without many so-called amenities, but we cannot get along without our young people, who are basic to our well-being. Members representing the rural ridings, whether in the east or the west, in British Columbia or the Maritimes, know that young people are leaving the land and going to the cities, often for education. I know this holds true in the ridings of Perth-Wilmot, Huron, Dufferin-Grey-Simcoe-Waterloo, and many others; young people are leaving the ridings and seeking an education in the cities. We must reverse the present trend. We must induce these young people, once they have obtained the education they so richly deserve, to return to the land and take up food production.

This bill represents an important step forward in encouraging young people to take up the production of food, for the benefit not only of this country but of all the world. I have talked to the Minister of Agriculture about this bill, and I believe him when he says that this is one of the best pieces of legislation he has ever presented to this House because it will enable him to induce young people to take up farming. The minister can say to them, "Your country needs you as farmers. You can provide a service which will be of benefit to your country and to the world. This legislation, together with the farm stabilization bill, will assure you of a place in our country's future."

An hon. member participating in this debate said that the average age of farmers in his constituency is 57 years. In some constituencies the average age is even higher. We are fast approaching the time when many of our farmers will want to retire, as they deserve to do. They have worked long and hard. Our farmers are unlike any other people because they do not work by the clock; they do not even work by the sun. They work as long as necessary, doing what must be done in fields and barns. We can now say, "You have the right to retire because young people will enter farming." They can take up the business of agriculture without dragging their fathers, grandfathers and uncles into debt with them. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) touched on this point.

That part of the bill which will allow prospective farmers to work in the labour force for five years and then take up full-time farming is especially deserving of praise.

Most members of this House come from some type of farm background, even though many of them do not represent rural ridings. Many come from a stable, farm-oriented background, including the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis), and the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) who comes from my area of the country, and is one of our most honoured citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: I hope the record shows the applause.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce): If the Hansard reporters are doing their job, I am sure it will.

[Mr. Douglas (Bruce).]

This bill will also enable the minister to do certain other things. For instance, it will be possible to review mortgage rates from time to time, and to set mortgage rates at levels with which young people can live.

The new chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, whose appointment was announced some time ago, is a man of great competence and far-reaching ideas. He considers the farm credit legislation as being most important in ensuring that young people who go on the land have an opportunity to obtain what should rightly be theirs. This gentleman has been involved with many administrations, including that of the present federal government, and has performed all kinds of services.

I point out, in closing, that the Farm Credit Corporation has a strong champion in the person of Brigadier Rutherford, who was one of the first to espouse the concept of farm credit legislation and who said recently that the minister's proposals are a step in the right direction, a step we sorely need. I urge all members to consider this legislation as representing an important step forward for the future of Canada, Canadians, and agriculture, and to give it their wholehearted support.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) visited my riding some weeks ago he spoke of this legislation and hoped the opposition would not delay its passage. I have waited for it patiently and am glad that we can debate it today. The people of my riding enjoyed his visit, as did I.

As I have been personally involved in a farm operation, I can say with truth that farming requires management skills and capital. But, as well, many unknowns and variables enter into agriculture, and young farmers must be willing to allow for these variables. Fortunately the Farm Credit Corporation legislation provides for flexibility. This is necessary, as farm input costs are increasing rapidly.

People often comment on western farmers receiving, as they say, a bonanza of hundreds of millions of dollars for sales. That money is not really a bonanza, as the farmer has to pay ever increasing costs in order to grow his crops. Every farmer knows this is so.

Remember, as well, that when a young man takes up farming he must often live in an isolated area of the country where he will not have access to recreational amenities such as are available to people living in urban areas.

All these things are faced by a young man as he ponders going to the Farm Credit Corporation to get a loan. This is why I believe the government has to provide some incentives to young farmers getting into agriculture, in the same way it is providing incentives to industry. It is only right for the government to increase the limits for young farmers. However, it must also be concerned about the ability of the farmer to repay a loan.

I support the proposals put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). One proposal was to allow a young farmer to back his loan on the basis of the potential production of his land. He could defer payment in a bad year and make a payment in a bumper crop year. It is important that a young farmer getting into agriculture should know that in a bad year he will not lose his farm and the amount of work he put into it.

Young people getting into agriculture today are burdened by debt. The initial financial outlay for land and machinery is increasing rapidly. The Farm Credit Corporation must realize that land around urban areas is generally the best agricultural land in Canada. However, because of the real estate value of the land the cost is escalating at a very rapid rate.

The Farm Credit Corporation allows loans on the assessed or appraised value of the land. However, that is not adequate. There are many examples of this in my riding. The assessed or appraised value of the land might be as low as $2,000 or $3,000 per quarter, but the land is selling in the real estate market for as high as $20,000 a quarter.

In and around the city of Edmonton the appraised value of agricultural land is $35,000, but the real estate value is upwards of $100,000. The land is productive. That is why I feel that the corporation must look at the potential productive value of the land. If 70 bushels of barley per acre have been grown for a number of years, that should be the base on which loans are made. It is not adequate to operate on the appraised value of the land.

Many young farmers come to me as their member of parliament. They complain that once the Farm Credit Corporation looks at what they propose to pay for land, it says it is too high and turns down any loans. If the loans were made on the potential productive value of the land it would be more fair and reasonable for young farmers trying to get into agriculture.

Some weeks ago I presented a private member's motion. I am sure the minister is familiar with it. I made four proposals. I do not intend to go into them in detail now. One proposal was with regard to deferred interest payments during the initial period. This is important to a young man going into agriculture. If in the first two, three or even five years he can pay back a certain amount of his principal without any interest, it will be reduced dramatically. He could then pick up the deferred amount of interest.

In the first few years a young farmer requires a substantial capital outlay. He may not have assessed all the input costs that come forward in the first few years of farming. If his interest were deferred he could put his profits toward the principal, and after a number of years start paying the interest. That would be a great incentive to a young man looking at such a large outlay of capital.

The minister is proposing that the amount of a loan to a farmer be increased to $150,000. In many cases this may be adequate. However, many people in agriculture today look at it as an industry. In many cases an economically viable unit costs more than $150,000. I will give an example.

A farmer and his two sons in my constituency are prepared to go into a dairy operation. The operation, including cattle, barns, silos and land, will cost somewhere around $400,000. However, Farm Credit will only allow them the maximum $150,000 because, no matter how many people want to operate that farm, it is still considered as a single unit. In situation like this the minister should allow each man to borrow the maximum. In this case, which involves three men, they should each be permitted to borrow the maximum $150,000. This would permit them to have an economically viable unit which would provide an income for all three. They would not have to go to other lending institutions which often charge higher interest rates than the Farm Credit Corporation.

I wish to make another positive proposal with regard to Farm Credit. The provinces have been filling the gap where Farm Credit leaves off. If a young man is outside the regulations of the Carm Credit Corporation, he has no alternative but to go to the province and make a loan from the Agricultural Development Corporation, or something similar. What is good about the provincial farm programs is that they have set up appeal boards. These boards are made up of local farmers and can consider each case individually.

The Farm Credit Corporation should take a long, hard look at setting up what I would call zone appeal boards. Respected farmers who have long established farms could sit on the regional board which would consider young farmers on the basis of their potential. They would have the final say as to whether a man would be approved for farm credit. This has worked well in a number of provinces. Perhaps the Farm Credit Corporation could work in conjunction with the provincial schemes.

Another proposal often put forward by members on this side is that a farmer who has attended college and meets some requirements, such as increased efficiency or increased yield, should be given a reduction in interest for principal. It would be an incentive to young men entering agriculture to attend Manpower courses in order to increase their management ability and efficiency.

It is also necessary to open-end mortgages. Many farmers going into agriculture for the first time have to start with a small basic unit. As they progress they find it is in their best interest to increase the amount of land or livestock on their farm. However, because Farm Credit is a closed mortgage, they have to pay lawyers' fees and again go through all the red tape that was necessary for the first mortgage. Therefore, open-end mortgages would be a saving for farmers.

Another proposal is the setting of a definite maximum interest rate, as proposed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, so that when a farmer looks at his loan he will know the interest rate will be a maximum of 6 or 7 per cent; it will never rise above that figure and he will never have to pay more, because if the interest rate goes down he would only be called upon to pay the lower rate.

We should take a hard look at these proposals in committee. In closing, may I say I believe this to be a good bill, one for which we have been waiting for a long time. I hope we can make it a still better one.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): I, too, join with my colleagues in welcoming this particular piece of legislation. It is something we have been hoping for all during the twenty-ninth Parliament and through the thirtieth Parliament.

I do want to express one very real concern to the minister. It is my opinion that the legislation may be too late for this crop year. I do not wish to be pessimistic, but it appears to me, in practical terms, that by the time the legislation is in place it is doubtful it will have the impact I know the minister wants it to have, or indeed the impact those of us who are speaking to the bill want it to have in the 1975 crop year.

I know the minister is anxious to have the legislation proceed through the House as expeditiously as possible and passed on to the committee. But I know, too, Madam Speaker, that it is unreasonable to expect this. Having waited in excess of two and a half years for this particular legislation, and having sat all through the twenty-ninth Parliament with only one agricultural bill before us, we sympathize with the minister over the fact that agricultural policies are on the bottom rung of the priority list of the cabinet. We will do everything we can to assist the minister to improve that priority.

It would be interesting to attempt to deal with some of the detail of the bill, but I simply suggest to the minister that second reading is not the time at which to do it. I hope that in committee we will be prepared to discuss not just the technical aspects of the bill but such things as legal fees, a problem Farm Credit has ignored for far too long, open-end mortgaging, as has just been mentioned, refinancing, the regulations and guidelines Farm Credit representatives are operating under, valuation, and so on.

With respect to the maximum amounts of $100,000 and $150,000 as the case may be, I was interested to see in the last report of the Farm Credit Corporation that while the size of the average loan had increased substantially in the last fiscal year, we were still operating with average loans of less than $45,000. I have to ask myself, as I am sure the minister does, whether farmers want a loan of the maximum amount in the face of the intolerable burden of interest.

In other words, will more benefit be given to the larger farmer while the smaller farmer is continually facing more discouragement? This has certainly been the situation with respect to some farm policies, and indeed some Farm Credit policies. I hope that the minister and those of us in committee will have a long, hard look at this aspect because it seems to me that a large farm operation can take greater advantage of the maximum loans by spreading the burden over a much wider operation than its neighbour who is operating a small family farm.

The particular point I wish to make with some emphasis—and I will try to be as brief as possible—has to do with the price of land which has been mentioned in the report of last year from the Farm Credit Corporation. The president pointed out that farm land prices rose more in the year ending June, 1973, than they had in any previous year since records were kept, starting in 1910. He pointed out that in that year ended June 1973, farm prices had increased 17 per cent compared to an increase of 2 per cent in the previous year. The increases ranged from 21 per cent for Ontario to 13 per cent for Alberta.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

I don't think it takes any kind of a genius to see why they rose. Larger farms were obviously getting bigger which increased the demand for agricultural land. There was another very disturbing demand for land for non-agricultural use by the non-agricultural buyer—the pressures on city dwellers were such as to encourage them to move into rural areas. There was the obvious demand by land speculators. Then again, I think likely the largest demand with which we have to come to grips is the purchase of farm land by individuals who are not speculating but merely investing as the best possible hedge against inflation.

Finally, increasing the demand for agricultural land have been the actions of government itself. I think that all of us realize that Pickering is a prime example because so many farmers from the Pickering area—good farmers—have moved into my area and I am sure into the area of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Douglas), where they have bought land at prices which, in the opinion of our farmers, were simply not competitive. They have been able to do so because the Pickering farmers had the funds with which to purchase the land at those inflated prices. While I am reluctant, indeed almost afraid to quote Mrs. Plumptre to the minister, I thought the statement she made about the loss of farmland at Pickering was one which the minister and I could both regard with sympathy.

With respect to the supply of land I would also point out to the minister that according to some experts—and I have heard all kinds of figures as I am sure he has—we are losing the prime land of southwestern Ontario due to the expansion of urban areas at the rate of 28 acres per hour.

I simply have to ask myself and the minister: what will this bill do? In isolation it is a good bill. In terms of farm credit it is a good bill. But in the larger context of land use and total farm quantity I have some very serious reservations. There are those who say to me, and I am sure they have said the same thing to the minister, that higher ceilings on Farm Credit Corporation mortgages are in themselves inflationary in their effect on farm land prices. I do not think these statements come from irresponsible people or from people who have not studied the problem. If we increase the limit of a Farm Credit loan I think we should ask ourselves very seriously: is this, in itself, likely to be a factor in increasing the price per acre of our farm areas, particularly in southwestern Ontario? I am sorry I cannot suggest to the minister what the answer to these questions is, but in the larger context of the farm economy that it is something with which we have to come to grips.

I was very impressed, I believe it was in the twenty-ninth Parliament, to see either in the Speech from the Throne or in the budget speech, a whole paragraph devoted to the government's concern regarding land use. It went on to say that there must be consultation with the provinces. What disturbs me, is that since that time we have not heard one word about that particular problem in the federal context, and I do not think that we can solve a problem simply by increasing farm credit limits when we have that tremendous albatross of increased demand, lower supply and speculation around our necks. Until we get to grips with the larger problem the minister will be coming back to this House repeatedly with bills such as this simply to catch up with events.

I greatly welcome this provision for younger farmers. I think it is absolutely necessary. But I suggest to the minister in all seriousness that in large part this is simply a catch-up bill. If we continue with 17 per cent as the rate of inflation in farm and prices annually, the minister will have to come back almost annually to give us higher limits. I do not think that is attacking the heart of the problem.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in the few minutes remaining to us I should like to discuss one or two points with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation. At the outset I would say that Bill C-34 has my entire support. I welcome the fact that it is before us today. I should like to see it become law and be proclaimed at an early date.

I should like to mention the need for capitalization, about which a number of members have spoken today, as well as the need for risk capital for young farmers. I should like to relate my remarks here to a specific problem in Manitoba. I echo the words of the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) when I say it is my view that even more money should be placed in the hands of the Farm Credit Corporation for loans to young farmers. I say that for this reason. In Manitoba in the last month we have run into serious difficulty as a result of the operations of the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation. As has been mentioned, a number of provinces have set up provincial agricultural corporations, not necessarily to supplement but to increase the amount of money available to farmers for farming purposes.

What is happening in Manitoba now is that farmers are reacting by asking me whether it would be possible to increase the amount of money available from the Farm Credit Corporation, not only through Bill C-34 on an individual basis, but the total amount of money made available. These farmers are not able to get sufficient money, and so are forced to apply for a loan to the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation.

Within the last six weeks the Manitoba government came out with a white paper called "In Search of a Land Policy for Manitoba". In support of this paper the NDP government created a strawman in Manitoba by saying acquisition of land is so rampant in the province that land is being taken away from the farmers. This strawman was stripped during the first five minutes of a public meeting held by the farmers of Manitoba. What became very clear to them, and what has become very clear to the people of Manitoba, is that this strawman put up by the NDP government was not fear of foreign ownership but fear of government ownership of farm land.

According to their own statistics, approximately 93 per cent of all agricultural land in Manitoba is owned by Manitobans who are active farmers. The problem is that the average age of these farmers is well into the fifties, so more money must be made available to young farmers. Of the remaining 7 per cent, 4 per cent was held by Manitobans living in Brandon and Winnipeg; roughly 2 per cent was held by Canadians not resident in Manitoba; approximately one per cent of the agricultural land in Manitoba was owned by foreigners. That was their strawman, Madam Speaker and, as I say, it took the farmers about five minutes to figure that out. They are now asking me for more money from the Farm Credit Corporation so that they can get a loan based on business principles. They want to meet their obligations, but they do not want to compete with the government on ownership.

This very insidious plan of the Manitoba government is actually raising the price of land that farmers want to buy. For example, a farmer in my riding had made a verbal deal with another farmer to buy land at $130 an acre. A representative of the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation approached this farmer, opened his little black book, and said: "We will pay you $140 an acre". So who do you think got the land, Madam Speaker? That is the kind of problem we are facing in Manitoba.

Then there was the case of a young farmer who wanted to get into farming. Here I commend the minister for the clause that allows a person to work for five years and become the eventual owner if his principal occupational activity is farming. This young man had a loan from the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation, and like many young farmers he needed operating capital. He then asked for an additional loan and they told him to come back two days later, which he did. They then told him, "We think you should double the amount you have asked us for, but we will buy your land. We will take the equity you have in your land at the present time and then we will give you your operating capital". Then five years later he has an option to buy it back, but during this five years he leases it, pays for it under the leasing arrangement, and pays the property tax. At the end of the five years he pays the total accumulated tax or interest. On top of that he has to finance any improvements he makes on the land within the five years.

In conclusion, I agree with the minister—though I sometimes feel he exaggerates his own importance in this matter—that we have a moral obligation as Canadians to increase food production. There is a starving world out there. As I have said on many occasions, we cannot expect the farmers to finance the surplus. But let us get more money to our young farmers and avoid land ownership by government which takes land out of production and too often increases the price of food and land in Canada. To my way of thinking this is entirely contrary to the personal incentives that have built up rural Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills. Is it agreed that we stand all the motions previous to motion No. 21?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CULTURAL CENTRE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration, through its Crown corporation, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to establish on Cape Breton Island a cultural centre that would provide to the many and diverse ethnic groups and native peoples who reside in the area a vehicle to further develop their individual cultures in an atmosphere that would assure the full development, potential and appreciation of such culture by all those who reside on Cape Breton Island.

He said: Madam Speaker, at the outset I should like to express publicly my sincere thanks to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) and his staff for making some changes and arranging that this motion appear at this time before the House; they have been most co-operative. You have read the motion, Madam Speaker, which I feel is self-explanatory.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And should be passed.

Mr. Muir: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) interjects, we hope the motion will be allowed to pass without dissent.

The present preservation of this nation is almost completely reliant upon the development, protection and promotion of the multicultural character of our people. For some time now it has been my belief that a more tangible method of retaining and projecting the tremendous contributions made by residents of Cape Breton Island has to be developed. It is my view that the best possible manner of meeting this challenge would be the establishment of a cultural centre in Sydney, Nova Scotia, or in the district.

Mr. Stanfield: What about North Sydney?

Mr. Muir: My leader asks, what about North Sydney? That is a question for those knowledgeable to decide, but such a cultural centre, I should think, would have to be in a location that would enable the greatest number of people easy accessibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Edmonton Centre is rising on a point of order.

● (1600)

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, there is a problem with the simultaneous interpretation. They are carrying on a little conversation and we cannot seem to get the hon. member's voice. We really do not want to take part in that conversation going on in the interpreters' booth.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am sure the problem has been taken care of now.

Mr. Muir: I did hope that my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), would be here to assist me today as he is very fluent in the Gaelic language.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The Cape Breton Development Corporation has shown a great deal of leadership, not just in programs associated with developing an economic stability on the island, but also in making residents aware of our cultural heritage. Because of this fact it would seem to me that if Devco were to give leadership in the establishment of such a centre it would find ready and willing allies in the many cultural and ethnic groups that exist now and have existed for many years in Cape Breton.

We have a long and exciting history in Cape Breton, which began with the landfall of John Cabot at Cape North in 1497. We have attracted people from almost every part of the world and of almost every ethnic extraction ever since.

Canadians of Scottish origin, like myself, take a great deal of pride in the fact that we have a very active and vigorous Gaelic Society in Cape Breton. We are also extremely proud of the Gaelic college of Celtic folk arts and highland homecrafts at St. Ann's. This college was established by the Cape Breton Island Gaelic Foundation in 1939, and it holds the unique position of being the only one in North America. It is said that Nova Scotia is the cradle of Celtic culture in the new world. Students from across Canada from every province, as well as from every state of the United States and from around the world, come to Cape Breton to study at this college as it offers courses in the Gaelic language, piping, drumming, highland dancing and weaving.

We cannot and would not want to denigrate the extremely valuable contributions made daily by the Cape Breton Folk Arts Council, the Industrial Cape Breton Multi-Cultural Association, the Irish Benevolent Society, and in the Ukrainian, Polish, Italian, Lebanese, Greek and Chinese communities, to name a few. They all actively pursue their cultural traditions which enrich our lives. Equally as important are the activities of the Black Cultural Club at Sydney Academy, and the Black United Front. The Union of Nova Scotia Indians plays an effective role too, probably because the Eskasoni Indian Reserve is the largest such reserve in the province of Nova Scotia.

It may seem strange to this House to have me say that the original coal miners of Cape Breton were from France. They came, they stayed, and they are with us today—not the same coal miners but their descendants. Their ancestors are busily engaged in promoting their culture and their language. As an example of just how long the French have been in Cape Breton and involved in coal mining let me read you an excerpt from a book entitled "First Things in Acadia":

Captain Poulet mentioned coal in Cape Breton in a report to the French king, and one vessel, La Bretonne, carried a cargo to France in 1687.

Incidentally, the first Jesuit mission in North America was located at a place, strangely enough now called Englishtown, about 40 miles from my own home.

We also have the reconstruction of the Fortress of Louisburg by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This amazing and exciting project recognizes the value of the contributions by both the French and the British in the founding of this nation. I must say that it still gives me a tremendous amount of pleasure and personal satisfaction to have been a member of the government party when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister, as it was that administration that saw the merit in the recreation of this fortress which will be an everlasting tribute to our forefathers.

The mosaic of our cultural being is dependent upon our recognition of the history and traditions of our peoples. If we are to remain uniquely different from our United States friends we must at all times and in every way possible care for and cultivate the varied contributions that produce the inspiration for our uniqueness.

The proposed cultural centre would not only be a forum for creative expression by our ethnic and native groups, but it would also provide the incentive for a still greater development of our varied cultures that, when united, produce Canadianism, and we are all justly proud of being Canadian.

It is my hope that as a result of this debate Devco will initiate, through its able officers, a program to spearhead the establishment of a cultural centre in Cape Breton, both financially and through their leadership, so that tomorrow Cape Breton will be a better place in which to live, and so that we may all get to know each other better by learning of the customs and traditions of our neighbours. This would be of fantastic value, not just to Cape Bretoners but also to all the visitors from across this land and around the world who come to visit Cape Breton.

The suggestion that federal funds be used for a cultural centre is not new or innovative. The National Arts Centre in Ottawa and the Confederation Centre of the Arts in Charlottetown were both funded to a great degree by the federal government. It is also my understanding that public money has been used for such projects in other parts of Canada.

This month an ethnic festival was held in Sydney at which there were 12 different performing groups. A very successful evening was held. I look forward to the day when I can walk into a cultural centre in Cape Breton, dedicated to the multi-culturalism of this nation, and listen to the "Men of the Deeps", who have performed all over Canada and in the United States, comprised of coal miners of many ethnic origins.

I look forward to the day when I can watch the "Stornaway Scottish Dancers", see the "Irish Folk Dancers", hear the "Young Gaelic Singers of Big Pond", observe the "Ukrainian Dancers of Sydney" and enjoy "Lee Cremo", a Micmac fiddler or, if you wish to be a little fancier, violinist, although there is a controversy as to whether you are playing a violin when you are fiddling. In any event, Mr. Cremo is a Micmac from the Eskasoni Reserve who has appeared at international competitions across this country.

I look forward to listening to "John Allen Cameron", and I do not have to tell you who he is, and to tapping my toes to the "Cape Breton Calypso Band". Those are just a few that come to my mind, even though I realize there are numerous other extremely talented groups and individuals one might also enjoy. Maybe I would even be able to hear my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, a fluent Gaelic linguist, sing "Ho Ro Mo Nigh'n Donn Bhodheach", literally translated "My Pretty Fair Maiden". Maybe we could open this cultural centre in the presence of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I look forward to seeing him wear his Elliott tartan kilt. I have been looking forward to that for a long time since it was presented to him, and I have not seen him wear it yet. That would be the occasion for him to wear it.

Before resuming my seat I wish to say how pleased I am to have had the opportunity of presenting this motion. I ask all hon. members present to give this matter their most careful consideration.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I am in a rather unenviable position this afternoon. I was asked to speak in this debate in support of the hon. member's motion. However, I cannot do that.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, shame.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): While I agree with the motion in principle, I cannot agree to it in practical terms. I realize and appreciate the importance of cultural heritage to many people, but I also realize—

Mr. Paproski: Are you against that?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Just listen. I also appreciate the importance of some more basic needs, and I refer to the necessity of providing for the basic essentials of life and health. Many of our people in the Atlantic area are still struggling in the face of severe economic handicaps to provide food, shelter and education for themselves and their families.

Cape Breton is indeed fortunate to have the Cape Breton Development Corporation to enhance the economic development of that part of Nova Scotia. I suggest that it is unwise at this time to divert any of the attention of this Crown corporation from what must be its primary goal, that is, to bring about the kind of economic stabilization which has come to be taken for granted in other parts of our vast country.

Certainly in the area of New Brunswick which I have the honour to represent there are many problems of an economic nature which urgently require attention. If I am going to be a responsible representative, I must insist that these bread and butter issues receive priority consideration in the distribution of the federal budget.

I ask the indulgence of this House to expose for a few moments some of these problems and the continuing adverse effects we suffer because of the absence of solutions. That may not be the best way to say it because solutions to economic problems are always present. It only takes the necessary finances to solve them. The first and most obvious problem confronting us is our highways. Northumberland county probably has the poorest road system of any place in Canada. I am well aware that this is a provincial responsibility, but it is now a well established principle that the federal government will help to finance road construction.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, while I appreciate that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr.

Dionne) may have many constituency problems—and he is certainly a member of the government, which should be taking some action on them—I do not believe that this notice of motion is the time at which we should be hearing a speech associated with a matter relating to the constituency problems of the hon. gentleman. It is strange to me that I did not hear his voice when there was an opposition motion just a very short time ago regarding matters relating to CIDA, which deals with the expenditure of many millions of dollars of government funds which are spent outside Canada. He is worrying about the bread and butter issues of his constituency, but I do not think he is doing this House or the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) any favour in presenting to this House a matter which is narrow and associated with something the hon. member waited a long time to raise. It is not fair that he should use private members' hour to discuss his constituency problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I thank the hon. member, but perhaps the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is about to come to the reasons why he opposes the cultural centre or why he wants to agree with this motion. We will listen to the hon. member for a few more minutes.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): If the hon. gentleman who interrupted will just be patient for a few minutes, I think he will see what I am coming to, Madam Speaker. There are bread and butter issues, and I have no objection to CIDA helping those people who are struggling for bread and butter in other parts of the world. I am trying to point out that that is what I am coming to, so if I may, I should like to continue.

Mr. Muir: For the benefit of those who have not been here as long as others, I along with many hardworking representatives of the Atlantic provinces have been searching and working and speaking up on behalf of our people on bread and butter issues for many years. Man does not live by bread alone. He needs something else, and we want our share of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member knows very well that this is not a point of order but a point of debate. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I hope to prove just what the hon. gentleman has been saying. It is a well established principle that the federal government will help to finance road construction in various parts of the country—that includes, incidentally, Nova Scotia—and not just my constituency. Indeed a special highways agreement was signed between Canada and New Brunswick less than two weeks ago, and of course we are very grateful for this federal assistance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It has not, however, done very much good in my constituency because the provincial government has consistently refused to apply any of those funds to our area. In modern society one cannot over emphasize the importance of a modern highway system, not only as a means of transportation for goods and services but also as a means to protect life and health in these days of high speed travel. When my people are suffering the effects of this deficiency, I cannot speak in favour of the allocation of federal funds for the building of cultural centres.

Today, well into 1975, we in my constituency still do not enjoy the cultural advantage of having decent television service. Indeed there are communities there which receive practically no service at all. They cannot even receive a signal. Those of us who can receive a signal have two choices: we can watch the one channel, which is obsolete in its equipment, or we can watch nothing. For ten years we have been fighting for an alternate service, and we are always told that it is a question of money. However, it has never been suggested that we be given in our area a lower rate schedule in our income tax to compensate for the services denied us but which other parts of Canada take for granted. I cannot support financial outlays for cultural centres when my people have such primitive television service. We do not even have access, for instance, to FM radio.

Our economy depends on a base in which there is far too little diversification. It is predicated almost entirely on the exploitation of natural resources, either from land or sea. Almost without exception our precious resources are being shipped from our midst in a raw or semi-manufactured state. Why should this be so? Do we not have the talent and ingenuity to carry out these labour intensive stages in the utilization of our natural resources? Must we look forward forever to being providers of raw materials and buying finished products back to keep foreign and upper Canadian industrial wheels turning? I cannot agree to funding cultural centres while we do not have all the opportunities for employment we require.

Only last week I learned of a rather drastic cutback in the number of armed forces personnel stationed at CFB Chatham. For some areas of Canada this might seem an insignificant development, but for our area it is a real economic blow because our small service industry is very much dependent on these people as customers. When we have so delicate an economy that the transfer of 200 military personnel is a serious matter, we must get to work to develop that base upon which we depend for all our physical needs.

We hear a great deal about the Atlantic fishery from time to time. I know our Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) is keenly aware of our problems and is actively seeking solutions to them. But a rationalization of the Atlantic fishery is a far higher priority to me than the establishment of additional cultural centres. If there are any extra federal dollars floating around let us put them where they would provide the basic necessities of life. Then we can look after our cultural heritage.

● (1620)

An hon. Member: Wait until the next election.

An hon. Member: Now on to the next topic.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Just hold your horses. Madam Speaker, I subscribe to the view—

Mr. Coates: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, this is the second time on two successive Fridays that I have encountered the same thing. Liberal backbenchers have come into the House and used a notice of motion debate on a specific topic as an opportunity to make speeches that have no relationship at all to the topic under discussion. In this particular case the hon. member is attacking the government of which he is a representative. If we are going to have a private members' hour for which members prepare, and wait to have their subjects debated, I think the Chair must see that it is treated properly, and that hon. members do not speak from prepared texts, which are not supposed to be used anyway, and should insist that they talk about the subject before the House. The hon. member is not doing that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) on the same point of order.

Mr. McIsaac: Madam Speaker, I have not been in the House that long but I have already seen a few habits demonstrated across the way that I am sure do not comply with the rules. I suggest that the hon. member who was speaking in this debate was speaking on the point raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). He is trying to point out that there are alternative ways of spending moneys from that proposed in the motion. Surely that cannot be construed as straying from the point. He was making comparisons all the way through.

Mr. Maine: Madam Speaker, I take personal objection to the comments of the hon. member—

Mr. Coates: You should because you used my notice of motion last week to talk about atomic power.

Mr. Maine: That is exactly the point. The hon. gentleman was not intelligent enough to know that I was talking about his motion on the Bay of Fundy tidal power and did not appreciate that my remarks were relevant.

Mr. Reynolds: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, I will not take very long. As a member from the west listening to these easterners debate, it seems strange to me that members on this side of the House did not once criticize the government, but the member from the other side who was supposed to be speaking on the motion spent half his time criticizing the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) rising to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Yes, Madam Speaker. If I want to attack the government—which I have not done—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —that is my prerogative. We are free on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Cultural Centre

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in terms of the word freedom I wonder if the hon. member has had an opportunity to examine the debate on the question of privilege raised a few days ago by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) when the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, who had demonstrated his freedom had that freedom trampled upon by the parliamentary secretary.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I want to thank hon. members for their contributions but I should like to remind them that the motion is to establish a cultural centre. Is the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Fleming: I do not wish to prolong the matter, Madam Speaker, but with great respect toward the hon. gentleman who presented the motion, and to yourself and your wisdom in making a decision on this point, I might say that I heard the remarks of the member presenting the motion and found them sound. It was only after hearing the response of the hon. member on this side that some questions were raised in my mind. Surely that shows the value of debate, when it makes one have second thoughts about the problem before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. If hon. members wish to continue discussing this point of order it is fine with the Chair, but I would point out that we are using up the time available for private members' business. If the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) wants to continue his remarks about the establishment of a cultural centre, whether he is for it or against it, we will listen to him.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I have been trying to outline why I oppose this particular motion, and if hon. members would just take your advice we could get on with it. I will not be very much longer—

Mr. Coates: Can you find your place?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): No trouble at all-can you? Much is said about freedom, and I subscribe to the view that we live in the most free society on this earth. I submit to you and to this honourable House, however, that as long as there are festering sores of economic disparity on the body politic, the national spirit cannot be truly free. While any person is enslaved to a life of drudgery to earn his daily bread, his spirit enjoys no freedom.

Atlantic Canada is the oldest and, in many senses, the richest part of this great nation. We have given much to the building of this new nation in social, cultural, spiritual, political and economic terms. We appreciate the efforts of recent federal governments to close the economic gap, and the present government has done more than any other. We also need the equalization grants and the efforts of DREE, but we must continue our efforts—indeed we must re-dedicate ourselves to the eradication of the disparities of which I have spoken. To do that we must keep our priorities in proper perspective. We cannot afford at this time to dilute our efforts toward the development of a sound, diversified and stable economy. If we do, we shall soon find ourselves wallowing in a sea of confusion surrounded by lost opportunities and broken hope.

If we lose our perspective, if we fail to order our priorities, if we spend our federal grants on social and cultural frills, we shall have betrayed our trust and subjected future generations to the same economic hardships through which the present and many generations of our Atlantic fellows have so steadfastly laboured.

I hope the hon. gentleman gets his cultural centre at some future time, Madam Speaker, but in my opinion it is the wrong project at the wrong time. As Marie Antoinette learned to her sorrow, you must not feed the people cake when they have no bread.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would have them eat something else.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I can understand a member from the maritime provinces, or indeed from the Atlantic provinces complaining about economic conditions in that part of Canada. I confess, however, that I find it a bit strange to hear a Liberal member doing this without realizing that in effect he is making the point that the federal government for far too long has failed to meet the needs of Atlantic Canada.

To suggest that because not enough has been done for the economy of the Atlantic provinces, for the unemployed, for the fishing industry of that area, for the various needs of the people, is a reason for not spending a few dollars on culture is more than I can understand.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne)—I do not think I am doing him an injustice by repeating these words—complained about money being spent on frills, instead of on basic necessities. Good heavens, that is what the government has been doing for years all across Canada—spending money on all kinds of things that are not necessary, when basic needs like old age pensions, health services, housing and adequate employment are not being met. I did not object to the points the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi raised. I did not raise any point of order. I am surprised that he is not aware how completely out of touch he is with the shortcomings of the government which he supports.

I shall speak for only a few more minutes. I support the motion presented by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). I am as anxious as anyone, perhaps more anxious than many in this House, for dollars to be spent in places where they are needed, particularly in the field of old age pensions and other forms of social security. But, if I may quote my hon. friend who spoke on the point of order a moment ago, man shall not live by bread alone. I suggest that the concern for preserving the various cultures of an area like Cape Breton Island is a concern that this House does well to consider.

I am not as familiar with Cape Breton Island as I am with other parts of Nova Scotia, but I know enough of that island and I know enough of Nova Scotia to know that small as that province is, it is a place of many cultures. As one travels, for example, along the south shore from Halifax to Yarmouth, one moves within a very few miles from one type of culture to another.

My own people happened to live for a couple of hundred years in Barrington township, which is a little bit of puritan New England. To the east of Barrington township one runs into Shelburne, an intensely Loyalist area. Going further east, along the south shore you come to an area where the background is German. Going the other way you come to Tusket and Argyle, to Yarmouth and then on Digby. In each of these areas there are different cultures that make up the great province of Nova Scotia.

I believe that anything which helps the people of that province to preserve those cultures is all to the good. I should like to see the same kind of thing done on the mainland. Of course we who descend from the mainland of Nova Scotia have always had a problem trying to persuade the Cape Bretoners that there is a mainland. In any case, this is a good start and I am happy to give my support to this excellent motion.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join in this debate and I support most heartily the motion before the House.

Having heard the kind speech of the distinguished and senior member, I am prompted to use the Gaelic phrase, Is shin uilig shin, and then move on to something else, because he said just about everything a member of parliament should say on the subject. I approve his emphasis on the multicultural background of Cape Breton, that place which we generous Prince Edward Islanders salute as the other island, an island of beauty and history.

Since biblical expressions seem to be in vogue this afternoon, this being Friday afternoon, such as that man does not live by bread alone, I must point out, of course, that we must live by bread. As a supporter of the government which did something about Louisburg Fortress and dealt with other vital issues by establishing the road to resources program and Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, let me say that, for those reasons, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is and always will be very popular in the Atlantic region.

The hon. member who moved the motion spoke about cultural centres already established. May I say how very much the life of Prince Edward Island has been enriched by the Confederation Centre of the Performing Arts which was built with the assistance of the governments and the people of all provinces, and with the assistance of the federal government. The centre has added greatly to our cultural heritage and to the quality of our lives, and we cherish it. We regard it as a wonderful memorial to Charlottetown's finest hour, that day in 1864 when that beautiful city hosted the meeting of the Fathers of Confederation, from which sprang this parliament and this dominion.

If the hon. member had confined himself to just one of the great cultural ingredients of the area—I believe he excluded the English, although there are a few English in Cape Breton; I was not upset by the omission—he would still have talked about a tradition worthy of preservation. One of the greatest honours done me was when I was invited to speak to the Gaelic mod at St. Ann's, Cape Breton Island. I was introduced by my colleague who moved this motion. I ran into a certain hard aspect of the Scottish heritage. I had checked out of my motel, near St. Ann's. As I was to be guest speaker I had assumed that I would be put up at St. Ann's, but my assumption proved ill founded. I discovered that no such thing was contemplated and I had to hustle back to my hotel where I was lucky enough to be given a room. Clearly, Scottish frugality has not left the people of Prince Edward Island or of Cape Breton.

That any member from the Maritimes should find this motion not acceptable is beyond comprehension. After all, because of confederation—and we knew from the beginning that this might be so—we have been deprived of many commercial and economic advantages which are available to the larger community of which we are proud to be one part. In many ways we have grown accustomed to economic disadvantage. But that, surely, is no reason for someone to suggest that we should cut down on our cultural aspects of life. Even though the great and perhaps lamented Walter Gordon suggested, when a royal commissioner, that Maritimers might be better off moving out of the area and looking for jobs elsewhere, he saw a certain quality of life down there. This motion seeks to preserve that, and to honour and enlarge the cultural contribution which has been made by that fine and beautiful part of Canada.

Hon. members can visit Prince Edward Island on their summer holidays and then take the Wood Island ferry to Nova Scotia and visit the mover of this motion. I am sure that they will receive fine hospitality in both these fine communities.

Nova Scotia has produced some good men. Some of our greatest men have come from Cape Breton. I suppose every one of us can think of the four great public men who have come from Nova Scotia. They are Joseph Howe, Charles Tupper, Angus L. Macdonald and Robert Stanfield. The one who came from Cape Breton was a man of great presence, great charm and great wisdom. I remember two things about Angus L. Macdonald, which gladden my heart. When Ramsay Macdonald, the Prime Minister of Britain, came to Halifax on his way to Washington, he was greeted by Angus Macdonald in Gaelic; but the man from Scotland did not know a word of Gaelic although the man from Cape Breton knew it well. I do not think there is much wrong with a man who was too busy in Canada to attend the coronation of the King in London but who, a couple of months later, found it possible to spend three weeks at a Gaelic mod in Edinburgh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even if he was a Liberal!

● (1640)

Mr. Macquarrie: We can support members like my colleague who has directed us to some of the important things, things which will last longer than the most sturdily built road or the best constructed building, things of the heart, things of the spirit.

This is an area in which Canada has been far, far too reluctant to move. We have allowed things to leave the country. We have allowed historic buildings to be destroyed. It has only been a matter of two or three years since we did not do a thing when the beautiful home of Sir Robert Borden, which he occupied for a whole generation, was torn down and apartment blocks put up in its place.

All across this country we find that historic sites have been wrecked, ruined and forgotten. Any move that this parliament makes to support the people who are interested in the heritage of Canada, who want to enrich our cultural appreciation and enlarge our historic dimension, people like the mover of this motion, should not be condemned. They should not be cast aside for not building roads or not bringing in enough bread and butter, but hailed as men of the future, men who can see these things which are eternal and significant in this great country of ours.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I wish to enter this discussion briefly, not to make any pronouncement on what is needed most, a Cape Breton cultural centre or better roads, but in the broader concept of the cultural concerns and some of the things that I hope, if and when the cultural centre proposed by the hon. member goes forward, might be included in it.

What the hon. member is proposing is important now and will be much more important in the future. More and more Canada will be depending upon immigration for its population growth. Each one who comes to our shores will bring a new type of culture, a culture that every Canadian wants to see preserved, one which can be shared in a very real and meaningful way.

I agree wholeheartedly with the previous speaker who said thank goodness that at this point in time we are starting to have some appreciation of our culture and heritage. I have a particularly strong feeling about preserving heritage, our old buildings and old customs. Anything that adds support to this certainly should be commended.

I wish the mover of the motion had expanded a bit in terms of the concept of the cultural centre he was talking about. I am not entirely clear in terms of what conditions he might have on it. I would like to put forward my one concern in terms of the motion. It is really one that I spoke of in a debate during private members' hour last week. I refer to the role of crown corporations financing many concepts for which they are not really charged with the basic responsibility.

I am not totally knowledgeable, or even as knowledgeable as I should be with regard to the terms of reference of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It may very well be within their jurisdiction that such a cultural centre would be something justifiable not only to finance but to operate and promote. If it should not be, I would have some concern about whether that should be the vehicle the hon. member would be promoting to bring this about. If it is not within their terms of reference, there must be other government departments, approaches or avenues that would be more concerned.

Mr. Muir: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thank the hon. member for his comments. I am enjoying what he is saying. Just to clarify the situation, it is indeed that. They have engaged in the promotion of culture in a small way so far.

Mr. Milne: I think it is good that communities set up cultural centres, a place where people of various cultures and backgrounds can meet with each other and share their respective cultural heritages, working together for a better understanding of Canada's heritage.

In my constituency there are many different ethnic groups and cultural backgrounds. While I think it is a good approach to have a cultural centre such as this, we should be very careful that each group has a facility to keep its own culture and promote that, as opposed to having a large cultural centre which pressures cultural groups to blend together, perhaps losing some of the distinctive things we strive most to preserve.

In terms of the broader context of establishing cultural centres across the country, there are three needs. One is to preserve traditional customs and heritages. The second is really a language situation and the third is an educational centre for the benefit of people coming to this country.

As this is International Women's Year any cultural centre should be very attuned to the role of woman. That has not always been done. We tend to structure programs and so on to the benefit of the male. I feel that this year we should recognize this as an objective.

A cultural centre should not be the be all and end all. One of the very great strengths of this type of approach would be if a cultural centre had an extension program to reach out into the community and make its presence known. By that I mean a very large community in terms of the cultural needs they are preserving, the arts and crafts they are promoting.

Judging by many of the facilities which are perhaps not as large in scope as the hon. member is talking about, perhaps the ethnic group that originally promoted it, that knows about it and that uses it is not as large a factor in the community as it could be. An active promotional outreaching program should be a part of this.

Perhaps the hon. member is aware that in the city of Toronto there is an annual caravan program that is really a promotional program on behalf of each of the cultural and ethnic groups in the city. They invite the rest of the community to share that with them. It is a very successful program. It is the type of program that should be part of any cultural establishment or program.

Something that is perhaps apropos of what the hon. member mentions is that in many areas of the country new Canadians have great difficulty adapting to Canadian society. One of the greatest problems facing new Canadians is often an acquisition of basic skills in one or other of the official languages, whether English or French.

There is an active group in my own riding which spends a great deal of time helping immigrants to our shores to acquire language skills. One handicap often faced in such efforts is the lack of suitable facilities, the halls which are available are simply not suited to these purposes. This is an effort which is surely deserving of encouragement. I am sure the hon. member would agree, though, that close co-operation with provincial legislatures is required in this connection since we are dealing with an aspect of education, and every care must be taken to reflect the priorities and intentions of the provincial government involved.

The government services provided for new Canadians are badly needed, but we should remember that it is a long walk for these new arrivals to go to some of the official offices and talk about the things which concern them. I hope we might be able to establish centres of a type where these people could feel more at home in the presence of people at the official level who spoke their language and shared their traditions.

Many of us are concerned about the large numbers of immigrants who have come to Canada in the last 15 years or so and have not yet taken out citizenship. If citizenship judges were able to attend in centres such as I have described, it is probable that more immigrants would take advantage of the opportunity to become Canadians. We are all concerned, too, about manpower training and the upgrading of technical skills. It is possible that this work, also, could be carried out in such centres.

I am wholeheartedly in support of measures to preserve the customs and traditions which enrich our cultural heritage, and I approve the setting up of facilities where people from both sides of the border can share this inheritance. I hope that in due course a facility of this type will be built on Cape Breton Island.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I believe my hon. friend from Cape Breton-The Sydneys has contributed a great cultural event to a day which has been concerned with other things. It is very important that the movement he is attempting in Cape Breton should have the support of all members of the House as a matter of principle. We are looking at cultures which because of neglect, because of abuse, because of wrong headedness will soon be classed as endangered species.

When we consider cultural centres we might consider a cultural centre in the middle of Montreal because of the difficulty those who want to know the English language culture in Quebec are experiencing with respect to Bill 22. There will be an opportunity to debate that matter at some other time. It is heartening to know that we are so mature in Canada as to be mindful of the traditions of the past, traditions of excellence in literature, the arts and all the other things that made up our past. There is something worth saving. There was a society created in the early days of our history which is worth remembering and worth building upon. That is why, all over the country, buildings are being preserved, works of art are being dusted off, old ways are being revived.

In my own Township of Nepean in the riding of Grenville-Carleton we are now considering the establishment of a cultural centre, and I hope this will be representative of not just the two main cultures in Canada but of the many cultures which make this country so rich. I hope this will still the fives that emphasize only two cultures in this country and which are injuring the unity of confederation. I congratulate my hon. friend for emphasizing this concept, one which ought to be followed in every area of the country.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I read the motion of my hon. colleague and I agree with his suggestion although I doubt he has chosen the proper means of achieving his objective. What I mean is that the Canadian Secretariat of State already has a national policy on museums which, to my mind, could achieve the purpose of my colleague, that is, to set up a cultural centre on Cape Breton island.

Indeed, that museum policy, as announced in 1972 by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), indicates clearly that in that year a credit of $750,000 was provided for local exhibition centres that would offer, to the public, travelling exhibits coming from larger museums or the national loan collection.

Government communiqués stipulated that the national exhibition centres had to be maintained by members of the communities they served, therefore, by native communities where they were to be established. Most of them should be set up in community centres or city halls which would but rarely have collections. They will feature mobile exhibitions composed of pieces from either important collections or the national loan collection created under this new policy.

Madam Speaker, I think my colleague should be invited to make his request under the program of the Secretary of State of Canada. In my opinion, we undoubtedly have programs meeting the cultural objectives that I support and my colleague has set forth in the proposal whose contents we are debating this afternoon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Madam Chairman, I wonder whether the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology or the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council can tell us what we are doing on Monday.

Mr. Reid: The items of business suggested are Bill C-10, the Prairie Grains Advance Payments Act, Bill C-43 dealing with the Law Reform Commission, Bill S-6 dealing with the Wheat Board, and the recent paper on immigration. That is not the order in which the items are to be called—the order is still subject to negotiation between the House leaders.

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 3, 1975

The House met at 2 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (D)

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (D) with regard to sums required for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1975 and, pursuant to the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, recommending those estimates to the House of Commons, was presented by Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 59, I wish to move a motion to refer to committees the supplementary estimates which have just been tabled by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). It is a long motion which basically refers to the various standing committees the same type of items that were referred to the standing committees in connection with the main estimates. There is one exception, and that is that no items are referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs because that committee is overloaded. Estimates which might have been referred to that standing committee are referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I would ask if the motion could be considered as if read. It is in the hands of the leaders of the various parties.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there general agreement in that regard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to continue his statement? Have we just heard the first instalment, or will he complete his statement on motions? If he is going to continue, I will wait before commenting.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was going to make one or two other announcements about the business of the House, if that is in order. Then perhaps the motion could be put for referring the supplementary estimates.

There are seven allotted days remaining in this period, and I have suggested to the House leaders of the other parties that those days should be March 7, 10, 13, 14, 18, 19 and 20.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) for his statement, and I thank the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for tabling this latest illustration of the practice by this government of the art of restraint amounting to further expenditures totalling $1.9 billion. I wonder if the government House leader would consider a departure from accepted practice, that is, dealing with supplementary estimates first and bringing in the main estimates at the end. That might be a more acceptable and far more informative way of proceeding.

It really is fascinating. We go from 1973-74 with a total of $20 billion, to 1974-75 with a total of $27 billion, some 17 per cent increase—no, Mr. Speaker, it will be far more than that. I was contemplating that even this government, acting at its best, would have kept these supplementary estimates down to some $600 million, but the President of the Treasury Board says this is it. It is $1.917 billion. No matter how you slice it, that is the total amount. That would then be some $27 billion, and if you relate that to the 1975-76 main estimates of $28 billion with a comparable increase, you are looking at a total of some $36 billion or $37 billion for a total of the main estimates of—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I tabled the estimates without making any comment. If the hon. member wants me to comment, I will have something to say. The procedure is that when we table the estimates, no comments are made. If the hon. member wants me to reply to him, I will be delighted to give him the details, but that is something that should be done in committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) raises an interesting point of order. The supplementary estimates were tabled by him without comment. That, of course, precluded the possibility of comment by opposition parties on the estimates themselves. However, the President of the Treasury Board was followed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) who simply moved the referral, but in so doing he made a brief comment about the business of the House and the allotment of opposition days. I think that opens up some commentary about the scheduling of business of that nature. However, in fairness, that commentary ought not to be directed toward the substance of the estimates, but to the business of the House. The President of the Treasury Board is absolutely right, no statement was made about the substance of the estimates. Something was said by the President of the Privy Council about the business of the House, and perhaps any comment should be confined to that.

Mr. Baldwin: I appreciate the point, Mr. Speaker. I can understand why the President of the Treasury Board would not want to make any comment about these estimates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: What I had to say was just preliminary to the proposition by the President of the Privy Council in recommending an innovation, which we accept, that the estimates be sent to the standing committees which are related to the particular items in question. That is a very good idea. It is particularly necessary because of the size and complexity of these supplementary estimates. That is the only reason I was making the comment.

An hon. Member: You are out of order.

Mr. Baldwin: If I can, without being out of order, use a comment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), when the main 1975-76 estimates were tabled. He spoke about the price of civilization; I have to say, "by gosh, the price isn't right here." The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), like Horatius at the bridge, restraining his impetuous colleagues in their desire to spend money worked wonders.

We will facilitate the passage of this motion. It is an excellent idea to get these estimates into the hands of the committees so they can do a better job. It is about time we did something to minimize the farce which takes place in this parliament in connection with the examination of estimates. This is not a partisan issue; there are feelings on the other side of the House too. I know the President of the Privy Council agrees with me, as does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. A proposal has now been made before the committee on procedure which would allow members of the House, in their capacity as members of the committee of the whole, an opportunity to make a meaningful examination of the estimates. I hope not too many days will elapse before this proposition becomes part of the interim orders which will be proposed to this House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary estimates were tabled without any statement being made, so it is not in order to make a statement in response to a non-statement. It is also clear that the motion to refer the estimates to the various standing committees is made under Standing Order 59 which, similarly, permits no debate. However, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) did make a brief statement having to do with the business of the House, so perhaps I might comment briefly on that aspect.

We welcome the fact that the estimates are going to the same committees as the main estimates and we are pleased that the minister has now given us information as to which days in the balance of this semester will be opposition days. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has pointed out, it is common knowledge that discussions are taking place regarding a change in our supply procedure, at least on a trial basis. One of the advantages of the change we shall probably make is that it would keep the government on notice—it will not know which of the departments will be called back to the House for examination here either in place of or in addition to the examination in committee. We shall do our part in the committees. We shall do our part here on the floor, as well.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in a few words I should like to say that I am very pleased to see, not only that nature is awakening but that winter is finally coming to an end. From the motions introduced today by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), I see that the government has also come out of its sleep and really wants Parliament to work very arduously during the month of March.

A while ago, it was announced that there would be seven opposition days before the Easter break, and that in addition we would study supplementary estimates (D). Copy of it was just handed to me. I have not had a chance to even thumb through it. I see that several departments are concerned in these estimates. We will have the opportunity of studying them. In any event, I trust that we will not limit ourselves to the figures but that we will look in depth at the legislation so that the people can benefit from the advantages expected from these supplementary estimates as well as from other budgets previously introduced in this House.

For our part, we will co-operate wholeheartedly so that the business of the House can make quick progress, and we can give the people the impression not only that we want to manage the country seriously, but also that we want to do it in all honesty, and as efficiently and quickly as possible.

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The motion of referral which has been described by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) was not formally read by the President of the Privy Council. May I take it that the House is agreeable to accepting the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council and that the motion will be printed in Hansard as if it had been read? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

COST OF RENOVATING PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCES AND OFFICES

Question No. 41—Mr. Coates:

1. What has been the total cost to the taxpayers for renovations and the refurnishing of offices and residences that are available to the Prime Minister since the present Prime Minister assumed that office?

2. What have been the specific expenditures on renovations and refurnishing carried out at these various establishments?

3. Have other costs been involved in the renovations and refurnishing of these establishments and, if so (a) what are such costs (b) to which particular undertaking do they apply?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The total cost paid by Public Works Capital Region for renovations and the refurnishing of offices and residences of the Prime Minister, since April 1, 1968, is $403,048.

TRIANGLE PACIFIC FOREST PRODUCTS LTD. IN SLOCAN, B.C.

Question No. 378—Mr. Brisco:

1. With reference to Triangle Pacific Forest Products Ltd., in Slocan, British Columbia, has this lumber mill ever received a DREE grant for a salvage mill and, if so (a) for how much (b) on what date was the grant awarded (c) how many new jobs were to be created under this grant?

2. With reference to DREE grants, has any time limit been established on how long new men must be employed under the terms of grants that are awarded?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes: (a) The grant offered was for $127,779 and represented 15% of the new capital costs of the total project; (b) The offer of assistance was accepted by Triangle Pacific Forest Products Ltd. on July 4, 1972 for the expansion of their Slocan, British Columbia operations, which in part (approximately 38 per cent was related to a salvage mill; (c) The estimated number of on-site jobs which would be created by the expansion was 64.

2. Assistance offered for the establishment of new facilities or for new product expansion can in part be based on the new employment to be created. As the final payments on such assistance cannot be before 36 months or after 42 months of the commencement of commercial production, and as the amount of assistance on jobs is based on the average number of jobs, or the average wage bill, during years two and three after the commencement of commercial production, some control is maintained over the new employment during this period.

LIP PROJECTS RESEARCH ANTI-POVERTY AND PROJECT ALDERGROVE

Question No. 534—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are all details of LIP projects known as Research Anti-Poverty and Project Aldergrove including (a) a full description of the nature of such projects (b) the amounts granted by the government (c) the dates projects were applied for (d) the names and addresses of all persons or groups appearing on applications (e) the names and addresses of all persons or groups recommending acceptance of applications?

2. Has the government investigated or been investigating these projects since April or May 1972 and, if so, what are all details of these investigations including (a) the reasons for same (b) the results of same (c) the present status of the situation (d) any connection by the Department of Justice with the situation and for what reason?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) Please see Appendix A (attached); (b) Funds committed—Project Aldergrove, $34,381.00;—Research Anti-Poverty, $51,635.00; Total $86,016.00; (c) Project Aldergrove, November 26,1971; Research Anti-Poverty, December 8, 1971; (d) Project Aldergrove: 1. Michael Carson 12 Aldergrove, Toronto; 2. Margaret Brow 46 Aldergrove, Toronto; 3. Jacqueline Young 35 Aldergrove, Toronto; Research Anti-Poverty: 1. Michael Carson 12 Aldergrove, Toronto; 2. Loretta Newell 375 Bleecker Street Apt. 104, Toronto; (e) The Department of Manpower and Immigration regards as confidential the names and content of all representations made to the minister of the department. Appendix A—Project Descriptions: I Research Anti-Poverty:—provided support services by; (i) establishing a secretariat for the use of poverty self-help groups throughout Ontario; (ii) organizing "Poor People's Conference" (January, 1972); (iii) researching governemental programs affecting the poor; (iv) preparing "Manual for Organizers" which provided advice on the formation of self-help groups and information on government programs; (v) producing an Ontario newsletter as an information link poverty group across Ontario; provided Community Education Services through a report on "Poverty in Ontario" prepared by low-income people from 18 communities throughout Ontario in which they analysed their own situation. II Project Aldergrove: alleviated unemployment of low-income persons or persons receiving social assistance; assisted these persons to participate in training programs which increased their knowledge of government; assisted these persons to participate in their own community affairs by providing information services and resources to the community; employed these persons in the community on projects such as day care, a free store, a community winter recreation program, a furniture refurnishing program, a small appliance repair program and a community organizing program.

2. Yes (a) Both projects were suspended when suspicion of financial irregularities arose. An investigation of the projects was initiated thereafter; (b) The irregularities were traced to totally inadequate bookkeeping. There was no evidence of illegal activity but the projects did not live up to the terms of their contracts which stipulated that adequate financial records must be kept; (c) After careful investigation of the matter, it was discovered that there was no evidence of criminal activity. The matter is now closed; (d) Yes. The Department of Justice provides the department with legal advice and advised regarding these cases.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PERSONNEL AND SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Question No. 700—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What is the mother tongue of all officials in the senior executive category (equivalent to the SX category in the Public Service) in the Armed Forces?

2. How many of the officials in the senior executive category make over $25,000 per year?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1.

Rank	No.	Mother Tongue
General	1	French
Lieutenant General	6	English
Major General	22	English

REPORT ON NON-OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 767—Mr. Paproski:

1. On what date will the report on non-official languages, a study commissioned by the Secretary of State in November 1972, be made public?

2. Would the Minister name the 70 recommendations made by the former Minister of State for Multiculturalism?

3. What recommendations have been implemented?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. A second draft of the final report on non-official languages has been received very recently. It is now being evaluated by the officials of the Department of the Secretary of State and its release is pending.

2. There is no record of the former Minister of State for Multiculturalism having made 70 recommendations. However, the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism has recently presented the minister responsible for multiculturalism with a report containing some 70 recommendations. When that report is published, in the near future, the recommendations will be included.

3. The government's response to the report will be indicated at the time the report is published.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING LIP

Question No. 1,044—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the Local Initiatives Programme, what was meant by Mr. J. M. DesRoches, Deputy Minister of Manpower and Immigration in a confidential memo of January 30, 1973 to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, when he referred to the transfer of certain funds of the LIP programme in the following words "...funds to be transferred from training on the job or the ten million dollars set aside for private and entrepreneurial LIP"?

2. Were these specifically mentioned funds to be transferred to the regular LIP budget in order to help meet the cost of LIP projects approved for political reasons by or on behalf of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

3. (a) What was the exact amount of each transfer of the money made (b) on what date was it transferred (c) from what fund to what fund was it made (d) what were all the reasons for each transfer (e) who specifically authorized each transfer?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no record of a memorandum written on January 30, 1973 by Mr. J. M. DesRoches to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to this effect.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

NATIONAL DEFENCE, ACCIDENT, BRIDGETOWN, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,120—Mr. MacKay:

1. What was the cause of the accident near Bridgetown, Nova Scotia on November 30 in which a militia vehicle was demolished and seven soldiers sent to hospital?

2. What is the condition of the seven soldiers at this time?

3. How old and of what type were the tires on the vehicle?

4. How old was the vehicle and had it received proper safety inspections prior to the accident?

5. How many tires were purchased for military vehicles during each year 1966 to 1974 to date?

6. What was the cost of replacement tires for each of these years?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. According to preliminary investigation, and subject to a final joint RCMP/DND Inquiry, the cause of the accident was poor road conditions. Snow and sleet were falling at the time.

2. Five of the seven soldiers were released from hospital after receiving treatment of cuts, bruises and abrasions. The other two soldiers were hospitalized with broken pelvises. One has also been released and the other is expected to be released in the near future.

3. The tires on the vehicle were standards 2½ ton "Standard Military Pattern" snow and mud tires and preliminary police investigation has revealed that the tires were not a factor in the accident.

4. The vehicle was a 1956 model 2½ ton "Standard Military Pattern" which had last been safety inspected on October 10, 1974 and there were no outstanding repairs.

5. The number of tires purchased for the years in question is as follows:

Fiscal Year	Quantity Purchased
1965/66	8,083
1966/67	Nil
1967/68	5,464
1968/69	6,973
1969/70	4,424
1970/71	4,696
1972/73	3,843
1973/74	3,858
1974/75	3,350

6. The cost of replacement of tires for the years in question is as follows:

Fiscal Year	Quantity Purchased
1965/66	$ 357,822
1968/69	302,877
1970/71	225,235
1971/72	1,063,654

REQUIREMENT OF SHIPS IN AND OUT OF CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 1,131—Mr. Forrestall:

How many ships would be required to accommodate the movement (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 per cent of the present liner conference rated cargo?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Under Section 12 of the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act the Minister of Transport reports annually to parliament on liner conference operations. The latest report covered the calendar year 1973 and was tabled March 28, 1974. (Sessional Paper No. 292-1/367). As indicated in that report statistics collected demonstrated the necessity for closer control at the reporting source and for a refinement of interpretation. Appropriate means of satisfying these requirements are being developed with the cooperation of Statistics Canada. In the meantime, satisfactory statistics are not available on the liner conference rated cargo carried in conference vessels.

NUMBER OF SEAMEN REQUIRED OF SHIPS IN AND OUT OF CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 1,132—Mr. Forrestall:

How many merchant seamen would be required to accommodate the staffing of the number of ships required to accommodate the movement (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 per cent of the present liner conference rated cargo?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Satisfactory statistics are not available on the liner conference rated cargo carried in conference vessels: (see reply to Question 1,131).

TYPES OF CONFERENCE VESSELS SERVING CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 1,133—Mr. Forrestall:

How many (a) general cargo (including passenger-cargo) (b) container type vessels were employed in the liner conference rated international inbound or outbound seaborne shipping to serve Canadian ports within the most recent 12-month period?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): A statistical breakdown of Canadian port activity for the calendar year 1972 indicated that 452 different ships had worked within conferences during that 12 month period. Of these; (a) 394 ships could be classed as general cargo or conventional, although many of them would also carry containers; and, (b) 46 could be classed as specialized container ships, and another 12 as Roll on—Roll off (Ro-Ro) ships.

REGISTRY OF CONFERENCE VESSELS SERVING CANADA

Question No. 1,134—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government aware of the nationality of the registry of those vessels serving Canada under liner conferences referred to and overseen by the Canadian Transport Commission according to the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, within the most recent reported period, what was the percentage and number of these vessels registered in (i) Canada (ii) Japan (iii) Liberia (iv) Greece (v) Great Britain (vi) United States (vii) Norway (viii) Sweden (ix) Italy (x) Australia (xi) France (xii) other countries and, for each, what number and percentage were built in Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): A statistical breakdown of this type, made for the calendar year 1972, revealed the following information:

Flag	No. of Vessels	Percentage
Canadian	nil	nil
Japan	31	6.9
Liberia	19	4.2

TOTAL COST OF CBC'S NEW LOGO

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Hogan:

What was the total cost of CBC's new logo including (a) design costs (b) advertising and publicity (c) change-over of stationery, etc.?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Parts (a) (b) and (c). It has not been customary to require the CBC to supply such details of its internal management and administration.

ST. CLEMENTS, ONTARIO—POSTAL FACILITIES

Question No. 1,222—Mr. Beatty:

1. For what reason was the Village of St. Clements, Ontario, reclassified with respect to the provision of postal facilities?

2. Was a survey of future needs in the St. Clements area conducted and, if so, has this survey been made available for comment by the mayor and council of the Township of Wellesley?

3. How many new locations for a facility were considered before a decision was made concerning site selection?

4. On what date will a new building be opened replacing the temporary facility?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. A post office is classified according to the volume of work performed in that office. From time to time a volume of work survey is conducted. Such a survey indicated an increase in the workload of the St. Clements, Ontario, post office warranting a reclassification from group to grade status.

2. A survey of future needs was made and the matter was discussed with township council and township officials on several occasions.

3. The Department of Public Works provides the accommodation for "Grade" post offices. Three leasing possibilities and two trailer sites for temporary accommodation were considered. A permanent site has not yet been selected. Township council and township officials will be consulted.

4. Not known at this time.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—1974

Question No. 1,238—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many OFY projects were approved in Newfoundland in 1974?

2. What was the average cost per OFY project for the approval process in 1974?

MEETING OF OFFICIALS OF PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENTS OF EDUCATION

Question No. 1,342—Mr. Herbert:

1. Will a report be made public of the meeting of officials of provincial Departments of Education convened on November 25, 1974 by the Department of the Secretary of State?

2. What were the reasons for or the objectives of this meeting?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. No, it is not intended that a public report of this exploratory meeting be made.

2. The reason for the meeting, attended mainly by representatives from provincial curriculum departments was to examine the question of the availability of French language textbooks and materials at the elementary and secondary levels, and to make recommendations concerning the courses of action that might be followed to provide a more adequate supply of French language educational materials in situations where French is the minority official language and is the language of instruction for academic subjects.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WHO HAVE TAKEN LANGUAGE TRAINING SINCE 1968

Question No. 1,454—Mr. Allard:

1. Since 1968, how many anglophone public servants have taken French courses?

2. Since 1968, how many francophone public servants have taken English courses?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows:

		English Training	French Training
Academic years, September 1 to August 31	1969–70	818	4,206

EXTENSION OF CAR FERRIES SERVICE

Question No. 1,555—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is it intended to stretch the carferries Holiday Island and Vacationland and, if so, on what date is the extension to be made?

2. How many additional vehicles will this allow these ships to carry?

3. Are there any current plans to provide greater convenience to handicapped persons on the boats by the installations of escalators, elevators or other technical improvements and, if so, what is the nature of such improvements?

4. Are similar corrective and remedial measures planned for the ferry Confederation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No decision has yet been made to stretch the car ferries, Holiday Island and Vacationland.

2. Assuming that it is technically feasible to stretch the vessels and if a decision is made to do so, the maximum number of additional vehicles which could be carried in each ship would be approximately 50.

3. If a decision is made to stretch the vessels, consideration will be given to improving access to the upper decks. The nature of such improvements cannot however be indicated at this time.

4. No.

ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Question No. 1,561—Mr. Andre:

1. How many man months of effort went into the preparation of the statement on energy conservation delivered to the House of Commons by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on Thursday, February 6, 1975?

2. How many officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and other departments were associated with the preparation of these materials?

3. What are the salary ranges of these officials?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1 and 2. It is not possible to provide the specific information requested with regard to the preparation of the material relating to the energy conservation program. In one sense, only a couple of man months went into the preparation of the final document; in another, all of the work of the Office of Energy Conservation since its inception has gone into it. Also numerous officials in other departments have worked on portions of the material presented, particularly the intra-government program.

3. From ES-1 ($8,240-$17,763) to SX-2 ($29,000-$37,000).

HERMANN REPORT

Question No. 1,608—Mr. Marshall:

Are any of the following recommendations made by Dr. Douglas Hermann being favourably considered by the government (a) that appropriate compensation on a continuing basis, over and above any disability pensions awarded, be paid to all Dieppe Prisoners of War (b) that provision be made to compensate similarly other former Prisoners of War who, because of extraordinary stress and trauma related to capture and imprisonment, also suffer from significant physiological and psychological disadvantages (c) that because the difference in widows' benefits for those whose husbands were pensioned above and below 48 per cent is too extreme, the widows of those pensioned below 48 per cent should be awarded a pension that is the same percentage of the widow's pension as the assessment of her deceased husband's disability, including any additional compensation awarded as a result of this study (d) that the mortality survey initiated for this study be established on a continuing basis so that the information will be available for future studies involving veterans?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): All recommendations contained in the report made by Dr. Hermann are under study. Final consideration will be given to these recommendations by the government after the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has completed its study of the report.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ADVERTISING BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 157—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. In the period March 18 to April 20, 1974, what was the total value of advertising placed by the government in the newspapers (a) La Presse (b) Le Devoir (c) Le Jour (d) Montréal-Matin (e) The Montreal Gazette (f) The Montreal Star?

2. (a) Is there a policy against advertising in any of the aforementioned newspapers and, if so, what newspapers and for what reasons (b) what criteria determine whether and how much federal advertising is inserted in each of the aforementioned newspapers?

3. Are there any newspapers published in Canada in which, as a matter of policy, the government does not place advertisements and, if so, what are those newspapers, and, in each case, what is the reason for the policy?

4. In what newspapers published outside Canada does the government regularly insert advertisements and, in each case, what is the reason for the selection of that newspaper?

Return tabled.

LIP—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS IN THE CONSTITUENCY OF LANGELIER, QUEBEC

Question No. 617—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of money allocated under the Local Initiatives Programme for 1973-74 in the constituency of Langelier, Quebec (a) what are the names of all projects involved along with their addresses and the names and addresses of those signing the applications (b) in each case what is a detailed description of the actual project, specifically including the functions performed under the project?

2. What are the names and addresses of all persons or organizations who recommended each project in any manner whatsoever to the Department?

Return tabled.

LIP—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS IN CONSTITUENCY OF DOLLARD, QUEBEC

Question No. 619—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of money allocated under the Local Initiatives Programme for 1973-74 in the constituency of Dollard, Quebec (a) what are the names of all projects involved along with their addresses and the names and addresses of those signing the applications (b) in each case what is a detailed description of the actual project, specifically including the functions performed under the project?

2. What are the names and addresses of all persons or organizations who recommended each project in any manner whatsoever to the Department?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—TRAVEL EXPENSES

Question No. 712—Mr. Stevens:

1. In each fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, 1973 and 1974, and for the six month period ending September 30, 1974, what was the aggregate expenditure by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for travel abroad by (a) the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and his immediate staff (b) departmental staff (c) the staff of boards, commissions, tribunals, Crown corporations or other similar agencies reporting to the Minister (d) others whose expenses were paid in part or in whole directly or indirectly by the government?

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

2. In the case of an expenditure in excess of $200 (a) what was the purpose of the foreign trip (b) what was the furthest destination (c) what is the name of the person(s) who took the trip (d) how long was the person(s) outside the country (e) what was the nature of the expenditure (f) how many others were in the party making the trip?

NUMBER OF FOREIGN NATIONALS GIVEN INSTRUCTION IN CANADA

Question No. 905—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. During the past five years, how many foreign nationals were given instruction in Canada in military establishments?

2. What countries, and how many persons from each country, were involved?

3. Under what conditions (invitation, international agreement or other arrangements) did they come to Canada?

4. What was the nature of the instruction they were or are being given?

5. What sums were disbursed by the government for their instruction and what items were covered by these disbursements?

*CIDA—REALLOCATIONS

Question No. 1,531—Mr. Landers:

Has CIDA re-allocated in the present fiscal year a sum of $117 million and, if so, what was the purpose of the re-allocation and for what specific projects and purposes will the re-allocation sums be spent?

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, CIDA, as a matter of normal practice, adjusts its spending patterns to reflect changing priorities in the recipient countries and patterns of availability of certain goods and services in Canada which are to be supplied to those developing countries. The $117 million in readjustments were a response to the increased and urgent needs of many developing countries caused by the energy crisis, inflationary factors and shortages of food grains. Projects such as the purchase of rice seedlings, financing of hydro electric and the purchase of fertilizer, etc. were advanced. Seven projects which were already under way, in the amount of $20.1 million, were advanced. In addition, ten projects were considered for early approval to help in off-setting the effects of energy costs and inflation, in the amount of $24.9 million. Finally, at the World Food Conference in Rome, last November, Canada pledged $50 million in food aid to the countries in greatest need. It was considered that six countries were on the priority list for this assistance. This amount of $50 million ($51.4 million to be exact) was in addition to the $20 million previously allocated to Bangladesh, one of the most seriously affected countries, making a total food aid commitment of $71.4 million in addition to the original regular allocation for the 1974-75 fiscal year. These allocations represent $116.4 million in development assistance and food aid.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rarely intrude upon the time of the House in respect of matters of procedure or order, but I am deeply disturbed in reference to question No. 39 which was placed on the order paper on September 30. It is identical to one placed on the order paper during the preceding parliament, on April 8, 1974, and it deals with the sale of munitions by this country to various parts of the world. In light of reports as to vast sales to Viet Nam and to Turkey, and the article in Maclean's which suggests that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is strongly pro-Turkey on the Cypriot question, I am wondering why there is no way this parliament can find out why this great peacekeeping country of the world, so we are told, sells so many munitions all over the world that it takes a year for the figures to be toted up.

I hope there is nothing worse than ministerial misfeasance here. I believe this is a very serious question affecting the stature of Canada in the international community and I am anxious to have an answer as soon as possible, as, I think, are the people of Canada.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question No. 767 dated November 6 reads:

1. On what date will the report on non-official languages, a study commissioned by the Secretary of State in November 1972, be made public?

2. Would the minister name the 70 recommendations made by the former minister of state for multiculturalism?

3. What recommendations have been implemented?

This question has been on the order paper since the demise of the ministry of multiculturalism and the firing of Dr. Stanley Haidasz. This government has neglected to produce the report and I should like to know when it is going to come before the House.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with regard to what was said by the hon. member who just spoke, that question was answered today.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order before we get into the question period. It was made clear during the past week that the opposition is interested in examining contracts relating to dredging and related matters. I am not making anything of the absence from the House of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) for a reasonable period of time, for reasons of health—I say that most sincerely—but it is a striking coincidence that there is also absent today, during the question period, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand).

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stanfield: It may well be that the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) will be able to show that both these ministers have very urgent public business elsewhere, but it is a striking coincidence which I think requires some explanation. We are used to the stonewalling tactics of the government in terms of inquiries of this sort, but as Leader of the Opposition I must protest the absence from the House today, during the question period, of the Minister of Transport and the Solicitor General. In light of the questions before the House, I would insist, if I may within my rights, Mr. Speaker, on receiving some explanation from the Acting Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is today on a mission that I am sure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would consider very important. He is attending the graduation of the first RCMP woman constable.

● (1430)

Mr. Sharp: Since in this Parliament we are giving increased recognition to the position of women in society, I think it is suitable that the Solicitor General should be there on this occasion. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Acting Minister of Labour are both in Montreal having consultations with representatives of the trade unions in Quebec with respect to inflation.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INDUSTRIAL DISLOCATION THROUGH STRIKES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SOLVE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I place my first question to the Minister of Finance I would say to the Acting Prime Minister, with no offence to him, that I think the House might have spared him more readily today to attend that ceremony, representing the Government of Canada, than the Solicitor General.

I ask the Minister of Finance whether it is still his position that the alternative to some sort of national consensus on income and inflation restraint is that there will be a period of "prolonged and bitter industrial strife which could leave everyone considerably worse off by substantially reducing the size of the pie that is available to be shared between us". Is that still the position?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when I linked those two subjects I did not put them in terms of alternatives; I put them in terms of the general scenario. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to pinpoint what he is referring to and then I will try to reply.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance was out skating on the canal over the weekend. Perhaps I could put a very blunt question to him. I ask him, now that we have clearly entered a period of prolonged and bitter industrial strife, what does he propose to do?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the full ambit of the preamble.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister how he proposes to develop a consensus different from that which is being established, different from the pattern which is being established to reach settlements, since the government has been fooling around with this whole consensus business for some six months.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems this country now faces, of course, which is recognized by those in charge of the various aspects of the economy including leaders of labour, is the fact that labour settlements in Canada in the last quarter of 1974 were running at roughly double the rate of settlements in the United States, jeopardizing our competitive position. Because of our situation, those on all sides of the economy recognize that a consensus is necessary. That is why we have had far from discouraging results in the conversations we have had.

LEVEL OF PRICE INCREASES FOR NEXT TWO YEARS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in light of that observation, I wonder whether the minister accepts the proposition that inflation and the expectations of continuing high inflation are at the heart of the industrial problems which lie ahead of us. So that this consensus might be developed properly and labour might know where it stands, would the minister be frank with the House and the people of Canada and tell us what level of price increases he and the government expect to see during the next two years—the balance of this year and 1976—so that labour and industry might know what the minister is seeking in terms of guidelines?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the evolving conversations which are being held at the moment succeed, then we will be in a position to set that forth. I set forth the proposition in some detail to the hon. gentleman's leader two weeks ago Thursday, and I would ask him to look at my summary of the state of affairs as of that date.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REOPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct this question to the President of the Treasury Board and bring him back into direct contact. I ask the President of the Treasury Board what efforts are being made either by himself or his departmental officials in relation to reopening negotiations concerning the general labour and trades group.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, since last Thursday we have been trying to convince union officials to meet our own conciliators. I do not know whether both parties will be able to get together today. I do hope they will meet as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—EFFECT ON ENVIRONMENT—REQUEST PROJECT NOT PROCEED UNTIL RECEIPT OF BERGER REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister regarding the hearings on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline which are taking place today in Yellowknife before the Berger commission. In view of the fact that Mr. Justice Berger has been authorized by the government to consider the social, environmental and economic impact of the proposed Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline and to recommend the terms and conditions which should be imposed on any successful applicant, I ask the Acting Prime Minister the following question: can he assure the House that no authorization to proceed with the project will be granted until the government has received and examined the report of the Berger commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I could not give such a categorical assurance. It would depend a great deal on the nature of the report to be presented by Mr. Justice Berger.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Acting Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I was not asking whether the government would agree not to proceed if Mr. Justice Berger's report should be negative. But in view of the fact that the government appointed Mr. Justice Berger to look into the social, environmental and economic aspects of this measure, will the minister undertake to assure the House and the people of Canada that the government will not proceed with the construction of the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline until it has received the report of the commission which the government itself set up for the purpose of looking into this question?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to give a categorical reply to this question. It is our hope that Mr. Justice Berger will bring down his report in time for it to be considered when we receive a recommendation from the National Energy Board. If it should be a recommendation to proceed with the building of the pipeline, I could imagine circumstances under which it might be desirable to have some consultations with Mr. Justice Berger about the nature of his report, if it appeared that the time he was going to take would be so long as to interfere with what was considered to be a very desirable decision.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the National Energy Board will be looking into the engineering aspects and the supply and demand question, but not into the social, environmental and economic aspects, I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this means that the government has already made up its mind, as was indicated by the President of the Treasury Board who when Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said at Yellowknife on January 18 that, "this government, after carefully weighing all the factors involved, has come to the conclusion that a gas pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley is in the national interest." Are we to take it from that statement that the government has already decided to act, and that all the other assurances are a sop to the general public in order to pacify the opposition, and the government intends to go ahead without waiting for the Berger report or any other relevant data?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the conclusion one should draw. I think there is a general understanding of urgency in respect of a decision because of the energy situation and the need to know whether in fact there will be access to gas from the Arctic. I believe there is general agreement, also, that the social and environmental factors should be looked at very carefully. From long experience I would rather hesitate to say which of these particular steps must come first in such a process. It is an extremely complicated one. I believe that the government is looking at all aspects of the problem carefully and with all the attention that I think the problem requires. But I would hesitate to say that one particular step has to be completed before a decision can be made, because it might be in the public interest at that time to adopt a somewhat different procedure in order to reach the right decision.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING AGENCY FOR POULTRY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that poultry producers from the St. Damase Co-op in Quebec have, in protest, intercepted an American truck loaded with United States imported chickens, while their own production quotas have been reduced, can the minister advise the House whether the National Farm Products Marketing Council has received an application for the creation of a national marketing agency for poultry and, if so, whether this application will be granted?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As I have said in the House on many occasions, poultry production is not under a national marketing agency. Public hearings were held last year on whether such a national marketing agency should be established. After the meetings were held, a consensus was reached that they should proceed with negotiations for setting up a national agency for broilers, but this has not been done, mainly because of the controversy in which CEMA was involved at that time. I have no intention of proceeding with it at this time unless we have more federal authority for a national marketing board than we have for CEMA at present, which makes it unworkable in my opinion.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the House whether Canada must now resort to poultry imports, since Canadian production is deficient, in order to meet the internal market needs?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker. There is a great deal of poultry in Canada at present, not as much as there was last year at this time but sufficient to supply the Canadian market. Until procedures are developed for what we call supply management on a national basis, there is not much one can do about imports so long as they are not being dumped in this country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): My question is supplementary to a previous question and it is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with a previous question with regard to the Berger commission. Are we to believe that the Department of the Environment will be presenting a brief to the Berger commission outlining the dangers to the ecology of building a gas pipeline, so that the Berger commission may understand completely the whole question of pollution and the degree to which the ecology might be affected by the building of that pipeline?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): It is my understanding that the Department of the Environment is turning over to the commission all the studies that it has made, and it is also lending some personnel.

Mr. Horner: I appreciate the answer of the Acting Prime Minister. Will that information be made available to interested groups and people who might well want to submit briefs to the Berger commission with regard to the building of the pipeline? In other words, will the information now known within the Department of the Environment be made available to interested groups as well as to the Berger commission?

Mr. Sharp: I will take that question under consideration. I would have thought, however, that if is not necessary for many citizens' groups to know about the government's studies. Presumably they have their own views. If their purpose is simply to try to argue with the government on its studies, that is one thing, but the purpose of the Berger commission is to deal with the problem per se and not to be prejudiced either by the government or by outsiders.

Mr. Horner: Surely the minister would agree with me that interested people in Canada who might desire permission to submit a brief to the Berger commission are also taxpayers, and are therefore entitled to the expertise and knowledge already developed within the Department of the Environment so that they might better judge the situation and present a better brief to the commission.

Mr. Sharp: As I said, I am willing to take this request into consideration. I just added the other words because I believe that the important thing about the Berger commission is that it will not be influenced unduly by the government's position and will welcome views from the public.

ENERGY

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—BERGER COMMISSION—STUDIES UNDERTAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question along the line of questions put by other hon. members, for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was my understanding, having heard a number of answers by the minister over the years, that the department was making studies. But having listened to the Acting Prime Minister today I ask the minister whether the Berger commission is to be farce. Why have we had the other studies? Judging from what the Acting Prime Minister said, the project could go ahead without any studies.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I do not think the Acting Prime Minister said that. He said, as the government has said on many past occasions in this House and outside it, that any decision on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline could go ahead only after appropriate regulatory proceedings, particularly after a study of land rights.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it unequivocally that the minister and the government will not proceed with this project until a report by Mr. Justice Berger has been received? That is a clearcut question to which I would like to receive a clearcut answer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly our objective would be to have Mr. Justice Berger's report before us. The government cannot proceed unless there has been a positive decision by the National Energy Board on this particular subject.

TRANSPORT

STATUS OF DREDGING CONTRACTS IN LIGHT OF INVESTIGATION UNDER WAY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Transport. In light of the investigation now taking place into federal dredging contracts, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether there is a freeze on the awarding of new contracts and on the payment of federal funds for these contracts?

[Mr. Horner.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such freeze. An investigation is going on by the RCMP into a couple of contracts. These are continuing. As the Minister of Transport said, some payments on the dredging contract in the St. Lawrence have been held back. The government is now being sued for payment. That is how the matter stands; there has been no other action.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that it took almost two years for the RCMP to extend their inquiry from Hamilton into the dredging contract at Île d'Orléans, and in view of the fact that currently in the estimates there are some $10 million worth of federal dredging contracts for the St. Lawrence river ports, is it the intention of the government to order a full-scale inquiry into all dredging contracts in Canada?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Transport said the other day, I think, inquiries are going ahead on contracts in cases where there is a belief that there might have been conspiracy. These inquiries are continuing. If the hon. member has evidence in other respects, perhaps he would submit it.

HAMILTON—REQUEST BY CITY COUNCIL FOR INQUIRY INTO ACTIVITIES OF HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister in light of the answers of the Minister of Transport. Is the Acting Prime Minister aware of a letter dated February 26 from the Clerk of the city of Hamilton which in effect indicates that on October 31, 1972, the city passed a resolution petitioning the federal government to conduct a full-scale public inquiry into the activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, and members of the council are still most anxious that this inquiry be conducted? Is the Acting Prime Minister aware of that letter and, if so, what answer will he give?

● (1450)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since I am not aware of the letter I will have to make inquiries.

Mr. Alexander: On behalf of the city council, I would give notice to the government that on October 31, 1972, the city council passed a resolution to the effect that the federal government be petitioned to conduct a full-scale public inquiry into the activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking another supplementary question. I hope he is going to use it for that purpose.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to the end of the resolution. Now that the Acting Prime Minister is advised of that resolution, would he report back to the House as soon as possible on the government's intentions?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, an inquiry is under way. I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree that any inquiry should go to its conclusion before any other action is taken.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that an inquiry has been going on, but the Acting Prime Minister has conveniently forgotten the key point of the resolution, that the city of Hamilton wants the federal government to be involved in a full-scale public inquiry. The Acting Prime Minister has heard the question; now will he give me an answer?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did give the answer, that is, that we did institute an inquiry. It has brought some people to justice and it may bring others. I am sure the hon. gentleman, who is an experienced man of the law and a very distinguished one, will agree that that procedure should be followed.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT ETHNIC DISCRIMINATION BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS IN HANDLING INVESTMENT FUNDS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance? What steps is the government taking to ensure that financial institutions will not seek or handle Arab investment funds on terms involving discrimination against anyone on the basis of their ethnic origin or religion, such discriminatory approach being repugnant to Canadians generally?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if any specific instance were brought to my attention I would deal with it within the limits of the responsibility I have under the Bank Act.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When the Minister of Finance makes his tour of Middle Eastern countries in a few weeks, will he make clear to the leaders of the countries he visits that it is contrary to the policy of the Canadian government that any investment funds from these countries to Canada be handled or used on terms involving discrimination against anyone on the basis of their ethnic origin or religion?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will be travelling through those countries in my capacity as chairman of the International Monetary Fund committee of 20. As the situation comes up I will be glad to make the point.

AIR CANADA

RESIGNATION OF YVES MENARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the resignation on Friday of Yves Menard, an Air Canada vice-president, following a Southam News Story that there is a possible conflict of interest, and also the statement by Yves Pratte, chairman of the board, that he deeply regretted the circumstances leading to the decision, I ask the Acting Prime Minister, without passing judgment on the case, whether he has investigated the matter and, if so, can he report to the House?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And who is next?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the president of Air Canada made this decision on his own motion.

Mr. Nystrom: I assume the minister means the vice-president.

Mr. Sharp: No, the president.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. Did the president of Air Canada request Mr. Menard's resignation and, if so, under what circumstances? Can the Acting Prime Minister also tell the House whether the conflict of interest legislation now being contemplated by the government for senior civil servants also pertains to high officials of Crown corporations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that Mr. Menard asked to resign for personal reasons and Mr. Pratte accepted his resignation.

Mr. Nystrom: A final supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In the conflict of interest legislation pertaining to senior civil servants which is now before the government, is there something that will also apply to high officials in Crown corporations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is one of the questions that should be considered. It is a difficult problem but I think in general the same sort of principle should apply.

SUGGESTION EDUCATIONAL BUDGET WILL RESULT IN REDUCTION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I would address it to the Acting Prime Minister or the parliamentary secretary. Has the minister received representations from Indian bands in Ontario that the proposed educational budget for the coming year will result in the elimination of existing educational programs?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any information on that matter for the hon. member, but I will inquire and see that it is communicated to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Holmes: A supplementary question. Would the parliamentary secretary undertake to ask the minister if he will reassess the entire educational financing program for Ontario, and if in the interim he would indicate that there will be no reduction of personnel in the support programs that exist?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do so.

HOUSING

NATIVE AND RURAL HOUSING—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF NUMBER OF UNITS TO BE CONSTRUCTED UNDER FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the obvious failure of the native and rural housing program in 1974, can the minister tell the House how many units his department intends to construct this year under the 50,000 unit, five-year program?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in this context I do not like to set specific targets or dates. As the hon. member knows perhaps better than any other member of this House, it is a long and painful process. Sometimes I think when gains are made by the native people in housing they may appear small by our standards but they represent an amazing effort and accomplishment for the native people themselves.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my cold. I expect my leader will advise me to take a couple of days off.

An hon. Member: We will see you in the Defence hospital.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister how his department intends to communicate the secret native and rural housing program to the native people and members of the House of Commons. That is the program that he announced on March 27 last year. Only 24 homes out of 50,000 were built in one year.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I have been meeting on a continuing basis with several native housing groups across the country, as have my officials who are concentrating on that area. Rather than describe the whole program in the question period and have the hon. gentleman get pneumonia, I would suggest that he attend meetings of the committee on Bill C-46. This committee will be discussing the programs of CMHC and specifically this program. I will be delighted to answer questions in detail at that time as we rush to get the legislation through.

NATIVE AND RURAL HOUSING—ALLOCATION OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS FOR 1975

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the rural part of the native housing program. Would the minister indicate if he has reached agreement with all provinces with regard to funding to be allocated this year to rural and native housing?

[Mr. Holmes.]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, allocations have been made and discussions held with all provinces. Although some agreements with the provinces have not been completed, it is expected this will be done within a short period.

INEQUITY BETWEEN TARIFF ON IMPORTED CHEESE AND CANADIAN CHEESE IMPORTED BY EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On February 6 this year I asked the minister what, if anything, he proposed to do for or about the Canadian cheese processors whose volume of production had dropped 25 per cent to 30 per cent recently because they faced European Common Market import tariffs some 20 to 60 times higher than those European cheeses were facing coming into Canada. At that time the minister said this should be reviewed and that we cannot be the good guys all the time. May I ask if the review is over, and is the minister going to be a good guy or a bad guy? What is going to be done, and when?

● (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be a reasonable person. I have a submission prepared after our study. It will be going before cabinet in the next few days.

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As all members, I am sure, were relieved last week upon receiving the minister's press release saying that he had solved at least one agricultural crisis, namely, that of the importation to Canada of live turtles, and without implying that the turtle crisis is any less important than the cheese crisis, I wonder if the minister will undertake to act on the cheese crisis with something approaching the same seriousness and concern he exhibited in dealing with the turtle invasion.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the same can be said for cheeses as for turtles; there should be Canadian turtles for Canadians and Canadian cheeses for Canadians. That policy will be followed. The hon. member has made light of turtles, but turtles carry a distinct disease which children handling them can catch. We do not want this to happen in our country. There are, as well, difficulties with cheeses. We have banned the entry of certain cheeses because they contain insecticides and pesticides. We do not want such cheeses to enter Canada. This applies especially to cheeses about which we are talking; we have strong reservations about allowing their entry to Canada. Health comes first and other trade matters later.

Mr. Baldwin: There are already too many turtles in the cabinet.

TEXTILES—LAY-OFFS IN SAINT-HYACINTHE DUE TO IMPORTATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

My question relates to textiles in Canada. In his present study of the very recent recommendations of the Canadian Textile and Clothing Board, does the minister consider specifically the alarming increase in imports of sweaters, undershirts and underwear, whose increase rate, according to the figures of Penman's Company Limited, has gone from 1970 to 1974 to average figures of 69.7 and 97.2 per cent, according to the articles involved, and, second, does the minister consider the direct relation between those imports and the thousands of temporary layoffs in the country or even on the more than definitive 200 layoffs recently announced at Penman's in Saint-Hyacinthe?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe some members of the apparel industry are forming an association and will make representations to the Textile and Clothing Board. I, for one, want to join with the hon. member opposite and participate in any discussions on bathing suits and bikinis.

Mr. Stanfield: Very funny.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I thank the minister for his support. I hope he will act and not merely talk. My supplementary question is as follows, at the request of the member for St. Boniface: the Penman's Co. Limited, where workers have been on strike for nine months, having recently announced that it could only partially reopen its Saint-Hyacinthe factory and that it would close its spinning, felting and dyeing shops and dismiss over 110 employees as a result of market losses, is the minister prepared, without waiting for a demonstration on the hill, to take specific measures in co-operation, if necessary, with his colleagues the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration as well as with the assistance of Quebec authorities in order to encourage Penman's Limited to recover gradually its markets or to adjust to new markets?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, both the hon. member and I are concerned about the solution of the long strike. I hope the strike can be settled soon, because then the company can resume normal operations.

HEALTH

CLOSING DOWN OF ACCOM SERVICES IN OTTAWA REGION—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Since the only crisis referral service for French-speaking youth in the Ottawa region, ACCOM, has been forced to close down its residential services for at least a month, and possibly for good, and since the appeal of the Vanier Centre to regional, provincial and federal officials for immediate financial assistance was refused, can the minister state when financial assistance for this important service will be available?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to examine the matter raised by the hon. member and to see whether the federal government has any responsibility in that field.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister? In view of the fact that the Department of the Environment had planned to appear before the Berger commission to oppose the Mackenzie Valley natural gas pipeline on environmental grounds, and had requested the opportunity to appear, was it government policy to cancel this intervention?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is giving me information of which I was not aware. I doubt its validity, but will make inquiries.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the National Energy Board is considering only the economic and supply aspects of the question, will the Acting Prime Minister look into arrangements which the Department of the Environment had made to bring the environmental aspects of the proposed pipeline out into the open?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I also question the premises of that question. As I explained in relation to an earlier question, the Department of the Environment is co-operating with the Berger commission and making available through that commission all its studies and personnel who may be helpful. Whether, in addition, the department should appear before the commission is a separate question. So far as I know, they have never been refused, and they have not refused to appear.

TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES POULTRY AUTHORIZED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the Americans export into Canada, live chickens ready to be slaughtered, can the minister tell the House whether Canadian importers must apply for permits from his department to import that live poultry?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to make inquiries and let the hon. member know the answer.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING WAGE PARITY FOR GRAIN HANDLERS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Given the prolonged tie-up of west coast grain shipments, will the government be using the same sort of guidelines for dealing with its employees as it used last fall when it introduced grain handling legislation, namely, that workers working side by side and doing the same job should have parity in pay?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we had the opportunity to face that problem later in the year during the strike of grain inspectors and we found another ground for settlement different from the one provided for in the summer legislation. Therefore, the hon. member's question does not apply in the circumstances.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES REFLECTED IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As the government the Prime Minister leads has urged all Canadians to use restraint as an anti-inflation device, can the Acting Prime Minister advise the House why the estimates for the fiscal year 1975-76 record an increase of 29.3 per cent in expenditures for the operation of the Prime Minister's office?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Important as that question may be, it surely contains the basic element of the whole process of the examination of estimates in committee.

[Mr. Sharp.]

GRAIN

DELAYS IN EXPORT SHIPMENTS—EFFECT ON CONTRACTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the almost continuous delays this past summer in the movement of grain for export, can the minister advise the House whether Canada has defaulted on any contracts with the result that customers have had to look to other grain exporting countries for supplies?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer, there have been instances in which the board has entered into discussions with people to whom we have sold grain in order to phase deliveries over a longer period of time. That would entail, of course, some inconvenience to our customers.

Mr. Neil: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the minister answered my question. Can he advise the House whether delays in moving grain have resulted in Canada being called on to pay sums of money under penalty clauses in contracts entered into for the sale of grain?

Mr. Lang: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will look into the matter on an up to date basis.

DELAYS IN EXPORT SHIPMENTS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS IN MEETING INCREASED DEMURRAGE COSTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board? As the grain producers of Canada had to foot a $17 million bill for demurrage costs during the last crop year because of shipping delays, and as it appears that this performance will be repeated during the present crop year, the government apparently not having taken initiatives to restore orderly grain movement, has the minister considered the provision of a mechanism for cushioning farmers from the effects of these huge demurrage costs which can be very serious indeed.

Mr. Horner: There are 40 ships tied up today.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not correct to suggest that the government is not taking any initiatives to take care of the current situation. It is also true that strikes have an impact on many people in the economy. There is no way within government policy that those impacts can be borne generally.

● (1510)

Mr. Mazankowski: I realize that the cost of strikes has to be borne by someone. However, in view of the fact that the producers, the farmers, have no way of recovering the cost, and the fact they have been faced with a continuous tie-up in shipments, is the minister taking any initiative, on behalf of the farmers of Canada, to bring forward some sort of program to alleviate these disastrous effects that have been placed on the backs of the farmers?

Mr. Lang: Exactly the same situation exists for everyone else. While this is not a delightful answer, it is true that even with this kind of cost the farmer is receiving more for his grain in the current year than ever before.

PAYMENTS BY PROVINCES IN RESPECT OF CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. During the February 17 debate in the House of Commons on CEMA, the minister stated he was glad to see that most provinces had either paid up their debts incurred in 1974 or had made binding agreements to rid themselves of those debts by the end of the year. Can the minister confirm whether the Quebec producer board is paying the differential service charge to CEMA? If not, what action is proposed by CEMA, the council or the minister to acquire this money?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met the chairman of the Farm Products Marketing Council this morning. He reported that the province of British Columbia had paid their back payments of $139,000. I do not believe Quebec has paid theirs. There were negotiations and discussions going on between the Farm Products Marketing Council and CEMA last Thursday. Discussions will be going on with both Ontario and Quebec this week. That is the latest report which I received about ten o'clock this morning.

Mr. Murta: In view of the minister's statement that he talked to the chairman of the Farm Products Marketing Council recently, can he now indicate which provinces are not paying their levies to CEMA? Also, is CEMA paying to the provinces the amounts owned to them?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring in a report on that for the hon. member.

INEQUITY BETWEEN TARIFF ON IMPORTED CHEESE AND CANADIAN CHEESE IMPORTED BY EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I might comment on a very important question about cheese asked by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot. I do not want to leave the impression with the House that nothing is being done for these producers. The hon. member would not want that. I am sure he wants the House to know that the Prime Minister was successful in negotiating no duty on cheese going into the Common Market as of April 1. The duty on cheddar cheese was 67 cents a pound. There will be no duty on our cheese until 1979. As far as we are concerned, this is a major breakthrough for Canadian producers of that cheese.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question period has expired. The minister raised a point about which he had been questioned previously. The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot feels he is entitled to a further supplementary question. I have recognized the hon. member for York-Simcoe and there is not time for both questions.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

MARINE INDUSTRIES LTD.—EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACT OF INVESTIGATION IN PROGRESS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of current investigations into the $21 million federal government contract awarded to a group of companies including Marine Industries Ltd. of Quebec, and in view of Marine Industries being the third ranking principal exporter of record receiving the benefit of Export Development financing, having received $104 million in commitments up to September 30, 1974, will the minister indicate if Marine Industries is continuing to receive the benefit of this type of financing? Have any new contracts been signed, or will they be signed involving export financing where Marine Industries will be the principal benefactor?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the detail of existing contracts under negotiation, but I see no connection between the first part of the premise of the hon. member's question and the purposes of the Export Development Corporation.

Mr. Stevens: As federal government claims may arise against Marine Industries as a result of current investigations, has the minister instructed the Export Development Corporation to hold back funds that may accrue to Marine Industries pending the outcome of the investigations?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I see no connection between the two programs.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the minister's remarks a few moments ago about cheese producers. I am sure all members of the House welcome the minister's indication that he is treating the matter as one of urgency. I simply point out to him the difficulty faced by processors. On one hand they hear what the minister has said, and on the other hand they hear his officials saying, confident as they are that some accommodation will be worked out with the European Common Market, that it could still take some months to resolve the situation. I point this out because these producers are left in a quandary. On one hand they read that it will take some months, and on the other hand they hear in this House of Commons that it may be worked out this week or next.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that discussions took place for weeks or months with regard to specialty cheeses. Discussions did take place before the final agreement was reached on cheddar cheese. As of April 1 there will be no duty on cheddar cheese going into the Common Market. The duty was formerly 67 cents a pound. I am very optimistic that we can come to an agreement on specialty cheeses. It is not as large a volume but is still a very important part of our cheese production.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The sole purpose of the question period is to solicit information on subjects of national importance and urgency. When listening to the radio this morning, I heard there had been some sort of settlement or agreement reached with Mint employees involved in the minting of coins. I have been keenly interested in the GLTG with regard to the grain tie-up. During the question period I failed to elicit any information with regard to this. The Minister of Labour is absent from the House, and the President of the Treasury Board has just left. We did not get any information from the government on what they are doing about the strike. They have settled the Mint strike, but at what per cent did they settle? What is the government doing about the 40 boats tied up in Vancouver? Surely we are entitled to this kind of information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has described the purpose of the question period very fully, namely, to solicit information on issues of national importance. However, the hon. member had the floor during the question period and did not put that question.

Mr. Horner: I would like to draw to Your Honour's attention that I rose on a supplementary to a previous question. I never at any time had the floor at which time I could have initiated this question. I draw that to Your Honour's attention in view of your remarks with regard to my participation in this question period.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This matter only came to my attention in the last few moments as a result of two questions on the order paper which were answered today. The answers have just been delivered to my desk. I refer to questions Nos. 534 and 1,181 concerning certain LIP projects.

● (1520)

They concern LIP projects known as Project Aldergrove and Research Anti-Poverty, and another project, No. 311872, in London East, involving the award of a $53,000 contract to a contractor who reportedly boasted in the press that he had given $10,000 to the Liberal party.

As part of both these questions I asked for the names of those who recommended the projects or communicated with the minister urging that these applications be granted. I think this is a legitimate question for a member of the House to ask. I feel that in connection with my question of privilege I should read one sentence from the answer:

Both projects were suspended when suspicion of financial irregularities arose. An investigation of the projects was initiated thereafter.

Then the answer goes on to blame the situation on poor bookkeeping and other things. The point is, I asked for the names of those who endorsed these projects, and their government came back with the answer:

[Mr. Whelan.]

The Department of Manpower and Immigration regards as confidential the names and contents of all representations made to the minister or the department.

I think that answer is an insult to all members of the House. It has taken since last October to produce this garbage by way of an answer. I say to the government, why bother to answer a question at all unless there is an intention to give the information which is sought? An answer of this sort is a disgrace and I do not believe that I, or any other member, should have to put up with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot I wish to point out that I was prepared, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, to give a report to the House on the settlement of the strike at the Mint. If the House wishes, I can give that report now.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

IMMIGRATION

MOTION TO REFER GREEN PAPER TO SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider the green paper on immigration policy tabled by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the House of Commons on February 3, 1975; and to invite the views of the public on the issues raised therein;

That 15 members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date be members on the part of this House on the special joint committee;

That the committee have power to appoint from among its members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of advisers to assist in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required;

That the committee submit their report not later than July 31, 1975;

That the quorum of the committee be 12 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 6 members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry on division?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Prud'homme: Did I hear Your Honour say the motion had been carried on division? I did not hear any dissent.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I asked whether it was the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion. There was a clear negative voice. I was looking about for hon. members who might wish to participate in the debate, and I did not see the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), as I should have done.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I rise on a point of order? There was a general understanding that there would be a brief debate on this subject, and we were expecting the minister to lead off that debate. Just because he sat back in his seat I do not think he should be excused from leading off. I am sure the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) would be happy to follow him.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, contrary to the indication given by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), I was not sitting sleeping. I was waiting in anticipation of the surprising possibility that the motion might not be debated, though it was not my understanding that this would be the case.

I appreciate the courtesy of the House in allowing me to lead off. I certainly have a particular interest in the motion to appoint a special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider the green paper on immigration policy. I look forward to following its deliberations and receiving a report from such a committee on a matter which I consider to be of extreme importance.

The conclusions of the committee will be of great assistance in formulating a comprehensive review of policies and programs in the immigration field. The general process of review was embarked upon, when the green paper was tabled on February 3, or even earlier, a year or so ago, when we discussed the possibility that such a green paper might be forthcoming.

As I have said in the House on other occasions, the green paper does not itself make definite recommendations nor does it propose cut and dried solutions to the questions set out therein. Rather, it explores the issues of immigration and population growth, and discusses some of the choices which are open to us. It is a document Canadians may use when considering these or other options in relation to Canada's population future. The green paper is presented as a means of assisting the process of policy formulation and the examination of the new legislation which the government intends to submit to parliament soon. Accordingly, it has been made public in the hope that it will stimulate a country-wide debate upon immigration policy. I might add that this hope or intention appears to be on the way to fulfilment since the green paper was tabled a month ago.

It is also my hope that the debate will not only embrace such questions as selection procedures and administrative control, in other words, the nuts and bolts of immigration machinery, but that it should also take into consideration the development of a population policy for Canada to which immigration is closely linked.

There is a need to develop a common idea with regard to population growth in Canada and to be clear about its goals if all regions of Canada are to realize their full economic and social potential, avoiding the concentration of too many people in some areas and the presence of an insufficient number of people in others.

I know there are some who say that, because of the sheer physical size of our country and the relatively high standard of living our people enjoy, the population question is an academic one. On the other hand, there is a great deal of concern about the consequences of increasing urbanization, the many problems which accompany that process and which make the question of population growth one of urgent importance right now. At the same time there are other considerations. Alberta may need more workers, while the maritime provinces might be more concerned about internal migration.

There have been a host of world developments, including the population explosion. I am told that the world population is increasing at the rate of some 200,000 people a day. Then again there is the threat of food shortages, both now and in the future. All these events have made us appreciate much more the importance of knowing where we are going in population terms, of making deliberate rather than benign decisions.

While the green paper concentrates mainly on immigration policy, it is also concerned with demographic policy and population policy. We note that immigration based on current trends, of which we are aware, is very likely if those trends continue to replace natural increase as the main source of population growth in this country before the end of the century. Therefore, a sound immigration policy for the future will need to rest squarely on the foundation of some views, and some policy flowing from those views, on population in this country.

If we are to examine population policy and immigration in that context, we must be just as concerned with where people live in Canada as about how many people there are here. We must also recognize that immigration itself is not the only factor. Perhaps quantitatively it will not be the main factor because of the consequence of internal migration trends in this country. So population policies, in short, must deal with the question of distribution as much as with the question of growth. In this regard there is an obviously inherent question for Canadians in the prairie and Atlantic regions.

As I have indicated in my comments, the federal government has begun to study the various aspects of the demographic question and has concluded that we need guidelines for the future. We hope that these guidelines will provide the framework within which to integrate a whole array of interrelated policy measures and ideas affecting population trends, a spectrum of policies that will cover areas such as regional development, urban objectives, national characteristics, as well as transportation, communications and industrial growth.

We must also recognize in this process that some of the decisions and policies are the responsibility of one level of government. In other areas of endeavour, responsibility and jurisdiction lie between governments or with both the federal and provincial governments. Some are purely provincial and some, in my opinion, in this context, require the input of the municipalities.

It is also our conviction that the formulation and broad acceptance of an over-all set of population goals are very important if the various related policies that are carried out by all these levels of government, plus the private sector, are to yield the maximum results. In this sense the federal government is beginning to foster the widest possible measure of agreement about Canada's population future, and I outlined the consultative machinery when I tabled the green paper in early February.

Speaking of the green paper, Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time that the government has tried to tell the whole immigration story in detail, and within a really comprehensive framework. It is also the first time that immigration policy has been discussed in relation to these wider economic, demographic, social and cultural concerns. The committee will, of course, be in charge of its own affairs within the terms of reference agreed upon by this House, but I believe that during its work and travels it will provide an extremely valuable stimulus for public debate and, most important, will be the major forum in which Canadians, whether as individuals or through representative organizations, can take part in a debate that will lead to an important decision regarding the future of this country.

I hope that when this joint committee hears Canadians presenting points of view, the variety of hopes and needs of people in all regions of Canada can be related to our decisions about immigration and, in the broader sense, population. In short, I see the committee acting as the paramount vehicle for the recording and transmission of the public's views to the government. In addition to the members of the House and from the other place who will play an active role in the work of the committee, I trust all members of parliament will have a vital role in what I hope will be a constructive national debate on this whole question.

I think the review upon which we have embarked provides a rather unique opportunity for parliamentarians to study all aspects of immigration and to contribute to the best kind of immigration policy that our joint efforts can produce when this debate is concluded. In that context I have already noted, with very considerable appreciation as a matter of fact, that many members of parliament have begun a lively, informed and productive debate among their constituents. Indeed, I am getting many requests from individual members for assistance in providing factual material, and in some cases logistical help.

One has only to pick up a newspaper, or to turn on a television set or radio to realize that the green paper debate is already under way. Generally speaking, the reaction I have had or heard about has been reasonably constructive. Obviously there are some—this is only to be anticipated—who criticize the green paper or question the government's reason for producing such a document. Having had some experience in this field now, I might say that we should all be concerned about extremist reactions from whatever direction they may come. I have said in this chamber before, as well as said publicly elsewhere, and I repeat it again now, that I believe Canadians will want an immigration policy which has universally applied selection criteria, a policy that is free from discrimination on the basis of race, colour or creed.

If I may go on to try to put this in its proper light, it is false to say that we are flashing a red light on immigration. It has been suggested that Canada might be wise no longer to consider uncontrolled immigration in terms of numbers, that there should be a re-examination of Canada's population future. I do not think anyone is saying that we should do anything less than at least manage the flow of immigrants. By embarking upon this examination quite openly and in public, it is not my intention to slam the door. It is not a red light but perhaps a caution light when the suggestion is made that we should proceed from here forward with more policy consideration than perhaps we had heretofore.

I think that the scope, importance and magnitude of the issues involved in the green paper demand very thoughtful and mature participation on the part of all Canadians. We will all be following closely the activities and deliberations of the special joint committee. This chamber of course will have another significant opportunity to examine immigration policy when, if all goes well, I present a draft bill to parliament in the fall for referral to the appropriate standing committee. I am quite sure that at that stage there will be an opportunity for very intensive scrutiny. That is suggested and planned. I look forward to the completion of this procees with the passage of a new Immigration Act and the accompanying regulations taking place not too far into 1976.

I would hope that the Immigration Act will be sufficiently flexible to accommodate whatever future population policy might emerge after the intensive federal-provincial consultations to which I earlier referred, but in that sense I really do not believe we can afford to wait for these longer term policies before dealing with immigration legislation. Certainly in my view it is essential that our immigration laws be brought up to date as soon as possible, particularly if we are to cope with changing world conditions and if we are to have a legislative framework within which to manage better our own immigration programs.

I appreciate the opportunity of leading off this debate. I look forward to the remarks of hon. members opposite, and to the House giving its approval so that we can get on with the deliberations in the committee on this very important matter.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thought after you put the motion that we were playing musical chairs like, "After you, Alphonse," to settle who was going to be first. I thought an agreement had been reached prior to calling the motion that the minister would lead off with a short statement on his views on how the committee first of all should be struck and what its major functions should be.

It is my intention today, on behalf of the party of which I am a member, to place before the House some of our views on the approach we feel the committee should take, and in respect of some of the questions that we feel must be discussed by the committee. I should also like to point out the manner in which we think these discussions should take place.

Since the motion to create a joint committee was tabled on February 24 we have been very much aware of certain provisions within it which we believe need explanation and clarification. This committee which many of us have been waiting for some time to begin its work, is now to undertake this function. There are certain concerns I should like to place on the record.

On February 3 the minister tabled the green paper, at which time this party called for the creation of a select parliamentary committee to study that document and the questions which flowed from it. I am pleased the minister has seen fit to accept that suggestion by formalizing it into the motion we have before us at this time.

It has been and remains our concern that the main estimates tabled by the government should be studied in detail, just as the estimates of any other department, by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, regardless of the work to be done by the select committee. We thought the special committee should be struck regardless of the work undertaken by that parliamentary committee. Following the tabling today of the supplementary estimates by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), that caution is even more important than at the time of the tabling of the green paper.

I understand that the powers the committee is to have, as outlined in the motion, are fairly straightforward, and I do not want to deal with them at any length.

Since the tabling of the green paper on February 3 certain questions in the minds of many of us have been accentuated. The first question I want to mention is minor, but I think vital to the success of this exercise. This question relates to the simple fact that the green paper is not available. I hope the minister and the government will take it upon themselves to effect wide distribution of the green paper. If we want public debate we must get this document in the hands of those who are to react and take part in the debate.

An hon. Member: We can't afford that.

Mr. Epp: In view of the spending estimates, perhaps we cannot afford that. I understand the highlights are available, and that the complete four-volume green paper costs approximately $12. If we want the Canadian public to react, the green paper should be available. I understand that members have asked for a second copy to be placed in their constituency offices where at least people can come and read it, or perhaps take it home for a few days, but even that request has been denied because apparently copies are not available. I want to impress upon the minister that it is vital that this information be placed in the hands of Canadians. I am not trying to be picayune, but I think this is a matter that should be looked at with great speed by the minister.

The second matter which has come to my attention since the tabling of the green paper is the impression a number of people have that this is simply a public relations exercise on which we are now embarking in that really the decisions have already been made by the government, and that all the discussion and debate on the green paper are designed to reinforce the tough decisions of the government.

An hon. Member: Taking the heat off.

Mr. Epp: Yes, possibly taking the heat off. I was pleased that the minister in his statement today said he wanted to lay before the Canadian people all the facts, and that he wanted to be frank with the people. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) prides himself on his frankness as well.

An hon. Member: He is frank.

Mr. Epp: If that is being frank then I had better go back to my dictionary to find out what the definition really is of that word. Let me impress upon the minister and the government that if we want a candid reaction from the Canadian people, and if this exercise is to be meaningful, then we cannot skirt certain issues. I agree that we should not approach this from an Archie Bunker point of view, but rather from a frank point of view as to how the whole population growth and demographic status will effect us as Canadians.

Among the important aspects I think the committee should look into is the type of population growth we really want. I come back to the statement I made on February 3 when the green paper was tabled, that we are looking for an immigration study as a result of which we will hopefully get into a population study. To me that sounds backwards, but that is the approach we are taking.

We must also study what kind of a country we really want, and in this regard certain things have happened since the points system was introduced in 1967 which have had an effect on the make-up of our Canadian population. I hope the committee will be very frank in its analysis and report to the government on this aspect.

Another aspect the committee must consider involves regional differences. It is true that more than 50 per cent of the immigrants who come here go to our three major cities. There are specific conditions which have resulted in this allocation that the committee must consider. At the same time there are regions in Canada to which immigrants have not gone in great numbers, where today they are still welcome because of the requirement to fill the jobs available. The committee must also consider the whole question of migrant labour.

Yesterday I saw a program televised on the national CTV network called "Inquiry". That program bothered me because of its negative approach to an unusual immigration question. If we are to approach these questions from a negative point of view we will run into trouble as a nation. We are not going to get the candidness and frankness we need in order to make the long term decisions necessary.

Another matter the committee must study is third world immigration, or immigration from those countries from which we traditionally have not received many people. Again may I say that I hope the committee can look at this question frankly and fairly, and that once having received as much information as is available it can then come in with a recommendation that will be acceptable to most Canadians.

Further, there is a question which has been skirted by many people since the tabling of the green paper. I refer to the question of francophone immigration. As the government indicated in its statement of October 22, 1974, the new immigration is to be related directly to job availability. If this is so, then we should look critically at the situation to see whether we are to use immigration as a vehicle to promote the ratio which presently exists between English and French speaking Canadians. I am not trying to be divisive in this regard. However, I feel that often this is a question which lurks in the background of people's minds but is not answered. This is a question which should be looked at fairly, critically and objectively.

More division is created merely by saying this is a question which must be looked at, but once it has been looked at we must arrive at a consensus. I think the government should be looking at this in that spirit. It will be necessary to have public reaction in respect of this and other matters which I cannot mention now because of the time available. I want to impress upon the government very strongly that if it wishes to have the views of the Canadian people it should ask for those views, and then accept them. I say to the government that it should not ignore the views of the public as being unimportant.

There is a third matter which I believe should be placed before this House prior to the establishment of the committee. I refer to the time frame in which the committee is to work. From my understanding of the minister's words and from my reading of the motion it appears that the committee is to complete its work in Ottawa, is to travel to various cities in Canada, and then is to write its report by July 31, 1975.

The second part of the schedule is that the minister hopes he can prepare legislation on the basis of the information received, which is to be presented to the House in the fall of 1975, and he hopes that the immigration legislation will be passed early in 1976. I, and many members of this House know that a new immigration act is desperately needed. The last act, which dates back to 1952, has been amended many times. Unfortunately there have been more regulatory amendments than specific legislative amendments passed by this House.

While I concede the minister's schedule, the time frame concerns me somewhat. It is a massive process we are to undertake. Let us be frank about that. If we are to have large scale public input and dissemination of the information received, the undertaking will be massive. The members of this House who will be members of the special committee have other obligations and responsibilities. So the task is a large one.

I fear that the stricture of the July 31 date will create a difficult situation. I fear that there may be a number of groups who will not have an opportunity to react, or that the committee or sub-committees will visit the major centres of Canada and that the smaller centres might not have a visit from the committee or sub-committees. Because of this many people may not have an opportunity to react to the green paper or present their views. As a result there may be complaints from many people that they did not have an opportunity to present their views.

I want to place a caveat on the record on behalf of my party. While we recognize the minister desires this schedule in respect of the study of the green paper, the date of July 31 is of great concern to us. While I do not intend to appear pessimistic or negative, I feel that in the initial stages the process will be agonizing because many of the questions strike at the very fundamental approach and attitude Canadians have taken in respect of this country.

We have welcomed groups of various backgrounds to this country where they can make their own way. After the initial reaction has been received when the committee has started travelling, after the views of Canadians have been received, I wonder whether the time frame is sufficient to provide for a period when Canadians will have a chance to think again, and reach a consensus in respect of this democratic Canadian goodwill. I would hope that the time frame would be such as to provide an immigration policy which recognizes all the population and allows a democratic approach to the question. Therefore I wish to impress upon the minister and the government very clearly that while the July 31 date is embodied in the motion it causes me a great deal of concern.

There is another problem which has come to my mind since the tabling of the green paper. I should like a reaction from the minister in this regard. I have received reports from immigration and customs officers who fear that a large number of people will soon enter Canada illegally because of their fear that restrictions will be imposed on immigration. There is a feeling that amnesty will have to be provided again in the not too distant future because it would be difficult to deport the large number of people who might be involved. I should like to impress upon the minister that it is incumbent on the officials of his department to be very wary in this situation.

In conclusion may I say that this party welcomes the work that is before us even though we see it as a massive undertaking. We are willing to co-operate; we are willing to co-operate on the basis of goodwill and frankness, on the basis that this will be discussed freely and that any information which is needed, which is accessible to the government and to no one else, will be made available to the committee and to members of the public in order that the final result will be that the committee will have travelled across Canada, that public hearings will have been held, and that out of this will have flowed an immigration policy that is fair, one with which most Canadians can identify, and that the result will be beneficial to all of us.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the establishment of this committee. I am opposed not only because it is to be a Senate committee but also on the basis that if we are to look at the whole problem of immigration, which I doubt, then we should do it in as straightforward a manner as possible. If the other place is to be the place of sober second thought, then it should not make the original decision.

● (1600)

I suppose that there have been more changes made in the immigration program since 1952 because of the administration of that program than there have been in most programs. In fact the present immigration program bears little relationship to previous programs because of changes in administration. I would go so far as to say that it does not matter what the committee does, whom it hears and how extensive the opposition is, because officials in the minister's department have already made up their mind on the kind of immigration act they want to have, and the criteria on which it should be based.

I presume that if they wanted to, within two weeks the officials could present us with an amended immigration act. Evidence collected by the committee in its travelling across the country will do absolutely nothing to change their minds even though the committee's travels might stir up a lot of opinions that are under the surface and have not come to light.

It is a fact that in the last few years we have taken precautions not to establish a quota system but to change the regulations so as to establish exactly how many people we can allow into the country. We know how to stall in one area so as not to have more medical doctors coming in, and we know how to handle the situation in other areas where there is a need for doctors. We even know how much money it costs us to advertise to keep the right balance in this regard. All that has been done by the administration of the program, not by policy, not in accordance with the wishes of the Canadian public, and also not necessarily against their wishes. It is my personal opinion that this has been a fairly satisfactory arrangement.

I am aware of the fact that many people have been brought into the country, but it is interesting to remember that the last Immigration Act was brought in less than ten years after we actually established Canadian citizenship. Before that we were all British subjects, so the changes that have been made were drastic changes made in a relatively short period of time.

I am one of those who think that the immigration policy is not a complete mistake. This has never been more apparent than when the public was consulted and asked to accept refugees. This happened after the second world war, and since then from time to time when serious problems have developed throughout the world and certain countries were asked to accept immigrants on a refugee status. Most people will agree that in accepting those refugees we did not upset the balance we had already established, that in fact we maintained it by accepting people from various parts of the world, in spite of heavy immigration from central Europe after the war.

I suggest that the committee in travelling around the country and hearing representations in the short period of time given to it will not provide the public with the opportunity to express itself as to whether or not a definite and strong control should be exercised over the type of people we bring into Canada, as to the countries from which we bring those people and, much more important, where we should establish them in Canada.

We are well aware of the fact that in this country we have been plagued with pressure groups which have had a great deal of influence on officials in the Department of Manpower and Immigration. For example, let us consider the problem we have had with the medical profession. We have followed an open door policy with regard to medical people from any part of the country on two or three occasions, but recently we changed that position to one of almost total restriction. Medical associations in Toronto have said repeatedly that they have enough doctors in the province—although they turn out doctors from Ontario medical schools in limited numbers only—that they do not want any more doctors brought in because it will cut down on their incomes.

Almost all of the pressure groups have failed to take into consideration the needs of the population, and that involves the basic problem which the minister has mentioned on a number of occasions, namely, the difference between immigration to urban centres and immigration to the rural areas of Canada. It is true that the medical profession does not want any more doctors in Toronto than already there, and it wants only certain types of doctors or specialists, but it could certainly allow a large number of additional doctors to settle in other parts of Ontario, such as communities in parts of northern Ontario, which covers more than half the province, where doctors in every specialty and in every category are desperately needed.

Immigrant doctors are being prevented from practising there because the number of doctors in the province is restricted, and most are to be found in urban centres. Obviously medical associations are in control of the situation through hospital boards. The same is true with regard to plumbers and other trades and professions. They have methods of bringing about changes in the administration of the act.

I do not see how that situation can change in six months. I do not see how we will be able, in talking to people, to obtain an unbiased opinion as to whether or not it would be wise to decentralize our population growth, whether it would not be wise to bring in immigrants to rural areas in such a way as to have them stay there. I know that this poses many problems. When displaced persons came to Canada after the second world war they came on condition that they stay for two years in the job which they were originally given. Many of them stayed longer.

However, now we are interested in bringing in people for employment in mining, forestry and all types of development in the mid-Canada corridor where most of our resources are located. Where do most immigrants settle? Obviously they gravitate towards large centres of population, because in most cases, that is where their friends are and where they assimilate best. Also, they can find employment there easiest. In other areas of Canada, efforts will have to be made to find them employment.

In my own area in the last few years a number of people of Dutch origin have arrived and settled. At first they had much difficulty and put a lot of effort into starting in farming operations in a small way. However, in only eight or ten years most of them have become pretty successful. I think that we were ill advised in placing them in that kind of community and asking them to start at the bottom, because if we provided them with some incentive they could become efficient producers right away because they are mainly well trained and they adapt to the community very well. However, they do not have money, and we do not help them make a go of it.

I am sure the minister will say that it is very hard to make people settle in a certain area, and I think that is true. I have often thought that possibly the Arab-Israeli problem could be solved if we brought either the Israelis or the Arabs—or perhaps even both—and put them somewhere in the sub Arctic region where they would have to make a go of it. Both are very enterprising peoples and would make a go of it, but the difficulty would be in keeping them there. That is an extreme position, however, and I am not really advocating it.

However, I do believe that we will have to bring people from other countries and that they must fit in, not in four or five generations but right away, and help develop the area where they settle. That does not appear to me, as a person from Northern Ontario, to be the city of Toronto. It does not need any more people. As one hon. member said, all that would do is establish a nation of Archie Bunkers. That is already happening, of course. If you ride the streetcar in Toronto you can hear people ask why foreigners are allowed into the country to take their jobs.

Of course one could easily stir up prejudice across the country; this government did that once and found there was more prejudice than it could handle. It is important, however, that the government have some indication of where prejudice exists. It is one thing to ask a man who works in a factory in Toronto what his position is on immigration, but it is another to ask someone who has been laid off his job and then sees someone else get it. The answers are likely to be quite different.

I believe the minister and his department have decided what the bill is to contain, and that this preliminary discussion is just an exercise in futility. His officials have studied the problem firsthand year in and year out. It is not something that developed overnight. We are not going to depopulate the over populated parts of the world and see how many people we can fit into Canada. Of course I do not think the minister is suggesting any such thing, nor is he suggesting that we should decide what the population should be by the year 2000 and work toward that target.

Immigration will be accepted in this country as long as it flows in harmony with our needs and ability to absorb it. We have never had a closed door immigration policy, and we should not start now. If the government wants to develop an immigration policy that is acceptable to the people I think it should first tackle the problem of urbanization.

Immigration officials, and persons connected with the other agencies who have close contact with the people who arrive in Canada daily, will be able to inform the committee of the problems they encounter. They know the difficulties that an immigration policy must tackle for certain classes and types of immigrants. I am not opposed to allowing the department to make the decision on what direction we want that policy to move. They are the people with the expertise, although certainly the minister must put his foot down every now and again to make sure that they retain a touch of humanity. I have not been unhappy about the flow of immigration, but I have been somewhat unhappy about the distribution and the rush to the major cities.

[Mr. Peters.]

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the minister would do better to introduce his new immigration act today rather than wait the six months he has allocated for this exercise. I listen to the hotline programs, as I am sure the minister does, so we know the prejudices that exist in the country—there are probably as many prejudices as there are citizens. Over the years I think Canadians for the most part have welcomed people from all countries and all ethnic backgrounds, and such people have helped build the Canadian mosaic. In most cases, Canadians felt they were sharing with the newcomers the resources that we have in abundance.

It should always be borne in mind that it does not really matter how poorly the immigrant is educated or from which country he comes. When immigrant children grow up and attend Canadian schools they are assimilated, because they are just as intelligent and have as much ability as anybody else. They have just as good a chance of getting ahead and making a contribution to the nation as the other children. When I worked in the mines many of the people there were almost illiterate, but their children grew up to make a name for themselves across the country and become a credit to the community.

We must be careful not to develop prejudice. We must not tell people that they have to speak French or have to speak English, or if they are Italian that they must go to Toronto, or if they are Greek that they must go to a Greek community. The minister's green paper exercise may well encourage resentment and prejudice. I am sure the minister can avoid this. If he heeds the kinds of recommendations normally made by a committee and by special interest groups, I am sure he can amend the Immigration Act and enable it to do the sort of job it has always done.

I put it to the minister that we are not dissatisfied with the results of immigration. Immigrants to Canada have become a credit to this country. Sure, some objected to Chilean refugees entering on the ground they might be Marxists; others objected, after World War II, to displaced persons from Europe entering, on the ground some of them might be Nazis. I am sure that some of these fears were well founded. All the same, one generation after the entry of these immigrants, what do you find? In almost every community the immigrants and their descendants have made a fine contribution to our national fabric. Yes, some of them are in this House. So do not let us say that we need immigrants only from England, or France, or that we need to keep the Chinese balance, or that we need more Italians and Greek people.

Mr. Nystrom: Don't forget the Swedes.

Mr. Peters: We must not forget the Swedes and Norwegians. The Nordic peoples never needed much defending. They always defended themselves. They are not prejudiced, and people are not prejudiced against them. But, Mr. Speaker, we do not want the kind of prejudice I am speaking about stirred up now.

Why does the minister want a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to study this question? I know that Mr. Dawson called the Senate the place of sober second thoughts, but the minister wants those sober second thoughts at the beginning of the discussion. The members of this House are elected; the members of the Senate are not. I therefore think unless we had a referendum, that if we are to investigate the wishes, aspirations and desires of the Canadian people on immigration, the members of the House of Commons should conduct the investigation. Once we pass a bill the Senate will have the right to amend, or to consider it with sober second thought. Of course, the Senate will do nothing of the kind. It is largely composed of Liberals, and Liberals will dominate the committee. The minister is trying to kill two birds with one stone, and I object.

In any event, Mr. Speaker ruled the other day, in connection with another matter, that co-operation between this House and the other place is not always desirable. I think the standing orders of the other place prohibit it in certain instances. Why ask for the establishment of a joint committee to study immigration?

The minister might be influenced by the fact that the other place is to be covered by CBC television. Probably the minister and other members want to bask in the reflected glory of Senators who may enjoy exposure on national television. I hope that is not what the minister wants.

A new immigration policy will only last for about 20 years; after that, because circumstances change, the policy will change. That being so, the committee in its travels across the country must exercise caution in making sure that it does not bring forward prejudices rather than ideas. As the woman appearing on television the other night in Toronto said, after the green paper has been given a full airing we may become a nation of Archie Bunkers, with every person looking over his shoulder at his neighbour. This has not happened before in this country, and I hope it never will. Canadians are charitable; they know their country is rich and are willing to share its riches.

Canadian immigration policies have worked to the advantage of Canada. Ethnic groups who have entered this country have made their contribution to Canada. Most become Canadians. The second generation, the descendants of immigrants, are pretty nearly indistinguishable from those who welcomed the original immigrants.

The minister's officials no doubt have ready a draft of the legislation which is to be presented some time after July. No doubt it could be introduced in this House within the next two weeks. In any event I suggest that the minister should seek his consensus from the Canadian population without raising the spectre of prejudice. Quite possibly the minister's suggested way of proceeding will not result in harmony being established. Possibly, the information he seeks can be obtained only by a full investigation. In any event I strongly urge the minister to appoint a committee of this House only. Let us not make it a joint committee, a committee on which the other place will be represented. A joint committee should not consider the proposed legislation before it is even presented to this House.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the motion of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) for the appointment of a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to collect the views across the country of the citizens concerned about immigration, with a view to reorienting or reviewing the Canadian immigration policy.

Mr. Speaker, this debate need not be lengthy to be useful, this afternoon, since in the final analysis we are asked to decide whether or not a committee will be appointed, and if so, what its powers will be.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk of immigration, when the Minister of Manpower and Immigration launches a debate by publishing a green paper and distributing it across the country—I have here the briefs submitted by our fellow citizens on this important subject—he must expect that the debate will not be limited strictly to immigration as such. Canada is not a closed country, nor can it be. We cannot erect a fence around Canada and say: In the future, no immigrant may enter Canada. Obviously not. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, when immigrants are being recruited for Canada in their native lands, this recruitment must obviously be done in terms of the objectives and interests of Canada.

An immigration policy cannot be formulated that will please all the countries in the world to the detriment of Canada. That immigration policy must respect the objectives and interests of all Canadians from sea to sea. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is what was wrong with our immigration policy in the past. In many cases, immigrants have been required to do what is commonly known as the dirty work, seasonal jobs, as is now the case, for instance, in Quebec in a certain conflict at Louiseville, of which the minister has been informed. Workers are brought in to do a certain job and are then left to fend for themselves in the administrative mess of immigration. This shows, Mr. Speaker, that there is a problem in Canadian manpower as far as certain jobs are concerned, and that the present Immigration Act is often made flexible in the interest of the government but not of the immigrants.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, how are immigrants recruited? How are they selected? What kind of an investigation is made about these immigrants? When they arrive in Canada, how are they received, regardless if their native country? It is important that Canada, since we want and need immigrants, receive them sensibly and in an orderly fashion. Let us imagine a foreigner who arrives in Canada to stay and asks for immigrant status and who is left on his own, very often with language difficulties. What becomes of him? He will depend on the government to survive instead of being able to find for himself.

There are some great Canadians of foreign origin, and we all feel that the majority of immigrants have made a very important contribution to Canada. We have only to think about the construction of the railroad in the West to realize that without the immigrants, this railroad could never have been built when it was by Mr. Macdonald. This is only one example among hundreds that show the important contribution of these people.

Mr. Speaker, I know personally several immigrants from my constituency in Montreal and in Quebec City. Many of them were faced with enormous difficulties from immigration offices when they tried to obtian their residence permits and Canadian citizenship. They did not receive from government agencies quite the reception they needed to integrate fully into Canadian society. You will hear these immigrants complain that Canadians point the finger of scorn at their children, for Canada is not yet mature enough to accept immigrants who have skins of a different colour and who speak a foreigh language.

Mr. Speaker, there is a humanitarian aspect to immigration which must not be overlooked.

Based on these general considerations, I feel that this committee will have many parts to play and will have an important function, depending on the orientation the minister chooses to give it. First of all, it will have to listen to what Canadians have to say about immigration and immigrants into this country. Then it will have to listen to what immigrants have to say about the current policy which many of them had to stand. Third, we will have to promote an effective dialogue and not merely a monologue between the Canadian people and the immigrants, so that we may establish together an immigration policy serving the interests of both the Canadian people, especially the economic and social interests of manpower, and the immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, such were the few comments I wanted to make in that connection. In conclusion, I would like to point out that Quebec is experiencing a serious decline in its birth rate. Moreover, statistics show without doubt that immigration has not always serve the Quebec interests. God knows that I am not a separatist and I would like to repeat it to the minister, I believe in Canada. I feel that immigration can help Quebec. Mr. Speaker, when establishing a national policy on immigration the distinctive entity of each Canadian province will have to be maintained.

By then, the minister will certainly have taken a step forward. The present Immigration Act is discriminatory in respect to the distribution of immigrants because of the advertising about the provinces of Quebec, Ontario or British Columbia, so that, in the last analysis, this policy has been detrimental to the general interests of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, in many instances, immigrants are not advised that the language spoken in Quebec is French. On his arrival in Canada, the immigrant feels lost in cities like Quebec, Victoriaville, Sherbrooke, Trois-Rivières or Chicoutimi, because he does not know the language spoken there. He had not been told about it.

I believe the committee will have to consider this matter. Basic data will have to be provided so that the citizens of every province, and particularly the people in Quebec, may be consulted so that an immigration policy useful to every province may be developed.

I can see the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Stanfield) in the House. He once was a provincial Premier and he should be in a position to back what I say. It is important for provincial governments that our immigration policy should be one of help, and should not lead to frustrations, problems or troubles, especially in a province where in some respects the problem for immigrants is of a linguistic nature.

Mr. Speaker, I must add that, unfortunately, a great many Canadians resent the coming of immigrants to Canada. I am not one of them. However, I have to admit that Canadians are right in their often harsh but also positive criticism of immigration. How many Canadian families, they say, are unemployed, how many workers in Canada, in Victoriaville or elsewhere are unemployed, have difficulties with their governments, are the object of disrespect in their relationships with civil servants and public agencies? How many Canadians feel frustrated because of the economical, political or social situation? Mr. Speaker, we shall re-open the door to immigration some way or other to bring in labour in Canada.

According to Chapter 14, page 17 of the Green Paper, with respect to funds alloted to immigration, $41,718,000 are spent for immigration purposes in general. Mr. Speaker, that is a considerable amount of money to bring in manpower, and every time we do so we bring in new problems. Maybe our manpower policy is a negative one. Our present labour policy deters Canadian workers from working in particular areas. It is definitely outdated, definitely not adapted to our automation, modernistic society, and I think neither the Minister nor the Committee should restrict themselves to the only matter of immigration. They will have to agree to broaden the scope of this public debate for the impact of the immigration year on Canadian labour to be studied.

Mr. Speaker, should we heartily welcome in Canada 10,000 perfect immigrants in all respects, serious people, industrious, honest people, if at the same time Canadian workers were denied certain jobs and those immigrants were given preference, I think, Mr. Speaker, that in such a case the immigration policy would not serve the immigrants' interests since they would be put into conflict with Canadians. Neither would the immigration policy serve the Canadians' interests since they would be put into conflict with the immigrants and would be deprived of an eventual job. Finally, this immigration policy would have been a source of frustration and division in our country rather than unification of Canadians.

We will build our country, because immigration policy will contribute to the building of a country, to the extent where before speaking of immigration we will be willing to make good use of our labour, in order that Canadians can work according to their characteristics, their tastes, their personality, their creativity, before providing immigrants with similar jobs or calling in Canada other people.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, on that extremely important issue of the scandal that took place in Louisville—I call that a scandal, it is disgusting—I say those things should not happen in 1975.

In Louiseville, a certain company brought in manpower to do a kind of work, and at the end when they ran out of work, before the department and other people saw to it, and especially before those people got going, they wanted to send the immigrants back home. It is a bit like what happened in the case of the Haitians.

Mr. Speaker, I find it scandalous to displace foreigners who are our brothers, humans of other countries, to bring them here, and then get rid of them and send them back. If Canadians do not want to do certain jobs, it proves that our manpower policies—not necessarily Canadians—are wrong. Even if UIC officials, public investigators who run around, instead of looking for cheaters, to catch Canadians, strangle them and make them pay fines because they allegedly cheated the government, I say that efforts should be made to encourage Canadians to work. Then, Mr. Speaker, Canadians would believe a lot more in the future of their country. When that becomes a reality it is sure that with their pride and their nationalism they will be happy to share their national pride with people from other countries. Let us not ask Canadians to accept immigrants, whatever their origin, their language, their race or their religion, without knowing first if Canadians are ill-treated or forgotten. Mr. Speaker, if we want Canadians to really participate in the life of this country, if we want an immigration policy to really be valid and effective Canadians themselves must not apply it at home.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is a bad habit in this House when a special joint committee is set up and travels across the country to examine a question, there is a bad habit of sending such committees to larger centres—Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City sometimes. Indeed, I am quite convinced there are as many people in Victoriaville in my area, in Trois-Rivières, Drummondville or Saint-Hyacinthe who have as many valuable views as people in Montreal or Toronto. I think that people in Toronto and Montreal did not invent anything. They do not have the monopoly of truth, Mr. Speaker.

If the minister is serious and really logical, if he wishes to raise a public debate at the national level, I think he should manage to convince the members of this committee to hold more than one hearing in the Northwest Territories, in Yukon, in Whitehorse, Saint John, Quebec City, Montreal, Toronto or Ottawa and not say goodbye, our terms of reference were for six months only.

Mr. Speaker, if the minister really wants Canadians to participate and really wants to know their views, I think we should go also in small urban centres and even in rural communities. How many immigrants went to settle in these areas or in small towns like Victoriaville or Drummondville? How many? It could be surprising, but they are many. This is why there are Canadians in Victoriaville, Drummondville, Saint-Hyacinthe, Trois-Rivières, who have to welcome immigrants. Those Canadians should be given the opportunity to express their views concerning the formulation of such a policy.

Lastly Mr. Speaker, there is an example I wish to mention. I had a friend from France who was told that he could come to Canada with the teaching degrees he had. He left his position in France and came to Canada in a municipality that I shall not name as it is small and everyone would know who it is.

Then he came to Canada and the Quebec government never recognized his degrees. He had to go back to France at his own expenses. He had to make a general collect, to beg and return directly to France. Mr. Speaker, he had become my friend and could have made a good Canadian but because he had been misinformed he returned to France with a poor opinion about our country. I feel sorry about it because he could have made an excellent Canadian and because he returned there and will reflect a bad image of Canada. But he talks about what he saw, what he felt, and he has had a bad experience.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Minister wants to start a profitable dialogue with the population, he must expect that the discussion will not be restricted to the question of immigration. The whole question of immigration will have to be debated, that is from the leave from the country of origin to the moment of arrival in the host country, and the manpower policy will have to be taken into account. I think the minister must expect, anyway, that the Social Credit party will make representations on the judicious use of Canadian manpower to encourage our families, our workers; then we can speak positively about immigration. Only under those conditions, Mr. Speaker, will an immigration policy serve both the interests of immigrants and those of Canada.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF ADVANCE PAYMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-10, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am in a very embarrassing position, something which is unique for me, I believe, in this House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is the one position you feel comfortable in.

Mr. Baldwin: I thought, after discussion with members on the government side, that the intention was to proceed with Bill C-43 relating to the Law Reform Commission. We had undertaken that there would be rapid passage of that bill, but the hon. member from our party who had some comments to make, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, is not here at this point—he had intended to be here by six o'clock so that he could speak at eight. I am told he has encountered some difficulties about getting here. I had told members on our side who are concerned about this other legislation now before us that it was doubtful whether it would come on until this evening. That is the position in which we find ourselves.

I can see the hon. member for Timiskaming in his place. I am sure that if he and I were driven to it we could make a number of speeches. Perhaps even a member on the government side might be persuaded to open his mouth for a change. However, since we have done so very well today, as well as doing very well on Friday and Thursday of last week, I hope the House might be flexible enough to permit Your Honour to see that it is now five o'clock.

● (1650)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I go along with that suggestion and make a slight addition to it. There are three bills for which report stage is being asked, on none of which there is to be any debate at this point. Why do we not give those three bills their report stage concurrence? We can then post them all for third reading, and have third reading debate on one or more of them tonight. This will get us a little closer to five o'clock, and we can then take the motion of the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, there are times when my hon. friend is apt to be scintillating, and this is one of them.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely on that proposition. If I may be allowed a comment, Bill C-44 might be added.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, it is not at the report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The House has heard the suggestion. Is it agreed that the three bills at report stage be given concurrence by the House, and third reading reserved until later this day?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us do them one at a time so that the government does not slip anything in unnoticed.

Mr. Baldwin: That is right. They might include Bill C-44.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-10, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE THE NUMBER OF FULL-TIME MEMBERS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-43, to amend the Law Reform Commission Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO SET DATE FOR FINAL PAYMENT IN POOL PERIOD

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill S-6, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—Industry—Textiles—Layoffs resulting from imports; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Public Service—Stoppage of grain shipments by strike of general labour and trades group; the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Alleged delay in establishing broadcasting station for Okanagan Valley.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

OLD AGE PENSION

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN AGE OF ELIGIBILITY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to providing old age security pension to all women at age sixty and that the qualifying age for all males be lowered by one year in each successive year to age sixty.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since we have now called it five o'clock, whatever the time is, I trust it is understood that the time allotted to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) will run until six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I at long last rise to introduce this motion. Having been a member of the House for a few years I have repeatedly placed a motion such as this on the order paper, and hoped that at some time we might give consideration to this problem. I have been concerned about this matter for a good many years, as have many other members of the House, and as I am sure have others outside the House.

When one lives in a rural community one comes to realize that there are many in our society who are underprivileged, and one has the opportunity to meet poverty face to face. Many of us have known people who have struggled in their endeavours to provide a livelihood for themselves in one form or another. Some have met with tremendous success. Others in our society have, unfortunately, never tasted success.

There are too many people in this category. Many people in our society point the finger at the advances that have been made in social welfare legislation—and there have been many—but I have become concerned at the direction in which some welfare measures have taken us. It seems to me that our system of priorities has somehow become all mixed up, and perhaps it is because of the attempt by the ruling government of the day to cover as many people as possible and to pass many pieces of legislation that protect us, as the saying goes, from the cradle to the grave.

In recent years an attempt has been made to look after a group of people who, to my way of thinking, have not yet equally earned a right to their share of the wealth in this country as have others. In many cases we find the administration of social assistance schemes in the hands of provincial governments. Each provincial government has its own method of administering a program; some have a different set of priorities from others. Generally speaking they all work toward improving the lot of the individual, but some provide more assistance, or more opportunity for assitance.

Thus we have what appears to be a hodge-podge of plans that do not get to what I consider to be the root of a problem affecting too many people in their later years. Many of the people I am concerned with in this particular motion were, if they were fortunate, employed during the depression years, and if one goes back to those years one will remember that not too many industries had pension plans of any kind. Government pension plans in those days were simply ideas that were just taking root; the public treasury could not sustain an elaborate plan, and so many people today do not receive a pension of any sort when they retire. These people who find themselves in the twilight of their years are unable to retire from their fields of endeavour, but must continue in employment when perhaps their health is not such that would justify society asking them to continue. Thank God there are many who are in good health and are able to continue working.

I do not wish to place upon society a scheme which would be bureaucratically top heavy. Sometimes I believe the most simple way is the best way. We should be introducing programs through a system of evolution in such a way that we do not penalize those in our society who are paying the taxes, but at the same time look after the needs of others. We should have a system which allows those who are not able to continue actively in employment to retire. These people have surely earned this right.

Many of the schemes which have been in effect are meagre, and here I think of some of the pension plans the railway companies have had over the years. While there has been some form of pension scheme, many will argue that the pensions received in no way take into account the tremendous inflationary pressures we face today. It is time for the government to take into account those who have been employed in industry and who receive meagre pensions. It is also time for the government to take into account the self-employed people who have not contributed, in any way over the years, toward plans.

I think also of the many thousands of Indian people who have lived a very hard life yet have never had the opportunity to earn an appreciable income. There are many people today who are accustomed to working and are still struggling while this society seems bent upon relieving the pressure on other groups, and I think here of the young people. Some of the plans we have come up with may be admirable, and they may meet some need, but too often we hear the complaint that too many young people are on welfare while too many old people are unable to receive assistance.

I wonder why it is that we think it proper to move in areas such as unemployment insurance to relieve the stresses that may be inherent in not being able to earn a living, while at the same time we do not take into account the needs of those people, 60 years and over, who are unable to receive any form of assistance, and here I think of those who have applied for assistance which has been denied because of the invariable regulations that require them to dispose of all the possessions they have in order to qualify.

I have not framed my motion in such a way that we would suddenly be burdened with a huge tax bill in order to accomplish the goals set forth. I have suggested to the government that consideration be given to granting immediate pensions to women 60 years of age and over. In many instances such women have never been employed in industry. It is only in recent years that more and more women have been going into the labour market.

In many cases the men who have been the breadwinners have been employed in industry the nature of which has shortened their life expectancy. I think of those employed in the lumber industry, for example. No longer can those people be expected to go out into the bush and suffer the elements, as they have in the past, in order to continue to provide for themselves and their families. I think also of some of the evidence regarding employment in the mining industry. Very recently we were disturbed about what was taking place in the asbestos mines. These people must continue to work, but they know that by doing so they are shortening their lives. Many of them would like to retire, yet they must continue because under our system a pension is not available until age 65. Our society must take a serious look at situations of this kind.

It is perfectly all right for the government to suggest it is moving in the direction of a guaranteed income plan, but the simple fact is that it will be many years before this is an accomplished fact. Such a scheme involves provincial participation. While there may be a willingness on the part of some provinces to participate in this scheme, the government will have to overcome many obstacles.

There are many people in our society who believe there is something proper about working for a living, and I belong to that group. There are a good many people who feel we have gone too far already with our welfare schemes. I am sure there will be resistance to the government moving in the direction of a guaranteed income plan. There are so many unknown factors involved in the 10 provinces participating in such a plan that it would be unwise for the government to move in that direction in haste. The government has been working on plans to be used as a test in certain areas, but before we get all the answers to our questions time will have moved on; it is this precious time that is of the essence, particularly when one considers that every day that goes by one is closer to the end.

There are many people of age 60 who are no longer capable of carrying on in their traditional employment. I have some statistics which indicate that the average age of a farmer today is 57. I personally know of many who would be prepared to sell off whatever small possessions they might have in order to retire, but because of the uncertainty of the agricultural economy they are obliged to continue working.

I am afraid we may be too late if we should move in the direction indicated by the government, which is the direction of an annual income for everyone. In that case many people may not receive any benefit. I am sure every member of this House is familiar with such cases in many parts of this country. A lot of these people have laid the foundation of our society as we know it today. They have done a good job.

The least amount of criticism one hears about the various plans we have in different welfare categories relates to the area of old age security. I am always dubious concerning plans which involve means tests in order that people may qualify. Many people find it very humiliating to have to announce to the world that, after a period of 60 years, they have failed. So they quietly shrug their shoulders and bury themselves in their little homes or apartments, living on what they have. I do not think this should be necessary.

One remembers the type of criticism we heard in respect of the old age pension being universal. We were given examples of millionaires, and there were a few around us in this House. The suggestion was made that millionaires would receive the benefit. I do not believe that is either a correct or fair approach. At income tax time one could give a few examples. We must realize that a transfer of payment is involved and that it goes back to the government. One might look at the number of public servants who will be required this coming year. One realizes that it is not in our general interest to build up a bureaucracy, because not only is it a federal bureaucracy that would have to be built up to administer any plan which would take into account any guaranteed income which may be perceived, but there is also the provincial bureaucracy that will be involved. Perhaps this is something we lose sight of, Mr. Speaker.

We must realize that it is not only the salaries of these employees which would be involved but also the cost of offices and general administration. In a sense there are hidden costs. The easiest way is to have a universal payment for those who have reached the age suggested in my motion.

Now I wish to mention another aspect of this matter. Many people will suggest this is a very costly plan.

An hon. Member: How much will it cost?

Mr. Korchinski: It will cost something in the area of $600 million a year. If one takes into account the total budgetary estimates of public funds, this represents something like two per cent. We must remember that there are something in the order of 817,000 unemployed persons and that many of these people would not receive assistance from the unemployment insurance plan. We must also realize that because of the assistance plans in many provinces it is difficult to estimate the total cost because one cannot calculate the amount that will come back in the form of income tax payments.

In the initial stages my plan would take into account some 380,000 females. There is a progression so far as males are concerned. Some 750,000 individuals would eventually be encompassed. We might look at the entire budgeted estimates for this year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, I must interrupt the hon. member because the time allotted to him has expired. Unless there is unanimous consent he will not be allowed to complete his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent that the hon. member may complete his remarks?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Korchinski: I thank the House. I shall be very brief. I certainly do not wish to talk out my own motion. When one thinks of the fact that just over ten years ago our total budget was in the order of approximately $6 billion and now is something in the order of $28 billion, certainly the amount required in this case would be within our means. I ask the House not to talk out this bill but rather to give it careful consideration. In the absence of anything in the way of a guaranteed annual income I ask for this consideration in respect of the people in this particular group.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful that this issue has been brought up by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). But I find it is the absolute antithesis of equality. While women for too long have been dominated and controlled by men and by society, and while they have been restricted and without independence even in respect of the right to claim a mortgage, I still feel that a bill of this type would be an expression of national guilt, this would be as discriminatory as the past has been to women.

I favour the right of all people, male or female, to retire on pension at age 60 if this can be handled actuarially. But I also believe people should have the right to continue to work as long as they can be productive, since the period between age 60 and 65 is a period of perhaps highest opportunity and highest income in preparation for the inescapable time when we must all live on a fixed income.

Many men and women who have worked since their teens, for virtually 40 years of their lives, and who have contributed to the building of this country may be tired of existing in the work market and should be allowed to retire on pension. I would hope the Canada Pension Plan will one day be such that it can support such early retirement, so that people who have leisure may be able to travel as the young have been able to do in recent years. I want them to be able to travel and perhaps receive subsidies similar to those the young people have been receiving through various grants, while they are still vigorous and young enough to enjoy it.

However, I object to anything which gives special privileges because one is a woman, because one is an Indian, or because one is a Jew. It is inverse discrimination which is abhorrent to me. I think everyone, whether women or otherwise, should receive benefits on the basis of merit and equality.

I object very strenuously to this because it would give the employer the right to allow women to drift back into the position of being compulsorily retired at age 60. Again I say it is essential that we all have the right of choice to retire at a time when we know we can manage on the fixed income that is inevitable during retirement years.

I object to the motion because it is inverse discrimination which is tacit in this recommendation. It is a matter of concern to me that there are people who lean over backward to prove that they are not discriminating. To me this is the danger of such a well intentioned motion. I think it overcompensates for past omissions and discriminations. Perhaps it is a reflection of the national and industrial guilt that men now feel and are expressing.

I must say, however, that women have come a long, long way in the last five years, but unfortunately there are still men who are unaware of women's rightful place in society. When I sit in committees I always see groups of men in top executive positions, and I wait hopefully for the day when women will have the opportunity to become executives themselves with the attendant pensions that go with those higher offices.

I am opposed to any type of discrimination, no matter how well intentioned. I know I am repeating myself, but I learned as a school girl learning grammar that repetition is great for emphasis. So let me tell every one here who might forget it that inverse discrimination is as destructive to society as is discrimination itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Over the years there has been too much waste of valuable talent, expertise and experience because of the enforced retirement of people. I do not think retirement should be established according to the calendar—it should be established according to competence. It is vital to Canadians and to Canada that all of us work, and give as long as we are capable of doing so and if we choose to do so.

Perhaps a formula should be worked out between management and employees so that people can work as long as they contribute. Unfortunately, it is always the management's choice when an employee should retire. They can keep people in their employment if they choose to do so, but the employee has no choice. Perhaps some day we will learn not to guide our actions in society by age or by sex but by the worth of the human being.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), I have one or two criticisms to make of the way in which the motion of my friend, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), is worded. But I do not think that that criticism should take us away from the main point of the motion, which is that in one way or another pensions should be made available at the age of 60. In that respect I commend my hon. friend for having put forward a motion that produces a discussion of pensions, and I congratulate him on being lucky enough in the draw to get his motion before the House at this stage of the session. I hope that my motion, which is No. 39, will be reached before the end of the session, and I suspect, by the way the session is going, it will be, Mr. Speaker.

The criticism that has been made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway really is quite valid. Women seek not special privilege; women seek equality. I can understand the feeling of women with respect to a motion that asks for something for them that is not to be made available to women and men alike. That is why I hope that one of these days my motion in this area will be reached, because it calls for pensions under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to be available to all persons at the age of 60 who are out of the labour market or are prepared to leave it.

I have made this reference to my motion because I think it answers both my friend, the hon. member for Mackenzie, and my friend, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. It answers the hon. member for Mackenzie in that it does not discriminate between men and women; it wants the same benefit made available to both. I suggest that my motion answers an argument put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who seems to be afraid of pensions at a certain age carrying the implication that retirement is being forced. No one is seeking forced retirement. What we are seeking is the possibility of retirement, and there is no possibility of retirement unless adequate pensions are available.

I suggest to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, and to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), if she enters this debate a little later, that it is not really heresy to be talking in this place about pensions at an age under 65. Right now it is possible for those who are in the RCMP or in the Canadian armed forces to retire at a younger age. Some of them who have done so would want me to remind the House of the fact that their pensions are not escalated by the cost of living until they reach 60, which is an injustice that ought to be corrected. At any rate, retirement at the age of 48, 50 or 52 is possible for certain persons, namely, those whom I have just mentioned.

It is also a fact that public servants generally are free to retire at the age of 60. They can go on working until they are 65, but they may retire at the age of 60, although their pensions could be less than they would be at 65, depending on how many years of service they have had, and also depending on the level of earnings during their best six years.

In addition to the fact that to all public servants the possibility of retiring at the age of 60 is open, it is possible for some public servants to retire at the age of 55. I refer in particular to those who have 30 years of service. A public servant who is 55 years of age or over and has 30 years in the public service, may retire at that point without any penalty factor in his pension. Thus, at 55 years of age a public servant who has 30 years of service gets 30 times 2 or 60 per cent of the average of his best six years as his pension.

There are instances in the public service today, particularly at higher levels, of persons retiring at ages between 55 and 60 because a reasonable pension is available to them. They are not forced to retire. No pensionable age, in terms of public pensions, forces retirement; it simply makes retirement possible.

I feel very strongly that the time has come when we should seriously amend our legislation to make retirement possible at the age of 60. That is what I seek in my motion. If my hon. friend's motion is talked out, I hope the same will not happen to mine. What I seek in my motion No. 39 is that under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan persons who are out of the labour market or leave it could get their full pensions at that point.

I want to come back again to the point that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made about drawing the line between men and women. I am sure that the hon. member for Mackenzie did not mean to do that. He is well intentioned, as the hon. member from across the way said. He wants to get the pensionable age down. I think it is somewhat unfair to lower it to 60 right away for women but to tell men that they have to wait five years in which it would be brought down a year at a time.

The other point I want to make is this, Mr. Speaker. I am very much aware, from my contacts and correspondence, of the great number of women, particularly spinsters and widows, in that age bracket who feel the need of a pension without having to wait until age 65. But I am also conscious of the great number of men, particularly those in heavy industry who have endured the rat race about as long as they can stand it, who should also be considered for early retirement. Every time we go through an election campaign and I meet thousands of shop workers in my constituency, morning after morning as I greet them the men ask when the pensionable age is going to come down to 60. I often look at a man and think he looks older than I do only to find out he is about 58 and has been working in a foundry or a railway shop or the packing industry or in the needle trades and has been in the rat race for years. It is just as hard for him to keep going to age 65 as it is for a woman.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who says "Let's put this on an equal basis"; but I submit that is no reason for taking the other line that she did, that there is something wrong about discussing 60 as a reasonable retirement age. I think that has to come. I remember how we went all through these arguments when I first came to this House. The pension was then payable at age 70 and when we argued for it at age 65 we heard the same arguments that were used today—"We need to work", "You take away the meaning of life" and "The state cannot afford it". But we brought the pensionable age down from 70 to 65, even if we had to do it a year at a time.

I think the pension should be available for all persons, Mr. Speaker, and I think the best criterion to establish is that those persons should be out of the labour market. That would cover spouses between age 60 and 65, male or female, bachelors, spinsters, widows and widowers, but on the one condition—that they are out of the labour market. This leads me to say again that what I find wrong with the government proposal that is to come forward some time this year is that it would provide pensions to spouses between age 60 and 65 where the other spouse, male or female, is 65 or over and is receiving a pension. One thing wrong with that is the means test, but the fundamental thing that is wrong is that it says to some women "You will qualify because you have a husband; you are a spouse in that age bracket", but to other women, spinsters or widows, the pension will not be available. The same can apply to men. A man between age 60 and 65 with a wife over 65 will qualify for a pension. A man who is a widower or a bachelor in the same age bracket will not qualify.

There is just as much wrong with the government's proposal as there is with my hon. friend's proposal, Mr. Speaker. I think the slight difference is that my hon. friend is willing to listen to reason and change his, but it is difficult to change the government once it has laid down its position.

I welcome the motion before us this afternoon. The more times this subject comes up, the better. I enjoyed being here during the years when we got the pensionable age down from 70 to 65 and got the pension increased. The time to get it reduced from age 65 to 60 for all those people no longer in the labour market, is now, right now, today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) on a point of order.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 37(1) I take this opportunity with the greatest respect to correct the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He seems to have misunderstood or misquoted me. I did not say that I do not favour retirement at age 60. I favour it deeply and feel it is most important. What I said was that I do not want the possibility of it becoming mandatory as it gradually might. I stress strongly that at age 60, people are vigorous and well enough to enjoy travel and they should have the choice. But I did not want it exclusively for women; I want it for all people who chose that course.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is a correction of what the hon. member said and not a correction of my remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). On reading this motion, I wondered what was really the point of it. The hon. member probably wanted to please women, but I realized, after what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) retorted to him, that he had defeated his object, because the member for Vancouver-Kingsway actually found in that motion a hidden discrimination against women. All the same, I am sure the hon. member who moved that motion was well-intentioned and wanted to give housewives the opportunity to get their pensions at sixty, even though they would have been ahead of the men for once.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of lowering the pension age to 60 is nothing new. We were the first to advocate here the granting of old age security pension. Pensionable age was first set at 70, and then lowered to 65. During two election campaigns we asked that pensionable age be lowered to 60. Ninety percent of the people favoured that move, although the government has been reluctant to do so until now.

We even forced them, during the last election campaign, to promise pensions at 60. Let me say at this point, to set the record straight, that we proposed pensions be paid at 60 only to those who wished to retire, and not as a compulsory move. During the last election, we heard Liberals promising pensions for 60 years old. We thought that we were finally going to get it. We thought this would be available to all Canadians. It has always been my position in this House that when reforms or amendements are proposed to social legislation, the first feature of the legislation should be universality. As soon as one enters into details, into sections of the act, discrimination starts. If pensions were paid at age 60, it would have to be real pension, not the current "gimmick" under which 60 percent comes from old age security and 40 percent from charity groups. One thing should be avoided, namely that the act require hundreds and thousands of inspectors to investigate pensioners' homes to see if they did not hide $100 or $200. This is simply ridiculous, is deriding the aged.

If a pension is paid, it is a pension, period. There should be no other test than birth date. No two bit inspector or civil servant should get into old people's homes to unsettle them and often make them sick. We asked the government a number of times to lower pensionable age to 60 for everybody, men and women, who would like to have it and we added that it should be given to the wife who is under 60, at least 65 today, when she had been staying home without salary. We then thought about the family salary; since the mother stays home, looks after her children, the father's salary is necessarily considered as a family salary; to supplement this salary we asked that the mother be given the same pension as her hunband when the latter reaches pension age. I think it is only fair. It is not discriminatory at all; it is only fair to the mother, in the absence of a better system; we should have the family salary today, the salary of the mother. There is no such salary and there will not be one immediately, at least not with this government.

To prevent discrimination, particularly in Quebec, where when the hunband reaches 65, the couple has to live four or five years only on the hunband's pension, when the mother is three, four or five years younger. That is what I call discrimination. I regard such laws as antisocial. This is why we were asking in these particular cases that the mother be given a pension similar to that of her husband.

Now the government at least says that next fall a pension will be given to the mother of a family at age sixty, but that in principle such pension becomes available at sixty five. But the mother of a family, probably in the fall—

An hon. Member: For the spouse!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): For the spouse, of course. A pension will be given to the spouse at sixty. I agree. But under what conditions? We say: Well, the spouse should not receive an income. He must have only his pension. Good care should be taken to have it that way. There will again be inquiries upon inquiries so that only 10 per cent of mothers will be able to have a pension. These are all little annoyances, little implications which explain why legislation passed here is effective to the extent of 10 or 12 per cent only.

Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is passed let it be passed for all mothers. The person getting an income pays tax at the end of the year. But that will prevent us from having the pension amount eroded by the small inspectors who are on the look-out thoughout Canada for all those women.

It would be so simple to simplify the legislation. But we complicate everything in the law. During my 15 years in this House, I noticed that laws are always made for technocrats, for higher officials. Let us double, triple the number of high-ranking officials, and everything will go smoothly! The pension, finally, is but a pretext to fill offices with high-ranking officials.

It is about time, when we vote a credit, to think that it should go to the one who needs it and that we should not have to spend two thirds of the amount for inspections and regulations which often nullify the laws we vote here so as to give the least possible. This is how things are being done in this House, we vote, it looks good. Whenever a law is passed, people know about it and say: How marvelous. But in the end, there is nothing left. Why? Because we have a government of officials. It exists for officials and not for the needs of the Canadian people.

I congratulate the hon. member who proposed this motion. I should like it to be more universal and I hope with all my heart that this fall, at least, we do not fail. As to the wives younger than their husband, those from 60 to 65 years, all those who want it, and I am not referring here to working wives, as the one I was speaking of a while ago, I can understand her point, I hope the government decides once and for all to give them what they need, what they are entitled to.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) strikes me as being manifestly in contradiction to our whole policy as well as the principles of social justice. When governments develop social security policies, and this applies to this government, and are in the process of planning social security changes, the most important consideration they must bear in mind is the equity of the measures they propose to introduce. The hon. member alluded to this government's system of priorities. I think he said something about their being all mixed up. I shall return to that point.

As I said, governments must consider the equity of their measures. By that, I mean they must avoid discrimination in setting varying eligibility conditions and benefits based on artificial distinctions, such as sex, which may be unrelated, or occupation, which may be totally irrelevant. To my mind, the hon. member's proposal for lowering the general pensionable age to 60 is not serious. Personally, I think there is much to be said for lowering the pensionable age to 60; but the economics, the cost, as mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) last year, is astronomical. I think the minister said that this proposal would cost $1.2 billion per year.

Governments must strive to treat all people equally. Their attempt to do this was demonstrated by the recently entered into federal-provincial agreement for removing from the Canada Pension Plan differences in benefits based on sex. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has spoken about differences in CPP benefits based on sex. As I say, these differences have now been eliminated. The position of the government of Canada is this: Different retirement ages for men and women would constitute discrimination. This discrimination has been eliminated.

If we agree that the principle of a good social security review is valid, we should be wrong in endorsing the sort of motion we are discussing today. The government is committed to removing discriminatory provisions from existing federal legislation and, to this end, has introduced the omnibus bill on the status of women as well as amendments to superannuation legislation and legislation affecting other federal pensions. No one denies the tenuous position of many housewives whom the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) rightly defined as house mistresses. I truly believe that the problem such women face has moved out of the realm of pure biology and into the realm of economics. I wish to consider it from that angle.

Early retirement for women, as for men, may actually be discriminatory. But let us consider for a moment the implications of early retirement within our present inflationary context, a context in which nearly all feel compelled to re-assess lifestyles because of the rapidly deteriorating purchasing power of incomes. A Financial Times survey carried out not long ago, and based on a study by 28 leading Canadian and United States companies, indicated that the great North American dream of early retirement is in trouble, apparently because of inflation and poor planning. In brief, most of these consultants, according to the same study, seem to agree that the best advice to give these people at this time is to keep working.

There is yet another important factor which governments must not overlook, quite apart from the costs such a scheme would incur. I am referring to the question of priorities. There is no doubt, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare himself pointed out, if the state were a limitless reservoir of funds, it would certainly lower the eligibility age to 60. It so happens the government is not an inexhaustible source of funds. Hence, priorities must be established and respected. That in fact, is the responsibility, the burden of governments and indeed a responsibility which lies not only with the federal government but with the provincial governments as well.

Choices must be made and decisions must take into account the total existing requirements. True, our policies must meet the needs of our older citizens and even, if need be, before retirement. However, along with these, we must also cope with the problems facing the disabled and the handicapped. We must supplement the income of the working-poor. We must implement programs to encourage the low-wage earners to remain in the labour forces. For those who can work, but are without a job, we must find ways and means to allow them to do so. Moreover, there is the single mother whose income is either non-existent or unacceptably low. We must remember housing needs, social services, such as day-care centres, and so on. From these various needs a rational list of priorities must be drawn by order of importance.

The question of income naturally leads us to yet another facet of equity in a social security context, income distribution. In this respect, just how equitable would the adoption of a motion such as the one being discussed today be in terms of allowing all income groups in our society to recoup a fair share of the nation's revenue. I find it difficult to see the motion in this context.

Although one could hardly claim to have exhausted the many aspects of the problem, I trust hon. members of the House by now have dismissed the proposed motion as irrational and unwise. By adopting this measure, the government would only commit a recurring mistake, one for which several other governments could be reproached, that is the single-minded pursuit of one overriding policy objective at the expense of all others. That is completely unacceptable at this time. It is the government's duty to demonstrate wisdom in discerning between first and secondary priorities, and quite often the only choice open to us is to compromise between these priorities.

As a last thought, Mr. Speaker, I might add that my Liberal colleagues and I are far from being insensitive to the problems of the elderly. The record of the Liberal government attests to that. I strongly believe we have to weigh the problems pertaining to senior citizens in relation to all the other problems, and the ability of this country to pay for the solution of them.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) stated that he felt this proposal could justifiably be included in this $28 billion budget. I do not know what part of the budget he would eliminate in order to accommodate this proposal. I do not believe, in view of the sum total of the budget, this measure is justified, at this time, although in years to come possibly it could be if we reduced the pensionable age to 60. This or subsequent governments would not reduce the pensionable age to 60 on a voluntary basis without any compromises.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in this House that the solution to our problems in social security lies, not through bringing about a broad expansion, or a general lowering of pension benefits to those who are 60 or 55, but rather through a system of guaranteed income or income supplementation, which would be available to all, regardless of age, former occupation, present condition, or sex. That is what the social security review is all about.

We recently received a rather extensive document regarding the whole problem of social security review. I know that hon. members are very interested in suggestions put forward by the federal government. I am told that the provinces in general are very co-operative. On the other hand, it is the ability to pay for, not the desire to offer this pension that is the biggest issue. If this government spends too much, the opposition criticizes us for over-spending. We are criticized for our priorities.

Here we are establishing a priority. We said the Canada Pension Plan will be enlarged to include the spouse. In spite of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, I find this a very progressive move. It will possibly be studied in committee soon and, I hope, come into effect in October 1975.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE THE NUMBER OF FULL-TIME MEMBERS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-43, to amend the Law Reform Commission Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief tonight. I should like to leave one thought with the House on third reading. At the outset, I should like to say that every member of the House of Commons, every lawyer, anyhow, supports the idea of the Law Reform Commission and its work. To illustrate the difficulty of the field in which it is engaged, perhaps I might be allowed to quote from a Russian philosopher. Speaking about the problem of segregating the good from the bad, he had this to say:

> Let the reader who expects this book to be a political exposé slam its covers shut right now. If only it were so simple! If only there were people somewhere insidiously committing evil deeds and it were necessary only to separate them from the rest of us and destroy them. But the line dividing good and evil cuts through the heart of every human being. And who is willing to destroy a piece of his own heart?
> During the life of any heart this line keeps changing place. Sometimes it is squeezed one way by exuberant evil and sometimes it shifts to allow enough space for good to flourish. One and the same human being is, at various ages, under various circumstances, a totally different human being. At times he is close to being a devil, at times to sainthood. But his name doesn't change and to that name we ascribe the whole lot, good and evil.

I understand well the functions of the Law Reform Commission and I have just done some research on the various reports the Commission has brought out. Up to this point, the Commission has been engaged, it seems to me, in a philosophic approach. On the practical side it has been dealing with the reform of our correctional institutions, and so on. However, it is time, now, for the Law Reform Commission, this parliament and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) in particular to examine the Criminal Code carefully with a view to making necessary changes. I am speaking from memory, but I believe it was Stevens of England who put the Code together in 1887 and except for a few changes it was adopted by Canada in the early 1900's—1906 to be exact. Since then, some changes have been made but there are still sections of it which provide, for example, for a person seven years and older being charged with a criminal offence in certain circumstances; there are still sections dealing with insanity which are more than 100 years old.

This is, of course, International Women's Year the theme of which is equality for the other sex, a concept I certainly endorse. There are certain sections dealing with certain offences; if a male is a certain age and the female is a certain age, the male is subject to a charge of statutory rape. I have brought these sections to the attention of the minister and of the Commission. Dozens of sections are archaic and outdated; it is high time they were changed, especially in the light of the fact that the government has been returned with a big majority and with the endorsation of the Canadian people. This is the time for us to get together and produce a Criminal Code adapted to the situation in 1975 rather than conditions in 1910, 1920, 1930 or even a decade ago. Let us get on with the job. Let us streamline and reform the Criminal Code to meet the changed social climate now.

It seems to me we have lost the track. All the efforts of the Law Reform Commission seem to be directed to the treatment of those who have committed violent crimes—I shall not get into that field now, because I have definite views on it. I have a great deal of respect for the Department of Justice. I think the department can be proud of its record over the years, especially when one compares it with what has been taking place in other countries, including the United States. One can be proud of the men who work there and who have worked there over the years. The department has benefitted from the work of good scholars, many of them Rhodes scholars, conscientious workers and fine persons who really believe there should be a new national policy as far as the Criminal Code is concerned.

Having said that, and spoken for less than ten minutes, which is not long for the hon. member for Calgary North, I will simply conclude by asking the minister to get on with the job.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF ADVANCE PAYMENT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-10, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am utterly amazed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) should quickly cry "carried" when you called this bill. The NDP have long professed to be the spokesmen for the wheat farmer of Saskatchewan. One can only assume that they sorely miss the old and tired member of the National Farmers Union who was a member of parliament for a short while; I seem to have forgotten his name but I think he was from Saskatoon-Biggar. He was old and tired, but he always tried to keep the NDP interested in the Saskatchewan farmer. If he were still here he would not have let the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre shout "carried" to a grain marketing bill at a time when the grain marketing situation in Canada is in utter chaos. Any member of the House would be derelict in his duty if he allowed the bill to pass without referring to some of the errors the government has made recently and is making today in the area of grain marketing.

Many members may wonder what Bill C-10 is all about. It is a strange piece of legislation. I well remember around 1957, 1958 or 1959 the government of the day bringing in a bill on cash advances that would allow the farmer to receive money for grain he held in storage but was unable to deliver. The amount was increased from a maximum of $3,000 to $6,000. I know inflation has had a great effect on costs, but Bill C-10 jumps the maximum from $6,000 to $15,000; and if a farmer is operating a farm in partnership with a brother, his mother, sister, or cousin he can jump the maximum to $30,000.

It has commonly been said from time to time that the right hand of government hardly knows what the left hand is doing. That has commonly been said, I suppose, of governments of yesteryear and it probably will continue to be said of governments of the future. The strange thing we see this evening is that the right hand of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board evidently does not know what the minister's left hand is doing.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

The other day I read in the Globe and Mail an article which said the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was urging farmers to deliver their grain because he was concerned and worried that the Wheat Board's sales commitments would not be met. The farmers were somewhat reluctant to make deliveries of their grain, as payments had been made to them in January of 1975 on crops that were sold in the 1974 crop year. This bill, in effect, is telling the farmers: "Don't deliver your grain; take a cash advance on it up to $15,000". Did I correctly read the minister's remarks of two weeks ago when he urged farmers to make deliveries? As I say, the bill now before us does the very contrary.

The original purpose of the cash advance legislation was to give money to destitute farmers who were unable to deliver their grain. The government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) introduced this legislation to help the farmers. The wheat farmers on the prairies today received millions of dollars in January of the current calendar year. They do not want to put themselves in a position where they pay too much income tax, so the tendency is not to deliver wheat. We are now being asked to pass a piece of legislation that will encourage them not to deliver their wheat.

According to the latest figures I have seen, there are 189 million bushels of grain and wheat in commercial storage, nearly an all-time low and the lowest amount in commercial storage in the past 20 years. It is low for two reasons. We had a poor crop last fall; the other reason is that farmers are in no rush to deliver because their cash flow position—a common expression today—is relatively good.

When this bill was considered in committee, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) said, as reported at page 10 of the committee proceedings for Tuesday, February 4, 1975:

> I think the necessity for this bill—

He was merely fishing to find out just why the bill was coming forward at this time.

> —sort of points up some of the real problems in our grain industry; that if delivery opportunities were available and the grain was moving continually, there would really be no need for this type of legislation.

The hon. member is really saying that, if all things were what they appeared to be, there would be no need for this type of legislation. He then asked the minister whether he agreed, and the minister replied:

> No, I do not think we should ever try to build a commercial system—

The minister's motivation in this instance has to do with what is in store for the wheat farmer in the year 1975, since the railways want to abandon some 6,200 miles of track, and all the delivery points along the way. The minister's reply:

> No, I do not think we should ever try to build a commercial system that can hold every bushel of grain immediately and therefore allow for the purchase of it. The quota system allows for the phasing over a year of the Wheat Board delivery opportunity, and the bill itself was particularly designed to make it even easier for those farmers who have feed grain, and who want cash, to hold and deliver later to the Canadian Wheat Board rather than be under a cash pressure to deliver it to the open market.

There are two significant points in that paragraph. First of all, the minister readily admits that, so far as commercial grain storage is concerned, we are in for a shock in 1975. They are going to be arguing whether 6,200 miles of railway track should be done away with, and a great number of delivery points may well be considered for abandonment in 1975.

● (2020)

The other point which is apparent in that paragraph is found in the last sentence which reads:

—the Wheat Board delivery opportunity ... was particularly designed to make it even easier for those farmers who have feed grain, and who want cash, to hold and deliver later to the Canadian Wheat Board rather than be under a cash pressure to deliver it to the open market.

The minister is concerned, as are many farmers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and some parts of Alberta, that too much grain is being delivered on the open market and not enough consigned to the Canadian Wheat Board. We all know that the Canadian Wheat Board has made sales commitments in respect of millions of bushels for delivery later on, so the minister wants to be sure that he will have enough delivered to the Wheat Board and not too much to the open market. Those are the two significant parts, the cash advances on the grain in storage on the prairies, and the recognition of the deficiency in the system in that farmers may well sell too much on the open market so that the Wheat Board may not be able to meet its commitments later on this year to deliver the grain already sold.

There are other problems in respect of the grain industry which I think I would be remiss if I did not mention. Before getting into those problems, it is of interest to note that at the recent Agricultural Outlook Conference there were many important statements in respect of farm costs. I would be remiss if I did not point out that it is a recognized fact in the agricultural industry that costs are rising to a much greater extent than prices at this particular time.

Bill C-10 makes no mention of the amount that will be advanced on each bushel the farmer holds in storage. This is a key question. How much is the government going to allow per bushel which will allow the farmer to take up to the maximum of $15,000? Will this put the farmer in an overdraft position before the end of the year if the allowance is too great? The minister got into this trouble in the past when he first tried to amend this bill some years ago.

Let me refer to a news release from the agriculture department following the 1975 Agricultural Outlook Conference on January 20 and 21. It reads in part:

Even though we can expect gross farm receipts to go up by four per cent in 1975, net farm income may nose dive by 12 per cent;

They are being optimistic, and they take a similar viewpoint with regard to gross farm receipts being up 4 per cent. They are certainly optimistic when they suggest that net farm income will only nosedive by 12 per cent. The minister knows this, and I want the members of this House also to know at this time that net farm income may nosedive more than 12 per cent in 1975. I suggest that if we are not very careful it will nosedive well below 12 per cent. This is obvious from a recent drop of over $1 in the international wheat price in the past three weeks.

This news release continues:

—the culprit will be input costs—

What is the minister doing about input costs? We have asked from time to time what the government is doing about inflation, and what its answer to inflation may be. What is the great Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and I say that somewhat facetiously, doing about input costs to the agriculture industry today?

An hon. Member: Consulting Beryl.

Mr. Horner: He is consulting Beryl, and he is talking about turtles and cheese at the same time, not knowing that one carries disease and the other does not.

This same press release goes on to say:

Farmers can expect to pay more for nearly every major farm input,—

The minister noted that farm machinery may account for 21 per cent of total farm operating costs and that steel prices will be higher than ever in 1975. So much for farm costs and the projected farm net income. I suggest it is going to be lower in 1975.

Why did the minister not explain this bill in relation to cash income for farmers? What is he doing about marketing? We have this neat little booklet which was sent to every grain producer in western Canada, and it is interesting to note that this report got to the producers quicker than the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board on the crop year 1973-74 got to members of parliament. It is lucky that I happen to be both. This little booklet does not have any page numbers so I cannot quote the exact page, but I guess it is two pages past the centre of the book to which I wish to refer. I do not know whether that is to the right or the left, but it spells out pretty clearly that demurrage charges for the crop year 1973-74 amounted to $13 million which comes out of the farmers' pockets.

I dealt at some length with the fact that input costs are supposed to be the culprit in relation to farm problems, but what does that charge of $13 million do to them? It comes out of their pockets, and I hope there is no member in this House who does not fully realize that demurrage charges paid on ships come out of the farmers' pockets. Is the minister and this government attempting to help the farmer when they allow strikes to go on and on and on, or when they deliberately interfere as they did in the grain handlers' strike on the west coast last May? This government told the grain handlers to cease all meaningful negotiations as it knew the grain companies were the culprits, and after the election it intended to make the grain companies pay. That is what the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board said. I was not in any position to judge who the culprit was, but I fully believe that meaningful negotiations between management and labour should have been allowed to continue.

Everybody in western Canada today knows who the culprit was in those negotiations. They know it was the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, that itinerant lawyer. Let any neutral person who knows nothing about wheat travel anywhere on the prairies and ask the simple question; what was the problem, and how did the government handle labour negotiations last year with the grain handlers? I am sure he will find that every man, woman and child in western Canada knows now that the problems resulted from the interference of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

I have the utmost respect for the Canadian Wheat Board. The men in charge are doing the very best they can, but they are continually being interfered with by this minister for political purposes. I will have more to say about that when Bill S-6 comes before the House, because that is an example of what I have just said, that the minister is continually interfering. The $13 million demurrage charges should have been picked up by this government because this government deliberately interfered in that labour negotiation. The government destroyed meaningful negotiations for two months, from May 8 to July 8. Then, two months were added just for good measure. The government waited until sometime in September and then called Parliament to introduce a bill to suggest that the workers and the grain companies should meet, negotiate and settle. Grain was tied up for four months. It is no wonder the demurrage charges amounted to $13 million in the crop year 1973-74. There are additional freight charges totalling $1.600 million. The divisional handling charges amounted to $1,200,000. This is related directly to the interference by this minister in the grain marketing system.

Now, let me move on and bring this situation up to today's conditions. What do we have now? We have the GLT workers of the Public Service on strike. They have been on strike for 16 days. What is the situation at Vancouver? Over 40 ships are tied up at that port. Nobody seems to worry about that. The government is not appointing a mediator to deal with that problem. From time to time in this House there is a good deal of discussion about the poor in the world who are crying out for food. We have the Minister of Agriculture who goes to a conference on world population and food problems and who offers 36 million bushels of wheat. This was a great gesture. Yet there is a ship waiting in Vancouver harbour which is supposed to take five million bushels of wheat to Bangladesh. I do not have to tell members of this House how badly protein is needed in that country. This ship can carry five million bushels of grain. This ship was scheduled to dock to be loaded. We will be lucky if it is loaded in 30 days. In fact the people of Bangladesh and the western farmers will be lucky if it is loaded before the grain inspectors are back to work.

This government has not seriously concerned itself with the farmers and the delivery of their products. We can imagine the amount of the demurrage charges on a ship which can carry five million bushels of grain. That ship has been there for more than nine days and was scheduled to be loaded in four days. Once a ship is at the dock, the demurrage charges are rated according to its capacity.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What about the capacity of the farmer?

Mr. Horner: My friend asks about the capacity of the farmer. I know that the capacity of the farmer to bear up under this minister is at a low ebb. If the election of July 8 had been held one or two months after July 8 in the Saskatoon-Humboldt area this minister would not be here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: Now, we have a reaction from members opposite.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They are wide awake.

Mr. Horner: I say to these learning backbenchers of the government that they should go to Saskatchewan and talk to the farmers. Let them go to the Humboldt area.

An hon. Member: And Gus MacFarlane.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The hon. mountain member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Horner: The people know all about the direct interference of the minister in the grain marketing trade. He has not done them a service. In fact, he has done them a disservice. What has the minister done to correct this image he has created? He is playing a neat game of tricks. He is advertising widely throughout the Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta area saying that he will have an election in respect of an advisory body to the Canadian Wheat Board. A month ago the farmers were asking what this was all about. It became obvious that it was not an election. It was a gimmick the minister was using in an attempt to pacify the angry people in Saskatchewan and on the prairies. It is a gimmick. The President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the President of the Manitoba Wheat Pool, the President of the National Farmers Union, the President of the Alberta Wheat Pool and the President of Uni-Farm of Alberta are running. They are all running for the positions to which they were appointed. They may or may not be elected. Mr. Runciman, a knowledgeable and respected man in the grain trade offered his name in respect of the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board. Does anyone in this House seriously expect that he will not win that election? He was on the appointed advisory board prior to this great charade.

The minister is attempting to improve his political health on the prairies. This is merely a charade to improve the minister's political health on the prairies. The minister has some other fences to mend which stretch back as far as that great program called LIFT, which meant lower inventory for tomorrow while to most of the farmers it meant lower cash for tomorrow. We know what happened. That was in 1969 and 1970. Some farmers were overpaid. The farmers were notified they were overpaid but the matter was dropped. Now, after July 8, they are proceeding to collect the overpayments. All of a sudden some farmers have been hit with bills which now appear to them to be bills which are three or four years old. The farmers do not think this is very fair. They thought it was a forgotten issue. The minister now, realizing he has some fence-mending to do, is attempting to do this.

This cash advance legislation which is before the House of Commons will accomplish absolutely nothing. This is a perfect example—and I shall end on this note—of good legislation passed in 1978—I hear some remark by the former President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Drury: Did you say 1978?

Mr. Horner: I said 1978 but I meant to say 1957. Thank you for correcting me. This legislation was passed in 1957 to solve a problem at that particular time. The problem of 1957 has long since disappeared. Farmers could not market their grain. Now, the minister is begging them to market their grain. What is the problem? In a speech I made before Christmas, sometime in the month of November, I showed the minister how he could encourage the farmers to market their grain. I told him that he would have difficulty in getting farmers to market their grain in the new calendar year. I advised him to bring forward a registered savings plan which would benefit the agricultural industry. The $4,000 allowed per person in any one year to go into a registered savings plan is of no benefit to farmers. It can be of tremendous benefit to the lunch pail workers, to people on salary, but it will not benefit the agricultural industry.

I advised the minister to allow the farmers of Saskatchewan to take the surplus money from their final payments on their grain and put it into a registered savings plan. I spoke of $50,000, but that may be too large an amount. Let them put more than $4,000 in a registered savings plan so that they can market their wheat without fear of paying an unduly large amount of income tax to the government in any one year. The government should allow farmers to spread their expenses over a more extended period of time. However, the minister did not pay particular attention to my advice. But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) did. I spoke to him privately on the subject and I have learned some things about him. The Minister of Finance might have a bigger heart for the wheat farmers of Saskatchewan than the former dean of law of Saskatoon, the little boy who left the farmers of Saskatchewan because he hated agriculture. Now he has to administer a certain portion of the cash rewards for the agricultural industry. He is administering them in a picayune manner which is best described by the program LIFT, lower inventory for tomorrow. Otto needs a lift somewhere outside the House of Commons. There is no question about it.

The minister has failed to pay any attention to the demurrage charges that piled up last year and are continuing to pile up. He knows that the input costs in the agriculture industry are well over 12 per cent. In fact, in the past year they went up by nearly 14 per cent. That is the cost of goods that farmers have to buy in order to grow wheat. The minister is well aware of that, but he does not do a thing about it. He does not attempt to curb the demurrage charges. When he interferes directly in a labour strike, he should attempt to curb those costs with which the farmer will be faced in 1975.

The minister brought forward a piece of legislation which has long outlived its purpose. He said that it has two main purposes. I may be repeating myself but I want to make sure that members of the House know what the purpose of this legislation is. The minister says that about 6,000 miles of railway tracks in the prairies will be up for abandonment in 1975. There will be a great debate staged throughout the prairies regarding which sections of those railway tracks are to be abandoned. The minister knows that with the abandonment of that trackage, commercial storage will be reduced, but he says, "don't worry about it, we will give you cash advances. Save your wheat, keep it for the wheat board." He knows also that there is a tendency on the part of some farmers who have not been as fortunate as others to sell their grain for cash on the open market, which he permitted under the feed grains proposal, and he is saying to those farmers, "don't sell on the open market, take this cash advance and eventually we will take your wheat". That is the second purpose of this legislation.

This bill will not solve the problems facing the agriculture industry in 1975. I do not agree with the minister that 6,000 miles of tracks will be abandoned in 1975. I think only a small portion of those 6,000 miles will be abandoned, and therefore I question the real need for this legislation. However, perhaps the minister wishes to take up the time of this House so that he will be able to say that he piloted six pieces of farm legislation through the House in the early part of 1975. By the fall of 1975, farmers will be scratching their heads wondering what the legislation was because they will not have benefited from it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) that I and other members of this party are also interested in the problems of the wheat farmer in western Canada. I, for one, enjoyed hearing the remarks he made because I think he described fairly accurately the situation as it affects farmers. I am sure that there is no one who opposes the idea of increasing the cash advance to farmers from $6,000 to $12,000, but I think that the country should pay some attention to what is happening in the grain industry and to the fact that farmers producing wheat have had only one exceptionally good year in the last ten or twelve years. Since that time farmers' incomes have decreased sharply, as the hon. member for Crowfoot said, partly because of high inputs, partly because of the changes that are taking place in the handling of grain, and also partly because of the desire of Canadian producers in other fields to handle grain.

Previously, it has been easy for farmers to maintain at least an adequate supply of wheat. Normally, at least a one year's supply of wheat was held either in the elevator or on the farms in western Canada. This amount has been earmarked for our international grain trade and has provided Canada with a reputation across the world as a country which can be relied upon to meet its commitments and is able to make large sales of wheat.

I am really concerned if, in amending this act as proposed in the legislation before us, we should not be asking ourselves why Bill C-10 is in the form in which it has been put forward, while a bill closely related to it in the same field, Bill S-6, comes from the other place. Both these bills affect payments, one deals with advance cash payments and the other one with final payments. However, both of them are related to the amount of money the farmer will obtain which he can consider as his year's income.

I think the changes that are being made in both cases are worthwhile and are certainly supported by most of the farmers. However, it is a fact, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot, that we in this parliament have done absolutely nothing, less than nothing, in fact have been detrimental in many ways, in reducing the cost of the farmers' input as against the price that he gets for the goods that he sells. We have done nothing about the railway system, or about the distribution system. We have done nothing in conjunction with farm organizations to improve the structure on which the farmer depends to move his grain at the right time and when he wants to move it. The farmer will have no control over the wheat in inland terminals nor, in my opinion, will the Wheat Board.

The question of labour disputes comes into this, too. In the current one I expect the cabinet will have to hold a meeting and decide whether or not they are going to pay up. Obviously, if they do not, there will not be a settlement. Any settlement will only affect a small number of people in the grain trade, namely, the inspectors on the west coast, but it will have far reaching effects and may determine whether there will be a postal strike or some other major strikes in a few weeks time.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer and the Wheat Board, as well as all those connected with the grain trade, have an interest in this matter but the government does not allow them any input, so they have no control over their own situation. I have seen the minister on television telling the farmer that he will sell all the grain he can produce this year but, Mr. Speaker, the farmer has always been hurt when he has followed the advice of the government about planting. The price of wheat dropped a dollar on the futures market in the last few weeks, so the farmer is going to be turning to the open market to sell wheat, oats, barley and feed in the hope of more stability. The farmers may not be willing, cash advance or not, to commit the same amount of wheat to the Wheat Board for sales abroad as they did previously. It depends too much on the pressures of the Chicago futures market and the ability of the purchasing countries to pay in a currency acceptable to Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of two which affect payments to the farmer in western Canada. He must decide whether he can trust this government to provide a lucrative external grain market or whether he will depend on the market at home, which appears to be more stable and to which he may divert some of the feed grains. If that happens, then Canada will not be meeting the commitments we have made and this will have an effect on our export markets for many years.

There are some things this government could do. It could provide some impetus, through the CDC or by putting money into some of the small farm machinery companies, to help reduce input costs. Canada produces some of the basic ingredients for fertilizer, yet the price of fertilizer is considerably higher here than it is in the United States. A lot of fertilizer is exported to the United States when it would be to our advantage to provide a wider distribution in this country at reduced prices.

We have never had as small a holdover of wheat as we appear to have now, Mr. Speaker. It has always been my hope that one day we would provide the farmer with enough stability so that we could hold over one winter's supply of wheat in storage for external markets. Wheat is a commodity that can be stored for a considerable length of time. Indeed, we had some wheat stored in fields for years.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. MacFarlane: We might starve in the meantime.

Mr. Peters: That is the point. If we do not provide the farmer with the initiative to produce sufficient wheat to meet our commitments, somebody is going to starve—those who rely on the domestic market or the international market. We fought hard and spent a lot of money to win the markets we have. None have been acquired easily, except perhaps those in the last two or three years—they have been established by barter, by good faith and in countries to which we had to lend money. If we want the western farmer to stay in production we must provide him with the machinery that will allow him to produce for a fair and reasonable return.

Just the other day the minister suggested to farmers that instead of having the normal summer fallow they should put that land into wheat. That is a very curious thing for this minister to say. He is the one who engineered the LIFT program to take acreage out of production and put it into forage crops and summer fallow. Now, he is telling the farmers the reverse. The minister was dead wrong then, and he is probably dead wrong now. His track record has been dismal in this field as well as in other fields.

Canadians are vitally interested in seeing western grain producers lower their production costs and maintain viable operations. If prices drop, as seems very likely, and if input costs do not fall correspondingly, farmers will be in a difficult position. Farm production will not expand. It has often been said that this country can increase the production of almost any agricultural commodity, if the price is right. For the farmer the price has seldom been right; often it has been wrong.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Crowfoot suggest that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board had caused farmers to be overpaid during the election campaign and that he is trying to recover overpayments now, when farm input costs are rising and the price of produce dropping.

This bill will provide cash advances of $15,000 to the single farmer; of $30,000 to two partners who are over 18, and of $45,000 to more than two partners. But, Mr. Speaker, do not forget that money advanced must be repaid. The advance is an advance against the final amount received for production. The success of this legislation depends on the co-operation of the entire industry. It will only work if we can meet the commitments we have made, if the farmer decides not to sell on the open market and not to the feed grain industry which is offering alltime high prices for feed grains. If it does not work, the nation will suffer.

This bill will not provide the safeguards to the farmer which it should provide. It can only provide safeguards if we are willing to look at input costs of farm production and at such areas as fertilizer costs. As I said, farm production costs are rising. The farmer must worry about the weather, about grasshoppers—

Mr. Nystrom: And about the Liberals.

Mr. Peters: As the hon. member says, farmers must also worry about the domination of a Liberal cabinet minister.

Cash advances will bring advantage only if parliament stabilizes farmers' incomes. Farmers will produce more only if they can be sure of recovering at least their cost of production. They will heed government calls for increased production only if a little remains in their pockets after they have paid input costs and cash advances. The government might consider some form of indexing in connection with cash advances.

Very seldom in the last 30 years have western producers prospered. All too often farmers have carried on their own shoulders the burden of export markets. If we want farmers to make the commitment for which we are asking, we are obliged to help them keep input costs down so that they need not carry the burden of high input costs and low returns from markets.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to contribute very briefly to the debate before we pass Bill C-10 providing for an increase in the payments made to prairie grain producers.

In my opinion, the inflation period we are going through will not come to an end; at least I think it will never stop by itself unless Parliament really sets its mind to check it and avoid disaster.

When the law was passed 17 or 18 years ago of course the fixed rate was then consistent with the value of the Canadian dollar. But in 1975 at a time when it is worth 44 per cent less, I do not think that to raise the advance from $6,000 to $15,000 is exaggerated. Prairie grain producers have had to invest considerably to update their equipment to be able to do their tasks at the appropriate time because of a shortage of manpower. It is not that there are not enough workers in the country, but there are not enough people interested in agriculture. Farmers must take the necessary measures to produce. They make every effort to reach their aim.

Of course, they had to borrow additional capital to buy new machinery. It takes much more income to pay the interest on those loans; finally, they end up in a difficult situation.

Agriculture is an industry with many problems. One can never depend on the stability of the industry. One year the crops will be good, the next, bad. Many factors enter the picture. There is the weather, over which one has no control. There are the markets, supply and demand, domestic and foreign markets, as many questions marks, as many causes of uncertainty. This, Mr. Speaker, applies to both eastern and western producers. The farmers must always struggle along, day after day, and ask the governments to pass laws that will ensure a certain production, a certain income, that they might be able to meet their obligations.

But what surprises me in all this, Mr. Speaker, is that during the second half of the 20th century, our problem is not that of knowing how to produce. If we let the farmers, those who are interested in farm production, do as much as they can, farm production will progress enormously. This is so true that in many areas of agriculture in our country, there are measures aimed at slowing down production. In many areas of Canadian agriculture, there are quota systems. The bill aims at stopping production, not because too much is produced through out the world, since there obviously is not enough, but in the hope of ensuring to farm producers that their products will be sold at a price which will give them a certain income. But here again, we know that there is disorder. Some people like to play tricks and hide-and-seek. They like to misuse legislation and they do so to legislation that parliamentarians pass in good faith to protect this class of workers. We saw this again recently. I talked about it in the House today. Canada now imports poultry while it can produce sufficient quantities to meet the needs of all Canadians, and even more, since poultry producers follow a quota system. They recently had to reduce their quotas so as not to flood the market. At the same time, some people import poultry and this angers the producers. We read recently in the newspapers that poultry producers took over a truck which was bringing American chickens to a Quebec slaughterhouse. They had a barbecue in the streets while there are families in Canada, in Quebec, in every one of our cities, and even throughout the world, who could have used this food.

This is a waste. Something else could be done. We should act differently. Statistics were recently published which gave the names of those who are interested in sharing throughout the world, who know the developing countries, the under-developed countries where peoples are really in need, who do not have the food needed on a daily basis to satisfy their hunger.

It is forecasted that in 1975, 75 million people might lose their lives precisely because they will not have enough food on their table while at home we paralyze production because of domestic problems we try to solve. It is for that reason I think we should change somewhat our attitude, our approach.

The United Nations are an organization that was set up a number of years ago to promote peace in the world. It is all very fine, and I think the United Nations should continue to exist. But instead of talking only of nuclear arms, defence, wars left and right, I think the leaders could devote a little more time to examining the possibilities of different countries to bring help to underdeveloped countries, starving nations. A lot more money should be devoted to ensuring the survival of humanity instead of spending so many billions of dollars on new research, new arms in case of war. So if we want that to happen let Canada show leadership through its delegates when they meet at the United Nations. If the United States do the same we will certainly be able to find a way of having our grain distributed among the countries of the world at prices acceptable to producers. We will then stop always quarrelling on this same subject, and wondering what we are going to do with our grain, and what our producers can hope for the future.

Bill C-10 is a necessary measure because it meets a need. I urge farmers, prairie grain producers, where the land is suitable for that production, to continue to produce, do their best, do their work. For our part, this is why we are paid. We must draw up and pass the legislation to ensure the distribution of grain throughout the world. We will thus work constructively to promote peace which is sought by everyone. Some talk about it, but not really sincerely.

Canada has a task to fulfil. Our country can do much to show that it believes in that formula of peace through the distribution of goods, of food in the world to prove its good faith to bitter countries that have always remained unsatisfied. They will understand that it is possible in the twentieth century to establish lasting peace conditioned by the free circulation of goods to meet the needs of each and everyone.

Therefore, on behalf of my party, I want to say that we support Bill C-10 and hope it will come into force as soon as possible, so as to reassure grain growers who are quite worried, considering that this bill was introduced last October. Here we are in March already and it has not been adopted yet.

Personally, far from delaying the adoption of this bill, I shall do the utmost to have it adopted as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the debate this evening that the subject of grain is almost irresistible. As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) pointed out, this bill is a long way down the list of priorities when one considers what is wrong with our grain industry. When I think back to the fifties, no one worked harder and wanted cash advances more than my good Liberal farmer friends. However, the Liberal government of the day said it could not be done. They said if it were ever done, it would cost the grain companies huge sums of money, the farmers would not make their payments and so on. When this legislation was first introduced, they opposed it.

It was not until a young fellow called Alvin Hamilton came along during the Diefenbaker years that we got cash advances. It is also noteworthy that during the term of that government, a no strike deal was negotiated at the Pacific seaboard. That deal lasted for a good number of years. Compare that with the present situation with strikes from one end of the country to the other. We have already lost over 80 days at Pacific seaboard because of strikes and shutdowns. There have been four separate strikes. We have no international grain agreement. We are losing sales to the United States. Japan is tendering in the market, and there were six cargoes in the last week that we should have had. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board must be about ready to announce to the world that Canada is out of the market. At the same time he could well announce to our producers that their delivery opportunities are frozen.

The situation has changed greatly in western Canada since this legislation was first introduced 17 or 18 years ago. Many farmers have to take an advance now because the trains just do not run anymore on our branch lines. This legislation can be used, in the minds of many, to coerce farmers into hauling greater distances. It seems to many producers that this is just another part of an overall plan the minister has to make changes just for the sake of change.

I hope the minister will consider some measure of compensation for the country's grain buyers who are responsible for most of the cost of administering this program but receive nothing in return, while at the same time they are subject to some liability under it. It is not good enough for the minister to say that it is the responsibility of the companies to look after the grain buyers. The country elevator operator is the cash register of the western grain industry. It is the only business I know where one man's signature on a cheque can commit his company to hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. I really believe the country grain buyer deserves a better shake from the government.

● (2120)

The minister, in closing the debate on second reading, did his best to indicate the prosperity of western farmers, quoting figures to prove that the average net farm income for 1974 would be over $23,000 per farmer. I leave it to the farmers of western Canada to judge the accuracy of those figures.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF ADVANCE PAYMENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Further to the report stage of Bill S-6 this afternoon, by agreement, the question is that Bill S-6 be now read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; should the motion not be made by someone who is here?

An hon. Member: The minister is not here.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (for Mr. Lang) moved that Bill S-6, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-6 is an interesting bill. I think it is only fair the country should know that it originated in the Senate. While it was before the Committee on Agriculture, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who was not here to move the third reading of the bill, had this to say with regard to the legislation as reported at page six of the committee proceedings No. 18:

> I would simply say that Bill S-6 renders a little more certain the year in which the final payment will be received.

This is an important piece of legislation. The country is crying for action on inflation. The farmers are worrying about the inflated costs they will have to meet in 1975. From time to time supporters of the government suggest that the Opposition is holding up legislation—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Horner: —and that the ability of those on the treasury benches to govern is being interfered with. Mr. Speaker, this bill is, really, of no significance whatsoever.

Mr. Peters: It is to keep them honest.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said it is to keep them honest. I am glad he made that observation because I shall be dealing with it in a minute or two. Let me repeat what the minister said before the committee:

I would simply say that Bill S-6 renders a little more certain the year in which a final payment will be received.

Now, I want to read another significant statement which appears in the same paragraph. The minister added:

It is almost impossible for the Canadian Wheat Board to make a payment before January 1.

Let us analyze those words. Let us cast our minds back. In what year in the recent past, was there a payment made before January 1? Scratch our heads. Everybody thinks: My, it was the year 1972 when there was an election on October 30. That was the year in which the minister did the impossible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: He rose amid a cloud of dust on the prairies and said: I have done the impossible; farmers, vote for me and I will give you another 15 cents a bushel—he was in a little trouble on the prairies and he thought the farmers could be conned into voting Liberal.

Mr. Jamieson: And was he re-elected?

Mr. Horner: An hon. member asks whether he was re-elected. How many were re-elected with him? He would not have been re-elected if it had not been for the city voters in Saskatoon.

Mr. Lang: That is not true.

Mr. Horner: Let the hon. gentleman check the facts. Everyone else in Saskatchewan knows. They will remember the great con artist of the Liberal party who would speak one way in Saskatchewan and another way in eastern Canada. I am referring to the former Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: Forked tongue.

Mr. Horner: Someone said "forked tongue". He had a tongue that spoke one way in one part of Canada and another way in another part of the country.

As I say, this is an interesting paragraph. I have not got to the end of it yet. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board went on to say this:

As the present law stands, if the board can close its pool and therefore be ready to make a payment, it has to make the payment. In at least one recent year, this meant that the payment came rather unexpectedly to tax planning farmers in December.

He admits it was one recent year. The tax planning farmers had nothing to do with it. Vote-gathering Liberals offered the payment to the farmers on October 15, 1972 and the Wheat Board was then obliged to go ahead and make payment. The payment arrived in the hands of the tax planning farmers in December. Talk about a con game!

This is the Senate taking a hand in the operations of government. This is one of the most commendable pieces of legislation the Senate has sent to us in years. If we go back to 1867, we find the Senate is supposed—it does not, but it is supposed—to act in a non-partisan manner, for the good of the country and not for the good of a political party. The Senate is slapping the wrist of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and is saying: "No more abuses; no more direct interference with the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board." The Canadian Wheat Board operates for the good of the Canadian wheat farmer, not for the good of the political party which happens to be in power at any given time.

An hon. Member: Or for the good of the opposition.

Mr. Horner: I hear an hon. member standing behind the curtain making a comment. If he wants to make a speech on this bill, I will spare him some time before ten o'clock if he comes forward. In any event, the significant thing that we are witnessing here tonight is that the Senate is slapping the wrist of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and saying there will be no more interference with the Canadian Wheat Board, no more of this trick of using the farmers' own money to buy votes.

Most members of the House of Commons think that final payments on wheat come from the general treasury. We are not dealing here with some kind of subsidy out of general revenue; we are dealing with the farmers' own money which accumulates in the pool accounts of the Canadian Wheat Board and is paid to the farmers when the Wheat Board settles those accounts. The minister's own admission on page 6 of the committee report is that this payment was made unexpectedly in only one year, and that it is almost impossible for the Canadian Wheat Board to settle accounts before January 1.

All hon. members know the job of the Canadian Wheat Board is to sell wheat for the Canadian farmer. It does the Canadian farmer a disservice if some elected official superimposes his wish upon the board's and tells them to stop selling wheat and to total up their accounts, because he is in political trouble and wants to offer the farmer some money. On that particular occasion the Conservative party, which happened to be the official opposition, had some very knowledgeable members in the wheat trade. They did the best calculations they could and decided that the pool accounts could safely be offered an additional 25 cents, and as an official policy they proposed a 25 cent boost in the initial price of wheat. This offer came out some time in September. I am pointing this out so the House can fully realize that the minister knew exactly what he was doing when he did the impossible in 1972. The official opposition said that the initial price was too low, that if they had been the government they would have increased the initial price by 25 cents a bushel at the beginning of the crop year on August 1.

I well remember the minister's initial reaction. He scoffed at that offer in his arrogant way and said we were insulting the knowledge of the farmers. Then, as the campaign wore on, he realized that the farmers had accepted the proposition that the initial price should be 25 cents a bushel higher than it was, so he directly interfered with the Canadian Wheat Board and told them he was going to make another offer. He said: "We have an election; we have to buy votes with the farmers' own money", and so he made an offer of 30 cents.

I have often wondered, if the official opposition at that time, figuring things out to the best of their ability, had decided that the farmers should be paid another 35 cents a bushel, whether the minister would have offered 40 cents. I have come to the conclusion that that is the way the minister reached his 30 cents. If we had offered 35 cents, he would have offered 40 cents. It was an option with the farmers' own money.

In the fall of 1972 the price of grain was not as high as it has been in the last couple of years. This was a year or two following the implementation of the LIFT program which penalized the farmers if they grew wheat. That was a time when the farmers were in need of cash. We in the opposition recognized the fact that international grain prices were going to go up. They started to go up in May 1972, and the minister made his last big sale to China in April at a very low price compared with the prices that followed. That is when he offered the farmers 30 cents, as he admitted in the committee proceedings.

Further on in the committee proceedings the minister admitted that the Wheat Board really preferred this bill. It is not a question of the minister preferring the bill but of the Wheat Board preferring the bill. I ask, why did the Wheat Board prefer this bill? Why did the bill originate in the Senate? Who in the Senate had some knowledge of the Wheat Board? The former chief commissioner who operated and managed the Wheat Board for the farmers was a member of the Senate. The minister admitted in the committee that the Wheat Board preferred this bill because then no future minister could deliberately interfere with the Wheat Board's operations for political reasons, as this minister did in 1972.

Obviously, the bill originated in the Senate because the former chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board desired something like this to protect the Wheat Board and its pool accounting system. Senator McDonald of southern Saskatchewan was a wheat farmer fully knowledgeable of the political abuses that can be perpetrated upon the wheat farmer by a Liberal government, particularly the one of Jimmy Gardiner. I would also be remiss if I did not mention the Hon. Senator Argue, a knowledgeable critic—that is the best compliment I can pay him—who is fully aware of what political implications can spell for Saskatchewan farmers from time to time.

I have no doubt that when the Wheat Board requested this bill they did not get a favourable response from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The minister knew he was the culprit who had interfered with the Wheat Board previously. I can quite imagine that he said: "This is a minor bill; don't trouble me with it". They went to the Senate and found there a ready ally in the former chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, as well as ready support from the former member for Assiniboia, Senator Argue.

As I have said, the Canadian Wheat Board works for the wheat farmer, not for the political party in power. While the Wheat Board commissioners may be appointed by the government in power, they are to act in a non-partisan manner. Supposedly we are to gain something from this election charade the minister is carrying out in respect of advisers to the Canadian Wheat Board. One can only gather that the one little benefit to come from that is that, over the years, it may tend to make the Wheat Board more independent of the government and more answerable to the farmers, particularly if the farmers elect the advisory committee to the Wheat Board rather than the members being appointed by the government. That is the one benefit that will come from this election charade the minister is perpetrating upon the wheat farmer. In years to come this may be a beneficial thing. The one thing which may be of benefit to the farmer is that this bill will make the Wheat Board one teeny-weeny bit more independent and protected from government interference.

If I have left no other message with members of this House tonight regarding this small, teeny-weeny bill, S-6, let me point out that the purpose is to slap the hands or the wrists of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. The reason this bill comes from the Senate is that those gentlemen there who have some knowledge about the grain trade realize the importance of the independence of the Wheat Board and that it must be maintained free of political interference. This minister has interfered with the Wheat Board for political reasons, and let there be no doubt about that. Let it long be remembered as a lesson to future ministers.

It is fine to interfere with the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board if you are pushing and promoting sales, or guaranteeing credit, as did a former minister, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), when wheat was hard to move. That is the kind of assistance the government can give. It should assist in making sales, but it should not deliberately interfere for political gain with this independent body set up to serve the farmers of western Canada. That should be a no, no, and Bill S-6 should make that abundantly clear to every member of this House of Commons.

Let me end on this note. At page 6 of the Committee's proceedings No. 18 the minister admits that the one purpose of this bill is to make certain of the year in which the final payment will be made. The minister admits, as do members of the Wheat Board, that it is almost impossible to make the final payment at any time before January 1. If this bill passes it will make it impossible, although I would not trust this minister even though he is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). I would not suggest that he would break the law, but he may well go around it as he has tried to do in the last couple of years, and as he tried to do in respect of that famous stabilization bill. I am going back to 1971, November of that year, when the minister was called before the courts just before a by-election took place in southern Saskatchewan, and he had to drop his stabilization bill. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admitted that they were trying to go around the law, but the government hoped to change the law after it had gone around it. That is really what he said.

If this bill passes it will be impossible for any responsible minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to make the final payment before January 1. I would not say that about the present government and this minister, because this minister has accomplished the impossible in the past and he may attempt to do so in the future, but we will be on guard.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has said, this bill is really not that big in terms of its content. It only deals with the deferral of the final payment from a pool until after January 1 in each calendar year.

Let me strongly support the suggestion by the hon. member for Crowfoot that all too often in the past we have seen final payments from the pool being used for political purposes. I well remember the 1972 election campaign when, on or about October 15, all of a sudden, two weeks before the election, the farmers received a final payment. That was the final plank in the Liberal party's election platform on the prairies. It seems to me that in the interest of openness in politics—

Mr. Lang: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question which can only be done with the consent of the hon. member. Does the hon. member accept a question from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang)?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder if it would surprise the hon. member at all if I refreshed his memory by pointing out that the final payment which came in the same year as the crop ended, came actually after the 1972 election and was an adjustment in the initial price for 1972? I really want to ask the hon. member if it surprises him to learn that when he relies upon the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) as his authority he is completely wrong?

Mr. Nystrom: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the promise was made two weeks before the election, if I recall correctly, and the payment was actually made in the month of December.

Mr. Horner: Yes, it was.

Mr. Lang: You have the wrong year.

Mr. Horner: It was 1972.

Mr. Lang: No, 1973. You have the wrong year.

Mr. Nystrom: That is the recollection I have, but I am willing to correct the record if that is not the case. I will look it up tomorrow. I can recall very well the minister making an announcement during that campaign, about two weeks before the election, that the final payment would be made in that year.

This has very often been used as an election promise. That has often been done by the Liberal party in the past. I remember one member of my own constituency, the hon. Jimmy Gardiner, who used to do things like this during an election year. He used to do it very often. This was part of a great election campaign type of patronage program the Liberal party used all the time. I hope that tactics like timing the final payment on grain according to the political whims of political parties is a thing of the past. I think things of this sort explain why the Liberal party is almost irrelevant right across western Canada today, keeping in mind the four provincial governments we have in the west.

All this bill will do is determine that the final payment will be made not sooner than January 1 of each calendar year. This will give farmers more economic stability. They will know when to expect the final payment, and will know what earnings to base their income tax on for one particular year.

As we all know, the farmer is up against all kinds of uncertainties. As suggested earlier by some hon. members, the farmer is up against uncertainties as to weather, international sales, grasshoppers and other kinds of insects, and the government in terms of its policy. This bill is one small step toward providing the farmer with some rationale on which to plan. This will give him some kind of consistency in respect of the income he is to derive.

It is very interesting to note that this bill originated in the Senate. I do not think that is a good precedent. I do not like to see bills originate in a Chamber which does not have democratically elected members. In any event, this bill did originate in the Senate and I wonder whether some of the senators really felt they could not trust the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and wanted to make sure that he was not able to play politics with the farmers' money.

It was very difficult for the farmers under the old system to know just where they were economically, because in that situation they could receive two final payments in one year. They could receive a final payment for the year just before the turn of the year, and another final payment for the previous year just after January 1. This kind of political game and this kind of inconsistency will be eliminated by Bill S-6. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, you could still have a lot of inconsistencies with the bill now before us. It does not say the money has to be paid before a certain time. It just says the final payment must be made after January 1 in each calendar year. I suppose if it were politically expedient to withhold the final payment until May or June the minister could still do that. I think this feature of the bill could be tightened up.

In any event, I think this bill is a step in the right direction. It is one very small bill which all of us in this House can support as something that should have been in force years ago. As I said, the bill originated in the Senate. I think one of the senators over there who has a bit of life and spunk decided he did not trust the Minister of Justice. Perhaps this is why the minister treats the bill so lightly. The senator introduced the legislation so the minister could not play politics with the farmers' money as he has done in the past. This is money that comes out of the final payment, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows. I am sure he would not play games of this sort with the farmers' money. It is the farmers' money and the farmers should not have to see that fund being used as part of a political poker game. I know the Minister of Agriculture would not do that, but the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is a different sort of politician from the congenial Minister of Agriculture. I see the Minister of Agriculture nodding his head indicating that he is in accord with me. I know he is very happy to see this bill before the House. I know that deep down in his heart he knows that this bill is a little bit of a rap on the knuckles of the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Wheat Board.

I agree with the representation made in committee last year by the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the time had come in this country when all matters pertaining to agriculture should be under the purview of the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture made that representation and I agree with him. I also agree with him that we cannot really trust the Minister of Justice to administer the Wheat Board in a proper and efficient manner, so it should be under the umbrella of one minister, the Minister of Agriculture. I am pleased, therefore to see the Minister of Agriculture here today smiling and nodding his head in the affirmative. I am sure he is very glad to see this very small bill before us, and I am sure he will wholeheartedly support it.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this bill I must say that if there is one thing this bill does it is that it shows the lack of imagination of the government, since it must rely on the Senate to bring in the rules of application which this minister and the department he represents do not seem able to draft. One very important point should be brought to the attention of the minister. A great many farmers received two payments in one year and therefore have suffered a hardship in respect of income tax. Producers have come to me and have asked if there was something I could do for them in respect of this payment because they had actually planned their income so that they would receive that payment the following January. It had been done that way for years, but all of a sudden because there was an election there had to be a promise of a payment.

One thing the minister does not understand is the fact that one cannot buy the respect of the prairie grain producer. That election proved that. Fewer Liberals came from western Canada after the election in 1972 than before, primarily because of the fact that the western grain producer will not be bought. I presume this has been a lesson to the minister. No doubt whenever members of the Senate go to the areas they represent they find this to be a fact and, while the Senate has a vast majority of Liberal supporters and past Liberal members of parliament, I presume the Senators are trying to protect the Liberal image by not allowing the minister to do this in future.

This is what this bill is all about. It limits the period in which the minister can do this type of thing. There are many occasions when, if the minister did not interfere with the Canadian Wheat Board, the initial payments could be much higher and much closer to the final payment. It is absolutely unnecessary for an amount of 30 cents, 40 cents, 50 cents or $1 a bushel to be retained in any fund as has been the situation in some cases. When the minister interferes to keep the initial payment down and there comes a point in time when he feels he must buy the affection of the producer, he will announce an interim payment if he is permitted to do so. This is a very despicable practice in the minds of the prairie grain producers. They do not like this and, as I pointed out earlier, they will not be bought. The minister must recognize this. We all should realize that no one is able to buy the allegiance or support of these people. While the Senate apparently sees this and tries to protect the government, we are not really sure that the minister recognizes this as a fact.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

We on this side of the House have at times thought the minister had learned a lesson in certain cases but we are never actually sure that we can trust him. Regardless of how we may feel about the Senate, I suppose we must accept the fact that there comes a point in time when something good comes out of it, even though it may be a bill of little significance. Mr. Speaker, I see it is now almost ten o'clock. It is our intention to allow this bill to pass tonight. With those few remarks I am prepared to end this debate.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have been intrigued by the fact that it appears that not only members of this House but of the other place are not too sure whether or not this bill has been introduced as an affront to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The members of the other place must have been well aware of the fact that one can use the averaging provision in order to average one's income over a five-year period and that, therefore, if one had a good bookkeeping set-up and a good accountant he could probably reach the same result in the end. This piece of legislation has been used to provide that the payment normally would come in the new year. It is to be attached to the former year's income and, therefore, an excess of income would occur in that year. Obviously, this would mean increased taxation. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that my colleague called it ten o'clock, but I think there was some indication that we could pass this bill.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to taking a vote, but if the debate is to go on I would be prepared to continue.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it would take me about two minutes at this point to finish the debate.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There would be a difficulty involved in hearing the minister. Since this is third reading there is no right of the minister to reply. Since he moved the motion, he is considered as having already spoken.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say what the order of business will be for tomorrow. First, we will call Bill C-5. If we make sufficient progress and conclude second reading of that bill, we will move on to Bill C-50, the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—LAYOFFS IN SAINT-HYACINTHE DUE TO IMPORTATIONS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in these days of stagflation where social chaos is at our doors, how can we decently, as a Parliament, allow an industry deeply rooted for decades in an area and elsewhere in the country to close down, out of a sudden, three of its divisions, and thereby deprive of their livelihood some 200 workers, men and women, without stepping in or at least raise pertinent questions?

This is the basic question facing us tonight and that I put to everyone here.

On February 14, Penman's Limited of Saint-Hyacinthe informed me, through their president Mr. A. P. Earle, that following the strike extant since June 10, 1974, and the subsequent losses in markets, it had regretfully decided it was not possible to reopen if and when the labor strife was settled, its spinning, felting and dyeing shops.

This would mean, Mr. Speaker, a reduction in labour force from 369 to 150, with a resulting loss of some 200 jobs.

On Friday February 28, I gladly met in Saint-Hyacinthe representatives of the workers involved, at their request. I saw there justified amazement, and even exasperation at that decision by the employer.

Most important, I felt that this new situation, arising in the middle of a conflict already nine months old, will preclude negotiations of a return-to-work agreement, since the National Knitting Union still insists on negotiating for the total number of employees, while the employer only wants to negotiate for the 150 employees present market conditions would allow him to reenlist. It can already be seen that the situation is explosive at Penman's Limited in Saint-Hyacinthe.

Are we going to go through a new Lapalme affair, mutatis mutandis? I hope not, I hope all parties concerned will think only in terms of job security for all workers involved.

Let us be fair: the company says it deplores the effects of its decision. In addition, it is seeking the co-operation of the union, federal and provincial government agencies to appoint, jointly, a committee whose task would be to reintegrate into the labour force the largest possible number of those who have been laid off, while promising to give priority to older employees who might otherwise find it difficult if not impossible to find jobs elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, that initiative is sincere, provided of course the company, Penman's Limited at Saint-Hyacinthe as well as its parent company Dominion Textiles Limited are really wallfighting with its back to the wall, that it has not operated profitably in the last few years, nor invested abroad, either in Japan or elsewhere, amounts of money amassed here, or finally that it has not benefited from exports. Those are as many questions to which I should doubtless get replies from the company concerned any day now.

For the time being, however, I refuse to resign myself to the decision of the company, Penman's Limited. With several persons concerned, I fail to understand how the present strike at Saint-Hyacinthe could have harmed Penman's situation in the marketplace to the extent where it cannot even consider a gradual return to a normal situation, both in the market and consequently with gradual reemployment of its labour force. I request that the political authorities, federal as well as Quebec, authorities in the field of industry, trade and commerce or possibly manpower, should discuss the company's attitude before doing anything about it.

As people in my constituency said, when shall we have governments bold enough to talk to multinational or other companies? When shall we have governments which are shocked by the employment insecurity of our poor taxpayers?

It remains nevertheless—and Penman's rightly say so—that the sharp increase in imports on the main markets served by the company had a decisive influence on the announcement mode by Penman's that some 200 employees would be laid off in Saint-Hyacinthe.

Because of their lack of initiative, their lack of concern, and the excessive delay in dealing with this matter, the present government, and most of all the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), are responsible for the present textile situation in Canada and to a great extent for the layoffs in that area, and will bear the responsibility of the social chaos which might unfortunately ensue.

The minister should make a statement without delay committing the government to further restrict textile imports. The employment security of tens of thousands Canadian workers, and more particularly, on a very short-term basis, the linelihood of some 200 Saint-Hyacinthe workers and the social order in Saint-Hyacinthe and the surrounding area are at stake.

Any ambiguous attitude on the part of the government in this matter will only make corporations like Penman's Ltd. more reluctant to carry on their operations with their full present staff.

In another respect, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) together with his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), and their provincial counterparts, will have to consider the opportunity of capital investments to help those industries in their updating process to keep abreast of new market needs.

Let me warn them though: such subsidies, whether under the form of loans or something else, should only be granted to factories provided it has been ascertained that they will generate more employment security and possibly more employment opportunities.

On the whole, Mr. Speaker, the Government should assure that people of Saint-Hyacinthe and especially the workers of Penman's Ltd., that every attempt possible will be made on a short term as well as on a long term basis in order to help Penman's Ltd. regain its share of the market and to help workers get back to work on a gradual basis.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the clearsightedness and solidarity of the workers involved as well as to the social conscience of the employer who has always had the benefit of a stable, competent and reasonable manpower in Saint-Hyacinthe, to settle this matter to the advantage of all parties involved, all workers involved and their families, and to the advantage of the whole community of Saint-Hyacinthe which is plagued with the repercussions of that serious problem.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Textile and Clothing Board being examined by the government do not include the items mentioned by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, which were sweaters, T-shirts and underwear.

When representatives of the workers and the textile industry met the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) last November, they did not identify the items mentioned as being priority problems and did not ask that the Textile and Clothing Board undertake the study of these products on an urgent basis.

Moreover, we understand that the layoffs in the Penman's Ltd. plant in Saint-Hyacinthe are the result of a decision made by this company to stop manufacturing products other than sweaters, T-shirts and underwear. Therefore, we can conclude that the importation of these products is not directly responsible for the layoffs.

According to our textile policy, when a Canadian textile manufacturer believes that his business is being caused a prejudice because of importation, this manufacturer can go to the Textile and Clothing Board or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and ask for an investigation to determine if there is in fact a prejudice. Penman's did not approach the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Textile and Clothing Board.

The government cannot be expected to act in the case of a specific company when this company sees no need to use the measures at its disposal.

However, if Penman's decides to resume manufacturing the discontinued items, I can assure the House that all appropriate programs under the jurisdiction of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be placed at its disposal.

I am certain that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) would say the same thing about their department.

[Mr. Wagner.]

PUBLIC SERVICE—STOPPAGE OF GRAIN SHIPMENTS BY STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this evening I want to speak about the complete stoppage of shipments of all commodities from the west coast of British Columbia. I mention all commodities because on Saturday the longshoremen and warehousemen's union began a legal strike. Some time before then, the grain weighmen, public servants of Canada, went on strike legally, affecting grain shipments from the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert. It might interest the House to know that between October 1, 1974 and the end of February it was impossible, for about 70 days, to ship grain from Vancouver or from the west coast generally.

These difficulties arose as a direct result of labour disputes. First, we had the grain handlers legal strike which, after stopping the flow of grain to customers abroad for many weeks, was settled by parliament with the introduction of compulsory return to work legislation on October 11, 1974. Subsequently, we had grain inspectors, who are employees of the government, booking off sick and then beginning an official strike on November 23. It lasted several weeks. Then, beginning on February 17, grain weighmen, who are public servants of Canada, went on strike with fellow workmen operating in other trades. That strike is still continuing. As I said, on Saturday, as a consequence of the legal strike of the longshoremen, the whole of the west coast is tied up and shipments are neither coming in nor going out.

The question we must consider is twofold. First, are these work stoppages affecting the national interest; second, what is the government going to do about them? This government is on record as stating its concern for the public interest when labour-management disputes arise. On February 10 the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacGuigan) said, as recorded on page 3098 of Hansard:

> . . . this government has always asserted the rule of the public interest in labour disputes and has never pretended that labour disputes are matters which affect exclusively the parties.

This view was put even more forcefully on August 31, 1972, by the then minister of labour. Speaking about the longshoremen's strike then in process on the west coast, he said, as recorded on page 3901 of Hansard:

> . . . there are occasions when parliament must deal with situations, when the full resort to economic warfare by strike or lockout so impairs the ability of others to carry on their activities that it can be said to be against the national interest for the work stoppage to continue. Parliament in this case was recalled as a last resort when it was evident that the ports on the west coast would not resume operations for some weeks if normal collective bargaining procedures were allowed to take their course.

He went on to say, as recorded on page 3902:

> By far and away the hardest hit at this time is the grain economy on its external markets. This important sector of the economy is presently in the greatest jeopardy should the ports remain closed. British Columbia, too, has an export-oriented economy, and it is of the utmost importance that there be no prolonged closure of its ports.

Further, at the time of the legislation, which was introduced to end the grain handlers' strike in October 1974, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said, and I quote from page 165 of Hansard for October 7, 1974:

The only responsible view for the government to take was that a work stoppage was not only unnecessary, in view of the existence of a reasonable and viable alternative in the form of Dr. Perry's report, but would certainly adversely affect the national interest.

He stated that in May the government had invoked Section 181 of the Canada Labour Code because any work stoppage would affect the national interest. He went on to say, and I quote:

—I think, a sufficient chronological backdrop to a situation that can no longer be allowed to run its harmful and protracted course unchecked.

On Wednesday last, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) asked the Minister of Justice what was going to be done about the situation on the west coast. The minister's reply, which is recorded at page 3600 of Hansard for February 26, is as follows:

Mr. Speaker, a number of plans are being looked at, both in connection with the immediate period and also in connection with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible when conditions return to normal.

The situation is certainly not returning to normal. I personally regret the fact that this government has chosen to hold the line against inflation by putting the burden on the backs of the public service workers out on strike, especially in view of the fact they are the lowest paid people in the civil service and, for that matter, in the country. I am not about to decide who is wrong in the dispute, but the longshoremen are not the lowest paid people in the country by a long shot. The dispute between the longshoremen and their employer seems to centre around the fact there is dispute over a clause which management wants to have changed. It would change the procedure for handling container cargo.

The whole of the west coast is now tied up in two disputes. The government is on record as saying on more than one occasion that its concern is the public interest. However, I asked a question of the government House leader on February 28, as recorded at page 3663 of Hansard. I quote:

—will the government House leader advise this House whether in the view of the government the national interest is being affected by the present stoppage of grain shipments due to the present legal strike?

The minister replied:

—I support the position of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, that this is a time for negotiation—

As I said, my question is twofold.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, at the present time, the movement of export grain and other goods from west coast ports is being interrupted by two work stoppages, one in the public sector and one in the private sector. These groups include a walkout of the federal government's general labour and trades group, which includes grain weighmen and samplers under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Grain Commission, as well as approximately 4,000 longshoremen. These longshoremen have been in negotiation with the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association and struck this past weekend in support of their demands. In this complex situation both disputes will have to be resolved before grain and other goods start moving once again. It is our hope they can be settled by a process of negotiation between the parties concerned.

● (2220)

While it is true that legislation has been used in the past to end disputes such as these, it is premature to suggest that this course of action will be followed, particularly since the longshoremen commenced their walk-out only today. In May of last year, after Parliament had been dissolved, the Canada Labour Code was used to prevent a work stoppage of grain elevator employees. Dissolution is not a factor this time, so the procedure under that act cannot be applied in the same manner. However, the full parliamentary process could be invoked at short notice should it be considered appropriate.

At the moment approximately 30 vessels are waiting in Vancouver to take on grain. There are almost 11,000 railway cars loaded with grain, stacked up from Vancouver and Prince Rupert back to the prairies awaiting movement.

There is no doubt these strikes are affecting a vital national interest. It is just as vital that the parties concerned, including the government, be given the opportunity of negotiating their respective positions before that right is removed by parliament.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—ALLEGED DELAY IN ESTABLISHING BROADCASTING STATION FOR OKANAGAN VALLEY

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, February 28, I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) whether the proposed CBC radio broadcasting station for the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia is being held up because a suitable site is being sought for a French television station. It appears that as soon as anyone asks a question in this House relating to a subject such as this he is immediately labelled anti-French, but this is not the case. I believe this is a very legitimate question to be asking at this time.

The people of the Okanagan Valley have been asking for a CBC radio broadcasting station for a number of years. In the two and a half years that I have been here I have had a number of representations on this subject and I have discussed it with many people in the Okanagan Valley. They feel they have been discriminated against for many years by not being able to have a full CBC radio station. The proposed CBC radio station would serve about 150,000 people in the area, many of whom have moved in to retire from other areas of Canada and have had access to CBC radio. They just cannot understand why there is not a broadcasting station in the Okanagan when they move in, especially when there are so many people in the coverage area.

I have been pressing the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) and the Secretary of State over the past two years. Finally, on November 25, I received a letter from the Secretary of State in which he said:

> I am advised by the CBC that barring further capital budget restraints, under the affiliate replacement plan, which applies in the case of Penticton, Kelowna and Vernon, B.C., they expect to submit an application to CRTC by the fall of 1975. The Corporation further informs me that having received CRTC approval they will need some twelve months before becoming operational in the areas you have identified.

This was very encouraging because I thought that it would bring the CBC broadcasting station quite soon to the Okanagan Valley. I also know that the existing broadcasting stations in Kelowna, Vernon and Penticton are very interested in having CBC establish a full time broadcasting station. They are so interested that they have between them devised a plan so that they would be able to accommodate a CBC radio station. This would provide the necessary engineering and funding to make available a full time radio station. The only thing they want in return is a guaranteed lease for the next few years.

I understand that this proposition has been submitted to CRTC complete with the overall monthly or yearly cost. The cost seems quite reasonable for the number of people who would be served. This service could begin very quickly, using the facilities proposed by these radio broadcasting companies. I have just recently heard that the CRTC is looking for a site in the Okanagan that would accommodate both a CBC broadcasting station and a French TV broadcasting station. It would appear that this would be a much more costly venture and would take much longer to bring into effect. The French TV station would accommodate between one and one-half per cent of the people of the Okanagan, while the CBC radio broadcasting station would accommodate over 150,000 people.

I think it would be fair to point out at this time that there are areas in my riding of Okanagan Boundary that do not even have a CBC-TV broadcasting station now, or can only receive Canadian TV through their own ingenuity, the people in the area having put up the necessary equipment themselves in order to receive this TV. I would also like to point out that there are areas in my riding that do not even get any TV, places such as Christina Lake.

I certainly believe that the majority should be serviced first by the CBC and CRTC before any moneys are spent on a costly French TV network. I would, therefore, respectfully ask that the government adopt a policy that will ensure that the majority of the people get the service for which they have been asking and to which they should be entitled.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) I have some information obtained from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation through the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

Two major undertakings by the CBC are involved in the matter of improving service to the Okanagan valley. One plan is known as the radio replacement plan and the other is known as the accelerated coverage plan. The radio replacement plan arises out of the fact that many years ago resources were not available for the CBC to build its own radio transmitters in many locations. The private sector of radio was, therefore, given the responsibility of representing the CBC in many communities. The privately owned stations could carry only a portion of the total service, but this was better than no service at all.

In recent years commercial radio network programming has dropped markedly and radio broadcasting styles have changed; the affiliation arrangements in radio have become more and more unsatisfactory to both the CBC and the privately owned radio affiliates. As a consequence, the CBC has recently embarked on a program of construction of its own radio transmitters in order to eliminate to a great extent the need for affiliation. Three such transmitters, broadcasting the complete CBC English AM radio network service, are planned for Kelowna, Penticton and Vernon. In addition, Kamloops forms part of this group.

Early last year the CBC had hoped to apply for licences for those three stations late in 1974. The effect of inflation on the CBC's capital budget has caused a postponement of the licence applications, and it is now expected that the applications will be submitted late this year.

The other major CBC undertaking is the accelerated coverage plan. Under this plan, CBC service will be extended in the required official language to all unserved areas containing 500 or more people. Under this plan, French service will be extended to Kelowna in late 1977. The CBC wishes to make clear that the accelerated coverage plan is separately funded; the accelerated coverage plan is not responsible for the budget constraints experienced by the CBC's radio replacement plan, and the resultant one year delay in the plans for CBC English language radio transmitters in Kelowna, Penticton and Vernon, together with Kamloops.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO OPERATION OF COMPANY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The weekend resignation of Air Canada vice-president Yves Menard amid conflict of interest charges, the previous widespread knowledge of his holdings among Air Canada officials, the frequent reports of other conflicts of interest such as that involving Air Canada's Skifari package to Jasper and the telegram sent this morning to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) from 73 Air Canada revenue accounting employees demanding an investigation into Air Canada, as well as the previous but constant reports of managerial disarray, low employee morale, directors' meetings held in Florida, and the unique in-Canada deficit incurred by Air Canada this year, are reasons why the House has no alternative but to support this motion for the sake of our national airline's future. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the House direct the Acting Prime Minister to initiate an immediate independent inquiry into the entire operation of the Air Canada Crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH WINNIPEG FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES TO SETTLE DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter that has been raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and myself. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That the Minister of Transport direct Air Canada to meet immediately with its finance branch employees in Winnipeg for the purpose of settling their dispute which has now gone on for many months.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTION TRANSAIR BE DESIGNATED REGIONAL CARRIER WEST OF WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I would like to raise a matter of urgent and public necessity. In view of the fact that communities in western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, representing a population of some 200,000, have been without air service for over a year, the statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) that adequate air transportation is essential to regional economic development and the denial by the Air Transport Committee on February 27 of the application of Transair, the designated regional air carrier to provide jet service without subsidy into the region and the intervention of Air Canada in the application to preserve its monopoly position, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart):

● (1410)

That the Minister of Transport take the necessary action to make it possible for Transair, as the designated regional carrier, to carry out its responsibilities west of Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion which is put forward pursuant to Standing Order 43. It requires unanimous consent before it can be moved. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FAILURE OF CORPORATION TO PROVIDE OPPORTUNITY TO ANSWER IMPERIAL OIL COMMERCIALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43.

In view of the recent commencement of the Berger Commission hearings in the Northwest Territories deliberating on northern development, and in view of the fact that the CBC continues to accept advertising from Imperial Oil Limited which deals with matters of controversy and opinion, in particular with the question of northern development, and in view of the fact that no opportunity has been provided by the CBC network or its affiliated stations for a reply to be given by public interest groups, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie:

That this matter be forthwith referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, and that the committee be requested to call Mr. Picard, President of CBC, to explain why BBG circular No. 51 has not been followed and why a right to fair answer has not been given in response to Imperial Oil commercials and further that the committee be requested to study orders for amendments to the broadcasting legislation to provide for fair answers and responses to commercial advertising dealing with public and controversial subjects.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion which, since it is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO COUNTERACT CURRENT ECONOMIC SLUMP—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I wish to say that had it not been for the twelve noon deadline set by the House and the delay in issuing Statistics Canada figures, which confirm that the economy has slipped into a recession, I would have moved this motion under Standing Order 26 for debate.

However, in light of the GNP figures released today which show there has been a decline of 1.3 per cent in real growth in the fourth quarter of 1974 resulting in a standstill year in growth for Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova:

That this House instruct the federal government to exercise its mandate of responsible leadership promised to the Canadian people in the last election and that the Minister of Finance make a statement on motions on the status of Canada's economy and immediately initiate preparations for the introduction of a new budget which would more effectively counteract the current economic slump.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The motion, which is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order in relation to the catastrophe which has developed in the grain industry caused by the current strikes at Vancouver. The situation is past the stage where it matters who is wrong and who is right. Canada's reputation as a reliable grain supplier has been severely damaged and the Canadian Wheat Board is contemplating either limiting sales or cancelling overseas delivery orders.

I believe the government House leader has a responsibility to the Canadian people to put forward emergency legislation placing the grain workers involved in the strikes at the West Coast back at work. I do not necessarily like this method of settling a labour dispute, but the situation at Vancouver is so serious that I believe this kind of action is warranted.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT—POSSIBILITY OF AWAITING BERGER COMMISSION REPORT BEFORE DECISION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister having to do with the construction of a gas pipeline from the north. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether what I am quoting still represents government policy. On July 19, 1973 the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development, now President of the Treasury Board, said in evidence in the appropriate House committee:

As Minister of Northern Development, I am responsible for granting a right of way in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Under the Territorial Lands Act I can hold hearings. And before I give to any group a right of way to build a pipeline, I shall have public hearings to assess the social and environmental impact on the construction of a pipeline in the north.

Is that still the policy of the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the Acting Prime Minister reversed the position that he seemed to take in the House yesterday, that the government would not necessarily await, or that he would not commit the government to await, the outcome of the hearings now taking place before making a decision regarding the gas line?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is our expectation that Mr. Justice Berger will be able to complete his hearings and his report in plenty of time for the government to make a decision. The question that was put to me yesterday was: Could I give a categorical answer that under all circumstances we would await the report? In order, of course, to protect the position of the government, in circumstances that one cannot foresee at the present time, I had to say that I could not give a categorical answer; but we fully expect that Mr. Justice Berger will be able to complete all his hearings in time for us to take action.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—ISSUANCE OF PIPELINE GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Despite what the Acting Prime Minister says, it is clearly a change in position. I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister which arises out of the guidelines laid down on June 28, 1972 relating to pipelines and the National Energy Board. Again I quote:

Any certificate issued—

That is, by the National Energy Board.

—will be strictly conditioned in respect of preservation of the ecology and environment, prevention of pollution, prevention of thermal and other erosion, freedom of navigation, and the protection of the rights of northern residents, according to standards issued by the Governor General in Council on the advice of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Have those standards been issued by the government, will they be issued in a public manner, and will there be an opportunity for this House to debate the adequacy of these standards before the National Energy Board makes a decision with regard to any application?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would say that the pipeline guidelines which have been laid down both by my department and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development several years in the past, copies of which have been made available to the House, would certainly govern any such decision of the National Energy Board. Actually, the board is an autonomous tribunal and will have to arrive at its own conclusions in this regard; but within its jurisdiction it would, of course, take account of government guidelines that are laid down.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Either the minister does not know what is going on in the government or his department, or he is trying to mislead the House. The guidelines of June 28, 1972 referred to any certificate of the National Energy Board being conditioned according to standards issued by the Governor General in Council on the advice of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am reading from the guidelines of the government.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH GOVERNMENT WOULD PROCEED PRIOR TO BERGER COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Now that he has changed his position on the question of the Berger inquiry, I wonder if he would tell the House whether there are any conditions under which the government would proceed with the pipeline before the receipt of the Berger inquiry report, and would he indicate generally what those conditions would be?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is exactly because such conditions are uncertain and unforeseeable that one has to retain a caveat.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In light of the answers given by the Acting Prime Minister to questions today, I should like to bring to his attention what he said in answer yesterday to a question by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The minister said in part:

No, Mr. Speaker, I could not give such a categorical assurance. It would depend a great deal on the nature of the report—

He did not say it would depend on the circumstances or on an emergency, but on the nature of the report to be presented by Mr. Justice Berger. In other words, if he did not like the report he would throw it in the ash can. That is really what he said yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, my friend says "rubbish"; that is what the Prime Minister would likely say about the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order let me say that two questions were put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. After I had given that first answer the hon. member said:

—I am sure the Acting Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I was not asking whether the government would agree not to proceed if Mr. Justice Berger's report should be negative.

Following that I then gave this answer:

Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to give a categorical reply to this question. It is our hope that Mr. Justice Berger will bring down his report in time for it to be considered when we receive a recommendation from the National Energy Board.

That is what I said here today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North seeks the floor again on a question of privilege. The question of discrepancies that may exist in the interpretation of answers given from one day to another or by one minister or another certainly do not constitute a question of privilege. If the hon. member for Calgary North has some other question of privilege I would be glad to hear it. The opportunity for further questioning of the minister is always open if the minister has somehow left himself open to criticism that gives rise to a further question, but that is not justification for debate during the question period. Unless there is a fresh question of privilege, I would prefer to go on with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the event the government proceeds before the receipt of the report of the Berger Inquiry, on what agency does the government intend to rely for data respecting the preservation of the ecology and the environment, and for the prevention of pollution and other requirements upon which the issuing of a certificate allowing the pipeline are conditional?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is dealing with a very hypothetical situation which is unforeseeable. At the present time we are depending upon a report from Mr. Justice Berger, whom we appointed for this purpose. He is one of the more enlightened and credible people in this field and we are looking forward to receiving his report.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GOVERNMENT WILL NOT PROCEED UNTIL BERGER COMMISSION REPORT RECEIVED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Acting Prime Minister which arises from the statement in the House yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as recorded at page 3710 of Hansard, in which the minister said:

—any decision on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline could go ahead only after appropriate regulatory proceedings, particularly after a study of land rights.

I should like to ask whether that represents the government's policy with reference to proceeding with the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the regulatory proceedings will of course be conducted by the National Energy Board and will deal with engineering feasibility studies, demand and supply of available gas and with the pipeline rates which may be charged but that the matter of land rights does not come within their jurisdiction and is the task that was assigned to the Berger Commission, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if that means that the government will not proceed with the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline until it has received the Berger report dealing with land rights.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when he answered a question for the hon. member for Calgary North, said:

Certainly our objective would be to have Mr. Justice Berger's report before us. The government cannot proceed unless there has been a positive decision by the National Energy Board on this particular subject.

This is the government's policy. This is why we have asked Mr. Justice Berger to conduct his inquiry. We have every expectation that he will complete his report in time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the question is not whether the government has any expectation or any hope that it will receive the report by Mr. Justice Berger at a specific time, but is whether or not he can give the House assurance that the pipeline will not be proceeded with until the report has been received and the minister keeps speaking of haste, I wish to ask the minister what haste there is in view of the fact that the government, when approving exports of gas, tells the Canadian people they have ample supplies.

I want to ask the minister whether the government is prepared to undertake a phasing down of our exports of gas and a stimulated program of exploration and development of gas in the settled areas of Canada so that we can have a great deal more time to study this matter which can have such disastrous consequences for the Canadian people.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, there may be differences of opinion as to which is the more urgent matter under these circumstances, but may I direct the attention of the hon. gentleman and the House to the terms of the Order in Council under which Mr. Justice Berger was appointed. One of the clauses states that his Excellency the Governor General in Council is further pleased to hereby direct Mr. Justice Berger to report to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with all reasonable despatch and file with the minister the papers and reference of the inquiry as soon as may be reasonable after the conclusion thereof.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely the minister could answer a question with reference to the reason for the haste and why the government is retaining a caveat of it being urgent to proceed in certain circumstances without waiting for Mr. Justice Berger's report other than by merely quoting from an Order in Council to the effect that Mr. Justice Berger will report with all possible speed. It is anticipated he will report with all possible speed, but that does not answer the question concerning whether or not the government, which has committed itself to securing a report on the land claims of the native people, will wait until it receives that report before authorizing construction of the pipeline.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is dealing with a very hypothetical situation. We are fully expecting that Mr. Justice Berger will carry out the mandate that was put before him by the Governor in Council. He has accepted it and has agreed that he will report with all reasonable despatch. He is a very diligent and a very effective person and we fully expect he will report in time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENTS MADE BY ELECTRONIC PAY CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

No one will deny that the province of Quebec in particular is now suffering from a rampant unemployment rate which practically doubled these last few months. Several times the attention of the minister was drawn to delays in the distribution of unemployment allowances done by payment centres, especially that of Montreal which looks after payments for the whole province. According to the figures we have more than 48 per cent of the delays occur in the distribution of payments. Is the minister accurately informed about the administration and efficiency of those computerized payment centres? In view of those considerations and information, has the minister decided to take measures to make sure the applicants will get their allowances in the present difficult economic period and, if so, does he intend to make them known to the House and when?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised this point a few days ago and I indicated to him then that it would be very helpful not to generalize about these situations but to give me or the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission as precise and specific information as is possible which will help us to do what the hon. member wants us to do, that is to pin down any exceptions to the general rule applied in the province of Quebec. I would be grateful if he could do this because, to my knowledge, I have not had that precise information.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—MANDATE GIVEN MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT BEFORE RIGHT-OF-WAY GRANTED FOR PIPELINE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and it has to do with a reply to a question that I had put to the previous minister of Indian affairs and northern development in committee on July 19 with regard to the inquiry in the right-of-way of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. The minister said the following in reply:

> ... and I have a mandate from the cabinet to look at the social and environmental aspects before I grant a right-of-way.

My question is whether that mandate from the cabinet still applies to the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, yes or no?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the minister has the same responsibilities now as he had then and he has accepted them. He is a very responsible minister who is obviously doing an excellent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Later:]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question refers to the question which the Acting Prime Minister did not answer, and that is whether or not the mandate from cabinet still holds with regard to the study of the social and environmental aspects before granting the right-of-way for the pipeline.

Mr. Sharp: Those are precisely the terms of reference that have been given to Mr. Justice Berger on which he has been asked to hold inquiries and to report as quickly as possible.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—AVAILABILITY OF ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDIES PLACED BEFORE BERGER COMMISSION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): While I am on my feet perhaps I could be permitted to give an answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Crowfoot yesterday regarding certain studies, whether they would be publicly available. The answer to that is, yes, the list of studies that have been put before the inquiry have been published. I have a copy here. Any of these may be requested and they are publicly available.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—DATE OF WHICH MINISTER REQUESTED POLICE INVESTIGATION AND TO WHOM REQUEST DIRECTED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, before putting my question may I say that we on this side of the House have the right to know who is the acting Minister of Labour in the House this afternoon and who is the acting Solicitor General in the House this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has a question to ask of the Minister of Labour, he might put it in those terms and see who replies.

Mr. Lawrence: I was really more worried about the Solicitor General.

An hon. Member: He is there in his place.

An hon. Member: You need a rest.

Mr. Lawrence: My question is for the Minister of Transport—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —whoever he may be.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Or wherever he may be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I have given him and everybody else notice of it, Sir. My question is: what was the date on which the Minister of Transport or his predecessor in office first gave actual notice that he desired a police investigation to be carried out into the Hamilton harbour irregularities, and was this request given verbally or in writing. I ask that question in light of the three contradictory dates that are already on the public record.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is not an easy question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The whole thing is a mess.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, since I am practising my French I will try to give the answer in French.

[Translation]

What I see in the heading is K1A 0N5 and at the end it is—

[English]

Letter typed, January 8, 1974.

Mr. Lawrence: Is it January 28, 1974?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, January 8, 1974.

An hon. Member: January 18?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am sorry, I was wrong to lie to the hon. member but I could not resist it. The date is January 8, 1973.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The answer, I take it, is 1973.

Mr. Lawrence: January 8, 1973?

Some hon. Members: 1873.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in terms as precise as I can use, it is January 8, 1973. Is that clear?

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Could the minister inform us whether he made this request verbally or in writing and whether he made it to the RCMP or to his cabinet colleague, the Solicitor General.

An hon. Member: The acting Solicitor General?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The letter I have here is written to the Commissioner, RCMP, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0R2.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on this most serious matter which members on the government benches and their supporters in the background seem to be treating lightly. I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Transport, because he has given an indication to the House that he would table these letters, whether he would table them forthwith so that we might dispense with this hilarity with which the minister is treating this very serious subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I said the other day that because there were some names involved and the RCMP is making inquiries into this affair I would not table these letters because I think it would be unjust to the people named in them.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—MANNER IN WHICH INVESTIGATION STARTED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Would the Minister of Transport please explain to the House how the circumstances in respect of these allegations, which aroused his suspicions about this matter, were presented to him? Did they come to him from police sources, from cabinet sources or outside sources? How did these matters come to his attention?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have already answered that question, but I am ready to answer it again. I believe the Hamilton City Council withdrew its representative from the Hamilton Harbour Commission, which of course led the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to suspicions. I then asked them to make a complete inquiry into what had happened in the Hamilton case. That's about it, and one day we will have the play-by-play description.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Am I to gather from what the minister has said that the initiative in respect of the matter came to him from the RCMP in the first place?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think it came from the Hamilton city council—

[English]

It came from the Hamilton city council which noticed that something abnormal was going on.

Mr. Forrestall: I'll get you in a minute.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Come and sit here and I will show you the letter.

[Translation]

After that revelation, I merely asked the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to make an inquiry, through the Solicitor General of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would ask Your Honour for the benefit of the advice of the Chair on this question of privilege or point of order. I think it has been a long standing practice in this chamber that when a minister quotes from documents, particularly letters, he has some long standing obligation to table those letters for the edification of the members. I wonder if the minister might now respond to the traditions of the House and table the correspondence from which he is quoting.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that the minister did not quote from a document.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: What are you talking about; there was an invitation to go over and read it.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I sit right in front of the minister, and I did see him quoting directly from the document which he held in his hand. He read from it, including reading the postal code. It seems to me that his memory could not be so good that he could remember the postal code without making a direct quotation from the letter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Transport on the point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

To complete this information and clear up a misunderstanding, may I say that the hon. member is right when he complains of inconsistencies which in fact are not. I wrote about this, first to the RCMP Commissioner on January 8, and then to the Solicitor General of Canada on January 12, requesting a full investigation on what was going on in the Hamilton harbour. Therefore, the dates are January 8 and 12. I realize that one date may have been confused with the other.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a point of order before the House at the moment. The suggestion has been made that the minister is compelled to table the document which he has described. The basis of that is twofold: first, that the minister has quoted from the document and that by a long standing practice of this House—which is not in any way in question—a minister of the Crown who quotes from a document is obliged to table the document. The question is: has the minister, in answering a question in the House, quoted from a document by reading the address, including the postal code? Is that in fact a quotation from the document? I think hon. members would have to agree that that would be stretching that interpretation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Surely, a reasonable interpretation of the words "quotation from a document" must mean a quotation from the body of a document and not just, when answering the question to whom was it directed, saying that it was directed to the following, and reading the salutation in the letter.

The second ground advanced is that the minister has undertaken to table the letter. He indicated clearly in earlier questioning that there was a letter which he had written requesting this investigation and that he would be happy to proceed to table that document. That has given rise to legitimate points of order since that time on the ground that the minister, having said that he would table it, ought to do so. The response has been that he finds himself in a situation in which, before tabling the letter, he ought to take legal advice to see whether or not there would be persons offended by some breach of privilege because of their identity in that letter. That is the minister's response since undertaking to table the letter, and I am not aware of any steps this House can take at this time, short of a motion, to compel him to table that letter while he is taking that kind of legal advice.

Oral Questions

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REASON FOR RCMP INVESTIGATION RATHER THAN PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary to the Minister of Transport, and in keeping with his statement that he was advised by the city of Hamilton of abnormal goings on, I believe, subsequent to which he called for an RCMP inquiry, can the minister advise why he opted for the RCMP inquiry rather than to conduct a full scale inquiry into the activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, which apparently had been asked for since October of 1972? Why did he not take the advice of the city of Hamilton which was concerned about the abnormal goings on at that particular time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Because the city of Hamilton was responsible for the operation of the commission.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—DATE ON WHICH RCMP FIRST INVOLVED IN INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): The minister either conveniently does not understand my question or does not want to answer it. If I understand correctly, the minister said that the RCMP first became involved with an inquiry on or about January 8, 1973 regarding the Hamilton harbour activity. Is the minister now saying that this is the first time the RCMP was involved with the activities of the harbour, or can he advise when in fact the RCMP, prior to his advising them to make a full inquiry, became involved with some inquiry with respect to the Hamilton harbour, or was January 8 the first time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think that the question should be put to the city of Hamilton, not to myself.

Mr. Alexander: I do not know whether the minister can understand me or whether he is trying to evade my question. The question is simple. The minister indicated to the House that he advised the RCMP to initiate a full investigation. All I am asking is when in fact the RCMP did get involved in this matter. Was it prior to this time on a partial investigation, or was this the first time to the minister's knowledge, through his colleagues, that the RCMP became involved with investigating activities around the Hamilton harbour? Surely, that is within the minister's knowledge.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I really do not know why we have so many problems in this House.

An hon. Member: Because of you.

Mr. Lawrence: We wouldn't if you would give a straight answer for a change.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member for Hamilton West knows the normal procedure very well, and he should know because he is a lawyer. I am even told that he is a good lawyer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want you to think that one over, Jean.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that I took the normal procedure as Minister of Transport knowing that something was going wrong in the Hamilton Harbour Commission. So, I wrote to the commissioner of the RCMP, but I sent this letter and another letter to the Solicitor General of Canada, who is responsible for the RCMP. I am not the one who can give orders to the RCMP. That is why we have two letters, one dated January 8, and the other, if I am not mistaken, January 12. Is that not right?

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): So I followed the procedure. I informed the RCMP and I asked the Solicitor General, who has authority, to give orders to the RCMP to make the inquiry. That is all. There is nothing else.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this question: Was the RCMP investigating, in some way and under some authority, the Hamilton harbour activities prior to the time the minister wrote the letter calling for an inquiry. That is all I am asking. Does he know the answer.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I don't know the answer. I don't know.

ENERGY

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REASON FOR NON-INTERVENTION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of persistent reports that some of Canada's foremost scientists with respect to the environment of the Mackenzie region have been silenced by a federal cabinet order saying that the Department of the Environment specialists are not to participate actively in the Berger hearings, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether he has made the investigation which he said yesterday he would make and is he now able to inform us whether that silencing order was given by the government, by the Minister of the Environment or by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I, on behalf of the Acting Prime Minister, indicate that all the environmental studies done, and a great number have been done on behalf of the government of Canada, have now been published or will be published, with one or two exceptions. These, for environmental reasons, are not being made public. The Department of the Environment, my own department and others have lent personnel to the Berger commission, that commission having sought those people, and in no sense has there been any withholding of information by a qualified person; neither has information contained in studies done on behalf of the government been withheld from the Berger commission.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

I wonder if, while I am on my feet, I might deal with a question raised by the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the minister goes on in another direction, may I ask whether the government will see to it that the Department of the Environment does its job and actually intervenes before the Berger commission, in order to present the environmental aspects of this matter.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the government has been laying all environmental information before the Berger commission and has made available the services of qualified advisers. I do not think the government should be in the position of trying to direct the Berger commission in any particular way. Our purpose in appointing Mr. Justice Berger and for instituting hearings under the National Energy Board was to enable the inquiry boards to make a full judgment on the qualified information and advice which may be presented to them. I do not think that I, as the minister, or anybody else should try to direct either inquiry.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, may I raise a question of privilege? A little earlier in the question period the Leader of the Opposition quoted from a document, the 1972 pipeline guidelines. He quoted a specific passage which he said was part of these guidelines to do with standards to be issued for the National Energy Board. The passage which he quoted was from a 1970 press release, which is an appendix to that particular set of guidelines. The 1972 guidelines superseded that press release, superseded those guidelines and, indeed, implemented the standards which exist.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the minister is trying to do. I was quoting from the 1972 guidelines.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition quoted from the 1970 press release, which is an appendix to the 1972 guidelines.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the truth is that the minister does not know what is in those guidelines. I and the Canadian people want to know what the standards are and when the government will produce them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No matter whether it is clear as to which document was quoted, I imagine it is perfectly clear that the point has nothing to do with a question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Leader of the Opposition is trying to mislead us again.

Mr. Stanfield: You had better smarten up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I still would like an answer to my question. It was straightforward. Were officials of the Department of the Environment prevented from intervening before the Berger commission and answering questions?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such prevention.

INVESTIGATION INTO HAMILTON HARBOUR DREDGING CONTRACTS—REASON FOR DELAY IN EXTENDING INVESTIGATION INTO OTHER DREDGING CONTRACTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. As companies involved in the Hamilton harbour incident were also involved in other dredging contracts, particularly in Quebec, why did it take the RCMP almost two years to extend their investigation into dredging contracts involving those companies operating outside Hamilton?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP started their investigation in Hamilton.

Mr. Alexander: When?

Mr. Allmand: The date has been given. I forget the exact date. It followed the request of the Minister of Transport. This became a criminal investigation because there was suspicion that a criminal offence had been committed. This investigation was proved to be the right one because, subsequently, three people were found guilty and two more trials are pending.

Once the RCMP investigated that case, they found that it led to other evidence relating to other contracts; they investigated those contracts as well, and that evidence led to further evidence. As they continued investigating, more evidence became available, and this has led them to the wider type of investigation now under way.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the evidence showed that there was ground for suspicion in other areas, why was it necessary for the Minister of Transport to request the RCMP to investigate in Île d'Orléans.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, investigations began at Hamilton. Once the RCMP started investigating the case in Hamilton, evidence came to light which led them to the Quebec city incident. As I said, evidence led them to believe that there could be some kind of impropriety in other parts of the country as well, and they are presently checking this out.

INVESTIGATION INTO ÎLE D'ORLÉANS DREDGING CONTRACT—RESPONSIBILITY FOR INITIATING INVESTIGATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question. Did the RCMP extend the investigation into the Ile d'Orléans contract on their own initiative, or were they requested so to do by the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, they were requested by the Minister of Transport to begin investigations in Hamilton. Once the RCMP found there was evidence which led them to Quebec city, they reported to the Minister of Transport, and he told them to go full speed ahead in Quebec city as well.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—METHOD OF EXTENDING INVITATION TO RE-OPEN NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMPATIBILITY WITH OUTSIDE TRADES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board, who had left the chamber but has now returned. As the minister indicated two or three times since last Thursday, both inside and outside the House, that he had extended invitations to the Public Service Alliance and the General Labour and Trades Group to return to the bargaining table, and as the President of the Public Service Alliance this morning sharply denied ever receiving an offer or invitation to return to the bargaining table, may I ask the minister how his offer or invitation was extended and on what basis he feels now that talks might prove useful and productive. Has the government now reconciled its position vis-à-vis compatibility of outside trades with that position being held by the Public Service Alliance?

● (1500)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, following Mr. O'Connor's departure, my conciliators asked to meet with the bargaining agents of the alliance. They met once. They proposed the bargaining agents meet daily, but the alliance stated it was unwilling to meet every day. My negotiators indicated their willingness to meet any day with the bargaining agents.

We have not heard from them since. However, to date, we have proposed to meet every day with its agents. As I explained on a number of occasions in the House, I feel that if we want to compare maintenance employees in the private sector with those in the federal government, we will eventually reach an agreement. However, if we compare our maintenance employees with workers on construction sites, the difference may be quite extensive. And yet, I must advise the House that as far as annual income is concerned, maintenance employees with the federal government are averaging more than employees on construction sites.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Do I understand from the President of the Treasury Board he has now instructed Treasury Board negotiators to adopt that particular attitude with regard to any further talks between Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance in connection with the present strike?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, our attitude has not changed; we are still willing to find a reasonable solution to the conflict.

GRAIN

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO ENSURE EXPORT MOVEMENT IN VIEW OF PUBLIC SERVICE STRIKE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. On Wednesday, February 26, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Marquette, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said in connection with the tie-up of grain at the west coast that a number of plans are being looked at, both in connection with the immediate period and also in connection with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible. Can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House what these plans are and whether they have been discussed in cabinet so that there may be an end to the complete tie-up of grain facilities at the port of Vancouver?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and the House that the government is very, very concerned about the tie-up. We have been having discussions with respect to the negotiations that Treasury Board is conducting and we have been looking at the position of private groups that are also being struck. These discussions are going on. There is no simple answer. We do not think it would be advisable at this time to have parliament enact legislation because we believe in the collective bargaining process and would like it to work if it can.

Mr. Murta: I would just tell the Acting Prime Minister that I basically agree with his sentiments. However, does he not feel at this time that the situation is so serious in the whole grain movement that something has to be done now rather than let the situation continue for what could be a fairly lengthy period of time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for expressing his concern. It is one that we share.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED ACTIVITIES OF CIA IN CANADA—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

As a result of disclosures made by former CIA agent Philip Agee in his book Inside the CIA, has the minister received representations from the Police Reform Commission requesting that CIA activities be banned in Canada and that its agents be deported until the United States senatorial commission has completed its inquiry?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the CIA does not operate in Canada. The book in question has been read by members of the RCMP and my staff. It contains many allegations that are not correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

As the CIA is being accused of spying and activism in South America, would the minister be willing to recommand an inquiry to determine whether it is carrying out similar activities in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we are continually on guard against any kind of espionage work in Canada.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEES FROM FORMER PORTUGUESE AFRICAN COLONIES—SUGGESTED ADMISSION TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): My question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the uncertain conditions in former Portuguese African colonies with refugee conditions developing and the resulting exodus of people, many of them with relatives in Canada, as well as the fact that Portugal faces severe economic and political problems, and absorbing these large numbers of people will only make them worse, have the minister and his department taken any steps towards accepting numbers of these refugees into Canada to meet this potential and developing emergency?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have had no formal information or representations on this matter, but being aware of the general situation and following the hon. member's information as presented in his question, I will certainly look into it. If there are circumstances meriting refugee or oppressed minority consideration, certainly we will be very glad to give every possible consideration to it.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE AT VANCOUVER HARBOUR—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF WESTERN CONCILIATOR

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Labour on an urgent and pressing matter. In view of the impasse on the west coast, and it is now accepted as an impasse by both sides in the dispute, will the acting minister immediately contact both sides and ask if they are willing to accept a conciliator or arbitrator at this particular time?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter this morning with the deputy minister of labour. Within the Department of Labour, close consideration is now being given to the question and a decision will be taken in the next few hours.

[English]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In view of the urgency of the situation and the willingness to negotiate which I think has been evident on the west coast for the past few hours, and in view of the tremendous importance of this whole question of moving food, will the minister in proposing and discussing with the partners to this quarrel push the idea of a western conciliator who already knows the problem rather than an eastern conciliator who will take two or three months to find out about it?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it would be better for the parties themselves to put forward their viewpoints rather than have the hon. member do it for them in the House. If the view expressed by the hon. member is really in accordance with the parties' intentions, I assume it would be much more easy to intervene.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAND CLAIMS OF YUKON INDIANS—REASON FOR CANCELLATION OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact the minister is reported to have cancelled a radio broadcast 45 minutes before it was scheduled to take place in which he was reported to be planning to announce a $50 million plus land claims settlement to Yukon Indians and in view of the fact that land claims negotiations are, by agreement, supposed to be secret, can the minister advise the House why he planned to make the announcement, why he cancelled it at the last minute and whether cancellation of the broadcast will, in fact, mean cancellation of the terms of the proposed settlement?

● (1510)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): We have been engaged in discussions with the Council of Yukon Indians concerning this proposal since last November. It was our understanding that they were in agreement with the steps we were taking. When I arrived in Whitehorse on Friday, or on Saturday morning, they expressed some concern. After considerable discussion we agreed that the particular proposal would not be put over Anik which is what the hon. member is referring to. However, we did put it forward in the form of a working paper to be presented over television in Whitehorse and over radio throughout the Yukon yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Holmes: Is the minister aware that one of the chief complaints registered by the native people in their dealings with the federal government concerns a consistent lack of consultation and co-operation? Can he advise the House of the reasons for the confusion in this instance?

Mr. Buchanan: I am aware that this is a complaint which is frequently made. In this case, a series of meetings had been held and we felt there had been a meeting of minds. The meeting on Saturday morning showed this was not the case. That was the reason for the change.

Mr. Lawrence: I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a serious point of order. Some of us on this side of the House have been placed at a distinct disadvantage through not knowing at the beginning of the question period, especially when so many ministers of the Crown are away for various reasons, whether there is an acting minister in the House and, if so, who that acting minister is. Is there any way in which, through your good offices, we could be apprized in advance of the question period, as to the identity of the acting ministers for the day?

Mr. Speaker: This is not necessarily something which the Chair could better facilitate than a co-operative discussion between the House leaders who might very well be able to arrange for the passage of this information on a daily basis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to bring to the attention of the House the importance of this day, March 4. It was on this day that a most distinguished Canadian was born, one who has brought great distinction to the City of Sudbury, to northern Ontario, to Canada and to this House, namely yourself, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: I know that all members of the House will wish to join me in extending good wishes to you for a most happy birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am most grateful. That was not only a welcome intervention but a welcome change of pace.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-5, to establish the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, to amend the Broadcasting Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce for consideration by hon. members a bill establishing the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

The regulation of communications at the federal level is carried out, at the present time, by two separate agencies: The Canadian Radio-Television Commission as regards Broadcasting including cable Television and the Telecommunication Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission as regards telephone and telegraph carriers. Hon. members of this House probably know that the principal telephone and telegraph carriers now under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and, consequently, of the CTC, are: Bell Canada, which operates its telephone network in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and in parts of the Northwest Territories. The corporation has, moreover, been declared to be a "work for the general advantage of Canada", as they say in proper legal jargon.

British Columbia Telephone Limited which also has been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and, finally, CN-CP Telecommunications, which operate a public telegraph network throughout Canada and which, in competition with other telephone companies, offer various types of private services. They have also installed a microwave long distance network parallel to the network of the Trans-Canada Telephone System.

Hon. members are also aware that since 1968 the Canadian Radio-television Commission has been responsible for issuing the licences for the operation of Broadcasting stations, whether they are privately owned or are part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation networks. The commission, consisting of five full time members and ten part time members, is more particularly responsible for the implementation of the broadcasting policy for Canada enunciated in section 3 of the Broadcasting Act. It has to take the necessary steps to ensure that broadcasting should serve to safe-guarding and enriching Canadian culture in all its aspects. Another objective of the commission is to provide, by means of broadcasting, transmitting and receiving stations, high quality service in both official languages. This government is determined to uphold the broadcasting policy approved by Parliament in 1968 and will continue to support all the efforts of the regulatory agency and others concerned with the implementation of that policy.

The essential purpose of this bill is to entrust the regulation of all federally-regulated telecommunications to a single agency to be known in future as the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission—thus retaining the acronym CRTC—to emphasize the significance which this government sees in both aspects of telecommunications, namely broadcasting an transmission. The integration of the different modes of telecommunication, whether they are telephone, broadcasting, coaxial cable or microwave, becomes more and more complete every day. The advent of cable television, with its still undeveloped two-way potential, has made it imperative to entrust the different aspects of telecommunications to a single regulatory agency in order to ensure the harmonious development of these new techniques, in a manner compatible with the best interests of Canadian citizens.

This bill is but the first step towards the modernization of the federal statutes relating to telecommunications. In the near future, the government intends to submit to Parliament the second phase of this Legislative project. This will entail an in-depth revision of the provisions of the Railway Act applying to telephone and telegraph, of the Telegraphs Act, of the Radio Act, and of the Broadcasting Act. The Acts incorporating the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation and Telesat Act will also be amended.

Before introducing this second bill to Parliament, the government wishes to ascertain the views of the provincial Governments on the most effective methods of regulating telecommunications. By so doing, we hope, Mr. Speaker, to obtain a better understanding of the various factors and elements to be taken into account in drafting our second stage of legislation. The positions of the federal government have already been published in a green paper intitled "Proposals for a Telecommunications Policy for Canada", which was tabled in the House of Commons in April 1973. This exchange of views with the provinces becomes all the more necessary in the light of the present division of responsibilities in the field of telecommunications; Parliament has exclusive legislative authority over radiocommunications, including broadcasting which television in turn includes cable, while the provincial legislatures control local telephone or telegraph indertakings, the great majority of which have not been declared to be "works" for the general advantage of Canada. It is therefore desirable, perhaps even essential, to achieve as soon as possible a better coordination of governmental efforts in this regard and of the initiatives of the several regulatory agencies in order to provide all Canadians in all parts of the country with the telecommunications and broadcasting services they have a right to expect.

In November 1973, a conference of ministers responsible for communications was held in Ottawa. At that time, I informed the provincial ministers of our intention to introduce the present bill merging the two federal agencies directly responsible for regulating telecommunications, without in any way changing existing powers over the undertakings respectively subject to their authority. The commission will continue, until after the enactment of the second legislative measure, to exercise the present powers of the CRTC over broadcasting undertakings. The new commission will also apply the provisions of the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act to the telephone and telegraph companies. With regard to regulatory principles and procedures, this merger will obviously lead to better coordination and greater unity of thought.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission will consist of a maximum of nine full time members and ten part time members. The existing CRTC comprises five full time members and ten part time members. The increased responsibilities of the new commission account for the proposed appointment of four additional full time members to help the commission in adequately fulfilling its mandate. When the act is put into force, all the members of the CRTC will become members of the new commission until their respective terms of office expire.

● (1520)

The bill also provides for the transfer to the new commission, when the act is put into force, of matters that are presently dealt with by the CRTC, with the exception of those matters that may already be the subject of a hearing or of an inquiry at that time which will be decided by the present commission and the CTC. The governor in council will nonetheless be authorized to depart from this rule if it is unrealistic to defer unduly the assumption by the commission of certain matters that may be the subject of a hearing or of an inquiry. In these cases, steps will be taken to protect the rights of the parties concerned and of the general public.

This act will be put into force by proclamation. The delay between the enactment of this legislation and its implementation will enable the government to set up the administrative structures required to ensure the smooth running of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. This act will permit better coordination of telecommunications regulatory policy at the federal level. This rearrangement of administrative structures, as I have already mentioned, is only the first manifestation of our desire to integrate the various components of telecommunication in the best interests of all Canadians. The government is convinced that it will enable the members of the new commission to work in a more adequate and sustained way toward the supervision of the national broadcasting and telecommunication networks.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the principle of the legislation before the House, in so far as it constitutes an attempt to consolidate under the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), a single federal regulatory agency covering the whole field of telecommunications and the exercise of authority over both the CBC and the operations of the federally-regulated telecommunications carriers, is correct. A detailed analysis of the legislation exposes weaknesses and anomalies which, however, it would be more appropriate to discuss in committee. We intend to do this at the appropriate time and in the appropriate manner, and we hope we will be able to put forth constructive amendments for the minister's consideration and, I trust, acceptance and implementation.

I propose, today, to discuss in a more general way my party's view of Canadian communications policy generally, to indicate the particular areas where wrong policy directions have in our view been taken, and to direct the attention of the minister and the House to policy failures which, if allowed to continue uncorrected, will create very serious problems for Canadians generally. Perhaps the most serious general criticism that can be levelled at this government is its apparent unwillingness and failure to enter into meaningful negotiations with its provincial counterparts in connection with the jurisdictional jungle that over the years has developed in relation to communications matters.

Our party believes that the time has long since passed when a national communications policy should be set in place. We believe that such a national communications policy should have certain specific objectives, including that of protecting and promoting the political, social and economic fibre of Canada. It should contribute to the flow and exchange of regional and cultural information and the development of national unity. It should reflect Canadian identity and, as well, the diversity of Canadian culture and social values. And, generally, it should facilitate the orderly development of telecommunications in Canada, for Canadians, and the provision of efficient and economical systems and services to all Canadians at rates which are just and reasonable.

Clearly, a first and fundamental step in putting in place such a policy would be to resolve with the provinces the competing and conflicting jurisdictional claims between broadcasters, cable operators, common carriers and governments themselves. We should recognize, without equivocation, that the constitutional straitjacket imposed on telecommunications at the time of confederation, rigidly and jealously exercised by successive federal governments, is no longer an appropriate answer in this era of technological change. Instead, the federal government should define the national interest in telecommunications with the sense of urgency, imagination and initiative which the matter deserves.

With this objective in mind, we would propose that certain specific steps be taken, namely, consolidating under the Minister of Communications the present eight different federal statutes relating to telecommunications; the establishment of one federal authority to regulate standards for systems and equipment; federal recognition that the provinces should participate in the regulation of telecommunications through a Canadian communications commission composed of federal and provincial nominees to replace and carry out the duties proposed to be carried out by the commission established by the legislation before us, and with corresponding technical subcommittees for the industrial components falling under its jurisdiction. It would, and should be, a cornerstone of federal communications policy that the federal government recognize the paramountcy of provincial communications systems in place and put an end to the jurisdictional wrangling in existence or in process which at this point in time characterizes the communications mess presently gripping our country.

In order to stimulate research, long-range and coordinated planning and to publicly review the work and activities of the Canadian communications commission, we believe the government should establish a communications council with a permanent secretariat founded by, but independent of, the government with a mandate to report at least once a year to the people of Canada on the state and scope of telecommunications in this country.

That, very briefly, puts before the House a communications policy in specific terms as an alternative to the present chaotic situation characterized by green papers, white papers and piecemeal legislation and jurisdictional struggles which can only further exacerbate the sense of regional alienation and chronic confrontation which seems to characterize federal-provincial relations under this government.

The specific, fundamental, unanswered question in communications policy in this country is simply this: what role does the federal government see provincial governments playing in the communications field?

Has the province of Saskatchewan negotiated a special arrangement for the operation of cable television within its borders? If so, what are the terms of the arrangement, and are similar arrangements being negotiated with other provinces which may desire them? There is little to be lost, and perhaps everything to be gained, in the development of a broadcasting and, in particular, cable regulatory framework in which provinces have a legitimate role. The participation of provincial Crown corporations or agents in the field of broadcasting and cable origination, transmission of programs and programming within over-all guidelines established by the federal government, could be of great advantage. Such a policy approach permits provinces to participate in the control of what to many is an important or vital aspect of their culture and way of life.

This concern by provincial governments across the country from the viewpoint of mass media represents a legitimate concern for responsible diversity. As with other mass media ownership, it would be perhaps unwise to concentrate ownership or program control in any one set of hands. Nevertheless, within an appropriate framework established in the interests of each and all, provincial partnership and participation in this field should be welcome.

There can be little doubt, either, that it would be desirable to openly modify present government policy and permit, if not encourage, educational institutions and agents of Her Majesty in right of any province, not excluding municipal or other public bodies, to participate appropriately in broadcasting and programming endeavours. This should be within co-ordinating federal regulations establishing minimum requirements, providing also that the broadcast licensee shall be free of direct political control.

The bill we have before us may appear routine and purely functional, but I believe that a certain degree of policy formulation lies beneath the surface. The Minister of Communications has attempted in the past to pass off the intent of the bill and to allay the fears of provincial ministers of communications. He portrays it as the merging of two regulating bodies, an internal reshuffle of regulatory agencies of the federal government that brings no change whatsoever to the respective authorities nor to the administrative dispositions between the provinces and the federal government as regards the regulation of telecommunications. Yet the minister knows that this is not altogether an accurate portrayal of the facts.

[Mr. Balfour.]

The provincial ministers have, in fact, been making representations to the federal Minister of Communications seeking some kind of resolution to the long-standing struggle over communications jurisdiction. The bill before us, I point out, is another step toward solidifying the federal government's position vis-à-vis the provinces without their consent or consultation. The provincial ministers' conference in Quebec City in 1972 resulted in the federal government being accused of duplicating provincial telecommunications systems in licensing the CN-CP telecommunications' network. The provinces' communications ministers' conference in 1973 pleaded with Ottawa to stay out of provincial areas of jurisdiction. The provinces reacted to the federal green paper on communications released in 1974 by reiterating that in their view the regulation of telephone rates was a matter solely within provincial jurisdiction.

The minister admits openly that the number of court proceedings is increasing in which federal-provincial communications jurisdiction is the basic issue. Amid this turmoil, the minister simply hides behind that old line of defence, the constitution. "Conflicts of jurisdiction are not the business of federal-provincial ministers' conferences. That comes under the jurisdiction of a constitutional conference or the courts"—that is what the minister said. Why then, I might ask, would the minister choose to buttress his stand against the provinces by unilaterally increasing the ambit of the CRTC while there are existing provincial administrations for dealing with some of the problems in which the federal government has become involved? Why will the minister not consent to further federal-provincial conferences on the matter?

Federal and provincial interests in telecommunications can, and should be, complementary rather than conflicting, and afford ample opportunity for constructive co-operation by all levels of government in Canada. Given the great ambiguity in the determination of jurisdiction for communications and cable TV, it is entirely reasonable for provinces to seek to play an effective role in this sector. The provinces have very real interests and concerns relating to their exclusive powers. Given the present rigidity of the government, and given also the June 4, 1970, government directive to the CRTC to exclude provinces or their agents, it is not surprising that a federal-provincial confrontation is shaping up. Flexibility and reasonableness, combined with a willingness to participate in meaningful federal-provincial discussions, are required.

For the future, as in the present, the importance of telecommunications to the provinces and the federal government requires co-operation and good will. Not satisfactory are back-door responses in contradiction to the federal government's own directive, for example the CRTC allowing the Quebec Deposit and Investment Fund, a provincial Crown agent, to become a major shareholder in a cable TV company. Provincial participation is perhaps desirable, but the federal government should admit it for what it is.

The future course of this vital telecommunications and communications sector should be founded on the decisions of reasonable men working together, whether they be at the federal or provincial level, and the conclusions and agreements arrived at by this process should be openly and publicly implemented.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the advent in recent years of satellites and computers has led to a revolution in the whole field of communications. That revolution has had very serious effects in this country, to a large extent because of the divided jurisdiction between the federal and provincial governments. This has made it increasingly difficult to know precisely who has not only the right but the responsibility for determining what communications policy will be and what charges we will make for different methods of communication.

Similarly, the advent of cable television has created a great deal of contention and division of opinion between the federal government, which claims to have the right to regulate radio and television, and the provinces which, because of their concern with educational matters, feel they must have a great deal of say—not the whole say—about the form of transmission of information which can, and probably will be—if it is not already—one of the most important methods of getting education to the people in all age groups. For this reason there is now, and has been for some time—as the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) has already said—a great deal of conflict between the provinces and the federal government about where, in fact, rests the right to regulate. My colleague the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) will deal with that question.

I want to deal with one of the main tasks which, if I understood the minister correctly, has been the responsibility of the Canadian Transport Commission—and, much earlier, the responsibility of the Board of Transport Commissioners—but which will, if we pass this measure, become the responsibility of the CRTC in its new form. To the extent that the responsibility for setting telephone rates is taken from the present Canadian Transport Commission and given to the CRTC, we in this party will support that proposal because the fact is—and I want to take a few minutes to place some examples on the record—that the record of the CTC has been one of complete failure. It has never, so far as I can find out, turned down a single application made to it by Bell Canada for permission to increase rates. On the other hand, the CRTC has been an active, aggressive, socially conscious organization which has in the field, so far as it has responsibility, done a good deal of research into the basic problems, has consulted with the public, has engaged in dialogue with the public and with interested organizations and has tried to chart a policy which would be of benefit to the people as a whole. This does not mean I agree with every decision made by the CRTC, but at least it has seemed to take its responsibility seriously. To that extent we can support the change the minister is proposing.

Having said that, I want to remind the minister of a judgment of Mr. Justice William Douglas of the United States Supreme Court, as set out in his autobiography, in which he discusses his experience as chairman of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission during the middle thirties. He makes the suggestion that no regulatory agency should be permitted to exist for more than ten years, because after ten years the agency which has been established to regulate and monitor the companies and corporations in the field for which it has been given responsibility inevitably finds that it becomes the servant of those companies and corporations rather than the regulatory agency or the master which tells them what to do. I think this happens almost inevitably in respect of every regulatory agency which has been established not only in Canada but in every other country.

I wish to take a few moments to place on the record what has happened in respect of the supposed regulation of telephone rates in the area in which the federal government has responsibility—Ontario and Quebec. If one examines the record of the Canadian Transport Commission, one finds that in every case over the years in which Bell Canada has asked for a rate increase, that rate increase has been granted. In every case where Bell Canada received an increase and the board took the time and trouble not merely to grant the increase but to indicate what it believed would be a fair rate of return for Bell Canada, we find that when the company came back one year, two years or three years later to ask for another increase, in fact the rate of return the company had received was not the rate of return the regulatory agency had said it should have, but was more than that. But despite that, the principle laid down by the regulatory agency was overlooked by the agency and a further increase was granted.

If one looks at the record from 1958 to the middle 1960s, one sees that Bell Canada consistently exceeded the level of earnings established by the old Board of Transport Commissioners. The excess profits of Bell Canada, which I suggest were illegal and in violation of the board's own rulings, amounted to about $37 million. In 1964 the board conducted a further investigation of the pricing procedures of Bell Canada, but rather than directing its attention to the excessive profit level, the board concerned itself merely with the application by Bell to change its permissible level of profits in order to justify a rate increase.

In 1966 the board raised the permissible level of Bell Canada's earnings to fall within the range of between 6.2 per cent and 6.6 per cent of the total average capitalization. A year later Bell came back for another increase. It was then found that the rate of return had not remained in the 6.2 per cent to 6.6 per cent range which the board had authorized, but in fact had reached 6.8 per cent. In 1968 it was up to 6.9 per cent. The board, however, gave Bell another increase. Having been encouraged by the CTC's lack of resolve in the face of pressure, Bell Canada came back in 1969 to ask for a new profit level of 8 per cent to 9 per cent return on total capital. On that occasion the board avoided its responsibility and refused to fix any permissible level. The result was that Bell increased its net earnings by almost $12½ million in 1969 over 1968. By this time it had been able to earn a return on equity of 7.3 per cent.

The 1969 judgment was delivered in September, and in June of 1970 Bell Canada was back with a further application to the CTC for a revised rate structure designed to increase its revenue by $30 million. The company obtained another increase. In 1971 Bell Canada was back again, despite the increase in 1970. This time it wished an increase that would permit it to have a return of not less than 8.2 per cent, ranging up to 9 per cent, on capital. The CTC disagreed and limited the additional revenue to $47.2 million, which it estimated would give a return on total average capital of 7.8 per cent and 9.5 per cent on common equity. That was in 1971. In 1972 Bell Canada was back again asking for a very sharp increase. The CTC agreed to that. They never once turned down an application for a rate increase. They never once said to Bell Telephone, "We gave you an increase; you exceeded the profitability level which we set and we are not going to give you another increase." They never once took the step which United States regulatory agencies have taken in the past and said, in effect, "You have already exceeded the profitability level for which you asked and which we allowed, so for the month of September", or whatever the month may be, "you should not charge your customers anything; you should give them a free month because you have already exceeded the rate which we allowed".

But, of course, the Canadian regulatory agency could not do that: that would be too much in the interest of the consumer, and the last person the CTC thinks about is the Canadian consumer.

So Bell Canada asked for an increase in 1972. Unfortunately for them, in 1972 this country had a minority government. The government of the day knew that if it permitted an increase in rates to Bell Canada, it—the government—might not survive. So for the first and only time the government suspended the rate increase which had been asked for by Bell Canada and approved by CTC. The government said it was suspending a telephone rate increase for Bell Canada partly to ensure that at least basic communications services were available to all Canadians, wherever they lived, at just and reasonable rates. That was in a period when we had a minority government, in 1973. But by 1974 the election was over, we no longer had a minority government and the government did not have to worry about it. Therefore, the government permitted an increase in the way it had always permitted increases in the past, despite the recommendations of a number of organizations and with no intervention from the regulatory agency.

Recommendations were made to the minister by a number of organizations which were concerned about the effect of the increases on consumers. I have before me some of the submissions which were made to the minister. An organization called Action Bell Canada made a submission to the minister in which they pointed out the contradictions and inadequacies in the CTC decision. I want to put on record some of the arguments which they put forward—arguments, incidentally, which were completely ignored and never reviewed by the government when it permitted Bell Canada the increase for which it had asked. Action Bell Canada said, among other things:

> The CTC has given Bell Canada millions of dollars by almost totally accepting Bell's arguments for amended Application B. This has been done without Bell Canada even presenting its total profit picture to the commission or the CTC really knowing exactly how much it is giving away. Indeed, Bell Canada's chairman indicated in the hearing that this company may be back shortly for more money from the CTC.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

I am reasonably certain that before 1975 is over, Bell Canada will be back. After all, why should they miss this year when they have not missed a year in the last ten? Action Bell Canada said, further:

> The amended Application B decision continually shows CTC's disenchantment with the token public participation methods it grudgingly adopted. CTC hits out at those new intervenors who misunderstand CTC regulation protocol and who the CTC labels as social impact intervenors. Instead of direct input from consumer groups in reforming its procedures, the CTC opts for an independent legal counsel to represent the public interest. The commission also proposes that Bell Canada's internal customer studies underway, along with future government studies on the social responsiveness of telephone service, will go a long way towards eliminating frustrations among Bell customers.

One of the things which is obvious to anyone who makes the most cursory examination of Bell's applications and interventions is that consumers and their organizations are virtually powerless to make a real presentation because Bell's organization is so large and its system so complicated that the costs of really studying it are so great that none of the organizations which have shown interest are able financially, or in terms of personnel, to do the job required. The fact is that in the most recent application which was approved, the Consumers' Association of Canada refused to make a real submission, not because they did not want to, not because they did not think that the rate increase being asked for by Bell was unjustified but simply because they did not have the money required. They calculated that it would cost at least $20,000 just to get a lawyer to represent them. What it would have cost to get engineering and accounting technical advice which they would have required, I certainly do not know, but we are probably talking in terms of $100,000 or more. The Consumers' Association of Canada simply did not have that kind of money.

The CTC said, "Because organizations cannot come forward with real technical briefs, because they just argue on the basis of social impact, and so on, we are not really very interested in their submissions because they have nothing really worth-while to contribute to the hearings". Instead of the CTC doing the job itself, or ensuring that the government would supply the technical know-how to interested organizations, the CTC said, in effect, that they were not able to do the job themselves and they did not really want to hear from these organizations in the future. Having said that, the CTC itself got into social impact rulings. Action Bell Canada said, further:

> It would allow 10 cent pay-phones at sidewalk locations but not at citizen group locations and exemptions to directory assistance charges to those 65 and over only if they come to Bell and make such a request. The commission can accept Bell arguments for reduced rates for large customers having the Telpak service while not accepting intervenors' requests for the abolition of security deposits that mainly affect the poor.

It is a long-standing complaint on the part of subscribers in Ontario and Quebec that they are required to put down a security deposit—I cannot at the moment remember whether it is $25 or $35—but it is money which stays with Bell Canada and which they use interest-free for their own purposes. Action Bell Canada continues:

> CTC sees nothing wrong with semi-automatic price increases through upgroupings in the larger centres of Toronto and Montreal this year at an additional 60 cents a month per subscriber, yet it is willing to take a temporary stand on the abolition of the rate classification for the smallest telephone exchanges.

I could speak at length on the representations which were made to the minister, but let me conclude by saying that the minister simply ignored those representations and allowed the rate increase requested by Bell Canada.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker, I have already said that in our view, giving the job of regulating rates to the CRTC and taking it away from the CTC cannot be anything but an improvement. There is certainly no agency in existence, or contemplated, which could do a worse job than the CTC or the Board of Transport Commissioners before it. Having said that, it seems to me that if parliament does not first ask itself what the objectives are which we set in the provision of telephone service, we tie the hands of the agency which is supposed to regulate the rates, so that we cannot do a job—because if it is our intention to provide telephone service to all Canadian citizens who want that service, there is one approach, namely, that we tell the regulatory agency what the objective is and then try to implement that objective. We believe that should be the objective.

Just as we now say that every person is entitled to adequate housing, education and health standards, we say that in this modern age every person should be provided with telephone service. If that is said, the question is approached from one point of view. If, on the other hand, we say—as we seem to be saying in the way in which people are provided with telephones in parts of Ontario, Quebec and the territories—that in the providing of telephone service an important aspect shall be that the private investors shall make a reasonable profit, whatever that may be, then of course the provision of service is an entirely different matter. We believe that once that is done—that is what we have done in Ontario and Quebec for many years and it is what this government obviously expects to continue—the job of the regulatory agency is an entirely different matter and becomes extremely difficult and complex to carry out.

What are the needs of the people? How many people do not have telephones? Why do they not have telephones? What is the proper rate of return that the company which provides the telephones should receive? All these are questions which the new agency will have to deal with. I suggest it is not enough to say that the agency will be given the responsibility of regulating telephone rates. We have to ask ourselves not just the policy questions which this government obviously has not even thought about—and which I have asked—but also if we have provided the old regulatory agency, the CTC, with the staff to really examine the costs of Bell Canada so that they can set a fair rate. We must also ask ourselves whether we will provide sufficient staff for the new regulatory agency, the expanded CRTC, to do the job. If one looks at the job which the CTC has done, whether it is on the question of railway freight rates, air rates, or telephones, it becomes obvious that the CTC has never had the necessary staff to really set, in any kind of realistic framework, the rates for any of these commodities or services.

We have been told that the number of employees the CTC has to work on telephone rates is not more than three people. I suggest that if that is true, it must be impossible for the CTC to do the job adequately and it will be just as impossible for the new CRTC. We want when this bill goes to committee, to be able to call witnesses representing consumer groups in order to find out what their experience has been when increases in telephone rates have been requested by Bell Telephone. We would like to call the CTC in order to find out whether it has had adequate staff in terms of numbers, experience and training and what kind of information it has been able to get from Bell Canada over the years; whether it has been able to get the information required in order to arrive at fair judgments as to what telephone rates should be each time an application for an increase has been made.

The CTC, in dealing with the last application for an increase, expressed the view that a rate adjustment formula should be adopted which would index the rates of Bell to various cost factors and therefore preclude hearings on rate increase requests from Bell which have been so frequent in recent years. The board seemed to feel that it wanted a formula which would guarantee the rate of profit for Bell. We oppose this kind of proposal and we would like to know whether the government endorsed this proposal of the Canadian Transport Commission.

If we are going to move toward the principle of a guaranteed annual income, we do not believe that the place to start is Bell Canada. Many people in this country—probably 25 per cent—are now living in a state of poverty, as calculated by the Economic Council or by the Senate committee which studied the question of poverty. I do not know whether the minister is still interested in the plight of ordinary people, but at the time of the asbestos workers' strike he showed a great deal of interest in the ordinary people. I hope he will continue to show this interest.

If we are to begin a guaranteed annual income program by guaranteeing the income of certain groups of people, let us begin with poor people and not with the shareholders of Bell Canada. In approving the last rate increase, the government said it would monitor the performance of Bell Canada, and that if Bell's profits exceeded an acceptable rate of return—which the government set at from 8.6 per cent to 9.1 per cent, which was itself up from an earlier 8.2 per cent and a maximum on a rate on economic equity of 12 per cent from an earlier 10.4 per cent—it would monitor the effect of the increases on the public.

When we get to committee, we in the NDP would like to know whether the government in fact has monitored Bell's performance since it permitted those increases. The minister nods his head to indicate that it has. The consumers of this country who have to deal with Bell Canada are not entirely satisfied with this government and with the mere nodding of the minister's head that it has monitored Bell. They would like to know the result of that monitoring. They would like to know how much profit Bell Canada has made in the last few years, because as sure as I am standing here today, Bell will be asking for another increase in the very near future.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not take this opportunity to point out that the people of Ontario and Quebec will not have telephone service at fair and reasonable rates while Bell Canada remains a private company. Fair and reasonable rates cannot be achieved by monitoring; they can only be achieved for the people of Ontario and Quebec by bringing telephone systems under public ownership instead of allowing them to remain under private ownership as is the case with Bell Canada. I do not make this point in any spirit of doctrinaire narrowness. I do not make it necessarily because I believe in the theory of public ownership. I make it because the record in Canada shows that publicly-owned telephone systems provide competent and efficient service at lower rates than those charged by Bell Canada.

Long before the NDP existed as a political party, long before the CCF was a political party and long before any party espoused the principle of public ownership of basic services, the people of the three prairie provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, enjoyed the benefits of publicly-owned telephone systems. In Manitoba, the publicly-owned telephone system was established some time between 1905 and 1910. It was established by the Conservative government headed by Sir Robert Roblin, the grandfather of the later Conservative premier, Duff Roblin. These publicly-owned systems are alive and well in the three prairie provinces. They provide modern and efficient service for the people of the provinces.

Let us do what the CTC consistently refuses to do, compare rates in the prairie provinces with rates in Ontario and Quebec. Let us compare the rates for villages, towns and cities. In every case we shall find that publicly-owned systems provide services at costs substantially below the costs of the services provided by Bell Canada in Ontario and Quebec. I shall put a few examples on record to let the minister know that what I am saying is correct. First, let us consider rates for exchanges governing between 2,000 and 5,000 stations. The residential rate, per month, at Drumheller, Alberta, is $3.65; at Melville, Saskatchewan, $3.36; at Thompson, Manitoba, $3.20; at Atikokan, Ontario, $4.46; and at Baie St.-Paul, Quebec, $4.59.

Let us consider rates in larger towns where exchanges govern between 10,000 and 20,000 stations. The rate at Clairmont, Alberta, is $4. That is the residential rate. The rate at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, is $3.89; at Brandon, Manitoba, $3.62; at Port Hope, Ontario, $5.04; and at Chapeau, Quebec, $5.18. These are all monthly rates. Let us consider towns over with 100,000 stations. The monthly rate in Calgary is $4.25; in Winnipeg, Manitoba, $4.10; in Burlington, Ontario, $6.09; and in Quebec City, $6.37.

The figures quoted speak for themselves and show what happens when telephone service is owned publicly or privately. If the minister is interested in the well-being of the people of his province and of Ontario, I suggest that he should consider the advisability of the government's taking over Bell Canada and operating it as a publicly-owned telephone system. This can, and should be done as a joint venture in which the two provinces concerned and the federal government participate. I have said we will support this bill and why we think it will serve to improve the regulation of telephone rates in Ontario and Quebec. I have mentioned our reservations. All the same, we have a good deal of confidence in the present members of the CTC. We are confident they will do the best job they can in regulating telephone rates. Having said that, I must repeat what I said previously, that telephone service will be cheaper and better if it is provided by a publicly-owned system.

Divisions of responsibility as between the federal government and the provinces have complicated the regulating of the various telecommunication services. We do not think the federal government should lay down policy unilaterally or establish agencies for regulating in this field without first consulting the provinces. Neither should it attempt unilaterally to police various fields of communication by establishing boards, agencies or other bodies the members of which are appointed entirely by the federal government. We think that the criticisms of all ten provinces are valid, that there should be a much greater exchange of ideas and that provincial requests for jurisdiction in this area to be fairly divided should be dealt with in a more co-operative fashion than has heretofore been evident. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie will speak at greater length on this subject.

In committee we intend to question witnesses actively and aggressively. Many of our questions we hope, will be answered. Then when the bill returns to this House at a later stage, we shall know more than we do now about what the government intends to do.

● (1620)

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that it is necessary to have an adequate agency to control and evaluate all communications, to the extent of and according to the aspirations of every group in this country. However, the following point of view should be taken into consideration. I think the provinces should have their say in certain areas. That is why I think every province's point of view regarding culture and education should be taken into account, as I said earlier. To that end I think that each province should have a representative on that committee, so that the latter can really coordinate the needs of everyone.

With respect to the province of Quebec, we know that a conflict of jurisdiction is now shaping up between the province and the federal government with regard to cable television. It would be deplorable if this jurisdictional matter were to drag on and deprive the whole people of the Gaspé peninsula and a large number on the Northern Shore and the Lower Northern Shore, of adequate CBC information services.

With regard to communications in general, there is no doubt that this jurisdiction should be exclusively federal.

As I said earlier, each province should have a representative in order to protect their own culture and education.

I have just talked about the conflict of jurisdiction with respect to cable television which arose following the granting of a cable permit to Mr. Dionne of Matane, which covered the cities of Rimouski, Mont-Joli part of the Matapedia valley and certain places surrounding those municipalities. Later on, Quebec granted a permit to somebody else in the Rimouski area.

It is obvious there is not room for two cables in that area because in my opinion it would be similar to a telephone line with two parallel wires. We also know that the installation of a cable is a costly proposition and there is certainly no room for two parallel cables. That would result in a poor service, and it would be necessary to have two competitors.

That is why I ask the minister to take urgent steps to enforce compliance of his decision to grant a cable permit to Mr. Dionne of Matane whose name I mentioned a few moments ago. Otherwise, he would have to see to it that CBC gets into Rimouski as soon as possible to give to every taxpayer all the services he is entitled as much as the rest of the people in this country. We could thus assure the people in my riding, the whole Gaspé Peninsula and the Northern Shore that the federal government can take its responsibilities and give to everyone according to their merits.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to urge CBC to get into Rimouski relatively soon. When I say "get into" I mean to provide for all the services offered by that Corporation.

I hope that my comments will bear fruit and that Rimouski will soon be served by a CBC station.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of a debate on such a bill, one can hardly resist the temptation of addressing this House, especially if one has the privilege of representing a Quebec constituency where people are always conscious of the various problems which concern the province of Quebec, as well as the Saint-Hyacinthe area.

The debate which opened this afternoon on Bill C-5 should be rather short considering the contents of the bill. At first glance, this looks like a harmless and perhaps trivial bill. Actually, this is a bill designed to create another commission made up of nine full-time members and ten part-time members and to set their salaries and fees. Such is essentially the purpose of this bill. It is obvious that the minister certainly intends to appoint as members of that commission, the most praiseworthy and qualified people, distinguished men and women who will really serve their country. He does not intend to use that new commission as a kind of haven for people who have well served the Liberal party.

Taking for granted the minister's good intentions that will be ascertained after the passage of the bill, it is very difficult to stay away from this debate. Besides the somewhat minor importance of the text before us, and therein lies the importance of this debate, this text has a scope, a meaning that must be analyzed and scrutinized, because we, from Quebec, are aware of the matters in dispute between the federal government and the Quebec government in respect of telecommunications and broadcasting.

A few days ago, the Quebec Minister of Communications had the opportunity to express in his own way on the CBC network, the views of his government and ask a few questions. If I am not mistaken, I hear the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) who seems to say that it was a Péquiste. As far as I am aware, Mr. L'Allier is still a member of the Liberal cabinet.

An hon. Member: He will be there soon.

Mr. Wagner: He will be there soon, said the hon. member. I know that the number of members in this party goes down almost every day in Quebec. But I know that Mr. L'Allier would be very pleased to hear the hon. member for Montmorency tell him publicly that his days are numbered.

I for one refuse to recognize that this debate should begin on a partisan basis. On the contrary, I think that the Quebec government whichever it may be, represents the will of Quebecers and consequently should encourage all those working in public administration at the federal level or elsewhere to recognize this fact and to respect the will expressed by the Quebec government. When this government changes, whichever party comes to power, Unionist, Progressive Conservative or Pequist, it will be the legitimate representative of the Quebec population. And it is in that context that I will discuss the Ottawa-Quebec conflict. Just look at the newspaper headlines and you will see that in the Province of Quebec this is a very sensitive matter. Here are some headlines:

> Quebec and Ottawa are not on the same wavelength. Cable Jurisdiction. The issue goes before the courts. L'Allier denounces federal rigidity and wishes to negociate with Gérard Pelletier. Gérard Pelletier makes another attempt and tells about the cultural sovereignty trap. Pelletier avoids the cultural sovereignty trap.

And there are many more headlines. And I think that Le Devoir even said:

> The leadership crisis. Pelletier expresses concern.

I do not know if it is the Minister or someone else who commented on the statement made by the Prime Minister himself in Montreal about Quebec, but someone said:

> It is the business of the citizens of that province. If they like their government, they keep it whether Ottawa likes it or not and if they do not like it they fight it whether Ottawa likes it or not.

Let me tell you Mr. Speaker, that the question is not whether or not a government is liked.

An hon. Member: It is a matter of politics.

Mr. Wagner: The question is whether a government serves satisfactorily or not the people who elected it. The question is whether a government represents or not the interests of the people. It is a matter of knowing whether a government has the right to make certain claims, even though those claims are made to a federal government which, on occasion, feels almighty in certain jurisdictions.

I say then, Mr. Speaker, that this bill calls for detailed consideration on our part. I was delighted a while ago, to hear my colleague from Regina East (Mr. Balfour) with the his usual level-headedness, fully explain the point of view of the official opposition through observations that deserve the congratulations of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, during this debate, the minister will have the opportunity of answering the questions put to him publicly by the Quebec Minister of Communications last Sunday during a television program, namely: Sometime in April, will the minister agree to another meeting of the provincial ministers and the federal representative to discuss this contentious matter? This time, will there be more than palaver? Will negotiations really start? Will some importance really be given the claims of other provinces? Needless to say, Quebec is not the only party to this quarrel: on the contrary. Quebec feels supported by several other provinces.

Those questions will be answered before the bill is read the econd time. Let me just say that consideration of this bill establishing the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission will give us the opportunity of finding out how the Canadian government feels about national unity. National unity has been talked about aimlessly at times and has been the subject of many speeches, but national unity should really be reflected in the actions of governments.

In the bill before us the government will have the opportunity of indicating very clearly what is its concept of national unity, how it wishes to further it and above all establish it across the country. If Canada was built, linked and united by the railways, as the eminent and congenial Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said recently, paradoxically it is now divided on the matter of communications.

Since the Broadcasting Act of 1968 was adopted, no significant legislation has been enacted nor has any new commitment been undertaken, despite major technological changes and the justifiable concern of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, we must hope and clamour, so as to make are sure to be heard, that the potential Commission provided for in Bill C-5 will first protect and ensure the development of political, social and economic life in Canada, second that it will contribute to ensure the movement and the exchange of regional and cultural information, and third, that it will also contribute to the development of national unity which is not factitious, which is not artificial, but which comes from a harmonization of our linguistic and cultural differences. It will also have to reflect the Canadian identity, the Canadian personality and the diversity of cultures and of social values in Canada. The Commission will also have to facilitate the orderly development of telecommunications in Canada by Canadians representing both founding groups of this country and to provide all Canadians with efficient and economical services and fair rates.

Mr. Speaker, in order to reach these objectives, the government will have to endeavor immediately to solve these problems with the intensive cooperation of the provinces. We could not emphasize too much this capital element of any policy which must be developed and defined by the central government.

● (1640)

We know quite well how important it is to respect the autonomy and rights of the provinces, to act towards them with much more flexibility, so that the conflicts that have been so frequent in recent history might be avoided. And it is precisely because this respect for provincial jurisdiction is almost an innate feeling that we say to the minister today that, if he wants to reach the aims I have just mentioned, there must be close cooperation with the provinces, not only for one or two days, at a seminar concluded by a press release which some parties are prepared to agree to while others refuse to do so. No!

There must be a continued and unceasing dialogue, an opening of mind towards the provinces, particularly towards Quebec, because the current conflicts between broadcasting, teledistribution and transmission companies, on one hand, and those between provincial or federal jurisdictions on this matter, on the other hand, are such that they require from people in government much more flexibility than what we have been used to in the past.

Mr. Speaker, it is completely abnormal that, on communications, as the headlines I have mentioned earlier can show, Quebec and Ottawa should not see eye to eye. It is paradoxical. Therefore the federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) must suggest administrative arrangements to the provinces and guarantee them real participation in national regulatory agencies. Furthermore, he must establish with the provinces the respective jurisdictions of the federal and provincial governments on this matter.

The CRTC maintains that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction over broadcasting and cablevision. But there are other people, such as legal expert Gordon Henderson of Ottawa, who believe that the existing Broadcasting Act does not bear a clear mention of the federal jurisdiction on cablevision.

As you are all aware, the position of Quebec minister L'Allier on cablevision has already been supported by Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta, and whatever the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) who interrupted me a while ago might think, Ontario and Manitoba do not to my knowledge have separatist governments and the ministers of communications in those provinces, who support the claims of the Quebec minister, do not have separatist tendencies and are not about to leave confederation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that in these circumstances, we must expose the situation vigorously. And I hope that I shall not be the only one to do so, and that other Quebec members on both sides of the House will join me in exposing very clearly, objectively and responsibly the rigidity of the federal government, and in strongly urging the federal Minister of Communications to negotiate with his provincial counterparts without always holding up the ultimate weapon of the Supreme Court. There will always be an opportunity to do so.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that in such cases the solution is not always for the courts to decide. When such differences have political implications, the responsibility lies with political authorities to arrive at permanent solutions through dialogue, talks and meetings, instead of shifting the burden on the courts in the hope that their decision will put an end to litigations or wrangles.

As far as Quebec is concerned in this matter, the federal Minister of Communications should not ponder, as the Prime Minister did, whether that province's government is popular or not when it makes claims of a rather embarrassing nature. It will be quite enough for the minister to realize, for instance, that at the bottom of that difference lies a basic concern of Quebecers who want to have a say on technological developments in communications. This Quebec wish that I am expressing in this House contains or hides no cultural sovereignty trap. It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, how some politicians are in fear of being trapped by words. They should be above that, or strong enough to look at the facts beyond the words.

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Montmorency on a point of order.

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe referred to the Quebec government's will to assume greater responsibility in the area of communications. I would point out to the House that the intentions of Quebecers can be made known as properly by my Quebec colleagues and myself, who have been elected at the last election, as through the Quebec government. I believe that the outcome of the last election has clearly shown where the Quebecers' confidence lies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree with the Chair that he may totally disagree with the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, but the normal procedure consistent with our rules is to take part in the debate. He might express his views after the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. But to rise on a point of order because he disagrees with the speaker is against the rules. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Wagner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Anderson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member whether the translation was correct that he said he was the spokesman for Quebec in this House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must say I was not listening to the translation.

Mr. Anderson: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, if that was the correct translation, I suggest he is perhaps the spokesman for Quebec in the Conservative party but certainly not for this side of the House.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: In English!

Mr. Wagner: I beg your pardon, Madam,—

An hon. Member: In English, please!

Mr. Wagner: In English, for you! Well, all right!

At the request of a Liberal member, I shall now tell him in English what I wanted to say in French.

[English]

At the hon. member's request I would very much like to repeat the speech that I have been making in French, but I am sure that the translators have very correctly translated what I said, so I will not quarrel with what they had to say. On the other hand I welcome with great pleasure the invitation that has just been extended to us by one of the backbenchers of the Liberal party, who said he would also like to speak up for Quebec from time to time. I am looking forward to hearing the 54 to 56 Liberal members from Quebec state their point of view, as they should always do, whether on questions of communications, matters dealing with petroleum or any other question affecting the whole of Canada.

[Translation]

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of—

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): As the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) just spoke in both languages, I understood him well. So, he calls himself the Quebec leader, the leader of members from Quebec here in Parliament, although if we recall the last election campaign, he was not even the Quebec leader for the Progressive Conservative Party then. Today he represents only two other members, with whom he does not even get along well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, your very refusal to reply to the hon. member indicates what you think of his point of order.

Nevertheless, I would like to add something. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) was addressing me, a few moments ago, when he said: "You were not here when I said that." Oh yes, I was here, and it is for that reason that I think it is my duty to say what I am saying now.

After hearing the minister, I feel bound to answer him and remind him that there is another point of view that should be considered in all fairness.

As for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General (Mr. Guay), I also thank him for his remarks. I think the recent appointment of a new Quebec leader was a welcome change, for the new leader, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), showed his expertness and competence in Saint-Hyacinthe during the last election campaign. And I hope that very expertness will be displayed throughout Quebec at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I go on—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have another question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Once again, Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, I shall remind the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe that during the last election campaign, the federal ministers from Quebec could cover the whole province, whereas he could not because his party would not let him.

An hon. Member: He was wandering in Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the House should realize that if this debate is to progress, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe should be allowed to complete his remarks. It will soon be five o'clock, and then we shall get on with our evening proceedings.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I shall not answer my colleague from Lévis because I do not wish to, but I might point out that I also travelled throughout the country during the last campaign. I did not have to go very far, because the whole cabinet was in my constituency. If I wanted to meet some minister or other, I had no problem since they were all there. The only one who did not come was the hon. member for Lévis.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that insofar as Quebec is concerned with that extremely important matter of communications, the minister should always keep in mind the deep and fundamental aspirations of the Quebec people, namely their true wish and feeling that they should have their say in the technological development of communications.

This debate is essentially a political one, and that is why I stressed the fact a moment ago that a political situation calls for a political solution and not a judicial one.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of the thoughts I had and which I might possibly clarify further, in both languages if necessary. I shall clarify them once we start the committee study of the various clauses of this bill.

May I conclude by repeating that I hope all members whether on the government side or in the opposition, will resist the temptation to remain silent and will express themselves freely, whatever their political affiliation, whatever their personal feelings. If so, the debate will be an extremely interesting one and it will be seen that Quebec members of this House give much consideration to the legitimate aspirations which the Quebec Minister of Communications has been talking about for some time on behalf of the population and the government of the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I see it is only five minutes before the private members' hour so I will not have that much time to get into detail on Bill C-5 presently before the House.

This bill is an attempt by the government to combine the existing Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian Radio-television Commission into one super agency to deal with the growing problems in respect of communications in this country. Because we have such a technological explosion in terms of communications we find that legislation designed many years ago, as early as the time of Confederation, is inadequate to meet the needs of communications in this very complex world.

Many scientists are predicting what they call "the wire city" with the advent of the coaxial cable which is now bringing television to many households in the country. They foresee the time when this same cable can be used to transmit other forms of computer messages, whereby someone can do his shopping by means of a telephone hook-up. I believe there is already an experiment being conducted in Toronto whereby a person can dial directly to a department store catalogue computer service, and order items in that fashion.

As a result of this expansion in cable service we are getting into jurisdictional disputes. Under the constitution the federal government was to be in charge of broadcasting, and at the time this meant mainly telegraph service. Then we moved into broadcasting by means of airways. With the advent of cable there are additional jurisdictional disputes because the provinces, through their telephone companies, claim the right to regulate cable service.

We are now faced with a question as to the definition of broadcasting; does it include cable television and, if so, who has jurisdiction, the federal government or the provinces? This bill is an attempt to deal with these very complex problems. They are complex, indeed, because in spite of the attempts of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) to sit down with the provinces and come up with some kind of agreement, there has been very little success to date.

During my speech I should like to analyze what I think are some of the pitfalls in attempting to set up this super regulatory agency, and outline what I think will be some of the weaknesses. I want also to offer some suggestions to the minister on how he can improve communications with the provincial governments in order to resolve this very complex problem of jurisdiction.

I see it is five o'clock. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock and continue at eight this evening?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Bilingualism—Possibility of financial assistance to groups contesting constitutionality of Bill 22; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Penitentiaries—Use of Burwash Industrial Farm as medium security institution; the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Agriculture—Inequity between tariff on imported cheese and Canadian cheese imported by European Common Market.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I believe there might be disposition in the House to proceed with three bills that deal with the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in the usual way of dealing with these matters, with the consent of hon. members. The three bills are Bill C-228, in the name of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Douglas); Bill C-229, in the name of the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance), and Bill C-365, in the name of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Yanakis). I would hope it would be possible for them to receive second and third reading today.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, we see no reason to quarrel with the suggestion that these bills be put through. They are bills which involve only a matter of changing the names of the ridings. This is normally a privilege afforded hon. members when one or two bills can be grouped together. We would agree to putting them through all stages during this private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion. Is there first unanimous consent that Bills C-228, C-229 and C-365 be modified in order that they can be referred to the Committee of the whole House instead of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House also agree that we put the second reading motion in respect of the three bills one after the other, so that we may go into committee of the whole and consider the three bills without having the same process three times?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CHANGE IN NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce) moved that Bill C-228, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce) moved the third reading of the bill.

He said: Madam Speaker, I think it is only fair that I speak on behalf of all hon. members whose bills are before the House in order to thank the House for moving so quickly on these bills.

Speaking in my own particular case may I simply say it is a matter of trying to allow for representation for a larger segment of the riding I now serve due to the fact that approximately one half of the riding is contained in another township. It was felt that those people residing in the townships of the county of Grey indeed formed a part of the representation of the member of the House for the riding of Bruce. Now the riding is to be known as Bruce-Grey. On behalf of myself and the other hon. members again I should like to thank the House for the quick consideration and passage of these bills at this time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CHANGE IN NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine) moved that Bill C-229, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CHANGE IN NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Francis (for Mr. Yanakis) moved that Bill C-365, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier) moved the third reading of the bill.

[Translation]

He said: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the House for having accepted so quickly the bill I brought in. It ensures much more justice and describes much more clearly the constituency I represent.

I wanted to introduce this bill following the change in the name of the Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière constituency. My riding was called Berthier, but I do represent Maskinongé as well. So I moved this bill to correct the discrepancy. I think it will prove much more fair to my constituency. Once more I thank the House for having passed second and third reading of my bill.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There does not seem to be any further business before the House. Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock the House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

At 5.12 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga) that Bill C-5, to establish the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, to amend the Broadcasting Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to resume my comments on Bill C-5, on which I began to speak prior to the adjournment at five o'clock for private members' hour.

This bill was brought forward by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) to combine the existing regulatory bodies, the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian Radio-television Commission, into one super regulatory agency. I said earlier this afternoon that we in the NDP have some major criticisms about this proposal. Our first reservation is that the history of super regulatory agencies—such as the parallel agency in the United States which is the Federal Communications Commission—shows that the large agency tends to be subservient to the communications corporation interest. In fact what happens is that they tend to allow vertical integration and the strengthening of the monopoly of a few key industries in the communications system.

We also find, judging from the American example, that such huge regulatory bodies of common carriers develop a fixation on technology. In other words, the medium rather than the message becomes the most important thing. The body becomes concerned about regulating the actual hardware of cable television, wave television, and other aspects of the communication system, and looks at the technology rather than the content. It seems to us very important that this super agency should not diminish its role in examining the medium, the content of television, radio, telecommunication and other related areas.

My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), pointed out earlier this afternoon the lamentable record of the Canadian Transport Commission in standing up for citizens' interests against corporation interests. I do not want to go into that in too much detail, but suffice it to say that example after example has shown that when CPR or Bell Canada came before the CTC asking for a rate increase, usually they got it, and consumer groups attempting to put forward their case were hindered by lack of resources and lack of funds. They could not match the phalanx of lawyers or experts that the big corporations had to present their cases before the CTC.

Our hope is that because the CTC has such a lamentable record, the new super agency will correct some of that imbalance whereby the CTC has tended to listen more intently to the presentations of the large corporations rather than to individuals or consumer groups.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The CRTC has had a somewhat better record regarding regulating broadcasting, promoting Canadian content and trying to regulate advertising. I am not saying that the record of CRTC is perfect, but certainly to make a comparison between its concern and that of the CTC about content and Canadian identity, and perhaps to some degree consumerism, its record is much more laudable than that of the CTC.

We hope that in the new agency the philosophy and approach of the CRTC will prevail rather than that of the CTC. However, somehow I have doubts about that because no matter what agency one sets up unless there is a strong minister, and a government setting out clear guidelines and making sure its agency pursues those guidelines in a vigorous way, it is doomed to failure in protecting the public's interest.

There are two questions that really need to be answered about the new agency proposed in Bill C-5. The first is, how strong will be the guidelines which the government will give to the agency? The second is, how adequate will its backup staff be to supervise those guidelines? Turning first to the guidelines, we notice already that one of the major weaknesses of the CTC is that the government has not ensured that the CTC vigorously pursued some of the guidelines set by the original legislation.

● (2010)

The Canadian Transport Commission was set up in light of the fact that we have monopoly institutions in this country in transportation and communications. The CTC was designed to protect the public interest. We know that the government and its predecessors have been somewhat lax in seeing that that goal was upheld. For instance, in the minority twenty-ninth parliament when the New Democratic Party was able to bring some pressure to bear on behalf of Canadian consumers, we prevented a further increase in Bell Telephone rates by arguing that in light of the profit position of Bell the increase was unjustified. Now that we have a majority parliament we see that decision reversed, and the government allowing the rate increase.

What I am saying is that we must have clear guidelines for the new regulatory agency, and we must have a government which will stand up and force the agency to pursue those guidelines vigorously.

The CRTC, despite its somewhat better record than that of the CTC, also has a number of weaknesses. Again it is a problem of the government not backing the agency or giving it the power to pursue its original mandate in a very vigorous way. I quote from the mandate given to the CRTC. This is in the Broadcasting Act, section 3(g). It states that the national broadcasting service should, and I quote:

> be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion.

And from the same act:

> —contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity.

Those are laudable aims and guidelines for the CRTC, and yet when we look at the past policy decisions of this regulatory agency we find that it has fallen somewhat short of those intentions. I give as an example the recent licensing of a new English television network in Canada, the Global television network. This was done without prior policy hearings throughout the country. Here we have a situation where a third television network is set up in Canada, although the Global network is basically just in southern and central Ontario despite the fact that if a third network is justified, we really need one based more in western Canada.

One of the great criticisms of the CBC and the CTV is that they are located in central Canada, and they express that kind of viewpoint. Many of their stories and personnel originate from that area of the country, and western Canadians, I think quite justifiably, feel that only the central part of Canada is getting attention. News comes with a particular bias from that region, and the west does not have a voice. It must be irksome to people in western Canada to hear Toronto oriented news stories, just as much as it is for us in northern Ontario. Here is an example of the CRTC not really carrying through its mandate to have full hearings on the establishment of a third television network.

I have a criticism of the CRTC on its lack of success in diverting cablevision revenue into general broadcasting, and also its failure to promote non commercial television service. I think there is a place in Canada for a non commercial service. I think this is what the CBC should be. We know that the CBC radio network is moving in that direction, and I think it would be a good test to allow the CBC television also to move toward a non commercial status. Then we could compare the private networks with a non commercial national network. The CRTC has not really pressed for this development, and I think that is quite lamentable.

My third criticism of the CRTC—and again I am using this as an illustration to point out that unless the government sets clear guidelines and gives the agency the power to pursue them, we have an agency in name rather than in fact—is that the CRTC has the power to make regulations regarding broadcasting, but its great drawback is that it cannot deal with the financial implications of such decisions. For example, the CRTC recently moved to reduce commercials on CBC television, especially children's commercials.

The interesting thing is that when the CRTC passes an edict down to the CBC saying that it must remove or reduce children's commercials, the CRTC has no power to authorize introduction of estimates in this parliament to make up for the loss of revenue suffered by the CBC television network. The CRTC then cannot provide funding for such reforms, and therefore its hands are tied. I fear that the new regulatory agency will be in the same boat.

Another example is that the CRTC is quite strong on Canadian content, as it should be. We have moved toward higher Canadian content in radio, but I give the example of the CRTC demanding 60 per cent Canadian content for the CTV network and then having to back down because CTV said it could not possibly manage it, and a compromise of only 50 per cent Canadian content was reached in return for extended service. In other words, because the CRTC is forced to allow television to solicit advertising revenue—and I find it almost incredible that with a publicly owned national network we have 12 minutes of advertising per hour on television, which is more than the private American networks—we have this conflict of interest where the CRTC is supposed to regulate advertising, but at the same time recognizes that it cannot do very much against advertising because of its inability to provide alternate funding or to recommend with any force alternate funding for these television networks.

I find it very sad that the CRTC has refused to act on a growing problem facing television in this country, and that is the use of advertising. I am afraid that in certain circumstances advertising has now taken on the air of political propaganda. I give as an example the recent series of commercials by Imperial Oil on Hockey Night in Canada, where this foreign owned company is making a political statement about the necessity of having higher revenues, by implication saying that the governments are taking too much in taxes and have created a supply crisis in this country. There is no provision for advertisements to counter that kind of political propaganda, and either the CRTC should demand that these commercials stop or at least provide an alternative opportunity for rebuttal, which it has not been doing. I think that that is a very serious indication of what is happening to advertising when large, multinational corporations can twist the intent of the Broadcasting Act and be allowed to put this kind of commercial on the national network without any chance of correction or rebuttal.

What I am saying is that if we are going to have this new super agency, we must have strength and guidelines. We cannot have a repetition of the kind of activity where the CTC favours large corporations over the private consumer. Nor should the CRTC be further weakened by unclear guidelines. The agency must be given power to implement its mandate. Adequate guidelines are essential for the work of a regulatory agency. I doubt if the government is serious about implementing such guidelines.

The second question I raise is, how adequate will be the staffing of the new regulatory agency? Obviously, if you combine under one agency two former agencies, you will double the workload of the new agency. According to the bill, serving on this agency will, be nine full-time and ten part-time directors. Compare that with the present board of the CRTC. Today there are five full-time and ten part-time directors serving on that body. Clearly the workload of the new agency will be increased and fewer directors will handle it; therefore the directors will be overworked.

Equally important is the size of the office support staff. Because the field of communications is complex, it must be studied. Many briefs will have to be read, analysed and processed. Large businesses dealing with the new agency can hire dozens of lawyers and technical experts to present briefs which, in effect, overwhelm agency staff. Unless the support staff is enlarged, the proposed agency will find itself in the same predicament as the CTC and, to a lesser extent, the CRTC.

When a regulatory body receives hundreds of pages of briefs and dozens of volumes of data from a company like

Bell, can you imagine how hard it is to examine such material? If regulatory bodies find this task hard, can you imagine how hard it is for consumer groups which lack the staff of an agency and the expertise available to businesses appearing before it?

Who will be on the board of this super regulatory agency? Will it be staffed only by lawyers, engineers and technocrats? If so, the new agency will act in the same way as the FCC in the United States has acted. The technocrats on the American commission are more concerned about the medium than the message. Such a step in this country would be a backward one. If broadcasters are included on the board of directors, how can we avoid conflicts of interest? Perhaps these questions can best be answered in committee.

The bill has not provided for any consumer advisory bureau which would assist consumers to prepare briefs or oppose communication oriented companies seeking to increase rates. Such a bureau should be established to assist consumers, and to help them travel from various parts of Canada to attend hearings here in Ottawa. Consumers found it difficult to travel from various parts of the country to Ottawa to attend CRTC and CTC hearings. The average consumer or consumer group cannot compete successfully with experts available to corporations. If the minister is serious about establishing an agency which will hear both sides of the story, he must amend the bill and provide for the establishment of a consumer bureau that will provide technical and expert advice, and funds as well, to enable consumers to travel, hire lawyers, and present their case before the board. We of the NDP hope the new agency will not repeat the mistakes of existing agencies. We hope it will move in a new direction and protect the public interest.

This bill sets the stage for the first battle between the provinces and the federal government over which will regulate broadcasting and cable television in this country. Broadcasting is now more complex than ever and cannot be equated merely with the transmission of waves through the air. Signals are transmitted via coaxial cable, the implications of which are immense. People will be able to hook into a computer circuit directly and order a product, pay a bill, or obtain information. What has been called the "wired city" is growing and will affect future developments in this country. Therefore it is important that we establish ground rules as to who will control what.

The federal and provincial governments are arguing over jurisdiction. Traditionally the federal government has controlled the airwaves and, hence, broadcasting. Traditionally the provinces have controlled telephone service and therefore claim jurisdiction over cable, which will be used in future for broadcasting and computer retrieval systems.

It is worth reviewing the positions of the provinces to help us keep the provisions of this bill in perspective. At the federal communications conference Alberta suggested that the provincial government "must have an input into the regulation of cable." Alberta officials stated that if its benefits are to be brought to their scattered people outside the densely populated urban areas, there must be a provincial master plan. This means an involvement of the provinces in the setting of franchise boundaries and the regulation of rates. Provinces are legitimately concerned about the nature of cable television within provincial jurisdictions.

[Mr. Symes.]

Ontario stated that because of the local nature of cable television the government of Ontario believes it must be responsible for the franchise area, the granting of the franchise and the designation of the services to be supplied, including educational, community and household services, and all-closed circuit aspects such as pay TV and information retrieval.

The position of Saskatchewan was that national broadcasting policy must balance the need to support the development of a viable production industry against the need to extend broadcasting distribution to all Canadians. Saskatchewan too is concerned about developing this network to serve remote communities of the province.

The position of Manitoba was that decentralization of control of cable television was a means of reversing the rural-urban shift. The potential for regional development which could result from a realistic decentralization of federal government electronic data processing activities was promising.

What was the attitude of the government of Quebec? I am worried, because so far no Quebec Liberal members have spoken in this debate. The attitude of the Premier of Quebec is important. He said, and I quote:

● (2030)

In cultural matters, the decision making centres we require for our own cultural security must be transferred, especially in the field of communications. This again is a simple matter of common sense since an English-speaking majority cannot be entrusted with ensuring the cultural security of a French-speaking minority. My government's position on this matter could be flexible as to form, but as far as the basic issues and the objectives are concerned, it is, and will remain firm, clear and determined.

Here we see the concern of the premier of Quebec about provincial jurisdiction in order to protect the cultural indentity of the French language group.

British Columbia is also concerned about jurisdiction over cable. Its officials say that an effective national policy in communications must respect the diversity of regions by being sufficiently flexible to permit varying solutions to diverse communications problems. A flexible national policy must accommodate the exercise of federal and provincial responsibilities in the implementation of differing policies among regions.

That, in brief form, is a summary of the attitudes of some of the provinces. The key theme running through this is that the provinces want to have an input into communications policy. They have certain regional and educational priorities for their people. They have a desire to protect their cultural identity and develop a regional consciousness. As a result, they need to have a say in communications policy making.

Against that we have the position of the federal government that says it has to govern for all of Canada. It says it has to promote a sense of Canadian identity and unity.

The federal government was somewhat taken aback by the united front of provinces wanting control over cable television as I have outlined. We are now faced with a problem which this bill just begins to touch on, the problem of jurisdiction over cable. How can we reconcile the legitimate needs of the provinces to service their residents against the legitimate need of the federal government to promote national unity rather than allow the country to be balkanized by all kinds of independent provincial communications systems?

There is a choice for the federal government and the provinces. They can go one of two ways. They can take the legal route and try to settle this conflict by taking the matter to the Supreme Court. If they do that, the provinces must recognize that the decision will have to come down in favour of the federal government. I say this because of the decision given in 1932 by the Privy Council which gave the federal government complete jurisdiction over regulation and control of radio communications. The Supreme Court is bound to favour the federal government in any legal battle over who has ultimate authority and control. However, I do not think the Minister of Communications wants to take that route. He knows it would be divisive. It would cause much hard feeling and division within the country, and hinder the ultimate aim of national unity and a sense of Canadian identity.

The other, and perhaps the only choice open, is the consultative route. This route would serve the best interests of national unity. It is a route that the provinces and the federal government must follow. I regret to say that so far there has been very little progress in this area. It is obvious that we need provincial input into this new super regulatory agency. Mechanisms must be established in order to allow the provinces to argue their case before the federal government, stating why they need special development of cable communications, radio or educational television within their provincial jurisdiction.

I was interested in a letter which the Minister of Communications sent to the Hon. John Rhodes, Ontario minister of transport and communications. The letter is dated September 18, 1974. The Minister of Communications proposed four points as a means of taking this consultative route. First is the establishment of a continuing committee on communications policy, comprising the responsible federal and provincial ministers. Second is the establishment of an association of federal and provincial regulatory commissions dealing with communications. Third is provincial approval of part-time members nominated to serve on the federal regulatory body, a body which this bill will create. Fourth is participation by representatives of provincial regulatory bodies in deliberations of the federal regulatory body.

Those proposals seem sound. It is a constructive route that the provinces and the federal government can follow, yet we see very little of any such proposals coming to fruition. Indeed in Bill C-5 there is a glaring absence of any reference to the third proposal of the minister, namely, allowing the provinces to approve part-time members nominated to serve on the federal regulatory body.

One wonders what kind of communication, if any, is going on between the federal minister and his provincial counterparts. What I have heard to date leads me to believe there is very little constructive consultation going on. There is not a meeting of minds. The lines are beginning to harden; positions are becoming more rigid.

I hope we do not get backed into a corner and have to face a legal constitutional battle over this issue of jurisdiction in the field of communications. As reasonable Canadians concerned not only with provincial but national rights, I hope that the federal minister and the provincial communications ministers will put less importance on who has the final say regarding the medium, and be more concerned about working out ways to have input into the message carried by this medium. In the end that is what is most important. If we do not have a content that is Canadian, alive and vigorous, promoting a Canadian identity as well as serving regional needs, we will have failed in a vital area of this country's future growth. We need to have a sound communications system.

Perhaps a compromise could be that the provinces would licence cable television to conform to the new CRTC guidelines. Perhaps it might be possible for a certain percentage of television time to be made available for provincial input. There are many areas which could be explored in a true spirit of co-operation between the central government and the provinces and, heaven knows, we certainly need more co-operation than confrontation. I hope the new regulatory agency will not repeat the mistakes made by the CTC and CRTC but that it will move in a new direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of the debate on the bill before us in order to comment briefly, perhaps too briefly, on matters which I feel should be dealt with but which, for one reason or another, have so far been avoided in the course of our discussion. Before I get to what I consider to be the main substance of what I have to say I should like to deal generally with the broadcasting and television of programs in Canada.

The act as it presently stands makes provision for identifying Canadians to other Canadians. However, in the implementation of the relevant sections it would appear that because of the concentration of population in certain areas of the country and the impact these powerful groupings have on the executive, and, possibly on the bureaucracy, to say nothing of the government and its supporters, the regulations have either been ignored or else have been very laxly interpreted. As a result, many parts of the country are still without broadcasting facilities. Many briefs have been presented on their behalf to one body or another in an attempt to redress this situation, but for reasons of economy, it is said, the eyes of the CBC, the government and the commission have always been focussed on the larger centres of population.

However, I believe the point has now been reached at which far greater emphasis should be placed on serving the more sparsely populated regions of Canada. The people living there are making a contribution to our way of life and they naturally wish to enjoy other aspects of the Canadian scene, brought into their own livingrooms as in the case of other Canadians. At the present time they seem to be treated as second rate citizens in this respect.

Hon. members have referred to the rights of provincial authorities and have noted how jealously the provinces guard those rights. Let us think in terms of still smaller groups of population, of minorities; one can imagine the frustration they feel when their representations are ignored year after year simply because they do not reflect the views of great numbers of people. I feel that when the government is drawing up regulations as guidelines in consultation with the commission it should recognize the situation, and ensure that when licences for broadcasting or televising are issued, those directly concerned are made fully aware of their responsibilities to provide services of the kind I have in mind.

For example, there are many native groups, particularly in northern areas such as I represent, who are desirous of making a contribution and would like broadcasting to be done in their language. I might say that CBC radio has done an admirable job in this field. Radios are carried around in these sparsely populated areas, along trap lines and so on. Trappers, prospectors and others who live in the north use radios to pick up messages as well as for entertainment; they are one of the few contacts they have with the outside world. We have an obligation to these Canadians and, in my opinion, more emphasis should be placed on serving their needs rather than continuing in the fashion we have developed. Those who live in or near urban areas already have a wide selection of programs available to them.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the private companies have managed to take care of the financial problem surrounding the introduction of coloured television. For years it was argued that funds were insufficient to extend broadcasting to remote areas. However, when it came to opening up the country to coloured television, described at the time as being an extremely expensive process, funds came from somewhere. They were found because densely populated areas were able to exert a greater impact upon the government or upon the members of the commission. There is strength in numbers.

I wish to deal now with another area which should be covered because I feel a sense of frustration as a member of parliament. I feel the old Broadcasting Act, the original set-up of the CRTC, has had ample time to test out certain areas as to which way they should go. There are many members of the House of Commons who would like to comment on what I wish to say, but who feel a sense of frustration because they want to be lenient and allow the operation of our broadcasting system in such a way that censorship should not have to be exercised.

I think the intent of many members who participated in the original discussions on the act, in the committee or in the House, was that in no way should there be censorship. But what we expected from the commission was common sense. What we did not want was to see some little group allowing itself all the power and becoming untouchable in the sense that if you tamper with them you are immediately accused of censoring them. If you comment, you are a prude, you are not "with it," you are a "has-been," you are not an intellectual.

Surely every parent who cares how he brings up his family has the task of showing his offspring the difference between right and wrong. We enact regulations. We set up green lights and red lights. We set up rules everywhere in society. Yet we give television producers in many cases absolute licence to pull the rug out from every service club, every church, every mother and father who gives a darn about their children because they want to show us that they can produce something that defies everyone and get away with it.

I am as concerned about the use of censorship as anybody. I am proud to be in a country where we can express ourselves freely. But I hate to be identified as one of a small minority. I had a very complimentary article written about me and I know I am living in the real world, but I do not think it is necessary to exploit sex on television or to use vulgar language. It is not that I am self-righteous, but I do want to speak for all those who cannot speak for themselves on this question. The message must get through to those who are charged with responsibility for our broadcasting system.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once said that the state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. I say that I do not want to see sex as the symbol of our society. I realize the commission has a heavy role to fulfil, but as members of parliament have an obligation to society, so does the CRTC.

There seems to be a headlong rush to use advertising in order to get the greatest impact. Much use is made of television's instant message which reaches millions of people. However, by allowing certain freedoms people are able to corrupt. A few people will not be corrupted whatever the effort, but the constant use of corruption on television and certain filthy programs on television tend to undermine society. It is like an apple that is rotting from within. If this is what we expect society to be, Mr. Speaker, then I and all the people who write me are wrong.

I think the regulations as originally written were designed to steer a very fine course between censorship and freedom of expression. I have had people ask me, if a certain program was obscene, why those responsible have not been charged. But why should I or some other individual have to go to the trouble of charging these people simply because they took it upon themselves to produce something that breeds corruption? Why should we expect this of Canadian citizens? Surely there are other means of getting the message across.

This commission will be a body comprising nine full time members and ten part time members. I often wonder what happens to certain categories of submissions and whether they are automatically turned down. I have seen some of the submissions made to the commission, as I am sure other hon. members have, and I do not think that the people I represent are any different from the constituents of other hon. members. If the minister does not have sufficient authority to control the CRTC, then perhaps we should give him that authority, but these people have it in their power to cleanse themselves. Common logic should tell them what is right and what is wrong. This is not the case with the CBC television.

An hon. Member: The untouchables.

Mr. Korchinski: Yes, the untouchables. If it is the will of parliament to allow the CBC this kind of freedom, then at least I should have the option to withhold some portion of the money that goes towards the upkeep of a machine that corrupts society.

I realize that some people will point out that if I do not like certain programs I can always switch them off. But I do not think that a subject like sex should be exploited before millions of people. If we do not view certain programs there is naturally a certain curiosity among young people as to why this is so. I do not think a few people in the television broadcasting industry should put us in that position. Neither do I think people should have to write to me and tell me there is something wrong, and ask me what I can do about it. I am sure that every member of this House has received letters of complaint; certainly most hon. members have.

Mr. Gillies: I have.

Mr. Korchinski: And so, Mr. Speaker, what are we going to do about this? I do not think we should be called upon as members, each and everyone, to stand in our place and announce that we have received complaints of this sort; I think there are sufficient complaints to date to place the facts before the minister and the commission. Surely they must be aware of these complaints by now. However, they tend to play it cool, and after a little while they again test us to see how far they can go. For my money they have gone too far.

Are the full and part time members of the commission going to take upon themselves the responsibility of taking action, or does parliament have to ask them to travel across the country at the expense of the public to find out for themselves? That should not be necessary. If there is a group in Canada whose submissions will not be heard, then I say we should scrap the whole commission, start again from square one, and see whether or not we can appoint members of the commission who do at least take heed of the concerns of society.

I hear so many people say these days that we have a permissive society. What has made it permissive? I suggest that what has made it permissive is nothing else but the repetition of this kind of program we see on television. When things are repeated often enough people begin to believe they are true. Here I can think of a word that has now become commonly used in the King's English but which was not known prior to the last war, and that word is blitzkrieg.

This type of permissiveness has become common on CBC radio and television, although perhaps I should separate the two because I think radio has done an admirable job. These people in television know they have a great impact on society, and they continue to corrupt our people. I suggest they know what they are doing. I do not consider them stupid, but they think that everyone else in society is stupid.

If the committee is to be charged with the responsibility of drawing up certain guidelines for the communications media I suggest the committee should do just that, because it is high time we had some guidelines. The regulations up to now have been faulty or inadequate. Obviously there are too many people who are willing to ignore them with this permissive type of programming.

Perhaps someone in the television media has already been charged under a section of the Criminal Code dealing with obscenity, but I am not aware of such a case. Perhaps this has not happened because the Criminal Code is not precise enough in those sections that deal with broadcasting. They deal adequately with writings and pictures but they do not deal specifically with television programs. Perhaps if there is an obligation on us we should accept it and change the Criminal Code in this respect. If the Broadcasting Act fails in this regard we should rewrite it, and perhaps the time to do it is during the committee hearings on this bill.

It is not good enough for us just to live with the situation or ignore it in the hope that it will go away, or just wait until we see what happens. I think we have had ample opportunity to see what has happened. I do not want to have to stand here again in the House of Commons, or have someone else make a speech on behalf of those people who are right in suggesting that certain programs are smutty. There are times when one defends a minority even though it might be wrong because one thinks perhaps it might do some good. In that case one does not mind being associated with such a group. However, in the case of the broadcasting media, particularly television, our regulations are wrong, or at least inadequate.

It has been often suggested that there is something wrong with our society because of the amount of crime and the increase in the rate of crime. We spend all kinds of money on treatment in our jails and rehabilitation centres. Very often when young people find themselves in jail we hear people making the excuse that society is at fault. They suggest that because a young offender comes from a poor family out in the sticks he has never had a chance in life. What kind of a chance are we giving our young people when we allow this type of permissiveness on CBC? Just because one or two individuals in the CBC say this is right, that does not make it so. When these people make such a decision we instantaneously get their message.

I began my remarks by saying I would be brief. Perhaps I have not spoken long enough yet to impress upon members the message I want to leave. I suggest we must look into this matter very seriously. I know the country wants us to do that. I know the people want us to do something about this type of smutty programming. The time to do something is right now, and the place is here. I suggest the minister would endear himself to a great many people in this country if he would take the step which will lead to a change in this situation, and the best feature of all is that by doing so he would be doing the right thing.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, although I do not have many friends here, those I have are real friends.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) introduced a bill to establish the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, to amend the Broadcasting Act and other acts and to enact other consequential provisions.

My remarks will be very brief, but very specific. Since everyone knows the procedure in this House, whereby each bill goes through five stages before being finally either carried, killed or amended—in other words first reading, second reading and referral to Standing committee, the report stage and, finally, third reading. After that, the other place approves what we did. I therefore feel I will have other opportunities to deal with this bill's aims and objectives, and I wish to restrict my remarks to two clauses of the bill, more specifically clause 7(1) and (2), and clause 11(c). In the meantime, we will come back to clause 10 stating the number of meetings.

Mr. Speaker, it will be apparent why I deal so specifically with this bill, ever since I came to this House, in 1968. Bills are constantly introduced by Government members to establish Commissions, Committees, structures of some kind or Crown corporations. Each time a new bureaucracy is set up. Each time, it gets almost unlimited powers. It may not be in the act, but it happens in fact. Take the Unemployment Insurance Commission for instance. That commission has an advisory committee. Yet the act is specific in that case but God knows what they do. Neither you nor I, Mr. Speaker, can determine what kind of work they do, how much they are paid to do it, what are the results, since they are not accountable to Parliament.

Now, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), in an area and a field of operation, as important as communications are in a modern world, introduced a bill to create another "creature" of civil servants, another board. That one will be the Radio-television Commission.

Mr. Speaker, I see the former President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who, when he was in that portfolio, was tightening the purse strings saying: Let us not spend too much. Mr. Speaker, when this House, on December 19 last, gave a first class burial to Bill C-44 to increase the salaries of members of parliament, the Public Service Alliance was protesting on the CBC and English and French television stations. The President of the public servants union, of those "creatures", said that members of parliament were paid too much, that it was disgusting, that enough was enough, that members of parliament were setting a bad example with their salary increase, and that those salaries were exaggerated. That is what I heard on the air that the Minister wants to control where the President of the union representing the public servants of those "creatures" expressed his views.

Mr. Speaker, tonight the House is considering a bill to create a "creature". That does not mean it will not serve the interests of the Canadians and this House. That means that it will provide jobs for Canadians, and it will become another superstructure of civil servants. How much will they be paid? How many times a year will they meet? What will be the respective and specific terms of reference of every member? There will be nine full-time and ten part-time, for a total of 19, as provided in the act.

Let us try and see, Mr. Speaker. Those very people who passed judgment on members of parliament, protected in doing so by certain governments and NDP members, had this to say at clause 7(1):

Each full-time member shall be paid a salary to be fixed by the Governor in Council—

What is the salary, Mr. Speaker? I ask the minister through you. What will the salary be?

. . . and each part-time member shall be paid such fees for attendances at meetings of the Commission or any committee thereof or at any public hearing before the Commission that he is requested by the Chairman to attend as are fixed by by-law of the Commission.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the catch. Friends of the government will probably be appointed, as a political reward, to the Commission, and they will provide for their salaries and expense accounts through internal economy. Newspapermen will know nothing about that. They do not attend those meetings of the Commission. Nor do hon. members. No one will be able to judge them because they will be answerable to no one but a silent minister in this House who will tell us, as in the case of the CBC: Listen, the CBC is answerable to me, but this information is privileged. Mr. Speaker, those people will get paid, believe you me! But when the hon. members ask for a salary increase, people judge them, ask them to account for themselves: yet, the salaries paid those people come from the same source as those of the members of parliament.

Paragraph (2), Mr. Speaker, and I know this will be of interest to my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) of the New Democratic Party: he understands those things; he is here to defend the interests of our fellow-citizens rather than those of the civil servants. I am sure of that. He agrees with me.

Paragraph (2) says this:

Each member is entitled to be paid such . . . expenses . . .

He is ordered to do so by law, Mr. Speaker, which is not the case for the people's elected representatives.

Subclause 7(2) of this bill stipulates that:

. . . be paid such travelling and living expenses incurred by him in the performance of his duties as are fixed by by-law of the Commission.

It would be fantastic, Mr. Speaker, if we could also operate by by-law, whatever the Canadian people may think, building an empire of civil servants, such as unemployment insurance offices, the Polymer Corporation, the CBC, which are answerable to nobody in this House nor to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put these remarks on record so that the same people who read in Hansard about the outcry against the salaries of MPs can see what is being done in this House about the establishment of a Radio-television Commission.

The minister who wanted to make sure that these people would be well paid before beginning to work indcluded two clauses to that effect, clauses 7 and 11. Surely he is not responsible for that, because in that case as in others, civil servants stick together.

Clause 11, subclause (c), in fact the first three pages of this bill, Mr. Speaker, do not deal with broadcasting protection and Canadian cable T.V. In fact, these are only dealt with in the schedule. The first six pages of this bill, Mr. Speaker, do not deal with the interests of Canadian people, nor with the use of airwaves, nor with private interests or the bereavement of monopolies, nor even with the protection of Canadian interests with respect to the benefit foreign countries might derive from airwave use. In fact, the first six or seven pages of this bill aim at making sure that the civil servants employed will be well paid, well fed, will sleep well and have adequate transportation, and that everything will be handsomely provided for by the state's treasury. The broad objects of those people are outlined in the schedule.

Madam Speaker, this is how clause 11, subclause (c) reads:

11. The Commission may make by-laws . . .

(c) fixing the fees to be paid to part-time members of the Commission for attendance at meetings of the Commission or any committee thereof or at public hearings . . .

Madam Speaker, we are in the process of establishing a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to study the immigration policy after the green paper on immigration. Members of Parliament will travel throughout the country doing exactly the same job as those civil servants besides listening to citizens, which civil servants don't. And those hon. members will not be paid for the work, but they will do exactly the same thing. They will carry out additional activities, but they will not get any complementary salary. Their expenses will not be paid, and on the contrary, everything will be at their own expense.

Madam Speaker, a bill is being introduced today. The members of the commission have not yet started to work, but they are assured that they will be paid at a rate determined not by the minister, not by the representatives of the people, not by Parliament either, but by themselves: that is what appears under "by-laws" in clause 11, subclause (c).

How many times will they meet every year? Members of Parliament meet I do not know how many hours and days every year. It is 9.15 p.m. just now, and none of us will receive any overtime pay because the House will adjourn around 10.30 p.m. The same thing happens three times a week. So, these people are going to meet, as provided under clause 10. Well, that remains to be seen, Madam Speaker, it is our duty to study legislation. Clause 10 reads as follows:

10. (2) The Commission shall meet at least six times in each year.

What a big success!

It is a real shame, Madam Speaker. I want the minister to know that before dealing with broadcasting, we should have a policy of equity between members of parliament and those who are merely appointed to administer the statutes passed by Parliament.

I feel that if we wanted to be logical in this House, we should see to it that the same rules, self-discipline, regulations and obligations that apply to us also apply to those civil servants who make fun of us when we vote ourselves salary increases. Then, we could listen to what they have to say.

Madam Speaker, my greatest source of frustration as a member is to have someone dictate to me some regulations about which I have no say and which are meant to be complementary to the legislation which I passed in the House. We pass the legislation, the officials make the regulations and finally we no longer recognize the bill originally passed, because it has been so much altered by public servants.

Madam Speaker, public servants disguise and systematically destroy our legislation. We, the representatives of the people can take any legislation and we will see what finally happens to it. Public servants, destroy, distort and systematically spoil the legislation by making regulations to annoy our fellow citizens. Paid by whom and how? God alone knows and perhaps also the minister. It is not sure and there is no proof of it. It appears in the bill: by-laws.

Well, Madam Speaker, I think that the officials must realize that it is very well to study the legislation, that it is very well to pass it, but those who will read Hansard tomorrow, must be aware whether they are French-speaking or English-speaking, from Quebec or British Columbia, that the members of this House intend to do their work and want to be equitably treated.

I am not speaking tonight to get a salary increase. The people know that I am in favour of it. I do not hide the fact. However, Madam Speaker, we have succeeded in bringing to a standstill that strong majority government which used to say: Give us a majority! They are there. They asked for a 50 per cent increase. Faced with NDP blackmailers and conniving reporters, they backed down to 30 per cent. Then, they retreated further still and today the same bill has been shelved because they are afraid of public opinion. Meanwhile what is that so-called strong majority government doing? Well, it is laughing at the members and introducing a bill to give unlimited powers enabling an internal committee to control broadcasting.

Madam Speaker, I think that the Liberal members are cowards and the servants of great financial interests—this is obvious—but in the case of public servants, it has now become a sure thing.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I would like to make some comments at the end of today's debate on Bill C-5 which, for every member of Parliament, is nonetheless very important. We have been talking for a long time about the possibility to improve telecommunications, today we have before us a bill which provides for the establishment of a national commission responsible at the national level for everything related to communications.

As some of my colleagues of all parties, I have had the opportunity to make my views known to the responsible minister. First, I would like to say that I agree with some comments which have been made in this House on this bill. At the outset, I would like particularly to support my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who did make some appropriate comments this afternoon, particularly about Quebec. We know quite well that the respect of the provinces must be preserved. As for us, we regret and we condemn, in any case, and if I am to believe the comments made by the three opposition parties, I think that we severely condemn the government's centralizing policy in various fields.

Thus, last week, we examined Bill C-49, and we urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to wait until after the meeting with the ministers responsible for taxation and especially royalties, which he refused to do. This meeting will of course take place after the decision was taken; we shall have a legislation which, once more, will be followed by a meeting of the provincial ministers of communications in a few weeks, and, once more, we have to take a decision before the meeting takes place. However, Madam Speaker, it seems to me that it would be so easy to wait until the results of the meeting are known, that it would be so easy to take advantage of this meeting to make a legislation which might meet, I say meet, Madam Speaker, the wishes of the provinces.

But no. Once again, the government quickens the pace and wants the legislation to be passed as quickly as possible. The provinces will be consulted later. They refuse to admit that these decisions are unilateral. Within a week, they will be talking once again of a viable, profitable federalism that is interesting for the provinces. And they want the provinces to be perfectly happy under our system which is frustrating for several of them.

This afternoon, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) talked about the position of the Quebec Minister of Communications. In the last two years, I think, the Quebec government has made representations on several occasions. It stated its position on communications. I heard some members, including my colleague on my left, who talked about respect for the provinces, about a policy geared to the needs and aspirations of the provinces. We want a legislation that would take national unity into account and, of course, we serve this cause by attacking all the problems we know of. How can we talk of national unity when we refuse to consider seriously the representations of the provinces?

It was clearly established that several provinces gave their support to the province of Quebec in a particular field called cablevision. We know perfectly, well that it is unthinkable to aim at national unity if we do not respect the wish of the provinces. And I wonder to what extent the present government is aware of the problem. On several occasions, Madam Speaker, I discussed with members of the opposition or even government members from Quebec who are certainly sensitive to the problems of their province and who felt the need to come and serve Quebec. But how can they serve it?

I heard my colleagues from other provinces who have that responsibility of meeting the aspirations of their provinces. We, of the Progressive Conservative Party, were being accused as recently as last week of having responded only to the Alberta proposal on the oil issue. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that this provides me with another opportunity to commend the people of Alberta for standing up for a natural resource within their own limits as recognized by the constitution.

Is it possible today in face of the legislation that was brought in to keep quiet and let the government introduce a bill to set up a national commission, to set up a national policy, knowing quite well that the government on several occasions recognized regional disparities, marked differences between areas and provinces? How can anyone think, whether it be in the area of energy with the people of Alberta or in the area of communications or cultural matters, of setting up a national policy that would meet the aspirations of all Canadians without bearing consideration for the ethnic groups that make up this country and particularly the two founding groups? It is unthinkable, Madam Speaker. So they can talk to me of national harmony, a policy that could meet the aspirations of those founding groups, those ethnic groups, those provinces, those marked differences at the national level, and in the area of communications it's the same thing.

So, Madam Speaker, I would like to say this to respond in the affirmative to the government of Quebec that is not a government for which I worked on a regular basis, on the contrary. But I think my responsibility vis-à-vis my commitments prompts me to rise to the aspirations of my province, as the people of Alberta did so well to the aspirations of their province on the oil issue. Other provinces will also have to respond to their own needs, and I think in that way we can create a national harmony that will meet the objective we pursue of building a country in which there would be an understanding.

The Quebec provincial minister in charge of communications said two years ago, and repeated, the following:

> Quebec states it has exclusive jurisdiction in this area. Cable television is an undertaking of a local nature for the purposes of the British North America Act. It can be quite clearly identified geographically, contrary to airwaves, and we see no reason why it should be under federal responsibility. Of course the federal government feels cable TV is only an extension of radio and television broadcasting. We submit that contention does not hold. Because cable TV is essentially a means of communication, just as the telephone.

I believe every member realizes that this area in particular must meet the needs and mentality of a province or an area. The minister goes on to say:

> It is currently used mainly to rebroadcast television programs. Cable television however will have in the years to come a very diversified range of applications going well beyond retransmission of TV programs. In that context, we see no reason to support federal reasoning in this area.

The Quebec minister in charge of communications further stated, and I quote:

> As you may see, the Quebec government's view contradicts in no way the federal role in communications. It simply emphasizes that Canada is a federation comprised of eleven governments, which eleven governments have various substantial responsibilities in the field of communications. The situation would be very different if Canada were a centrally unified state. But such is not the case, for very precise reasons you are aware of. Since we live in a federation, each level of government must be allowed to truly fulfill its purposes. This in no way balkanizes Canada, notwithstanding claims to the contrary; quite the opposite, the eleven governments can very well agree on certain national criteria in the field of communications, which should become the parameters for a truly national communications policy; it would then be the responsibility of each government to implement that policy, within its own jurisdiction. In our opinion, it is not absolutely necessary that everything be centralized in Ottawa in the name of national unity which, in such a case, becomes instead national uniformity. In fact, we feel that Canada is not a uniform country, far from it, and that true national unity derives precisely from the promotion and vitality of its various cultures.

This is, Madam Speaker, what the Quebec minister responsible for communications was saying hardly a year ago. And since then, we are aware of the conflict between the federal and the Quebec governments, we also know that all provinces do not readily accept the federal government's propositions being made at this time.

Therefore, I am taking these few minutes, Madam Speaker, to urge the government to seriously consider the problem, especially since it has about 60 members from Quebec. I think these members have a responsibility towards Quebec as the other members of other provinces have also towards their own province.

Could it be possible to believe that because of a party line, as representatives of a province, our interests and our responsibilities are betrayed? I venture to think it could not, Madam Speaker. In my opinion, the government of Quebec, not only through its Minister of Communications, but also in many other fields and for a number of years, has made representations to the federal government which unfortunately were not received as well as they should have been in this particular field, considering the peculiar situation of the province of Quebec.

I shall perhaps offend or irritate a few members. I think that we must recognize in this matter the particular position of the province of Quebec, and I challenge anybody to say anything to the contrary. The government members know what I mean. The government members will not dare say that I am wrong, Madam Speaker, but I should have liked them to take position and state that Quebec is wrong when it recommends privileged positions in communications, as Quebec is willing to acknowledge privileged positions for any English-speaking province, according to its needs, its mentality and its traditions.

Thus I think it is important to underline this aspect and I dare believe that the responsible French-speaking minister of Quebec will be able to meet the demands of the Quebec government and the wishes of a founding nation which does not hesitate to recognize the arguments put forward by the other provinces. I do not accept, Madam Speaker, that we be called separatists when we defend the interests of Quebec in this House or that the Quebec Minister of Communications be labelled a separatist when we defend him, because he deeply and sincerely meets a well-founded wish we have, as Quebecers.

All those who tried to call separatists the responsible minister or Quebecers who do not agree with a centralizing policy of the federal government are wrong. They are not necessarily separatists, but they have good intentions, they are deeply nationalistic, they surely believe in Canada and recognize the marked differences in this country. On behalf of these differences, on behalf of national harmony, we must thus search for much more than national unity. Mr. L'Allier rejects uniformity. I happen to be one of those who reject uniformity. I have respect for my colleagues and hope that we can find policies that will stick to the real facts and to the regional and provincial context, so that we can definitely speak, of a viable federalism.

Madam Speaker, we cannot otherwise believe in a viable federalism. Let us not ask ourselves any longer why, both in Quebec and in other provinces, problems add up every day, and why, particularly in Quebec, thousands of Quebecers have ceased to believe in federalism because of certain centralizing policies overlooking representations made by the provincial government and the context of important differences in Canada.

Madam Speaker, I conclude by saying that the minister could have waited till the meeting is held in a short time from now instead of putting immediately this bill before us. He could have discussed the matter once more, even if only to try one last time to give an affirmative and satisfactory answer to the Quebec government.

I have serious doubts that Quebec would be displeased with the communications policy. I shall never hesitate to live up to the aspirations of Quebec and I think this is the sacred duty, of every hon. member from that province. Of course, I do not want to be the only one to do so. It may be believed that we are fulfilling that obligation in a satisfactory way. I think that policy sufficiently important, and I know the minister well enough, Madam Speaker, to be familiar with his past record, truly in the Quebec spirit, to respect, to make the ultimate effort to fulfil that province's aspirations, as Quebecers are expecting it. I do hope that the minister will give us the replies we want.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I must advise the House that should the minister speak now he will close the debate.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few comments to correct certain false impressions which I believe have been left by some members who spoke earlier.

[English]

When the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) said that the federal government had refused to negotiate with the provinces, he certainly did not know the record very well. I cannot admit that this is true because I know how hard I have been working at it and how many contacts I have had with each and all of the communications ministers in the various provinces. I really cannot accept this statement, and I hope that we will have an occasion to explain what we have been doing. Had the hon. member only read the correspondence I tabled a few weeks ago in this very chamber, he would have known that his statement was incorrect.

If our Tory friends on the other side of the House are very concerned with financial inflation, they surely are not concerned very much—at least not the hon. member for Regina East—with verbal inflation. When he said, for instance, that the communications mess was crippling our country, I should say that the vigour of the argument has no equal, except perhaps the weakness of evidence, because he did not even try to say how communications are crippling this country. It is quite the contrary, when one thinks that we have one of the best telephone systems in the whole world, that we have the first domestic communications satellite system and one of the most advanced systems of computer communications.

The hon. member is just satisfied to say that a communications mess is crippling our country, without giving any evidence, and he would have to be a little more logical than that. At least he should state some facts, in committee or somewhere else, if he wants to persuade anyone including, I suspect, himself. The most dangerous comment that he made is that this bill is presented to the House without the consent of the provinces. This goes as well for the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who obviously was talking through his hat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): At the first conference more than a year ago, I told all the provinces that this bill would be presented and that it would not change anything except to tidy up the system and join two existing regulatory bodies. No province made any objection to our presenting what we called in the department and in our talks with the provinces the first phase of the legislation. Not one province objected to that. They all admitted this was a housekeeping operation on the part of the federal government. If hon. members had read the bill carefully they would have seen it applies only to federally regulated societies, corporations, agencies and what-not. So, this is not done without their consent and we have nothing to wait for in this case. Not one province objected to our presenting this legislation at this time.

● (2140)

I do not have much to say about the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) except that his denunciation of the CTC lacked a foundation in evidence, and some of his rhetorical questions had already been answered before he asked them in his speech. He asked, for instance, where the government stands on the indexing of telephone rates of Bell Canada. The position of the government was put clearly. Perhaps he was on holiday and did not get the press release. The statement I made, after there had been a cabinet decision, was clear. It was that the government was not espousing this position but that it would not stifle the discussion of any question, including that one, by the CTC. He wondered what is the position of the CTC. Let him wait. The hearings are just starting and every intervener will be in the position to make his case. Only after that has been done will the CTC express an opinion, because it will genuinely try to explore a question and find a satisfying answer.

[Translation]

Let me now quickly come to the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). He too indulges in verbal inflation when he says that nothing was undertaken since 1963 to develop the technology of communications in Canada. The only thing I can say is that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe just did not keep abreast of progress in that field. He too does not know what the development of computer-communications was, and I could brief him if ever he can spare the time. He too omits Telesat Canada which is a world première for our country. He also forgets about a lot of progress made with respect to the use of cable, television and broadcasting, and his assertion is senseless. But another remark by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe baffles me even more, and we cannot get on with the debate on that bill without challenging such a statement. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe says: According to the CRTC, the cable would be under federal jurisdiction. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has only been a short time in this Parliament, because if he had been here in 1969, he would have realized that no jurisdictional powers were granted by the CRTC but through the act, which as a matter of fact was upheld everytime there was an appeal against it since it was passed.

Such a decision did not originate in the CRTC, but in Parliament, which the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe is a member of, maybe not for very long, but nevertheless a member of. He should realize, and so should the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) as well, that the argument he is talking about was not started by the federal government against the provincial government, but that the provincial government of Quebec did so by trespassing on a jurisdiction which every court decision acknowledged to be a federal one, by passing an act whose provisions are still being challenged in courts, since that act was passed without any consultation with the federal government.

And when the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe put forward the testimony of Mr. Henderson against the federal jurisdiction with respect to communications, I wonder if he realizes that his source was the great supporter of American interests versus Canadian broadcasting in a recent case before the federal court.

In connection with the remarks made by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), Madam Speaker, I merely want to say that I never saw a man breaking down an open door with such vigour. He said that we are setting up a new agency. He did not read the bill. In fact, we are making one out of two. We are not setting up a new one. Because we are combining two agencies, there will be one less, according to my calculations. I do not know where the hon. member learned his arithmetic. He also finds it shocking that the bill should mention the setting up of a regulatory body before setting forth its responsibilities.

Madam Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member has any spare time. Since 1969 and even 1967, he should have spent a little time reading the Broadcasting Act which is still in force and sets forth, in Part II, all the responsibilities and functions of this body, In a bill aimed at combining two regulatory agencies, we were not going to include each and every section of the Broadcasting Act. May I suggest to the hon. member to refer to Part II of the Broadcasting Act which was adopted in 1967. He had eight years to read it, which gave him ample time, it seems to me. He would find in it everything he was shocked not to find in the bill before us tonight.

As to the salaries of MPs, I must say that I somewhat agree with him, although I do not quite see how it is relevant to this debate. On the broadcasting issue, however, I must say that he broke down an open door, but luckily for him, it was not an open window because we would have lost him for future debates.

Madam Speaker, that sums up my remarks. I thank all the members who took part in this debate. I believe we will be able to clarify many questions, some of which were most relevant, put by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), in committee as well as during the subsequent stages this bill will go through.

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Considering that under the Standing Orders of the House, whenever a minister rises he closes the debate, I had hoped that the minister would take this opportunity to specify what salary will be provided by the internal administration for those people, so that it will be recorded in Hansard, so that readers may compare the salary paid to high officials to that of members of parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is as follows: Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga), seconded by Mr. Lalonde, moves that Bill C-5, to establish the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, to amend the Broadcasting Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I should like to remind the hon. member that once the question is put, no point of order is allowed. Order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, my point of order is that this motion is out of order. Twice you pointed out that the sponsor of this bill was the Minister of Communications, seconded by Mr. Lalonde, but the latter is absent at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Correction: Mr. Sharp instead of Mr. Lalonde. I am told that everything is in order since Mr. Lalonde seconded the motion at the beginning.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The next item of business will be Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, I had expected to do something I have never in my life done before, make a speech on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), something I would not have been able to do with great success. It being so close to ten o'clock I wonder whether it might not be called ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinley: Madam Speaker, I notice that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was to be first on the adjournment debate. He is not yet here. He is attending a committee meeting. If the House wishes, I will get him.

Mr. Reid: Perhaps we could begin with the members in the opposition who are here. There are five committees sitting this evening and that is why they are not here at this point. Perhaps we might proceed by taking those questions that are scheduled for this evening in the order in which members opposite appear here.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we proceed with question No. 3?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, before we go on to the questions, will the government House leader inform us of the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Madam Speaker. It is the intention to proceed with Bill C-50 which Your Honour called this evening. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), will be here to make the speech he intended to make for this purpose. If by chance we are able to conclude the debate on that item, we will then proceed to the western grain stabilization bill, Bill C-41.

Mr. McKinley: Madam Speaker, we have sent for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to come to the House as quickly as possible. If the House will be patient—

Mr. Reid: I wonder then if we could start with the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis).

Mr. McKinley: He is not yet here.

Mr. Nystrom: We have the same problem, Madam Speaker. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is not here. He is the second on the list. We will have to wait a few minutes for him.

Mr. Reid: In that case, Madam Speaker, perhaps we could rest for five minutes until the members show up.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

BILINGUALISM—POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO GROUPS CONTESTING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BILL 22

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, if he is anything at all, ought to be the keeper of the constitution of this country, said that he will not initiate any action to bring Quebec's Bill 22 before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Bill 22, no matter from what end it is viewed, is perhaps the most divisive piece of legislation that has ever appeared on a federal or provincial statute book. Quite aside from the fact that it was rammed through the Quebec assembly, it makes a mockery of the official languages policy of the federal government. It is a denial of justice to the English speaking minority in Quebec and to those who came to Canada from other parts of the world.

There are aspects of the bill about which there can be a real question as to their constitutionality. Basically, it is an attempt by a provincial government to amend the British North America Act. It has a profound effect on the rights of Canadians to learn and to have their children taught in the language of their choice. In the long run it will do more to damage the relationship in our country between the two major language groups than anything that has preceded it.

The bill places an astounding reliance on bureaucrats, a state of affairs that is questionable in itself. Rule by regulation is the order of the day. I cannot imagine anything more dangerous where basic rights are seen to be threatened. However, what does the Prime Minister do? First, he will not disallow the bill. He used as his excuse that the remedy of disallowance has not been used for 30 years. Perhaps that is a greater tribute to the wisdom of provincial governments than an indication of the obsolescence of the method.

The Prime Minister was asked if the federal government would refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada so that this smouldering time-bomb could be laid to rest one way or another. The terror of the fund-raising dinner in Montreal is not such a terror after all. He refused to do that. I then asked him the question which is the subject of this debate tonight. In effect, he does not have the courage to take action himself and so he hides behind other groups.

I asked the Prime Minister whether he would aid financially those who do in fact have that courage. He did it with the Indians in James Bay. However, again the great leader evaded, slithered and slid away. In the House he stated it would be considered, but outside the House he is reported to have said in effect that no one ought to hold their breath. Those who paid $125 to attend his fund raising dinner should ask to have their money refunded.

When asked what instructions would be given to federal counsel intervening in a private action, he avoided answering the question. He called it hypothetical. Well, Madam Speaker, Bill 22 is not hypothetical. It is a reality. The problems are real. The people it affects are real. Its authoritative power is real. Its divisive quality is real indeed. In the judgment of many, it is a blot on the legislative landscape of this country. It ought to be dealt with swiftly and finally, and not allowed to linger and fester as an irritant to confederation. I have to confess that I am left with more than a lingering doubt about the political courage of the Prime Minister when he deals with the government of Quebec.

I have not met any right-thinking person who does not have a sympathetic understanding of or desire to see the French language and the French culture survive in Canada, but surely no one can agree that this ought to be at the expense of the rights of others. That is what the reaction to this bill is all about. The bill should be tested, and tested immediately, so that the question can be laid to rest, and the Prime Minister ought not hide behind the skirts of others to bring this about.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Canadian constitution makes it quite clear that the responsibility for passing this kind of legislation belongs to the government of Quebec, not to the government of Canada. The government of Quebec was elected in a democratic election, with one of the largest majorities that has been seen in modern Canadian political history. It is, therefore, obvious that it is acting within its legislative competence.

To deal with the other argument concerning whether the federal government ought to interfere, I would point out to the hon. member that the constitutional foundations of the legislation are apparently well based. Even more important, the basis on which that act is based is the Manitoba Act, passed in 1892 by the government of Manitoba, which at that time could not be accused of racism, at least as against English speaking people.

The government of Canada does have and does acknowledge a special responsibility toward the Indians in Quebec, particularly the James Bay Indians. Under Section 91 of the constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, the government of Canada does indeed have a special responsibility. Even more important is the fact that when the land in question was transferred to the government of Quebec in 1912, the government of Quebec did not come to a settlement with the Indians in the north. Thus, in addition to the general responsibility of the government of Canada toward the Indians of James Bay there is a particular responsibility because no land settlement had been made. It seems to me the hon. gentleman is trying to bring in through the back door of parliament something he could not bring in through the front door, namely, to argue a Quebec matter.

PENITENTIARIES—USE OF BURWASH INDUSTRIAL FARM AS MEDIUM SECURITY INSTITUTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, on February 14 I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) whether he would consider upgrading the Burwash Institution at Nickel Belt to medium security status rather than spend $7 million on building a new medium security prison somewhere near Barrie. I pointed out to the minister that 200 jobs representing a $2 million payroll to the Sudbury region would be lost to northeastern Ontario. The minister's reply was very interesting and I should like to quote it:

> We have already examined this possibility with the government of Ontario. Unfortunately, it does not seem that the Burwash Institution would be satisfactory for federal needs. First of all, our policy now is to move into smaller institutions which accommodate 150 to 180 inmates. Second, we try to locate the institutions as near as possible to the major population areas from which inmates come. Our need is in southern Ontario and not in northern Ontario, because most of the inmates come from southern Ontario. For these reasons we do not feel that Burwash is suitable at the present time.

Let me deal with the first point the minister made—I am positive the parliamentary secretary will make it again tonight, namely, that the present policy is to move into smaller institutions which accommodate 150 to 180 inmates. First, let me point out that facilities at Burwash are located in three camps. The most appropriate, meeting the department's new policy, is Camp Bison, which houses between 180 and 200 prisoners.

The minister's observation that Burwash is a rather large institution requiring a lot of work and great expense indicates that he is not aware of the situation. Yes, the Burwash Camp is old and decrepit and ought to be torn down. But the Bison Camp has excellent facilities. The provincial government has spent around $4 million over the last four years in improving those facilities. First, it built a new gymnasium at a cost of $1 million—it was opened in October, 1971. Then it built a sports building complex for $40,000, a bridge at the Bison Camp for $5,000, and a new staff quarters, constructed in 1973, for $500,000. Road servicing in the settlement cost $30,000, and an inmate visiting room was provided for $350,000.

The provincial government built an entirely new sewage complex for $1 million, and made renovations to employee homes at the settlement costing $250,000. Brand new housing for single male guards and new homes for employees accounted for a further $200,000, and it even put in a new floor in the main prison for $4,000. The Bell Telephone Company put in new cables and connections at a cost of $40,000, and an entirely new plate shop, garage and laundry were provided for a further $1 million. Heating of living units was converted from coal to oil in 1972. Indeed it also laid a new main steam pipe for $95,000, and renovated homes to provide accommodation for guards—two apartments per home—which were finished. The camp then closed and they were never occupied.

The second argument that the minister proposes is that the new policy is to locate institutions as near as possible to major population centres from which the inmates come. I would point out that Burwash is near Sudbury, North Bay, Manitoulin Island, Parry Sound, etc., and one should note that the population in this area is between 200,000 and 350,000 people. Surely this is a large enough population area.

Moreover, if the minister is sincere about closeness to the homes of the prisoners, what about those prisoners from Sudbury and surrounding districts? Obviously they are going to be rehabilitated away from the areas where they grew up if the new prison is built somewhere in southern Ontario.

The third point I should like to make, Madam Speaker, is the economic one. Burwash was the fourth largest secondary industry in the Sudbury area, and when it closed it took a severe toll on the economic life of small communities near the prison, communities such as Estaire. Property values are down 50 per cent from a year ago, and small businesses have been forced to close.

It is also of interest to point out that the people who live around the Burwash prison settlement are accustomed to the prison being within the precincts of their community and have never viewed the prisoners with any kind of distaste, or adopted an arm's length approach. I understand that in the Barrie area, where the new prison is being concentrated, many communities are up in arms at the fact that prisoners are being brought into their community.

When I listen to ministers of the government talking so sanctimoniously about wanting to develop those parts of our country that lack secondary industry and about the diversification of job opportunities, when I hear them talking about discouraging people from living in large urban centres, and when I witness decisions being made to create more jobs in large urban centres near Toronto, then I know they are either mad or hypocritical, or both.

The fact of the matter is that Camp Bison can easily be converted into a medium security prison for approximately 180 prisoners at a cost far less than $7 million of the taxpayers' money. Jobs will come to the Sudbury district. The prisoners will be close to a large urban centre, Sudbury, consisting of 90,000 persons, and which offers a university community college, several large athletic facilities and three very good hospitals.

Once again I urge the minister to review this decision. If he wishes he can send his officials to investigate the facility that I have described tonight. I am quite prepared to accompany them on such a visit. I ask him to revise the decision that has been made and to take advantage of the Camp Bison facility to establish a medium security prison in our part of the country.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has made a powerful argument for the province of Ontario to reopen the Burwash Industrial Farm. He has indicated the amount of money that the province of Ontario has recently invested in this facility, and I think his case is certainly convincing that the provincial government ought to reopen the farm. However, he has not made the case that the federal government ought to take over the facility.

The Canadian penitentiary service has examined this possibility following an offer from the province of Ontario to sell the institution. Unfortunately its conclusion has been that Burwash would not be satisfactory for federal penitentiary needs.

It is now the policy, as the hon. member has indicated, that the Canadian penitentiary service should move into smaller institutions which will accommodate no more than 150 to 180 inmates. The service attempts to locate these institutions as close as possible to the major population centres from which the inmates come. I should point out to the hon. member for Nickel Belt, who like me is a member from northern Ontario, that our population is peace loving, does not get into trouble or require the utilization of the aforementioned service. The need for such services tends to be much more prevalent among those who come from larger centres in the industrialized east. I am sure many eastern members here would agree with those comments.

In any event, the other factor of considerable importance is the resocialization process which has now become a great part of the penitentiary service and which involves renewing or maintaining close family relationships, which are again facilitated by placing the prisoners in centres near their homes.

It is now the policy of the Canadian penitentiary service to house inmates of maximum, medium and minimum security risk in different institutions. Based on a study of inmates' places of origin, it has been established that the need for federal institutions is in southern Ontario and not in the northern part of the province, for some of the reasons I gave previously.

However, following the study made by the penitentiary service regarding the possible use of Burwash, it was established that remodelling older existing facilities to meet current requirements could be just as expensive as building new facilities. If the alternative of remodelling Burwash had been accepted because of financial considerations, the location would still have been unsatisfactory.

Consequently, and after due consideration of the economic implications of the closing of this institution by the government of the province of Ontario, it has been agreed that in the best interests of the Canadian penitentiary service, its staff and particularly the inmates for which it is responsible, it was necessary to build the type of institution required closer to the geographical areas where such facilities are needed.

I might say in conclusion that if the facts are as the hon. member has indicated in his presentation, then the government still should—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The time allotted for the hon. gentleman has expired.

AGRICULTURE—INEQUITY BETWEEN TARIFF ON IMPORTED CHEESE AND CANADIAN CHEESE IMPORTED BY EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Madam Speaker, on February 6 as recorded at page 2967 of Hansard I asked questions of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) regarding the Canadian cheese industry. In doing so I pointed out that Canadian cheddar, which previously was exported to European Common Market countries in large quantity, was now facing EEC import duties of about 65 cents a pound, indeed as high as 67 cents. Therefore the volume of these cheddar exports had slowed down to a trickle.

At the same time I also pointed out to the minister that European soft cheeses were coming into Canada in large volume because our import duties, rather than being 65 cents or 67 cents a pound, were only one cent to three and a half cents per pound.

On February 6 I asked the minister what he was going to do about this apparent gross inequity. I pointed out that many Canadian cheese producers, because they are on a quota system for cheddar production, also produce specialty or soft cheeses, and the sales of these cheeses in the Canadian market have dropped drastically in volume, by as much as 25 per cent to 30 per cent in the last two months because of the inability of Canadian producers to compete with European imports in the specialty cheese market. On February 6 the minister indicated that the matter would be reviewed.

Yesterday in the House of Commons, as reported at page 3712 of Hansard, I asked the minister whether the matter had been reviewed and what action, if any, was being taken. The minister told us that the matter was going to be discussed in cabinet in a few days.

[Mr. Reid.]

Later during the question period yesterday the minister decided to be a little more frank with us and announced, as recorded at page 3715, that an agreement had been reached so that commencing in April and continuing until 1979 our cheddar will be allowed into the EEC without import duty. This is welcome news, not only for cheese producers but also, I suggest, for Europeans who will be able to consume the finest cheese in the world, hopefully at reasonable prices.

Unfortunately the minister did not tell us about the fate of Canadian produced specialty or soft cheeses which cannot compete here in Canada with European imports. One might be tempted to ask whether our cheese producers are less efficient than their European counterparts, but this is not the case.

What is happening is simply that European governments are paying subsidies to their cheese producers who export to Canada. Therefore Canadians must not only compete with European cheese makers, they must also attempt to compete with subsidies paid by foreign governments. I trust the minister realizes how difficult, if not impossible, is this type of competition.

I cannot emphasize too much the importance of these Canadian specialty cheeses. Generally they are produced by small companies in rural areas. In other words, I am not talking about the large companies such as Kraft. I am trying to speak for the small cheese plants throughout our country.

In Ontario, for example, a typical cheese plant cannot operate at a sufficient percentage of its capacity to be profitable if it produces only cheddar. This is because of the Ontario quota system which restricts cheddar production. In order to be efficient these small plants developed good and nourishing specialty cheeses. They made substantial investments in capital equipment and they marketed their products successfully, all without government help. As a result their plants were profitable and they provided employment in our rural areas. Now they find themselves in the serious position of not being able to compete with foreign products which have the unfair advantage of lower prices because of a foreign government subsidy.

Therefore, while I welcome the news about the lifting of European Common Market import duties on our cheddar, I cannot help but be extremely concerned about the other factor that is essential to the viability of an average small cheese plant, and that is the necessity of being able to market its Canadian specialty cheeses. It is important to realize that such plants in many cases rely on the production of both types of cheese to keep their facilities in operration. In other words, many plants would operate at a loss if they were restricted to cheddar production only.

What is particularly disturbing to me are recent news reports which indicate that it may take some time before this problem is resolved. I refer the minister to a recent feature article by James Rush in the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 26. One paragraph reads as follows:

> Canadian officials, however, warn that, confident as they are that some accommodation will be worked out with the community (EEC) it could still take some months to resolve the situation.

If this is an accurate view, and I have no reason to doubt that it is, there are in my opinion two danger signals. First is the time that our officials seem to feel that it will take to work out the problem. This raises the simple question, can many of our cheese plants operate in a loss position for this period of time? Second, I would hope that our government is not concerning itself simply with the cheddar problem to the exclusion of the specialty cheese problem. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that the viability of many plants depends on the production of both products.

The minister is not one who is opposed to normal free trade. I point out to him, Mr. Speaker, that when a foreign government subsidizes one of its products which it is exporting to Canada, that is not free trade in the sense I understand free trade.

Third, we have had a history in certain agricultural production of cutting off our nose to spite our face. In other words, we accepted the importation of foreign products. Canadian producers could not compete with these imports and were forced out of business. One might say this was fair to the consumer. We might say a consumer is entitled to the best deal he can get in buying a certain product, whether it is produced in Canada or elsewhere. But, in the long run, it has been the consumer who has suffered, because as soon as there is no Canadian production to compete with the foreign product, the price of the foreign product goes way up and the consumer pays the inflated price. I use as obvious examples the following: the wool industry, the baler twine industry and the sugar beet industry. I only urge that the minister does not allow the Canadian cheese industry to suffer the unhappy fate of these examples I have just mentioned.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I should like to deal with two points raised by the hon. member, the question of imported cheeses for further processing and the cheddar cheese situation.

Since 1970 the government has maintained controls on imports of cheese for further processing to deal with a threat of disruption of the Canadian industry. At present no cheese for processing is allowed to enter the country with the exception of a small quantity from Finland, based on their traditional trade which existed before 1970. Cheese for direct consumption, except cheddar and colby, has been allowed to enter freely under general import permit. There have recently been suggestions that some cheese ostensibly imported for direct consumption has in fact been finding its way into processing. We are at present urgently looking into what can be done to correct this situation. When a decision has been reached the House will be informed.

I should like to elaborate a little on the cheddar cheese situation and the outcome of the successful negotiations with the European Economic Community, negotiations which were triggered by the enlargement of the EEC by the British, Danish and Irish entries, in respect of compensation for the impairment of our trading rights. These were conducted under Article XXIV:6. As the hon. member indicated, there were substantial benefits negotiated.

This arrangement applies to aged Canadian cheddar cheese which meets certain agreed price and quality specifications. A fixed levy will amount to 15 EEC units of account per 100 kilograms, just under 8½ cents per pound at present exchange rates. This represents a big reduction from the current basic EEC levy of 112 units of account per 100 kilograms, or approximately 67 cents per pound.

Because EEC levies are being phased in in Britain over a transitional period, the result of our special arrangement will be that no levy will apply at first, and a full levy of 15 units of account will not come into effect until 1979.

The effective date of arrangement is April 1, 1975. The trade will shortly be provided with full details of the way in which it will operate. The British market has traditionally been of major importance to Canadian cheese producers. During the period 1963 to 1972 annual exports to Britain amounted to some 28 million pounds, approximately $11.2 million in value terms. This represented about 95 per cent of total Canadian cheddar exports. Virtually no Canadian cheese has been exported to Britain since the application of the EEC variable levies two years ago.

Hon. members will recognize the important benefits negotiated by the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER OF LABOUR TO FACILITATE ENTRY OF CERTAIN IMMIGRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek leave of the House—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Cossitt: —to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), as follows:

That the House request the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to make a full and detailed statement as to whether the Minister of Labour made representations to facilitate the entry of Salvatore Taormina who arrived in Canada on June 5, 1968, or Silvestro Carollo who arrived in Canada on February 14, 1970, and whether his department or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have received information about highly questionable activities engaged in by these persons prior to their entry and, if so, the nature of this information including whether or not Mafia connections were involved, the procedures used to authorize their entry and the circumstances under which they obtained landed immigrant status.

Mr. Speaker: Extending to the hon. member the benefit of the doubt regarding the provision of Standing Order 43 which requires the subject matter to be of pressing importance, while I concede the matter may be one of considerable importance it has nevertheless been outstanding since June 5, 1968, in the terms of the hon. member's own motion, and I therefore have no hesitation in saying that it lacks the element of immediate necessity required by the Standing Order.

Mr. MacKay: I also wish to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity—

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the house in 1968 and furthermore this is a current situation that just came to my attention. I feel that when information comes to the attention of a member of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: I think the motion is a legitimate one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that a decision having been taken by the Chair, there is no procedure or machinery in this chamber for any appeal or discussion of the ruling. If the hon. member wishes to raise a question of privilege other than an attempt to comment on or interpret the ruling the Chair has just made, I will be pleased to hear it. Otherwise, I cannot hear him at this time.

Mr. Cossitt: I would not dare question your ruling, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is this: I feel that if a member comes into possession of information on a matter which he feels should be brought to the attention of the House, it is his privilege to do so. That is why I raised the matter at this time. I bow to your ruling and I do not, therefore, pursue the argument that it is not a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I think, with respect, that the matter is of some urgency.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE ACCORDED MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the continuing substantial financing of Marine Industries Limited through the auspices of the Export Development Corporation, specifically the most recent announcement of a $265 million contract involving this organization, one of the firms being under RCMP investigation because of alleged irregularities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on motions, at the first opportunity, set out in more complete detail all the phases of the financial dealings and arrangements, over the last five years, between Marine Industries and the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be put or debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO GRANTING OF CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very important and urgent matter.

Considering that a large contract for the establishment of a telecommunication system for radio and television in Zaire has been granted by CIDA to the Sintec Company, a concern whose existence was made public during the hearings of the Cliche Commission and which is now on the verge of bankruptcy; considering that some individuals have surfaced in this affair, especially René Mantha, former trade unionist, who was expelled from the James Bay working site and prosecuted, and who is also a Liberal organizer, a partner and employee of Sintec for the CIDA contract in Zaire, an undertaking of which the present Liberal member for Laporte, Mr. André Déom, is president and founder, Mr. Gilles D. Bergeron a director, also a former deputy minister of Social Affairs who was compelled to resign a few years ago as a result of an extensive system of forged social security cheques, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the House discuss immediately all the circumstances surrounding the grant by CIDA of that important contract to the Sintec Company and to all those fine people, so as to shed light on tenders involved as well as on the identity of the signers for the department and the company, including full particulars on the entire matter.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO REDUCE PRICE OF MILK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important and urgent matter that affects all Canadians.

Since the price of milk has increased dramatically recently, more specifically six times in 14 months, since milk is an essential food for children, and since a family that consumes four quarts of milk daily spends over $250 annually because of the unduly high price of milk, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House study the means to roll back the price of milk and other essential foods to a more acceptable level, in order to allow all Canadians, regardless of their income, to have access to those food products that are essential to a balanced diet, and this through reinstating the subsidies on whole milk.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME AND RETAIL DISCOUNTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Considering that the 1.3 per cent decline in our Gross National Product over the last three months of 1974 is certainly the worst recorded since 1960-61, and considering that any such decline reflects a falling off of our productive capacity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That this House look into the possibility of setting up a guaranteed annual income scheme for all Canadians, as well as a consumer price compensated discount program, as incentives to the lagging Canadian economy, as evidenced by the most recent GNP figures, and to prevent the battle against inflation from being fought at the expense of small Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 288, 372, 484, 792, 869, 903, 912, 968, 1,031, 1,037, 1,127, 1,145, 1,158, 1,235, 1,236, 1,345, 1,354, 1,443, 1,462, 1,513, 1,543, 1,554, 1,560, 1,594 and 1,698.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 46, 51, 54, 55, 256, 284, 325, 354, 396, 413, 555, 618, 620, 647, 1,035, 1,096 and 1,741 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions Nos. 920, 1,441 and 1,444?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MILITARY PERSONNEL STRENGTH

Question No. 288—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What was the strength, as of October 1, 1974, of the Armed Forces?

2. Is there a floor strength below which the Minister does not intend to let the strength of the Forces sink and, if so, what is it?

3. How many men, by ranks, took their voluntary release before retirement age in the period April 30, 1973 to April 30, 1974?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The strength of the Canadian Forces as of October 1, 1974 was: 78,154.

2. The overall strength and military capacity of the Canadian Armed Forces is made up by a combination of numbers of personnel, quality of equipment and the amount of funds available for operations. It is the intention to maintain and, whenever possible, to improve the military capability of the Armed Forces. It is the government's policy that the Canadian Armed Forces continue to perform all four of the main roles as set out in the White Paper on Defence in the 70's.

3. The number of personnel who elected to take voluntarily release before retirement age, during the period April 30, 1973 to April 30, 1974 was 4,716. The numbers by rank are as follows:

Officers		Other Ranks
Major-Generals	1	Chief Warrant Officers	56
Brigadier-Generals	7	Master Warrant Officers	169
Colonels	21	Warrant Officers	240
		Sergeants	456
Lieutenant Colonels	40	Corporals	1,153
Majors	111	Privates	1,907
Captains	324
Lieutenants	114	Total	3,981
Officer Cadets	117
Total	735

AGRICULTURE—NEW FEED GRAINS POLICY

Question No. 372—Mr. Dick:

Did the government under the Department of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board advertise extensively in weekly newspapers under the heading "New Feed Grains Policy" in June and July, 1974 and, if so, in which newspapers was this advertisement (a) placed in the week of (i) June 17, 1974 (ii) June 24, 1974 (iii) July 1, 1974 (iv) July 8, 1974 (b) what advertising agency made the arrangements for placing this ad (c) what fee did the advertising agency receive for its work (d) who prepared the copy for this advertisement (e) how much did it cost the government for this advertisement?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. Agriculture Canada conducted an advertising program for the department and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to disseminate information about the federal government's New Feed Grains Policy. (a) (i) to (iv) During the period of June 17 to July 8, 1974, advertisements were placed in 548 weekly newspapers and weekly farm publications. (b) None. (c) Not applicable. (d) Agriculture Canada personnel. (e) Advertisement costs totalled $65,120.88.

ASSISTANCE TO UNITED AIRCRAFT COMPANY

Question No. 484—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What were the amounts received by the United Aircraft Company under the Training in Industry Programme for the fiscal years 1973-74 and 1974-75?

2. What amounts did this Company receive in DREE grants for the fiscal years 1971-72 to 1974-75?

3. How much did this Company receive under the Industrial Research Assistance Programme for the fiscal years 1973-74 and 1974-75?

4. What were the amounts of any grants to this Company under PAIT?

5. What is the amount of any grant to this Company under the DIR Programme for the fiscal year 1974-75?

6. How much did this Company receive under the DIP Programme for the fiscal years 1971-72 to 1974-75?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Regional Economic Expansion, the National Research Council, and the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and National Defence as follows: 1. Amounts received by the United Aircraft Company under the Training-in-Industry Program: 1973-74-$76,066.21; 1974-75-$1,575.71.

2. United Aircraft, in the fiscal year 1971-72 accepted an offer under the Regional Development Incentives Act for $44,000 in connection with an expansion of its aircraft engine plant in Montreal. The amount paid to the company to September 30, 1974 is $24,730.

3. 1973-74, $35,208; 1974-75, Nil as of October 16, 1974.

4. Nil.

5. For the fiscal year 1974-75, the Defence Industrial Research program allotted $569,566 to United Aircraft of Canada in partial support of six research projects related to gas turbine technology.

6. 1971-72, $6,685,897; 1972-73, $11,972,041; 1973-74, $11,712,325; 1974-75 to December 31, 1974, $2,054,326; Total $32,424,589.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MANPOWER STRENGTH 1944-1974

Question No. 792—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. What was the total enrolment of the Canadian Armed Forces (active) during the years 1944, 1953, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973 and as of July 1, 1974?

2. In each year (a) what were the numbers of officers holding the rank or equivalent rank of Brigadier or higher (b) what were the numbers of non-commissioned personnel?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. (a) and (b). The total enrolment of the Canadian Armed Forces (active) for years in question, the number of officers holding the rank or equivalent rank of Brigadier or higher and the number of other ranks (non-commissioned personnel) are listed below:

Year	Total Enrolment	General Officers	Other Ranks
1944	787,475	195	709,702
1953	104,427	84	88,648
July 1, 1970	89,558	106	73,900
July 1, 1971	85,795	100	70,895
July 1, 1972	82,200	98	67,487
July 1, 1973	80,530	99	65,878
July 1, 1974	79,383	107	64,820

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 869—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of Agriculture have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Agriculture and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. All documents of the department are translated into French or English in accordance with the policy statements on bilingualism and biculturalism which have been issued since the government's initial statement, dated April 6, 1966.

2. Past records are translated in accordance with the policy statements as well as in accordance with the requirements of specific projects.

3. Bilingual forms for external use have all been designed and printed in the two official languages. Target dates for the translation of internal forms and manuals are: Forms, March, 1976; Manuals, December, 1975.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of Agriculture, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the Government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 3,318,545; for 1973-1974 it was 2,950,327. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the Translation Bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. Information not available.

6. $60,000 (estimated).

PARTICIPATION BY MINISTERIAL ASSISTANTS IN PUBLIC DISCUSSIONS

Question No. 903—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. From 1968 to the present, on how many occasions has a Deputy Minister, Under-Secretary, Assistant Deputy Minister, or Assistant Under-Secretary delivered a speech prepared originally for delivery by a Minister and, in each case, what was (a) the name of the official (b) the date of the speech (c) the subject of the speech (d) the audience to whom the speech was delivered?

2. From 1968 to the present, has any Deputy Minister, Under-Secretary, Assistant Deputy Minister, or Assistant Under-Secretary participated in any public seminar or other formal public discussion concerning questions of policy and, in each case, what was (a) the name of the official (b) the date of the participation (c) the topic of the seminar or discussion (d) the group sponsoring the seminar or discussion?

3. Does the government have a policy regarding the participation of a Deputy Minister, Under-Secretary, Assistant Deputy Minister, or Assistant Under-Secretary in public discussion of policy matters and, if so, what is that policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1 and 2. Detailed records are not available. On occasion officials have given background information on Throne Speeches, legislation press briefings, etc.

3. Parliamentary government requires that ministers be accountable in principle for the actions of their deputy and assistant deputy ministers (under-secretaries and assistant under-secretaries), as for all public servants, in relation to the discharge of their official responsibilities without removing from such persons their personal accountability for their actions. By reason of this general ministerial accountability, it is for each minister to decide the extent to which his senior officials will participate in the public discussion of policy matters. A deputy or assistant deputy minister or another public servant would not normally publicly discuss a policy matter without the knowledge and approval of his minister.

RENOVATION OF DE LASALLE PROPERTY ON SUSSEX DRIVE, OTTAWA

Question No. 912—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier):

1. What is the allotment of appropriations for (a) land acquisition (b) building renovation (c) new construction and furnishings of the De LaSalle property on Sussex Drive, Ottawa, which will house the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs?

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. At what stage is the project in terms of completion and what is the intended date of occupancy by the Ministry?

3. Has the Department of Public Works expropriated or does it intend to expropriate any adjoining properties and, if so, which one and on what date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Urban Affairs as follows: 1. (a) and (b) It is estimated that the total cost of this particular project will be $8,500,000. A breakdown of this amount is as follows: Acquisitiion of Property, $1,400,000; Renovation and Restoration, $4,850,-000; Construction—New Office Wing and Heating and Cooling Facility, $2,250,000. The 1974-75 appropriations to date total $5,388,000. The balance will be sought in future appropriations. (c) Furnishings—In keeping with approved policy for the restoration of the LaSalle property, $33,190 has been set aside for the purchase of period furniture for the furnishing of the Bishop's Palace. This part of the LaSalle property will accommodate the Minister and his staff. All other staff of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs will be moving with their existing furniture.

2. The project is 50 per cent complete and occupancy is scheduled in two phases for June 15, 1975 and December 31, 1975.

3. The Department of Public Works has not expropriated and has no plan at this time to expropriate any properties for this project.

*PLANS FOR SURFACE CAPABILITY IN CANADIAN ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO

Question No. 920—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Was a curtailment of aerial surveillance by the government of the Canadian North recently announced and, if so, will the plans for surface capability in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago on a twelve month a year basis be accelerated?

2. (a) Do these plans include the construction of icebreakers with true polar capability (b) do they still provide for the 60 to 90 day capability possible with the R Class vessels?

3. If the plans for surface surveillance in terms of vessels with ice-breaking capability do not include vessels with greater capacity than the R Class proposed, how does the government with no sub-surface, reduced aerial and 60 to 90 day surface capability intend to maintain mobile presence above 60 degrees?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Transport as follows: 1. No announcement was made concerning curtailment of aerial surveillance of the Canadian north. However, in response to questions in the House of Commons the reduction in the number of flights was explained, see Hansard No. 35, page 1443, dated Nov. 19, 1974 and Hansard No. 36, page 1489, dated Nov. 20, 1974.

2. (a) There are no firm plans to build icebreakers with true polar capability at this time although a contract has been awarded for the design of such a vessel should a firm requirement develop. (b) Yes.

3. Canadian presence is maintained above 60° latitude by aerial surveillance on a regular basis and by the presence of naval ships during the navigation season such as the surveillance and training mission by the destroyers Assiniboine, Saguenay and the supply ship Preserver through the Hudson Straight into Hudson Bay last August. The department is examining additional methods of maintaining surveillance north of 60° latitude and will be seeking government approval for an enlarged presence in the high Arctic by the Canadian Armed Forces.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in utilization of the ammunition you gave us the other day in terms of a vehicle to express grievances, I rise on a question of privilege to express my regret that it has taken the government since late last October or early November to respond to this question which in fact is a starred question and quite properly should be responded to within a week or ten days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REDUCTION OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 968—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the decision to reduce Canadian Armed Forces levels a reversible one and (a) if so, under what circumstances can it be reversed (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The overall strength and military capability of the Canadian Armed Forces is made up by a combination of numbers of personnel, quality of equipment, and the amount of funds available for operations. It is the intention to maintain and, whenever possible, to improve the military capability of the armed forces. In this sense any reduction in overall strength is reversible. It is the government's policy that the Canadian armed forces continue to perform all four of the main roles as set out in the White Paper on Defence in the 70's.

LIP—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Question No. 1,031—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does a letter dated November 20, 1972 to the Honourable Robert Andras, Minister of Manpower and Immigration and signed by the Honourable Jack Davis, Minister of the Environment at the time, state as follows in regard to the Local Initiatives Programme "as the Minister with the responsibility to review these projects for British Columbia, I ask that no project be given final approval until clearance has been obtained from this office"?

2. Does a letter, dated December 6, 1972, from the Honourable Robert K. Andras state in part "certainly my office will make every effort to ensure you are properly consulted on LIP projects in British Columbia ..."?

3. (a) How many Local Initiatives Programme applications were referred in any way for examination or approval to the Honourable Jack Davis or his office when he acted as Regional Minister for British Columbia in connection with the LIP Programme (b) how many projects did Mr. Davis or his office (i) approve (ii) not approve?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. (a) Mr. Davis would have been in a position to comment on 1,640 projects. (b) Not applicable. The final authority for approval rested, as always, with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Order Paper Questions

LIP—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Question No. 1,037—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the memo dated January 25, 1973, signed by Mr. J. M. DesRoches, Deputy Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, saying in part with reference to the Local Initiatives Programme "no project is approved without concurrence of the Regional Minister" (a) what are all the reasons the so-called Regional Ministers were given such veto power (b) for what reason was the existence of the Regional Ministers never made known to all Members of Parliament (c) was such information to Members of Parliament withheld because of political manipulation of the Local Initiatives Programme which the Minister did not wish to disclose to Parliament and, if so, will the Minister now disclose full details of such political manipulation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) See sessional paper 291-2-2319, tabled in the House of Commons on September 5, 1973 (b) The existence of Regional Ministers was made known with specific reference to the Local Initiatives Program, in Sessional Paper 291-2-2319 which was tabled in the House of Commons on September 5, 1973 (c) Not applicable. See above.

UNIT OF CBC TELEVISION CREW TO BROCKVILLE AND LEEDS

Question No. 1,127—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) What are all the reasons that a visit is to be made to Brockville and Leeds on or about December 19, 1974 by a CBC television crew (b) what is the identity and job designation of all persons instructing this crew to make any kind of survey in regard to the promotion of French language television for viewers in English speaking Leeds?

2. (a) What is the identity and job designation of the persons at the highest level involved in the decision to take this action (b) is the Secretary of State aware of this situation and was he involved in the decision (c) were any representations towards taking this step made by any other member of the Cabinet or by the Prime Minister or anyone acting on their behalf?

3. (a) What is the estimated cost of this project (b) how many TV personnel will be involved (c) what are the names of all those who will be involved and what are their job designations and annual salaries?

4. (a) What are the names of all persons that have been contacted, or will be contacted, for interviews on this subject in Leeds (b) how many of these contacts were made by a Mr. Brickenden (c) what is Mr. Brickenden's position with CBC (d) who instructed him to make such contacts?

5. Is this incident part of a government decision to speed up implementation of bilingualism in English speaking areas of Canada?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): In reply to Parts 1, 2, 3 and 4. I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No CBC crew visited Brockville and Leeds on or about December 19, 1974, for any reason.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

4. (a) Public relations visits are being made to six communities in south east Ontario including Brockville in connection with the extension of CBC English and French coverage under the Accelerated Coverage Plant. Various members of the communities were contacted, but the CBC wishes to respect the privacy of the individuals concerned in such contacts. (b) All contacts were made by Mr. J. S. Brickenden. (c) Public Relations Officer. (d) Manager, Public Relations, Toronto Region.

5. No.

[Mr. Andras.]

PRIME MINISTER'S LIMOUSINE

Question No. 1,145—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) On what date did the Prime Minister cease using the 1973 Cadillac purchased for him from public funds (b) what was the total mileage on the vehicle at the time (c) for what reason was it considered obsolete after only two years and what are the names and addresses of all persons suggesting, recommending or in any way whatsoever advocating that a 1975 Cadillac should be purchased for the Prime Minister's use from public funds to replace the 1973 vehicle?

2. On what date did the 1975 Cadillac go into service and (a) what was its cost (b) what was the cost of the basic vehicle (c) what is the complete list of every extra installed along with the cost in each case?

3. Were tenders called for the 1975 Cadillac and (a) if so, what were all the tenders received (b) if not, for what reason (c) from whom was the vehicle purchased, including the name and address of any automobile dealer receiving a commission or in any way involved in the purchase?

4. How many persons will the 1975 Cadillac seat and what are all the reasons that the Prime Minister requires a car of such size for his personal use?

5. (a) What is the colour of the 1975 Cadillac and was one of the reasons for replacing the 1973 black-coloured Cadillac that the Prime Minister and his family did not like its colour (b) to whom and by whom were any such colour complaints made (c) for what reason was the 1973 vehicle not repainted another colour to avoid the expense of a new automobile?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) and Supply and Services as follows: 1. (a) December 9, 1974. (b) 19,390 miles (31,024 kilometres). (c) The vehicle was not considered obsolete and the purchase of a second limousine was part of the original plan to have two special limousines due to a specific requirement for State and VIP visits without having to deprive the Prime Minister of his vehicle which he requires for security reasons. On occasion when Heads of State/Governments are required to visit another major city, i.e. Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg, departures and arrivals often have to be delayed in order that the single vehicle can be transported by air from one city to another. This creates unnecessary confusion and delay on the principal's part. On occasion, vehicles have been required at separate locations simultaneously due to the nature and high security involved in simultaneous visits. Under the previous system, with only one vehicle, it necessitated a decision as to where to put the vehicle. Should an incident have occurred, it would have had serious repercussions to the Government. The R.C.M.P. recommended the purchase of the second limousine.

2. December 9, 1974. (a) $83,530.94. (b) $13,413.34 (including factory options). (c) The following factory options were installed on the vehicle, however, individual prices are not available as they were included in the General Motor's price: Basic Vehicle: Cadillac, 1974, Model Fleetwood 75, 6DF33. Options: Standard air conditioning; Colour: Georgian Silver No. 13; Tires: WSW (5) 8.90 x 15 8 pr. "D" included in SRX-26; Power door locks; Lamp monitoring system; Opera lamps; Steering wheel—tilt and telescopic; Licence plate frames front and rear; Front and rear AM/FM stereo signal seeking radio with controls in rear compartment. To be equipped with a power antenna on right hand front fender as near as possible to the windshield; Trim: Standard black leather front compartment. 725 medici blue in passenger compartment; Bumper: special with impact strips; Glass to have standard configuration but to be clear not shade-lite; 145 amp. delcatron—SRX. 24. In addition, special security equipment, which cannot be publicized for security reasons, was installed at a cost of $70,117.60.

3. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) The only known commercially available chassis that met security requirements was the Cadillac Fleetwood manufactured by General Motors. (c) General Motors of Canada Ltd., Oshawa, Ontario. No dealer received a commission or participated in the transaction for the purchase of the basic Cadillac.

4. The vehicle, which will seat five, is required for the reasons outlined in paragraph 1(c).

5. (a) Silver-grey. There is no indication the Prime Minister or his family objected to the colour of the 1973 Cadillac. (b) No complaints were made. (c) The colour of the 1973 Cadillac was not a factor when considering the purchase of a second security limousine.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 1,158—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In regard to the Prime Minister's recent trip to Saskatchewan to address the Saskatchewan Liberal Association (a) what means of transportation to Saskatchewan did the Prime Minister use (b) did he travel on a government owned aircraft and, if so, what is the description of the aircraft (c) was the cost of any aspects of his trip to Saskatchewan paid for by public funds and, if so (i) what were the items involved (ii) what was the cost in each case?

2. Will the Prime Minister cease using government owned aircraft for political and personal purposes and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

3. (a) What are the names and job designations of any government employees travelling to Saskatchewan with the Prime Minister (b) what are all the reasons justifying such persons who are paid from public funds attending political meetings sponsored by the Liberal Party (c) were they paid their usual salaries from public funds for the time spent in attendance at this Liberal Party gathering or with the Prime Minister in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Transport and the Prime Minister's Office as follows: 1. (a) Government aircraft. (b) Ministry of Transport Jetstar CF-DTX. (c) Ministry of Transport total cost—approximately $4,500 consisting of:

(i) Items	(ii) Costs
Fuel	approx. $1,715
Flight crew expenses	approx. $ 225
Other aircraft operational costs	approx. $2,560
	Total $4,500

In so far as the Prime Minister is concerned, yes:
(i) Travel expenses (ii) $643.12

2. See page 8618, House of Commons Debates, Volume 117, Number 189, 1st Session, 29th Parliament and page 2136, Volume 118, Number 50, 2nd Session, 29th Parliament.

3. (a) Robert Murdoch, Executive Assistant; Courtney Tower, Assistant Press Secretary; Michel Rochon, Director of Policy; Kent Jespersen, Special Assistant; James Moore, Special Assistant; Ralph Coleman, Press Assistant. (b) The travel involved visits to both Winnipeg and Regina during which the Prime Minister kept an engagement to attend and speak at a civil Centennial banquet in Winnipeg, and held discussions in Regina with two groups of leading Saskatchewan farmers and businessmen. Members of his staff were present in their normal support functions. (c) Yes, also see (b) above.

RACE TRACK SUPERVISION REGULATIONS

Question No. 1,235—Mr. Bawden:

1. For what reason were sections 211, 213, 214 and 215 of Part V of the Race Track Supervision Regulations governing the use of narcotics, unacceptable medications or other stimulants, as approved in 1973, not enforced during the 1973 and 1974 horse racing seasons?

2. Will these sections of Part V of the Race Track Supervision Regulations, or others similar to them be in effect during the 1975 racing season?

3. Does the government intend to introduce legislation making it an offence any time a jockey or driver is involved in a conspiracy to "fix a race" with any other persons having access to an entered horse, in the use of narcotics, unacceptable medications, the use of electric battery or stimulating device?

4. Will Royal Canadian Mounted Police Officers supervise operations at Canadian race tracks during the 1975 racing season to ensure all government racing regulations are complied with?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Agriculture Canada and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as follows: 1. These sections of the regulations were revoked on June 15, 1973.

2. These former sections of the regulations are being reviewed in consultation with the Provincial Racing Commissions.

3. No. Legislation currently exists under the Criminal Code.

4. At present, the R.C.M.P. is committed to provide one member for each racing circuit in Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS—PROJECTS IN HUMBER-ST. GEORGE'S-ST. BARBE

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Marshall:

What projects were carried out by the Department of Public Works in the constituency of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe during 1973-74 and what were the costs involved?

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES IN RECEIPT OF SALARIES IN EXCESS OF $25,500

Question No. 1,345—Mr. Orlikow:

How many people in the Public Service, excluding those in the SX salary range, are earning salaries equivalent to or more than $25,500, which is the minimum SX 1 salary?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): As of September 30, 1974, 3,307 public servants, including those in levels of groups deemed to be equivalent to Senior Executive Officer levels, earned salaries equivalent to or more than $25,500 per annum.

STOL FARES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS AND MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,354—Mr. Huntington:

What is the cost to the Federal Treasury (a) for the year ending March 31, 1974 (b) for the period April 1, 1974 to December 31, 1974 for fares on STOL for federal employees and Members of Parliament?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The commercial STOL service for farepaying passengers started in July 1974. There were, therefore, no expenditures for fares of federal employees in the year ending March 31, 1974. Reports kept since the start of commercial services to December 31st, 1974, indicate that 4,400 tickets were purchased through Central Travel Services for federal employees. This represents about 12 per cent of the tickets purchased. The cost was about $90,000 to the federal treasury. Federal employees and members of parliament can, however, also purchase tickets directly from the STOL carrier, Airtransit as private citizens or for business reasons. It is estimated from spot surveys that another 6,800 trips were made by people who, when surveyed, described themselves as government employees, in addition to those above. If these are included, some 30 per cent of the trips were made by government employees. This would represent an additional cost of about $140,000. Some of this amount may have been claimed as travel expenses from the federal treasury.

*GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 1,441—Mr. Rynard:

1. Has the government, as the sole common shareholder of the Canada Development Corporation, already invested in the order of $400 million in cash and assets in the Corporation without commitment for interest of dividends and, if so, what is the mechanism for management and performance accountability imposed by the government on the Corporation?

2. Is the objective of the Corporation to develop Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations and operate profitably and in the best interests of the shareholder and, if so, on what policy basis has almost 90 per cent of all cash invested so far by the Corporation been utilized to acquire shares of, or interests in, foreign corporations and businesses?

3. Has the permanent head office of the Corporation been established in western Canada and, if so, how many full time operating officers or staff are employed in the Vancouver head office and how many are employed in other operating centres?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is somewhat lengthy. I have provided a copy to the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) and I wonder if it could be taken as read.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer is as follows:]

1. The government has purchased $250 million of common shares of the Canada Development Corporation for cash and has also sold to the CDC the former Polymer Corporation Limited for CDC common shares. These common shares entitle the government to receive any dividend declared by the corporation. The declaration of dividends is the responsibility of the CDC board of directors. The board has not yet considered it advantageous to declare a dividend. The government appreciates and shares the view of the CDC board that at this early stage in the life of the corporation it has been beneficial to both the CDC and the government as a shareholder to keep the earnings invested in the corporation. Two senior government officials are ex officio members of the CDC board of directors and the Minister of Finance currently elects the balance of the board of directors at the annual shareholders meeting. This enables the government to effectively monitor the management and the performance of the corporation.

2. Pursuant to the CDC Act, the corporation's objectives are to help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations in the private sector of the economy, and to operate in anticipation of profits and in the best interests of shareholders. I think that the CDC's resources have effectively been used in order to achieve these objectives. The purchase of a 30% interest in Texasgulf incorporated at a cost of 271 million dollars to this time represents the CDC's major cash investment. Although incorporated in the United States Texasgulf donives about two thirds of its revenue from Canadian operations and is planning major additional investments in Canada which will develop Canadian natural resources. Through Polysar, which was acquired by means of an exchange of shares rather than for cash, the CDC is further investing substantial amounts of funds to build a Canadian petrochemical plant which will be comparable in size to the larger ethylene producing plants in the world. This new petrochemical complex represents an investment in excess of 400 million dollars. The establishment of Connlab Holdings Limited in which the CDC has already invested 35 million dollars represents an attempt to create a major Canadian controlled and managed company in the health care field. The CDC has also invested over 10 million dollars in three Canadian venture capital firms, helping to create two of those in Vancouver and Montreal. The corporation is also a partner in the group planning the development of the Mackenzie Delta gas pipeline. From the preceding it is clear that the CDC's investments have been undertaken in furtherance of its major objectives.

3. The CDC's head office has been established in Vancouver. The full time operating officers or staff amount to seven in the Vancouver head office and seventeen in the other operating office in Toronto.

MONCTON AIRPORT—PLANS FOR IMPROVEMENT

Question No. 1,443—Mr. Jones:

1. What plans are there for the enlargement and improvement of passenger and baggage facilities, as well as terminal facilities, at the Moncton Airport?

2. Has consideration been given to require Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airlines to improve air service in and out of Moncton, the transportation centre of Atlantic Canada, to meet the needs of the Maritime Central Region, where the greatest density of population exists in the Maritime Region, Moncton being the centre of the region?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Future requirements regarding all facilities at Moncton Airport are being evaluated in context of a master plan development project due for completion later this year.

2. Following the CTC Hearings immediate arrangements were made between Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airways to improve services between inter-city pairs in the Atlantic provinces. The federal/provincial committee on Atlantic region transportation is currently conducting a study in conjunction with the airlines to further improve inter-city services. The recent announcement by Eastern Provincial Airways to acquire three of the Canadian built Dash 7 aircraft will further enhance communications between centres in the Atlantic provinces.

Order Paper Questions

*3 PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS

Question No. 1,444—Mr. Rynard:

1. As of January 1, 1975, how many 3 per cent perpetual bonds were still held by the original holders?

2. What percentage of the original bonds issued in 1936 have been cashed?

3. Is consideration being given by the government to pay off these perpetual bonds?

4. What is the purchasing power of today's dollar as compared with the 100 per cent invested in 1936?

5. How many of these perpetual bonds are privately held?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows: 1. Approximately 1.7 per cent or $561,000 of the registered 3 per cent perpetual bonds are still held by the original holders.

2. None of the original bonds have been cashed. The original $55 million is still outstanding.

3. The government has for some time been seeking an equitable solution to the problems posed by the 3 per cent perpetual bonds.

4. The purchasing power of today's dollar is 72% less than a 1936 dollar.

5. 48 per cent of the outstanding registered bonds are held by individuals and estates.

ELECTRIC POWER SUPPLY IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 1,462—Mr. Howie:

Is consideration being given to taking any steps to provide heavy transmission lines and facilities to assure adequate power supplies at the lowest possible price throughout the Atlantic Provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes. In recent months the federal government has taken the following actions to assist electric power supply in the Atlantic provinces. (1) An offer to New Brunswick to finance up to 50 per cent of the cost of a 600,000 kilowatt nuclear reactor. (2) An $18 million grant and a loan of up to $9 million to establish a cable interconnection between the power systems of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. (3) A loan of up to $343 million towards the cost of a high voltage electrical interconnection between the Gull Island power site on the Churchill river in Labrador and power markets on the Island of Newfoundland. The investment referred to in item 3. also involves an electrical interconnection between the proposed Gull Island project and the Churchill Falls project, thereby connecting the Newfoundland power system with the other interconnected systems of Eastern Canada.

IMMIGRATION—FURTHER DETAIL ON THREE YEARS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,513—Mr. Friesen:

With reference to Three Years in Canada, the First report of the longitudinal survey on the economic and social adaptation of immigrants, a volume of the Green Paper on Immigration, what groups comprise the category "Others", the largest category listed in Table A.7 on page 146?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Immigrants to Canada in 1969 were born in almost every country in the world. In addition to those countries listed in Table A.7, the following were the countries in which 1,000 or more immigrants were born:

Country of Birth	Immigrant Arrivals 1969	Immigrant Sample 1969
Czechoslovakia	5,029	87
The Netherlands	2,412	51
Egypt	1,839	30
Ireland, Republic of	1,627	26

2. What rate of interest has the government paid for the use of this money during the fiscal years ending on the dates noted above?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Public Service Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1972 (b) March 31, 1973 (c) March 31, 1974?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Public Service Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1972 (b) March 31, 1973 (c) March 31, 1974?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. (a) $4,488,549,951; (b) $4,945,750,813; (c) $5,427,502,239.

2. Quarter ending: June 30, 1971, 1.3838 per cent; September 30, 1971, 1.3896 per cent; December 31, 1971, 1.4004 per cent; March 31, 1972, 1.4157 per cent; June 30, 1972, 1.4601 per cent; September 30, 1972, 1.4659 per cent; December 31, 1972, 1.4778 per cent; March 31, 1973, 1.4931 per cent; June 30, 1973, 1.5042 per cent; September 30, 1973, 1.5252 per cent; December 31, 1973, 1.5364 per cent; March 31, 1974, 1.5490 per cent.

3. (a) $163,707,472; (b) $184,190,199; (c) $202,866,916.

4. (a) 118,635,547; (b) 137,073,425; (c) 163,297,280.

PUBLIC SERVICE—USE OF STANDARD PAPER SIZES

Question No. 1,554—Mr. Herbert:

On what date will the 8 1/4 x 11 3/4 metric stationery presently in use in Ministers' offices be made available for general use in the Public Service?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The Canadian Government Specifications Board Committee on Standard Paper Sizes, representing a wide range of Canadian interests, including paper manufacturers, printers, and users, federal and provincial governments, is actively engaged in preparation of a national standard for paper sizes in Canada. When the standard has been approved it is anticipated that the use of standard paper sizes in the Public Service will be implemented in accordance with the standard through the Federal Identity Program developed by Information Canada. The standard is expected to be available in mid-1975.

PUBLIC SERVANTS—TRAVEL EXPENSES ON OFFICIAL BUSINESS

Question No. 1,560—Mr. Blackburn:

1. As a general rule, do government employees, when travelling on official business at public expense, travel in first-class accommodation or in economy class?

2. Are there any exceptions to the general rule and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. Government employees on official business generally travel economy air and, for one way rail trips of four hours or less, coach class.

2. Exceptions to the general rule are: Paragraph 2.03 of the Treasury Board Travel Directive, "... A higher standard of accommodation may be authorized only when, in the opinion of the employer, the extra cost is justified by program-related reasons, such as: (a) when no less expensive accommodation is available and a delay in arrival is not acceptable, or (b) when travel is within a country or between countries when economy class air travel present health hazards or discomfort to the employee, or (c) when in exceptional circumstances, such as for reasons of protocol, an employee officially accompanies another person travelling first class." Paragraph 2.09 of the Treasury Board Travel Directive referring to rail travel in excess of four hours, "... For longer trips a higher standard shall be authorized with Canadian roomette or equivalent accommodation being provided for overnight travel." A deputy minister may authorize first class travel if in his opinion it is appropriate to do so.

CALGARY AIRPORT—TILE CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,594—Mr. Schellenberger:

Will the government look favourably upon granting the contracts for tile in the new Calgary Airport to a Canadian firm to encourage the development of that industry here and require that the tile be specified according to the government's Master Construction Specification?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Canadian materials are preferred where they are available and can meet Government Master Construction Specification. Tender bids from any Canadian manufacturer who can meet the requirements will be considered.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—100,000 FUR CAPS

Question No. 1,698—Mr. Halliday:

1. Were tenders called by the Department of Supply and Services for the supply of 100,000 fur caps for issue to servicemen, which, when received, were two-sizes too small and, if so, was the lowest tenderer awarded the contract?

2. What is the name of the company awarded the contract?

3. What has the Department done with these fur caps?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, tenders were called and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer.

2. Parktown Hat and Cap Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

3. In accordance with directions of the customer department (DND), the fur hats were shipped by the manufacturer to No. 1 Canadian Forces Supply Depot, Downsview, Ontario.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 8 and 9 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservation concerning confidential documents and the authorization of the governmental authorities concerned.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO TUNNEL BETWEEN LABRADOR AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 8—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams, minutes of meetings, and agreements between the government and the Government of Newfoundland having to do with participation of both parties in the creation of a tunnel between the land masses of Labrador and Newfoundland to transfer hydro cable from Lower Churchill Falls.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REGARDING DEVELOPMENT OF LOWER CHURCHILL FALLS

Motion No. 9—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams, minutes of meetings between the government and the Province of Newfoundland regarding the development of the Lower Churchill Falls in Labrador.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 25 and 27.

COPIES OF REPORTS BY JOINT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE CONCERNING FISHERMEN ON WEST COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 25—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all reports and recommendations concerning the areas from Cape John to Cape St. Gregory on the West Coast of Newfoundland submitted by the Joint Federal-Provincial Committee charged with considering the designation of areas in which fishermen were to receive compensation for fishing gear losses due to ice damage in 1971.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, since the province of Newfoundland is not agreeable to the publication of such correspondence, the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) therefore is unable to table the documents requested, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations.

I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Marshall: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPY OF PEAT-MARWICK CONSULTANTS REPORT ON JACQUES CARTIER TERMINAL FACILITIES

Motion No. 27—Mr. Forrestall:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Peat-Marwick Consultants report on the Jacques Cartier terminal facilities prepared for the National Harbours Board.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the National Harbours Board engaged the services of Peat-Marwick and Company as consultants to review traffic forecast and facility requirements for eastern Canadian ports. The study was broad in nature and did not relate to any specific facilities, certainly not to Jacques Cartier terminal. The results are confidential as they deal with the continuing competition for traffic with United States east coast ports. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I apparently did not word the question narrowly enough I will withdraw this one and change it.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

OIL—CONFERENCE OF PRODUCING, CONSUMING AND THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES—REASON FOR FAILURE OF CANADA TO ATTEND

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister concerning the very important conference on oil called by France for April 7 I believe, involving some ten countries including France, representatives of the producing countries, representatives of the consuming countries, and representatives of the third world, a conference to which Canada has not been invited. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Government of Canada approves of this conference or disapproves of it and whether it accepts the fact that it has not been invited or whether it has protested its not being invited.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might respond on behalf of the Acting Prime Minister. For some time Canada has favoured in general terms a meeting between both the producing and consuming countries as well as the developing countries and has sought to participate in the preparatory meetings which will be taking place in Paris in the near future. The position that was taken by the various parties to the international energy agency and indeed by the Government of France, was that the conference should be confined to a limited number of participants in all three categories. The Government of Canada would have preferred to have participated in the preparatory meeting but I think that with Canada and all other countries participating it would have been of such a scale that would have perhaps hindered the making of effective arrangements in the preparatory meeting. We agreed on that basis not to participate.

OIL—CONFERENCE OF PRODUCING, CONSUMING AND THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES—CANADIAN POSITION ON SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED AND THROUGH WHOM ADVANCED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Due to the fact that this conference, if it is successful along the lines that the Government of France, which is calling this conference, may lay down some very important guidelines for the future relating, for example, to the concept at least of negotiated prices between the producing and consuming countries—a negotiated world price—and the possibility of agreements in principle on a floor price or even the range of level of that floor price, does the Government of Canada have a position on these matters and if so how is this position to be put before this conference?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Leader of the Opposition that this conference, of course, is preparatory to a full conference which will be taking place later this year on the assumption that the preparatory meeting is successful. The government of Canada will be keeping in close touch with these discussions and with the participants at the conference of the international energy agency, and of course we will be making our views known with regard to the various items which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. The International Energy Agency meeting will take place in the agency on March 6 and 7, that is to say this week. At that time we will be discussing the question of the floor price, among others. We have not taken a final position with regard to the various comments put forward until the propositions are better defined, although we recognize that the floor price could be of significance to Canada with the relatively high cost petroleum resources in the future, and on that basis we will be pursuing the floor price discussion, bearing in mind our interest over the long run in maintaining protection of our own industry.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: It is my understanding that if the international agency is present at the conference, it will be present only with observer status. I am asking the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if the Government of Canada has views to be expressed at this conference, through whom does it propose to express these views, through Mr. Kissinger?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker, obviously the views of the Government of Canada will be made known to all participants with whom we have diplomatic relations, but in particular with the members of the international energy agency who will be participating. In no sense will Canada be bound by the results of the preparatory meeting, and of course we reserve the full right to express our views at the plenary conference when it is held, whether or not we are in agreement with the preparatory meeting.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the minister any reason to believe that Canada will be invited to the full conference, or that the full conference will not be restricted to the original countries that have been invited?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, we have the assurances of all parties that it will be a full conference and Canada will be a full participant.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MINISTER'S FORECAST OF GROWTH—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEASURES TO STIMULATE GROWTH

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement on November 18 that barring "unforeseen shocks at home, the Canadian economy is expected to grow at a rate of about 4 per cent 1975", and in view of the minister's statement yesterday that he had scaled down his forecasts, would the minister indicate what is his current guess for real growth in the economy for 1975, bearing in mind that his forecast last May of a 5 per cent growth for 1974 has turned out to be only 3.7 per cent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In the volatile world in which we are living—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —forecasts have been difficult to make and difficult to achieve.

An hon. Member: Bring back the group of seven.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I might say to the hon. member that virtually every forecast in this country, both public and private, has been revised considerably, as have those in the United States and those of the European trading partners. After I review the effect of the stimulus injected into our economy as a result of the November 18 budget, after we are able to review whatever negotiations evolve between the U.S. congress and the administration as to what the stimulus will be and how it is injected into the American economy, I will be in a position on an appropriate occasion to revise my estimates before the House.

Mr. Stevens: In view of the minister's answer, and in view of his statement yesterday in justification of his failure to introduce a new budgetary stimulus to the economy in which he referred to the Conference Board of Canada figures that forecast, he said, an upturn in the third and fourth quarters in 1975, is the minister aware of the fact that the Conference Board figures referred to by him were issued before his budget and that subsequent to the November budget the Conference Board scaled down its forecast for the third and fourth quarters of the current year so that the fourth quarter, according to the Conference Board, is now reflected in a growth of only 1.7 per cent, compared with its earlier estimate of 3.6 per cent? If he is aware of this, would he not accept this as sufficient indication to cause a new budgetary stimulus in the economy?

● (1430)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I could refer to the hon. gentleman selective quotations from the report of the Institute of Qualitative Analysis at the University of Toronto, which was published just a few weeks ago and which bears out what I have said. I might refer him to another authority for which he may have even more respect, namely, the Leader of the Opposition, who on February 16, on the program "Question Period", in answer to the question as to whether the Minister of Finance should bring in another budget as soon as possible said, no, not necessarily; basically he recognized that things are difficult. He was then asked the reason for the proposal of the Conservative Party for a $500 million tax cut and replied that the 5 per cent tax cut proposal was put forward, not particularly as a stimulus to the economy, but as a means of forcing the government to exercise restraint in terms of expenditures. The hon. gentleman really ought to get on the same wavelength as his leader and have a discussion about the whole thing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is the practice in question period for a lead-off question to be heard from each of the opposition parties.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Because we are a democracy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is with the proviso, however, that Your Honour permits supplementary questions to be asked by other members of the Official Opposition following the first question. But I suggest that the questions asked by the hon. member for York-Simcoe were in no way supplementary to the questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I suggest that it is this kind of abuse of the question period which gets us into trouble.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I wish to say a word in your defence. I am certain that Your Honour called on the hon. member for York-Simcoe because Your Honour assumed his question would be a supplementary. On the other hand, there was no attempt by the hon. member for York-Simcoe to pretend that he was asking supplementaries at all. I agree, however, with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that it is the tradition of the House to call on a questioner from the New Democratic Party and the other parties in the House following the opening questions. I do not think there is anything here today but a misunderstanding. I do not object to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre calling attention to it, but I do not think he should suggest that anyone is trying to take advantage of anyone and thereby destroying the question period.

An hon. Member: You are a good man, Bob.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the statement of the Leader of the Official Opposition, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is right when he says that the supplementary question of the hon. member for York-Simcoe had no bearing on the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, and everybody knows that the Progressive Conservatives have freedom enough to ask their questions, so much so that we are almost ignored in this corner of the House. So, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition or the hon. member for York-Simcoe are entitled to complain about their treatment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a point of order, and for the benefit of hon. members interested in the point I might say that I have tried, in the last two or three days, when points of order or questions of privilege have arisen during the question period, to extend the question period at the end by as much time as these points absorb in order to make sure that those members who want to put questions are not deprived by legitimate points of concern to the House.

The hon. member raised a point which occurred to me immediately the hon. member for York-Simcoe began his questioning. It has been a standing practice since I assumed this office—which is really not that long, but it has been an understanding for that period of time—that I would try to recognize, following the first questioner from the Official Opposition, the lead off speaker for the other opposition parties unless followed by supplementary questions. It was obvious today that the questions were not supplementary, and my intention was to speak privately with those representatives who have made the suggestion as to who might follow the leader.

The point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is therefore a point of order well taken. I take also the word of the Leader of the Opposition, as I am sure hon. members do, that it was simply a misunderstanding which has occurred for the first time today and which I am sure will not recur.

LENGTH OF TIME BEFORE INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES TO STIMULATE GROWTH—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS ALLOCATED TO HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering the decline in the real growth of the economy which we have experienced in the last few years, as documented by figures released by Statistics Canada, which also relate to the forecasts that the real growth in the Canadian economy is likely to be in the neighbourhood of just one per cent for 1975, I would like to ask the minister, in light of this information and in light of his own acknowledgement three or four weeks ago that his own forecast made in the budget of last fall needed revision, how long he intends us to wait before he will bring forth these new measures to deal with the Canadian economy which the revelation of these facts fully justifies.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that will have to remain a question of judgment. The House should put the situation in perspective. The three month period—and I gather it was a three month period to which the hon. member was referring—was already evident to the government at the time I brought down the budget on November 18. The stimulus injected into the economy at that time, which was in the realm of $3 billion cash deficit, primarily by way of tax reductions, is already being felt by the economy as of January 1 in the form of tax reductions for the 1974 and 1975 taxation years, and when the bill which the House passed last week is passed by the other place, further refunds will be in the hands of Canadian taxpayers.

I would like to say to the hon. member as well that since this stimulus is already injected, since capital investment in plant and equipment is holding up reasonably well, and since, as against the figure of 3.7 per cent real growth for the economy in 1974 we had a figure of 6.8 per cent in real domestic product, that the economy in domestic terms fell off only marginally from the 8.3 of real domestic product in the year before. What really happened in our economy was a drag from our exports, a falling off of our exports caused by a stagnant recessionary American economy, a stagnant Japanese economy and a flat European economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is for those reasons that I am examining the situation in the United States, in Europe and in Japan because they are crucial to our exports. I am also examining the effect of the stimulus already in the enonomy.

Mr. Broadbent: A good part of the statistics revealed by Statistics Canada flatly contradicts what the minister has said or argued and specifically I refer to their singling out of the 10.4 per cent drop in residential construction which has nothing to do with foreign export sales. With the 10.4 per cent drop in residential construction in 1974 being one of the major reasons for the decline in growth of our GNP, I would like to ask the minister if the government has any intention of bolstering the housing market to provide houses which are needed, and to provide jobs, by injecting a large amount of money soon into the construction of new housing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is perfectly right that a major factor in the slow growth was a sharp drop in real consumer demand in housing and in some durable goods. One of the priorities in the budget was a further allocation of funds to give some leverage to my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The fact remains that in analysing the figures for 1974 which have just come in, the difference between 6.8 per cent for real domestic product and 3.7 per cent for the total real growth in the economy or the gross national product is represented by the drag on our economy of falling exports.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STIMULATE AND DIVERSIFY EXPORT TRADE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce following what the Minister of Finance has just said. What steps has the government taken in recent weeks to do something about our export trade, both in terms of achieving new markets for goods and in terms of diversifying our exports to manufactured goods instead of raw materials?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have launched a number of programs to diversify Canadian markets for both raw materials, food products and manufactured goods. We have also made some major changes in the Export Development Corporation to assist the financing of Canadian capital goods. There is also a ministerial mission which I shall be leading in a matter of ten days to Cuba and Venezuela.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: Let me make it quite clear that we have been increasing our exports to our non-traditional markets at a far greater rate than to our traditional markets. We have set up a joint working group with France as part of the France-Canada Economic Commission and we expect to conclude a joint economic commission with Iran shortly. We will be participating in 55 international trade fairs during 1974-75 and 100 incoming missions.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby rising on a point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of getting another catalogue from the minister, I should like to ask him, in view of his initiation—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Broadbent: —of all these steps—

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: —if he can give the House one concrete example of increased sales as a result of all these projects?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to supply a list to the hon. member.

Mr. Baldwin: It will not increase the sales of Hansard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CIDA—GRANTING OF CONTRACT TO SINTEC—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I shall put my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the report that CIDA has awarded an important contract for the establishment of a telecommunications network in Zaire to the Quebec Sintec Company which is facing bankruptcy, could the minister tell us all about this contract and indicate to the House in what circumstances everything was arranged so that we realize now that the main agents of the companies are people such as René Mantha, union leader evicted from James Bay, Gilles D. Bergeron, a former deputy minister dismissed following a case of forged social security cheques, and André Déom, founding president of the company and Liberal member of the National Assembly for Laporte in Quebec?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, and without admitting the allegations and accusations contained in the hon. member's question, I undertake to ask the department to inquire into those facts and shall report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In his answer, could the minister say whether hon. members will be able to know if the contract was awarded after tenders, who were the tenderers and what were the amounts involved?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I shall inquire also about that aspect of the question, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STIMULATE EXPORT OF MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as you might imagine I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the volume of exports of fully manufactured products, which are the ones that produce the jobs, have decreased by 4 per cent during the past year and the volume of imports of those same products increased by 13 per cent in the same period, thereby having a very serious effect on employment, does the minister intend to introduce specific measures to improve this situation? I ask this in view of the fact that the measures he has introduced are not working, measures such as incentives to increase productivity and thereby lower costs and make our products more competitive in the marketplace and introduce more aggressive selling aid to manufacturers.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there was so much noise from the other side when the hon. member was asking his question that I did not get the last part of it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You didn't miss a thing.

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member had studied the budget he would see that incentives are built in for the manufacturing industry to expand. On the other point, I should like to ask him if he is suggesting that we should adopt a protective policy to prevent imports from coming into the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are some rules in connection with the question period that are difficult to enforce and are very vague, but one is abundantly clear: it is this side that asks the questions of that side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: A supplementary. Obviously the minister transcended the rules but he did so because he had to ask somebody who knew something about it what ought to be done!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Is the minister not aware by now that the measures introduced in the budget to increase productivity simply are not doing the job and will not do the job. Any manufacturer will tell him that. Will he get together with the Minister of Finance to try to induce him to introduce real incentives to increase productivity and stop it dropping every single day that we are here?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking the floor on points of order. I hesitated to interrupt the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings in midsentence, so if the hon. Minister wishes to respond to that question he may do so before I take the points of order.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the hon. member's attention to the new program for the shipbuilding industry. If he looks at it he will see that there are some very basic incentives built into it.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps in the interests of orderliness I will recognize a final supplementary question by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. In case the points of order that have come from my right are related to offended sensibilities, I am sure hon. members on the right realize that in recognizing questioners from that side that my statement a moment ago that questions should come from that side to this side is something of an over-simplification.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that the program which he announced will aid marine industries mostly, as well as other friends of the government, and not other people nearly enough?

Mr. Gillespie: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I think that program will have a very wide appeal, from the west coast through the Great Lakes area down to the east coast. It will provide an opportunity for those shipyards which have been specializing in a distinctive competence and have shown themselves now able to compete internationally. I think that program, through the incentives built in for productivity, will further ensure that the industry can compete internationally in the future.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, after the statement of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, I rise, as the representative of 18,500 workers in the industry involved, because even if the hon. member says that we are favouring large undertakings, we must just the same give consideration to the 18,500 workers earning their living there.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE—SUGGESTED CONTINUATION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General arising out of the growing concern of the public about Canada's on-again-off-again postal service. Can the Postmaster General deny or confirm reports that following a meeting of union officials last week, a telex was despatched alerting union officials across the country to prepare for a strike?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm nor can I deny because I do not know. I suppose that a strike in the post office is not inevitable. It is not needed. What is needed is for the bargaining committee to come forward with their demands. If they are reasonable, there is no reason for a strike.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the widespread support expressed by postal workers for the continuation of negotiations for a new contract through the established procedure of collective bargaining, will the Postmaster General assist in achieving an understanding on these issues with the union leaders by the process of consultation?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to do it by consultation, but I am prepared to do it by negotiation. We have been doing that with the letter carriers since early January. There are only half a dozen issues and money separating—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: The workers of Canada are entitled to a decent living wage. The only academic problem is what is a decent living wage.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF TIME FOR REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue and I may have a supplementary. In view of the delays in the mail and in view of the delays by many employers in preparing T-4 slips—I received my own from the House of Commons on February 26—will the minister consider extending the time limit for registered retirement savings plan contributions for 1974 from February 28 to March 31?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this question was examined by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and it was decided that no extension would be made. Where it is indicated that contributions have been in the mail since on or before February 28, although not postmarked because of what are undoubtedly temporary difficulties, the revenue department will take a fair and equitable attitude in recognizing these contributions as having been made prior to February 28.

Mr. Francis: Is the minister aware of delays in providing T-4 slips, in some cases by the government of Canada itself? This basic information on which taxpayers rely for the purpose of making maximum contributions simply was not in their hands by the deadline.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of a delay in some cases, but it is felt that most taxpayers wanting to make a contribution were able, prior to February 28, to make a decision on what their taxable income would be.

CITIZENSHIP

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF PERSONS WHO RECOMMENDED MR. JOE LANZA FOR APPOINTMENT AS JUDGE OF CITIZENSHIP COURT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can the minister confirm that Mr. Joe Lanza, formerly of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, the individual who was recently so warmly endorsed by the Minister of Labour and later undermined by the Minister of Transport, was touted for a judgeship in the Canadian Citizenship Court in 1969, and can the minister also indicate those persons who actively sought his appointment?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the only relevant question is whether or not he is a judge.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Will the minister indicate why Mr. Lanza has been consistently rebuffed in his several attempts to have his criminal record expunged? He has been turned down by the National Parole Board. Was it solely because of continuing suspicions about his attitude—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN IN NOVA SCOTIA—NEED FOR ELEVATOR FACILITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. With upwards of one quarter million tons of feed grains presently being imported into Nova Scotia each year, most farmers in Nova Scotia are becoming extremely skeptical about expanding their livestock or poultry production without some form of guarantee as to feed availability. In light of the fact that the future of Nova Scotia's agriculture industry hinges on the establishment of a central grain elevator to serve the industry, is the minister giving any thought to establishing a moderately sized elevator with a capacity of some 120,000 bushels in Nova Scotia, with grain drying equipment and grain grading facilities geared to produce products similar to those accepted under western grades?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the possibility of grain production and so on in the maritime provinces is under concentrated study and research. We hope to announce soon what our intentions will be to assist those people in producing forage from grain and so on.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED RCMP INVESTIGATION INTO RACIAL TROUBLE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBILITY OF INTENSIFIED PROGRAM OF DEPORTING ILLEGAL ENTRANTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The general malaise that seems to be growing in our country today seems to call for more and more RCMP investigations. Is the minister aware of an RCMP detachment investigating racial trouble in the lower mainland of British Columbia?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some difficulty relating this to the administrative responsibility of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Friesen: I have a supplementary question. I am sure the minister is aware that Australia, because of a 6 per cent unemployment rate, has intensified its program to deport those who are in that country illegally. I wish to ask the minister whether his department has plans to conduct a like intensification of such a program here.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of deportations taking place. Where we find that illegal immigrants overstay their welcome in Canada, we take the necessary action.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MINISTER'S VIEW ON INDUSTRIAL STRIFE AS ALTERNATIVE TO CONSENSUS—SUCCESS OF MINISTER IN SEEKING CONSENSUS WITH LABOUR

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Monday the minister denied he had said the alternative to a consensus is prolonged and bitter industrial strife even though in his speech of September 13 he stated "We can come together through a process of consensus. Alternatively, we can allow the balance to be determined by the process of prolonged and bitter industrial strife." Will the minister now advise whether it is still his position that the alternative to a consensus is prolonged and bitter industrial strife?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said when I linked those two subjects I did not put them in terms of alternatives, I put them in terms of the general scenario. What I can say to the hon. member is if some sort of consensus is not arrived at, not only will we all be making excessive demands on the economy, but one of the results of that might well be industrial strife. Yes, I said that.

Mr. Fraser: I remind the minister that in his answer he said "I did not put them in terms of alternatives". Clearly, he did. Can the minister advise whether since his speech in September he has sought a consensus on the question of strikes affecting the national interest, and has he had any success in this regard?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the prime thrust of the consensus that I and my colleagues are trying to achieve on the inflationary scene is to see whether we can evolve some way of moderating the demands on the economy. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, has been more specifically involved with the idea of some tripartite arrangement between leaders of the labour movement, business leaders and government to see whether new ways of settling industrial grievances can be arrived at.

● (1500)

Mr. Fraser: I thank the minister for his reply. Can he tell us definitely that in his search for a consensus on ways of meeting inflationary pressures he raised the question of damage to employment, productivity and supply caused by prolonged strikes, especially strikes affecting the national interest—I am referring specifically, of course, to the strike which is stopping all grain movement on the West Coast?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have said so. I want to make it clear that the purpose of the consensus exercise is to try to level out and diminish the inflationary impact of demands on the economy. One of the side effects of continued inflation is, of course, the exacerbation of the labour sector.

An hon. Member: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will spell that word for the hon. member after the question period is over.

An hon. Member: Get your mobile ratchet.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In the course of these discussions, when the opportunity arose, I have drawn the attention of both employers and leaders of labour to the fact that last year we lost more than 9 million man-hours of work by strikes, which gave us the worst record in the industrial world except for Italy.

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO STANDARDS FOR ASBESTOS FIBRES IN AIR—CONDITIONS AT CLINTON CREEK MINE IN YUKON

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to the CBC show, "As It Happens", there are no federal legal standards with regard to the presence of asbestos fibres in the atmosphere. In view of the fact that the largest asbestos mine in Ontario is now closed down because of an excessive number of fibres in the air, and since there is at least one mine—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member and saddle him with responsibility for what has been taking place—it has happened several times today—but I think on behalf of all members who are trying to take part in the question period I should call attention to the fact that there has been a tendency recently to add sentence after sentence, if not paragraph after paragraph, to preambles to questions. The hon. member for New Westminster is doing it now. Members have prefaced their questions with lengthy preambles, a practice which, of course, reduces the number of questions which can be asked. It is not done at the expense of the Chair in any way but at the expense of others who wish to participate in the question period, and I really think this practice is one which ought to be severely limited.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. Leggatt: I appreciate the stricture, Mr. Speaker, and I will try to limit my preamble—it will certainly not be longer than the answer the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce gave a while ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Leggatt: My question is this: will the minister advise us whether there are any enforceable federal standards with regard to the presence of asbestos fibres in the air for the protection of those who now face serious health hazards, including cancer, when working with asbestos in mines and factories?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is now before the House a bill which has been debated but which unfortunately has not been passed. It deals with environment polluters. I hope it will be passed as soon as possible. It would be most useful to the government and would enable it to apply the necessary measures.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: I take it the answer is no. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the Clinton Creek mine in the Yukon is now under sole federal jurisdiction and since we learn that within the minister's own department there is a report stating that the concentration in this mine amounts to 18 asbestos fibres per cubic centimetre, would the minister tell us whether he has investigated the health of the miners who work in this mine? Is there an unpublished report in his department, indicating that a danger of these proportions is threatening the mine workers?

Mr. Lalonde: An investigation was carried out by my department's Bureau of Health Hazards and an environmental engineer for the Department of Indian Affairs. The figure quoted by the hon. member is quite wrong. I heard him refer to 18 fibres. There is no such figure. The figures mentioned in that study were around two to four fibres per millimetre of air and outside the plant the concentration was between 0.0 and 0.04 fibres per millimetre of air. We expect a detailed report of the results of that survey within two weeks, and I hope I shall then be able to provide the hon. member with more information. We plan to recommend certain measures to improve the situation inside the plant.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CONTROL HAZARDS FROM ASBESTOS FIBRES AT THETFORD MINES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I also have a supplementary for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since a very recent study shows that 61 per cent of the Thetford Mines workers in Quebec having more than 20 years' experience suffer from pulmonary and other diseases, did the minister get in touch with these people, in view of the bill which should be adopted soon, and does he in any event consider meeting a need which seems urgent in this area?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As the hon. member said, a bill is now before the House. However, the hon. member knows for sure that these matters, within the provinces, come under work security measures which are controlled and administered by provincial authorities themselves who have complete jurisdiction in this area.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION FOR HOLDERS OF THREE PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question with regard to the problem posed by the 3 per cent perpetual bonds and the need to find some equitable solution. Is the minister considering some form of compensation dating back to 1964 when the coupons were all used up?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty being that a large percentage of those bonds are in bearer form. As I have told a number of hon. members who have met me singly and collectively on this subject, it is difficult to achieve a just solution as between those who have already sold and those who retained the bonds. It is a difficult problem to resolve, particularly since it involves other government obligations at interest rates which might not reflect current market rates; the question of reconciling those rates with present rates would also be raised.

As I say, it is a difficult problem to solve, although I have had the co-operation of a good many members on both sides of the House in attempting to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

RATES CHARGED BY SENIOR CITIZENS RESIDENCES—NEED FOR INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the new rates charged for some senior citizens residences exceed the combined total of the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement, what action does the government plan to take to meet the needs of this large group?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question of residences for senior citizens who receive a guaranteed income supplement is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. However, the federal government provides the provinces with large amounts of money, through my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, to enable them to meet those needs. The provinces themselves establish the rents for every institution, and I am afraid the question should be referred to the provinces concerned.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—NEED FOR ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is brief and to the point. Did the minister meet today with two important delegations from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island concerning potato prices. If so, what conclusions were reached?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had a lengthy meeting with the Minister of Agriculture from New Brunswick and the minister from Prince Edward Island, along with delegations from both provinces.

An hon. Member: On potatoes?

Mr. Whelan: No decision was reached. We discussed many ways of assisting potato growers in that area. I am sure that if hon. members want to participate this afternoon in the debate on the stabilization legislation, which will be before the House, they can make some good contributions.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to say that the federal government will contribute to an emergency scheme to relieve the financial situation of potato growers this year, provided the two provincial governments concerned come up with a feasible program?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we did discuss this and, to refer to past history, it has been suggested seven or eight times since 1957 by former ministers of agriculture that "if you help them this time they will organize a better marketing system for themselves". However, growers in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick cannot establish a marketing system for themselves without allowing growers from Quebec and Ontario to join with them, because their markets, too, will be affected in that area and they will all need to work closely together. We discussed that. It is the opinion of the Canadian Horticultural Council that these growers must work more closely together in order to provide more security in that market. We will be working on a longer term basis to that end.

BEEF AND VEAL—DATE OF REPORT OF INQUIRY INTO MARKETING

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the difference between prices paid by consumers on the one hand and prices paid to producers on the other hand for beef and veal is constantly increasing and since on January 7, 1975 the Prime Minister announced the creation of a board to investigate the methods of marketing beef and veal, can the minister tell the House whether that board has already done some work, whether he is kept informed of the preliminary findings of the board and whether he intends to make recommendations to the House to correct the situation before the Easter adjournment?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked many questions and made some suggestions. The terms of reference for the beef inquiry were made public, published, gazetted and so on. I announced in the House some time ago that we were reviewing support programs for beef and veal and we are considering extending them. I cannot tell him anymore at present.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question.

I think my question was clear but the minister's answer was not. I was not referring to the Prices Stabilization Board, but to a board which was formed on January 7 by the Prime Minister to examine the difference between prices in the marketing of beef and veal. May I ask the minister whether the date when this board will report to the House has been determined?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have asked them to report to us as they proceed with their investigation and findings. We know that a complete report on beef and veal marketing in Canada will take some time to make. It will not be done in an easy two weeks or one month. If they complete the hearings and make a full and detailed report on beef marketing in Canada available within one year, we will be satisfied.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING RESIGNATION OF MR. YVES MENARD

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister looked into the circumstances surrounding the rather hasty departure of Mr. Yves Menard of Air Canada, in light of that gentleman's rather questionable arrangements with EconAir, a subsidiary of Air Canada which runs a resort operation in Barbados.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all I know is what I read in the newspapers this morning, namely, that the president of Air Canada is making an inquiry into this affair. I think we should await the results of that inquiry.

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As EconAir, the Air Canada subsidiary for which Mr. Yves Menard was responsible, lost about $1 million on its operations last year, and in view of Mr. Menard's questionable involvement in this affair—this is how it appears on the surface—does the minister not think it is incumbent on him to look into this particular matter and report to the House?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Sure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on which I hope Your Honour will rule. It concerns an important ministerial statement which was made today outside the House a few minutes before the House commenced to sit at two o'clock. The point concerns an important statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) who announced a new government shipbuilding program. I might say there is nothing wrong with that. However, there are two things I wish to draw to Your Honour's attention. Because our Standing Orders limit the duration of the question period it was not possible for me to raise this matter during the question period. Second, I submit that the minister acted contemptuously in ignoring the long-standing traditions of the House when he made a statement outside this House on a day when the House was sitting.

The statement was important because it announced a new government program, a new government initiative. What is important, however, is that the manner in which it was made denied members of the official opposition and of other opposition parties in the House the opportunity to respond in the House to this new government initiative. If I had succeeded in catching Your Honour's eye and getting the floor, I would have asked questions about this new multimillion dollar shipbuilding program which is to assist the shipbuilding industry in Canada. The program contains provision for the payment of $265 million to a company now under investigation by the RCMP for defrauding the Government of Canada. I am talking Marine Industries Limited of Quebec. I would have asked a question about that matter. However, we were not given the opportunity to raise that question or to respond in the House to the minister's statement. I believe, in view of the circumstances in which the statement was made, that the minister showed contempt for this House. He showed it by making a statement outside the House while the House was in session, thereby denying, as I have said, the opportunity for opposition parties in this House to respond. The matter was not touched on during the question period, apart from the oblique reference to the statement which the minister made in response to a question asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). There was no opportunity to refer to this matter; a question dealing with it was not raised and therefore there was no chance to ask a supplementary question.

I believe ministers are obligated to adhere to the traditions of this House. One of those traditions is that statements shall not be made outside this House while the House is in session. I therefore believe that the minister was in contempt of the House, and I hope Your Honour will take note of that.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the point of order, may I reassure the hon. member that there is ample precedent for the issuing of a communiqué of this kind. If he so wishes, I would be pleased to table that communiqué at this time. I want to assure him that the communiqué was issued to all members at the same time and favouritism was not played in any way. If he is concerned that this new program was announced outside the House when the House had to give its approval, let me reassure him that this particular program did not require parliamentary approval.

I would also draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that this matter was raised during the question period. Indeed, I referred to it, as did the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), although obliquely. If there had been any interest on the part of the opposition to pursue this matter through supplementary questions, they had the opportunity. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that the main and the supplementary estimates will be before the miscellaneous estimates committee and there will be plenty of opportunity for opposition members to put questions to me on that occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In respect of the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), there was an aspect of the response by the minister that perhaps touches on the responsibility of the Chair: if it does not relate to the responsibility of the Chair, perhaps it does relate to the invidious choice the Chair has to make each day in deciding which questioners will be recognized and which will not. It is clear there were several hon. members who today wanted to pursue the matter through supplementary questions but did not have the opportunity of being recognized. I think the record should reflect that, as I think there are members to my left who were prepared to do that, one being the hon. member for St. John's East, another being the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), and I think there were others. However, the shortness of time available makes it impossible to recognize all members who want to ask questions on any given day.

Getting back to the point of order, the hon. member has raised the point and has put on the record his grievance in this regard, to which the hon. minister has responded. I do not think we ought to carry on with that. It is well known that whether or not that constitutes a reflection of the attitude of the minister toward the House, the fact of the matter is that it does not constitute a point of order or a question of privilege.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had some discussion with the chairman of the committee on agriculture about a meeting which was scheduled for this afternoon. I believe there was agreement that the meeting would be cancelled because of the agricultural legislation in the House this afternoon. I wonder if that could be confirmed or denied at this time.

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that it has been agreed that the meeting be cancelled for this afternoon, but the meeting for tomorrow is scheduled as usual.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have heard an awful lot about food production and guaranteeing producers of food some kind of security, particularly when we ask them to go all-out on production. Whether or not we have a constant supply of domestically produced food in Canada in the coming years is not totally in the hands of the farmers whom we have asked to go all-out on production. Even though our farmers are the top food producers in the world, it takes more than that to be sure we have this kind of production. Farmers also need legislation that will give them the guarantees they need in order to continue producing. Their basic need is a floor price that will protect them against low prices that will ruin them overnight. If we ask them to produce without giving them any kind of security, they will go down the drain.

I was asked earlier in the House whether I had met with the ministers of agriculture for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick concerning a problem those provinces face today. This problem, which has existed for some weeks, concerns the disastrous prices they are receiving for potatoes in those areas and in other areas of Canada. The price of potatoes has gone down drastically. There is no denying the fact that the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island depend to a great extent on returns from potato crops to support their economies. With present prices, these provinces will receive for their potato crops this year less than half of what they received last year; and the situation may become even worse. In any event, the prices received at the present time are disastrous.

Some people think that low prices are beneficial and that producers should go all-out on production, giving away the product in order to offset inflation. All one has to do is check what has happened in the past to find out that this is not so. What happens is that you have a tremendous glut or overproduction, with tremendously depressed prices. This is followed by a shortage of production and an increase in price. So there really is no benefit to the producer and no benefit to the consumer.

We have stabilization legislation on the books at the present time and it did the job in its day. However, today this legislation falls short of being the sort of over-all legislation the farmers need. It is outdated. A guaranteed floor price is required to keep the farmers producing enough of certain commodities to fill the demand, and if we want a strong farm economy in the future we must give the farmers the kind of legislation they need. Statistics Canada has indicated that net farm income is expected to nose-dive by 12 per cent in 1975. I would like to know what other parts of society are being asked to accept such a nose-dive in 1975. Many segments of our society are refusing reasonable offers such as a 25 per cent increase.

Farm input costs have gone up by more than 25 points over the increase in consumer costs during the same period. Statistics indicate that many of those who are producing these important commodities in Canada have not received an increase in income comparable to increases received by people in other parts of society and in other segments of agriculture. I have in mind at the present time the potato growers to whom I have referred. Having regard to the potato growers, let me read a telex which I received from the Quebec minister of agriculture. He said:

> Further to my telex regarding low prices obtained by Quebec potato producers and disastrous situation which may follow with regard to spring sowing, I would like to know immediately if you are planning a special program within the framework of a stabilization bill or other to assure stability of income for our potato producers thus permitting them to be more optimistic about their future.

I might add that the Canadian Horticultural Council is also concerned about this situation. This situation, coupled with other uncertainties that face our farmers, is prompting many farmers to pick up the phone and cancel fertilizer orders, or to call a real estate agent to see if they can get out while the getting is good. Faced with these uncertainties, we cannot have all-out food production. It is legislation of this kind which will prompt farmers to decide not to sell-out but to keep on producing.

Legislation already on the books gives farmers a deficiency payment if the market price in any one year is less than 80 per cent of the average price of the ten preceding years. Nine commodities were automatically covered, but the number of commodities covered by the new bill is somewhat greater. This bill calls for a series of important changes. The first and most important is that farmers will be guaranteed an average of 90 per cent of the average market value, up from 80 per cent. The base period would be the last five years instead of the last ten.

● (1530)

One of the real weaknesses in the old act was that rapid increases in farm input costs could put the guaranteed support levels so far below the cost of production that the legislation would become a farce. This is exactly what did happen in the last two years. We want stabilization legislation to do its job; that is why this bill calls for indexing the support levels to reflect production costs. In this way our legislation will be able to cope with any quick swings in the marketplace. Some people say that is not good planning. I would ask them how they expect, in a world trading pattern, and so on, to do things in any other fashion.

[Mr. Whelan.]

The amendments go even further. They allow for stabilization programs to be set up for products which are produced and sold in a specific region. This will make the legislation much more valuable for commodities such as potatoes and tobacco. We have already spoken about potatoes. When we talk about potatoes, we think of the area of Canada which produces potatoes, commonly known as eastern Canada, with the hope that we can regionalize it. I do not think in this case it would be satisfactory to have a region such as Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick alone. Quebec and Ontario, I believe, should be part of that region. Those provinces produce potatoes, although they do not produce sufficient for their own consumption and import from the maritime provinces.

Anything that can be done to improve the price of potatoes in the maritimes would necessarily be affected by what the market for that commodity is in Quebec or in Ontario. They are all Canadian producers, producing the same commodity for the market. Their costs are similar regardless which province is concerned. Under the new legislation, a region could be that part of eastern Canada which produces potatoes that are consumed mostly in that area. Of the total amount of potatoes we produce, we export only about 6 per cent and many of these are used for seed. The amendments also provide for top-loading. By this I mean that provincial governments and/or producers can increase the stabilization base higher than 90 per cent if they want to pay the extra cost. This gives needed flexibility to the act.

The general stabilization programs undertaken by the federal government for products sold in a national market will be uniform across the country. However, by agreement with provinces and/or producers the prices may be established, as I said, higher than the 90 per cent figure if the additional funds are provided by the provinces and/or producers whether by government grants or by producer levy. None of these programs can work without proper supply management. If we give the producers the kind of program that will give them an efficient operation, they will produce things until they come out of their ears. You cannot have pork or broiler chickens or eggs or anything else coming out of your ears, unless you have to plan a market and a market for all those products. You cannot afford to give them away or, better, ask the producers to give them away. We do not do that in respect of any other commodity, whether it be food or otherwise, in this nation, to my knowledge. At least the person who produces the product is not asked to give it away.

We may be able to use some of these products in food aid programs, but we must make sure we know we have the processing facilities for them. In essence I am saying that we must know where the market is domestically, we must know where it is in the world, and we must know what the requirements are for food aid programs no matter what they be and in what part of the world. Then we produce for that. You do not produce merely in the hope that someone will give you a decent price for your commodity, because in that case you would end up as in deep trouble, as has happened with many of our producers. Some will say that we will destroy the open and free market. I would say there is an open and free market in some of these commodities for some people, but not in general for all the primary producers, the most important part of our society. They produce the mainstay of life, food.

The bill also does some house cleaning. Wheat produced outside the Canadian Wheat Board will no longer be automatically covered under the act because it is already covered under Bill C-19. The Canadian Dairy Commission sets support prices for butter and cheese, so they will no longer receive mandatory coverage. Neither will eggs which come under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. When this bill is passed, the list of mandatory commodities will be industrial milk and cream, corn, soybeans, oats and barley produced outside the Canadian Wheat Board area, cattle, hogs and sheep. There is also provision for any other farm commodity to be included under the act by the governor in council.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the commodities covered under this act, no commodities really are excluded from protection. Under a clause dealing with designated commodities the legislation allows the governor in council to select a new product for stabilization if conditions warrant. There is also a provision in the bill which some of my colleagues in cabinet suggest gives the Minister of Agriculture a blank cheque to support the food producers of the nation. Never before has agriculture and its representative in the cabinet, the Minister of Agriculture, been given that authority. But I want to remind members of the House that before the Minister of Agriculture is granted that authority, there is an inter-departmental committee made up of five departments which studies all things pertaining to agriculture before a decision is made. There also are five cabinet ministers who decide on anything we do. That has been the situation for some time in cabinet. They consider the matter before any major decision is made which affects not only the agricultural producers but also the consumers in this country. Anyone who says that is not so is not stating the fact.

I think this is good, because agriculture is the largest and most important industry in the whole of Canada. One out of every three jobs in Canada depends on a healthy agricultural community. It is most important that the federal government is now probably giving more leadership than in the past, which is so important for the producers of many of these commodities which are produced not only in one province, which are consumed not only in one province, but which are consumed in the large metropolitan areas where our largest concentration of population is located in Canada, and are exported to world markets.

It is most important that we have a national program for these commodities. Some of the provinces have gone ahead on their own with insurance programs. I can tell members of this House that hardly any province which has gone ahead with some kind of program on its own has not asked me when we will get the federal legislation going so that we can work together on the programs already started. We have had lengthy discussions with the farm organizations and provincial authorities in Canada concerned with this legislation. There has been lengthy discussion interdepartmentally concerning the legislation. We have received requests lately from certain groups who wish to appear before the agricultural committee to discuss this legislation, to seek information and to have input. Some of them already are suggesting certain amendments to this bill.

It is a far reaching bill. It is not a lengthy bill, but it is one of the most advanced that any country in the world is providing for its agricultural producers at this time. As I said before, the U.S.A., our big competitor to the south, is asking its producers to go all-out to produce everything they can for society. At the same time they are not offering one bit of security. At the present time in the United States, in some of the most productive areas of that country the farm organizations are taking up a petition not to ask their farmers to increase production but to decrease production by ten per cent. This has not happened in Canada and we do not want it to happen. We want to build confidence in the producers of agricultural products in Canada not only for the good of the producers but also for the good of our society, so that constant production of those commodities will be achieved; this is not only for the betterment of the agricultural community, and not only to guarantee that young people stay in agriculture, but also for the betterment of Canada as a whole.

● (1540)

So long as we have properly planned programs such as this stabilization program, it will cost the government hardly anything, if anything at all, in the long run. It will not cost the producers anything, and it will be a good form of insurance for the whole nation and for all the countries in the world which depend on Canada to supply them with a certain amount of food.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? It will save the House listening to a speech by me later. The minister has had notice of the question and I understand that he will accept it.

I ask the minister if he and the government have given any consideration to including honey as a product which will be covered by this legislation. I ask this question on behalf of the honey producers, particularly those in the Peace River country, who have by blood, sweat and tears made a viable industry, producing a product which hon. members have some reason to know is of high quality through distributions which were made.

Mr. Whelan: We have received representations from the honey producers. As I said earlier in my short presentation to the House, no commodity is excluded from protection; but it is difficult to include a perishable product as a named commodity without a special kind of program being created. However, if the honey producers want to present a program to us showing their marketing abilities, etc., I am sure it will receive careful consideration, and the product could be placed under the authority of this bill, by order in council.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to debate Bill C-50 may I first point out that, naturally, I was very interested in the minister's remarks and in particular pleased to hear him say that interested groups would be welcome to appear before the committee when this bill is studied there. Right across this country today a great debate is taking place in the farm communities, and perhaps even in some of the larger cities, regarding farm income security, which principle is conceived in wide terms and generally accepted. The challenge to parliament is how to bring it about so that, as the minister said, it will not cost the government too much, it will provide farmers with security and ensure that consumers can obtain food at a reasonable cost, a concern which has been frequently voiced by consumers in the past year or so.

Therefore, I am pleased to know that this bill will be debated at length, because if a debate is going on in the country the same subject should be debated here where the people's representatives have a chance to amend this legislation or to bring in new legislation to meet the concerns of the people. The minister said that this is a great bill, with wide ramifications. I do not consider this bill to be all that great, nor does it attempt to solve many of the problems faced by the agricultural industry in Canada today. Bill C-50 amends the Agricultural Stabilization Act which came into effect some 17 years ago, back in 1957. At that time it specified the nine major commodities which would be covered by the act.

With the relatively slow rate of inflation at that time, it was felt that a ten-year period for establishing the base price of a commodity was practicable. A mandatory support level of 80 per cent was established for those commodities in 1957. It makes sense that if you cannot control inflation, legislation must be adjusted. That is what this bill proposes to do. When the minister says that the bill is a major improvement because it reduces the base period from ten years to five years, let me point out to him that it is not a major improvement but an absolute necessity. If the country's economy continues to inflate at 16 per cent or 17 per cent a year, I am not sure that the five-year period proposed in the bill is short enough.

If we could be assured of some kind of stability in the economy, I would say that five years is ample, but in view of the inflationary spiral this period should be shortened. The minister himself said that the ten-year period laid down in the act was too long and that in the last two years the program has not worked. This was apparent in the last two years. Therefore, I think the minister should reconsider the five-year period and perhaps shorten it to two years on the basis of his own figures.

I should like to make a few comments about the percentage of support which should be mandatory. As I said previously, in 1957 the act provided for mandatory support of 80 per cent. It is a well known fact today that it takes a large amount of money to produce anything in an industry as labour-intensive industry as agriculture. To cut down on the amount of labour, machinery must be purchased. It is extremely difficult to get men and women to work on farms today as they did 30 or 40 years ago, and therefore farmers are forced to use machinery to replace manpower. It is obvious that with the greater use of machinery, production and efficiency are increased.

There is a question which I should like to put to the minister. I listened closely to him when he said that 90 per cent support by the federal government was mandatory. Am I to understand that provincial support and the support of producer organizations would be on top of that? Am I to understand that the federal government will not go higher than 90 per cent?

Mr. Whelan: No, that is not so.

[Mr. Horner.]

Mr. Horner: I am glad to hear the minister say that assumption is wrong, otherwise I would have castigated him severely because I believe that from time to time there are commodities which because of economic and regional pressures should receive more than 90 per cent support. I would like to think that the federal government is not limited to 90 per cent. Certainly 90 per cent is the floor; however, it is only that for the mandatory commodities. What Bill C-50 is doing is reducing the mandatory commodities. It is taking wheat, butter, cheese and eggs out of the act. We started out with nine commodities and now we are left with five. So, really, when the minister says to the agricultural communities in this country that this is a revolutionary and far reaching bill, he must realize that it also narrows down the responsibility of the federal government to the agricultural industry.

● (1550)

We started with nine mandatory commodities and we are ending with five—four less than we had. It is all well and good for the minister to say that the commodities which are being taken out are covered in some other way, but we are actually dealing with six commodities out of the nine, not four as I mentioned, because wheat, oats and barley will be covered by Bill C-19. Does that legislation give the same 90 per cent coverage? When saying that cheese and butter are covered by the Dairy Commission, we must ask ourselves if there is any guarantee that they will cover cheese and butter. Is there any written guarantee in the Dairy Commission legislation? Some of us would like to think there is. There may be a moral obligation, but that is about all; there are no guarantees.

Consider the famous egg question. Eggs will no longer be covered by this stabilization bill. Let us consider what the minister said, quite rightly, that eggs are protected under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. What kind of guarantee is there in this agency with respect to eggs? Is there as good a guarantee as in the Agricultural Stabilization Board? Here, again, I have to say no, there is not. What assistance has the Farm Products Marketing Agency received from the government? It received $100,000 to become incorporated and to start buying eggs, and that is all. What does it cost the provinces? I do not know what it costs Ontario and Quebec, the large producers in the egg business, but I know what it costs the province of Alberta. The provincial egg marketing agency in the province of Alberta started the year with a surplus of $160,000. After it had paid its dues to CEMA it was in the red by $447,000. That totals a little better than $600,000. If the Farm Products Marketing Agency had the same support as the Stabilization Board, the federal government would be picking up part of that cost.

The $600,000 which applies to Alberta was for 8 per cent of the total market. One has to ask how widely supported they were. What support did the Agricultural Stabilization Board give to the egg agency, the minister's great dream? The minister is now changing it from 80 per cent to 90 per cent. He could have increased it to 102 per cent, 120 per cent or 130 per cent in the past year if he had wanted to help the egg agencies and CEMA to operate. He did not. The floor price on eggs, in 1974, under the Agricultural Stabilization Board was 30½ cents, and that was the bare mandatory limit of 80 per cent. The ten-year average was 38.2 cents a dozen.

The minister did not use the authority he had under the act and increase the percentage to help the egg agencies and the egg producers across Canada. He was not interested. He thought the Farm Products Marketing Agency could handle it. That agency put the bite on the egg producers. Alberta egg producers would have to charge 6½ cents per dozen on eggs alone to pay the debt to CEMA for one year's operation. That 6½ cents per dozen is about 10 per cent of the price the producer receives for his grade A eggs. That takes most of the profit out of egg production. What percentage of eggs are breakers, and what does 6½ cents do to the price of breakers? It means something like 20 per cent.

If the minister thinks he can hoodwink anyone by suggesting that this bill has wide-ranging ramifications and that it will be the answer to agricultural problems, he is mistaken, because he could have helped the egg producers of Canada without this bill. Why didn't he; that is the question that should be asked by the egg producers across Canada if they come before the committee. They should be asking why the government was not interested in helping them in setting up the Farm Products Marketing Agency to handle poultry and eggs. The minister thinks he can divorce himself from responsibility for those commodities. In his speech this afternoon he said something about supply management being the answer. Supply management has been tried, without government help, and it did not work very well. The government, with the present minister, I suppose can enjoy some degree of popularity among farm communities, but when the truth is known about their callous disregard for our farm communities, as they demonstrated to the egg producers, they may not be quite so popular.

What is the aim of Canada in respect of agriculture? I think it is the aim of many countries to be as self-sufficient in food as possible. We discovered that in the sugar industry. We found world sugar prices rising. We had no cushion or guarantee whatsoever because we only produce about 9 per cent or 11 per cent of our sugar requirements, mainly through sugar beet in Manitoba and Alberta. I think every country attempts to become self-sufficient in agricultural production. It is one of the first things a developing country attempts to do. We must also look at the world in which we are producing food. We must ask ourselves whether we have an obligation to produce more than we need for our own requirements. If we have the ability to produce, should we encourage that production so we can get into other markets and help the many starving and less fortunate people throughout the world? I think that a country as rich in resources as Canada should proudly indicate that it is prepared to help. We should use our resources to help the world meet its food requirements.

Let us consider the present and the expected world population. I think by the year 2000 the world population will have more than doubled. However, the area required to produce food will not have increased and in fact may well have decreased with the urbanization of some areas in the United States and Canada using up valuable agricultural land. Canada should aim to be as self-sufficient as possible and make an attempt to get its products into world markets. If that responsibility is accepted, a very long and careful look at this question of supply management must be taken.

I can understand the concern of many people over the cost of agricultural products today. Huge amounts of money are needed to capitalize, to increase production and to create greater efficiency of production. I can understand the desire for income security on farms because of the amount of money borrowed, the amount of money spent and the high interest paid on debts. But I say that if we accept the obligation we must take a long look at the concept of supply management. When I consider the Agricultural Stabilization Board, some of the mandatory commodities, how well we have done and how much money we have poured into certain aspects of agriculture, I wonder whether that money has really promoted more production or whether it has had a tendency to decrease production.

● (1600)

One of the industries most often referred to is the dairy industry. I have the figures here to show how much money was spent to maintain it. I am not going to put them on the record, Mr. Speaker, because as a member of this House for 17 years I am ashamed of them. The money spent has not maintained the industry. A few years ago the province of Alberta was losing four dairy farmers every day, and I think that figure was pretty well representative of the whole of Canada. As legislators, we must ask ourselves why we are still losing the industry in spite of all the money that was spent on it. I do not think I have eaten Canadian butter in my own home in the past two years, Mr. Speaker; it has all been New Zealand butter.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: Yes, I think it is a shame.

An hon. Member: You could buy Canadian butter.

Mr. Horner: I suppose I could if I went to the hon. member's province, but the stores around my home do not sell Canadian butter.

Mr. Whelan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has risen for the purpose of asking a question. This can only be done with the consent of the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Certainly.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member is aware that on the average, industrial milk producers in Canada get $2.80 per 100 pounds more than producers in the United States at the present time. Also, that there is an increase in milk production now.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I am not arguing about how much farmers are paid. I said I had the figures here. But we as legislators must question the manner in which the money is spent, if we are still losing the industry. What is wrong? That is what I want to know, and I hope in the debate on this bill that question will be dealt with. Why have we spent so much money and yet continue to lose dairy farmers all across the country?

The minister admitted that our neighbour to the south is our main competitor in the agricultural market. They are going all-out to produce as much as they can. Just a few years ago the United States had a program which paid their farmers not to produce. They also had a land retirement program through which some 60 million acres were retired, but it is now back in extensive agricultural production. They are being encouraged to put the land back into production because that country has a balance of payments problem with regard to energy. They want to sell agricultural goods throughout the world to offset their high expenditures in energy. We must recognize that they are a keen competitor.

It is all very well for this bill to give mandatory support and have the object of farm income security, but this should not be at the expense of efficiency on the farm. I am a farmer and I know how farmers hate the word "efficiency", but I am speaking generally of the agricultural industry. I am very concerned when I hear of Australian cattle selling for eight cents, nine cents or ten cents per pound. I wish I could do something about their costs, but I cannot. We should be able to do something about costs in this country, however, to ensure that we remain competitive throughout the world.

We should be as self-sufficient in agriculture as possible, but we cannot isolate ourselves from the trading communities of the world. From time to time we may put a temporary embargo on commodities coming into Canada in order to provide some protection to the industry. For instance, strawberries should only be allowed into British Columbia after their crop is in. We should not allow dumping of agricultural commodities in this country. But we should recognize legitimate competition. If the object of this bill is to isolate our community from the rest of the world, that is a step in the wrong direction.

It is up to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to help the industry remain as competitive and as efficient as possible. When the Agricultural Stabilization Act was passed, its purpose was to shore up the industry from time to time. The nine commodities it covered were considered to be those that affected our agricultural economy; butter, cheese, eggs, wheat, hogs, sheep and cattle all had an economic effect on our various regions and, indeed, on the whole of Canada. This bill narrows the responsibility.

The minister spoke of Canada's aim. This is something which concerns me also, Mr. Speaker. Having chosen agriculture as my vocation, I am very proud of that way of life. As more and more capital is required, agriculture becomes pretty big business; and when that happens perhaps some of the zest for that way of life is lost. I think the minister's remarks on this bill should be examined. It is not good enough for him to be suddenly concerned about the potato industry.

Mr. Whelan: I used that as an example.

Mr. Horner: The minister's remarks about the price of potatoes in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are too little and too late. Potatoes have been around for a long time, and in the past they have been supported by the Agricultural Stabilization Board. If the minister had been as concerned as he would have people believe, he could have given the industry support without coming to parliament. He did not have to wait. He must have known the situation because surely the figures were available. It does not take a genius to realize that if it costs $600 an acre to grow potatoes in New Brunswick and the farmer receives only $200, he cannot survive. If the government had been really concerned about the potato industry it did not need to wait for Bill C-50 to offer some help. The same thing is happening with potatoes as happened with eggs. The minister tried to put that matter in the hands of another board. Another board is not the answer. The aims of Canada and the Minister of Agriculture have to be guided. Let us consider the cattle industry. I did not particularly want to speak about that industry because I am involved in it and some people claim one becomes self-motivated when looking at one's own industry. The minister blundered about in that industry for a whole year with on again, off again subsidies.

● (1610)

A couple of weeks ago I asked the minister in the House for some assurance with regard to the 42 cents a hundred on beef. I asked whether that assurance was being given to the beef industry. The minister replied yes, it was. I then made the modest request that it be averaged twice a year. The minister's answer is recorded in Hansard: he said "impossible". I was so dumbfounded that I did not ask a supplementary question. I thought there must be something wrong and I would ask the question the next day. In committee, I put that suggestion to the livestock people of the minister's department. They said, "No, it is not impossible. We are averaging it every month right now." Certainly it could be done every six months. It is a question of not doing it too often and not having to make the payments too often. It is a value judgment. Being civil servants, I knew it was not their judgment as to how often would be too often, but surely the minister cannot say that every six months is too often. Some provincial ministers of agriculture would like this to be done quarterly. I have nothing against doing it quarterly. I am perhaps more generous and understanding of the minister's problems. Every six months would satisfy me and I am certain it would satisfy the agricultural industry.

Mr. Whelan: I told you we are reviewing it.

Mr. Horner: The minister says he is reviewing it. That is what he told the potato producers of Prince Edward Island. That is what he told the egg producers after it had cost them $75 million.

Mr. Whelan: They have never had better prices for their eggs.

Mr. Horner: Last year it cost the egg producers $75 million. Only $100,000 came out of the pocket of the federal government. It is not good enough to come along after the fact. The minister should be on his toes. The Stabilization Board gives him plenty of authority and plenty of time. Last fall I spoke about the problems in the cattle industry. I said in this House that the minister should pay $50 a head with respect to every cow that goes to slaughter. Possibly the minister could have obtained some assistance on that from the provincial governments. It would have been a step in the right direction. It would have removed a certain number of cows from the market. We would then have been able to look at 1975 in a more confident way. It was all well and good for the minister to come along last September with a two-bit program on cow slaughter. It was really a 2 per cent program; 2 per cent of the cow herd over three months.

Mr. Whelan: It is $8 a hundred more than they are getting in the United States.

Mr. Horner: The minister should check his figures. Yesterday his officials told me it was $6.70.

Mr. Whelan: I am going on the average for that length of time.

Mr. Horner: In any event, it was a 2 per cent program that was introduced in December. It will only last until April 1. It should have been brought out in September. It is no good having a minister of agriculture who looks and talks like a farmer but does not have the ability to stay ahead of the agricultural industry. It is easy to criticize the minister's program and say it is too little and too late. Provincial ministers of agriculture came to Ottawa in the past year asking the federal Minister of Agriculture to show some leadership because this is a national problem.

The minister made a rather interesting speech this afternoon. He said that under Bill C-50 the program can be regionalized. I think that is good, because that has been part of the problem in the past. For example, the embargo on potatoes in the maritimes hurt the maritimes, Alberta and other parts of the country. I listened to the minister closely when he said we can regionalize. However, he said the maritimes must realize that the region will include Quebec and Ontario. I am sure the maritime members would welcome the chance to govern Quebec and Ontario, but that is hardly regionalizing.

Mr. Whelan: It is.

Mr. Horner: The minister says it is. Well, he can go to the maritimes and tell them it is regionalizing. He can go to the farmers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and tell them how this regionalizing will give them income security. Quebec producers of potatoes can outproduce those in New Brunswick. There is no regionalizing.

Mr. Whelan: They have to be together.

Mr. Horner: The minister says they have to be together. That is an amazing statement. Anybody looking at a map of Canada can see that is not possible.

Mr. Whelan: Co-operation can solve anything.

Mr. Horner: It may solve everything, but don't go around saying that under Bill C-50 the program can be regionalized.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who has the floor?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I appreciate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) trying to defend me. I am going to end my remarks because I realize my time has nearly expired. As we look ahead there will be many challenges to face. The energy crisis caused some problems in agricultural production. Japan and Germany have ceased to take any more agricultural products than they absolutely need to feed their nations. However, we must also realize that the energy crisis that is causing problems for the industrial world is bringing money to underdeveloped countries. They will be able to buy agricultural commodities and we will be able to sell to them.

The minister said it is very difficult for the government to buy products under some kind of support program because you cannot then give them away. He said you cannot do this, and you cannot do that. I say there is no difficulty whatsoever. The government can buy all the goods it wants. There is no problem in canning meat; it has been done before. There is no problem in buying potatoes from Prince Edward Island or Alberta; it has been done before.

Mr. Whelan: What are you going to do with them?

Mr. Horner: I just said the underdeveloped countries will have money. They will demand food. They will want a higher standard of living. The government has bought these products before. It has bought potatoes and it has bought pork. I quote from the 1973-74 annual report of the Agricultural Stabilization Board:

Quantities of board potatoes were processed into starch—

Why can the minister not do this now? Why did he not do it last December when prices were falling? I say to the minister that the underdeveloped countries will have money. Take Nigeria, for example. That little country which is almost in the centre of Africa produces as much, if not a little more, oil than Canada. It has no means of using that amount of oil. It is for sale. Nigeria is going to be wealthy, and it will be wanting food. We can produce and we can also turn off production. Farmers want to produce. That is why they go into agriculture. They want to see things grow. They want to run their hands through the soil to see what it will produce.

● (1620)

It is the same with livestock men; they want to see animals grow; they want to produce more animals. Don't turn the farmers off by saying, "I don't know what to do with these potatoes. I don't know what to do with these cows." The government must show some imagination. Between 1972 and 1974 the minister enjoyed a great deal of support in cabinet. Since then the hon. gentleman's popularity has declined. They do not need him now, so they are cutting down the amount in his pocketbook. He can no longer envisage great programs. He asks, "What shall we do with these potatoes?" He brings a bill before parliament and describes it as the most revolutionary legislation in the free world. Mr. Speaker, legislation will not solve the problems of the agriculture industry. Heart and desire will. The minister appears to be burdened with a great load; on some days he looks tired. Let us gear him up. We are prepared to push ideas at him and help him with his job.

Mr. Whelan: Give us some ideas, then. I have not heard any from the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: What he now proposes is too little and too late. Let him get on with the job and show leadership in the field of agriculture. Do not turn off production but, rather, turn on production because the underdeveloped countries are waiting for this food.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when the minister opened this debate I expected to learn about some new direction the government intended to take in order to improve the position of those engaged in agriculture. However, as the previous speaker has said, this bill is completely unnecessary; it does nothing that the old bill could not do, and it contains no new ideas. It sounds very much as though the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) had drafted it. It is merely a reworking of a bunch of words. The minister and the department will have to produce new solutions to agricultural problems.

When the first bill was introduced, prices of agricultural products were relatively stable; declining levels were relatively easy to calculate and predict. That is not the situation today. The government, by one means or another, has been able effectively to eliminate all surpluses in all agricultural commodities. This afternoon the minister talked about potatoes. There is no surplus in potatoes. What has happened is that in most parts of Canada potatoes are so expensive that people are not using the quantities they used in the past. It seems to me that when potatoes are selling to the public for 79 cents for five pounds, and when the farmers in the maritimes find there is no relationship between the price they are getting and the price paid by the consumer, there is something very wrong with the whole process and that the minister should be looking at it.

Mr. Whelan: What do you think we are doing?

Mr. Peters: Well, if you are looking at it, it is not being reflected in legislation.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member knows as well as I do that there is legislation on the books.

Mr. Peters: I wish the minister had made his speech when he had the opportunity.

Mr. Whelan: You were not listening.

Mr. Peters: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not made a speech for a long time, and the agricultural economy has changed drastically since I last heard him. I expected him to say something about these problems. If the minister wanted to pay a subsidy to farmers in the maritimes who are producing potatoes, all he had to do was pay it; the legislation providing for subsidies is wide open.

Mr. Whelan: We did it for seven years.

Mr. Peters: Certainly it was done for a number of years. But why does the hon. gentleman not have the guts to do it now? Why must he wait until farmers are destroying potatoes which ought to be going to feed consumers who need them either in the domestic market or elsewhere?

[Mr. Horner.]

The minister talks about an arrangement between Ontario, Quebec and the western provinces. In other words, he is not talking about regionalization at all. Regionalization implies dealing with the area in which the problem has arisen. This is what the minister should be doing, and he has not done it.

Frankly, this amendment to the stabilization legislation is not needed. The Agricultural Stabilization Act set no ceiling, no limits. The governor in council could put any price under potatoes he wished as long as it did not fall below the 80 per cent level on a ten-year average. The minister cannot say he was unable to make changes. He may not at present have the staff to enable him to do it, but it is certainly not because the act fails to provide him with the necessary authority.

We gather from the minister that he has unlimited access to the financial resources of the country, not subject to the control exercised by five of his senior cabinet colleagues. In that case, why does he not take action? It is not difficult to set a fair price. The minister could set the price for potatoes at 10 cents per pound; he would not find any flood coming back from other parts of Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Check the storage in Quebec, Ontario and the maritimes. It was about 40 per cent up, compared with last year.

Mr. Peters: The minister says he has checked the storage in the maritimes and Quebec and that there is a large quantity of potatoes in store. He says there is a surplus. In that case, the surplus is not only in the maritimes; it is in the rest of the country as well. This does not mean he cannot put a decent price on potatoes. It does not mean the potatoes have to be fed to the pigs, as we did during the depression. People are paying high prices for potatoes in the stores.

● (1630)

Farm problems become compounded when there is a surplus and when the minister is unwilling to impose controls. Subsidizing the production of some commodities does not always solve problems. Let me refer to three commodities which were very much to the fore in days gone by—butter, skim milk and sugar beets. Sure we had problems with those commodities, and sure we solved those problems. How, Mr. Speaker? We discouraged production. Now there is a shortage of skim milk powder. Looking ahead, it is easy to foresee that not enough fluid milk will be produced in this country unless farmers are given some assurance that markets will be stable.

Today, the farmer is a specialist. In the old days he was content if he planted four or five acres to potatoes, to sugar beets, turnips and other crops. He grew his own corn, kept some beef cattle on the property, and about 500 hens. If he encountered problems, they had to do with only one or two commodities. What has happened? We established quotas and drove small butter producers out of business. At one time there were many farmers in Quebec. Ten or 15 years ago, in my area, there were 1,400 farmers; now, about 400 work about three-quarters of the original land. They work harder than ever and make less money than ever.

The other day I talked to a relatively prosperous farmer in my area who runs a farm operation worth between a quarter and half a million dollars. He said that he made more money from the interest on his bank deposits than from his farm operation last year. He made less than $10,000 from his farm. If we want to lend young farmers $150,000 as an inducement to take up farming, we must create the kind of climate in which farmers can make a living and pay the money back.

Also, we have a responsibility to consumers. We must make sure that farmers produce all the commodities which consumers use, and in sufficient quantity. Only if we give guarantees will farmers stay in business and produce food. What has been happening, Mr. Speaker? In Ontario not enough of certain commodities is being produced. For example, fluid milk production is down. It is possible that not quite enough is being produced. Not enough cheese is being produced and not enough butter. Oh, yes, we can stabilize production of these commodities, but at some cost. You stabilize markets by creating shortages. The Canadian Dairy Commission paid out, in the period 1973-74, about $143 million for industrial milk production. That is how much it cost us to stabilize a market.

The minister must know which commodities need stabilizing, which need designating and what are the problems in agriculture. Price, as well, can be designated. I do not think Canadians have complained about necessary farm subsidies. All the same, I do not think the minister has met his responsibilities adequately. Consider what has happened to cattle. Farmers listened to the government and slaughtered low grade cattle; the government provided a subsidy for top category cattle. Clearly, the cattle business needs help. The governments of Ontario, Quebec and the western provinces subsidized the cow-calf operator because he was the weak link in the beef production chain. Despite this help, the price of day-old calves dropped from a high, two years ago, of between $67 and $70 to a low of $2 and $3. This happened in my area. Although the provinces and the minister wanted to help the cattle industry, they did not do enough to help the cow-calf operator.

Perhaps the minister does not really understand agriculture; perhaps he only knows how to grow corn and soybeans. In any event, his attempts at stabilizing production have not always helped. In the case of eggs, government intervention was not helpful in the least. But one thing is clear: if you want agriculture to continue, you must give people incentives to stay in the agricultural business. Today our farmers, on average, are reaching the age of retirement. Most of them are over 50. Unless we entice young people into agriculture, it does not matter very much what we do about the price structure. What difference does a price structure make if you cannot induce people to take up an occupation in which they must work sometimes seven days a week for unlimited hours? If young people do not want to take on the job, there will not be an agricultural industry in this country's future.

Farmers are more necessary than ever, because so-called industrialized farms do not work. Some time ago one heard a great deal of talk about vertically integrated farm operations or corporate farms which many thought would be a great success because of their supposed access to markets. Well, the experiment was tried and found to be not successful. My hon. friends from Quebec know of the experiment in the broiler industry. Farm corporations hired farms and farmers to look after the hens, gave them 10 cents per bird and supplied all the money for the operation. The farmer had to supervise the operation. The corporations rented the buildings, paid for the feed, bore all costs and were responsible for marketing. But, Mr. Speaker, such farm corporations time after time have gone broke. Clearly, farming does not lend itself to vertical integration. That is the case not only in this country but in other countries such as Russia where corporate farming does not work. You cannot run a farm on an eight-hour day. When the sun shines, you make hay, and when it rains—

● (1640)

An hon. Member: You make love.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Perhaps you whitewash the barn or you do something else. With government intervention in agriculture today, requiring income tax forms, farm reports, unemployment insurance payments, compensation payments and all the other things, the farmer has to spend all his rainy days doing the necessary bookkeeping rather than taking it easy. In any event, there has not been much success in corporate farming in this country or in other countries such as Russia, but that appears to be the direction in which the minister is moving. I suggest the alternative is simple. We must help young people to get into the agricultural industry, and to do that we must have stabilization of prices.

What is wrong with stabilized prices? What is wrong with the formula we used before? In the past we took 80 per cent of the ten-year average as the prescribed price for given commodities. Inflation has had its effect on this ten-year average and there is absolutely no relationship between the input costs to produce a farm commodity ten years ago and the input cost of producing that commodity today. Let me give an example. If you were feeding poultry ten years ago, you were probably buying feed concentrates at $35 or $37 a ton. Today the cost could be anywhere from $200 to $300 a ton. So there is no relationship. And, of course, we do not have indexing. This should not be accepted as an excuse for the government's inaction in respect of the use of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Perhaps at the time this act was adopted the members were smart in that they did not put in a ceiling. When you stabilize things there is no need for a ceiling. This is within the minister's discretion and he can take into account the increase in input costs and the fact that the use of fertilizer has become more necessary and it is more expensive. It is very necessary to use fertilizer in order to produce on farms that have been in production for a long time.

We must develop a program to provide reasonably stable prices. I do not believe it is acceptable across the country to have the potato producers in the maritimes or in Ontario selling their product at such a loss that they will not be able to buy fertilizer for their crops next year. In fact, if there is any danger of a large portion of the potato crop being lost this year, many of those growers will not be able to buy the gasoline necessary next year to operate the equipment required to put in the crop.

I suggest that would not be in my interest, certainly not in the interest of the producers and, more importantly, not in the interest of the Canadian public. We will all depend on the production of potatoes next year, the year after and the year after that. If these producers leave the farm, they probably will not return. I do not see any evidence to indicate that this government realizes that in order to keep the young people in agricultural production, they will require a great deal of assistance. Unless we keep these people on the farms we will have shortages of potatoes and many other agricultural commodities.

It is a national disaster to have energy resources limited, because we will not be able to enjoy the kind of life we have enjoyed in the past. This is a very unfortunate situation and I am sure everyone will lament the end of a period of energy abundance. This does not have to be the case in respect of agricultural production because these commodities are renewable. We can increase production as long as we are willing to stabilize profits. Before the end of this debate I would like the minister to tell us why he has done nothing about the present problems in respect of potato production or the cow-calf operation. Why has he not done something about these situations?

From my understanding and experience, there is very little the minister cannot do to help the agricultural industry. I am not suggesting that he should take measures that will result in cutting off commodities from the United States, but any minister of agriculture who allows commodities to be dumped across the border into Canada at a lower price, or even at a competitive price, is not doing his job. The Minister of Agriculture should not allow another country to use Canada as a surplus warehouse for potatoes, tomatoes, root crops or anything else. As long as the minister allows that to happen, he is failing this nation which depends on our agricultural industry as a cheap source of food. Our industry has always provided Canadians with food at reasonable prices and the industry is still doing this.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy if the minister made a speech in closing this debate, before the bill goes to the committee, rather than ask questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The minister seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not want to leave the wrong impression on the record. He suggested that poultry feed supplements today cost about $300 a ton. The highest price I can find on record for poultry supplements of any kind is $183, with soybean meal running at an average of $150 a ton. I just wanted to correct that figure as the hon. member suggested it was $300 a ton.

Mr. Peters: I suppose it depends on what you are talking about, as there are many prices for concentrates. I was not really being specific; I was just trying to draw a comparison between input costs over the last ten years. If the minister says that concentrates sell for $110 a ton, and will agree that they used to sell at $10, $15 or $20 a ton, that is all right with me. The minister apparently missed the point I was trying to make, so I had better say it again. Input costs have gone up out of proportion to the price of the commodity whatever it may be. If you take 80 per cent of the ten-year average, you are relating it to the selling price of the commodity but the input costs are not really taken into account.

This bill does have a clause for indexing, but that indexing is not tied to input or anything else. It seems to me that all it is saying is that there will be an indexing aspect, but even without that indexing clause the minister still has the right to stabilize prices. There was never any doubt that he could set the price of a particular commodity. We had a floor, but there was no ceiling on it. We could have continued to subsidize as high as necessary. That was a judgment the Stabilization Board made concerning the level. Over the years many commodities have been subsidized. We might look at the list which appears in the annual report. We find, for instance, that potatoes were subsidized. The report reads:

Order in Council P.C. 1972-8 of January 18, 1972, authorized the board to purchase a minimum of 200 hundredweight and a maximum of 1,333 hundredweight of Canada No. 1 grade potatoes from individual producers. Initial payment on acceptance of the board's offer to purchase was to be 75 cents per hundredweight to each eligible producer, plus an additional 75 cents per hundredweight on delivery to the board of all potatoes purchased by the board from the producer. Quantities of board potatoes were processed into starch, or fed to livestock, and the total expenditure in 1973-74, exclusive of the principal amounts paid in the 1971-72 and 1972-73 fiscal years was $35,927.

The subsidization was 1½ cents. That does not seem to me to be any great bargain. I presume that because there was no particular fuss last year, it was a help; but it cost the Canadian public $35,000. If we could reduce the price of potatoes in the store by 20 cents on a ten-pound bag, we could pay the producer an extra three cents. It really does not make any difference to the consumer whether he pays it in the form of a tax or over the counter.

I do not believe we have done anything to solve these problems as they have developed. We have been too generous with our friends south of the border who have caused this country immense difficulty for many years. Now, in looking at GATT, it would seem that it is time we gave a new definition to "dumping" in this country. It has always been held that if hot-house tomatoes sell for 69 cents a tube, and tomatoes come in from the United States or Mexico, from the field, at a price in keeping with their own price and below our price, no assistance could be provided. So the stabilization bill over the years did provide assistance in this field. I think most members will support this bill. I believe it should be kept in mind, however, that in reducing the ten-year period to five years, if we cannot in some way compensate, by indexing for the rise in input costs to the farmer, and cannot bring that into relationship with the price he receives in the particular year for his commodity and use that as an index so we will be in a much better position to decide what is a fair price to the farmer and decide on it in conjunction with the farmer, we will not have the kind of stability we want.

The five-year average has not solved this problem. My impression is that indexing will not solve it. In effect, in respect of this bill we are agreeing that although we set a floor price there is in fact no mandatory floor price established for any commodities that are outside the designated commodities, and there is a floor price only for those designated commodities when they meet the requirements of the five-year average. That is totally out of line. It does not take into consideration the escalation of costs. It would appear to me that there is no way that the index, which is not spelled out in the legislation, can apply to that five-year average so as to create a solution to the problem I have indicated. If we look over the period in which the Stabilization Board has been in operation, and consider the fact that in those years we have paid roughly $1½ billion for the subsidization of agricultural commodities, and if we apply that to the assistance that has been provided to the individual from that payment, we will find it has been responsible to a large extent for keeping many of our farmers in production and has made it possible for them to continue in a viable industry.

It is interesting to look at what some of these products have been. The major one, of course, has been milk, mostly butter products. The amount in that case is $136 million. The amount in respect of skim milk is $15 million. In respect of milk for manufacturing the amount is $154 million, and for cream for manufacturing the amount is $83 million. Other products we have supported over the years received amounts considerably less that the amounts for that industry. These involved such things as hogs, in respect of which we paid $92 million so that the producers would remain in the hog production industry in this country. It is much easier to get into this type of production than it is to get out of it.

We have assisted producers in respect of lamb, wool and potatoes over a period of 16 years by paying almost $9 million to stabilize the prices. Here is an interesting one: we paid $38,805,119 to stabilize the sugar beet industry, yet this government allowed the closing of all the sugar beet factories in Ontario. While the government embarked on an open market sugar policy, it made it possible for only a few sugar beet plants to exist in Manitoba. This is a field in which we would have been able to provide a buttress against the world price of sugar. I am surprised that some friends of the minister did not tell him this when the industry closed in Ontario, because we were in a position where we could have produced, had we had the factories, probably 50 per cent of our own sugar without much difficulty.

In my opinion, this legislation has been a valuable asset to Canadian farmers. I also believe it has been a valuable asset to the consumers of Canada. It has enabled the government to provide assistance to agriculture in this country. Farmers have not become rich on any agricultural commodity in this country, not even on soybeans. Many times they have had to give up making payments on their farms so that they could provide Canadians with a cheap product. When things became really desperate we assisted them, but only in a very small measure, through the stabilization act.

My criticism of both the old act and this bill is that it is left entirely up to the Minister who administers the act to decide whether or not an order in council will be passed, and whether it will be passed soon enough to be of assistance to farmers. Right now there are many young farmers who cannot make payments on their farms because they cannot sell their calves at a price that will carry the cost of the operation. I am sure that many producers of potatoes in the maritimes which sell at 1.5 cents per pound are not able to carry their production costs and therefore are not able to make their payments. These are two agricultural products on which the minister could ask for an order in council in cabinet tomorrow.

Under the act some things are prohibited, but the minister is certainly not prohibited from designating any commodity that he wants to designate, and set any price he thinks is appropriate. Another thing that has never been impossible to do is for this House to pass support legislation for agriculture, because all consumers in this country know very well that farming is a marginal operation which brings marginal returns, yet it has been providing consumers with food of a very high calibre, often at unreasonably low cost.

In closing, I would say that the minister should make the speech at the end of this debate that he neglected to make at the beginning. I have defended this minister day in and day out to farmers in my constituency. I say that as Minister of Agriculture he is responsible to farmers, and he is excercising this responsibility. But I say that responsibility to consumers belongs to another minister. Yet farmers ask me why, if the minister is responsible for looking after them, they are in such bad shape. I say this is a question that only the minister can answer. This bill would have allowed him to do many things which he has not taken the opportunity to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is always quite interesting to follow a debate dealing with problems in our farming industry. During the past few years, some strange things have been said on the condition of farmers. I remember among others that a former minister of agriculture had stated that a farmer merely needed four cows and two sows to realize a net income of $2,000 yearly. The minister was not re-elected, because nobody took his word. It is really absurd to say such things.

In my opinion, if it were so easy there would be no marketing problems for farm products. The problem highlighted during consideration of Bill C-50 has existed for many years. We are beating about the bush. We are looking for solutions and when they are found to be inefficient, they are altered and we then say that we will try over again if necessary.

This reminds of the day when, in the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) as a member of parliament, reminded the former minister of agriculture of a few things and asked him whether the alternative formula had been drawn up by economists or other civil servants. He added that economists have a gift for making us try a formula, of getting us down in the hole and then dropping us in it, but that they do not produce formulas allowing you to come out of it.

How true! Even today. To wit, the many studies made in Canada, by the provinces, commissions of all sorts, on farming problems. Reports have been tabled, studied; laws have been passed but the problem remains the same because we do not delve into the basic issues.

This is so true, Mr. Speaker, that during the 1957-58 session, at which time I myself was active as a farmer, we had marketing problems, if not total chaos, and we could not make up from the sale of our products our production costs, let alone make profits.

An election was held at that time. A program was submitted to the electorate by a party which assured us that legislation would be passed to stabilize farm incomes, farm product prices. We were quite happy. We followed closely the debate that took place in this House. It was a debate on the Agricultural Stabilization Act, Chapter A-9, that could be summed up as follows:

● (1710)

Considering the advisability of enacting provisions in order to stabilize farm product prices to help the agricultural industry get a fair return on its work and its investment, as well as to maintain a fair balance between prices received by farmers and the cost of commodities and services they buy, that is what will provide farmers with a fair share of the national income. It was the way I just quoted during the 1957-58 session.

We are now in 1975 and working to amend that act which did not give the results we had hoped for; we are now patching it up, and trying to amend it in the following way:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act to amend in the manner prescribed the definition "agricultural commodity";

An agricultural commodity is not difficult to define. It includes all commodities produced by farmers, by agricultural producers. There are many of them, and I think all producers need to have some protection so as to be assured an income from that operation.

It goes on to say, and I quote:

to shorten from ten to five years the period from which the base price for each agricultural commodity is determined, and to alter in the manner prescribed the method of establishing the prescribed price in relation to a named commodity and in relation to a designated commodity;

I quite agree on setting up a period, I quite agree on shortening this study, because it would only be fair to the producers of today, to do away with the five years of starvation and low prices. Keeping this in the Act would not be fair to them.

In fact, what I find quite surprising is this:

to enable the Board to exercise powers for the purpose of stabilizing the price of an agricultural commodity; under the circumstances prescribed to empower the Board to enter into agreements with provinces and/or producers to provide for a greater prescribed price that would otherwise apply and, for any increased costs to be borne by the province and/or producers;

I am somewhat surprised at finding that this board will determine prices on the basis of these factors. Will all relevant factors actually enter into the calculation of production costs, and will this calculation be done by people who really possess the skill required and who will be able to submit figures which will not have to be reduced later by a given percentage, to conform with a price set beforehand and which would not be fair to the producers.

This is another factor on which the minister will have to provide much explanation when the bill is studied in committee, if we are to improve the present legislation, make it more efficient and more generous for producers, without neglecting consumers. We must have justice for everyone. But the purpose of the bill is first to protect farm producers.

The recommendation goes further when it says that the governor in council will be able to establish—

... ceilings on the quantity or value of an agricultural commodity eligible for price stabilization; and to provide for consequential matters.

Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to believe that it is necessary to determine the quality of agricultural commodities, to meet adequately consumers' needs. But I do not agree on a few points. Nowhere in this bill is it provided that this provision will also apply to imported products.

Again recently in the province of Quebec, and perhaps this happened also elsewhere, I don't know, we heard about poultry producers setting their own quotas and limiting their production. A few days ago they lowered their production quotas to meet the demand, the needs on the domestic market, and to maintain price stabilization just so they would make decent profits.

But they have been fooled. There are some people who have taken the liberty of importing similar products which come from our neighbours and are marketed in our country. This has resulted—and I hope this situation will be rectified before it is too late—in disrupted production. Our producers went ahead and barbecued their chickens in the street as a mark of protest. This has been a waste of food at a time when there are needs unsatisfied in many homes of our country and elsewhere. This we term disorder. And I take the opportunity of recommending to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) an amendment he might incorporate into the bill.

One cannot be too cautious. If we want the Minister of Agriculture and the Agricultural Stabilization Board to be in a position to operate and get results, they must have the tools, they must have teeth, to enable them to dig on whenever appropriate. I have already suggested to this House—and I think several members agree with me, that since the Minister of Agriculture is responsible for food production—he should see to it that food supplies are adequate to meet the needs of the whole population. He should also be allowed to exercise control over the importation and exportation of the products we might need. At the present time, another minister is exercising this control, although he does not have as many responsibilities in this field as the Minister of Agriculture has—

Mr. La Salle: He is not taking them.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The hon. member for Joliette says that he is not taking them. I am inclined to believe him, because when a question was put to him in the House this week on this subject, he said he would look into it and report later.

Mr. Speaker, I want to believe that the ministers do not have to remember everything and be able to give point-blank answers to all the questions they might be asked. I understand that very well. But to such important questions as the one he was asked, I think a minister has the obligation to give the House a more satisfactory answer.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the 1958 Act, section 2 did define the commodities covered by the legislation. Maple syrup had not been included. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is another suggestion I am making to the minister, in order that maple syrup, a natural produce, be included under the new legislation.

● (1720)

Several hon. members are aware that maple syrup producers now have serious difficulties. Many have not been able to get paid for their 1973 crop. Many have not been paid for the 1974 crop either and the 1975 crop is coming. These are agricultural producers whoinvested money but did not get any return. They are in a bad situation.

I understand that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made an effort—and I thank him—to come to an agreement between his department and the Maple Syrup Producers Association, under which financial institutions can make cash advances to enable these people to stay in business. However, since the market situation is not excellent, as I could see, financial institutions did not accept to go along with the program and nobody could get money for these products.

The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) motions that it is not true. If I am mistaken I would be pleased to know it and if the situation is better, I will withdraw my words with pleasure. I am honest enough to do this.

I am told that there is now an agreement between Quebec and Ottawa for the purchase of these products. I hope that this time it well prove operative and that producers will be able to get their money as quickly as possible for their production. We shall see afterwards how to dispose of it because, after all, we are talking about sugar. With white sugar at 75 cents a pound, at least we should not have to pay that price for our own sugar—maple sugar—and it should be possible for us to find buyers here with a little promotion in all the provinces.

There is another matter with which I would also want to deal, that of middlemen. I am quite upset Mr. Speaker. As soon as an increase in the price of an agricultural product is announced, newspapers immediately print in large headlines that it is scandalous, as it has just happened in the province of Quebec. In February, Quebec's Agricultural Marketing Board decreed that whole milk would be sold 51 cents a quart as from March 1. There was a general outcry.

The public, the consumers were led to believe that they would be gouged mostly by those wicked producers, those bad farmers. There is a total lack of information. Education is needed in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, last weekend, I had the opportunity of meeting a group of farmers' wives and they asked me a question. Of course, those ladies are interested in the operation but are not necessarily involved in the production. They wanted to know why milk was selling at 51 cents a quart. I told them that, well, it was because we had to support diary farmers if we wanted to have milk to drink. If the producers get no money, they will quit. After they have gone out of business, we shall have to buy milk somewhere else and then pay $1 a quart. Would the situation be any better? I worked out this calculation for them: 51 cents a quart, 40 quarts per hundredweight, that puts the price per hundredweight at $20.40. I asked them: Can you tell me how much of the $20.40 goes to the producer? They did not know that he gets less than $12 per hundredweight. They were not aware of that. Who is pocketing the difference?

Another point: 8 oz. softdrink bottles cost a quarter each. Take 5 bottles to get a quart or 40 ounces and you get a cost of $1.25 per quart, or $50 per hundredweight. They only ingredients are water, sugar and colouring additives. There are no complaints about that. People pay $50 per hundredweight for those drinks. They buy them, but they no longer buy fluid milk at $12, Mr. Speaker.

It can therefore be taken for granted that the Food Prices Review Board will have plenty of work to do, not only with regard to farmers, but also with respect to groceries and shopping centres in order to check the quality and price of other commodities, make comparisons and check whether imported products which compete with Canadian products really are of the same quality and at the same price, and if they help save anything. That would be a fine assignment for the Plumptre Commission, and an efficient, meaningful task.

Mr. Speaker, a few amendments should be made to this bill. We shall certainly discuss them when it is studied in committee, but I should like first, since this is a matter of urgent necessity, to ask the Minister of Agriculture for some information dealing with the Commission appointed to inquire into beef and veal marketing. I wish we could get a report before the year 2000, because it is getting urgent.

The present situation is disastrous: consumers probably pay less for beef, but how much do producers get as compared to last year?

I would like to back my remarks with strong arguments showing that producers, even if sometimes people accuse them of being bleeding hearts, do sometimes have reasons to complain, and that can be proven by comparing the following two stages: February 1974 and February 1975 with respect to the cost of beef as reported in La Terre de Chez Nous. For instance, a bull sold for $36.50 in February 1974 and only $19.25 in February of this year. Has there been an equivalent reduction at Steinberg's and Dominion. I would not think so. Anyway, price have sunk down by approximately that amount for the producers.

Take, for instance, the No. 3 cow: in 1974, it was sold for $38.75 a hundred, and in 1975, $18.75 a hundred, that is $20 less. The difference is substantial. Did feed grain prices change during the same period? The answer is also important. Well, in 1974, the price of barley in Montreal was $5.67 a hundred, and oats, $5.46. In February 1975, it rose to $6.26 a hundred for barley and $6.17 for oats. Production costs go up while the sales price goes down. As a result, the difference between the cost of production and the cost price widens continually. No wonder our young people do not want to become farmers.

We have also seen a shocking increase in the price of farm machinery, and a commission, the Barber Commission, conducted an inquiry in that field. It did an excellent job, and if its report is to be implemented, there must be an agreement between the Canadian government and the other countries where our farm machinery imports are manufactured. And nothing is happening there either. The recommendations in the Barber report are not being implemented, and companies make fabulous profits at the expense of the buyers, our Canadian farmers. For this reason, things are getting worse instead of getting better.

Another area of tremendous interest to Canadian producers is that of fertilizers. What should be done? We were taught to use fertilizers. Our agronomists, after tests made in experimental farms, taught us their use. Of course, they work, they promote growth. But we are now realizing that the chemicals we are now buying at unreasonable cost are harmful to men, because they pollute the water that goes into our rivers. Our cattle have to drink that water, they graze on fast-growing grass through the use of fertilizers. This gets into their flesh, into the milk of cows, and affects human health. But that is not the problem we face today. The problem is that fertilizers are so expensive this year that many farmers will not be buying enough in proportion to their acreage. I fear a decrease in the production of feed grain. And if this happens, it is possible that next fall, more herds will disappear. Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter. A number of producers are killing their calves. They do not keep them more than an hour. That production will not be in the market next fall. The situation is far from brilliant for those people. They do not know whether they must breed them or not, because they are not ensured a price which will allow them some return. I know what I am talking about. I do visit farms, and I am not afraid or ashamed of doing so. So I know what happens. It is for that reason that I ask the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to urge the Commission to inquire into beef and veal marketing. We must not wait until the amendments to the agricultural stabilization board are effective. We must act now. Tomorrow, it may be too late.

There is another area on which I would like us to be on the watch and to look closely: In the course of the hearings of the special committee on egg marketing, Mr. Speaker, we examined very closely the matter of production costs. We heard many witnesses who showed us with figures what is the real production cost of a dozen of eggs. We have also heard the representatives of the Consumers' Association of Canada who showed us that they cannot afford to pay more for the eggs they have to buy for their family. But there is another "gimmick" between consumers and producers, and I would like us to examine this "gimmick", this sanctuary, in order to find out what happens in there.

I am not talking about the small retailer or the corner grocer, absolutely not. He is not the one who sets the prices; he has no authority to do so. He must pay what he is charged, and since he has paid, he wants to make a reasonable profit. It is the powerful, those we do not see, the big companies, the magnates, and all those who know all the tricks to take over the production, store it, control it and market it at prices that they have set. Not many of these companies have gone bankrupt, but many small ones do go bankrupt. Why? Because small undertakings are powerless, because they must submit to the cartel set up by the big companies.

If we really want to go to the bottom of things, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should really have an independent body with as much courage as Mr. Justice Robert Cliche in Quebec. There is a courageous man, apparently he is doing his duty, and I congratulate him for it. I wish there were at the national level a commission with that kind of courage, headed by a chairman with the same courage, to go to the bottom of things, to tell the consumers that it is not the farm producers who are guilty if the price of food products keeps going up, and to point out to them the true culprit so that the consumers and the producers could come to an understanding and support a government which would bring law and order in this area and which would be ready to face up to the situation.

Unfortunately, we often are under the impression that our governments are weak when faced with the strong and strong when faced with the weak and it should be the opposite. We should have courageous governments who are strong when faced with the strong and who would treat them as equal. Governments should say: You are strong; I am strong because of democracy, because I have been elected, because I have been chosen to play such a role and be understanding for the weak, the low income families, the poor, those who are defenseless. If a government were understanding, if it helped those people, no one would complain.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks I hope that the Minister of Agriculture understood at least the two amendments I would like to be made to Bill C-50. I do not want to be critical; on the contrary, I do it to make my contribution so that the bill may be more comprehensive, that the legislation may be more efficient and that civil servants may get the tools needed to function and achieve the mission we wish to give them under this legislation. I shall come back to this matter in due time when we shall review it in committee. I hope that once we have reviewed this legislation together, suggested ideas to improve it and accomplished our duty, we shall be able to expect more efficiency from this legislation so that producers may be finally satisfied. Consumers will know at last to whom they pay and why they pay.

[English]

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my farmers tell me that there is no question that this bill is an important step in the right direction. There are three provisions that constitute a particular improvement: first, shortening the base period on which support is calculated from ten years to five years; second, increasing from 80 to 90 per cent the percentage of the base prices which will be guaranteed; third, indexing the support levels to reflect changes in production costs. Perhaps the most promising aspect of this legislation, however, is that provision which provides for the development of federal-provincial agreements to co-ordinate the federal programs in this area with provincial programs and which anticipates the development of programs with joint federal, provincial and producer participation.

More and more provinces have been developing their own farm stabilization measures. There is a growing need for someone to step in an co-ordinate these activities. British Columbia has an income stabilization plan in operation; Saskatchewan is planning to extend its grain stabilization scheme; Quebec seems to be considering a major project to guarantee the income of milk producers. The amendments in this bill will make it possible for the federal government to co-ordinate and integrate its measures with these provincial programs into a package, with maximum effectiveness. By providing for programs with producer participation, these amendments will make it possible for producers to be involved in stabilizing their own industry. This, too, is a step in the right direction.

I represent a constituency which produces one of the widest varieties of agricultural products in this country. To keep in close contact with those of my constituents in agriculture, after I was elected I set up an agricultural advisory committee with 14 members who, together, represent all the different types of farms in Wellington constituency and cover the whole area geographically. I would like to acquaint this House with my advisory group to show how members can maintain close contact with the farmers and, therefore, assess how valuable this legislation will be to them. The chairman of my committee is a young farmer, a recent graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College of the University of Guelph, who farms 600 acres in Guelph township. Petter Hannam, of R.R.2, Guelph, is a past president of the Wellington County Federation of Agriculture and is presently a director of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and chairman of its resource development committee.

An hon. Member: I bet he is a socialist.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I bet he is a Liberal.

Mr. Maine: He is not a lawyer, anyway. He certainly contributes a lot more to the country than do a number of members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Did he write that speech?

Mr. Maine: On this committee, in R.R.6 Guelph, is Gordon Crow who raises beef cattle and pigs on a hundred acres. Not all the pigs are in my riding, though.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Maine: In R.R.5, Guelph, Jack Gilchrist raises corn and barley and beef cattle on 200 acres. In R.R.1, Puslinch, Ken Gunson farms 90 acres near Morriston with potatoes as the prime crop as well as corn and hogs. We are familiar with the potato problems being experienced down east. They affect us, too, in Ontario. Cedric Harrop, of R.R.7, Guelph, markets 1,800 hogs per year. I am sure all members are aware of the difficulty experienced by hog producers in the past year in making ends meet. In R.R.2, Guelph, Robert Harvey raises hens. He has a capacity for 16,000 laying hens but is not presently producing at capacity. We have experienced at first-hand the problems which have arisen in connection with the CEMA operation. Quotas have been cut back and Mr. Harvey is presently producing well below capacity.

In R.R.6, Guelph, Edgar Hutton raises beef cattle and hogs; he has 400 acres planted to corn and wheat. We in our riding are concerned about land utilization, and this gentleman is a member of the Puslinch Township Planning Board and of the Wellington County Land Division Committee, aimed at ensuring that prime agricultural land continues to be kept for agriculture and that food will be available for consumers both today and in the future. In R.R.1, Rockwood, George Leslie raises pork, beef and sheep on 130 acres. Earl Osborne, in R.R.5, Rockwood, raises 130 head of purebred Holstein cattle on 400 acres. Murray Smeltzer, in R.R.3, Rockwood, produces cream and raises hogs and beef cattle on 45 acres in Eramosa township.

An hon. Member: Have you got any more constituents?

Mr. Maine: In R.R.1, Ariss, Ed Thompson farms 350 acres of corn. He also operates a fertilizer dealership. We are well aware of the difficulties the fertilizer industry has caused to farmers by reason of its rapidly escalating prices. Marshall Vanderhout, of R.R.1, Waterdown, has three acres under glass and in his greenhouses he grows tomatoes and long, seedless cucumbers. The greenhouse industry is facing serious difficulties brought about by the increase in the cost of heating oil, in particular. Hon. members will appreciate that in the greenhouse industry fuel costs are the major item of expenditure.

In R.R.1, Millgrove, John Veltkamp is another egg producer. He is at the southern end of my riding. His operation has a layer capacity of 10,000 hens. He, too, is fully aware of the great efforts which must be made if Canada is to have a viable egg producing and egg marketing industry. Dick Weatherston rounds out my agricultural advisory committee. He is in R.R.2, Dundas, and farms 160 acres. He specializes in dairy cattle and has 60 Holsteins. He also has experience with hog raising. These men are all involved in crop associations having to do with the commodities in which they are most interested. Consequently, they are able to reflect the views of their colleagues as well as their own views.

Women are on the farm, too, and they help their husbands. Children, too, continue to work on the family farm. All members of the family contribute to the work on the family farm, as hon. members well know.

Mrs. Campagnolo: They know their place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Maine: Husbands, wives, children—it doesn't matter as long as they help produce food. These men are the representatives of my farmers. They have experience of a number of crops, as I have mentioned. They include wheat, corn, beef cattle, pigs, barley, potatoes, eggs, sheep, milk, cream—

An hon. Member: Grits.

Mr. Maine: —fertilizer, tomatoes, cucumbers and dairy cattle. This is a good, representative cross-section of farm products produced in Canada. I have made sure that all these people have received copies of the bill we are considering. The feedback I get convinces me they are in favour of this kind of measure. I think it is important to ask the people who are directly concerned what they think. I am confident the farming community will welcome this measure.

A bill which improves farm stabilization policy is also of benefit to consumers. The food industry is of key importance not only to farmers but to all consumers. Measures such as this improve the reliability and efficiency of Canada's long-term food supply. They moderate the sudden fluctuations in the market which can lead to alternate shortages and surpluses, and in so doing they ensure a stable and growing Canadian food industry. This benefits all Canadians and protects them from actions such as have been taken with respect to oil and sugar, where we rely on imports to supply our markets.

Last fall, the United States undersecretary for agriculture spoke to a group of Canadian farmers in Hespeler, Ontario. He outlined his own country's plans to set aside a $10 billion fund to bail out American farmers. There is no way in which we can compete with this, but the American proposal underlines the need to look after our own producers who could be swamped by surpluses from across the border. The egg and beef producers have already been faced with this situation. More than ever before, we must work hard and quickly to maintain a strong agricultural industry in Canada.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-50 I can only call it a disaster bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Whittaker: I hear members on the other side saying "Oh!" But it was brought in years ago as an insurance for the farmers. It has served as disaster insurance. Take the bill the minister is bringing in now and compare it with the bill he is amending; you will find there is very little difference. The main difference is that he is reducing the ten years to five years, and taking the 80 per cent and bringing it up to 90 per cent. This is not even in the class of being what stability is all about in this day and age.

It would not be so bad if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had not been stomping the country telling farmers he was going to bring in a stabilization plan which would mean stability for farmers. This legislation does not begin to compare with what some of the provinces are doing. We went to the agricultural congress in 1969 and again in 1970. The congress was called by the government because the farmers were saying the government had no agricultural policy. The farmers are still saying it. The main theme of those meetings was the need for stability in the industry. This government has done absolutely nothing to bring about stability. Now we find that the tired old stabilization plan is being amended. The farmers are being asked to accept it as a plan for bringing about stability.

At one time farming in Canada used to be a way of life. There was a much greater percentage of people on farms in previous years than now; in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent of our population was in farming. That percentage has been dwindling, until now less than 10 per cent of our people are on the farm. One of the reasons people are turning away from farming is that it is hard to make a go of farming; it is hard to make a go of that way of life. So now the people who are left on the farms are dedicated to farming and we find that they are in upper age brackets. This cannot go on. We must make an effort to bring young people into farming and replace older farmers, because older farmers just cannot go on forever.

The farmer of today is established, organized, knowledgeable, and he wants to produce. Not only does he want to produce; he can produce. The Minister of Agriculture was going around the country saying to farmers, "Produce all you can." They did. Then he went to the horticultural council and said that potato growers in New Brunswick are in trouble because they produced too much. He has spoken on many occasions about stabilization, but in many ways he has done absolutely nothing to bring about stability in the price of commodities farmers produce. He compared this year's New Brunswick Farm production with last year's. I do not think this year's was much above average.

Farmers in Canada are nervous about producing surpluses. They are nervous because of the ups and downs which have been experienced in agriculture over the years. They do not particularly want to carry on agricultural operations which are subject to these kinds of ups and downs. They see others in Canada insulating themselves against inflation. Others belong to unions, and have bargaining agents, which help them to insulate themselves.

Farmers can see that the buyers of their produce are few in number; their power is concentrated in very few hands. They know who sells most of their produce to the consumer chain stores. They know, for instance, that in the fruit and vegetable industry buying power is concentrated in the hands of about seven buyers in North America, not just in Canada. They know that their produce is handled by large organizations which deal with chain stores. They know that we have had a policy of cheap food in the past in Canada. They also know that the consumer can buy more food with one hour's work than ever before. They know they are consumers themselves; they must buy many things both for their farm organizations and to feed themselves and their families.

But, Mr. Speaker, the new generation of farmers today is not in farming for a way of life. They want some stability in their operations. This is the message they have tried to get through for some time to this government. They are not too interested in the old ways with their ups and downs, ways in which an "up" lasted maybe for two good years and a "down" for quite a few more years. After the agricultural congress was held, we experienced a couple of pretty fair years in the farming industry. But farmers are nervous: they do not feel that this is going to continue. They know the people of Canada are concerned about the loss of land from agriculture. They know there is talk of land freezes and that in some provinces agricultural land has been frozen. They know the people of Canada like the idea of green belts and do not want everything paved over in Canada, especially in those areas where people are concentrated, usually where conditions are good for the growing of fruits, vegetables and other kinds of foods.

The Minister of Agriculture has gone stomping around Canada taking credit for all the good things which have happened in agriculture and saying many things farmers like to hear. But he had the opportunity to bring in legislation which could provide for stability and this is the bill he introduced. Look at the bill before us. I think he should be ashamed for having brought this bill before the House, for introducing it in this forum, especially after what he has been telling farmers for the last two years.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

OFFICIAL REPORT

ALLEGED DISCREPANCY IN ANSWER GIVEN BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last Thursday, February 27, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) may have—unintentionally, I am sure—left ambiguities on the record with respect to questions asked by me. I wish to bring these briefly to the attention of the House so that the Solicitor General, if he deems it necessary, will have the opportunity to correct Hansard in this respect.

As I see it, the discrepancy is as follows. When asked by me whether other federal agencies besides the RCMP were involved in the investigation into dredging operations, the Solicitor General replied, "there are other federal departments involved". I ask Your Honour to keep in mind that I asked about agencies, and not departments. Then later on, as reported at page 3624 of Hansard, the Solicitor General took the opportunity to answer more fully the question and said:

> I was asked whether other agencies were involved in the investigation with respect to the dredging contract in the Quebec City area. I said other agencies were involved.

In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, he did not; he said other federal departments were involved. However, to continue his answer:

> Then, the question was: Could you reveal the other agencies? I checked into that, and the answer is that it would interfere with the investigation if we made public the other agencies that we are investigating.

Did he mean that other federal departments are working with the RCMP on their investigation into dredging contracts, or did he mean that federal departments as well as agencies are being investigated by the RCMP in regard to dredging contracts; and is there a difference between "department" and "agency"? That, Mr. Speaker, is my point of order and I hope the Solicitor General can clear it up.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, unfortunately there was a mistake in Hansard on that day. I made every attempt to have it corrected. As a matter of fact, I corrected the blues and Hansard ignored my correction on the blues and put it the way it was originally. I corrected it again. I telephoned Hansard; I had people in my office write them, and so on.

May I clarify the situation. When I said there were other agencies working on this investigation as well, that of course entails other departments because the agencies come under other departments. I was not being explicit. There are agencies of the federal government that come under other federal departments working on this investigation as well. I cannot say any more at this time because it would be contrary to the interests of the investigation. But I stand by the other part of my answer. They are investigating; we are not investigating them. The mistake in Hansard was that it said "we", and it should not.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it abundantly clear that what the Solicitor General is now stating is that the RCMP is investigating—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member raised a question and the Solicitor General has clarified the earlier answer he made. In fairness, I feel that if the hon. member wishes to pursue the matter further with the Solicitor General he should do so by way of fresh questioning.

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CONSEQUENT TIE UP OF GRAIN SHIPMENTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask leave of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), to debate a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The matter concerns the tie up of grain shipping on the west coast. While not denying the right to workers to strike, grain movements have been tied up as a result of stoppages for over one-third of a year, resulting in lost sales and costly demurrage charges. Grain producers have the right to a decent income also, and in the absence of government action to settle the strike the grain handlers' bargaining position would be greatly improved through public support if they went back to work.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter on which the hon. member has risen is one which would qualify under Standing Order 43, but I do not find in the contents of the hon. member's remarks a formal motion.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my remarks were not too clear. I asked the leave of the House to debate a particular matter of pressing necessity, and that is the motion, or that is the purpose of my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, the purpose of the hon. member's remarks is clear, but the fact of the matter is that there is no motion I can put to the House on which to seek its unanimous consent.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

SUGGESTED PRESERVATION OF HISTORICAL CHARACTER OF EAST BLOCK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the thorough disregard for the historical significance, the structure and the contents of the East Block of the Parliament Buildings, as indicated by changes that have already been carried out and others that are proposed which would further emasculate this fine old building, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That Room 201, the original office of Sir John A. Macdonald, be immediately reopened on a one-day a week basis for viewing by Canadians;

That it be restored to its original character as soon as possible; and

That the people of Canada be given assurance that every effort will be made to preserve the unique history of the East Block and the office of the first Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. Speaker: The motion has been moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF EFFECTS OF POVERTY ON CHILDREN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the importance and seriousness of the findings of the Canadian Council on Social Welfare as to the limited chances children of the poor have, compared with other children, of ever reaching adequate living standards, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs meet without delay to look into the findings of the Canadian Council on Social Welfare, in order to propose concrete measures to remedy the current situation and make sure all children have equal opportunities to develop and succeed within our society.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR BETTER RAILWAY SERVICE IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter which calls for immediate attention and the implementation of efficient measures as soon as possible.

As rail transport is, for northwestern Quebec, the main means of obtaining supplies for business and industry, as there are excessive delays in the delivery of freight—it is not unusual for a parcel to take up to two weeks to cover the 45 miles that separate Senneterre from Val-d'Or—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House order the Minister of Transport to make an inquiry into the excessive delays in rail transport of freight in northwestern Quebec, and to report to the House on what steps he intends to take to remedy the situation and ensure the merchants, industries and people of northwestern Quebec the better rail service which the economy of the area requires.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY PROGRAM—REVIEW OF IMPLICATIONS OF PROGRAM FOR COMPANIES INVOLVED IN INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS PRIOR TO ADOPTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, before the program announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce yesterday was approved, the government satisfied itself that the investigations underway in the dredging contracts on the St. Lawrence River had no implications for any companies receiving grants under the minister's program.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that the shipbuilding assistance program was designed for shipbuilders all over Canada from the west coast to the east coast. It has a built-in incentive arrangement. It replaces those programs which previously existed that were domestic and for export. The imputation in the question of the Leader of the Opposition is that there is some relationship between that particular program and dredging contracts. I would say to him that they are quite separate and separable questions.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not making an imputation, Mr. Speaker. I am asking a question of the acting head of the government and would like to have an answer. The question is whether the government satisfied itself that the investigations underway in respect of the dredging contracts on the St. Lawrence River had no implications for any companies receiving grants under the minister's program. More specifically, I will ask the hon. gentleman whether the Government of Canada requested and obtained a report from the Solicitor General regarding the possible implications of dredging investigations before the program announced by the minister was adopted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has said these matters were dealt with quite separately. The program of incentives was dealt with on its merits. The intention is to improve employment conditions in Canada. This is the basis on which it was developed. There was no connection between the two events.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Acting Prime Minister an opportunity to clarify anything he might wish to clarify. Am I correct in assuming that neither the minister nor the government as a whole has sought any information from the Solicitor General or made any inquiry to satisfy itself that there was nothing arising from the investigation of the dredging contracts that had any implications for any company receiving benefits under the minister's program.

● (1420)

Mr. Sharp: I must repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the program of incentives was approved on its merits. The question of whether some companies which might benefit from it might be found to have engaged in illegal activities, is a separate question.

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF PAYMENTS TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED BEFORE COMPLETION OF INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the company which is to be a recipient to a very large extent of the benefits of the program announced by the minister, Marine Industries Limited of Quebec, is also under investigation for allegedly defrauding the Canadian government, the Acting Prime Minister can tell us whether it is the intention of the government to authorize payments to the company before that investigation is completed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Is the hon. member referring to the Export Development Corporation contracts? Could he clarify that before I answer his question?

Mr. McGrath: I cannot make the question any clearer. I am asking the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to authorize any payments under the shipbuilding program announced by the minister yesterday before the investigation into the alleged conspiracy regarding the dredging contracts has been completed?

Mr. Gillespie: There are two aspects of the program that I announced yesterday, and that was the reason I asked for a clarification; one was the Export Development Corporation, which involves loans and not grants, and the other was the shipbuilding assistance program. Clearly, the shipbuilding assistance program which applies to all shipbuilders is quite separate from the issue of dredging contracts and holdbacks.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister or the President of the Treasury Board how they can reconcile payments under this program to this company with the fact that the government has already taken the decision to withhold further payments on dredging contracts to Marine Industries Limited while the investigation by the RCMP is underway?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Come on, Mitch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I was only hesitating because this is an argumentative question and it is not permitted under the rules.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: These two programs are separate and distinct. If, however, a contingency were to arise of the kind that has been mentioned by the hon. member, then of course we would take legal advice.

Mr. McGrath: The programs may be separate but the company involved is one and the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In view of the very serious implications of this whole affair reaching, as it does, into the government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he is not prepared, if the government has nothing to hide, to hold a public inquiry into this whole affair.

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that question is the same as previously, which is that the investigations are continuing and we see no reason to hold a public inquiry at present.

On the first question, let me say that I think that I was quite clear in my answer that if circumstances arose later in connection with payments under the program, we would take legal advice as to whether we should make payments at that time.

HEALTH

STUDY OF HEALTH OF MINERS AT CLINTON CREEK MINE—REQUEST FOR NATIONAL STANDARDS FOR AMOUNT OF ASBESTOS FIBRE IN AIR

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and arises from answers he gave in the House yesterday to questions concerning the Clinton Creek mine in the Yukon. The minister indicated that the study of that mine showed that there were two to four fibres per millimetre of air and implied that that is a safe level. The report shows that out of 133 fibre counts, 19 were over five fibres per millimetre. Would the minister advise this House if any studies have been done by his department into the health of the miners in that mine in view of the obvious hazard to those workers in that particular area which this report confirms?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the hon. member said, I did not infer any conclusion from the facts I mentioned in the House yesterday. I just gave him the facts that were available to me and based on the preliminary studies conducted by officials in my department and that of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am told the studies will be completed in a fortnight or so and my department will then submit them to the Indian Affairs and Northern Development Department for consideration and action.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: I understand that that particular report to which the minister is referring has been in the hands either of his department or of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development since June of last year, and as far as I know there have not been objective studies done up to this point into the health of those miners. In view of the fact that there is nothing that I know of to prevent the minister from bringing in national enforceable standards in terms of asbestos risk, would the minister now advise whether he has any immediate plans to bring forward national enforceable standards, as Britain has had for so many years, for the protection of those persons working in and around asbestos from cancer?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, if the hon. member has a study dating from June last, I would like very much to obtain a copy. The officials of my department and myself have never received a copy of that study. The only thing I know is that a study was begun in June 1974, but to my knowledge no study had then been completed by my department. The study undertaken June last, as I said, is being completed and will afterwards be submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As for the other question of the hon. member, I would remind him that if his party is willing to co-operate with the other parties to activate the consideration of bills in the House, we would very soon pass the bill introduced by my colleague the Minister of the Environment which deals with contaminants of the environment.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: The minister did not respond to one portion of my question, and that is whether he has the power at this point—and I understand that he has—to simply impose regulations under pollution control legislation in this country. In other words, this business of the House delaying the passage of the environment contaminants act is irrelevant. What I am asking the minister to do—and he may take this as a representation if he wishes—is to bring forward national enforceable asbestos standards now. There is no reason whatsoever why he should not do this.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking for a legal opinion and I do not think it is my role to give him one in this House.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR EQUITABLE SCALE OF TAXATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Revenue a question.

A story, published the day before yesterday in the paper Montréal-Matin, has stunned me. It said that the rich pay less income tax. As a matter of fact, according to the figures provided by Statistics Canada, people earning over $200,000 yearly pay only 10 per cent in income tax, while others earning $7,700, like the hon. member for Mercier, must pay 12.4 per cent. Doctors and lawyers earning between $20,000 and $30,000 yearly must pay up to 22.7 per cent in income tax. Does the Minister of National Revenue intend to set up a more equitable taxation scale than the one we now have?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the tax levels are set by the Income Tax Act, which is dealt with following each budget. I have not seen the article to which the hon. member refers, but I think it probably relates to some written answers given the other day which were making a distinction between taxable income and non-taxable income, and that is probably why the figures appear as they do.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INFORMATION ON WHICH WARRANT TO SEARCH HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR BASED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question following along the same lines as some of the other questions asked today. At page 3668 of Hansard, I asked the Solicitor General for information about certain documents that led to a warrant being issued. He answered that he would supply the information and I wonder if he has it now, two or three days after the request?

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in that question the hon. member for Calgary North said and I quote "a charge has to be laid and an affidavit or an information sworn." That is not correct. In law a charge does not have to be laid. In fact, an information under section 443(1)(b) of the Criminal Code was laid and a search warrant was issued for the purpose of obtaining certain documents from the Minister of Labour. There was an incorrect address on the search warrant, however, and the Minister of Labour made arrangements to deliver the documents to the RCMP despite this.

Mr. Nowlan: Was there an affidavit?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into an argument on the question of law with my good friend but it can be done two ways. Under section 443 if by sworn information a search warrant was issued, then there is certain information in that document and of course that is in form one following from section 443. I am asking what information was on that document in question?

Mr. Allmand: The document is filed in the court record in Hamilton, I believe. It was obtained in criminal proceedings against Kenneth Elliott, Robert A. Henderson, Robert P. Henderson, Harry Atkins and Reginald Fisher.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad we at least got that information because it should help a lot of people to get information. What was the complaint made against those gentlemen that led to such an unusual procedure in regard to a distinguished member of this House?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the RCMP were investigating certain irregularities that took place in the Hamilton Harbour Commission and in pursuit of that investigation they had this search warrant issued.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who seems to have left the chamber.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY PROGRAM—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN NEGOTIATIONS FOR LOAN FROM EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one or two that were asked earlier. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister could indicate to the House in connection with the program announced yesterday by his colleagues for shipbuilding and subsidies on shipbuilding, whether the Minister of Transport in his capacity as leader of the Quebec wing of the Liberal Party was in any way involved in the negotiations that led to the arrangements for the loan because it is from the loan for the ships that the subsidies would flow. Could the minister indicate whether he was involved in the negotiations that preceeded this arrangement?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): You mean the ship herself?

Mr. Forrestall: No, no. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I am not sure what the minister means with respect to the ship. I am talking about the export—I cannot think of the name—the Canadian Export Development loan from which would flow the subsidy. Without the loan the ships would not be built and the subsidy would not be available to the shipbuilder. I am asking whether the Minister of Transport or the President of the Treasury Board was involved in the negotiations leading up to the approval of the loan for those vessels from which would flow the subsidy?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I can make a very general answer, Mr. Speaker. I was never involved in any kind of subsidy negotiated between the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and any company.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED FAILURE TO ACCEPT APPLICANTS FROM ATLANTIC PROVINCES FOR POSITION OF AIR STEWARDESS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport and I gave him notice of it two or three days ago. In view of the fact that Air Canada did not accept one of 264 applications from the three Atlantic provinces for air stewardess positions, has the minister investigated this evidence of discrimination and can he report his findings to the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did investigate. I have the figures here somewhere but I think it would be simpler to give them to the hon. member so that he can put questions on them tomorrow.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I have the figures and the answer that I got to an order paper question indicated that more than these 264 applicants did not meet the minimum standards of Air Canada. I wonder if the minister could ask Air Canada to describe what is wrong with the people in eastern Canada. Are they not as efficient, not as capable, not as educated? Why are they being turned down?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a fair question.

An hon. Member: What about a fair answer?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It will be a fair answer. I know you will be a little bit disappointed but I have to be honest. Before 1973 there were no statistics on file regarding applicants for jobs with Air Canada. It is only since 1973 that records have been kept but the system is not so refined that we can say exactly the place from which employees come. I think it is a bad way of doing things and the place from which they come should be indicated. Someone from St. John's, Newfoundland may come to Montreal and get a job with Air Canada, and so be attributed to Montreal rather than Newfoundland. It may happen that way. There is no distinction between applicants by region.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Could the minister let us know when the long heralded bill to set up a human rights commission will be introduced? May we expect it before Easter so that we may have a chance to look at it?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it should be just before or just after the Easter recess. We are taking advantage of the fact that the House is so occupied with other matters to look at some final details which we want to have in the best possible form.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question. Has the draft bill undergone at least a dozen revisions to meet objections from within the public service about its information aspect? In other words, is the objection that the Human Rights Commission will have access to a good deal more information than the government or its servants are now ready to disclose? Is that the holdup?

Mr. Lang: No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. There have been many drafts of this bill, of course, and further discussions within the government on many subjects but that has not been a particularly sore point.

INDUSTRY

FAILURE OF MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—INQUIRY AS TO ASSETS TO COVER MONEY OWING GOVERNMENT—PROPORTION OF CONDITIONAL AND UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the failure of Microsystems International which has been the recipient of some $30 million in government grants and some $7 million in government loans, I should like to ask the minister what assets the company has in connection with the money owing to the government and whether those are assets just of Microsystems International or of its parent company Northern Electric or Bell Canada Limited?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is some production equipment associated with the project which is presently being discussed and negotiated. This is the equipment which was provided as security for the government loan.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Were the advances given to Microsystems unconditional or was there some provision for repayment of part of these grants in light of the failure of the venture for which they were given? If so, what proportion of these grants does the government anticipate it can recoup?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, roughly speaking the conditional grants were just under $13 million and there were other grants of $16 million in round figures.

● (1440)

FAILURE OF MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—POSSIBLE ASSUMPTION OF PORTION OF TAX LOSS BY NORTHERN ELECTRIC OR BELL CANADA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will tax losses accruing to Microsystems be applied specifically to Microsystems or will part of that tax loss be assumed by Northern Electric or Bell telephone, in order to reduce taxes.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information. I will try to get it for the hon. member. I think it is clear that research and development requires large sums of money and involves a great deal of risk.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SCARBOROUGH BLUFFS—POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO FOR SHORELINE PROTECTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment, and I did not have an opportunity to give her notice of it. Will the government of Canada enter into a shoreline protection agreement with the government of Ontario, dealing with property damage and erosion around the Great Lakes, with particular reference to the stabilizing of the Scarborough bluffs? I raise this question because within the space of a week a large section of these historic bluffs measuring 150 feet in height, 150 wide and 15 feet back from the edge, fell away from the cliff face and was washed away in Lake Ontario.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend for the moment to conclude an agreement with the government of Ontario on the specific matter referred to by the hon. member. I would like to remind him that, generally, we are dealing with flooding matters, and that we do not have any program dealing with erosion problems along the Canadian water streams.

HEALTH SERVICES

REQUEST FOR AID IN PROVIDING AMBULANCE EQUIPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As it has been proved that ambulances equipped with cardiac monitoring units can monitor the heart rate and heart action of heart attack victims, and apply corrective procedures in cases involving fibrillation and give other necessary treatment until the patient arrives at the hospital, will the minister give active leadership and co-operation in encouraging this method of saving the lives of people stricken with heart attacks outside hospitals?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this responsibility is indeed essentially provincial and different developments occurred on this subject in the last months in the provinces. However, I must inform the hon. member that under the direction of a federal-provincial working committee now in operation, some recommendations are being drafted to improve ambulance services in Canada. In particular, an in-depth study is being done on all emergency services.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider giving the appropriate medical authorities a grant under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, which applies right across Canada.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, is it a question of whether we will give a grant for the medical services, or to the people doing the study?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, this comes under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, which has to do with active treatment.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the question further.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT OF CANADIAN COMPANY AND AWARDING TO UNITED STATES COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the Ministry of Transport cancelled the contract of Best Cleaners & Contractors Ltd., a 100 per cent Canadian-owned firm at Vancouver International Airport, and awarded the contract to a 100 per cent American-owned firm, and as lots of Canadians in my riding are out of work because of this switch, can the minister say if the government has abandoned its policy of giving preference to Canadian-owned firms, as opposed to American-owned firms.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course, I am inclined to share exactly the same opinion as expressed by my hon. friend on the other side of the House, but there is something else which must be considered, besides this kind of relationship between Canada and the United States. There is the fact that we are supposed to give the contract to the lowest bidder, and this is what we did.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not really answer my question. I asked, is it now government policy to award contracts to American firms whose bids are only 3 per cent lower than the bids of Canadian firms. I understand that it has been government policy to award contracts to Canadian firms if their bids are not more than 10 per cent greater than the bids of foreign firms. Can the minister advise the House if that is not the policy of his department?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any general policy that will allow the government to give a contract to a Canadian firm if it means that we must pay between 25 per cent and 50 per cent more money for the same contract.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENT POLICY IN AWARDING CONTRACTS WHEN DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN BIDS OF CANADIAN AND FOREIGN COMPANIES SMALL

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Is it not a fact that the minister's department awards contracts to Canadian firms if their bids are within 10 per cent of foreign bids. The contract bid I talked about was only 3 per cent higher, not 25 per cent or 50 per cent. Is it not a fact that the minister's department awards contracts to Canadian firms even when their bids are a little higher than those of foreign firms.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, under our policy we apply rules by which we can give preference to the lowest foreign content for a contract up to 10 per cent of the difference of the foreign content.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CEILING FOR CALCULATING $500 GRANT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question, without supplementary, is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, reconsider the ceilings used in calculating the amount of grants, up to $500, for new housing in the metropolitan Halifax area, since the formula seems to be out of kilter with actual prices being paid. A sympathetic yes will suffice.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, CMHC is indeed reviewing the lending limits on which the $500 is based. It applies in the Halifax area, as I am aware, and in other parts of the country. It is under continuing review.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF STRIKE AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked yesterday by the hon. member for Vancouver South of the Minister of Finance. As without grain exports Canada would be a net importer of food; as in the first half of the present crop year the port of Vancouver operated at 30 per cent or 35 per cent below average capacity, thereby creating an imbalance of payments; as pressure, questions and suggestions put to supposedly responsible ministers have been of no avail, would the minister as a last resort exercise the authority of his office and initiate negotiations for resolving the serious situation on the west coast before the economy of this country collapses completely.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I get the message.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As nearly 40 ships are tied up on the west coast and as Canada is losing credibility as a supplier of grain, has the minister considered any alternative to allowing the present serious and deplorable situation to continue.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not underestimate the seriousness of the situation.

TRANSPORT

DREDGING CONTRACT IRREGULARITIES—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE SUSPENSION OF EMPLOYEES PENDING INVESTIGATION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport concerns dredging contract irregularities. Can the minister tell us if any officials or employees of his department have been suspended from their duties, pending the outcome of the police investigation into the contracts?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, but I will inquire.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF UNITED STATES LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General concerning dredging contracts. In view of certain alleged circumstances which have come to light as a result of the RCMP investigation of the Hamilton harbour situation, have the FBI or other American law enforcement agencies been brought into the picture, in view of possible frauds perpetrated against the U.S. government?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard anything in that respect.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF CONTINGENCY PLANS TO ENSURE EXPORT MOVEMENT IN VIEW OF STRIKES—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a question asked earlier today by the hon. member for Red Deer and is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. As the Canadian Wheat Board is talking about ending producer deliveries to country elevators because of the seriousness of strikes and as the minister said, on February 26, I believe, in reply to the hon. member for Marquette, that the government has quotas worked out and was looking at plans, and since the Acting Prime Minister did not seem to know the other day what those plans are, can the minister responsible for the Wheat Board now tell the House what the government proposes to do about the strike?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should say, first, that as long as there is as much space as there is in the country, it is difficult to relate the strike to any curtailment of deliveries. There is, in fact, more elevator space for the delivery of grain at the present time than there was at the same time a year ago. This should be taken into consideration with regard to the aspect the hon. member has raised. It does not, of course, detract from the seriousness of the situation. We are very conscious of its gravity.

● (1450)

In my answer to questions about what we might be examining in the course of the strike, or after it has been settled, I indicated that while the strike is on it would be better not to comment in detail on various strategies we might be prepared to follow, just as it is not useful to talk about the negotiations which are going on. As far as the situation following the strike is concerned, there have been discussions going on between the Department of Transport, the Wheat Board and the railways with a view to organizing programs designed to maximize the movement of grain the moment the strike is over. Our approach has always been to attempt to minimize any damage by recovering as quickly as possible from a setback such as we are suffering now.

Mr. Murta: I wish to address a final supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. I am beginning to believe that the government does not understand how serious the situation is. If there has been no move toward settling the strike by Monday, would the government consider bringing in emergency legislation in the early part of the week to end the deplorable situation affecting grain movement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not think I can give an undertaking of that kind. I should like to emphasize what my hon. friend the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has said—that the government is extremely concerned and is investigating every possible way by which the movement of grain can be resumed, particularly on the West coast where there have been so many interruptions in recent weeks.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CONTROL HAZARDS FROM ASBESTOS FIBRES AT THETFORD MINES

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the companies operating the asbestos mines in Thetford Mines have been doing so outside the law since 1947, with respect to silicosis and environment protection, could the minister tell the House whether he has taken effective measures to protect the workers of that industry, since they must work under six to ten times more dangerous conditions than those existing in the asbestos mines of the United States and Britain?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question of security within factories is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. As far as the federal government has a responsibility in that field, it comes under my colleague, the Minister of Environment. Therefore, if the hon. member would put his question to her, she will be pleased to give him an answer.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question.

As regards the protection of workers in the asbestos mines of the Thetford Mines region, it seems that the companies fail to respect the legislation on the protection of the environment and their workers to such an extent that their employees are exposed to dangers six to ten times greater than those existing in the mines of the United States and Britain.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, industrial health standards are under the jurisdiction of provincial departments. However, the Department of Environment has the responsibility of establishing national standards concerning the particles of asbestos which come out from plant chimneys. With particular regard to asbestos, a group of officials in my department are currently gathering data on the quantity of particles escaping from industrial chimneys in Canada. Once these data are collected, we shall work out general standards for the whole country. As their jurisdiction requires, the provinces will be responsible for their implementation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DIFFICULTY EXPERIENCED BY OVERSEAS PERSONNEL IN FILING INCOME TAX RETURNS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. The Treasury Board and others involved have sent T-4 slips to members of the Canadian Armed Forces serving overseas in Cyprus and other areas. Their spouses are suggesting there may be a problem in getting these back in time to file their income tax returns. Will the minister consider having them picked up by service personnel, returned to Canada by service aircraft, then sent to regional headquarters and taken to the spouses by military personnel so that they can get the returns in without delay?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Air Transport Command provides an excellent service to our personnel in Cyprus and the Middle East, so I am certain they can be of assistance in connection with this problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED SHIPMENT OF ARMS TO SOUTHEAST ASIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of information published by the Pentagon that in the last three years, war material was sold by Canada through a Crown corporation, Canadian Commercial Corporation, in the amount of $50 million, this material being earmarked for use in Southeast Asia, and in the light of frequent denials that Canada is involved in the war in Indo-China and having regard to the policy reaffirmed by the minister last week that it was not cabinet policy to send arms to areas involved in conflict, will the hon. gentleman assure the House that such shipments will be stopped forthwith?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not sure I understood or grasped all the details of the hon. member's question, but Canada does not send arms to Indo-China. That has been a long term policy and it is still in effect.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister acquaint himself with the facts by getting in touch with the Pentagon which published in the Canadian press detailed figures showing an acceptance of $350 million in the last three years in Canadian war materials?

Mr. MacEachen: I shall be happy to seek information, although I am not sure I would rely on the Pentagon as my source, as the hon. member does.

Mr. Brewin: If the minister does not want to rely on the Pentagon, will he approach the Canadian Press which published this information in considerable detail?

GRAIN

EFFECT OF STRIKES ON EXPORT MOVEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO POINT AT WHICH GOVERNMENT WILL INTERVENE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Earlier, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Marquette, the minister suggested the government was considering a plan for immediate implementation. May I ask the minister whether there is a certain point at which the government would consider that the losses to the farmer were so great as to require the strike to be resolved by a back-to-work order, as was done last year?

[Mr. Douglas (Bruce).]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): That is one of those hypothetical questions to which the answer is so obvious that none needs to be given.

Mr. Korchinski: How much must the farmers lose before the government decides to intervene directly? Does the minister have a certain point in mind?

EFFECT OF STRIKES ON EXPORT MOVEMENT—CALL FOR BACK-TO-WORK ORDER BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Acting Prime Minister received a wire from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture calling for a back-to-work order to be imposed on the workers involved in the grain tie-up in order that grain exports can start moving again, and, if so, can the hon. gentleman tell us the nature of his reply to that wire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I have not personally seen this particular telegram but I have seen similar messages from other western interests. As I said in reply to an earlier question, we are examining all possible ways of dealing with this particular impasse, but I do not think it would be in the public interest to reveal our plans at the present time.

● (1500)

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government contemplating any specific action to end this impasse, and if not, why not?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the President of the Treasury Board has said, it is this government's policy—I do not know whether it is the policy of members on the other side—to support the principles of collective bargaining, and we would like to see them work. Of course, there are circumstances in which perhaps the public interest can be better served; but in the meantime I do not think it would help to settle this strike if we now threaten action by parliament.

INCREASE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA BUDGET—POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF GUIDELINES MINISTER DISCUSSED WITH PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Does the recent budget of the province of British Columbia amounting to an increase of almost 50 per cent fall within the guidelines which the minister worked out or discussed with his provincial counterparts at various meetings, and has there been a consensus along these lines?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice because I think it deserves reflection.

HOUSING

CASA LOMA PROJECT, BURNABY, B.C.—ALLEGED USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO AID BANKRUPT COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and is about housing. It concerns the purchase of the Casa Loma project in Burnaby, B.C. by the British Columbia provincial government with financing through CMHC. Is it now the public housing policy of the federal government to use CMHC funds to bail out bankrupt firms and provide a profit for the owners who only six weeks ago had paid off the subcontractors at the rate of 40 cents on the dollar?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a situation that I am watching closely. This purchase was made by Dunhill Investments, I believe it is, the housing corporation of the British Columbia government, and it is up to them to determine whether or not it was a desirable purchase. From our viewpoint we examined it carefully, did an appraisal, and made certain it met Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's standards. Our regional director in Vancouver is watching the situation very closely and reporting to me. So far indications are that no money has been given to the project at all. I believe a loan commitment was made in December, but we want to make sure that all standards of CMHC and the National Housing Act have been met.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether he or any of his officials in the department were even aware that there were unpaid creditors and liens against the building at the time the loan was being negotiated?

Mr. Danson: As far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, none of our officials was aware of any such dealings. This was a deal between the province of British Columbia, or their housing corporation, Dunhill Investments, and the owners. I think we must give a certain amount of credence to the integrity of provincial governments, but after that we watch them rather carefully to make sure that our money is secure and full value is received by the Canadian people. But I am awaiting further reports.

HEALTH

ALLEGED UNACCEPTABILITY OF VACCINE PRODUCED BY CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES—REASON FOR BUILDING VACCINE PRODUCING FACILITIES IN BRAZIL

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of his belief, expressed a few days ago in the House, that the vaccine produced by Connaught Laboratories is up to acceptable standards, would the minister explain why Britain has not been importing any of our vaccine for the past two years and why there has never been any export of it to the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member recognizes that this is a question concerning general policy.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I fail to see how there can be a supplementary question to a disallowed question. The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question and direct it to the Minister of Finance who has responsibility for the Canada Development Corporation. In view of the fact that the low quality of Sabin vaccine produced by Connaught Laboratories has made it unacceptable for export to the two countries I have already mentioned, and in view of the fact that the purpose of the Canada Development Corporation is to allow Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprises, can the minister indicate why the Canada Development Corporation, instead of building a new human virus vaccine production facility in Canada, is doing so in Brazil?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the preliminary statement of the hon. member and the premise of his question are not correct.

DATE OF COMPLETION OF INVESTIGATIONS INTO SIU AND HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION AND RECEIPT OF TRANSCRIPT OF PRELIMINARY HEARING

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the interesting, unfolding Keystone Cops saga of the RCMP and the ship called The Answer, which left a little to be desired in terms of the RCMP getting their man, I wonder whether the Solicitor General would check with his officials, especially with the commissioner of the RCMP, and find out when the investigation into the SIU matter will be completed, when the investigation into the Hamilton harbour matter will be completed, and whether he has yet received the transcript of the preliminary hearing in the Hamilton harbour matter. If he has not, why not; and could he report back tomorrow or at the first opportunity so that we will begin to find out in fairly definite terms how long we will have to wait, or are we going to wait until the Prime Minister comes back so the minister can consult him and determine what to do?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member asked me three questions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Five.

Mr. Allmand: Perhaps five, but I noted three. I check with the commissioner of the RCMP each week in regard to the SIU investigation. At our last meeting he told me that the investigation is still underway. There are many documents and witnesses to be examined and he cannot give me a date when the investigation will be completed, but he feels that it will be in the near future.

With respect to the Hamilton Harbour Commission, as I pointed out recently in the House charges have already been laid against five persons. Three have been found guilty and two are going to trial in the near future. The investigation is still underway because during the preliminary inquiry into two of these cases further evidence came to light which led to further investigations. Consequently, those investigations must be pursued.

With respect to the transcript of the preliminary inquiry, a transcript has now been delivered to the RCMP in Toronto. They are examining the transcript but I should say it is a very lengthy one comprising six volumes of evidence. We have also ordered another copy of the transcript for my office in Ottawa; so far it has not been received. In the meanwhile, we are in communication with Toronto with regard to those parts of the transcript that relate to questions in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege concerning the right of members to ask for and obtain information in the House of Commons. I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and also one to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) today, both of which were unanswered. I attempted to obtain answers to these questions by direct contact with the office of the minister of health, with the Canada Development Corporation and Connaught Laboratories. On every occasion the information was refused. If a member does not have the right, or has the right taken away from him, to seek this information in the House, I should like to ask Your Honour where he can obtain it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The reason the hon. member's question was circumscribed today is not related to his right to seek information but simply by the manner in which he is entitled to use the question period to seek information. There are many other methods for the seeking of information which I am sure are well known to the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what the program will be for today, tomorrow and next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, today we are going on with Bill C-50. When that is completed we will move on to Bill C-41 in respect of western grain stabilization. Tomorrow is an allotted day, when it will be for the opposition to say what the business will be; and I think the same is true of Monday.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, is the minister in a position to say what business the government proposes to place before the House on Tuesday and Wednesday?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an opportunity of speaking with other House leaders so we can arrange a mutually satisfactory program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of government measures being brought before the House, I should like to ask the government House leader when Bill C-25 will be brought before us again. On two days in a row the Minister of National Health and Welfare has referred to the fact that this bill has not been processed. I would point out that it has not even been called by the government since December 16. I recognize that the opposition is using the ways open to it of trying to get the legislation improved, but in view of the importance of the subject could this bill not be brought before us again at an early date?

While I am on my feet, I wonder if I might ask the minister about one other piece of legislation. In view of the fact that the government is known to favour legislation respecting Heritage Day, and in view of the difficulty this matter is having as a private member's bill, would the government consider bringing in legislation on this matter?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Bill C-25, the reason it was taken off our current discussions was the number of occasions that I found it very difficult to arrange for a continuation of the debate. The Minister of the Environment has made a similar request a number of times, and I have been asked by the House leader of one party or another to postpone or delay its reintroduction. If I could have some undertaking from the other side that they would not delay passage of this measure, I would be very happy to bring it back. In saying that, I am not suggesting that the opposition should not have the opportunity to oppose the bill, but simply that hon. members opposite should be consistent as to whether or not they want this bill. I think the best way of deciding is by having the debate come to a conclusion and a vote taken if necessary.

In respect of the Heritage Day question, this has been under discussion by the government a number of times and I will see whether I can obtain a clearer answer in the near future.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I had before six o'clock last evening I was discussing the amendments proposed, and I ended by saying that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should be ashamed to bring in an amendment to the old stabilization act, presenting it to the farmers as the stabilization plan he has been telling them he is going to bring forth to stabilize agriculture. These amendments are not very great at all, and you could do almost anything under the old act that you can with the amended act. One thing which the minister said in his speech—and I thought at the time I heard him correctly—I would like to read now:

> There is also a provision in the bill which some of my colleagues in cabinet suggest gives the Minister of Agriculture a blank cheque to support the food producers of the nation.

That is all he said. He did not go on to say what the provision of this bill was; he left that to the imagination. If he is saying that the bill will now be so written that he can do more than it says, I would respectfully submit that he could have done the same thing under the old stabilization act and really did not need to bring in amendments to do exactly what he is trying to do with these amendments. The minister attended a meeting of the Horticultural Council on Monday morning and told them, among other things:

> Nearly 40 per cent of the food we eat, by weight, is fruits and vegetables, or their products. I hope you realize how much impact on the food system your decisions can have.

He went on to explain that the percentage of fruits and vegetables eaten in Canada has gone down in comparison to the amount produced. In other words, the producers are not producing as much today in the way of fruits and vegetables as they used to. He also said that the percentage of fruit canned in Canada is less than it used to be. After giving them these figures, he said:

> What do these figures mean? How much of this slide away from self-sufficiency is because Canadians now have more money and are buying a wider variety of tropical and offshore fruits and vegetables? How much of this stems from the fact that our best fruit lands and vegetable soils are being bulldozed for highways and built up into towns? How much of it is due to the limitations of our climate? Are our marketing systems or our production skills lagging behind other parts of the world? Think about this.

Over the years I have thought a lot about what the minister was asking there and I think it is very significant that he left out the question,—"How much of it is due to government policies or lack of government policies in agriculture in Canada, especially in the fruit and vegetable fields?" The next night the Minister of Agriculture went to one of the areas in southern Ontario and made a speech to another group, telling them that farmers do not have as much tariff protection as industry; they have only 8 per cent tariff protection while industry, on the average, has 16 per cent. Well do I know this, and we have been concerned in the farm community in Canada because this government over the last few years has been giving concessions in the tariff field for agriculture and we have been losing ground.

I think it is well known, and can be well documented, that this is what has happened. The one thing that comes to my mind is the agreement that was made during the Kennedy round on tariffs, in that over a five-year period the tariff would be taken off apples. Before one year was out, what did the minister of finance of the day do? Mr. Edgar Benson removed the Canadian tariff on apples. He then came to us and said the United States would do the same thing. The United States did nothing of the kind; they did not remove their tariff but, instead, said there was an agreement and they were going to abide by it. That is what they did. As a result of this agreement, we had duty-free apples coming into Canada but had to pay duty on apples going into the United States. This is the kind of thing the government has been doing. There has been a lack of any comprehensive agricultural policy, with no stability in agriculture.

The farmer's favourite expression over the last few years has been, "It will be better next year". As a result of these policies during this time, what did the federal government do? It created a vacuum where there was little or no stability in agriculture in Canada because it had no over-all, comprehensive agricultural policy.

What is happening now? The provinces are moving into this vacuum. Already we find that in British Columbia there is an income insurance scheme. The reason is that the vacuum was there and the province is moving in to do something to help the farmers in British Columbia. The Minister of Agriculture—I notice he is not here—when being interviewed on television a while ago in my province said that the province of British Columbia could not come up with a scheme without him and, that they needed him. He said they were just politicking. But the province has a scheme; it is there and it is working. It covers milk, fruit, hogs and field tomatoes. Negotiations are being carried on in respect of vegetables, table eggs, hatching eggs, sheep and blueberries.

The fact that the beef growers are looking very hard and very long at the British Columbia insurance scheme shows the state of affairs the beef industry is in in British Columbia. These ranchers, these beef producers, over the years have wanted very little government interference. What has happened to them in the past year has caused them to take a look at schemes such as this because they are in dire circumstances. They have borrowed from the banks to the allowable limit. Many of them are almost on the verge of bankruptcy.

What did this government do? It interfered with the beef industry in quite a few ways during the last year, none of which interference was of any use to the ranchers in British Columbia. The minister told me that only 50 per cent of the beef produced would come under his so-called stabilization scheme last year. I would submit that there was less than 50 per cent in British Columbia. This scheme did not do anything for the producer in British Columbia. Now I say to the Minister of Agriculture—and I see he has returned—that he should take a really good look at the British Columbia income insurance scheme.

Yesterday in his speech the minister said that the provinces were all coming to him, asking when he intended to bring in something in respect of stabilization. I wonder what they will think when they see what he has brought before this House. As I said before, the minister said on television in Kelowna that the British Columbia government could not do anything, so far as an income scheme was concerned, without him or the federal government. He said they were just politicking. That scheme is working.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture last week spent a long time discussing the income insurance scheme. We see now that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has made a representation to the provincial government in respect of an income scheme. The UPA in Quebec is pressing the Quebec government for an income scheme. The British Columbia insurance scheme is based on the cost of production. This is a real cost of production; it is not similar to the cost of production written into Bill C-41 in respect of stabilization, where the wage to producers is not taken into account, where the interest on investment is not taken into account, and where depreciation and other things are not taken into account. In the British Columbia provincial scheme everything is accounted for, even a living wage for the producer.

Certainly in respect of any scheme such as this, after having the farm credit bill and raising the rate of farm credit to $150,000, a large amount of interest will have to be paid on that $150,000. How can you have any type of scheme without having the interest on the investment included? In the British Columbia scheme the producers can opt in or opt out only once. The scheme continues for five years.

I say that the federal government must become involved in what the provinces are doing. The farmers will not be satisfied with anything less. They are not farming any longer as a way of life. When young people enter farming, they want what everyone else has. They want the type of life everyone else has. They want to be able to live like other working people in Canada. I do not believe they are willing to put in the long hours that were formerly put in by people who were dedicated to farming as a way of life. This bill does not come close to resembling the British Columbia scheme. It is just disaster insurance, especially if it is interpreted as it has been in the past.

It was not necessary to amend this act in order to accomplish a lot more than has been accomplished. Much more could have been accomplished, but it would have had to be done by the cabinet. One must go to the cabinet with hat in hand and obtain its approval. Also, there is a lot of lobbying and politicking. This went on in an effort to get an increase. There was no increase. I know this because I was involved in an effort to get the use of the legislation broadened in the way in which it had been said it could be broadened.

Now we find that even with the minister's blank cheque he still must go to the cabinet in order to have it broadened. I do not think he has a blank cheque at all. He has to do exactly what has been done in respect of the old act. This will mean it will be a cabinet decision. Let us stop for a moment and think about the provinces in Canada having their own schemes. There is one in British Columbia, Ontario is looking very hard at one and Quebec is looking very hard at one. Will these be the same plans? What will the ramifications be when each province is in the income insurance plan field in a way which gives the farmers the stability they want without the federal government being involved?

If these three large producing provinces decide to have stabilization programs of their own, programs that they can afford, what about the provinces that cannot afford to have one? Once again I say that the federal government will have to take a harder look at what is going on in Canada. It will have to listen more closely to what the farmers are saying if it does not want chaos to ensue.

Bill C-50 leaves much to be desired. All other products but those that are designated in the bill are left to the whim of the cabinet. Whether or not they are brought under the act is left to the cabinet to decide. With regard to such products as fruit and vegetables, the minister told the Horticultural Council that they constitute nearly 40 per cent of the foodstuffs consumed by Canadians. Much time will be spent in negotiation and lobbying with regard to these products. Another reason the production of fruit and vegetables has decreased in Canada today is that there is lack of stability in the production and marketing of these products. By the time these products are brought under the protection of the act, a farmer may be out of business or so disillusioned with farming that he considers selling his farm and moving to an urban area.

If 90 per cent support is all a farmer can get or else he has to go hat in hand to the cabinet, then the situation is bad. With regard to regionalism, it is thought that special deals can be made with the provinces provided the provinces and the producers make up the extra amount of money. One wonders what the minister was thinking when he drafted the bill. Perhaps he thought that we should add a provision so that the provincial income insurance programs could be included. This whole issue will become very political. If there is to be any kind of federal plan and if there is to be a different plan in each province, then a formula must be devised so that quick action can be taken, and the long intervals during which a provincial plan is negotiated would thus be avoided.

This government should catch up with the times and implement a federal stabilization plan which will be of benefit to the farmers. It is certain that farmers are the greatest people in Canada. They produce more per person than any industry. However, they are concerned about the present situation because they have a hard time making a living. They do not want to be second-class citizens. They are knowledgeable and hard working people, with production know-how. They want to work the same hours as everyone else, and that means that more people will have to be employed in farming.

Farmers want some stability in the cost of their products, and they are certainly entitled to it. However, this bill does not provide that stability unless a disaster occurs. As I said before, this bill does not even come close to providing the stability which the minister has been saying he will give to farmers. The result of this lack of stability in the price of agricultural products will be that more food shortages will take place in the future.

The other day the minister said in a speech in southern Ontario—the reason I know what he said is that he has been sending all his speeches to my office and I have been reading them just in case I pick up a gem and find he said something different—that we exported $4 billion worth of farm products. However, he neglected to say that the bulk of those exports was made up of prairie wheat, and that if it were not for the export of wheat we would be a net importer of all the other agricultural products, which we almost are at present.

The reason for these food shortages is lack of stability in farming in Canada. We know that there are food shortages in the world. The farmers know that, and they want to produce more food. But they do not want to overproduce and listen to the same lecture that the potato growers in New Brunswick are getting today. Farmers want stability in agriculture. If they do not get it, they will stop producing; they will become less dedicated and work shorter hours. They will produce only what they can use themselves. The other possibility is that in this situation large corporate farms will come into being. They will look after production according to their own production formulas and, as is happening in industry when companies get into trouble, cut down on production. This is exactly what will happen in farming.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in taking part today in this debate on Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, first of all I would like to pay what I consider a well deserved tribute to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), even though he is criticized from time to time by Opposition members—after all, that is what they are here for, we cannot blame them—;since he was appointed, he has done a tremendous job in defending the cause of Canadian farmers in general. I would like to thank him on behalf of young farmers whom he tends to be more particularly willing to help. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay him tribute because it had been several years since we have had a Minister of Agriculture so thoroughly dedicated to helping farmers. He has travelled throughout Canada from Halifax to Vancouver, accepted almost every invitation to meet farmers, to have talks with them, discuss their problems and above all devise with them solutions to the problems which agriculture is now faced with.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, fits into a global effort by the government, and the Minister of Agriculture especially, to implement a system of supply and reasonable prices for food products which Canadian people need. Since the beginning of the present session, 9 bills dealing with agriculture have been introduced in this House; 2 of them went through third reading and have become part of our Statutes, one is at the report stage one was referred to the Standing Committee of Agriculture. Five other bills, among which the one we are now dealing with, are still under study by the House.

Bill C-50 aims at providing producers with better protection. How is that to be achieved? Mr. Speaker, there are three main amendments in that bill which aim at improving the current situation. First of all, the minister wants to reduce from ten to five the number of years on which to establish the average yield of a given commodity.

Second, the minister wants to take 90 per cent of this average income instead of 80 per cent as it is done now. Third, and I think this is the most important proposal now before us, the minister wants to include a rather complex formula, a pegging formula which will take into account the increase in production costs during the last five years and adding this figure to 90 per cent of the average in the last five years.

Obviously, it is a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I fully support this bill and I urge my colleagues to do the same even if they want to criticize it a little. As such, this bill tends to establish a floor price for farm products. It is not perfect.

Mr. Speaker, I do not like the word stabilization. In my opinion, the word stabilization is not very accurate. I would rather have the bill deal with a guaranteed minimum price and I think that the amendments to the legislation today are precisely meant to set a guaranteed minimum price for farm products, a price which will take in consideration the production costs, the minimum cost of production for a certain commodity evidently including a return on investments as well as a fair salary for the producer.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is also innovating since the minister stated that from now on the support price will be set in advance, that is at the beginning of a year the producers will know for some commodities mentioned in the bill what will eventually be the support price. They will know at the beginning of a year in the case of pork, for example, based on the five previous years and the 90 per cent formula as well as cost index formula, what will be the nimimum price set throughout the year.

It is certainly a big improvement because right now only milk producers are almost assured to know at the beginning of any given year what their revenue will be. Of course, production costs are still unpredictable but among farmers, milk producers are the only ones who know in advance what they will receive for their production of the year. It is the same for virtually no other agricultural producers. The stabilization bill and the proposed amendment are aimed at establishing what I should call a guaranteed minimum price.

Mr. Speaker, that guaranteed minimum price could be obtained by establishing and recognizing a series of standard farms that could be selected throughout the country. We could have capable operators with fairly recent but not necessarily the most modern facilities. Lastly, we could establish our real costs on the basis of those of efficient operators. I do not think it is enough to have economists sitting somewhere in an ivory tower and, when I mention economists, I know that our minister is listening because he does not necessarily trust them all the time. It is not enough then to have economists sitting in ivory towers and studying statistics to establish what should be the minimum price of a product.

We absolutely must have units for a given product, in the field, in the provinces, as well in Halifax as in the province of Quebec, in the Prairies as in British Columbia, which units can serve as a reliable proof of the real production costs of certain farm products. From their data we could set support prices which are important since the bill is intended to apply them on a regional basis. Indeed, a minimum price, Mr. Speaker, adopted for a given product, in a given area, could be clearly advantageous for one area but disadvantageous for another.

Here is an example. If the minimum price for producing, let us say, a pig were based on the minimum production cost in a Saskatchewan unit, where farmers can find surplus grains to feed their pigs, and applied to Canada as a whole, it would probably be unfair to the producers of Newfoundland, New Brunswick and British Columbia. That would be unfair for those who have to pay much higher production costs being located farther from the supply sources, and because, owing to the economic context those production units are in, the production costs are much higher, due to the cost of land, services and other costs.

That is why it is necessary to have standard farms established in every province which could be used as sound standards for production costs on which our economists could then calculate the so-called indexation formula on a regional basis. That formula would really reflect the costs on regional basis, so that the producers will not be disadvantaged in some instances, or too advantaged in some others, since that could happen too. If that happened, production would inevitably shift, which might result in overproduction and a subsequent drop in prices.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a specific area of the dairy industry, because even though the bill does not refer directly to that industry, it does indirectly because it does refer to industrial milk products.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) made one of his typical attacks against the Minister and the Department yesterday. He described in particular the dairy industry's position, saying that our policy had been a disaster, that the Canadian Dairy Commission was in fact a disaster, if I refer to what he said.

Mr. Speaker, I totally object that attitude by the hon. member for Crowfoot, because his statement definitely does not reflect the situation, or at least his words went beyond his thoughts.

I can say that the dairy industry is doing well, although it is facing problems. I also recognize milk producers are facing difficulties. They had the recent hardship of a marked increase in input costs. Fortunately it seems that for a few weeks at least, input costs have been declining, which is very important as far as milk producers are concerned, since they have fixed revenues and they will not go down. Therefore, a decline in input costs will obviously mean better net income for milk producers. I very sincerely hope this will happen, because it will be needed if they are going to stay in production and bring about a recovery in that industry.

[Mr. Lessard.]

It has been said by our friend the hon. member for Crowfoot that the industry was going down the drain. Such is not the case. Some producers quit farming in 1974, which is normal. Some will always quit, but fortunately others will come in, and things look good enough. It could even be said the dairy herd has probably reached a bottom point. Statistics published at the Conference on farming outlooks show that even if there was a slight 3 percent decrease in the dairy herd, there is also a marked increase in the number of replacement heifers.

Since the figures are taken as of June 1 each year, it suggests that on June 1, 1975, we shall have practically the same dairy stock as the one we had in 1973 and I think that the total production figure of 16.8 billion pounds of milk for 1974 is probably a floor production and that in 1975 it will reach 17 billion pounds. There will be such an increase because the quality of the stock is improving. Not only the size of the stock will increase but, as the trend of the last years indicates, the production per cow will improve, resulting in a generally higher milk production for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now consider the price to the milk producer. In March 1974, that price was $7.17 a hundred weight pounds of industrial milk. In March 1975, one year later, it is $10.02, following three adjustments made in 1974 and the recent increase announced in February.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the price of industrial milk increased by 40 per cent. I note, and I am sure that my colleagues will do the same, that such an increase is good, and that even if it did not solve all the problems of the dairy industry, I think we can be proud of the efforts made by this government, by the House of Commons and, of course, by the producers, so that the price of milk in Canada might be raised for the producer.

That of course was reflected by the level of consumption, but it cannot be otherwise. And when the federal government's contribution to this global price amounts to $2.56 of the $10 a hundredweight, I think that this contribution of 25 per cent of the milk price from the federal treasury is very generous, and we have every reason to be proud of it. The $200 million, and even more, that we have distributed directly to the producers from the federal treasury, represented a very fair share, a marked effort and a very positive indication that this government and, namely, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) want to support agriculture in Canada, particularly the dairy industry, because it is a basic product which we could not easily do without. And I think that, as Canadians, we must make all the required efforts to ensure that we shall have enough milk in Canada to meet the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, this bill gives fairly wide authority to the minister. Of course, I would like to make some suggestions. The minister names some products in the bill, which means that we shall have the assurance that those products will be protected by law. The act gives the definition of the agricultural designated commodities. In subclause (a), there is a list of the products, and subclause (b) reads:

(b) any other natural or processed product of agriculture... (as defined in the Canadian Wheat Board Act and not marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board) designated by the Governor in Council as an agricultural commodity for the purposes of this Act, hereinafter called "designated commodity";"

Of course,it gives a guarantee for this class of products. But what about the other agricultural commodities? The producers who have those products will have to wait for the goodwill of the government and the minister, for the products to be protected. To receive the protection of the law, they will have no indication a year in advance that their products will be protected at a minimum price.

● (1600)

They will have to wait for the results of a disastrous end of year to make representations to their union or through provincial governments. They will have to have those pressures made on the government in order that their products be considered. And that will inevitably lead to some uncertainty. Mr. Speaker, I would have liked that a few commodities be mentioned in that bill, commodities such as potatoes and maple syrup, which are known and easily identified. Several other commodities could also have been mentioned, and the producers could have been given the guarantee that, should a setback in market prices occur, their revenues would be protected against an overly sharp drop.

That stabilization, Mr. Speaker, and this is not the most appropriate term, is designed to stabilize commodities, both up and down. In other words, it does not freeze a profit to the extend that the latter will not decline; it merely allows a less severe setback of the producer's revenue.

But this will not prevent a setback nor will it prevent or limit an increase. It will, of course, limit a setback but does not impose limits on an increase. That is why in trying to stabilize farm incomes we should ask ourselves if we are doing it at the right time when prices for many commodities are clearly below production costs.

In the last three years production costs for most commodities exceeded the income the producer received on the sale of his products. It is then clear that that five-year average will give a figure clearly below production costs, and I think it is the weakness of our legislation. Will the calculation, the determination of the indexation formula based on the increase in production costs for the five years on which the formula will be based fill that gap? Mr. Speaker, when the minister rises and closes this debate I would like him to explain a bit more clearly how that formula will work because, basically, it is in that formula that really lies the answer to the needs of farmers.

If that formula is not adequate, if it does not give precisely that fair margin of profit to producers as related to their production cost, if it does not properly reflect that increase in production costs in recent years, we are then going to stabilize the floor price for products clearly below the cost of production, and not necessarily have solved the problem. We might have prevented the problem from getting worse, of course, but we will not have necessarily solved the basic problem which is a return on work, investments and production costs, in fact a return on the market to cover costs. That is why I would like the minister to consider seriously adding certain commodities to his bill so they will be covered immediately, and second, I would like him to be more specific on the formula of indexation for those commodities. I spoke of standard farms, Mr. Speaker, and I have spoken of them more than once. Those standard farms which already exist to a certain extent in our country, although they have other objectives, could be extended, as far as their concept is concerned, to meet the objective I have mentioned.

Yet, will we succeed in keeping young farmers on the farms? Will we succeed in ensuring that our present farmers will be replaced and will we succeed in drawing other people to agriculture, to ensure Canadians with a sufficient production of food? It is also our duty to those who need it and for whom we are responsible.

We recently passed second reading amendments to the Farm Credit Act which will allow young farmers to get a start. This will help them get established in agriculture. I believe that we have not solved the whole problem, because if they are not given more credit, if fewer investments are required in the first place and if, which seems a good idea, they are allowed to earn some money outside of farming for five years to make their business a bit more profitable, and if we do not grant them a guaranteed income, I am not certain that we shall attract young people to farming, Mr. Speaker.

There is a lot of talk about a guaranteed income for society in general and I believe we should give a lot of thought to establishing a guaranteed income for farmers. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we should not consider a guaranteed salary for farmers because even if the salary were only basic, even if it were only $50 or $75 a week, I believe that the farmers would at least be ensured of a weekly or monthly minimum income and would have the incentive to work more to improve their farm, their productivity and the general performance of their business. This will probably have to be done, Mr. Speaker. Some may say that this is going very far. We should not be afraid of going that far, Mr. Speaker, if we want to maintain farm production in our country. This may be the price we shall have to pay because I am convinced that, in view of the way things are going in farming, and if we go back to what has been happening during the last ten years, we can predict for the future a situation in which, if we do not guarantee an income for farmers, they will leave their business and we will have great difficulty in making them go back to farming.

Not only will it be difficult to bring people back to farming, but it will cost much more, Mr. Speaker, to reestablish someone who has left farming than it would cost us today to make the necessary efforts to keep him in farming.

We are dealing with a bill whose object is to prevent agriculture from regressing from one year to another. It is a step in the right direction and I thank the minister for it. I hope hon. members, while making constructive criticism, will accept to refer this bill to the committee for a more thorough examination, to enable us to get more information from the minister and his officials so that they may explain to us—I believe they will be able to do so—the mechanisms, the means through which they hope to establish a guaranteed minimum price for farm products, which will be the actual reflection of production costs, and which will thereby guarantee an income to producers and enable them to carry on with their business.

Mr. Speaker, with this I shall conclude and I hope that the other pieces of legislation presented to this House and related to agriculture will be quickly examined here. If I may do so, I humbly suggest that to hon. members who readily critize the government and the Minister of Agriculture, by saying they are not doing enough for agriculture. I am asking them not to accept without giving their opinion, but to examine the five bills before the House and to strive to have them expedited and passed in committee and brought back to this House for enactment so that we may appeal again to the minister and say that we want more.

Even if we asked the minister to introduce other pieces of legislation to improve agriculture, he will say: Well, pass the one I tabled first and then I will introduce more. I think we could challenge our two ministers who look after agriculture by passing the nine bills before us now. Let us dispose of those nine bills and then let us ask for more. And if they do not introduce any more to improve conditions and to cope with the situation, they will incur all the odium of the situation because they will have to introduce legislation in this House to improve agriculture.

I am not entirely satisfied with the legislation before us, but since it is an important step in the right direction, towards my aim, which I think everyone has, to provide guaranteed farm receipts I therefore recommend that we approve the bill, refer it to the committee and proceed to the consideration of another bill which, of course, seeks price support for western Canada products, grain particularly. It has no positive effect in eastern Canada, but since it is generally in the interest of the Canadian farm industry, I assure the House that we are going to criticize it. I now give notice to the responsible minister. We shall also criticize Bill C-41 a little. That is normal and I guarantee that we shall support the bill because it is for the good of Canadian agriculture.

[English]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, someone once said that wisdom is nine parts silence and one part brevity. I will try to be brief in commenting on this bill. It is not a revolutionary or far reaching bill. It will amend the government's stabilization legislation in some ways which have become important. The main features of this bill are these: it changes the list of mandatory products, shortens the base period, increases the guaranteed support level, indexes the guaranteed support price to the level of production costs, and provides for regional support programs.

Shortening the base period from ten to five years is a step in the right direction. But costs have escalated so rapidly that it is possible that by using the average price received in the previous five years the support level will be far below the cost of production. The bill provides for a guarantee of 90 per cent, instead of 80 per cent, of the average price received during the base period. But often this will not be enough. This provision represents a retreat from the way in which base prices for agricultural products were calculated at one time. Because of present inflation rates, a guarantee representing 90 per cent of the average price received in the previous five years may be well below the cost of production. This means that the guarantee means nothing to the farmer except that the support price may be well below his cost of production.

[Mr. Lessard.]

Like the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard), I have some serious reservations about the proposed indexing formula. The minister will need to explain this before the committee or the bill may have to be amended in order that the support which is to be provided when the indexing formula is used can be meaningful, and in order that the guarantee will at least meet the cost of production to the primary producer.

● (1610)

Another feature of the legislation is provision of a regional support program, a program which would have application to a number of provinces but not to the entire country. The minister has referred to this already in reference to a support price for potatoes, suggesting that Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario might be a regional support price area under the amended act. I am not, as yet, convinced that this would be desirable but I am glad to see that the bill will make this kind of set-up possible if it is deemed to be desirable.

For many years parliament has struggled with the question of securing adequate remuneration for farmers. From time to time governments have secured the passage of legislation with high hopes, only to find the results discouraging not only to themselves but to those the legislation was designed to help. Although I do not wish to be unduly pessimistic, I have some reservations about the extent to which this legislation will be effective. I hope the committee, when studying the bill, will look into every aspect closely and hear witnesses with a view to ascertaining the extent to which primary producers will, in fact, benefit from this measure.

The public is inclined to look upon farm legislation and price stabilization measures as having little or nothing to do with the consumer. The usual impression is that they concern only the primary producer. In fact, something like the reverse is actually the case. Bills having to do with the stabilization of farm income have a tremendous implication for consumers. If the market is allowed to operate as it seems to do naturally, failure to take remedial action will have dire consequences for the consumer, because if farmers continue to receive prices which are well below their cost of production it is only a matter of time before they are forced out of business; before they can no longer produce food even though they may desire to continue to do so. The result, in the long run, is a shortage of supply, a shortage which leads to unconscionably high prices necessary to pay for imported food or to lure would-be farmers back into production in the face of high costs involved in redeveloping land.

Part of the difficulty is that the agricultural industry is not very sensitive to the law of supply and demand, especially in this day and age when farmers tend to specialize. It often happens that a farmer cannot readily cut down his production if the price is not right. He does not withhold his product from the market when prices are falling, in line with the classic economic theory of what should happen. This is not what happens, particularly when the goods are perishable. As a matter of fact, the process seems to run in the opposite direction: as the farmer's margin of profit decreases, he is forced to produce more simply in order to live and pay his overhead charges. He struggles to produce more and more just in order to keep his head above water, until the point is reached at which there is no profit margin and the market is flooded, at which time a large number of farmers are forced out of business through bankruptcy. This is not a situation which affords any satisfaction to consumers.

The objective of a bill as the one before us should be to provide a fair return to a farmer for his labour and his investment, at least with respect to part of his production—he can perhaps gamble on the remainder. This involves the establishment of a base price at least for a quota of his production, a base price which is realistically tied to the cost of production. As I have already remarked, there is very little relationship between present-day costs of production and average prices for the last five or ten years. In these circumstances, it behooves the minister to explain how the formula proposed in the bill will bring about a sound relationship between the cost of production and the base price proposed. The cost of production should make provision for at least a living wage for primary producers; what would be looked upon as a minimum wage in other industries.

There is a wider benefit which a bill such as this should strive to attain. Not only should it seek to help primary producers as individuals but it should be aimed at helping to preserve a rural society in this country. It was recognized in pioneer days, and I hope it is recognized still, that rural Canada has made an extremely important contribution to this country in non-economic ways, that is to say, in social ways. It gives the country stability and provides an environment in which a fine type of life—I would say the finest type of life—can be lived. It helps maintain an environment which produces a quality of life not obtainable in the cities in this technological age, or if it is obtainable there it can be achieved only at an almost prohibitive cost.

Therefore, I think it is in the long-range interest of this country as a whole to look upon the primary producers not as mere automatons or units of statistics producing cheap food for the people who really count—presumably people in urban areas. We should take a much more enlightened overview of the situation and recognize that people in rural areas are in themselves important. They are a very necessary segment of society who live in an environment that has the potential for producing the best quality of life that can be achieved in this country.

This is especially so in modern times where technology has made it possible for someone living in the country to have, as it were, the best of both worlds. He can have the benefits of modern living, on the one hand—provided he has the minimum income required—and, on the other hand, he can enjoy the many benefits of country life, where he can experience the beneficial effects of being close to nature, the opportunity of solitude now and again, and obtain an in-focus view of the place of humanity in the whole nature of things. This helps one realize that human beings are part of a very much larger web of life, and if we forget this elementary fact it will not bode well for our future as a country.

Some years ago I remember as a child seeing old coins which were minted over 100 years ago with a slogan on them. They depicted a sheaf of wheat on the one side, a plow on the other, and the slogan was "Speed the plow". This use of the word "speed" in its archaic sense means "prosper the plow", such as you would speed a parting guest. In those days they recognized that the basic health of the nation depended to a great extent on the economic health of rural Canada.

I hold the view that this philosophy is still valid and that we cannot have a healthy country as a whole without making certain that we have a healthy rural segment in society. I might say, in connection with the motto "Speed the plow", that there is an old English song that expresses a point of view that has gone out of fashion, one that even country people are loth to express and which I am sure the average statistical planner hidden away in some bureaucracy thinks is old-fashioned and no longer valid. I should like to quote a line or two of it:

I have lawns, I have bowers,
I have fruit, I have flowers,
The lark is my morning alarmer.
So, jolly boys, now
Here's God speed the plough
Long life and success to the farmer.

I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has a great responsibility—and not only the present minister but any minister of agriculture—to do his best, in co-operation with his counterparts in the provinces, to make sure everything reasonable is done to provide an adequate economic base for the primary producer so he can stay in production and benefit not only himself and the country as a whole but Canadian consumers of food over the long term, and this includes every member of society in Canada.

In closing, I want to bring to the minister's attention the alarming situation existing in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick at the present time in regard to potato production. These amendments to the act will not do anything in time to save the situation for the potato producers in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick who are subsidizing the consumers of their product to an alarming extent. I do not think the consumers of potatoes would begrudge the price they would have to pay so long as the primary producer received a fair price. But the irony is that everyone who handles potatoes from the time they are produced until they find their way to grocers' shelves is probably making just as much profit in a poor year as they would in a year when potatoes are reasonably well priced. The same amount of freight is paid on potatoes, there is the same mark-up in the stores, and the jobbers take the same percentage. Those who supply containers make the same profit as in any other year. But the primary producer has to suffer a loss when the consumer does not pay a reasonable price for his product.

I should like to see action taken to correct this situation in the long run. In the meanwhile, I implore the minister to implement as quickly as possible some emergency plan, if he has not already done so, to divert present production in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick to some other use or to export—subsidies would be required—so that this year the producers will not be pushed into bankruptcy and will be able to plant a crop this spring. This emergency action should be taken so they can continue to produce what is one of the best food values the Canadian consumer can have, even when the price is a profitable one for the primary producer.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, although I am not an expert on agriculture I have in the last few years developed some understanding of the plight of the farmers, particularly those in southwestern Ontario—a part of the country where people from other parts of Canada often think farmers are wealthy—and especially those in my own constituency. The current economic problems which most Canadians are presently trying to endure are having an even greater impact on our farming community. Many producers are being caught in a cost-price squeeze, and have been caught in fact for many years, as we all know. Land speculators, encouraged by inflation, are discouraging potential new farmers by forcing land prices and interest rates to go higher all the time. Established farmers are finding it difficult to plan ahead due to inflation. Management decisions are hard to come by when the economy is uncertain.

Granted, this is generally true of all business sectors, but particularly more so in the agricultural business. Farmers cannot artificially raise the price of their product as other business enterprises have, and very successfully, in the past few years. Even though farm product has remained relatively depressed in terms of price, the individual farmer's costs have skyrocketed. The minister himself suggested this yesterday when he stated that poultry supplements cost an average of $150 a ton. Yet the farmer's price for this commodity has remained relatively low.

Surely, then, Mr. Speaker, it comes as no surprise to anyone that farmers have left the farm at an ever increasing rate every year. What reasonably-minded individual would remain when he sees production costs go up while the sales price goes down or remains the same? Farm machinery is another example of the everescalating costs to the farmer. Yet another area where farmers have witnessed a shocking increase in cost is fertilizers. What is a farmer, then, to do? Should he remain on his land, work unbearably long hours and receive near poverty wages? The answer, I believe, is that farmers are seeking new sources for making a living in the urban centres; statistics seem to bear this out.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has gone to great lengths in the past to extol the vigour and resourcefulness of our agricultural sector. Rarely a day goes by when the minister is not speaking to a particular agricultural federation or group explaining to them the hardiness and capabilities of the Canadian farmer. What has been accomplished by these long-winded statements? The minister has educated the public by telling them that it is not the farmer who is gouging the public when food prices go up, and for this he is to be commended.

Having realized this, the minister has on numerous occasions stated that "the farmers are fighting—they are insisting on being heard and they have a lot to say". That is all very true. Nevertheless, it is time the minister stopped his ceaseless adorations of the farming community and provided farmers with the stability they rightly deserve. We have long passed the point where farmers were satisfied to tread water strictly for the aesthetic value placed upon that type of life. Successive governments, not only here in Ottawa but in the provinces, have taken farmers for granted for many years because they knew that farmers would rather live the rural life in a rural community than sell out at any cost or at any loss and move into the city to take a menial job for which they were not prepared or educated.

[Mr. MacLean.]

I know only too well of the integral part which the farming community plays in the economic community. My home town of Brantford, where we have Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Equipment, would soon become a ghost town were it not for farm-related industries. I firmly believe, like other members who have spoken before me, that farmers are fed up with the yo-yo-like fluctuations of prices they have had to put up with for many years.

Having said this, what has the minister proposed in order to rectify the situation? The answer is, I am afraid, "Next to nothing." The minister will have to keep stomping around the country reinforcing the thought to farmers that their way of life is indeed a gracious one. If you cannot provide stability and a decent financial return on the farmers' labours, they will at least know the social virtues of their way of life.

I had hoped that Bill C-50 would have provided the stability farmers have long awaited. Unfortunately, after two long years the minister introduces a mish-mash of amendments which will for the most part not reduce the plight of the farmers. One can only wish that the minister had put in as much time drafting this legislation as he did in drafting his more than abundant speeches. Then we might not have had to hear that farmers are "coming out fighting and pleading to be heard". When considering that we receive letters containing this plea almost every day, the numbers that cross our desks must weigh nearly a ton.

In examining the bill, one can only come to the conclusion that it will prove to be as hopelessly inadequate as the original bill. Previously, the mandatory support level rested at 80 per cent of the last ten-year average. Now it is to be elevated to 90 per cent of the last five-year average. I suppose we have to thank God for small potatoes in this case. This is all very well until one takes into consideration present inflationary trends. No one could suggest that one was stepping out on a limb in assuming that inflation will run at about the same astronomical rate in the next few years as it has to date.

When viewed in this respect, the previous five-year average clause will be almost useless. Farm machinery prices, feeds and fertilizers will all continue to rise in price, yet—as I remarked earlier—the farmer's receipt for produce has not risen substantially in the last five or ten years. Input costs have not been, and it appears in the near future, will not be, computed in determining the average price of the commodity. Granted, there is an indexing clause in the legislation, but as was pointed out by one of my colleagues, it has not been specifically spelled out. We do not know what costs will be included or how they will be calculated. Hopefully, the minister will enlighten us on this particular aspect during his speech on closing this debate.

Yet another part of the legislation which is very open to discussion and question is that part regarding the participation of producers and/or provinces to set a higher support price than that provided under the law. It seems to me that present legislation already provides for a base level but not an upper limit. One could facetiously argue that the minister put that clause in the bill with the intention of setting a support price somewhat lower than adequate and then saying to the producers and provinces, "Either put up or shut up".

I said at the outset that I did not intend to take up too much time of the House on this topic, important though it is, so let me conclude by saying that I support the minister's idea of making Canada self-sufficient in terms of agriculture. Nevertheless, if we are to achieve this goal we must strive to help the farmer keep his self-respect in terms of the arduous task he is performing. As I said earlier, it is not enough to extol the virtues of the farming community; farmers are sick and tired of this. At a time when millions are going hungry around the world, we must cease treating farmers as third-class citizens. Farmers are becoming a rarity in communities right across the country. Let us provide them with the respect they rightly deserve. The means of achieving this is to provide them with reasonable stability as far as marketing procedures are concerned. If this government and the minister continue to pursue the type of ad hoc policies they have pursued in the past, we will only be pushing more individuals out of a field which is vital to both Canada and the world.

In a speech to a Lion's club on February 18, 1975, the minister stated:

—farmers despise subsidies; they would rather get a fair income out of the marketplace—

I agree to an extent, but let me read what the minister stated on another occasion:

When land is frozen into farming, farmers have no choice—at that point it is society's responsibility, his and mine, to provide the climate that will give an efficient farmer a reasonable return.

Let the minister act on his own words. If I understand the farming community accurately, what farmers want and desperately need is the assurance that when they raise a herd or plant a crop they will have a fairly good idea of what they will get in the way of prices when they market their products. To the best of my knowledge, 2,000 industrial milk producers in Ontario, and 2,600 in the province of Quebec, gave up and sold out in 1973 because they simply could not get a decent price. I see the minister shaking his head. This may have been in 1972, but it was certainly in the last two or three years. This tragedy must come to an end: I think the minister would agree with that. We just cannot continue to take farmers for granted in this callous fashion.

The welfare of this country still depends on the top six or eight inches of its arable land—land which is, incidentally, shrinking in acreage all the time because it is being sold for urban and industrial development. This is a problem with which the Minister of Agriculture or somebody in the federal government must come to grips. We should pass very strong federal laws to restrict the growth of cities and urban communities in those areas of Canada where there is valuable arable land. This is not being done. Local municipalities, township councils, and so on, are attempting to do it but they do not have the clout of the federal government: only the federal government can do this, and it should do it very quickly. Unless the minister moves more quickly, we will end up being a net importer.

As an indication of how fed-up the farmers are becoming, one need only read some of the current speeches made by the president of the Federation of Agriculture, which for years was simply an offshoot of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party. The speeches Mr. Hill has been making recently remind me of the speeches representatives of the Farmers' Union were making ten years ago. That is how desperate many small and large "C" conservative farmers are today in Ontario, where he is calling for very stringent bargaining powers. His speeches almost read like trade unionist speeches. That is where they are going at the present time: I look forward to the time when the farmer recognizes he has a friend in the trade union movement and when the trade union movement recognizes it has a friend in the farmer. Both must bargain for wages and prices.

● (1640)

If the minister, his predecessor and the government were more responsible in respect of the farmer, they would have done something and this situation would not have come about. However, today the farmer is becoming angry: this is evident in my constituency when I am invited to the many rural dances, banquets, and so on. The warden's banquet is one of the biggest. While the farmers, when they attend, are not angry and do not intend to embarrass me, at these social functions I receive a very distinct impression that they are very unhappy and that something is wrong in the rural community today.

In closing, I suggest that while the Minister of Agriculture does much travelling and makes speeches to many farm groups and individual farmers, he should stop talking and start looking. In that way my waste-paper basket would not be so full, and he might learn something from the farmers.

Mr. William Andres (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity this afternoon to add any support to the bill before us. Because of involvement in agriculture and the diversified area I represent, I am sure this bill will add stabilization and confidence to the agricultural industry which is of the utmost importance not only to this country but indeed to the whole world.

I very much appreciate the fact that members on the opposite side of the House have made only token efforts to criticize the bill. I believe they recognize the value of stability and the insurance it gives the agricultural community. Agriculture is, always has been and always will be, the most important industry in this country and indeed in the world, especially today when we recognize the many developing countries and the food shortages which exist. Canada will increase, and has increased, its production of agricultural commodities. It has taken its place in the world and has supported those in need.

In the past we have had haphazard, "dog eat dog" marketing which has not worked out too well. This situation forced many young people to leave the farm and go to urban areas. The introduction of marketing boards in respect of various commodities has created some stability in the agricultural industry and has encouraged young farmers to remain on the farm. We now have many aggressive and forthright farmers who are eager and willing to put in a day's work to produce our products. Greater efficiency through mechanization of the industry has increased production and has assured a high level of return to the farmer.

I represent a very diversified riding. In fact, it is one of the most productive ridings in Canada. It is sometimes referred to as the Garden of Eden in the Niagara peninsula. We even produce some eggs. In the Niagara peninsula the growing of grapes is one of our major industries. We also produce peaches, pears, cherries, plums and apples. We grow every kind of fruit that it is possible to grow in Canada. We have large areas devoted to vegetable production and the operation of greenhouses. We also have some of the largest poultry operations to be found anywhere in Ontario. In addition, we have some of the largest hog operations to be found anywhere in Ontario, even with all the problems relating to hog operations.

We have many dairy and beef operations in the southern part of the riding. Grains are grown, on a smaller scale, in the southern part of my riding. There is a large horticultural station located in the heart of the riding. Any problems which may exist in respect of agriculture would immediately be found in this particular area. These problems have shown up in the past. Farmers, through their ingenuity and hard work, have overcome many of the problems. However, that is not sufficient; we need some consideration and protection by the higher levels of government.

Contrary to what some people believe, and contrary to what is often reported in the news media, the food industry in my particular area is far from dead or dying. The fruit industry is growing. It is an important industry in this country. In fact, the industry is just getting its second wind through the help of federal government programs. We have assistance at the present time in respect of cold storage facilities. There has been reconsideration of some of the tariff agreements in order to protect our industry and to provide some stability in our markets. The federal government has embarked upon a program which will ensure an adequate supply of labour: our industry sometimes has been hurt because of an inadequate supply.

Now the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is presenting Bill C-50, which is flexible enough to ensure at least some degree of stability in the agricultural field. Certainly there are some weaknesses in the bill. These have been indicated by the opposition members. Nothing is perfect. There is still much to be done to put together a bill which the agricultural people deserve, and we have always taken up this challenge. I believe this is as it should be. This is what has brought about the fact that we have one of the best agricultural industries in the world—one of the most efficient and productive industries. I know, from speaking to many farmers in my area, how they feel about the fact that we have a Minister of Agriculture who knows the problems of our industry, who understands them and who takes action such as is proposed in Bill C-50.

● (1650)

I can go on and on giving examples of the actions of the minister and some of the comments and feedback from the agricultural people in my area. The minister has created, with his presence alone, an air of confidence and stability.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That sounds like something the minister wrote for the hon. member.

Mr. Andres: The Minister of Agriculture has done more for the well-being and the welfare of the agricultural industry in this country and in the world than any man I know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Gene, how can you remain modest after that comment?

An hon. Member: He is a very humble man.

Mr. Andres: That is the kind of confidence that the industry needs. It is not only hand-outs that the farmers want. The hon. member who spoke before me quoted from some of the speeches made by the minister. Farmers do not want hand-outs, but in some areas they need consideration and protection from time to time. This bill should receive relatively quick passage in the House and in committee, and it should be implemented as soon as possible so that the industry can benefit from it. Farmers are not looking to this bill for hand-outs; they are just looking for some assurance that they can improve and increase their production and be assured of a fair return.

An hon. Member: Excise tax on grapes.

Mr. Andres: The hon. member mentions excise tax on grapes. We have just gone through that. I have had many discussions with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on this very subject and I have had many discussions with people in the agricultural industry. Certainly they are not too happy when something is taken away from them. But these people will buckle down and make things worth while. They are producing new types of grapes and a new type of wine that will be competitive not only in this country but anywhere in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andres: Farmers in my area, and indeed throughout the country, are a very proud and hard working lot. It is because the minister understands their problems and needs that they are prepared to move forward with their production, with the assurance of stability that Bill C-50 will bring to the agricultural industry. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up any more time. I have indicated the feelings of the people in my area, and I am sure that I speak for many farmers in the country. Certainly, many people ask for more than they can get, but farmers are pleased to see that we have a minister who is interested in their problems and ready to take steps to correct them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there not some way, under our rules, whereby after a speech like that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) could stand up and bow?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, one would think the minister would at least blush and show some appreciation for the bouquet which he has just received, because he might not get a comparable one in my remarks.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Give him one from the potato growers.

Mr. McCain: I was rather impressed with one remark made by the minister yesterday when he said that Canada has the best agricultural program in the world. I happen to come from an area which finds itself in some difficulties, as was mentioned earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean). While we are staggering along in our own section of agriculture, the European Economic Community has found ways of picking up surpluses in potatoes and delivering them to various parts of the world at prices which do not even cover the cost of freight and packaging. We had nothing like that. The EEC dump their potatoes in markets to which we would have access in an ordinary competitive position. We understand that directly or indirectly products within the EEC are subsidized in such a fashion that the farmers are virtually guaranteed a profit. This is not the case with Canadian farmers: our situation is certainly not the best.

One example of the problems which the Canadian meat industry is facing today is illustrated by Japan, which stated that for economic reasons and for reasons of foreign exchange it could not import some of the items it was importing four or five years ago. However, they were pressured by their beef industry to take action to prevent the destruction of the market. The question which meat producers on the North American continent, in Australia and New Zealand must ask themselves is whether it is an economic problem in Japan or a domestic agricultural problem. Obviously, the press would say that it is a mixture of the two.

So our position is not the best. Not too long ago, meat producers on the North American continent found access to markets in Europe for very important shipments of poultry meat. That market has been denied the North American continent by positive action taken by agricultural ministers within the EEC. The market is now closed to them.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Immigration—Alleged RCMP investigation into racial trouble in British Columbia—Possibility of intensified program of deporting illegal entrants; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Health—Inquiry as to standards for asbestos fibres in air—Conditions at Clinton Creek mine in Yukon; the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher)—Post Office—Possible removal of picture of Queen from prestamped envelopes.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think that motion No. 21 is in the possession of the House and could now be debated. But there have been some discussions, and we are prepared to let it stand as well as motion No. 17 on the assumption that they retain their position.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the understanding, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my hon. friend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motions Nos. 21 and 17 for the production of papers will be stood but will retain their position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed with motion No. 22 appearing in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all studies, notes, position papers, memoranda, etc., relating to the requirements of Canadian shipping with respect to the proposed formula for import/export conference rated seaborne trade, in terms of the number of ships required, the capacity of Canadian shipyards, the number of Canadian merchant seamen required, the level of ancillary shipyard related industries of design capability, etc., in the event Canada ratifies the proposed code of conduct for liner conferences.

He said: Mr. Speaker, because I have only 20 minutes to speak, I ask the indulgence of the House to allow me to refer to notes so that I will not get sidetracked, because I feel that what we are dealing with is very important. On a very careful reading of Hansard of January 29 and February 12 I am, frankly, at a loss as to why the government wishes to have this motion withdrawn. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) is recorded as having said on January 29, at page 2716 of Hansard:

—studies have not been prepared on the hypothetical ramifications of the proposed cargo sharing formula for Canadian ships, shipyards, shipyard related activities, or merchant seamen.

If such is the case, I would submit that it is further concrete evidence of the bumbling incompetence and missed opportunities which have for so long characterized so much of Canada's approach to maritime policy under this government. But to refuse to study the impact of a proposal which could provide Canadian shipyards with over $1 billion of orders, give over 180 new ships a Canadian flag, provide jobs for 7,200 mariners and support an annual payroll of over $150 million, not to mention reduce greatly the estimated $1½ billion Canada wastes each year in foreign shipping charges because this administration does not want a Canadian flag fleet for international trade—the reason for that refusal escapes me completely. I noted with confusion that, contrary to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport said, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Guay) on February 24, at page 3528 of Hansard, said:

At the present time Canada is considering certain factors which will determine whether or not Canada accedes to the code.

In simple terms, I have asked for copies of these studies Canada is making. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport says that no such studies have taken place and asks that I stop requesting them. On the other hand, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion says that Canada is studying the matter. This is obviously a case where the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing. When it affects a multibillion dollar industry such as the shipping industry in Canada, it is nothing short of a national disgrace.

On February 24 I complained that a number of questions which had been standing on the order paper for some three months had not been answered. Miraculously, they were answered last Monday. Permit me to read into the record question No. 1131 as follows:

How many ships would be required to accommodate the movement (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 per cent of the present liner conference rated cargo?

I asked this question because the ratification by Canada and sufficient other shipping nations of the proposed code of conduct for liner conferences under discussion today would guarantee Canada an immediate ability to insist on having up to 40 per cent of the present conference rated cargo in and out of Canada. I asked it because at present we have a fraction of 1 per cent carried in Canadian bottoms. I asked it because I was concerned about the impact on Canada, in terms of positive value to the shipping industry, which this code could bring about. What was the answer? It was as follows:

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Under section 12 of the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act the Minister of Transport reports annually to parliament on liner conference operations. The latest report covered the calendar year 1973 and was tabled March 28, 1974. ... As indicated in that report statistics collected demonstrated the necessity for closer control at the reporting source and for a refinement of interpretation. Appropriate means of satisfying these requirements are being developed with the co-operation of Statistics Canada. In the meantime, satisfactory statistics are not available on the liner conference rated cargo carried in conference vessels.

In a nutshell, the government does not know what the impact of this proposed code of conduct would be, and that is why I raise the matter. Question No. 1,132, also, after sitting without an answer for three months, received a very hasty answer on Monday. The question was:

How many merchant seamen would be required to accommodate the staffing of the number of ships required to accommodate the movement (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 per cent of the present liner conference rated cargo?

What was the answer? It was:

Satisfactory statistics are not available on the liner conference rated cargo carried in conference vessels.

The government, with some $30 billion to allocate to the priorities of the nation, with hundreds of experts, consultants, advisers, research teams and committees, just plain does not know. I suggest that the government does not know because it does not care. I submit that the Canadian shipbuilding industry, the repair industry, the merchant seamen and all the other maritime related groups in Canada who have given their support so many times to this government have been duped into accepting promises heaped upon promises. There have been pledges heaped upon pledges, behind which there is neither conviction, leadership, dedication nor coherent, philosophical attachment.

It is instructive to ask why this lamentable situation exists. Howard Darling, in his scholarly report entitled "The elements of an international shipping policy for Canada" released by the government on January 30 this year, condemns the lack of any single, identifiable department responsible for Canadian maritime policy. He points out that the present statutory provisions relating to shipping in the National Transportation Act are hangovers from 1947 when we had a fleet. We do not have one now, yet the law remains unchanged since then. There is no cabinet or executive directive to fill this incredible legislative void. As of January 30, 1975, all we have is an interdepartmental committee, lacking cabinet direction and lacking a mandate from anyone but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

More incredibly, prior to January 30, 1975, we did not have so much as an interdepartmental committee. Does this indicate high level concern? Who is responsible? Is it the Department of Transport, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or the Department of External Affairs? I was even more confused when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion took the ball for the government in the debate of February 24.

Let us travel a bit farther down the road. The Minister of Transport has been on record for over 30 years as being in favour of some form of merchant marine in Canada, first with the CNTU and most recently as Minister of Transport. On November 4, 1974, at page 1007 of Hansard, he is recorded as being in favour of this. In answer to a question I raised with him as to whether Canada would accede to the proposed code of conduct for liner conferences, he said:

I am inclined to support the idea which the hon. member expressed, that he is in favour of a merchant marine in Canada.

Naturally enough, the newspapers across Canada for the umpteenth time reported that the government was inclined to support or favour a merchant marine: something of a fraud, I suggest. The same minister today says to this House that he has not studied the matter and asks that members of parliament not ask questions or seek information, and he asks me to withdraw a motion calling upon the government to put up or shut up. I submit that the government indeed has some shadowy studies, but because of its all too characteristic tendency to sleepwalk and evade issues and answers it has not given any priority to the matter. The same government which spends thousands of dollars researching the origin of the term "fuddle-duddle", today says that it cannot find the money, the men or the will to study the impact on Canada of its dependence upon foreign flag fleets to carry Canada's export trade.

Mr. Speaker, I find that argument incredible, and indeed somewhat repugnant. It is arrogance untrammelled. It is carelessness reduced to its purest form. I reject it and feel confident that if government members opposite, particularly those from areas where shipbuilding is important, such as Saint John, New Brunswick, and the St. Lawrence River valley in Quebec, really took the time to do some work, to have a look, to do other than applaud the endless stream of meaningless and diversionary press releases and rhetoric emanating from every orifice of this administration, they would be shocked and would cry out for remedial action to end what is surely one of the nation's greatest embarrassments.

The government says it has not even the ability to find the basic figures, and after almost a year has elapsed since this agreement was signed at Geneva by an overwhelming majority of the nations represented at UNCTAD it says that it does not know and it does not want to know. Mr. Speaker, the government has derided the efforts of members on this side of the House in the past. It said that we were misguided and wrong when we called out unanimously for a "Canadian only" coasting trade. It said we were ill-advised, that we would offend our rich and powerful friends, that we did not have the yard capacity, that we did not have the men.

After three years of hounding, and after the foreign fleets swelled their numbers in our coasting trade, they finally acted. Slowly, painfully and with incredible reluctance, this government was forced, by arguments of sheer economics and pressing national interest, to move; and they moved to admit that they had been wrong and that they had sought poor counsel. Mr. Speaker, this raises a crucial point. The government, when faced with the recommendations of Howard Darling with respect to a Canadian coasting fleet, first sought advice from the industry. This was a natural step. But in doing so, the government failed to appreciate the fact that the shipping industry that serves Canada is essentially non-Canadian. It is predictable that the agents in Canada of the foreign shipping cartels would be opposed to any expansion of new Canadian vessels into their territory.

The government first listened to these people and said no. Later, on the advice of their own transportation specialists who were detached, responsible and concerned with serving Canadian interests rather than the interests of New York, Tokyo, Athens and London, the light became more clear and eventually I was pleased to see the government act in the genuine interests of Canada.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the government is here again to say to us that it has not studied the matter, that it has not sought the documented advice of its own professional civil servants; to say that it is prepared to accept without question the opinions of the Canadian chamber of shipping, the Canadian shipping federation and others who represent in Canada a by and large foreign interest. I am prepared to give odds to anyone of 100 to 1 that if these interests are relied upon, their reaction will be, "Where is the cancer?" or, "We serve Canada well. Why change a good thing?"

Mr. Speaker, doing nothing is always easy, but Canada surely ought not to be seeking simply the easy way. It ought to be seeking to identify the Canadian national interest and then seeking to identify the ways and means by which this interest can best be served. To rely exclusively upon historically unreliable advice, to deny our public servants a chance to look into the matter from the Canadian point of view, is not only dishonest but potentially catastrophic. The reasons for this are many. Canada, it is estimated, loses in excess of $1½ billion every year in shipping charges paid to foreign shipping concerns to transport our goods to foreign markets and to bring into Canada those things we purchase abroad—$1½ billion every year! Mr. Speaker, this is a staggering sum, a sum which is an enormous drain on our foreign exchange resources.

If hon. members opposite would take the time to do other than pat themselves on the back and applaud the endless drivel coming from the treasury benches, they would see that I have asked on the order paper for confirmation of this figure. I know that for years many others have sought from the government their estimate of this figure, without success. This is another example of the overriding fact that this government does not know and seems not to care. A figure that was churned out on Monday, after the government had grunted and groaned for three months, indicated that in 1972 the nationality of registry of the vessels serving Canada under liner conference arrangements referred to and overseen in a typically inadequate manner by the Canadian Transport Commission, pursuant to the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act—an act which, incidentally, gives these liner conference groupings the right to price-fix, rate-fix and act totally outside the scope of Canada's combines legislation—was as follows: Great Britain, 52; Norway, 48; Japan, 31; United States, 29; Liberia, 19; Italy, 16; Sweden, 11; Greece, 9; France, 4; others, 233.

For the skeptical, the cynical and for the interest of those who in fact have some concern in this regard, this answer is found on page 3702 of Hansard. But here is the crunch: how many ships of this total involved in the liner conference trade to and from Canada were of Canadian registry? There was, Mr. Speaker, not a single, solitary one. Nil. Not one. Of the 452 ships that served Canada in these conferences, not one was registered in Canada. And the government comes to this chamber today to say that it does not feel that the proposed code of conduct for liner conferences drawn up by the overwhelming majority of the world's shipping countries ought to be studied.

The government says that the code is hypothetical, that it is not really of concern to us, that the Government of Canada is prepared to accept without so much as a second look the irresponsible opinions of the agents of the foreign shipping cartels, that members of parliament ought not even to ask the general question, that government has the whole situation under control. This is a disgrace, a disgrace born of neglect and fostered in an atmosphere of hypocrisy and near deceit. This government stands condemned if it persists in operating under the unseemly and all too cosy influence of the foreign shipping cartels. There is no doubt that its present attitude is identical to that of these offshore interests, and there is no evidence today that it is about to change its direction.

I can safely predict that there will follow in this chamber a great gush of words and sympathy. They will applaud their efforts, they will cheer their direction. But if that is the case, Mr. Speaker, the cheers will be hollow, having been spawned in deceit and nourished by years of neglect. Not a single Canadian ship is involved in the liner conference trade serving Canada. Surely no Canadian spokesman can cheer this disgraceful situation. That is all I am after today. I, alone, cannot change the course of events affecting Canada's so-called maritime policy. But I am convinced that this government can, and indeed that this government must.

Permit me to cite another factor. International inflation has resulted in a tremendous increase in the cost of building and operating large fleets of ships to serve the international seaborne trade so crucial to the development of the world community. This has resulted in a drastic reduction of the number of companies involved in the ownership and operation of ships. The mergers, conglomerations, takeovers and the like in the world shipowning community have been remarkable.

At the same time, in the last 20 years governments all over the world have begun to take a second look at their subsidization policies. Where they once simply shelled out the money, now they are saying, "Here is the money you need, but we want four seats on your board of directors; we want a percentage of your voting stock; we want to be involved with the direction in which you place your lines; we want to ensure that if public, national money is put into your operation, it operates in the interests of the home country, that it does what it is told and that it is an active arm of our foreign policy, a tool for our national purpose." That is what foreign countries are saying to their shipping companies today.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

It is the increasing participation by foreign governments in the direction of the foreign fleets presently serving Canada that poses, according to Howard Darling, the greatest threat to Canada's national interests. As the response I have cited demonstrates, Canada has no capability to move her vital export trade nor her crucial import trade except in foreign bottoms. These foreign bottoms increasingly are committed to serve the expressed national and foreign policies of members of the world community other than Canada. This is an unhealthy dependence, a dependence that is fraught with real and possible difficulties for Canada, and a policy that ought not to be pursued by this government nor tolerated by this parliament.

The UNCTAD proposals would seek to ensure that Canada could insist that up to 40 per cent of our import and export trade carried by liner conferences be carried in Canadian bottoms, yet this government does not want so much as to study the proposal. It seeks today to have the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada consent to a policy of "no Canadian involvement in the liner conferences" and to agree that what we are doing is all well and good. Members of this party will not accept that all is well. They will not accept that the sleepwalking and lack of direction so far demonstrated is good enough because, simply put, it is not. Forty per cent of the present trade, as opposed to nil per cent: if the figure given of 452 ships is accurate, 40 per cent would be 180 ships, as opposed to none at all.

Let us pursue the implications for Canada of ratification and implementation of the proposed cargo sharing formula enunciated in the UNCTAD agreement. If Canada insisted on a full 40 per cent of the bottoms, at about 40 men per ship the total jobs created would be approximately 7,200. That would be increased to almost 10,000, given the cycling of men on and off duty. At the present rates of pay for mariners, the payroll would be close to $150 million—a lot of money. If the average cost of an SD 14 dry cargo carrier, with a capacity for 14,000 tons of cargo is $8 million, an order for 180 ships would mean, for Canadian yards, more than $1.5 billion. This is the promise of the concept behind UNCTAD.

Add it up, Mr. Speaker. Annual losses of $1.5 billion in foreign exchange; orders for Canadian shipyards of more than $1.5 billion; an annual payroll for Canadian mariners of $150 million. And this government refuses to look at the matter, refuses to even study it. Canadian export and import of goods is under attack. UNCTAD serves as a warning. We would be fools to ignore it. I urge the Government of Canada to reverse its present attitude of "It's all right, Jack" and initiate action now and for the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member who has made such a clear exposition of the whole merchant marine, coastal shipping and shipbuilding issue in Canada.

If there is someone here who is really interested in this issue as the elected representative of a riding with a shipbuilding industry, it is the hon. member for Lévis. And I did not wait until I was elected to the House of Commons to talk about a merchant marine in Canada. I used to talk about it when I was chairman of the Lauzon Board of Trade. I am known in my riding as the merchant marine Member of Parliament, and I feel this is a much more worthy title to fame than ending up like the hon. member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) who has produced a mountain of papers to establish the necessity of a merchant marine. I shall try to do it in the few minutes at my disposal. This afternoon, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East did not need in fact a mountain of reports, studies and principles to state his views not only on the code of ethic, but also on the creation of a merchant marine for Canada.

He criticized earlier a statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who answered a question on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). I must quote in full that answer, and I wonder if one should quote out of context a statement that lasted three minutes. He seemed to criticize this statement which I quote:

> I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is on record as being inclined to support the idea of a Canadian merchant fleet. The circumstances which dictated Canada's abandoning its merchant marine fleet after the Second World War have changed greatly. The convention promotes national shipping lines, but the definition embraces even foreign ships under charter. Hence, accession to the convention would not in itself imply any commitment to develop a merchant marine.

But having personally followed the Minister of Transport in the Province of Quebec and everywhere across this country, I think that reference should not be made only to part of the answer. For my part, I did not wait to be here in this House of Commons to talk about a merchant fleet to prove my sincerity. When I participated in debates on a merchant fleet, it was not to go and get some votes but to think also about the statements by which the Minister of Transport has always stood.

When he was president of the CNTU—the central council—the minister demanded, and I congratulate him for doing so, in co-operation with several departments, that consideration be given to setting up a merchant fleet. Indeed he and his predecessors are the ones who took the decision. Mr. Speaker, if we want to talk about a merchant fleet I think we must do it by steps. What do we want in the end? How are we to proceed? The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East said earlier that we have had enough studies, enough reports, that we need action.

But why in a notice of motion for production of papers does he ask that all those papers be tabled in the House? I have before me, Mr. Speaker, 8, 10 or 12 reports on coastal shipping, a merchant fleet, on the code of ethics, and I would like to sum up very quickly the two main reports.

I think that if we want precisely to build a merchant fleet we must do it by steps.

● (1730)

We saw that in 1971, the government, through the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, stated in this House that before thinking of building a Canadian merchant navy, subsidy and support programs are needed in order to help us modernize our shipyards and make them more efficient and more productive.

It is the STAP program, as we like to call it and I even know that some hon. members this afternoon in this House seem to entertain doubts about the efficiency of this program. I have not heard, fortunately, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) criticize the program. If we consider its efficiency, we saw that from 1971 until 1973, subsidies amounting to 14 and 17 percent of the cost of vessels were granted under the program in order to help shipyards become competitive on the world market.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: That's to look after our friends off-shore. But what about Canadians?

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I shall come back to the comments of the hon. member who spoke before me.

I would like to tell him that I have listened with great attention to his comments and that what I have to say, when I have finished, will probably interest him. I hope he will give me his support in the fight that I have made until now, even if I am on the side of the government, so that Canada may have a merchant marine.

Indeed, motion No. 50 asks the government to consider reviving the Canadian merchant marine and applying the recommendations of the Darling report. I hope the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East will not only support me during the debate on this motion, but will also try to influence his party, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is doing, about the position to take concerning the motion I have made in this House.

I have been told that I was being somewhat revolutionary. I am not a revolutionary, Mr. Speaker, I am simply a member of Parliament who has the right to speak, even though I am on the side of the government. And I ask the hon. member, as well as those of the Social Credit and the New Democratic Party, to give priority to this motion, not only to know if we must produce reports, policy statements or other material, but to study this issue immediately. As I ask in this motion, I would like the immediate establishment of a merchant marine in Canada to be considered. On this point, I am in agreement with the Minister of Transport because it is better for us. If we follow the whole process up till now, we see very clearly that only one step remains, and this does not involve the production of a report or papers.

We must merely see to it that an agency or a department—as I myself asked the House in November when I took part in the debate on the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)—studies the possibility of creating a department or an agency entrusted with making all decisions and getting laws enacted.

I had the opportunity of rising in the House yesterday and stating that I was speaking on behalf of the shipyard workers; after all that is an industry, and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East knows it as well as I do. That industry is truly essential in Canada, not only to provide jobs indirectly, but to provide them directly to some 18,500 workers as a means of livelihood.

We will also have an opportunity to find out, through an analysis of that program, whether—as was implied yesterday—the program will help the industry to modernize in order to become more efficient and productive. Such is the aim of the subsidy. It is also implied the subsidy is going into the companies' pockets. It has even been alleged that it would go into the pockets of companies favouring the liberals. Well, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize this is not so, because there is a control over that subsidy. That appears in the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie).

The statement indicates 14 per cent will be granted for an indefinite period. It used to be for a limited time. The program was renewed every two years. The minister now says it is for an indefinite period, which leaves some hope. The hon. member referred tonight to the 180 ships that should be built to establish a merchant fleet in Canada. But if we do not have the shipyards, nor the facilities, if those industries are not assisted, I do not care whether they favour Liberals or not. Mr. Speaker, the announcement also mentions a partial cut in the subsidy. I also was somewhat disappointed at first, because the industries had grown accustomed to getting 17 per cent. But a stop has been put to that, which is the very proof that control is to be exercized on the use of subsidies. It has been stated that if the company invests 3 per cent, the government also commits itself to investing 3 per cent, to better help the industry to modernize and become more productive and more efficient, in order that when the last step has been made in the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine, those ships will be built here. I think it would have been hardly advisable, ten or fifteen years ago, to say in this House: We are going to build a merchant marine. It was not easy, Mr. Speaker, because our shipyards could not do the job at that time. We had to do it progressively.

Mr. Speaker, the STAP program, and I shall conclude on this, was good. It was good to repeat the purpose of that program in this House. No direct criticism was made, only veiled charges. Not even an hour ago, Mr. Speaker, I was talking with shipbuilders. I am not saying they are fully satisfied, no, because there was a degradation in that program. I shall have the opportunity of discussing and criticizing that program if necessary later in this House, but we must nevertheless commend the government for that step forward. I am glad to see that some members of the opposition seem to support what I am saying this afternoon in the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a scheme to distribute gifts and in concluding I will say that STAP is not imbued with favouritism. The program was carried out from 1971 to 1974 in 14 Canadian shipyards and we know that there are some 40 or 50 shipyards of various sizes in the country.

It has been stated that this could help the companies where investigations are launched, but I do not want to discuss the matter, Mr. Speaker. However, when such things are insinuated, I say that one must be unbiased. When the question was asked this afternoon to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he answered that the dredging operations were under investigation. Does the member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) specifically want to help us create a merchant marine? Without that program, Mr. Speaker, our shipyards would be entirely unable to undertake their own modernization.

[Mr. Guay (Lévis).]

Several reports have been mentioned. People apparently believe that we remain idle. The Darling report was published in October 1970, Mr. Speaker and I entirely agree with the previous speaker about it.

● (1740)

What were the main recommendations? I think it is worth looking at what happened after those reports were released, and I will do it very rapidly. Of the main recommendations, the first was:

1. The Canadian coasting trade should be reserved to Canadian-flag vessels.

2. Exploitation of Arctic and continental shelf resources should be done according to standards governing the extent of use of Canadian shipping to be required.

And I think, Mr. Speaker, that is about what the hon. member who spoke before me said, asking how many vessels were involved. It is attested by his motion. And it is found in the first Darling report on coasting trade. The third recommendation is:

3. The policy of issuing permits should be directed as much as possible and practicable toward replacing foreign vessels by Canadian vessels . . . Permits should be issued to non-Canadian flag vessels only if Canadian vessels are either unavailable, insufficient or inadequate for the purpose.

4. The provisions regarding the reservation of the coasting trade to Canadian-flag vessels should extend to the other marine activities of dredging, salvage, seismographic, supply and support vessels in offshore drilling.

5. Government assistance to new marine industries should have attached conditions on the extend of use of Canadian shipping to be required.

And that is exactly what has been done, Mr. Speaker, I refer to the Minister of External Affairs and the Minister of Transport, who made a statement, on May 23, 1974. We have published it. I see that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has the paper. For his benefit, I quote:

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jean Marchand) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Mitchell Sharp) have jointly announced today that Canada will not abide anymore by some provisions of the British Commonwealth Merchant Agreement of 1931, as it was announced last fall, and consequently will reserve coastal trade in Canada to Canadian-flag vessels. A one year's notice to that effect is then given to the other member countries.

Mr. Speaker, if we are told that nothing has been done right then, if we read the first sub-section—I see that my time flies away very fast, and I would not like to forget anything—we can see that it was a first step. There was the STAP Program; there is this very firm statement of the minister. In co-operation with the Minister for External Affairs, we have made another step forward. Do we need so many documents for the third step? I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that so many documents are required to know that the country, the government of Canada has arrived at a no-return point.

In concluding my remarks, I will take the liberty to quote the Darling Report which has been released recently by Mr. Darling himself and which is meant to be a constructive approach. I will merely give a very short summary of the studies made by Mr. Darling on the matter of a merchant fleet in Canada and on how one is to be built.

I fully agree with him. In fact, I have had the opportunity to say so not only in the House, but outside, on TV, on the air and through the other media. The first criticism that the Darling Report expresses is the following: We have no legislation whatsoever concerning the creation of a merchant fleet in Canada. We have no well defined policy. We have no administrative guidelines.

I had not read the criticism in the Darling report. I trust the opposition will not consider my criticism as negative, but on the contrary as positive. I had the opportunity to say in this House that it will be necessary to create either a department or a body within which we may more readily establish priorities for the immediate future and no longer on the long term basis, to create a Canadian merchant navy.

Mr. Speaker, as it is stated in the Darling Report, I believe we have no definite goal. Since the Darling report says so . . . I come to conclusions. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting impatient, you want me to conclude my remarks on this major and urgent problem for the benefit and the prestige of the Canadian nation. As I said before on many occasions, our country is the one that has the longest coast line. We have a large river, we have the Arctic but we have no merchant marine. This is really pitiful.

And now, Mr. Speaker, on to the Darling report recommendations. We shall need a more positive attitude toward problems inherent in the establishment of a merchant marine. Greater authority will also be needed to set these priorities within a sole department. In fact, decisions are now taken either by the Department of Transport, by the Department of Industry and Trade and Commerce or by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Tasks are being shared and we work a little in a slapdash way. But should the government want—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do want to try to be patient but since it seems to me that the hon. member's conclusions will exceed by a few minutes the time allotted to him, he should ask for the unanimous consent of the House should he wish to go on. Otherwise, I must recognize another hon. member.

[English]

Is it agreed that we allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I very sincerely thank hon. members of the opposition as well as my colleagues, and they are many in the House this afternoon, because this is a problem that really deserves the attention of all members. No need to have shipyards in our respective constituencies to say that we must tackle the problem and that it has become urgent.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I had the opportunity to travel at my expenses or at the government is expenses and whenever we arrived in foreign countries, I was proud of being a Canadian. But whenever we went to small countries having their own merchant marine and shipyards in full development, I was not so proud. I must say that I would be much prouder should we have shortly our own merchant marine and the government is moving in that direction.

The third recommendation in the Darling report states that if we do create either an agency or a department, we shall have to grant it real decision powers. It will have more than the limited powers provided for in the present legislation. What does the Canadian Merchant Marine Act provide for? It gives any minister the right to create boards of enquiry, to make studies. As for me, I am fed up with studies. The Darling Report on coastal shipping, on a merchand marine contains enough elements to achieve that. We will probably have to break new ground. It will be a first step. Then we shall be proud to see our own ships, built at home, representing this country and carrying our products.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the course of his remarks the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) referred to his private member's motion No. 50 and expressed the hope that the opposition parties might agree to an early debate on it. I think that is our view on this side of the House and I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent to a House order which might read in these terms: That private member's notice of motion No. 50 in the name of the hon. member for Lévis be considered first on the next day when the House deals with private members' notices of motions.

I present that, sincerely believing that it would be a good idea to have that debate, and I trust that we might have unanimous consent for such a House order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would very much prefer that the hon. member make his proposal after the debate at six o'clock. We could then make a decision.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should be glad to do it at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I enjoy taking part in a debate of this sort where we are in complete agreement on the basic substance of the issues before us, as we are this afternoon. There was a great deal of fiery eloquence that we heard across the House, enjoyable to listen to, and it was substantively and basically in accordance with the plea being made by my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

This debate this afternoon has opened so many doors that it will be extremely difficult, I suggest, to stay strictly within the rules of relevancy if those rules confine me to the procedural matter of producing or not producing the reports which have been requested. The whole range has already been opened as to the need for a merchant marine, and other matters related to our maritime life. Although I knew about this debate rather late in the day, having listened to the arguments put forward, my feeling is that all that is being asked of the government is that it produce some reason for the present situation on the basis of all the reports that have been produced, most of which, as suggested by the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), recommend the creation of a merchant marine. If that is so, what is it on the government side that has caused the present situation to develop?

Perhaps you will allow me to read into the record some statistics drawn from official government sources, namely, the former Canadian Maritime Commission, on the Canadian dry cargo merchant fleet. This gives the number of ships that there were in this fleet from 1948 to 1972. In 1948 Canada had 203 dry cargo merchant vessels of 10,000 tons. Ten years later, in 1958, Canada had three dry cargo merchant vessels of 10,000 tons, and two dry cargo merchant vessels of 3,000 tons, for a total of five. In 10 years our merchant marine had withered away from 203 to five.

In 1968, 10 years later, Canada had two dry cargo merchant vessels of 30,000 tons and one dry cargo merchant vessel of 10,000 tons. The two 30,000-tonners had been launched in 1964 and 1968 after a program of assistance to shipbuilding was introduced by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). By 1972, and this remains true today, Canada had lost the entire fleet it had in 1968.

I am delighted that the hon. member for Lévis is so enthusiastically in support of shipbuilding, and I know why. The reason is that this affects his riding. For the same reason I am enthusiastically in support of the shipbuilding industry. Through the hon. member for Lévis I hope this message gets to the government, namely, that the activities of the government have caused this deplorable situation to develop.

Yesterday there was distributed to the press and to my office over in the Confederation Building, so I did not find it until I got there this morning, having been busy in committees the rest of the day, a press release on shipbuilding. I welcome it with certain reservations, because altogether too much of the subsidies is going to the riding of the hon. member for Lévis and not nearly enough to my own riding. I hope you will permit that reservation, which I think is understandable.

As a result of the activities of the government the shipbuilding capacity in my riding has deteriorated to the point where it is practically non-existent. This is absolutely deplorable, and I would invite the hon. member to come out and see its sad state. It is his government that is responsible. Now we have this half measure involving a 17 per cent assistance program.

This need for a merchant marine, and for other types of ships built in Canada, is becoming more and more important, and we have witnessed this increasing importance in the last 10 years. We have just seen a saga develop in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Had it not such serious implications it would be comical. The police got on that ship and then got off again because they were not sure where the territorial waters ended and international waters began. We are talking about extending jurisdiction to 200 miles. From all the reports I have heard, this ship was in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. If I am not mistaken, it was the previous minister of the environment, although I was not in the House at the time, who introduced the headland to headland principle of establishing baselines from which the territorial waters limits were to be set.

On the basis of that headland to headland principle the entire mouth of the St. Lawrence River would be covered. How anyone could have thought that ship, ploughing through the ice and still within the mouth of the St. Lawrence River—not out beyond Newfoundland, but somewhere between Anticosti Island and Sept-Îles—could have been in international waters I cannot understand. Yet the government, which had Mounties on board to bring that ship back, removed those Mounties for 24 hours, and then put a larger contingency of Mounties back on board when it became sure of its position.

I would draw to the attention of that shipbuilder from Lévis that this is illustrative of the lack of direction and understanding by the government of what maritime policy is all about. I am delighted there are members on that side of the House who are in support of this measure. They ought to be sitting on the front benches. How is that for an invitation? I would like to see that, because I think then we would be working in the right direction. Perhaps I may call it six o'clock, and I will be pleased to continue my remarks at the next opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before calling it six o'clock I should point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that I did not want to intervene in the middle of the debate to invite him to make his proposal at that stage. I think that would have been bad practice. At the same time, I think it gave hon. members an opportunity for consultation. I hope the hon. member will understand why I followed that course. I would invite him to make his proposal now if he still has one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, you have been most fair. That was the reason I did this in this way, and in the meantime there have been consultations. I can say on behalf of the three opposition parties that there is an agreement, and I would hope that we might have unanimous consent to a House order in the following terms: That private member's notice of motion No. 50, in the name of the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), be considered first the next day when the House deals with private members' notices of motions.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, that proposal is certainly agreeable to hon. members on this side.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I do not give my agreement. I have nothing against the motion, but it is my understanding that private members' notices of motions are taken in the order in which they appear on the order paper. I have noticed in the past that it has been the practice, in the absence of members, to pass over many members' motions. I do not approve of this practice and I do not give my consent at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has a motion on the list, but when it was called he allowed it to stand. What is he complaining about?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I object to this intercession. I was not present when this arrangement was made; I was not asked and I gave no consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The proposal put forward by the hon. member could only have been agreed to by unanimous consent at this time. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock we were discussing the comparable programs in respect of Canadian agriculture and agriculture as it might be abroad. We will continue along the same line and take a look at the Australian program. They found themselves not too long ago with a surplus of peaches. These peaches arrived, canned and processed, on the Canadian market. They appeared in stores in Ontario at a price estimated by our peach growers to be less than the cost of harvesting and processing their peaches if sold on the Canadian market.

In contrast to this, at considerable expense people from this continent developed a market for french-fried potatoes in Australia. We still have Australian peaches in Canada, but only in times of acute shortage will there ever be anything but Australian french-fried potatoes on the Australian market, because they made it impossible for our french-fried potatoes to be sold there. They made sure that Australian french-fries were french-fries which were made in Australia. Australia has always protected its farmers in such a way that our situation cannot be considered favourable at all.

One might go on and mention country after country, and product after product which appears on the Canadian market as a result of which the Canadian producer suffers from coast to coast and no deterrent action is taken by our government to relieve the situation. There are no artificial barriers set up to prevent the flooding of our market with foreign produce. We have muddled around a little in respect of the beef industry and the protein industry, as well as with several other industries on this continent, but basically when the whole picture cleared we found that the Canadian producer received the short-end of the horn, yet we were told by the minister that we are better off in Canada than they are in the United States.

If we were to ask if we are better off in Canada than they are in New Zealand or Australia, the answer is obvious. However, as a result of the temperate climatic conditions in the United States production costs there are less than they are in Canada. The industrial milk produced in the United States is not produced mainly in the northern areas of the United States but rather in the areas where the climate makes it possible to sustain a herd of milk cattle much more economically than it could be sustained in the northern area of this continent, Canada. It just happens that the U.S. dairy industry can buy hay from Quebec and Ontario at prices which would shock our farmers. They have been doing this for years and producing the milk to supply their market. They are not doing that for their health. Sure, people complain about milk prices from Maine to California, just as there are complaints about this from Prince Edward Island to Victoria.

This is not a country in which farmers have any great pride in respect of government policies so far as their income is concerned. For instance, when the government placed a ceiling on the price of fluid milk it did not distinguish, on a regional basis, what was the cost of milk. A great many milk producers for the home consumption market lost a great deal of money in the province of New Brunswick as a result of an unrealistic ceiling, or too small a ceiling, imposed upon them by pressure from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and not imposed upon them by any force within the province of New Brunswick.

So long as the Department of Agriculture caters to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, both the producers and the consumers will continue to suffer as the result of the extremes of low and high cycles such as we have seen in the last two years.

It is time that the government of Canada became aware of some of the trading necessities and natural trade patterns which could exist in this world if we put agriculture at the top of our list instead of at the bottom. It seems rather significant that today we received a news release from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that we will spend tens of millions of dollars to subsidize the construction of boats to keep 15,000 people at work. I do not quarrel with the policy which will make it possible to build ships in Canada, but what I do quarrel with is the façade and the sham of an agricultural policy which, in the minister's own words, will reflect upon the income of one third of Canada's people, and the pittance which is being spent and the lip service which is being paid to the industry of that one third.

A serious effort must be made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to market our agricultural products. In the research branch of the Department of Agriculture we must have an interest in the expansion of our production and a broadening of our products with an eye toward foreign markets which are available.

Since potato producers have been before the minister this week already and representations have been made to him, it is easy to give this as an example. The research branch within the minister's department could introduce to Canada a variety of potatoes which is in very heavy demand in the South American market. This is something for which agriculture in Atlantic Canada has been asking for years, and there is not yet a single seedling of the yellow fleshed potato introduced in Canada which could be marketed in vast quantities by a properly developed industry. This is but one example. There are markets for our potatoes which could be exploited on a worldwide basis because the purity of our soil, the climatic conditions under which the seed is grown, and its freedom from disease make our potatoes unique. We have a variety of potatoes which few if any producers can match anywhere in the world. I submit that the quality of our potato industry is tops and the promotion of our industry by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is secondary at best. This is typical of many other things which have happened under this administration.

Canada is being balkanized, in an agricultural sense, as the government tries to pass the ball to the provinces. In your approach to agriculture, an irresponsible approach I might say, why don't you get a pack of cards, boys, and you can enjoy yourselves. This is directed especially to the minister. The balkanization of the agricultural industry is now just beginning, and if it is not arrested by positive government action, the effects on a great many Canadian communities can be serious.

If, for instance, the province of Alberta were to say to every producer in Alberta, "We are going to guarantee you a profit as did British Columbia," and if the province of Ontario were to say—and there was an editorial comment on this, as I am sure the minister will remember—"We are going to guarantee to every farmer every product in our province," what will happen to a great many products grown in a great many other provinces which are not economically capable of competition in that kind of structure?

There was this threat not too many months ago when the Department of Agriculture called on the government of Ontario to show its industrial might, to distribute money in the field of agriculture and to show the rest of Canada that it could play that game too. While that game is being played in British Columbia, there are at least two provinces which have unofficially told their potato growers, "Sell your crop for whatever you can get out of it. We will see that you come out all right". That makes three provinces that are now openly engaged in the promotion of agriculture within their own boundaries, to the detriment of agriculture in the rest of Canada. This is balkanization; it is setting up competition in which communities will disappear. It is encouraging the production of crops which are not natural to some areas, and it will defeat the production of some crops which are natural to other areas and leave them stripped of their economic base.

The threat of the minister of agriculture in the province of Quebec to make Quebec totally self-sufficient in eggs, in potatoes, in corn, in grain and in beef has come directly as a result of the abstinence of the government of Canada from a program of stabilization which was traditional in this country in the first 100 years of its confederation. It has been total neglect, not a sense of responsibility, which has brought this situation about.

Here we have in this bill again, and in the minister's speech the statement that if provinces do not like our payments, the provinces may top load our structure to the advantage of their own farmers. This is inviting disaster. It is inviting another chicken and egg war which was brought on by the stupidity of the policies of the government on your right, Mr. Speaker. This is inviting another financial debacle in the meat industry, as has happened as the result of encouragement to feed grains to animals for which there was no market. These policies in the past have been directly responsible for the virtual bankruptcy of thousands upon thousands of farmers, and yet we will allow the provinces to top load, if they wish. This does not make much sense with regard to Canadian agriculture.

Now let us consider the bill itself. There are perhaps two or three differences in phraseology, but in effect this bill is the biggest piece of camouflage that has been used by any government in the history of Canada. It even surpasses the camouflage that was exercised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he said his policies would cure inflation, because a significant part of this bill is the discretionary clause 7(1). Let me read both clause 7(1) in the bill and the section in the old act.

Section 7(1) in the act reads:

> The Board shall from time to time in accordance with this Act take such action as is necessary to stabilize the prices of agricultural commodities at their respective prescribed prices, and shall take such action and make such recommendations as are necessary to ensure that the prescribed prices for an agricultural commodity in effect from time to time shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of such commodity.

Bear in mind the formula "shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production".

Now let us read the bill. Clause 7(1) reads in part:

> (b) make such recommendations, including recommendations respecting the index calculated as described in paragraph 8.2(1)(a), as are necessary to ensure that the prescribed prices for agricultural commodities in a year bear a fair relationship to the production costs of such commodities in the year.

Here we have the key phrase of the agricultural policy of price stabilization, and it remains now as it was before at the discretion of the Price Stabilization Board and of the minister in charge because the act requires them to disregard the index structure, if necessary, to obtain a fair price in relation to the cost of production in the year under consideration for any given product. This is not just my opinion. I checked this with lawyers who have better understanding of the law than I do, and each one has said that there is virtually no change in this bill, that it is just a disguise of something old to make it look like something new.

There is one change, as outlined in the minister's speech, and this is one which I resent very much. I think the minister should have consideration for his industry because it has been said that there will be an interdepartmental committee which will help the Department of Agriculture arrive at a fair price which a stabilization program should set.

There is no way that any other department in the government has the capability of arriving at a fair stabilization price to the same degree that the Minister of Agriculture and his staff have. I agree that there is a time and a place for a multi-departmental consideration in respect of policies in agriculture, but I submit that there is no time and no place for a multi-party committee to sit down and decide on a level of stabilization for agricultural products.

The Department of Agriculture presumably knows the cost of production and, according to its records and bulletins, it presumably knows the price farmers are receiving. The Department of Agriculture therefore is qualified as is no one else.

It reflects the fact that the government has not had a Department of Agriculture in a policymaking position since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. This multi-departmental committee would be required to be sure the urban input goes in, not that the rural and agricultural input is the deciding factor, but that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and perhaps the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé), and heaven only knows who else, will tell the Department of Agriculture how much support it should give to a particular product. The minister has shown little cognizance of what is required. Perhaps on that basis he may need help.

It is my understanding that the potato producers of the Atlantic area have already been before the minister and presented their case. It is my understanding that he has said to them that they must prepare themselves with an organization on a regional basis. The implication is that they must have a regulated production and marketing structure. I hope that to substantiate this program the minister will produce evidence to show that Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec will be able to grow exactly the same number of hundredweights of potatoes every year for the next decade so that he can measure anticipated or projected production, and be accurate. Anyone who has ever grown a fruit or vegetable crop knows that this is utterly and totally unpredictable. Fruits, vegetables, and agricultural products in general do not lend themselves to man's management for an exact amount of production. I wonder, when he knows this, why the minister would make a suggestion of this nature to the industry.

I will read a little memo from the Prince Albert Herald, which has just been received:

> A member of the executive of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency (CEMA) said Friday the agency is having serious internal problems and will either succeed or fail during the next month.

As has been mentioned in this House, CEMA is not out of trouble just because a committee met, was cut short, was not allowed to deliberate and could not make an in-depth study. While the egg industry may be controllable, the potato industry would be very difficult to control, particularly in view of the jealousy of individual farmers across Canada as to their own accomplishments and their own productions.

It is none of the government's business whether farmers who are in trouble are organized into the tightest organization in the world or whether they are operating individually. They are still losing money, and they still need help. If they do not plant another crop, the consumer will pay more as a consumer than he ever would have paid as a taxpayer to relieve the economic problems connected with the product in question. The magnitude of the loss to the potato industry is beyond the conception of most hon. members in this House.

Does anyone in this House realize that if the potato farmers of the Atlantic area had never dug a single potato in 1971 they would have lost less money than they will lose by digging and marketing this crop in a great many instances? The cost of production has virtually tripled in a period of less than three years. That is the magnitude of the loss those producers will experience, and it is none of the minister's business whether they come one at a time or as a group, because he has said that the government of New Brunswick and the government of Ontario will have to administer matters anyway regardless of how it is done. Let the governments of the provinces deal with each problem as it arises and give the producer a fair shake. Do not tell the farmer what to do. He has enough intelligence to know what he wants to do.

For the first 100 years of confederation we did not have ministers, bureaucrats or anyone else telling the farmer what to do. We did have a Department of Agriculture and a department of statistics which put some information before the farmer which was a help and a guide, but we did not issue orders to him, and we did not tell him he had to have a CEMA or we would not help. That is ridiculous. There are opportunities in this world where surpluses, virtually every food Canada produces, can be put away.

It should be the responsibility of the government of Canada to consider its foreign aid program and to insert our food surpluses into that food program so that Canadian agriculture could prosper and those who are starving could be fed. Instead of that we have an agricultural program which tells producers to cut back, control and manage their markets. What we do not need is a set of rates applied by the government under the Trudeau administration. What we need is a little incentive, a little encouragement, a little help.

Let us consider the potato market in particular. It is in this regard that I have the most serious complaint to lodge against the government and the Department of Agriculture. If one looks at the statistics on production of potatoes in Canada and in the United States, one recognizes the real fact of this situation. There is only one potato market, one beef market, one pork market; there is virtually only one market for every commodity produced in Canada, and that is the North American market.

When one considers the estimates published in the fall of 1974 which show a 14 per cent increase in potato production on this continent in that crop year, the handwriting was on the wall from the day those figures were published. The minister at that time should have known, before the public knew, that the potato industry was in deep, dark trouble, and not just in the Atlantic area. It was in trouble in Quebec, Ontario, and all across the eastern half of Canada. At that time there was a market which, with a little government help, could have relieved Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island farmers of the pressures resulting from loss in the marketing of this crop. But the pressure is being exerted by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is not coming from the Minister of Agriculture.

In 1971 when P.E.I. and New Brunswick were negotiating for a little assistance for potatoes, we were told we could not take any early action because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was afraid we might create a shortage and cause a series of high prices again. The same pressures are on us today. Mrs. Plumptre and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are not running consumer affairs—they are running agriculture to the detriment of Canada. Let me say again that this bill is the biggest piece of camouflage since the Viet Nam war.

An hon. Member: Were you for it or against it?

Mr. McCain: Only a socialist would ask an idiotic question like that. I regret very much that we have this bill before us in its present form. Certainly I stand for price stabilization. Certainly I stood for the old act. Certainly I stand for the use of the authority under this bill or the other act, and there is no difference.

● (2030)

The only specific difference that I can see is that the word "wheat" has been left out of the named products as though it might relate to wheat grown outside the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. I should like to know the significance of that. It is not very likely it would come under a stabilization requirement in eastern Canada. Since barley and oats have been specifically named in the bill I wonder why feed wheat in particular, such as is produced in eastern Canada, was not included. I would ask the minister to look into this. Presumably it could be designated, and I think the reference to the authority of the Wheat Board shows that there is an element of doubt.

The agricultural industry has seen prosperity come and go. It has made a lot of money as a result of world weather conditions and not as a result of policies inaugurated under this minister or any of his predecessors in the last ten years. This minister had no control over the appetite of the Japanese while they were enjoying prosperity, nor over the crop failures in Russia which resulted in prosperity for Canadian farmers.

I would agree with the minister that some farmers were never better off than they are today, but there never was a greater policy vacuum in Canada than that which is being created under present leadership. Unless farmers marketed their beef as the minister directed they did not receive the subsidy. Many farmers in New Brunswick with small beef herds never received a nickel of subsidy. When they asked for a subsidy on hogs at a time when they were losing $15 or $20 a hog, they were told that the question would be looked at in April, 1974, which at that time was 14 months away. Mr. Speaker, that is what one would call a vacuum in policy. If it had not been for the provincial governments picking up the tab there would scarcely be a hog farmer left in Canada today.

There is a lack of policy in the agricultural industry, Mr. Speaker; there is confusion and an expansion of the balkanization of Canada. Agriculture should be a federal responsibility, and so should its stabilization. International trade should be designed to protect Canadian agriculture and give it the opportunity to expand. We should not be confused any longer by the platitudes, the jokes and happy smile of the minister while beef producers still lose $70 per animal and the potato market goes down the drain. Mrs. Plumptre complained when a few dozen eggs spoiled—what will she say if millions of hundredweights of potatoes are dumped in this country? That is what will happen as a result of the inactivity of the Trudeau government and its total neglect of agriculture.

[Mr. McCain.]

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-50. I listened with interest to the hon. member who just sat down who talked about potatoes. I am going to change the subject to some extent.

Mr. McCain: I mentioned a lot of other things as well.

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, Mr. Speaker, he did—the Viet Nam war and a few other things.

Mr. Whelan: Never offered a solution to any of them either.

Mr. McIsaac: In a general way the present legislation to provide support programs for farm products is inadequate.

Mr. McCain: Negligible.

Mr. McIsaac: The situation that agricultural producers face in Canada today, is not one of their own making. Farmers in this country have been faced with rising costs before. They have been fighting the battle of increasing costs of everything they buy for many, many years. The cost price squeeze on Canadian farmers has been a part of their life for 20 or 30 years and, I am sure, has been the subject of debates in this House. I know it has in many provincial legislatures and elswhere. In the last couple of years farmers have been faced with dramatic cost increases for everything they buy. I need not document them here. Farmers themselves are well aware because they know the increase in price of binder twine, fertilizer, machinery and machinery parts.

Perhaps we as the members of parliament should take more time to document the increase in costs faced by farmers rather than talking to one another in this chamber. I am satisfied that the great majority of Canadians are unaware of the kind of cost increases faced by farmers. The fact that about nine out of ten Canadians, or perhaps more, never get near a farm is one of the reasons for this. If they do have occasion to visit the farm of a relative or a friend they tend to think of farming as it was 10 or 20 years ago. But it has changed, Mr. Speaker.

The industry today is vastly different from the kind of family farm that many of us grew up on; in years gone by farmers could get by with lower returns. If they were producing potatoes in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, they could get by if for no other reason than that families and neighbours got together to bring in the harvest. But that day has gone. The mechanical harvester, which costs thousands of dollars and must be paid for over a long period, is the method in general use today.

Bill C-50 contains three improvements over previous legislation. First is the shorter base period, second, the provision to allow co-operation with the provinces, and third, the use of the 90 per cent figure. I have one quarrel with the legislation in a general way though, and that is that it is not specific enough. The bill is primarily enabling legislation and I hope when it gets into committee that the minister will provide greater detail on how the various stabilization plans will function.

I should like to turn now for a few minutes to discuss how this bill will affect the beef cattle industry. I recognize the difficulties faced by the minister and his officials in implementing an improved stabilization plan for the beef industry because it is more difficult to deal with than the production of potatoes or tomatoes.

Mr. Benjamin: Why is it any tougher?

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) indicates his lack of understanding of the problems of marketing beef as opposed to other farm products with a silly statement like that.

Mr. Benjamin: When did you last market tomatoes?

Mr. McIsaac: Many years ago. I want to congratulate the minister for the job he has done to provide stability in the beef industry. I am the first to admit that the plan is not perfect.

We have heard a great deal of debate, both inside this House and outside in recent months, over the possible loss of revenue and income to oil producers and others associated with the petroleum industry in Canada. To me, the irony of this debate lies in the fact that producers in the oil industry have not lost money. They have yet to lose money. They are worried, because in future they may not earn the high income they want. I do not intend to compare the oil industry in Canada with the beef industry and ask which is more important, because the health of both industries is crucial to the Canadian economy. I merely point out that although we have discussed the oil industry for weeks, that industry has yet to lose money.

● (2040)

The beef industry of Canada, unlike the oil industry, has lost many millions of dollars. Never in the history of Canadian agriculture has there been such a fanatic turn around in prices as has occurred in the last 18 months in the Canadian beef industry. Rather than go into the history of the various developments of the last couple of years, I want to look at the stabilization policy provided for under this bill, and at the $45.42 price level provided for this year.

In normal times, a one-year period from August 12, 1974, to August 12, 1975, might be a reasonable period on which to base a support policy. But I suggest that these are not normal times in the beef industry. They are chaotic times for the producer. They are particularly chaotic for the young farmer or the new farmer in that industry. I suggest that the proposed method of calculating support payments on a 12-month basis will completely fail the beef producer. I therefore urge the minister, as I did the other day in committee and privately, to consider dividing the calendar year, into four months' or three months' periods, or other short periods, in order to bring about equity in possible pay-outs under this plan.

At the end of September the market price for Grade A-1 and A-2 beef was around 48 or 49 cents in western Canada. A week or two ago that price had dropped to 35 and 36 cents. Prices, therefore, had dropped by up to 14 cents in six months. If you average prices for the last six months I am sure they would come to about the $45.42 pay-out.

An examination of prices paid at both ends of the six-month period just alluded to will show, I submit, that the man who bought cattle in the fall and marketed them in the last six weeks would not receive fair treatment under this policy. These are unusual times and we may have to consider unusual solutions. The grain grower and potato grower can put his products in the bin and store them. The beef producer is not that fortunate.

I will be the first to agree that farmers in western Canada, particularly, have leaned too heavily in the past on finishing cattle with a heavy grain ration. At the same time it simply is not possible for the industry to adjust in a year or two to different approaches to finishing cattle. The sharp increase in barley prices about a year and a half ago took place in the matter of a month. The beef people found it very hard to adjust to such a rapid change.

Let me make one thing clear: I have no quarrel with the increased price received by the grain producer. I do not expect the grain producer to help bear the increased costs of finishing cattle. But grain increased in price so rapidly that the beef producer was put in an awkward position, especially as the price of cattle was declining at home and on export markets and there was a beef surplus all across the world. Incidentally, the beef producer was not the beneficiary a couple of years ago of cheaper grain prices. It was the Canadian consumer who gained most.

I am only repeating what was said to me by beef producers in my constituency as recently as a week ago. We know that feeding and distribution costs have risen dramatically. Increased electricity costs at the plant and larger wage costs at the supermarket have been added on to beef costs. The consumer has paid a larger price. Nevertheless the consumer price has not risen as much as beef costs have risen, and the producer, as a result has been caught in the squeeze. All the people in the beef handling trade have added their costs. This bill is designed to help the producer, but it will not help him unless the minister and his officials are prepared to adjust the time frame within which support programs are to be established. I think we all want to see the producer treated more fairly.

I am well aware of the representations made to the minister by cattlemen's groups and other so-called official organizations representing the cow-calf producer. I point out that over three quarters of the producers in my constituency belong to no official organization. Also, they are not always happy with the representations which have been made to the government about adopting a hands off policy with regard to the beef industry and support programs. They are anxious to see the government introduce programs which will not disrupt the market process. I think we can devise and develop such programs.

It goes without saying that this legislation can be valuable not only for beef producers but for all Canadians. I am happy to support the bill in principle. I hope that policies which emanate from this enabling legislation will help the producer.

There is another criticism I wish to direct at the minister, and it is that these policies must be enacted more rapidly than has been the case in the past. The government must respond more quickly to producers' difficulties, especially as costs are rising very quickly. The minister is determined to help producers. He has said this on platforms in all parts of Canada. I think, therefore, that members of parliament would be performing a greater service if they spoke to groups in Saskatoon, Hamilton,

Montreal and elsewhere, instead of talking to one another here about the problems of the fruit producer.

I hope this plan will succeed. I will do my best to ensure that it does. It must be responsive and react quickly to the downturns in the market which can break a producer in a few months. As I said previously, downturns in price can have a devastating effect on the bank accounts of producers, and these effects are now far more serious than they were even a few years ago. We can discuss this measure in greater detail in committee when we examine the programs provided for in Bill C-50.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-50, which is to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act. I listened with great interest to the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac). At the beginning I thought he would develop his argument about farm input costs. I think many Canadians misunderstand this aspect of farming. The minister referred to input costs yesterday, and I hoped he would develop that theme. I think the minister understands just how important input costs are.

If inflation were not rampant, I do not think this bill would have been introduced. I should also like to point out that it is inflation which makes legislation of this kind necessary—that but for inflation it would almost certainly not have been introduced.

● (2050)

The principal features of the bill are embodied in two main clauses, those dealing with the base period and the prescribed rates. In the final analysis one must refer specifically to those clauses. I believe it would be useful at this point to review them and try to understand their intent. If we consider the base period, and proposed new section 8 covers this carefully, we find an amendment stating that the base price of an agricultural commodity in any year shall be the average price at representative markets for the five years immediately preceding. I am sure all members recognize that the existing legislation makes provision for a 10-year period as the basis of calculating the average. I believe it is obvious to all of us that in today's economy, with inflation as we have seen it, a five-year period is not realistic. I cannot understand why the minister did not use four years, three years or some other formula.

Dealing with the question of prescribed prices, the bill states that for "named commodities" the amount of a prescribed price will be determined by—

> ... adjusting ninety per cent ... of the base price thereof for the year by an index ... to reflect the estimated production costs of the commodity in the year as compared with the average of production costs for the five years immediately preceding the year ...

I wish to develop this reference to production costs a little later. This is to be compared with the average of production costs for the five years immediately preceding the year. In addition, the index which is to reflect production costs is determined by the cabinet, presumably upon a recommendation of the stabilization board. For "named commodities" the percentage of the base price may be higher than the guaranteed 90 per cent—but, again, only with cabinet approval.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

With respect to "designated commodities" new section (8) says the amount of a prescribed price would be determined by cabinet—it is the cabinet which will decide what will be the percentage of the base price. As I understand the legislation this price could be higher than the 90 per cent, but it could also be lower. I think this point should be stressed. Once again the index used with respect to "named commodities" will be the same as that used to determine the cost of production.

In my view the amendments do not provide the protection for the farmer that the minister has implied throughout his speech and, indeed, in speeches made before the bill was introduced. Earlier this week I met with members of the horticultural council and they confirmed my impression that the legislation before us would do nothing more than provide some small measure of help in times of disaster. It would certainly not go any distance toward stabilizing farm income.

I wish at this point to make a few observations with respect to inflation, and in particular with regard to its impact on the farming community. I want to compare the impact of inflation upon our farmers with its impact upon consumers generally. All members will recognize, I am sure, that there has been a great deal of information concerning the effects of inflation on small business, on office employees, on consumers in general. Considerably less attention has been given to the impact of inflation upon the farm community. Yet how could one fail to note the effect of rising costs of fertilizer and farm machinery, to say nothing of the rapidly rising cost of operating such machinery? One of the tragedies of the egg marketing report which was before hon. member recently was that the minister did not see fit to enlarge the committee's terms of reference.

As has been mentioned by other speakers, there has been a lack of communication between the farm community and the metropolitan areas, a failure to draw attention to the magnitude of the increase in farm costs as compared to the increase in the cost of living suffered by consumers in general. In fact if one analyses the inflationary practices at work it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the clauses in the bill to which I have referred, namely, those dealing with the base period and the price formula, do not reflect today's economic conditions. Let me repeat that in my view the present debate would be redundant and I do not believe the bill would be presented to the House if the government had found satisfactory ways of dealing with inflation.

I wish to refer to farm input price indexes. Farm input price indexes are published quarterly and annually by Statistics Canada on a 1961 time base—the 1961 index equals 100. The aggregate price index is divided into major group indexes, for example, land and farm buildings, farm machinery and motor vehicles, hired farm labour and other farm materials and services. Each of the major group indexes contains more specific component indexes.

The farm input price indexes are designed to measure the movements of prices paid by farmers for inputs into farm production. The indexes are price indexes which reflect only the direct impact of price changes on the cost of purchasing a specified basket of farm operation inputs. It should be emphasized that the indexes are not cost of production indexes. The latter include not only price changes but also changes in quantities and qualities of input items, and changes in productivity resulting from better management, improved technology, weather conditions and biological forces.

I believe we need clarification from the minister in this area because I find it inconsistent that when dealing with such matters as old age security benefits, the Canada Pension Plan, and contractual agreements between labourers and employers we deal with price indexes, yet in this instance we deal specifically with production indexes which, I suggest, can be substantially lower than the price indexes. I am not confident that this formula truly reflects farm input costs. At some point, either during this debate or in the committee, the minister ought to explain in some detail what appears to be a paradoxical situation, a situation in which the farmer is not recognizing his true input costs.

I realize that statistics often act as a sedative, but I think I should risk quoting certain figures in this instance. I would refer to the Canadian Statistical Review published by Statistics Canada, for January, 1975. With respect to the base year, the aggregate index—total farm inputs—shows that prices of farm inputs have increased by more than 95 per cent since 1961. Between August, 1973, and August, 1974, the index for total farm inputs increased from 173.3 to 195.2, representing a rise of 12.6 per cent. Over the same period the cost of hired farm labour increased by almost 17 per cent, building replacement costs by 11.4 per cent, and fertilizer by 48.3 per cent. Let us look more closely at the fertilizer situation.

The price index for fertilizer averaged 103.0 in 1972, only 3 per cent higher than in 1961. In 1973, it averaged 115.5, only 15.5 per cent higher than in the base year. The rapid price increase in fertilizer began in late 1973 and by August, 1974, the index was 65.4 per cent higher than its 1972 level.

The price of feed has also increased dramatically above the level of 110 in 1972 to 211 in the third quarter of 1974, an increase in that short period of time of 91 per cent.

I believe this is of some value if we assess the percentage increase in the farm input price index over the period August, 1973, to August, 1974. This is the most recent 12-month period that I could find. The tables show, for example, that the 12.6 per cent increase in total farm inputs was distributed unevenly across Canada—10.9 per cent for eastern Canada and 14.7 per cent for western Canada. Over this 12-month period the majority of large increases in prices occurred in the category of "other materials and services", with the exception of a 38.7 per cent increase in the index for fencing construction and repairs. Rather interestingly—and this supports the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport—the only area in which there was a definite decrease was in the index for feeder cattle, which showed a decline of 27.5 per cent. All other materials and services indices increased significantly.

What are some of these major increases during this 12-month period? Seed was up 81.8 per cent during the 12-month period; small tools and supplies increased 59.3 per cent; mixed fertilizer, 50.1 per cent; grain seed, 39.2 per cent. Let me give the House an indication of the recent price acceleration. If we take the three month period between the second and third quarters of 1974, in that short space of time the index for petroleum input products increased by 11 per cent, fertilizer by 14.6 per cent, and small tools and supplies for the farming community by 11.6 per cent.

I now want to turn to another avenue to compare costs of farming, and I refer to farm operating expenses and depreciation. When Statistics Canada people make these estimates, they include farm business costs incurred by farmers irrespective of whether they are paid for in cash or are accumulated in new debt. As far as possible these estimates will exclude outlays for goods and services obtained directly from other farmers. Also in the calculations, subsidy payments are taken into account in order that these estimates represent only net amounts paid by farmers.

I should like to review some of the statistics obtained from the "Quarterly Bulletin of Agricultural Statistics", published in December of 1974. If we assess these figures carefully we find that the total operating expenses and depreciation charges of Canadian farmers were estimated at about $4.8 billion in 1973, an increase of 23 per cent above the 1972 value of $3.9 billion. Farmers' outlays for production inputs have been higher in all provinces as a result of cost increases for most expense items. I think it is of interest to note that there is one expense item which was actually down, and this was property taxes. I know that will interest the minister. In 1973 there was a decline in that particular segment which was related to the implementation of the Ontario farm tax reduction program. The only area in which there was an actual drop was in property taxes.

Mr. McKinley: Thanks to the Ontario government.

Mr. Holmes: The Ontario government was responsible; there is no question about that.

Mr. Whelan: They are the highest in North America, even with the tax reduction.

Mr. Holmes: At the same time, Madam Speaker, higher grain prices contributed to the 55.2 per cent increase in expenditure on feed. In addition, a careful look at the figures will reveal an increase in fertilizer costs, to which I referred earlier. There has been some expansion in farm credit, but I suggest to the minister that a great part of that is due to the increase in interest rates that we have experienced, higher wages, etc.

I should like to take a moment to make a comparison between the farm input price index and the consumer price index, which I think should be very revealing to the minister, and certainly to the Canadian public. In terms of absolute value the farm input price index is consistently higher than the consumer price index. For example, in 1972 the average value of the consumer price index was 39.8 per cent higher than in 1961 while the corresponding farm input price index figure was 43.3 per cent higher. What is of real significance is that the gap between the two indices widened very substantially, and in August, 1974, prices were 95.2 per cent higher for farm input costs compared with only 69.6 per cent for consumer goods and services.

In terms of percentage increases, between August, 1973, and August, 1974, the consumer price index increased by 10.8 per cent. The farm input price index, however, increased by 12.6 per cent. Also during the same period there was an increase in fencing construction costs and repairs of 38.7 per cent, grain seed increased by 39.2 per cent, mixed fertilizer by 50.1 per cent, small tools and supplies by 59.3 per cent, and the price of seed by 81.8 per cent. Between 1972 and 1973 total farm operating expenses and depreciation charges increased by 23 per cent, from $3.8 billion to $4.7 billion, while the consumer price index increased by 7.6 per cent. Between 1972 and 1973 the farm input price index increased by 16.3 per cent.

I know that these statistics may have had a somewhat sedative effect, but I think they are important in indicating the severity of inflation for the farming community. They are extremely important to the consuming public because they give them some of the idea of the impact of inflationary costs on the farming community. It is also important to note in reviewing these figures that farm input costs have been substantially higher than the price increases experienced by the average Canadian consumer as reflected in the consumer price index.

As I indicated at the outset, this present legislation has been introduced simply because of the effects of inflation. As I have indicated, this bill is of no value in view of the inflationary conditions we have today; and in my view this piece of legislation will offer no support, in terms of stabilization, for the Canadian farmer.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, as this is the first opportunity I have had of making a speech in this Parliament, I should like, first of all, to congratulate you on the charm with which you perform your duties in this House.

[English]

This evening we heard a very depressing speech from the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) which was gloom and doom, hindsight knowledge and very partisan. That is the only comment I will make about it.

● (2110)

If ever there was a group of farm producers who can produce more and, from time to time, whose besetting sin is excess—you are probably aware of it as much as I am, Madam Speaker—it is the producers of potatoes in eastern Canada. In the past, they have benefited from the advantages of the Agricultural Stabilization Act which help all of them have appreciated. The minister is now introducing a bill to improve that act considerably. As the hon. member opposite said, there is an urgent need for it, and I agree wholeheartedly with him.

Hon. members are also aware, Madam Speaker, that eastern Canada potato producers are unfortunately going through a year of abundance, when prices are deflated. The resulting situation, which still persists, brought to the office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), two provincial delegations, from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, in the hope of negotiating a solution and perhaps obtaining financial assistance for the producers, at least this year.

I am prepared to give full support to the bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. I do not intend to speak at length, but I hope to have soon the opportunity to study thoroughly the bill with my colleague in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. However, if I rise this evening, Madam Speaker, it is because yesterday the minister invited to do so, in answer to a question which I directed to him concerning the discussions which he held with the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island ministers of agriculture.

I am not a farmer nor a farming expert. I have never been either a co-ordinator of the potato industry, as the member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) who was fuming while making his speech this evening. However, I regularly meet in my constituency a great many farmers and others who used to farm but who no longer do so, as a result of the family farm being bankrupted due in many cases to poor production. Those personal contacts have allowed me to realize the extent of the concern for the future of the family farm and potato growing.

I am happy to support the bill on agricultural stabilization which aims at amending the definition of farm commodities and the calculation of basic prices. I believe this could improve agricultural production and constitutes an excellent formula for price support. As the minister said in his speech, this is basically a matter of guarantee, and this is what the producer wants today. In the final analysis, it is a matter of small prices and orderly marketing.

Madam Speaker, the history of the dark years of potato growing in New Brunswick is a real tragedy. I do not believe I am exaggerating in saying this. But it should also be said that there were good years and even some very good ones. I shall not bore hon. members with statistics, even though I have drawers full of them. However, something must be done now, and the Minister of Agriculture is aware of it. After listening to several members who sit with him on this side of the House, the Minister of Agriculture has understood the urgency of the situation and did not hesitate one moment to introduce this excellent bill in the House.

However, does the burden of putting some order in the farming industry of Canada rest only, as the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has said, on the shoulders of the federal Minister of Agriculture? I do not think so. There may have been and there probably were some mistakes. The federal government may have made some blunders at certain times, but some provincial governments have made mistakes and blunders at least as serious.

The political history of New Brunswick in agriculture is also a near tradegy and I am not exaggerating in deploring the lack of continuity in the agricultural policy of my own province of New Brunswick. Madam Speaker, I only have to say that in five years, New Brunswick has had five ministers of agriculture. Is this the way to plan in the field of agriculture? And the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, who criticized the federal government so bitterly tonight, was himself co-ordinator in the field of potatoes in New Brunswick for a few months, between occupying a seat in the legistative assembly or in the House, and yet he did not bring any solution tonight. When potatoes are selling as they were last year at $16 a barrel or per 165 pounds at the farm, the provincial government eagerly takes credit for it. But when they sell at the deflated and ridiculous price of $2 a barrel, as they do now, which means at least $2.50 under production costs for most farmers, what do those people do? They come to Ottawa. They beg and cry for help. That is simply not the way to live! As the Minister of Agriculture said in his speech yesterday, it is catastrophic.

The impact of such a tragedy reaches beyond revenue loss, the disintegration of the family farm. A whole way of life is getting lost. New values and probably questionable ones in my opinion, or new socio-economic factors appear and are also very disquieting, certainly so in the eyes of many New Brunswick farmers. Enter the ogre, now called the multinational, which grabs everything on its way, including the family farm. I was told all those things. I also worry about them.

Madam Speaker, my purpose tonight was not to paint a gloomy picture and yet, unfortunately, such are the present conditions of the potato growing industry in New Brunswick. That production always went through ups and downs. People generally go bankrupt and lose everything during "down" periods. If indeed there is a serious problem, we should wonder first and foremost what farmers themselves intend to do. They do talk a lot these days. They frequently meet and have very serious discussions, Madam Speaker. There are rumours of organization. The minister himself talked of organization and marketing boards on several occasions in this House during this Parliament. He did not rule out that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec might have to organize themselves too. With regard to potatoes, all the provinces of eastern Canada should cooperate and work hand in hand. I do agree entirely.

An hon. Member: Quotas.

Mr. Corbin: Quotas, I am not that sure. What I suggested last year, Madam Speaker, at a time when a barrel of potatoes sold for $16, was that farmers should take advantage of such slack time to study their problem. They did not. This year when everything goes wrong, they meet and talk about it. I suggested not to wait for a bad year, but to do so when everything was fine. I also said that in this House six years ago, and nobody apparently heard me. But I shall repeat it tonight.

I do not think governments should or want to get the farmers organized. I do not think farmers want that either. But if producers really are determined to settle down, governments will have no alternative but encourage that initiative and materially back it by passing legislation and regulations. New Brunswick potato producers now face a huge challenge, and I am convinced they will be equal to the task, but to do so they will have to cooperate more closely, together first, then with the neighbouring provinces. I am saying that most earnestly, Madam Speaker. I shall probably be criticized back home, but I don't care. I always said what I meant, and once again I persist in saying that the greatest obstacle to bringing order into the potato industry lies with independent stands, the misleading feeling of self-confidence among producers themselves, especially during years of plenty. Only when that problem is recognized will things start to improve.

I am glad to see that an increasing number of farmers are now prepared to set their differences aside—it is very encouraging. The bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture proposes to gear support levels to production costs. I think that is good planning. And why not? Would someone tell me. It is very good assurance.

I appreciate very much that the Department of Agriculture had potato producers in mind when it drafted this bill, specially with respect to regionalization or zoning.

Madam Speaker, there are consumers in this country, even in my area, who do not like the Minister of Agriculture not because he is not a handsome man, but the criticism that is made most often I think is about the determination with which he stands for the farming community, the small producer and the family farm. But we all know also his understanding of consumer problems, and the very high level of co-operation that exists between the federal Minister of Agriculture and the minister responsible for consumer affairs, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

In concluding his speech yesterday, the minister said:

> It is a far reaching bill. It is not a lengthy bill, but it is one of the most advanced that any country in the world is providing for its agricultural producers at this time.

I am pleased with that, Madam Speaker. I fully agree with the minister, he has my full support.

● (2120)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I shall be brief, which I am sure will be a surprise to and will please my hon. friends on all sides. I wish to make a few remarks about the legislation. First, I wish to comment about some of the things the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) had to say. Before I do so, however, may I say a word about the issue of governmental intervention in the marketing of agricultural products.

It is historic and also current that some agriculturalists, some of whom are beef producers, are the most vociferous in their opposition to government intervention. They say: leave the market to its own free play; leave us alone because we do not want subsidies and support prices, and the government should stay out of the business. Those are the usual 19th century dinosaur type of remarks. Then when things get bad they are the first people to come down here crying and asking the politicians to intervene. I recall about a year ago that some of the same cowboys from my riding, who were most vociferous against marketing boards and government intervention particularly regarding support prices or subsidies for beef, were the first people who were down here lining up and crying.

All I can say to that kind of agricultural producer, particularly the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley, is that if he is so smart and if the free enterprise open market system is so good, why is it that the free enterprise parties bring in agricultural stabilization legislation? I find that very interesting, because they cannot have it both ways.

The hon. member also spoke about the beef marketing system being different and more difficult than the marketing of potatoes, tomatoes or other products. Of course it is different, but I want to suggest to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley, who I am sorry to see has left the chamber, that it is just as difficult to market tomatoes, and I suspect at some times of the year is more difficult than to market beef. It is a much more perishable product. There are a number of other agricultural products which are just as difficult to market as beef. If the hon. member wants to hold out beef as something different and more difficult to market than any other agricultural product, I submit this argument does not hold water.

When the beef price drops from 45 cents to 35 cents the hon. member wants the stabilization legislation to provide that the pay-out is broken down every three or four months each year, and he pleads with the minister who sits in front of him to do that. I find it interesting to have a parliamentary secretary pleading with a minister to do these things. Again I want to say to the hon. gentleman, and to other hon. members who like to plead the virtues of the open and free market system, a system which is great for the packing plants and the railways but not for the farmers and the consumers, that if their free open market unfettered free enterprise system is so great why do they cry when the market drops from 45 cents to 35 cents? That is how they wanted it; they wanted it free and open. That is free enterprise.

I do not hear them complaining on behalf of the consumers when the market goes up from 35 cents to 45 cents. When it goes down then it is different. Then without saying it, they admit that their free enterprise unfettered system does not work. Under the so-called free market system the beef producers often have no choice but to sell at prices below the cost of producing, raising and fattening those cattle.

The other thing I should like to say to the cowboy part of the beef industry—by the way unless my information is badly incorrect small farmers raise more cattle than the "cattlemen"—is that I did not hear the same free enterprise, open market, every many for himself people crying on behalf of the grain producer. I did not hear them complain a bit when you could get barley for, say, a Safeway's special of three bushels for a dollar. I did not hear a single cowboy beef producer saying that those grain producers were not getting a fair shake.

But now that the barley producer, for the first time ever, is getting a price for his barley that is in excess of his cost of production, the cowboy producers, the ones who believe in and promote the free, unfettered, open system for marketing beef, are saying, if you will pardon the expression, that now it is their ox that is being gored. The shoe is on the other foot. But where were they for 18 out of 25 years after the second world war when the grain producers consistently received less than they were entitled to for their product? I did not hear a single cowboy, raising cattle on the foothills of Alberta or the Cyprus Hills of Saskatchewan, saying anything about fair prices for barley producers. So I do not want to hear a word from the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley about the high price of feed grains. In fact if he wants to talk that way, I hope he goes back to his own riding and talks to the wheat, barley and oat producers, and he will see how fast it takes them to run him out of town.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley also wants the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to react quicker to the downturns of the agricultural market, in particular, the beef market. How about that? Again, if the open, free market system is so good for marketing beef, what is he complaining about? It is amusing that the free enterprisers in the beef industry are always happy when the market is on the upturn, but when the market is on the downturn they do not support the very system under which they want to operate. Then they cry for help to the government. When it is on the upturn they tell the government to stay out, to leave them alone, not to interfere. They cannot have it both ways. If the Minister of Agriculture is a free enterpriser—

Mr. Corriveau: He is.

Mr. Benjamin: —he should not be meddling with this great, open, free market system.

Mr. Corriveau: Who says he is?

Mr. Benjamin: If the agricultural stabilization program is not interferring with the market, I do not know what is. If I am touching a tender spot on the loudmouth over there, I am sorry.

Mr. Corriveau: I am not standing up, you are.

Mr. Benjamin: You can get up later, cool your brains off and take part in this debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member is not in his own seat.

Mr. Benjamin: He is on his own seat but not in it. That is what you call a confused Liberal.

There is another little point I would like to make to the Minister of Agriculture who says he is a friend of the farmer. As my colleague, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) said this afternoon, if we could have at least one speech a week from the minister which is as good as the ones he delivers to the rose growers of Grasshopper Flat, or some other such group, that would be fine because he speaks very well, he sounds great. He speaks about his support of orderly marketing, and I believe him. If anything, I think this Minister of Agriculture is sincere and genuine about orderly marketing, which makes him something of a misfit in a free enterprise party, be it Liberal or Tory. In any event, he is stuck with that; that is his problem.

In his unquestioning support for the Canadian Wheat Board he has included an item in this legislation, if you would care to note, whereby oats and barley produced in the designated area under the Canadian Wheat Board but not marketed through the Wheat Board are expressly mentioned in the legislation as eligible for designation as a product under this legislation.

Let me say, just in case the Minister of Agriculture has not thought of this, that this is nothing more than reinforcing the removal of feed oats and barley from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and placing them on the open market, because when the open market fails on feed grains, the cowboys will still be able to get cheap barley, and then the Minister of Agriculture will include oats and barley not sold through the Canadian Wheat Board under the stabilization legislation. What he will be doing in effect is to reinforce an outmoded, discredited, disgraced open market system of marketing grains in order to save the reputation, whatever it amounts to, of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

If the Minister of Agriculture wants to prove how sincere and strong he is in support of orderly marketing and of the Canadian Wheat Board, let him amend his own legislation to take out the provision that will include oats and barley sold on the open market and raised in the Canadian Wheat Board area because that amounts to nothing more than an additional reduction in the strength, power and jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. It also weakens the whole principle of orderly marketing. I hope the minister will think about that, if he has not done so already.

I submit that this bill is inadequate. It does not go far enough so far as we in the NDP are concerned, and so far as at least two farm organizations are concerned. There is no guarantee that the proposed amendments to the legislation—and that is all this bill is—will bring much if any improvement to what is already in the act. Of course, the minister added some new products, such as beef, and I am glad to see that. That ought to create a stir in the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, if nothing else. But I have to see it to believe that it will bring much if any improvement, because the minister already has the authority of the legislation now but has chosen not to use it. It is just a way of prolonging the agony and giving lip service to both orderly marketing and orderly stabilized income and at the same time trying to maintain what is supposed to be a free and open system for marketing agricultural products.

I am sorry to say that the minister is trying to follow the example of so many of his colleagues, trying to be half pregnant. There is no such thing.

With regard to the mandatory support level of 90 per cent in a five year average price, the first thing I would like to suggest to the minister is that if the 90 per cent proposed in this legislation is good for the farmers, would he tell the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), and any other of his colleagues in the cabinet, that all the workers in the public service want is 90 per cent of what is being paid to private enterprise? I think it would be very pertinent, since if, it is appropriate in this legislation to tell the President of the Treasury Board, and those other idiots on the Treasury Board who do not know how to bargain collectively, that if 90 per cent is appropriate in the agricultural stabilization legislation and the grain stabilization legislation, it should be good also for the runway cleaners and other lowest paid members of the public service.

I hope the Minister of Agriculture, who has this principle enshrined in this legislation, will now persuade his cabinet colleagues to agree to granting 90 per cent of what is paid to private enterprise to the lowest paid sections of the public service, and then we will have our airports and grain terminals operating within 24 hours.

● (2140)

That is all it would take. By the way, while the government is worried about the 90 per cent of the five year average for agricultural prices—

Mr. Whelan: you wouldn't accept the pay raises for members.

Mr. Benjamin: I will accept whatever this parliament votes I should receive, and I expect that the minister will do the same. Neither he nor I will decide whether we are worth it. Other people will decide that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed?

Mr. Whelan: I agree with that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You'd do better sitting down, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: Anything the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) takes, I am going to take, because I am convinced, in my usual shy manner, that I am as good as or a better member of parliament than he will ever be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

M. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I am out of order on the topic, but Your Honour will appreciate that my hon. friends opposite lead me astray. I want to apologize. I have an ailment called preacher's throat. It happens to preachers and politicians. My doctor says that the only sure cure for this is to keep my big mouth shut for three weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: A politician losing his voice is like a pianist losing his fingers. I am sorry that I am subjecting my hon. friends to this speech, which is not nearly voluminous enough. By that I mean in decibels, not length.

If I may return to the matter of the 90 per cent, I would ask the minister and his cabinet colleagues to consider that the lowest paid public servants are asking for 90 per cent of what other people get, which is good enough, apparently, for farmers. I do not know why 100 per cent should not be good enough for farmers. However, that is the minister's legislation. If he can apply that to farmers, he can apply it to the lowest paid sector of the public service.

Would the minister at the same time ask his Cabinet colleagues to agree that this matter of restraint, which the Minister of Finance wants, and the matter of controls which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) wants, should first be applied to deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, those who received $8,000 and $10,000 per year increases, which is more than the runway sweepers receive and which is more than many farmers receive for a whole year? If this restraint were applied first at the top the minister would be surprised how willingly lower paid people would co-operate, including farmers. But does the minister want them to be willing to agree that 90 per cent of the five year average is good enough? If the minister will apply that principle to the deputy ministers and the assistant deputy ministers, and even to members of parliament, he would be surprised at the amount of co-operation he would get from farmers and runway cleaners.

I have used up my time, Madam Speaker, and the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) has some remarks to make about cowboys in response to mine, I hope. He is a gentleman whom, amongst all the cowboys I know, I like best of all. There is nothing personal in my remark about cowboys.

I want to say, as my hon. colleagues have said, that the legislation is inadequate. We will have more to say on it on other days.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I want to say to the hon. member from Saskatchewan that he took me back a few years to when we both did a little cowboying at Walsh. I thank him for reminding me of it.

In my contribution to this very important debate which will determine just what amendments are to be made to the Agricultural Stabilization Act of 1957 and 1958, I want to make a few general comments on the new bill and then follow with some very specific comments on how this act and the proposed amendments apply to the total Canadian cattle industry.

At first glance this bill seems fairly straighforward and might be construed to be merely an updating of the 17 year old act to make allowances for inflation and rapidly rising costs of production in the total agricultural sector in Canada.

I have no great quarrel with the proposals to change the averaging period from 10 to five years, and the increase to 90 per cent from 80 per cent in determining the base price over this averaging period. But because of some very erratic farm prices throughout all of 1973 and the first quarter of 1974, I suggest that there may have to be some shortening of this five year period. In the five year period 1970 through 1974 inclusive there have been about three and a half years of market prices which could be described as moderately increasing farm product prices. This was followed by a year to a year and a half of very sharply increased farm prices in most commodities, including cattle. I suggest that during the same five year period agricultural production costs increased at a much faster rate than did our market prices at the farm gate.

Under clause 3 of the bill, referring to section 8.2(1) of the act, some provision for this serious concern is indeed provided, but it is not clearly spelled out. The bill reads in part, and I quote:

> . . . the Governor in Council may prescribe, of the base price thereof for the year by an index calculated in such a manner as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council to reflect the estimated production costs of the commodity in the year as compared with the average of production costs for the five years immediately preceding the year . . .

I ask the question, does an "index of production costs" refer specifically to the CDA's official farm input price index? If it does then the cattle industry would be short changed because its farm costs, notably feed grains and feed supplements, have risen faster than most other farm costs during this 1970-74 period. What does the term "may reflect" really mean as used in this proposed section from which I quoted? Does it mean may reflect 25 per cent, 50 per cent, or 100 per cent? And does this reference really pinpoint the fact that index of production costs should refer specifically to the commodity in question by name, no matter whether the commodity in question is a named commodity or a designated commodity?

These items must be clearly spelled out. It seems obvious to me that Bill C-50 leaves far too many details and specifics to be determined by regulation. Another example, under the part dealing with other powers, states:

> For the purpose of stabilizing the price of an agricultural commodity, the Board may exercise such other powers as are prescribed by the Governor in Council for that purpose.

Does the phrase "such other powers", for example, mean the supply management route for the cattle industry? If this could be inferred, I wish to state most emphatically that a marketing board for the Canadian cattle industry with supply management powers is not the answer to our cattle industry's very serious difficulties, and in fact crisis, today.

Now I wish to relate my comments perhaps more specifically to the cattle industry. We already have two support price policies recently announced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) which relate only to our Canadian cattle industry. Last August 11 the fed cattle—that is, fat steers and heifers—support price of $45.42 was instituted, and if deficiency payments are made when the year is up next August, I presume they will be paid under the provisions of the original act. It is important to understand that this price of $45.42 for grades A, B and C was determined by taking 90 per cent of the average weighted price for these three fat cattle grades at the three principal markets in Calgary, Winnipeg and Toronto, and adding to it a cost of production index figure as determined by the Farm Input Price Index. I have been informed that this cost index item amounted to some 154 per cent of the five year average market price for fed cattle.

The beef cow subsidy or support policy of $23.21 effective last November 16 is 100 per cent of the weighted average price of the D1, D2, D3, and D4 cows over the last five years at the same three principal cattle markets, but without an indexing figure. Possibly there was no indexing figure because this cow support policy will only last until April 30. In both of those government support price policies the critical circumstances of both cow-calf and the feed lot side of the industry were not recognized. This was primarily because the five year period was too long to account properly for the erratic market swings and the escalating farm production costs.

In today's price and cost terms, what I am saying is that a $45.42 per cwt. floor price is small comfort to a feeder whose costs of grain are still 55 cents to 60 cents per pound. On March 1 the estimated actual weighted average fed cattle price, according to my information, was about $46. This means, of course, that unless the fed cattle market slumps another $2 or $3 over the next five months, no deficiency payment may be made. In my opinion the Canadian fed cattle market has now bottomed out, and in fact has shown some recovery of a dollar or two in the west and perhaps not as much in Ontario, but it does appear that better markets are ahead of us for fat cattle at least. This will further lessen the probability of deficiency payments being made.

With respect to the cow support policy, it seems highly probable that there will indeed be payments made for those eligible. I most certainly agree with the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) who suggested that the fed cattle support policy should be on a quarterly or half yearly basis. I must say I prefer the quarterly basis.

Surely, Madam Speaker, the time has come for governments and cattle producers to face up to, and recognize the real problems in Canada's beef cattle industry and, for that matter, in the American cattle industry as well. In my estimation we simply have too many cows and, as a result, too many feeder cattle. That means, of course, too many calves about to be born this spring. Since 1969 beef cow numbers have increased some 43 per cent, and are still increasing. The new calf crop could be up another 2 per cent over last spring. For the same period the United States has seen its cow numbers increase by 22 per cent.

The reasons for this surplus cow situation are now reasonably well understood. They are not peculiar to Canada or North America, but are global and relate to unusual weather patterns and a switch from the cheap food era to the present era of rapidly increasing food costs. This global switch started about seven years ago and during this seven year interval we made some wrong assumptions. By we I mean farmers, cattlemen, consumers, and most of all, governments. We thought that, because live cattle prices and retail beef prices were rising rapidly over most of the world, there must be a shortage of cattle, especially on this continent.

We completely ignored or forgot to make allowances for three significant factors. First was worldwide inflation; second, devaluation and realignment of some of the major world currencies, and third, the fantastic impact on a global basis of the energy crisis and the resulting balance of payments problems. We really were not short of cattle supplies but we thought we were, and governments must accept a great deal of blame for this error in judgment.

In simple terms we have about a quarter million surplus cows in Canada at present. We need to market about 900,000 cows this year if we are to stop the growth of the national cow herd. Last year we only marketed slightly over 600,000, and that was less than in 1973. In sharp contrast, however, the United States has turned the corner in its cow cycle. Its cow marketing for 1974 was up by some 20 per cent over 1973. That is the reverse of our situation. For that reason the United States will resolve its cow numbers problem quicker than we in Canada.

I want to make a quick comment on the minister's $10 million canned cow beef for foreign aid program which was announced last December 13. I suggest it was a good policy, unique in many respects—perhaps it was even a first—because it proposed to provide a national incentive to reduce our cow numbers and at the same time help the third world needy countries. It was a most welcome suggestion but it was much too late—four months too late. It should have been under way last September and have operated all fall at the period of our lowest cow prices throughout the year. It has not helped our cow market at all. This is evident since the deputy minister testified a week ago in the standing committee that to date only sample lots have been canned, and no commercial canning has started although all tenders have been accepted. Perhaps the minister might give serious consideration to a continuation of this policy that would start next September 1.

Earlier, Madam Speaker, I made a comment about supply management and our cattle industry. The alternative to a supply management route for beef cattle must surely be to make our North American market system work as we all know it can work. This means that our border problems involving unequal quotas must be resolved, and soon. At this moment there are over 30,000 more feeder cattle in western Canada than there were last year. We have a total of some 300,000, and that is a record for feeder cattle at this time of the year. Due to extreme soil moisture deficiencies all across the southern prairies the prospects for grass are very poor. In most cases grass reserves, what are left after our mild and open winter, and what new grass we get, will be needed for our cow herds.

Our cattle industry should understand fully the consequences of keeping all these feeder cattle in Canada in the face of empty feed lots—that are not going to be filled for obvious economic reasons—and the lack of summer grazing. Are we going to export feeder cattle or are we going to eat the fat cattle here, later on? If the decision is to eat the fat cattle here, then we had better be prepared to accept prices considerably below the United States level for the next two to three years. The only country in the world that can afford to buy our cattle at North American market levels is the United States.

I say again, Madam Speaker, it is time we resolved our quota problems at the border. Only last week the press reported that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce proposed a meeting with United States trade officials. One of Mr. Butz's assistant secretaries has indicated that they would be pleased to see the quotas ended even if the situation may soon reverse, with Canada's producers anxious to sell their cattle in a higher priced American market.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

An hon. Member: Let him finish.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there agreement that the hon. member should finish his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In conclusion, I say very seriously that I have considerable feeling for the position the government finds itself in with respect to our cattle industry. If the government uses the provisions of this act to support cattle prices at too high a level, it will only prolong the period of downward adjustment for our cattle numbers. It will merely push the numbers problem ahead of us.

● (2200)

Our total cattle industry cannot be fragmented by a variety of provincial cattle policies and still operate under a North American market concept. We have been in severe trouble because of U.S.A. policies and actions, but in the final analysis we cannot operate without them.

Mr. Benjamin: Ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—ALLEGED RCMP INVESTIGATION INTO RACIAL TROUBLE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBILITY OF INTENSIFIED PROGRAM OF DEPORTING ILLEGAL ENTRANTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Madam Speaker, yesterday I pointed out to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) that Australia, because of its 6 per cent unemployment, has intensified its program to deport aliens who are in that country illegally. It seems to me that that government is acting on a simple principle—When you have a law, it must be enforced. To do anything else makes a mockery of our entire legal system. Laws of this kind are made to control those who have least respect for the rights of others. Inherent in that fact lies the probability that the people who make those laws necessary are the very people who are most likely to violate them.

I also recognize that our democratic way of life depends on a large reservoir of trust, that most people are in fact law-abiding citizens; but it is the law-abiding people who suffer most at the hands of those individuals who have lost all conscience regarding responsibilities.

Whenever we have laws that lose their meaning because of ineffectual and half-hearted enforcement, we erode the standards by which our citizens guide their conduct. All of us need reference points for our lives. There are times when we face decisions for which we may or may not have a ready answer, regardless of how intent we are on doing right. The law becomes the reference point for our behaviour and gives us the opportunity for moral and psychological rest and equilibrium, as opposed to tension and distress. In short, the law helps us to decide. That is true only if the law is dependable, clear and enforced. But when the government declares a law, then backs off, does not enforce it, does not take it seriously, it places citizens in an impossible situation, a situation of indecision and tension.

If the government declares a law but does not provide for meaningful enforcement or penalties, it declares loudly that it does not take its own laws seriously. And this is where we find ourselves today.

The amnesty program the government conducted 18 months ago was a clear admission that the government had allowed aliens to flout our laws. The fact that there are still thousands of aliens in our country illegally shows that the government still has not moved in with the muscle that is needed. The immigration officers on duty at our borders are doing yeoman's service, but they are not getting the kind of support they deserve.

The point is that aliens here illegally either take jobs away from the legitimate working force or else are a drain on the social services of our country. Because they are here illegally it is impossible to determine exactly how many of them there are in this country. This fact underscores the need for the government to design more effective machinery for tracing aliens in Canada.

Let me illustrate how they drain the tax dollars allocated to social services. The Toronto Star of February 6, 1975, carries a story about a Guyanese immigrant awaiting deportation, by the name of Chunilall Misir. According to the Toronto Star, the Immigration Department reckons the total cost of keeping Misir here, without medical bills, is around $11,000. In addition he was hospitalized because he had tried to escape custody; he broke his hip and his heel and there are large hospital bills beside the $11,000 bill already incurred.

Then there are those parasites who find ways to get welfare benefits, UIC payments and government grants. Once an individual decides to remain in a country illegally he decides, in effect, to become a law breaker. From that point it becomes increasingly easy for him to violate other legal and ethical boundaries.

This brings me to my third and final point, which is that illegal aliens more easily become a destructive element in our society. As I have pointed out, they already see themselves as violators of the law. This in itself restricts the number of legal avenues open to them. It therefore becomes all too easy for them to drift into a life of furtive relationships and questionable living patterns. I am by no means suggesting that all those who find themselves in this predicament are living in constant violation of other laws, but I am saying that their situation leads all too easily to this kind of lifestyle.

For these three main reasons I should like to cajole the minister until he is ready to beef up the border patrol, speed up the process of hearings and, in short, deal emphatically with this issue so that people may once again believe that Canadian laws mean what they say. I welcome the green paper and the opportunity it provides the Canadian people to contribute to the legislative process, but in the final analysis it matters not how good a policy emerges from these discussions or how good the laws may be if the government lacks the resolve to enforce its legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the minister replied to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) on this matter on March 5 in the House he said he was unaware of any RCMP investigation into racial trouble in lower mainland British Columbia, and also that the Department of Manpower and Immigration takes the necessary enforcement action when persons illegally in Canada come to its attention. There is very little to be added from the point of view of our immigration law enforcement.

As has been said many times, the department does not conduct witch hunts or similar exercises—a tactic which would be repugnant to the Canadian way of life. When persons enter Canada illegally or when, having entered legally, they remain beyond their allotted time, either through our own enforcement capability or because of our very close liaison with law enforcement agencies at all levels, adequate means exist within immigration legislation to deal quickly and effectively with the situation.

HEALTH—INQUIRY AS TO STANDARDS FOR ASBESTOS FIBRES IN AIR—CONDITIONS AT CLINTON CREEK MINE IN YUKON

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to a question I asked in the House the other day concerning the dangers posed by asbestos, particularly in a Canadian mine over which the Canadian government has sole jurisdiction, namely, the Clinton Creek mine in the Yukon Territory.

To understand this situation one has to look at what is happening at the Thetford Mine in Quebec where it has been found that 61 per cent of 1,200 miners are suffering from lung abnormalities, including two types of cancer and a condition called asbestosis, which ultimately leads to death.

It is interesting to note that in this case the waste asbestos products have been blowing in the air and across the border. The environmental protection agency of the United States found it to be too much for them in Maine, yet the government of Quebec seemed to be quite happy to allow this condition to continue. I recognize that provincial jurisdiction is involved here and I am not charging the federal government with any particular neglect in this area; but I think we now have to concentrate upon those matters that are within federal jurisdiction, since more and more evidence has come to light about the connection between lung cancer, chest cancer, cancer of the larynx and asbestosis.

My information is that in June, 1974, asbestos counts were taken at the Clinton Creek mine in the Yukon. Out of 133 counts, 19 proved to be significantly above the level of five fibres per cubic centimetre. To appreciate the significance of that, Britain's standard is two fibres per cubic centimetre. In the United States it is five fibres per cubic centimetre. Both England and the United States are about to reduce their standards.

Dr. Carneau, one of the acknowledged experts in this whole question of carcinogens, in respect to asbestos has found that .001 is the only safe level. He is from the University of Illinois, and he was recently funded with a $3.5 million grant. No place in this country now has a level that satisfies Dr. Carneau, yet we have increasing evidence that cancers are developing.

The difficulty is that these cancers do not develop for many years. We have some cases of people being exposed to asbestos for as short a period as four months and developing lung cancer 35 years later. In the Clinton Creek mine, studies since June of 1974 have been in the hands of the minister's department, and what I want to find out is whether he has made any studies of the miners concerned. Have we checked into the number of compensation claims that have been made as a result of this situation and which are under our sole jurisdiction?

The minister's answer, which I submit is a complete red herring, was: "Well, all we have to do is pass the environmental protection act in this House and we can go right ahead and fix it up." He had better look at the environmental protection act, which does contain certain provisions; but we have already passed a law in this parliament which is known as the Clear Air Act, which I recall my friends in the Liberal party were quite successful in promoting in my riding as a very progressive approach to environmental hazards.

I should now like to quote from "Environment and the Law", a publication of Environment Canada:

> The Clear Air Act gives the federal government authority to set national air quality objectives and national emission standards where there is a significant danger to health—

In other words, the jurisdiction and authority to act are clearly within that law now. What I am asking the minister and his charming parliamentary secretary to do is to pass immediately regulations under the Clear Air Act setting minimum enforceable asbestos standards right across the country so that we can start protecting thousands and thousands of miners who work under increasingly hazardous conditions. Why I say the hazards are increasing is that the longer we wait, the worse the problem becomes. The more scientific data we accumulate, the more hazards apparently we are exposing our miners to, Madam Speaker.

On the question of jurisdiction, it is clear that we have sole jurisdiction both in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have the clear right to pass regulations now; we do not have to wait for the House to pass the environmental protection act at all. It is not good enough for the minister to come to this House and to say: "Well, you fellows in the opposition are again blocking progress; we can protect these miners if we pass the bill". I say that is a complete cop-out, and I really did expect something better from a minister who has a very good reputation in this House, one I respect a great deal as a result of some of the legislation he has promoted.

What I am asking is for some leadership at the federal level. Admittedly there are problems in Quebec and Ontario in terms of enforcement and getting decent standards. But if we provide leadership at the federal level and put forward enforceable asbestos fibre standards right across the country, then we are going to save some lives. This is a pretty important matter. We may save a few lives of people who have been exposed and who will continue to be exposed to this terrible hazard.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, a group from the Bureau of Health Hazards and an environmental engineer from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development undertook a survey at Clinton Creek in June, 1974.

The purpose of this survey was to determine the concentration of asbestos fibres in the air at the mine, mill and townsite. Following the on-site survey, several months have been necessary to check on instrument calibrations and to calculate the results. A detailed report is expected to be sent to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development within the next 10 days.

As a result of recent health findings among asbestos workers the department will recommend that workers should not be exposed to average concentrations of asbestos in the air in excess of two fibres per millimetre. This level is identical to that adopted for occupational situations in the United Kingdom and Sweden recently, and is the same as that presently proposed in the United States. This recommendation is in accord with interim target concentration for the prevention of risk to the health of asbestos workers recommended by the International Labour Organization.

Although many of the levels found in the survey at Clinton Creek exceeded this recommended level, modifications in housekeeping and operational methods as well as improvement in the application of local exhaust ventilation systems are expected to reduce the airborne concentrations of asbestos to the desired level.

Mr. Leggatt: Read faster.

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): It should be borne in mind that the levels we have found in the survey are not grossly in excess of the very stringent standard the department is now recommending, and that the average levels we have found in the air at the mines at Clinton Creek are generally below those that we would have considered acceptable even a few months ago.

There are presently no enforceable federal standards with regard to the presence of asbestos fibres in the air of mines and factories. The recommendations from the department to reduce the airborne concentration of asbestos at Clinton Creek can be the basis for further action by the territorial government.

We do not anticipate any problems from airborne asbestos at the townsite at Clinton Creek where the values found in the survey were between zero and 0.04 fibres per millimetre. The Clean Air Act provides a mechanism whereby pollution of the air at the townsite could be controlled if this were necessary. The environmental contaminants bill presently before the House would provide the authority to enable any necessary measures to be taken to protect the health of the public from the release of substances such as asbestos that contaminate the environment.

In reply to the question of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the figures quoted in the question would seem to refer to the raw data from which time-weighted averages were calculated. The recommended level which I referred to earlier is a time-weighted average based on eight hours' exposure.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Faster.

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): During the working day it is normal for point samples to vary considerably above and below the time-weighted average value. As soon as the survey is completed the department will initiate any further studies on the health status of the miners that are required.

POST OFFICE—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF PICTURE OF QUEEN FROM PRESTAMPED ENVELOPES

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Madam Speaker, I am rising tonight with a double feeling of regret—regret at the action of the government, and regret at the less than complete answer afforded me in the House by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) a couple of weeks ago when I raised this matter.

The monarchy stands at the cornerstone of our life as a dominion and as a free people. Like millions of Canadians I believe that the symbols of the Crown must be kept permanently before our people, both to remind us of our heritage and to warn us against the loss of that liberty and dignity with which the monarchy provides us.

Accordingly I am at a loss to know why the post office has decided that its eight-cent pre stamped envelopes will no longer bear the portrait of Her Majesty, but instead some modern design. The feeble excuse given is that the new design is philatelically superior and much harder to counterfeit. I ask, who in the world would want to counterfeit it?

Bluntly, this is but the latest in a long line of petty insults to the Crown, over which Canadians seemingly have no control, for which the government has no mandate and by which, I believe, the pointy-headed bureaucrats in the public service are steadily eroding the monarchy position in this country. I have no objection at all if the post office wishes to introduce several varieties of stamped envelopes, and for all I care one might even bear the portrait of the Postmaster General.

The point is, however, that the standard definitive of our Gracious Queen should always be available on stamped envelopes for those Canadians who wish to purchase them, for those Canadians who are proud, and indeed who request specifically such envelopes and stamps as their recognition of the Queen as the emblem of our citizenship and the torch of our freedom.

The Postmaster General answered my question in the House on February 19 in a flippant way. He did not seem to want to admit the change was in the works. This is characteristic of the less than straightforward attitude of the government. Since then my friends in the Monarchist League of Canada tell me they have been inundated with inquiries as to why—Why this action—Why this change carried forward by a government which professes devotion to the Crown on one hand and does its best to remove the Crown from public conscience on the other? What does this step accomplish? Why can Canadians no longer buy prestamped envelopes bearing the image of our Queen?

I challenge the minister to back up the government's words with actions. It is not enough to say the stamped envelopes bearing Her Majesty's protrait were available and may just be available again. I beg with him tonight to please millions of Canadians, and to affirm the government's loyalty to our Sovereign, by announcing that the prestamped envelopes bearing the portrait of Her Majesty will continue to be available, along with any other varieties as the department may see fit to print.

If such action is not taken, Mr. Speaker, loyal monarchists across the country will be excused if they feel that the government has betrayed them, and wonder once again about the forces of republicanism in the public service, forces which represent no one except themselves, no policy except destruction of cherished symbols, and no thought except for so-called progress toward anarchy.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: Madam Speaker.

Mr. Mackasey: I apologize, Madam Speaker. I am rarely on my feet in the House. I listened to the remarks of the hon. member with a great deal of attention. The new prestamped envelope, as he knows, is to be reproduced by lithography in two colours in order to prevent counterfeiting. So far we have been unable by this particular method to come up with a decent reproduction of the Queen of which we could be proud. We have been experimenting with it, and it is conceivable that once we have perfected it to the degree that it satisfies the quality we think should exemplify the Queen's picture then we would make sure that these are available.

What I object to is that the hon. gentleman seems to feel that loyalty to Her Majesty the Queen is synonomous with the amount of pictures made available across Canada to the satisfaction of the Monarchist League. I have no apology to make to the hon. gentleman pertaining to the great lady whom I have met on several occasions.

I do not think one can measure a person's allegiance to the Queen, or to symbols, or to the House of Commons, or to other traditions which keep this country together simply by preprinted envelopes. I think the moment of truth comes by other means. The fact of the matter is that if I or the government could be accused of playing politics by removing the Queen's picture from the envelope, then the charge would be equally valid against the hon. gentleman who conceivably could be not necessarily expressing his loyalty to the Queen but catering to the members of the monarchist group for political reasons. I think he will have to have enough confidence in the government and the people who are members of the government, including the Postmaster General, and appreciate that we have as much respect and admiration for and loyalty to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada as he has.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF PART V TO STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, regarding the continuing problems with the Seafarers' International Union. In view of a response of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacGuigan) on December 19 and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on December 16, 1974, that the Minister of Labour was prepared to consider amendments to the Canada Labour Code in respect of any matters prejudicial to union members which could give the men protection, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That Part V of the Canada Labour Code be immediately referred to the appropriate parliamentary committee so that recommendations may be forthcoming to better protect members of unions who are being abused by their own executive as appears to be the continuing situation with regard to the SIU.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED REVELATION OF WAGE OFFER TO GRAIN WEIGHERS AND SAMPLERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the Canadian Wheat Board's decision to discontinue movements of grain from country elevators as of today, and the serious repercussions of that decision on western producers and the Canadian economy generally, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the President of the Treasury Board to make a statement on motions later this day, explaining the exact nature of the government's offer to the grain weighers and samplers—part of the general labour and trades group—and the prospect for an immediate resumption of negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HOUSING

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF PERIOD OF ELIGIBILITY FOR $500 BONUS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to bring up an important and very urgent matter.

It deals with the $500 bonus to first-time home buyers. This matter is very pressing because the bonus will apply for only 12 months and we are already in the fifth, and also because it affects 90 per cent of new owners of mobile homes located on rented lots. As Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation requires that new owners have a five-year lease on their rented lot, as indicated in the letter I received on February 17, 1975, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to take steps immediately to allow the eligibility for this bonus of owners without leases on rented lots or, at least of those who have leases, by reducing the five-year requirement to one year.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF REGIONAL METRIC COMMISSION OFFICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

I even believe that the government is prepared to give consideration to it. I hope there will not be the usual Pavlovian response.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House asks the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to give consideration to the establishing of Metric Commission regional or provincial offices at various centres across Canada to facilitate the handling of inquiries respecting metric conversion.

SUGGESTED SUBSIDY TO CONSUMERS OF CERTAIN FOOD PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House for the consideration of a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since cold stores now contain incredible stocks of unsold turkeys and that as of February 1, 1975, they had more than 10,300,000 pounds of turkey while normal inventory is five million pounds and since consumption of those products has fallen because people cannot afford to buy them, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That the House consider the possibility of subsidizing consumption of food products such as turkey, fish, chicken, through a consumer compensated discount whose main effect will be to bring those prices more within the reach of all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MAINTAIN ESSENTIAL SERVICES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I understand that the talks have resumed with the GTL union, and that is encouraging, but I would like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that the services designated as essential to the safety and security of the public are not being maintained, in violation of the law, what he is doing to avoid a tragedy that might occur any day as the result of services designated as essential to the safety and security of the public being illegally withdrawn?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when public servants holding positions designated as essential do not report to work and are on strike, they are violating the law. We are collecting data to submit as evidence and we have decided to prosecute in each case. Evidently, the directors of the programs involved will take the necessary steps to maintain security and if there is no staff, they will take the necessary decisions to protect the public.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether his assertions about taking measures to examine cases in which these services are withdrawn is not in fact all talk, and that he is doing nothing effective to ensure that essential services are maintained? Granted that this parliament has given the right to strike, is it not equally the law of this land that services designated as essential to the safety and security of the public be maintained, and has the minister any measure to put forward in this regard which is not totally ineffective?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we cannot compel public servants to come back to work. The departments concerned will take the necessary steps to assure public security. All departments have let us know that they have occasionally suspended some services because they did not have full staff. As for us, we are taking all legal proceedings at our disposal to penalize the individuals who have been violating the law. As I said, in no circumstance will we withdraw the proceedings lodged before the courts, because we feel that all civil servants must obey the law.

[English]

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. With the grain shipments in the country being blocked, the postal service in virtual chaos and the law of this parliament sponsored by this government being broken with impunity to the danger of the public, will the Acting Prime Minister as head of this government do more than simply reaffirm the faith of the government in collective bargaining will he start governing this country, or is he prepared to sit back and watch the country drift into chaos?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1120)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the President of the Treasury Board has given every assurance that the law of this country will be enforced. It is the law of this country that people do have the right to strike. It is the law of the country that certain designated employees who are essential to public safety and security should work. My colleague the President of the Treasury Board is saying that he is accumulating evidence. There are procedures provided in the law for dealing with such cases. He is following those procedures, and I do not think that he can go any further than to enforce the law itself. It may be that this parliament will want to reverse itself and deprive strikers of the right to strike, but that is a decision for which we would have to take responsibility if the time comes for that action. In the meantime, I believe that we should support the law as it now stands.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—APPLICATION TO STAFF RELATIONS BOARD FOR CONSENT TO PROSECUTE THOSE WHO STRIKE ILLEGALLY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my first supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board and ask him if, in connection with the investigation and the accumulation of evidence with respect to illegal activity in the present difficulty, he has as yet made an application to the Staff Relations Board for consent to prosecute where there is clear evidence of illegality.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the evidence is provided to my ministry by the different departments, we will proceed to go before the board to get permission to prosecute under the law, as members of parliament have written it. I am very surprised that at one minute hon. members tell me that I am too tough and the minute after they tell me that I am not tough enough. Since the first day I have been consistent. Everyone who is acting illegally will be prosecuted, and there will be no withdrawal of any cases to buy peace. If it is the wish of this parliament to change the system and any hon. member is so bright, their ideas can be brought before the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate studying the Finkelman Report.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO INTERVENTION BY MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES IN LEGAL STRIKE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether this parliament has given certain rights with respect to the collective bargaining process. That is not the question in front of us at all. The minister should not try to dilute a very serious issue with his offhand, casual remarks.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, and I hope that the President of the Treasury Board pays some attention to it because part of our difficulty arises out of this. Can the Minister of National Defence and his colleague assure us that they have taken steps to reinforce earlier instructions to base commanders at Canadian armed forces bases across Canada to prevent members of the Canadian armed forces from undertaking work activities normally carried out by employees who are legally out on strike. Shutdown of service is occurring not only with defence; I think all hon. members realize in other areas of public service total shutdown of service has come about.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can give the assurance that the Canadian armed forces will be used only to maintain essential services. In the case of illegal strike activity, the forces will only become involved in carrying on those essential services. They will not be involved in strike-breaking. They will not be involved in interfering in any case where the personnel concerned are legally on strike.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OTHER GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES WILL NOT INTERVENE IN LEGAL STRIKE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary. Can we have some assurance from the Acting Prime Minister that where similar situations prevail, employees who are designated or, are not members of the bargaining unit that is legally engaged in the strike, will not intervene and carry out work or provide services normally provided by people who are legally on strike? Would he also consult with his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, with respect to the application for consent to prosecute where illegal activity is taking place.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): There have been extensive consultations on this subject in cabinet, Mr. Speaker. As a result of these consultations we are enforcing the law, and I would like to emphasize what the President of the Treasury Board has said, and repeated on a number of occasions, that prosecutions will take place where people are not reporting for work when they are required to do so.

As for the other question, of course this government is not a strike-breaker and does not intend to be.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—CURRENT WAGES OF GRAIN WEIGHERS AND SAMPLERS—GOVERNMENT OFFER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. The immediate and serious problem is the stoppage of grain shipments from western Canada which has absolutely nothing to do with the illegal strikes but everything to do with workers who are legally on strike. Since this issue is important not only to farmers in the west but to people all over the world who need our grain, can the minister inform the House what the current wages of grain weighers and samplers are and what is the government's offer and the rationale behind it?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there are 19,000 people involved in those negotiations and it is difficult for me to remember the salary of every one of them. They are involved in the GLT strike and the parties have resumed discussions this morning. I hope they will find satisfactory grounds for settlement. It would not be advisable to negotiate the level of salaries in the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. My question to the minister did not pertain to the 19,000 but to a much more restricted number, the grain weighers and samplers. If it is not the government's intention to impose a settlement through arbitration or some other means that is not acceptable to the workers and would therefore lead to wildcat strikes and other kinds of work stoppages, can the minister tell the House, so that we can reach a fair-minded judgment on the issue, what the guidelines are for the government proposal to the specific categories of workers involved in the strike?

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even if the minister were prepared to attempt to answer that type of question, it seems to me to call for much too general an answer for the question period. Perhaps the hon. member could be a little bit more specific.

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF GROUPS WITH WHICH GOVERNMENT WILL BE NEGOTIATING WAGES OF THOSE GROUPS AND GOVERNMENT'S WAGE POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will come to my third question then, and if the minister will answer that he will be answering the second question I asked. In view of the strikes that are taking place and the strikes that are distinctly possible in future because of all the contracts that are due for negotiation, will the minister assure the House by Monday of next week that he will make a statement on motions to inform the House, and therefore the public, of what groups will be negotiating with the government in the near future? Secondly, will the minister provide a breakdown—which he could get on the weekend—of the wages and salaries that those groups are now receiving? Most important, would the minister indicate to the House the government's general position on wages and salaries? I ask this in view of the fact that he said in committee yesterday that certain civil servants are being paid too much. It seems to me that he should justify to the House and the public the government's rationale for its wage policy.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member could have taken the trouble yesterday morning to come to the committee and ask me those questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I was at the meeting at 9.25 yesterday morning and until ten o'clock there was no NDP member present. He could have asked me those questions there. I have 80 different unions negotiating with the Treasury Board and this means 155,000 people. I do not think it is fair to ask me for, or have the House listen, to these details. If there is a question on the order paper, I will be happy to table the information.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege with reference to what the minister just said. I asked my question precisely because a member of the New Democratic Party was at that meeting yesterday—

An hon. Member: How long?

Mr. Broadbent: —and heard the minister make the statement to which I referred in my question this morning. I repeat, what he said in committee to a limited number of members of the House is not sufficient in terms of providing a general statement on the government's policy on wages and salaries, which is what I requested him to provide in the House on Monday, at the latest.

● (1130)

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, may I speak on the question of privilege? I was at that committee meeting yesterday and I pointedly asked the minister that question specifically. I asked him what the guidelines are and how he intended to view the statement he had made about being tough, in light of the request made to the committee to allow more money for supplementary estimates. At no time during that committee meeting did he give us any definitive answer or any indication that he was prepared to answer those questions.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, I was specific. I said there was nobody of that party there before ten o'clock. I was there alone for 20 minutes, waiting for the quorum. Do not blame me for that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be an interesting point of debate, but not a question of privilege.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPRESENTATIONS OF QUEBEC LIBERAL PARTY CONCERNING PROGRAM "FORMAT 60"—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the minister responsible for the CRTC.

It has been reported that representations have been made to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission by a certain organization known as the Quebec Liberal Party following the last program of the "Format 60" series on the CBC.

Can the minister tell the House if such representations have been made and what is the position of his department in this matter?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an answer to the hon. member. I am not aware if representations have been made as the event is too recent. As for the position of the department, it is of course to respect the independence of action of the CRTC, which is a quasi-legal organization which acts on its own authority as concerns complaints such as the ones mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

Could the minister tell the House whether, if such representations are made, he will make a statement in the House on this matter?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I cannot promise to make a statement, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know if such a statement will be timely. I believe that if the CRTC receives a complaint it considers serious and decides to investigate, it will be up to the CRTC itself to form its own judgment. This is what the CRTC has done in the past without the department being involved or invited to intervene in any way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATIONS AGAINST THE SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. As a former vice president of the Seafarers' International Union of Canada yesterday called for a public inquiry into what he calls serious irregularities within the union, such as beatings, ballot stuffing, do-not-ship lists and threats against the lives of some union members, including his own, and as on February 28 the minister said in reply to a question that the government wants to be thorough before reaching conclusions about conducting an independent inquiry, can the minister now advise the House if he is sufficiently convinced that this inquiry must be held. If so, can he tell the House when it will be initiated by the government.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, officials of the Department of Justice and the Department of Labour have been working together on this matter to this date. While we have been pursuing additional information, there has been no indication of any justification for an inquiry. Some investigations are still going on and my colleague, the Acting Minister of Labour, will have something further to say on that.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO PART V—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Labour. Last December I twice raised the matter of improvements and amendments to Part V of the Canada Labour Code, to protect union members from discrimination and improper treatment by their own executive. I now want to ask the Acting Minister of Labour what progress if any has been made in this regard, since it is obvious that the SIU has continued repressive and unfair practices against many of its members.

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can accept the conclusions advanced by the hon. member. So far there have been no clear cut indications following the various investigations, to indicate that there is reason to believe that criminal activities exist. I bring to the hon. member's attention that there is evidence of two criminal cases related to one assault which should be pursued by the police departments involved, but this does not justify an inquiry. I remind the hon. member, and I am surprised he is not aware of this, that there is a tribunal especially established to deal with such allegations as he raises. That tribunal is the Canada Labour Relations Board. People who have reason to believe that there has been a violation of the act or that they have been discriminated against can come before the board and be heard.

Mr. MacKay: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. I am perfectly aware of the tribunal to which he refers but remind him that there is a cumbersome, time-consuming and impractical prerequisite which must be met before people who wish to be heard by the board may have the opportunity to be heard. I request that the acting minister do something to change the legislation in this regard.

ABORTION

VIEW OF MINISTER OF FINANCE CONCERNING REMOVAL OF PROVISION FROM CRIMINAL CODE—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Can he tell the House if the former minister of justice consulted him before making his public announcement that he feels abortion should be taken out of the Criminal Code and left to the conscience of the individual.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, obviously, a question about when and how ministers talk to one another is itself extraordinary.

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF PROVISION FROM CRIMINAL CODE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he clarify whether it is the policy of the government to reinforce existing laws, which apparently is the view of the Minister of Justice, or whether the Minister of Finance, in his statement, touched more closely on the policy of the government.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is agreed upon the enforcement of the law.

Mr. Yewchuk: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the response of the Acting Prime Minister, can he say if the Minister of Finance was expressing intended government policy which we may soon see in the form of new legislation.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when the government intends to introduce legislation, it gives lots of notice.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR AID TO PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and concerns meetings he and his officials had on Wednesday with representatives of the agriculture industry, particularly with potato growers of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. I think he recalls those meetings vividly. In view of the request for emergency aid which is so badly needed by potato growers in both those provinces, has the minister arrived at a decision? If so, when will he make an announcement? I ask this, as time is pressing.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we only received the request from the farmers last week. We met them this week. We hope to have some kind of mutually agreed on assistance program to announce by the beginning of next week.

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF MARKETING STUDIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago the minister referred to studies which had been made into aspects of marketing which disturbed him and his officials. He indicated he was prepared to make those documents available after he had met with officials of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick earlier this week. Has he made those documents available to them, or will he do so shortly?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the studies concern actual incidents taking place in connection with the marketing of potatoes or incidents which have taken place in the past as well as suggestions for programs. The farmers made some new suggestions this week for our consideration. We will make the studies public as soon as we have put all these factors together.

TRANSPORT

URBAN TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—DEFINITION OF WORDS, "COMMUTER SYSTEM"

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I gave him notice of it. With respect to the Urban Transportation Assistance Program, what steps is the minister taking to ensure that the words "commuter system" will be defined so as to include municipal transit systems, so that, for example, the Northeast Rapid Transit Line of the city of Edmonton will qualify for federal assistance, that is, for 100 per cent of the cost of vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of stations and platforms?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member is right, but I did not receive notice of his question. I should like to have received it to enable me to answer his question, but I did not get the notice.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thought, because of our postal difficulties, that I would have the question hand delivered. This I did three days ago. I sent the minister notice of the question. I am sorry he did not get it.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEMS TO CONSERVE ENERGY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What action is the minister taking to translate appeals to the public to conserve energy, such as appeals being contained in national advertising campaigns, into such concrete measures as federal financial support for rapid transit systems within municipalities to cut down on the energy wasting confluence of cars in highly urbanized areas?

● (1140)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is clearly a direction, not only to the advantage of land use but also energy conservation, in which we will be moving. It is with that motive in mind we are developing policies with the Department of Transport in that direction.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE INCREASE OF QUOTAS FOR SEALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I wanted to direct to the Minister of State (Fisheries), but since he is away to carry out official duties in Vancouver, I shall direct it to the Minister of the Environment who is working in close contact with the former in this area. Considering that people within our society and governmental agencies are seriously concerned, whether justifiably so or not, about the seal possibly becoming extinct, has the minister received from his field officers any report as to the number of individual seals which are on the ice fields off the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): In spite of the close relationship which exists between the Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Minister of the Environment, I have received to date no definite information as to the seal population in the gulf, although I have heard unofficially that they are quite numerous this year.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question.

In view of the minister's answer, when this answer will be official, does the department intend to increase the quotas? To dispel the preconceived ideas that exist on that matter and the false notions members might have, on both this and the other side of the House, I would ask the minister to organize immediately, or as soon as possible, a trip to the ice banks of the Gulf of St. Lawrence including the Magdalen Islands, so that members might see that the seal is not dying out.

Mrs. Sauvé: I am sure such a trip would be very rewarding for everybody and would enable members to see how seal hunting is done and to draw their own conclusions. As soon as reports are available on the number of seals, the Minister of State for Fisheries will determine the quotas for this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME TO PROTECT CHILDREN FROM EFFECTS OF POVERTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very strong position taken by the minister in a speech he made last October 31 in Toronto wherein he called upon Canada to face up to the problem of poverty and inequalities in distribution, and in view of the ghastly picture portrayed this week in the report published by the National Council of Welfare on children in poverty in Canada, can the minister say whether he views this as a serious matter and whether he is now prepared to take action to provide for a guaranteed income level for all Canadians, especially for the 1,600,000 children who are deprived because of the inequalities in our economic system?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are numerous elements in that report on which I agree entirely. Regarding the second question of the hon. member, he just has to consider the positions adopted on the whole question in a consistent way by the government during the last two years. I would have been pleased had the hon. member's colleagues in the provinces shown as much consistency as the federal government in that field. We would have made more progress.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that at the recent federal-provincial conference most of the provinces were prepared to agree to amendments to the Canada Assistance Plan and other legislation to move forward in this matter, when is this minister and this government going to give some leadership with respect to this very crucial problem?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre must have the same source of information as his leader. I am afraid they are both wrong.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in terms of sheer investment, does the minister not agree that it would be worthwhile to invest in these 1,600,000 children whatever is needed to give them the opportunity of becoming first class Canadians?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that the hon. member endorses what I have been saying for the past two years.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE AT VANCOUVER HARBOUR—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF WESTERN CONCILIATOR

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last I asked the Acting Minister of Labour if he would approach the two parties in the dispute on the west coast, the longshoremen and the Maritime Employers Association, to see whether both parties would welcome a mediator at this time. Has he made that approach?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I have effectively advised the employees association and the union president this morning that I had appointed Mr. Bill Kelly, assistant deputy minister of labour, as a mediator to help the parties come to a settlement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT INTENTION TO SUPPORT 200 MILE LIMIT OR EDGE OF CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the minister is presently preparing to attend the Law of the Sea Conference, and in view of the uncertainty demonstrated within the past ten days in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as to where Canadian territorial waters end and international waters begin, is the minister prepared, either this morning or on motions next week, to make a clear statement on the stand he will be taking in Geneva on the 200 mile limit or the edge of the margin, whichever outward limit he intends to support?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, I should first clarify for him his reference to the waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The government of Canada regards these waters as historic Canadian waters. As such, they are internal waters of Canada. The laws of Canada apply to them in the same way they apply to the waters of our inland lakes. That position has been reaffirmed over the years, going back to the early administrations. I believe in 1949 the Prime Minister of the day reiterated that Canadian government position in the House of Commons.

With respect to the second part of the hon. member's question, last week I made a fairly comprehensive statement in that historic city of Halifax on the whole question of law of the sea. I will make it available to my hon. friend, and if following reading he wishes to pursue it further I will deal with it in the House.

● (1150)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his clarification of the Gulf of St. Lawrence problem; I am just sorry that there were not other authorities in Canada who were as clear about the matter as the minister appears to be. The Solicitor General is not here, but there seems to have been some dispute as to the jurisdiction over these waters. As for the statement made in Halifax, I did read that statement.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is this. Perhaps the minister would make a statement in the House. I am asking him to make a statement and to define, with charts if necessary for tabling in the House, the exact lines from which his 200 mile or edge of the margin proposals are going to be made.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have restated, and will continue to restate at the Geneva conference, the position of the Canadian government which is to seek sovereign rights, and to have them confirmed in an international convention, to the edge of the margin. As my hon. friend knows, this is particularly so off the east beyond the 200 mile zone, which is gaining considerable acceptance in the international community. I should point out to my hon. friend with respect to our efforts to have our views on the continental margin accepted that we are still having an uphill fight, but the Canadian delegation has been instructed to pursue that objective with vigour at the Geneva conference.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGATION BENEFIT CHEQUES NOT PICKED UP FROM TEMPORARY DEPOTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister of manpower who is responsible for unemployment insurance. The minister will recall that last year during the postal strike there was some difficulty experienced by those entitled to cheques which were not picked up at temporary depots, and an investigation into the matter was carried out. It has been brought to my attention that a similar set of circumstances exists in the Toronto area where some one-third are not picking up their cheques at the Wellington Street depot. Would the minister investigate this matter and report to the House his findings?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will look into it. I would remind the House that there were some great exaggerations and misinterpretations of some of the findings made on the previous occasion. There are many reasons why people might not pick up their cheques, such as not even knowing about the facility being made available to them. Therefore, I do not think it is wise to rush to certain conclusions of the sort implied in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not particularly worried about what the conclusions were last year. I am now telling the minister that it has come to me through reliable sources that one-third of the cheques at the Wellington Street depot have not been picked up. Would the minister do us a favour by looking into these allegations and reporting back to the House? While doing so, in addition to the Wellington Street depot would he also investigate the situation across the entire country, so that we will know what is happening and whether any abuses are taking place?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKES AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF PLANS TO SETTLE AS WELL AS LONG-TERM PLANS TO AVOID FUTURE STRIKES

Mr. Marke Raines (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Labour. In view not only of what I call the critical situation at the port of Vancouver but a recurring critical situation month after month and year after year, with the port of Vancouver strikebound by two unions, as the House now knows, I want to ask not only what are the government's immediate plans but also what are the government's long range plans to solve the labour problems on the west coast and to ensure a steady flow of grain and other commodities through west coast ports?

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have just announced that as an immediate step we have appointed a mediator, Mr. Kelly. I assure the hon. member that Mr. Kelly is a very experienced man in longshoring problems, well known to the parties, and I hope that not only will he assist the parties in settling their dispute but that he will provide a basis for a long-range solution to the problem on the West Coast.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—SUGGESTED MINISTERIAL STATEMENT OUTLINING BASIS OF ACCUSATIONS AGAINST COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, of which I believe he has notice, and it relates to his address yesterday to the Canadian Fertilizer Institute. During his speech the minister levelled certain warnings and accusations regarding the activities of the fertilizer industry. In light of the fact that certain members of this industry object to these insinuations as having no basis, would the minister take an opportunity early next week to make a statement on motions outlining his position as to the activities of this particular industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to an address that I made to this group yesterday in Ottawa. They were holding their annual meeting at the Château Laurier and I was invited to go along. Contrary to what the papers said, the timing was arranged to meet my convenience because I wanted to be in this great institution to listen to all the speeches of hon. members on the agricultural stabilization bill.

These facts and figures were prepared by the very efficient people in my department. I am concerned about all food production in Canada, and about the people in the developing countries who have to depend upon fertilizer. If fertilizer is not available cheaply in Canada, then how can we expect them to produce food when they have to pay exorbitant prices also in the developing countries? I do not think it is necessary for me to make a statement in the House. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also outlined what further action the government may take when he addressed this body last night.

FERTILIZER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COST ANALYSIS OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, if the minister chooses not to make a statement on motions, then in view of the fact he has been quoted as saying that his department has prepared a comprehensive cost analysis of the fertilizer industry, would he be good enough to table this particular report or study in order not only that the fertilizer industry may see the basis on which the minister delivered his address yesterday but, more importantly, that the farm consumers of these products can see the report?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that speech was not distributed, and one reason it was not is that I am criticized so much for distributing speeches. If this is what the hon. member is requesting, that I should continue to distribute the talks I give when this honourable institution is not sitting—and 97 per cent of my speeches are made when the House is not in session—then I can certainly comply.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary? I am sure the minister did not hear the question or he would not have replied in that manner. I do not want him to table his speech; I got that in the mail. I am wondering whether the comprehensive cost analysis that his department made into the fertilizer industry, particularly into its pricing methods, could be tabled in the House.

Mr. Whelan: That was in a speech, Mr. Speaker, but I will table it. I will have my officials prepare it in documentary form so that it can be used by the hon. member. If my officials are wrong, then the House should know, and so should the fertilizer industry.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Did the Minister of Agriculture reach a consensus yesterday with the fertilizer industry?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, since the leader of the official opposition is asking about the consensus with the fertilizer industry, I would think all he would need do is read some of the speeches that his members put on the record in the last couple of days on the subject of stabilization.

Oral Questions

ABORTION

SUGGESTION MINISTER OF JUSTICE CORRECT STATEMENTS IN LETTER TO HOSPITALS AND REFRAIN FROM WRITING SIMILAR LETTERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and it is somewhat supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Egmont. In view of the rather humane and civilized statement that the previous minister of justice made on Wednesday that the subject of abortion should be withdrawn from the Criminal Code, in view of the statement that the Prime Minister made on February 26 that the Criminal Code refers to health as involving many considerations apart from purely physical ones, and in view of the minister's letter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that a couple of days ago I had occasion unfortunately to single out the hon. member to try to get across to him and others the undesirability of having too many preambles to a question. It seems to me that the hon. member said he understood that point, so I am wondering why he does not put his question.

● (1200)

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I do understand the point, but it is a little difficult to get the minister to understand. The minister wrote to hospitals under his own jurisdiction not too long ago and said that social and economic considerations were not to be taken into account in determining whether a pregnancy can lawfully be terminated. I would ask whether the minister has corrected that statement he has sent to hospitals under his own jurisdiction, particularly in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister in this House and also the very civilized statement made recently by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the statement was completely correct in this context, and was completely consistent with other statements the Prime Minister and I have made on the subject.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister if he would explain briefly how there is consistency? The second part of my supplementary question is, would the minister at least give this House some assurance that he will quit writing to various attorneys general in this country, and quit writing to various hospital committees, because surely by now we have an acceptable legal interpretation of Section 251?

SOCIAL SECURITY

CANADA PENSION PLAN—PROPOSED ELIGIBILITY OF HOUSEWIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is International Women's Year, and in view of the undeniably valuable contribution Canadian housewives have always made to the social and economic fibre of this country, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell this House whether his department is seriously considering allowing housewives to be eligible under the Canada Pension Plan and, if not, why not?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a study has been made by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women and also by the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Committee on this very subject. The two studies have been released and tabled before the Federal-Provincial Conference of Ministers of Welfare and, if I remember well, distributed to this parliament as well. These two studies contain specific proposals which I intend to discuss with my colleagues at the forthcoming conference in April. We will then try to develop an agreement among the various governments on the specific proposals put forward by the two advisory councils on this particular subject, which I know has aroused a lot of interest throughout the country.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENT POLICY IN AWARDING CONTRACTS WHEN DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN BIDS OF CANADIAN AND FOREIGN COMPANIES SMALL

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister relating to a statement made in the House yesterday by the Minister of Supply and Services, to the effect that the government allows 10 per cent leeway for Canadian companies when they are tendering. In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport's Department did not allow this 10 per cent, which allowed a U.S. firm to take away a contract from a Canadian firm at the Vancouver International Airport, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that he will review this contract with the Minister of Justice in order to correct the situation and allow this Canadian company to compete so that this contract might be returned to a Canadian company?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to what my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, said yesterday. He did not refer to price, he referred to Canadian content. However, the Minister of Transport in his reply laid down the general principles that apply, and that is that the government should take advantage of the cheapest supplier. There are circumstances under which that rule might be varied a little bit, but the Minister of Transport seemed to be satisfied that it should not be varied in this case.

Mr. Reynolds: What you are saying is that the American company has the Canadian content.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Order.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS—INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER INVESTIGATION EXTENDS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, on February 27 the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta asked the Minister of Transport whether he had initiated investigations into dredging contracts in British Columbia, and the minister answered no. On March 4 the hon. member for St. John's East asked the Solicitor General if evidence showed that there were grounds for suspicion in other areas, and the Solicitor General said in part:

—evidence led them to believe that there could be some kind of impropriety in other parts of the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question for the minister would he put it.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, would the Solicitor General advise the House as to what type of evidence became available to spring this investigation to B.C., and would he advise the House of the company or companies in British Columbia that are involved?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I never said the investigation was extended to British Columbia. I said the investigation in respect of dredging contracts had been extended. I also said it was not in the public interest to announce publicly where and against who the investigation was extended.

An hon. Member: You said "across Canada".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Is B.C. not part of Canada?

Mr. Allmand: It is not in the public interest to announce publicly—

An hon. Member: Has the investigation travelled across the land to B.C.?

Mr. Allmand: It is not in the public interest to announce publicly who is being investigated. This would be counterproductive to the investigation.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I would ask again if the investigation into the dredging business by this government has now gone across the country, and are they investigating companies in British Columbia?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat that we do not announce publicly where the investigation is being made, because this would be really counterproductive to any effective police investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You don't even know.

Mr. Huntington: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I was asking who, I was asking where.

An hon. Member: He doesn't know.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED ATTEMPTS OF EMPLOYEES TO SABOTAGE POSTAL CODE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Is he aware of deliberate attempts on the part of postal employees to sabotage the use of postal codes?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that certain employees recommend that postal codes should not be used, but there is no evidence that anybody is sabotaging postal codes. I am getting a little fed up with 53,000 postal employees being smeared daily by silly questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who do you think you are?

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I have here an envelope mailed recently in London, Ontario, and received in nearby Thamesford, with no cancellation or postmark on the envelope, but which does have the postal code struck out by pencil and replaced with the inscription "ban postal code", would the Postmaster General inform the House what specific steps are being taken to correct this abuse of Her Majesty's mail and the defiance of government policy by postal employees?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, if I were to listen to the hon. gentleman from the Maritimes, who normally is very quiet, but is rather unruly this morning, for reasons best known only to himself, I think the key thing would be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is still waiting for his mail.

Mr. Mackasey: I think the key phrase in the supplementary question is that the person got the letter very rapidly and very recently, so I am sure that person is quite content.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SMALL GROUPS OF ACTIVISTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is partly related. In view of the fact that an official in the post office in Toronto has revealed that the recent disruption in services was created by activist groups which go under names like "The Workers' Action Movement" and "The Spartist Independent Society in Canada", and other names of that kind, would the Postmaster General now give us the assurance that these small groups of activists will be dealt with so that the good reputation of the bulk of posties will be preserved and further disruptions of this kind avoided?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who the unnamed official is, but I am glad that the hon. member did not include the IRA in that long list.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: If you are tired, get out.

Mr. Nowlan: We are getting tired of the kind of service we are getting and the service we are not getting.

TRANSPORT

PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—AUTHORIZATION OF LETTER FROM MRS. WALLER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Sometime ago I asked the minister whether he had authorized Mrs. Diane Waller of his office to write a letter in which she indicated it would be in the public interest that passenger train service in southwestern Ontario not be restored and the federal government has the responsibility to encourage bus service instead. The minister indicated at that time that he would make a reply the next day. As that was some 132 days ago I wonder if the minister is prepared to provide us with an answer today?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that it was so noisy, not on that side but around me, that I did not catch the first part of the question.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, my question for the minister was related to a question I asked him last fall about the letter sent by Mrs. Diane Waller of his office to a constituent of mine in which she indicated it would be in the public interest that passenger train service in southwestern Ontario not be restored and that the federal government has the responsibility to encourage bus service there. The minister indicated that he would give a reply to the House and has not done so. I am wondering whether he could indicate if Mrs. Waller's letter was authorized by him before it went out and whether or not she was speaking on his behalf.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this whole problem is under study with the government of Ontario and nobody was authorized to make any statement in my name.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington on one supplementary.

PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST OF ONTARIO MINISTER FOR STUDY OF INTEGRATED BUS AND RAIL SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister whether the office of the Ontario Minister of Transport and Communications has been in touch with the minister or with his officials to express their dissatisfaction with the conclusions and recommendations of the third report of the Canadian Transport Commission in respect of transportation in our area and has the Ontario minister requested a co-operative study to establish guidelines for an integrated bus and rail service in southwestern Ontario. If such a request for study has been made did the federal Minister of Transport agree and when will the study be completed and released to the public?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we discussed this problem last week in the House I think. I met with the minister, my counterpart in the government of Ontario, and we are supposed to meet with him again. In the meantime the officials are meeting together. I cannot say now what the opinions of the officials are, but I hope soon to be in a position to tell you what the position of the government is.

RELATIONS WITH EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—REQUEST FOR DEFINITION OF TERM "CONTRACTUAL LINK"

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief but very important question to ask the acting Prime Minister. What is meant by the term "contractual link"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Mr. Crouse: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Our Prime Minister at the present time is visiting European countries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not disallowing the question. The President of the Privy Council showed no interest in answering the question.

Mr. Crouse: I shall ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister is visiting the European countries endeavouring to carry out what he calls a contractual link and when no one in Canada seems to know, and the Acting Prime Minister does not even know, what this means, my supplementary is will the Acting Prime Minister telephone the Prime Minister and ask him to explain for his benefit as well as for the benefit of the people of Canada what he means by contractual link which is very important to our country.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the hon. member that what the Prime Minister is trying to achieve is very important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: It is very important to the achievement of an objective I hope he shares which is the strengthening of Canada's relations with the European Economic Community. Canada has been proposing over a number of years—perhaps my hon. friend has not been following these discussions as he should have—the formation of a link with the European Economic Community which would be in the form of a contractual link, a very important means to establish a relationship under which when issues arise there would be an opportunity for the Canadian government and representatives of the European Economic Community to talk about them before they become serious problems.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED INADEQUATE TRANSPORTATION POLICY—REQUEST THAT FUNCTION OF DEPARTMENT BE REVIEWED BY HOUSE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar) moved:

That this House questions the ability of the Ministry of Transport on its past and present record to provide and to run a modern, safe, efficient and co-ordinated transportation system for Canada's national and regional economies, its foreign trade and its social needs—as promised Canadians in the Speech from the Throne; refers to that ministry's repeated failure to provide interim remedies for urgent transportation problems while Canada awaits that promised transportation system; and recommends that the structure, function and performance of that ministry be forthwith reviewed in depth by this House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to start this debate by saying that we on this side of the House look forward to debating the subject of transportation, certainly in its public form. We feel that transportation has suffered under the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) during the last few years. We hope in our contribution to outline some of the more salient points of the problems so far as transportation is concerned. We also hope the minister will engage in this discussion today and possibly set down some guidelines as to the direction transportation policy in this country will be taking. We feel it is very important and critical that this be spelled out in as clear terms as possible.

Frankly, we are skeptical when the minister says that he intends to introduce a transportation policy in the next few weeks or months. We will not believe it until we see it. I hope the minister will keep on saying this another fifty times until it happens. We believe transportation under this administration, especially under the present minister, has been allowed to deteriorate to a point where it now operates to the detriment certainly of regional development, particularly as applied to the two extremities of the country, the Atlantic region and the western provinces.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a matter of great discourtesy that a member should be speaking to the minister who is the subject of this debate. The point the member is trying to make is that transportation in this country is in a mess and that the speeches made on this matter require the whole attention of the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member was saying something important.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I have offended the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I apologize. I was speaking to the minister simply to ask whether he intended to follow the member who is now speaking or to speak later in the debate. By the way, I did not receive an answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not wish to comment on this matter other than to say I hope it will be quieter in the House so we can hear the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Murta: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indicative of the whole transportation system in this country that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) would have to rise on a point of order. It would seem that the minister and the government do not care at the present time, and I say that sincerely. I was saying that Canada's transportation system so far as can be determined, is working to the detriment of regional development, particularly as it applies to the so-called extremities of the country, namely, the Atlantic region and the western provinces. Each sector of the current transportation system appears to have been developed in isolation from the other sectors. Consequently, there is no integration and the ability to enter into any long-range planning has been virtually nullified. We see the results of that at present.

● (1220)

Canadian travellers have been plagued by increasing costs and an increasingly poor quality of service, as anybody who has travelled across this country knows. I believe that in general the government is subsidizing substantially a transportation system that operates contrary to the public interest and which in many cases appears to be in a shambles. I suppose, that the words of the minister regarding the governments transportation policy will be quoted to him again and again. He said that it is in a mess. More recently the minister stated that transportation in Canada is in even more of a mess than anyone realizes. However, he has consistently refused to do anything about it. In fact, we often find the minister—this has happened in the last two or three weeks—either in the House of Commons, in committees or outside the House, in front of the public, actually making a laughing-stock of his department and of the Canadian transportation system. The election promises made in the 1974 campaign appear to have been lost in a maze of meaningless declarations of intent, and all we have left is a self-confessed mess.

The problem may be better illustrated by an examination of the haphazard framework within which each section of the transportation system is allowed to operate. As I mentioned before, they appear to be operating at times in complete isolation one from another. For example, air transportation at present exists in what must be termed a complete policy void. In November of 1973 the Minister of Transport announced route divisions between Air Canada and CP Air, claiming all the while that his statement was the first of three announcements which would complete the over-all review of air transportation policy. More than a year and a half has passed since he made that statement, with no further policy announcements coming from his department, despite the fact that in March of 1974 he informed us that the transportation system was in a state of chaos.

Air Canada, which will be discussed later in the debate, our national airline, recorded in 1973 a profit of about $12 million. In 1974, as everyone knows, it recorded a deficit in the neighbourhood of $9 million. Between 1973 and 1974, CP Air—which is Air Canada's chief competitor—registered a substantial profit. Admittedly, it was lower than the previous year's, but it was still a profit.

According to the minister's department and the public statements that we have heard, no one seems to know why

Air Canada is losing money, nor does its president, Mr. Yves Pratte. Mr. Pratte claims, through the press and in speeches he has made that, on one hand, the deficit was caused by tremendous competition from the air charter companies, when we know that the national airline is the largest charter operator in the country, and on the other hand he claims that these losses have been experienced because of increased subsidization of short-haul routes by longer routes. Yet the five regional air carriers which are confined to short-haul routes all recorded substantial profits in 1974.

My contention is that at present morale in Air Canada, especially among the employees who work with the travelling public, the ones whom you and I see when we go to an airport, is low. But I would point out that I do not believe that is necessarily the fault of the employees. Rather, it is the result of the complete lack of direction by top management personnel in Air Canada. I also contend that Air Canada is top-heavy so far as its management is concerned. This is unfortunate because it is what happens so often in government-owned corporations or agencies. It seems to be an almost built-in instinct of the people in the top echelons of these corporations to appear to create virtual empires for themselves, thus destroying the whole intent of a nationally-owned enterprise.

Another example of the contradiction that exists in our air policy—there have been other examples since—is in the application which was made back in 1973 for an air carrier to service Thunder Bay and Sudbury. Nordair, which is the regional airline operating out of Montreal, applied for permission to operate a service to Sudbury and Thunder Bay. After receiving assurances from the communities involved that Air Canada was not willing to service these areas—that was the basis of their application—an application was made to the Canadian Transport Commission in December of 1973.

Nordair had examined the route in accordance with the 1966 regional airline principles and came to the conclusion that it was within its legal boundaries when applying for the route allocation. Within two weeks of Nordair's application, Air Canada announced its intention to service the Thunder Bay-Sudbury area, having repeatedly refused to do so in the past. Nordair applied to the Canadian Transport Commission, which decided that under the terms of the Air Canada licensing contract established by the Air Canada Act, the national airline can connect any points within the boundaries of its licensing charter if it so wishes. Needless to say, Nordair has appealed this decision.

This is the kind of constraint under which third level air carriers operate, and this is where changes should be considered. Because such situations might arise in the future, the entire Air Canada Act should be reviewed. Spokesmen for the regional airlines contend that if the Air Canada contract states that that airline may pre-empt the application of any other airline, that will have a discouraging effect. I am inclined to agree with them and I think it will create an inhospitable climate for future investment and development.

We must realize that the airline industry depends on what is termed long lead time for planning future development. In the current, non-directional framework that exists, the only airline capable of any sort of long-range planning—sometimes we wonder whether it does any meaningful long-range planning—is Air Canada itself. This is certainly to the detriment of other sectors of the industry which I contend can operate for the good of the Canadian public as well as Air Canada is supposed to, provided we can introduce the kind of competition that I believe is necessary to make Air Canada a more efficient airline.

Another area of grave concern to the Canadian public is the framework within which the railways operate in terms of policy guidelines. I contend, as I did at the outset of my speech, that we do not have at the present time any policy guidelines. An example of this is the whole question of railroad passenger service. If one considers this year's estimates which the Committee on Transport and Communications will be studying very shortly, he will see that approximately $200 million has been allocated to the subsidization of an uneconomic rail passenger line.

To give the House a little background, these payments are distributed to the railways for continued operation of passenger service in areas where the Canadian Transport Commission has decided that the continuation of service is essential to the interests of various regions. In other words, these payments ensure that through direct subsidization, in some cases an uneconomic rail passenger line will be continued. The system was devised in 1967 under the regulations of the National Transportation Act. In order to abandon a passenger line on which the railway is operating at a loss, the company must apply to the CTC before it can discontinue the service. Then the Canadian Transport Commission conducts a study into the effects the abandonment of the line would have on the region served. In approximately 98 per cent of the cases, the CTC has determined that discontinuation of the service would be to the detriment of the area concerned.

The end result of this process is the removal of any initiative by the railways to improve their services. They are always assured of receiving 80 per cent of what they lost in operating costs and I think it is natural, therefore, that they are neither inclined, nor are they forced, to better their services. The whole question of subsidies for uneconomic lines should be intensively investigated, especially in light of the current circumstances. By "current circumstances" I mean the present situation and also the advancements in technology which have occurred over the past few years. In the past few years the railways have been relegated to second place compared with air and automobile travel. Air transport has been singled out as the answer to our future travel requirements. However, with the uncertainties at the present time caused by the energy crisis and its potential effect on transportation, the railway in many countries, the United States in particular, have been resurrected and restored to a more favourable position.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Murta: If I do not know what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister stands up when I am finished and informs us what the government is going to do, and does not make flippant remarks. The whole railway system for moving people must be intensively considered, especially in densely populated areas of the country. This question was discussed briefly the other day in the transport committee. In the densely populated areas of the country there is great need for a far better, high-speed rail service to move people around.

I hope the minister will also take regional air services into consideration for the more sparsely populated areas of Canada, such as the west. I think a legitimate question to consider is the aspect of allowing regional air services to play a far greater role in the movement of people in more sparsely populated areas such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, grain movement affects a major part of our economy and also a major part of the land area in our country. It is a matter which will be dealt with more fully before our debate is over. In the area of grain movement there is virtually no policy direction by the government. There is virtually no policy to rationalize our grain handling system. A year ago we were talking about exporting a billion bushels of grain per year. At the present time, with the uncertainties in rail transportation and with tie-ups caused by the labour situation, exporting a billion bushels of grain per year is simply a pipe-dream.

The Minister of Transport cannot, and should not, take all the blame for the strike in Vancouver at the present time. He can take part of the blame because he is part of the cabinet which has refused to act in a positive way. He can, and should, take a good portion of the blame for the complete lack of policy guidelines defining what is needed in terms of grain movement in western Canada. We find that the self-appointed spokesman for western Canada, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, has at times been making almost contradictory statements to those of the Minister of Transport.

The most glaring contradictions are in regard to the Crowsnest pass rates. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has indicated that there will probably be a change in what is known as the Crow rate. The Minister of Transport stated the other day in committee that there will not be a change in the Crowsnest pass rate at least for the year 1975. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has certainly attempted to overstep his own jurisdiction. He has muddied the waters as far as the discussion of transportation is concerned in western Canada, because no one really knows where the power lies in regard to any changes which may take place within the government.

In regard to suitable hopper cars to haul grain, there has been no policy decision whatsoever and the railways have stated flatly that they do not intend to purchase hopper cars to move grain. There has been almost complete indecision about rail line abandonment in western Canada, although there has been—giving the Department of Transport its dues—a decision to freeze any abandonment procedures on some 12,000 miles of track in western Canada until the year 2000. But as far as any policy in regard to rail line abandonment is concerned, there has not been a major policy decision.

Perhaps the Minister of Transport or his parliamentary secretary will outline this afternoon basically what the government intends to do as far as working toward a solution is concerned. I hope that his department has been in communication with the railways, the Wheat Board, the grain companies, the farmers and farm communities involved, because they all have to be taken into consideration when formulating an over-all rail policy for the movement of grain. The government has had the time to carry on this kind of negotiation. The Minister of Transport stated in committee that he would work toward a suitable grain handling system for western farmers, and we hope that today or in the very near future he will bring forward proposals in this regard.

In connection with strikes which pertain to grain shipments, the Canadian Wheat Board is going to cut off producer deliveries tonight because of lack of box car space. Unless the government sees fit to settle the present grain strike as soon as possible, certainly within the next few days, there may not be much of a grain industry left in western Canada to do very much about.

I am not going to take up the time of the House by talking about the effect of the strike on western Canada and, indeed, on the whole Canadian economy. I should like to say to the Minister of Transport, however, that when the strike is settled the government should seriously consider designating the movement of grain as an essential service so that workers in that industry will know exactly where they stand. The kind of situation that has arisen at the port of Vancouver is critical to the Canadian economy. In the past 11 years, the port of Vancouver has been shut down for 153 days because of strikes, and it will suffer irreparable harm if this situation is repeated. Another area of contention is the western economic opportunities conference as it pertains to freight rates, but I shall leave that subject for my colleagues who will be speaking later in the debate.

At present, the freight rate situation is in confusion, Mr. Speaker. The lifting of the freight rate freeze has heightened and accelerated the anomalies in the system and served to increase the kind of distress and to some extent the stagnation that has occurred in western Canada and the maritime region. The intended and publicly stated purpose of the freeze was to allow the federal government a time-frame within which an effective economic policy could be formulated. The freeze expired, however, void of any announcement whatsoever.

The disjointed policy development in this area is clearly illustrated in recent events concerning the various court decisions as to the legality of post-freeze increases. In these instances, as in others, lack of federal government direction and ministerial control has never been more evident. The decision taken by the Canadian Transport Commission accorded the railways approximately one-half of the 25 per cent increase they had applied for, and the rest on March 1, after a study period. The railways appealed to the Federal Court, which decreed that the CTC did not have the authority under the section of the act used to rule as they did. Consequently, the railways immediately began charging users the full increase.

The case was referred back to the CTC which, under the direction of the Federal Court, again ruled that the railways be awarded the original increases. The rail representatives have now appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada for a final ruling. As a result of this legal hassle, users of the system have had to operate under extremely confusing and unsettling conditions because from one day to the next freight was subject to different rates; there was no move by the minister or his department to set down any kind of direction.

The effects of greater efficiency in transportation services in Canada are far reaching. But in the absence of federal policy designed to promote and exploit this potential, the consequences for regional development and national unity could be, and are becoming, disastrous. In Canada, it can fairly be said that there is not only lack of transportation policy but lack of long-range planning toward the future development of such a policy. That is why we are skeptical of any policy announcement which may be coming out in the spring. This is a fact which may in future be responsible for the under-achievement of our national goals. In order to promote and encourage a successful economic future for Canada, a uniform strategy, formulated at the federal level and adopted by provincial, regional and municipal governments, is essential. Without the creation of such guidelines, Canadian development economically, regionally and socially will flounder.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say in all sincerity that we do not believe the Minister of Transport understands the importance of the role of transportation in Canadian life. I should qualify that by saying he either does not understand or does not care about the department. For that reason we are prepared to debate this resolution as strongly as we can because we feel it is important. We certainly hope that before the debate ends we can elicit a positive and meaningful response from the government in regard to guidelines and policy.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when I follow closely a debate in this House on the pseudo-policy concerning the railways, the economy or regional development I have the impression that I am not facing a political party which is preparing to take over power, which has its ideals, which is ready to apply measures that the other party has not understood or does not want to apply. I have had the impression, not only physically, but also intellectually and morally, that the only interesting speech was that of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta). I tried to see if this speech contained some idea. Did it really contain the least idea of a plan for the whole of Canada? No. It consisted simply of a series of quasi-insults, of badly digested bile, of general statements leading nowhere. It did say: "It's a mess!" There should be trains. First this is full of contradictions. The trains should be economical and self-sufficient, but at the same time, there should be trains in the sparsely populated areas, but nothing is said about this.

Of course, what is important is that they do not have any policy. This is why the Progressive Conservative Party was never taken seriously by the Canadian population. What is their policy in the field of transportation? What is their air transportation policy? What is their policy, for instance, as concerns the relations between Air Canada, the Canadian Pacific and the regional carriers? What is the policy for ports, for freight, for water transportation? They have none.

What are we talking about? They are simply telling each other: You know, he is not interested, he does not work, they do not have any plans, they are not interested, but this is not much. They do not even know what is happening in their own constituency when it comes to airports, railway and civil aviation development, nothing at all. It is total vacuum, total darkness. The only argument, the only approach, and I would be quite—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are just like the Liberals.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am sorry, I am not talking about my friends of the NDP who at least in some areas have well formulated policies. Indeed I understand quite well when some of my friends tell me: I think the solution would be to bring the CPR under public ownership, that is a policy which would give results.

Mr. Reynolds: You would love to take on the CPR, wouldn't you?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, no, let us forget that. I simply say they made an effort to try and solve certain problems. Everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, that transports are one of the most complex areas in Canada. It is one of the most complex, all the more so because when a solution is found it cannot be implemented overnight even if there is agreement.

This morning I had a meeting with the railway representatives to see if there is a way to have a faster service. It is not impossible to have faster trains between Halifax, for example, St. John, and then on to Montreal and Toronto. Is it possible to have a better railway system along what is called the Quebec City-Windsor corridor? It is possible. It is a matter of determining the costs, knowing how to get the necessary equipment to the railways in due time, knowing how much steel is available, what manufactures are ready to operate. We thought about all that, and we have plans in that respect. Speaking about the Maritimes, some say nothing was done there.

I know things were done in Halifax, I know things are being done at Rodney Terminal, in Saint John, N.B., for instance, in Sydney and Port-aux-Basques. Two ferries are being introduced in order to give Newfoundland a better service, at a cost exceeding $100 million a year.

We are trying to establish a coherent system of transportation within the Maritimes. We cooperated with those provinces for the development of a subsidy policy acceptable to the companies and to the provinces. A 50 per cent subsidy is granted on all types of cargo going to Central Canada, both by rail and by truck. Maritime provinces are also getting an internal subsidy to help their development. It is suggested nothing is being done in the Maritimes, that we do not care. This is not so! I can give you whole lists of what we have been doing. In British Columbia for instance, the highway is being reinforced from B.C. to Manitoba for very efficient transportation. We cooperated with the Manitoba government to develop the port of Churchill. We are cooperating with the Manitoba government to the development of a regional line, in order to give regional service which has been lacking for some time. We cooperated with Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec, in order that concrete solutions be found, not from here in Ottawa, not by simply making meaningless speeches.

We are told that we are doing nothing in the field of transportation, that we understand nothing about transportation. What do these opposition gentlemen understand about transportation? What are their ideas? What stroke of genius is reflected in the proposition put forward? Nothing at all, beyond suggesting the Minister of Transport is either ignorant or unconcerned. But if this is their policy, they are bound to remain in the opposition all their lives.

I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that it is easy. I am not saying that I will solve the problems overnight; I know the problems are extremely difficult. There are problems, and human problems. Air Canada is mentioned and it is said that Air Canada morale is very low. Why? Is there any proof of that or is this just a gratuitous statement? Whom does he want to favour? What regional carrier? Why attack the national carrier which serves all Canadians, which belongs to the people? Morale is very low at Air Canada, and Air Canada's losses are heavier than CPAir's. For a very simple reason, Mr. Speaker: Air Canada is being asked to maintain routes that CPAir would not take over, and that, because it is a Crown corporation. In other words, some progressive conservatives, are trying to do with Air Canada what they did with the CN, that is, hand over to them all the short routes that are unprofitable. Then, they will say that CPAir is far more profitable, far more efficient. We have seen it in the past.

What policy is being advocated here? Why downgrade Air Canada, Mr. Speaker? We have a national air line; it has its faults, of course. But why claim there is a scandal? They will come before the committee, where they can be questioned. But why make gratuitous statements, broad statements without any sense, without accompanying the with some suggestion however small? As far as harbours are concerned, what suggestions have been made? None whatsoever. And freight rates? What suggestions have been made?

Mr. Alexander: Et le ministre, lui?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Je suis le ministre, et je travaille moi aussi; j'obtiens des résultats.

● (1300)

Mr. Lougheed, who could not be accused of being a freshly converted Liberal, said after the Calgary conference: "It's a real breakthrough. Things are at least being done."

Of course, he did not say that everything had been settled, but he said: "Well, you made an effort, and a few interesting things are coming out at the WEOC Conference." What did our friend on the other side say? As for the WEOC Conference, somebody else will talk about it. Everybody knows nothing is being done. There is the whole matter of the development of the Arctic—

Mr. Mazankowski: You had better have a bowl of soup.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I still have something to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this morning I dealt with some of the achievements of the department which we are trying as much as possible to integrate into a comprehensive philosophy. I talked especially about the Maritimes. I only referred to a few of the ferries in the Maritimes, but there are other ferry services we looked after, for instance, as soom as a problem arose between Digby and St. John, I contracted the Canadian Pacific without delay to have the service restored.

When we had a problem between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour, I immediately got in touch with the province of Nova Scotia to solve that problem. We are trying to find a permanent solution so that under an agreement with a Swedish company, we can provide an efficient year-round service. In the Maritimes, we have the problem of a deep water harbour. There is also the problem of connecting Halifax and Montreal, the problem of Saint John, New Brunswick, the problem of ferries to Prince Edward Island, where a new shuttle service will soon start at Wood Island, and that is extremely important. It is a pity that the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is not here, but we are going to build his control tower at Charlottetown, which means that Air Canada will have flights to Charlottetown. There will therefore be landing facilities in every Canadian province, including Prince Edward Island.

Of course, we have tried to solve every problem; it is a slow process. All those agreements are reached jointly with provinces, not just at Ottawa. We defend ourselves, we meet them, we have talks together, we try to settle problems. I had discussions with British Columbia and some other western provinces with respect to freight rates and the rates proclaimed under the bill which, by the way, has just been passed in Committee and should eventually be studied in this House. We settled the matter of railway rate grouping. We discussed the matter of ferries between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

There were discussions with Western Canada about the ports of Churchill, of Prince Rupert, of Vancouver, on the matter of the Western region carrier, Canadian Pacific Western Airlines. Now I have yet to hear the opposition put forward a policy on that matter; however, when a province takes hold of a carrier, it really is a serious matter... We are now formulating a comprehensive system, a third level of regional carriers.

This morning, I heard my friend, the hon. member for Lisgar, saying: Even regional carriers make money. Air Canada knows and says it. But do they know why? It is precisely because they do not operate on a regional basis, they are mainly interested in chartered flights. They organise such flights to the Caribbean Islands, to Europe. It means that those companies, created to service small areas, have finally become companies with international interests and DC-8's and L10-11's. Thus, they make money of course, because they have customers of a superior level. Then, of course, our national companies have to take travellers when it is not profitable. He forgot to tell us those things, probably because he did not know about them.

We tried to solve the problem of railway cars of which there was a shortage last year. They are used for carrying lumber, wheat and other commodities. We appointed a supervisor, and distribution has improved. Of course, when things are not moving, it is not the supervisor who is to be blamed, but the strike. If the opposition tells us that they are against the right to strike, we are quite prepared to discuss that matter in the House. If not, they should not hold us responsible for the consequences of the right to strike.

Then, we discussed the maximum rates, for example, in the field of freight; we discussed road-beds tracks, overpasses. We discussed the Ashton-Clinton pass in British Columbia, which is so essential to speed up traffic to the ports. We discussed the national parks, crossing rates which have already been eliminated. There have been discussions about tracks relocation and legislation on that matter has already been passed. There have also been discussions about the doubling the tracks, so as to avoid, in some circumstances, passengers trains being delayed by freight trains.

● (1410)

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: What about that election promise that you made?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): All this is part of the policy. Even the Calgary airport is part of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have merely stated a few problems which were discussed with the provinces. I do not refer to the Richmond Hill case which is extremely important for Ontario. I do not refer to the agreement concluded with the Ontario government for the establishment of a regional airline in northern Ontario. I leave that aside. We have settled it but all those matters are integral parts of a policy of mutual understanding which one of these days, I hope, will be submitted to the House as a cohesive whole.

The only answer I get from the opposition is: It takes a long time! But, Mr. Speaker, should I as Minister of Transport be quicker about changing the whole transportation system in Canada than the Conservatives about designating a new leader? We on this side understand very well that it might take you two years because he will not be easy to replace. I have great respect for the leader of the opposition. Mr. Speaker, I do not balk at hard work, at difficulties to overcome or even at criticisms, but I find myself facing such a vacuum in the opposition, such a lack of contribution, such nothingness—All right name one! Name just one contribution other than an irresponsible statement. They say: "Let us lower all freight rates!" That will go over big and people will flock to our side. We know very well that someone will pay for the railways, the Canadian people will. It is then a matter of distributing the cost so that the burden will be borne equally by all, even the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—Mr. Speaker, I think—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You have 102,000 people in your department. What about them?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister should be allowed to complete his remarks. Other members may wish to make contributions later.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I find this funny. Why? Because of the shouts I hear from hon. members opposite, and I feel this must be truly their policy, for they have none other. Shouting is the only thing they are good at when they do not agree or when they hurt, instead of coming forward with new proposals.

Can we take a chance on a linear traction train service between Montreal and Toronto, or between Ottawa and Toronto, unless it has been made perfectly safe for passengers? Ontario put it to the test with Kraus Maffei. I do not want it in Ontario, but officials soon realized that the technique was not perfect yet and said: We had better wait. Our responsibilities are the same. We must find the best techniques, so as to ensure the best possible service to the Canadian people as a whole.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No. They say that they have the technology, that they know what to do with a train running at 300 miles per hour on railways designed for 90 miles per hour speeds. The Canadian people know that, but they do not believe them.

We have done that with Manitoba, and whatever the provinces, I do not care whether they are conservative, liberal or NDP provinces. I want to work with all provinces. I work very well with the province of Manitoba. We have agreed on several things, and I think we can agree on several other realizations. I will not change their political ideology, it is their own, and that is their own business. I think that has nothing to do with everyone's political objectives.

As concerns air agreements, Mr. Speaker, one has been concluded with the United States. Of course, some are not satisfied because most routes have been granted to Air Canada. There is a reason behind that. If some day there is a debate on that matter, I will explain why we have done that; it is not necessarily because we wanted to destroy CP Air, but rather because it is our national carrier and, at the beginning, it was supposed to be Air Canada territory.

Agreements have been concluded with China, Germany, Spain and Italy. For instance, Canadian Pacific Air Lines is allowed to land in Milan. In terms of international development, we have opened a great many new markets which will be beneficial to Canada. Why? One could very well tell me, Mr. Speaker: It is true that you have done all that, but you should have developed other markets. For instance, you should have tried to get Thailand, that would be very important. I could discuss this but I won't discuss with people who can only yell or make catcalls. A study has been conducted on that, Mr. Speaker. I can yell just as loud as anybody. I have also been trained for that when I was young.

Mr. Speaker, it was important to conduct a feasibility study about building a railroad in the Mackenzie Valley, in the northern part of British Columbia. Obviously, the railway is not built yet. It has not been decided yet if it should be a pipeline, a railway or some other means. We must agree with Mr. Barrett, the British Columbia Premier, who has his own concept about oil or gas transportation from the North. We are ready to discuss. It cannot be done in one day. He is not ready himself to do it in one day. I went there three times but he wasn't there, with good reasons. I do not blame him. I certainly do not blame him for it because you will not find me at all times in my office.

Mr. Speaker, what is a transportation policy? We do not have all the answers. This is what we are trying to develop. That is why a great number of technicians are trying to find the best and most economical means of transportation for our freight.

For instance, in Canada, there is more and more emphasis on transportation from North to South with regard to the development of natural resources, whether it be the tar sands of Alberta, coal, sulphur, whether it be the natural resources of northern Ontario or even of Quebec. The attraction of the South is so strong that it is threatening the great line designed by Sir John A. Macdonald across Canada from East to West. It is a problem.

Now I shall put before you a very simple problem. We are presently extracting coal in Alberta and moving it to Ontario by railway. Now, it might be a better idea to produce electricity in Alberta and transmit it to Ontario. It is the best solution. Is someone in this House ready to give me an answer? A number of people have been working on this for several weeks and they have not found an answer yet. We do not know yet what is the most economical solution. We try to have a consistent and integrated transportation policy so that Canadians will have the best possible service.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection. There are so many factors involved in transportation matters that I understand quite well why the opposition is criticizing this government. It does not bother me. On the contrary, I find it extremely interesting.

● (1420)

[English]

We are very much interested in that because the government needs this contribution.

[Translation]

There is no need for blowing the horn, Mr. Speaker. The Ottawa Journal published an article yesterday, and I quote:

[English]

"Only Marchand is amused"

[Translation]

I shall not dramatize about what happened to our friend, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I have probably been closer to him for some time and this for several reasons. He has been my parliamentary secretary and I tried to help him as much as I could in his predicaments. In reading such an article I told myself that if I were at a meeting of workers I would express my disgust at its author. Purely and simply out of respect for hon. members, I shall not do it but certainly not out of consideration for the newsman involved.

A reporter, not known as a Liberal—he does not eat little red peas every day—Michael Barkway, has written an article. I would invite hon. members to meditate upon it seriously. However violent our discussions may get it is not important if we are really seeking the truth and not trying to destroy somebody else. He says this:

[English]

In any other era it would not be worth noticing the petty attempts to find something scandalous about a gift to embellish the Prime Minister's residence. But in these times I think they are symptomatic of a more general nastiness. They represent a hunt for corruption which itself corrupts.

Perhaps Watergate has given the public a taste for wrongdoing in high places. It has fostered a wave of cynicism about all positions of trust and responsibility. It has certainly encouraged publicity seekers to scour every closet in hope of finding a skeleton—or at least a few dry bones.

Press, radio, TV and opposition politicians have found a new relish in their proper duty of exposing wrongdoing. Sometimes they forget that they have an equal duty to discriminate between what is wrong and what may be made to seem so.

The cause of public morality is not served by stirring up moral indignation on specious or trivial grounds. It is degraded into a pervasive smog of suspicion which (as John Wesley might have said) will eventually choke the godly and the ungodly alike.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when I came here, the atmosphere was stifling. I shall not go much further this afternoon. I shall wait for another occasion. I can give you names, I can name those involved. I know the names given by the opposition and I look how they are named and in what circumstances. I ask you one thing in the name of the country: do not go on this way because you will not win. If I am prepared for an attack on the transportation policy, let them tell me: "Listen, Marchand, you are wasting your time; we do not believe you." It is the role of the opposition and it is natural. I do not want to be praised but I do not want this feeling of suspicion to return, this racism which developed in many cases—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Let me finish; I am not talking about my hon. colleague.

[English]

An hon. Member: Oh, come on, for God's sake. Get off that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: There is no racism here.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That hurts.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is unfair.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is not unfair.

Mr. Crouse: It is unfair. The minister is unfair in his accusation. There has been nothing said about racism in this debate, and I have listened to every word since it started. The minister is unfair in saying that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, to be fair I must say that I am not referring to my hon. colleague behind me nor to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: You are a weak sister and you are using a weak pretence to cloud the issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: There was no racism.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What about what your friend said?

An hon. Member: His time is finished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: He is finished anyhow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: That was as unfair remark and he should withdraw.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are just trying to kill me, and you are not going to.

An hon. Member: You are killing yourself. Just keep talking and you are dead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: You go down to Nova Scotia and state that kind of nonsense and you will be dead.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will give me the chance to point out that the minister's time had expired but because of the important point he was making I did not intervene. Before this is prolonged any longer, I should bring to the attention of the minister the fact that his time has expired. If hon. members want to let him complete his remarks or pursue this line, he will require an extension of time.

An hon. Member: Five minutes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps we should solve one problem at a time. Is it agreed that the minister shall be allowed to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister has consent to continue for a reasonable length of time, and I am sure he will not abuse that privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member was justified in responding as forcefully as he did because he could have felt he was attacked. In that case, I apologize. I am not talking about hon. members but about this article written by a person named Fisher, who is often in the gallery. That does not concern you, therefore I simply say that people may discuss the transport policy, may attack me. I never feel—I have been attacked by some of my friends and I never held it against them, on the contrary, I believe we remained good friends. We should all agree, everytime racism is exploited, to proscribe it everywhere in Canada, because this country is worth living in. There is no racism where people do not tolerate it.

[English]

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might pose one little example for the minister. He suggested that we should not draw skeletons from the closet, yet this is exactly what he has been doing. He has been stirring up racism within the country. I believe these two conflicting statements are another example of the policy he is portraying to the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; the hon. member is expressing an opinion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am in no position to out-shout the minister. Loud shouting will not be sufficient to enunciate the policies of the government. I agree with the minister's statements concerning the official opposition in the context of their not saying what their policy is. I think he paid a backhanded compliment to the New Democratic Party in saying that we at least have advocated alternatives to what is being done by himself and his government.

I also want to caution the minister that every time the Minister of Transport receives criticism about the government's policies or lack of policies, he should not be so sensitive and attempt to construe this as some kind of racism. That has to be a strawman, a sign of desperation and anger; but the minister must control his anger. He quoted two opposing views of the press and mentioned Mr. Fisher. I defy him to show us where at any time Mr. Fisher in his comments has been racist in respect of the minister or anyone else.

The minister should be prepared to take it, even if he does not like it. If he cannot stand the heat, he should get out of the kitchen, to quote Harry Truman. We in the New Democratic Party, for many years—certainly for the past three of four years—have been trying to persuade the minister, and I believe he has been persuaded to some extent, to accept our position. But he should recognize that his worst problem is within his own cabinet and the government. He has colleagues who insist on acting on nineteenth century concepts in respect of transportation. I am glad one Conservative applauded.

An hon. Member: One more than the NDP.

Mr. Benjamin: This probably means at least one of them is not still in the nineteenth century. They pick on picayune questions. Their expertise tells them that anything which belongs to the people is bad. Air Canada—and the minister is right this time—compared to the CPR is terrible because the CPR shows a profit, and the CNR is terrible because the CPR shows a profit. Let me warn my friends to the right about the nineteenth century views which they have. The minister's colleagues have the same attitude. They have this glorious free enterprise concept. Transportation is a public utility which everyone must use. They continue to try to operate it in the way it was operated by the railroad barons of the 1890s. This is the type of attitude to which members of the Progressive Conservative Party and colleagues of the minister in his caucus still adhere.

Let me illustrate how good the CPR is in respect of public transportation and private enterprise. I know this may be difficult for free enterprisers to comprehend or accept, but the people of Canada have paid for all the profits of the CPR through subsidies in most years. In 1969 the CPR had a net operating profit of $31.4 million from its railway operations after fixed charges and income tax had been deducted. Their subsidies from the taxpayers of Canada that year amounted to $35 million. Had it not been for the subsidies by Canadian taxpayers in that year, the CPR would have had a loss of $3.6 million. In 1970 the CPR had profits amounting to $28.8 million, and received subsidies in the order of $30 million from the people of Canada. Without the subsidies, the CPR would have been $1.2 million in the hole in that year.

An hon. Member: On the railway operation.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course on the railway and ancillary operations being trucks, hotels, telecommunications, ships and airlines. In 1971 the CPR showed operating profits, after fixed charges and income tax, of $38.6 million and received subsidies from the people of Canada of $40 million. We have been paying for this company even though we do not own it. We have been making sure there are dividends for the shareholders of $1.70 or $2.70. We have done this through subsidies.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Socialism for the rich.

Mr. Benjamin: Private enterprise must have more profits even if it means using the taxpayers' money. The minister is justified in complaining about the official opposition, but what the official opposition, the New Democratic Party and the people of Canada want is his policy, not the Conservative policy or the NDP policy. We are not the government. What is the minister's policy? He wants the Conservative Party and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to tell him what he should do. If that is the position he is in, he should quit. If the minister is so bereft of some backbone, determination, imagination and political muscle in his own group that he must rely on the Progressive Conservative Party to tell him what their policies are so that he will know what to do, then he should quit.

The minister, who has worked very hard to solve these problems, has allowed events to occur over the past few years which have made the problems worse. I ask the minister how long he intends to sit back and allow one of his own colleagues to make statements, announcements and to start investigations, and so on, which have to do with transportation. This should be the minister's prerogative and responsibility. Who makes announcements and statements about branch lines? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). Who makes statements and announcements about the Crowsnest Pass rates? The Minister of Justice. Who makes announcements and sets up transportation committees under the Canada Grains Council? The Minister of Justice.

● (1440)

I ask, where the heck is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)? If I were Minister of Transport and one of my colleagues was doing that to me, I would say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "Look here; either he shuts up or here is my resignation". How long is the Minister of Transport going to sit back and take that nonsense? The Minister of Justice, if he gets his way, will be the architect of the further destruction and alienation of western Canada and of rural Canada in particular.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and myself want to support the Minister of Transport on a transportation system that will allow us to live together as a country, that will preserve rural Canada and enable the grain producers to get their grain to the market.

The Minister of Justice announced what the government will do with the Crowsnest Pass rates. I will repeat, for the benefit of the Minister of Transport, what I said before the Minister of Justice, if it will help strengthen his position in the cabinet. The other night the minister said in the committee that the Crowsnest Pass rates are not like the Bible. I want to tell the Minister of Transport that he and his colleagues would have a better chance to amend the Ten Commandments that they would to amend the Crowsnest pass rates. Those rates are the one decent and fair deal our grain growers have had in our transportation system. Yet the Minister of Justice is trying to destroy that agreement. How much longer will the Minister of Transport stand for that nonsense?

With regard to the freight rates, I read again the communiqué put out at the Calgary meeting a week ago last Monday. The Minister of Transport said to his counterparts in the provinces that he will propose a legislative amendment to reduce rate differential anomalies between raw and finished products, and in the interim will consult the provinces and take measures necessary to correct urgent anomalies. He has consulted the provinces umpteen times since he became Minister of Transport and he knows what the anomalies are: they have been pointed out by the people of western Canada for the past 50 years.

If the Minister of Transport needs another couple of months to bring in his legislation, why does he sit back and allow the railroads to compound those inequities? It would only take two phone calls, one to the president of CNR and one to the president of CPR, telling them, "You will not increase any rate until we bring in this legislation". Instead of that, all the discrimination, the anomalies, the inequities and the absurdities in our freight rates structure are being compounded by increases in these rates.

To illustrate, let me refer to Burns and Company which are phasing out their meat packing plant in Prince Albert. Why are they doing it? Because the minister and his government sat back and allowed across the board rate increases that increased the spread between the cost of sending dressed beef and live cattle to central Canada. But the Minister of Justice supported the railways in the Supreme Court. The difference in cost between sending dressed beef and live cattle from Saskatoon to Montreal used to be 91 cents per 100 pounds. Now, as of March 1, it costs $1.17 more to ship dressed beef.

What does that do to our meat processing and packing industry in western Canada? It kills it. But the minister sits back and allows it to happen. All we have are the platitudes in his communiqués telling us how he is going to correct these anomalies. He has been saying that ever since the day he became Minister of Transport—but he has yet to correct them. It is time he led, instead of waiting for the Conservatives, for members of the NDP and for the provinces to tell him what to do.

If I owned the Burns plant in Prince Albert, I would shut it down also. I would not want to own it either privately or publicly. Our freight rate and express rate structure make it economic suicide to try to operate a meat packing plant in Prince Albert, Saskatoon, or Regina. There is a perfectly logical reason for that. Any good management of a packing plant would close it down when the minister sits back and allows freight rates to be increased. A large part of the production of packing plants relies on the shipment of the product in small lots to hundreds of communities within several hundred miles of the location of the plant. What does the CNR do? Under our present transportation policy, the CNR cannot operate any differently from the CPR. It is told to be competitive and to make a profit: It is not told to provide service and to meet the transportation needs of Canadians no matter where they live.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

What does the CNR do? Our own national railroad tells the retailers in Hudson Bay, Saskatchewan, and it tells Burns and Company in Prince Albert—only about 180 miles away—that they can ship, for example, 22 pieces of processed, packaged meat, or 610 pounds, which used to cost $21.80 or $3.57 a hundredweight, at a new rate of $33 or $5.40 a hundredweight. That is an increase of 52 per cent. Yet the minister allows these inequities to continue and to be compounded. I insist that all it takes is two phone calls, with the backing of the Prime Minister, of the government and of parliament, to the presidents of our two railways telling them that they are not to increase the rates at present. But the minister does not do it. Instead, he asks the Conservatives for their policy, as if that would be of any help. How desperate can you get for a policy if you have to ask the Conservatives? I am surprised that the minister is not a little more erudite than that.

I should like to make some comments about grain movement in the present situation. Everybody says that the workers have the right to strike. I give the minister full credit for standing by the right to strike, but he and the government have yet to make any significant move to remove the causes of strikes. Like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), they say that the lowest paid public servants must show restraint. At the same time, they give an increase of $8,000 to $10,000 to deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers. Increases are given to economists running around here who have Ph.Ds in the sex life of date palms. No restraint is required of them, they do not even have to bargain for increases: the cabinet and Treasury Board pass them through.

However, the lowest paid public servants are told they should show restraint. And the minister wonders why they shut down Vancouver harbour! He should have known that was the only result he would get. I want to propose something to the minister, something he has heard from me many times and with which he agrees, I am sure, in his heart and mind. He needs help and support in his own ranks. He must put a stop to the machinations and the dinosaur mentality of the Minister of Justice if he wants to succeed with a really national transportation policy in this country. As I said earlier, transportation is an essential public service; it is a public utility; it is something everybody has to use. Since that is the nature of transportation the minister must say in his new policy—which I hoped we would get today—that the major portion of the transportation system must be publicly owned and controlled. Consider any other country in the world, whether capitalist, communist, socialist or whatever: their transportation systems are publicly owned and publicly controlled. I spent a week in London the year before last; they know how to move people and goods.

Mr. Woolliams: Right into a tunnel.

Mr. Benjamin: The first fundamental change the minister must bring about in transportation policy is the elimination of competition and profitability as the prime criterion for the operation of our railroads, airlines or other modes of transporation. The priority has to be service and making transportation systems available to meet the social and economic needs of our country, whether or not they make money or lose money. It is as logical to have two competing railroads as it is to have two competing highway systems or two sewer or water systems.

If the minister would bear with me for a few more minutes, I will go into a little more detail. Given the principle of public ownership and control, given the principle of priority of service in meeting the transportation needs of this country and that competition and profitability take the lowest priority, it must follow that by integrating all modes of transportation each mode is assigned to its most sensible use. It is nonsense for trucks to be hauling loads from Toronto to Vancouver. It is uneconomic, it is inefficient and it flies in the face of everything all of us believe in regarding the consumption of energy and reducing pollution.

The minister proposes to put up about $157 million to improve the highway systems to take bigger load limits. That proposal flies in the face of all good sense about energy, pollution, safety and a decent, civilized community. It is equally nonsensical for a 100-car train to make short hauls of small lot shipments for 50 miles, 60 miles or 100 miles. That is the place for trucks. It is stupid for DC-9 and DC-8 jets to fly between Ottawa and Montreal: it is inefficient, wasteful of fuel and, again, flies in the face of all the things hon. members from all parties have talked about in this chamber for years.

Whether moved by bus, train or plane, our freight rates and passenger fares should be all-inclusive. Can the minister visualize somebody travelling from Ottawa, Ontario, to Peggy's Cove, Nova Scotia, buying one ticket with three coupons on it and going by train from Ottawa to Montreal, plane from Montreal to Halifax and bus from Halifax to Peggy's Cove, all of those modes being included in one fare? Each mode of transportation must be put to the best, the most efficient and the most sensible use.

Something must be done about the equalizing and/or subsidizing of fares and rates. We discriminate against people in our country because of where they happen to live. Will the minister face up to the fact of our geography, our climate and our people being scattered over 5,000 miles? It should be possible to fly from Toronto to Inuvik for the same price as from Toronto to Winnipeg. An equalized-subsidized system of freight rates would put an end to this mess in our freight rate structure. The minister needs to do something more than just talk about harbours, about $10 million in the estimates for three years in a row for the port at Churchill—and they are just now getting around to spending it. Again, the government has the imagination of a doorknob. For the port of Churchill $100 million is needed, not $10 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

An hon. Member: Let him finish.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there agreement that the hon. member should continue his remarks?

Mr. Murta: I would caution the House that we have a number of speakers this afternoon who are prepared and wish to participate in the debate. The House will adjourn at five o'clock. If the House agreed to let everyone exceed their allotted time, we would be unable to finish.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, I agree with the general position taken by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), but I wonder if there could be some latitude extended to the first speaker for each party. I think after that the cut-off should be absolute.

Mr. Murta: I agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) be allowed to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank my colleagues for their generosity and courtesy. I promise to be only five minutes and I think I can live up to that. I wish to continue with habours and terminals. Why do we need to put another one or two terminals in Vancouver? The place is so badly congested now that there is not enough room for a waiting ship to turn around. The shore space available for tracks and yards and warehouses is almost used up. What about another terminal in Prince Rupert? Even with the present facilities in Prince Rupert we could double the grain movement with one additional train per day for 42 weeks. For ten weeks of the year, when there are large snowfalls, rainfalls and slides, those trains do not run; but for 42 weeks an additional 11 million bushels could be moved into Prince Rupert and half a dozen of the ships in Vancouver could be loaded there. The same thing applies at Churchill. It can, and should be a six-month or seven-month a year port instead of three months. The allocated $10 million will not scratch the surface. Policy is needed in the area of integrated rail, air and bus transportation.

The dismal history of regional air carriers in this country is one of obtaining a franchise, sucking off a couple of lucrative routes from Air Canada and then telling us how they are going to serve a whole region. Then within a matter of months, or a year or two, they are begging for subsidies. All the time they are operating, the ability of Air Canada to provide service to people in the country, no matter where they live, is further decreased. If one were to add $1 to the fare of everyone who travels between Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, for example, one could fly from Toronto to Vancouver or Halifax for the same price. We would stop discriminating against people in this country because of where they happen to live.

Why do we need five or six airlines? It is inefficient and wasteful, with duplicate management. The regionals and the private carriers want the lucrative routes. They have forgotten that the purpose of transportation is to serve the needs of people. All they want to serve is their own interest, which is profit. This parliament and this government has to make up its mind about which comes first, people or profits.

An hon. Member: Tell that to Air Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: The people of this country, if their transportation costs them money over and above the cost of passenger tickets and freight rates, will pay it. They do not expect their Post Office to make a profit, and never have. No post office that I know of in any country in the world has ever shown a profit. They do not expect their sewer, water and highway systems to show a profit. In 1967 we subsidized cars, trucks and buses to the tune of over $400 million. In the same year we subsidized the airlines, both public and private, to the tune of $170 million. In both cases that is more than the direct subsidies paid to the railroads.

● (1500)

Until the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) wins this battle in his own caucus and in cabinet he does not need to worry about what Conservative or New Democratic Party members say. Why does he keep asking conservatives for their policy? How desperate can you get? How bereft is the Liberal government? As soon as the minister makes a fundamental change in the direction and purpose of our transportation system then we will be able to move toward building a system that is integrated and efficient and, most of all, one that ensures that the social and transportation needs of the people of Canada will be met, no matter where they live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion before us. I noticed on reading it that the wording was rather provocative, and I am not surprised that this debate took a stormy turn for a while. In any event, I did not have the pleasure to hear any of the speakers I heard, although there may have been good things said, raise the basic problem which is the cause of most of the difficulties we have to overcome in transportation.

First of all, what with the famous debt in each of those transportation areas? I wonder why we do not further analyze that matter to see if we might find some kind of solution to the problems of transportation services which are indebted and spend most of their revenues paying back interest.

I have with me a report for 1972. The net revenue of the CN amounted to $48,257,000; the interest to $66 million; the deficit is $17 million. Obviously, how could it be possible to improve a system with such a deficit due to interest on an almost priceless debt.

The St. Lawrence Seaway administration has a net revenue of $1,817,000; interests amounting to $22 million; and a deficit of $20,885,000.

Air Canada, which can definitely be termed an "in" service, had operation benefits of $45 million, a debt interest of $32 million; a net benefit of $8 million; and since 1963 the amount of interest paid is $199 million.

That is a very interesting side issue. Most members should spare the time to check and try to find some process, some form of payment, a type of loan which does not get them into endless debts, which they cannot ever repay, all the transportation agencies and systems. That is why I felt it advisable to point out this situation at the beginning of my remarks.

However, when looking at the situation, it is easy to note, and I have explained the reasons first, that there are many contradictions in Canada's transportation system which is in a mess. That situation has been prevailing for quite some time, and there is nothing new to it. Federal governments, one after the other, recognized in principle that Canada needs a rational transportation system. By that, they mean a system through which the basic needs of the population in every part of Canada should be met by the most efficient and inexpensive means of transportation.

The MacPherson Royal Commission of inquiry was supposed to recommend the rationalization of the transportation services in Canada which compete each other and which are duplicated. The new Transport Act of 1967 was supposed to implement policies for the achievement of this aim. The new Canadian Transport Commission was supposed to have been empowered to implement that legislation. Unfortunately, it can be noted that the transportation situation has not improved sufficiently.

However, I must point out that the new Ottawa-Montreal highway is greatly appreciated by drivers. All signs point to a reduction in the number of accidents. It is an improvement which is worth noticing. For the Ottawa-Montreal return trip, one can use a CN or CP train; one can also use the bus, or fly Air Canada. The yachtmen can even sail up the Ottawa river. However, it is not advisable to do so, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has already capsized, after hitting a submerged log. It is not a mode of transportation which can be recommended.

Which of these modes of transportation is the fastest, the most efficient and the cheapest? Undoubtedly, the train could be so, but the reduction of services and the increasing rates are going to make the train less attractive to potential travellers.

The more one examines the federal government's transportation policy, the more confused it seems. These various agencies compete each other, launch contradictory plans which have nothing in common except that they all cost millions to the taxpayers.

We have on the one hand the Canadian National, a Crown corporation, working at the systematic destruction of its passenger services with the wholehearted encouragement of the Canadian Transport Commission. Imagine, the federal regulatory body! But while the CTC lets railway companies get rid of their passenger trains, another government body, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is paying half the cost of a $2.5 million project to manufacture a high-speed passenger train.

During that period, the federal Department of Transport felt transportation services between Ottawa and Montreal were not sufficiently diversified. So they granted millions of dollars in subsidies to an undertaking named Air Industries Association of Canada in order to have another intercity transportation mode, called STOL—short take off and landing. Let us hope that service will prove satisfactory to the people, without reaching enormous costs.

It must be admitted that railway passenger service did not always get the kind of encouragement needed from all quarters, and this is due to a number of factors. It may be worthwhile to state a few. I shall mention schedules. They are frequently changed, without taking into account the needs of different regions.

The people in charge of Canadian National passenger services in particular, because I know them better than other services, should maintain more frequent consultations with train conductors to establish schedules one year ahead. Those employees, conductors and engineers, know the problems. Unfortunately they are not asked for their views. Consultation is a one-way proposition. Decisions are taken to stop here or stop there, but not elsewhere. Finally, people take the bus or other means of transportation.

I have here an article signed by Maurice Huot in the newspaper Montréal-Matin of November 29, 1974. It sums up the situation pretty neatly. Present circumstances warrant that the article be quoted in parts. It states:

> The battle to revive railway passenger services was dealt a hard blow by former federal Liberal Minister of Transport J. W. Pickersgill.
>
> According to a Canadian press dispatch from Ottawa, Mr. Pickersgill stated at a Carleton University seminar that if passenger trains disappear in Canada, in less than one year, no one in the country would be bored. In Mr. Pickersgill's opinion, the taxpayer should not be forced to pay for a few rich middle class passengers who use passenger trains between a few big cities. According to him, this money would be better spent if it were used to improve the freight service.
>
> We are also reminded that the Transport Act passed in the House of Commons during the sixties created the transportation commission of which Mr. Pickersgill was the first chairman.

Indeed, Mr. Pickersgill had prepared a job for himself at a very interesting salary.

> ... It is under his administration that the commission allowed the railways to eliminate certain passenger train services while others were maintained with the help of federal grants. On the other hand, Mr. Jean Marchand blamed this act for the unfortunate situation of train transportation. For his part, Mr. Marchand wants to improve the passenger train services.
> Of course, this issue is complex. It is certain that in Canada and the United States, train service is more popular with travellers. Should we not allow the travellers to have the choice of taking the train, the bus, or the plane for their business and pleasure trips?

In order to preserve oil energy, would it not be appropriate that more passengers take railway transit systems linking major cities? Is it not also by stimulating passenger railway transportation that the railway companies will make more profits from that means of transport and that the subsidies and grants will be decreasing?

Railway transportation is still very popular in Europe as well as in Asia for passengers, thanks to the improvement of tracks allowing higher speed. We do not quite understand why Mr. Pickersgill has intervened, given the present economic, technological and social situation.

In 1971, railway transport experts maintained that railways were not profitable in any country, except Switzerland. Recent statistics indicate that Japanese railways were operating in the red. And yet the railway service there was very good, as it was in France and Germany. Contrary to Canada those three countries decided once for all that railways had a social role to play in public transportation. This is what we must consider: a railway transit system, a genuine social service. We must provide the Canadian people with a passenger service because railways are quite safe and that they can run despite bad weather, when other means of transportation are paralyzed in certain circumstances.

We must think of the social role of a passenger service. Even though we will have to engage more public money, we know what has been the cost up to now. But if such a service could be improved we could then build up a good transportation service to accommodate all Canadian people, ensuring that in almost all occasions, except in a very few exceptions, public could enjoy a good service.

So I believe that Canadians would be satisfied with decisions of that sort and the railroads could be used with greater advantage than it is the case now.

The question is not whether the Canadian Pacific is more willing than the Canadian National or conversely, to attract business. The thing is to know when the government will finally say when it intends to provide transportation services more suited to the Canadian people.

Following the passage of the new 1967 Transport Act, the government is prepared to subsidize transport companies in respect of their losses, but one must stop and think that a subsidy is not a transportation policy. Other means must be sought. Recently, the disparities in freight rates caused great prejudice to a great many manufacturers, particularly those in my area, because I received representations to that effect.

Adjustments would have to be made because manufacturers in my area had to layoff people because freight costs were too high in various provinces, even if orders are waiting to be shipped. Once again, I hope the minister in co-operation with his colleagues can find a formula better suited to the needs of Canadians.

Mr. Murta: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, it has been agreed that, because time is short and many members want to participate in the debate, we should limit speeches to 15 minutes. I think the NDP and the other party agree to this.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that, from now on, speeches shall be limited to 15 minutes?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed; and there is to be no overtime.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on transportation. This morning and early this afternoon I listened to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) give one of his great performances in the House. His hands were waving, and his delivery was faultless. But I remember hearing a similar speech before. He put up a wonderful show, and did it very well.

What he did reminded me of something I saw last Wednesday night. I was sitting in a movie theatre and just before the main feature came on they showed a cartoon which reminded me of the Minister of Transport. The cartoon was about a character known as the Roadrunner, who runs around at great speed, says "beep, beep," and really does not do much else, although what he does is very entertaining. He reminded me of the Minister of Transport. He is very entertaining, but he seldom says anything worthwhile.

What disturbed me about the minister's speech were his comments on racism. Madam Speaker, I have been here for three years and, to me, it always seems that allusions to racism come from the other side of the House. The people of Canada are tired of hearing them. I do not know what they have to do with transport policy in this country. Our criticism of the minister does not involve racism. We criticize him because he is incompetent, because his department does not know what it is doing, and because the people of Canada are fed up with the government's lack of policies in transportation.

At the beginning of his speech he took a shot at the Conservative party. He said it lacked policies and is lacking physically, intellectually, and morally. I wonder how the Minister of Transport could make a statement like that, after running around the country during the last federal election campaign and telling the people what his party would do for urban rapid transit, to make trains run and to build airports. So far we have not seen any legislation which would implement the policies the minister talked about in the last election campaign. I wonder how he can talk about a moral position.

Mr. Dinsdale: Especially as the Liberal party is morally derelict.

Mr. Reynolds: During the election campaign he spoke about an urban rapid transit policy. To my amazement, many of the things he said were taken right out of the policy pronouncement prepared by my party over one year before that. Some actual sentences were taken from my party's policy pronouncement. So, what is the minister thinking when he talks about my party's intellectual and moral qualities?

What is the government's attitude on the manufacture of aeroplanes in this country? The government paid de Havilland in Ontario, the builders of STOL aircraft, tens of millions of dollars in aid. Now the parent company, Hawker-Siddeley, wants the government to buy the de Havilland Aircraft because it does not think it will be successful.

Throughout the minister's 40 minute speech he kept asking for suggested solutions from my side of the House. Now he has left the House, just as we want to suggest solutions.

I draw the minister's attention to Dominion Aircraft Ltd., formerly of British Columbia. My party, and members of the minister's party were in favour of giving aid to that company to help it build STOL aircraft. The government refused. Now that company is in business in the state of Washington, south of British Columbia, employing people to build an aeroplane which should have been built in Canada.

Consider also what has happened to Trident Aircraft Ltd. of British Columbia, which has developed a float aircraft. The government gave the company $1.5 million as a PAIT grant. The individual owners of the company put up $1.5 million of their own capital. Now the government is telling these people that it will not put more money into the company, and the company may need to close down unless it is given assistance. These examples illustrate policies which people in my part of the country do not accept, and which the people of Canada will not accept.

I want to talk for a few minutes about airports in British Columbia. In 1966, the then minister of transport, J. W. Pickersgill, said:

● (1520)

> The Department of Transport intends to acquire all of Sea Island eventually. The statement freezes the real estate market and subjects Sea Island to a de facto expropriation.

In 1973, only seven years later, there was still the same problem. All the homes have not yet been expropriated. The Hon. Jack Davis, then minister of the environment, said at that time:

> No special environmental impact-study has been made on the effects of the airport expansion.

What kind of transport department comes up with these types of answers seven years after announcing an expansion of an airport, stating they have not yet come up with any environmental studies to let the residents know what will be the effects? The Hon. Jack Davis also said:

> Expropriation on Sea Island is in line with Ottawa's decision years ago to clear the island of all private homes.

Since that time we have had government assurance that they do not want to go into all areas of Sea Island. We have asked for other studies of the area. We cannot get any answers. What kind of government comes forth with these kinds of policies?

The minister wants to talk about moral intellectual decisions of the Conservative party. I wish to read a letter sent by the Liberal party during the election campaign. It concerned the people of Sea Island. The letter was addressed "To the concerned Sea Island residents". Copies were delivered to people in the area and the media. I quote from it as follows:

> The following is a statement released after several days of telephone negotiations with Ottawa and Mr. Ron Basford's office, through Liberal candidate Joan Wallace, Burnaby-Richmond-Delta:
> Mr. Ron Basford has promised to sit down with Joan Wallace regardless if she wins her riding or not, to negotiate a fair and equitable settlement of the Sea Island expropriation and renters' problems. In addition, Mr. Basford will initiate the appointment of an impartial, new mediator to act on the discussed issues. Mr. Basford initiated this commitment on the premise that it will be accepted on an unbiased and objective level by the Sea Island group. The commitment was also made after repeated assurances by Joan Wallace's campaign manager that all parties involved in the preliminary discussion to date have been completely serious on ending this very serious problem and that the new mediating body would be respected in their judgment if empowered under the act.
>
> No further clarification of what the new mediating body's form will be, i.e. one, two or three impartial people but the names as suggested during our meeting on Sea Island were put forward to Mr. Basford for serious consideration.
>
> It was pointed out that Mr. Isadore Wolfe will not be involved in the negotiations.
>
> We believe that this is a major step forward and a very constructive one. Joan is very optimistic a compromise can be achieved very soon.
>
> The preceding statement was negotiated through the office of Ron Green of the B.C. Liberal party headquarters.

Yours very truly,
for Joan Wallace, Campaign Office
Sandy McLeod
Campaign Manager

The people of Sea Island respected that statement made by the candidate in the last election and by the then Minister of State for Urban Affairs, now Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford). What happened after the election? The results were not as they wanted them. The people of Sea Island sent a telegram to Ottawa. They received back the following telegram:

Mr. W. Charles Johnstone, General Counsel, Sea Island Ratepayers Association.

I have your letter of July 11. No statement was enclosed but I presume you refer to a statement dated July 6 issued by Mr. Sandy McLeod. Mr. McLeod must be in error in that I have made none of the commitments alleged. Mr. Wolfe is special adviser to the government in this matter and your proper course is to deal with him.

The Honourable Ron Basford, Minister of State for Urban Affairs

That was a complete reversal of what the government promised the residents of Sea Island. Nothing has been done to date. The residents of Sea Island are still there, waiting and wondering what is going to be done in their situation. There is a court decision. The residents finally had to take the government to the Federal Court of Canada to plead their case so they would not be kicked out of their homes. I will quote from the decision of that court so that we will know what the judge had to say after listening to both sides of the situation. I quote:

With reference to the Canadian Bill of Rights the learned counsel for respondents stressed that due process of law had not been followed in the present instance because the minister had not given proper assistance to seek and obtain alternative premises and had stopped negotiations as soon as actions were instituted for additional compensation.

In my opinion assistance has to be given if section 24(5) is to be meaningful, otherwise it is wholly optional to the minister to give or not give assistance. That subsection 5 of section 24 reads as follows:

(5) For the purposes of subparagraphs (3)(b)(ii) and (4)(b)(ii), consideration shall be given to the time and circumstances in which a former owner was allowed to continue in occupation of the land after the Crown became entitled to take physical possession or make use thereof, and to any assistance given by the minister to enable such former owner to seek and obtain alternative premises.

As per the evidence the assistance was not worthwhile.

That is a judge of the Federal Court saying that this minister and this government have not given proper assistance to the people of Sea Island. Until proper assistance is given, the problem will not be solved. I might mention that most Liberal members from British Columbia agree with the people of that area. They have met them and I think they have great sympathy for their problems.

The minister asked for solutions. I will give him a solution to the problem in that area. I want to talk about interest payments that have had to be made. They amount to over $700 a day. The government has paid over $250,000 in interest. That is money the government owes those people.

I want to compare the situation of the people of Sea Island with those in Pickering, Ontario. The original estimated cost in Pickering was $70 million. An additional 10 per cent payment made in August, 1973, increased the original market value across the board by $7 million. Agreement not to take possession until January, 1975, did not limit a final home for a home evaluation. That is a program which the people of Sea Island do not have.

In 1969, 88,000 acres were expropriated at Mirabel, Quebec. Of 3,180 owners, all but 112 were settled by March, 1973. However, in November, 1973, the government reopened claims and grants with a $16 million across the board adjustment. Why would they do that when only 112 claims were not settled out of a total of over 3,000? The government undertook arbitration of land values across the board on all claims, and revised the original estimate of cost per acre from $210 to $500.

In other areas of Canada where the government was considering building airports, it gave the people of those areas extra consideration. It has not given that consideration to the people of Sea Island. If it had given those people what they are asking for and what a judge of the Federal Court and a private appraiser says is reasonable, the problem would have been solved a long time ago. That is a solution for the minister. I hope he will consider it seriously and do something about it.

I do not have much time left. However, there are two other topics I want to mention. One is a motion which I presented to this House on April 16, 1973. It reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of transferring the Crown lands, commonly known as the Canadian Forces Station Ladner or the Old Boundary Bay Airport, together with buildings thereon, to the municipality of Delta and, in co-operation with the municipality, develop the areas as an industrial-recreational complex of pollution-free secondary industries, parkland, ocean beaches and sports stadia for the benefit of Delta, Richmond and the Lower Mainland and as an example to other medium-sized urban and suburban communities of the value of such a complex.

NDP and Liberal members spoke in favour of that motion. They thought it was a good idea. However, as of this date we do not have any report or study from the government. That was over two years ago. My latest letter from the minister's office is dated February 14. It states:

I will look into the matter you have raised and will be back in touch with you as soon as possible.

That motion was presented two years ago. If the government were serious, it would have solved the problem a long time ago. Studies in that area would have been completed and the people of that area would know what will be done with the land. It is just sitting there. It is vacant and an eyesore to the whole community.

When talking about transport and the awarding of a contract by the minister in the past few days to an American owned company, we raised some questions in the House. When talking about content, we still get conflicting answers. I say to the minister that content is the ownership of the company. If there is a Canadian company, it should have the advantage over an American company when a tender is being considered. Many members opposite agree. I hope the minister will reconsider his answer of this morning and look at the situation carefully. There are people in my area who are out of work because of the switch in the contract. All the profits will be going across the border. I do not see that as the proper way to have things happen.

I will complete my remarks on the subject of air routes. The minister spent a lot of time talking about CP Air and Air Canada and all the benefits of a government-owned airline over the the privately owned airline. As long as this minister is Minister of Transport, CP Air will continue to be at the low end of the scale. CP Air has suffered ever since this minister took over his portfolio.

The people of western Canada and Liberal members from British Columbia agree that CP Air should have been allowed the new routes into southern California. I know they had a meeting with the Minister of Transport to plead the case of CP Air with regard to those routes. It made a lot of sense for CP Air to have them rather than Air Canada. What did the minister do, Madam Speaker? He walked out. He would not even listen to his own members. If he is asking for positive suggestions, then I suggest he listen a little. The problem with the minister is that he does not listen. Not only does he not listen to the members on this side of the House; he does not listen to the members on his own side of the House.

● (1530)

Until I see a replacement sitting in the minister's seat in this House, I can see no solution to the major transportation problems. We need a minister on that side who is serious about the transportation problems of this country and who works full time on finding solutions to them. I should like to see one of the newer members on that side, perhaps one of the members from British Columbia, placed in the cabinet and put in charge of transportation. British Columbia only has one minister on that side, and that in itself is a slight on a province that elected eight Liberal members. In the last parliament there were four British Columbia Liberal members, and two of them were cabinet ministers. I am not including the member who went to the Senate. He was not elected by the people of British Columbia but was appointed to that place by the government.

I should like to see the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) made minister of transport. She is a hard working woman, and it is International Women's Year. My final word is, "why not?" appoint the hon. member for Skeena minister of transport? Then perhaps we will be able to solve some of the transportation problems in this country.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I should like to congratulate the minister on his explanation to the House this afternoon of the difficulties that he has encountered in his department, on his sincerity in bringing these problems to the attention of the House some time ago, and on the positive steps he has taken to solve these problems.

At the same time one is left with the impression that his explanations to the House always seem to fall on deaf ears, or else the opposition turn their heads around and do not listen. Or they do as they did a few minutes ago, make catcalls, yelling across the House and not really listening to what the minister says to them. I am sure many of them even do not take the time to read Hansard the following day. That is obvious from the comments they have been making.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Another reason why it is obvious that they do not understand is that they continually make representations in the House on transportation matters, but repeat the same comments time after time. Each member of the opposition speaks as an individual on the problems of transportation in his own constituency. No real policies or concrete suggestions are put forward as to what they would do if they were in a position to do it. The role of the opposition is to put forward good, concrete criticism, not to indulge in personalities or to criticize individual members. It is constructive suggestions that will solve the transportation problems of this country.

I can assure hon. members opposite that the minister is not going to wait for them to make suggestions any longer, since they are all speaking as individuals. They do not come to grips with the problems. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) spoke of the problems in his own constituency. Another member from the maritimes spoke of transportation problems in the maritimes, forgetting to tell the House, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, that in all phases of transportation, whether land, sea or air, the maritimes are subsidized to the tune of 50 per cent on all goods delivered. No member on the other side mentioned that because they are afraid it might hurt individual interests in their own areas.

What Canada needs is what the minister says it needs, a national transportation policy for the entire country.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the parliamentary secretary does not mean to misrepresent the position taken by the minister, but the minister did not say what the parliamentary secretary has just said.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, if the minister did not say it I should like to tell the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that I am saying it. He does a heck of a poor job on the other side, and I am saying that too. At times I wonder how he can live with it when he hears all his members speaking as they do. He must have a lot of patience to sit on the front bench and take it all in, but they do not even have the guts to get together and criticize the minister. They do not get together as a Conservative party, a loyal opposition, to tell the House what ought to be done and to make concrete suggestions.

I wish I could continue, Madam Speaker, but my time is also short and I should like to put a few things on the record for the sake of the opposition. I hope that the Leader of the Opposition, along with the members of his party, will continue to listen to me in the manner he did a little while ago. If they do they will realize we have made progress in regard to the meeting which took place in Calgary in 1972. They will know that we are having dealings with all the provinces of western Canada and that some of these current problems will be solved. They cannot be solved in five minutes or immediately after one has made a speech, but I do believe we are making a lot of progress. However, the opposition are blind because they want to be blind. They do not want to see progress. They would like to go the other way instead of up. They are always talking gloom and doom and nothing else. They love gloom and doom; it is all they ever think of, Madam Speaker.

The main speaker for the Conservative party commenced this debate today. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) is a very good friend of mine, but he said nothing in his speech, from beginning to end, although he took 40 minutes over it.

As the Minister of Transport has said, I too find it most difficult to understand why the opposition gets such pleasure from hurting the domestic and international image of our country's flag carrier.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that, Joe?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I did. Air Canada is not only the top notch international and domestic air carrier, but perhaps more important, it is an air carrier which has been, and continues to be, responsive to the needs of our people. Providing service on uneconomic routes, Air Canada has been a major instrument in maintaining the unity of our country.

In addition, Air Canada has played such an integral part in the development of Canada's transportation system that we often take it for granted. It is such a part of the national psyche that people tend to forget that there is indeed a lot of work behind the scenes, a lot of planning to keep the entire system viable, efficient, safe and economical.

But, Madam Speaker, as in everything else, we cannot implement changes overnight. Hon. members may remember—they often refer to this—what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in Winnipeg before the last election, namely, that Air Canada would build a new hangar at the Winnipeg airport. Since that time both Air Canada and the government have been implementing this project. Plans are well in advance, and construction should start as soon as the site is selected. The current discussions are centred around the fact that the Ministry of Transport's airport people in Winnipeg and planners in the city of Winnipeg are reviewing the impact of other considerations regarding the location of the Air Canada hangar. A decision will be taken soon.

• (1540)

An hon. Member: Equilization in Canada means locating everything in Winnipeg.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If what the hon. member suggests were the fact I would receive that with open arms, and at least we would do better with it than they have.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would support me wholeheartedly on that.

An airline's performance should not be gauged on whether it provides one or two rolls for breakfast along with coffee or whether stewardesses wear mini-skirts or slacks. Air Canada has a record of introducing direct services in this country as soon as it is possible to do so. The airline will be introducing more frequent service as warranted by traffic volume. New points will be introduced this summer in the United States and Europe. These will implement international bilateral agreements reached with foreign countries.

Awhile ago the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta made reference to certain services that were given to Air Canada and other lines instead of CP Air. I would remind the hon. member of an answer that was given this morning by the Minister of Transport to the effect that there was an agreement reached between CP Air and Air Canada relevant to those services.

An hon. Member: You mean dictated.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): They were not dictated, they were agreements. At the same time I would ask the hon. member if he thinks that we should not give anything to Air Canada, the people's airline, or how we could give it to a better service instead? I would point out to everyone that because there was an agreement reached between CP Air and Air Canada we now have an understanding between the two airlines. There is no reason at all for the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, or anybody else, to criticize the airline. Anyone who does offer criticism should have better communications with CP Air and Air Canada before making statements like this.

Mr. Reynolds: Would the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Speaking as a westerner, I am pleased—

Mr. Reynolds: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He can ask his questions after my 15 minutes are finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Reynolds: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. parliamentary secretary has asked a lot of questions. If he wants to give me a couple of minutes, and I guarantee him I will not take longer, I will give him a clear and to the point answer, which I think is apparent in—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member knows very well this is not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will answer his questions after my time is completed.

Mr. Reynolds: What you have suggested is false.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What I am saying is not false, but you like to make the people of this country believe that it is.

An hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We have to tell them the truth, and the truth is that there was an understanding between CP Air and Air Canada.

As a westerner I am pleased to say that there will be a new service from Winnipeg to the John F. Kennedy Airport in New York, and there will also be a new service from Calgary and Edmonton to San Francisco.

An hon. Member: If they are still flying.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Air Canada's safety record, which I would like to touch on, is unquestionably unparalleled by any other airline in the world.

The safety record of Air Canada is similar to the safety record of the CNR, which does have the best safety record of any railway in the world. It is often the case that members of the Conservative party, like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), seem to get some kind of sadistic satisfaction from continually accusing the airline in respect of its safety performance. What amazes me is the fact that people like that hon. member continue to paint the worst possible image of our country's flag carrier when he has not even taken the time to accept an invitation to inspect Air Canada's servicing facilities and to question on the spot the people responsible for servicing the aircraft.

I cannot and will not accept this as constructive criticism, and I certainly cannot accept it as a means of furthering our aviation interests around the world. If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre finds, for some reason, that he must continue to decline invitations to visit and be briefed on Air Canada's maintenance facilities, then I suggest he should read the magazine called "Aircraft Engineering" of last November, which had a seven-page article about Air Canada under the heading "The Airline That Knows What Maintenance is All About".

Air Canada's transport air safety division is currently working on some 60 safety research projects. These range from wake turbulence from large jetliners to fire resistance of aircraft interiors. This has enabled the ministry to feed back to the aviation community the information derived from these studies, investigations and research. Such feedback has met with some strong favour from commercial and private pilots in Canada.

Air Canada has an inspiring flying record of safety, a record which matches our strict and stringent regulations. When it comes to air safety, this is one case where we put all our eggs in one basket. We are not scrimping on this one; we are not looking for ways to save a dollar here and a dollar there. Safety is expensive and it must be, because we want the very finest navigational aids, the best equipped airports and the best trained pilots. I am almost finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It would take too long to enumerate here all the projects and all the money being spent in this country—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —to promote, upgrade and maintain safety standards—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Madam Speaker, keeping in mind his own statement that "transport is in a mess" in this country, I think it is time a number of specific questions were asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Answers to these questions will likely be few and far between if we are to judge by previous standards.

The whole realm of transportation could easily be said to need scrutiny, but I intend to limit my inquiries almost entirely to the problems of rail transportation. How the minister can allow a railway system which literally built this country to deteriorate in prestige, as it has, is beyond me. Even given the best of management, the government-owned railroad, the CN, cannot function without a clearly defined transportation policy. Railroads which are not government owned, such as CP and others, while not as reliant on this policy are also finding it extremely difficult to operate.

I have heard in the few years I have been here constant references to our transportation policy. Not yet, however, have I been presented with a single document which might possibly be construed as this proposed policy. Even a single step in the right direction might be cause for some hope. Just determining where to start may be, I suppose, a major problem. Another major problem I suggest might be whom to start with, as never have I encountered so many department heads, experts, chiefs, deputies, or whatever as were in attendance at the standing committee on transport yesterday. Even at the rate paid to MP's, and I am sure it easily exceeds that, it would cost well over $1,000 for the one hour that committee sat.

Some of my most serious questions to the minister over the past few years have concerned safety. Each year as the reports come to us from the Canadian Transport Commission the incidence of derailment increases. Going with this, hand in hand, are the frightening statistics in regard to deaths and injuries at level crossings of various kinds. Some of these are necessarily the result of outright carelessness on the part of pedestrians and motorists. What is of importance is the fact that a fully responsible transportation policy would eliminate all such crossings. Only in this way can we prepare for high-speed trains, such as the Turbo, that are surely essential in Canada. Realizing this, one would expect and hope that this simple portion of the policy might be presented. This and several other minor portions of policy would provide a glimmer of hope for things to come. How can we have any hope so long as these easy items are left unattended.

● (1550)

I have questioned the minister also on other types of accidents. Some of these involved fatalities and other serious injuries. To repeat all of them now would take far too much time. I only wish to make a few simple suggestions. Let us have some direction from the minister to the proper departments with regard to the basic standards acceptable in the maintenance of way. Let us have some direction from the minister with regard to safe levels of axle loadings on freight cars. Let us have some direction from the minister with regard to employee training and standards of conduct.

Only this one brief reference will I make to the report of the CTC of Tuesday last. Very seldom is a report such as this issued as quickly as this one. Even when such speed is used I have never known of a report like this to be issued prior to a coroner's inquest. Yet in this case it was brought out exactly a week prior to the inquest. One of the most tragic accidents to occur recently is covered in this report. Until the inquest is completed I must necessarily hold my comments and I suggest the CTC might better have done likewise.

I feel that Canadian rail safety standards are years behind those in many other countries and, in my opinion, this situation has been created by a lack of initiative and direction on the part of the federal government. If this same government ever comes up with a reasonable way to ensure that the railways will run for a full year without interruption, that there are enough rail cars to deliver all of the grain and other products we have contracted for, we will surely need to have our safety standards improved to do the job properly.

In addition to the question of safety I would like to spend a few minutes on suggestions, or questions as you will, with regard to rail passenger lines. Again, in a country where a railway was the instrument of birth, we seem to have long since lost any initiative we may once have had. Canadian travellers have been plagued by increasing costs, an increasingly poor quality of service and, in general, are now substantially subsidizing a transportation system that operates contrary to the public interest.

It is common knowledge that the swift, safe movement of people in an economic manner is still best done by rail. Why then have we not high speed corridors, free of grade crossings between our major cities? Why are we continuing to use fossil fuels when the one source of energy Canada has in abundance, electricity, either hydro or nuclear generated, is so obviously a better choice? If the turbo has been proven, why are we not providing more of them for other runs? If not the turbo or perhaps the LRC, why are we not either developing our own technology or looking at foreign examples of high speed transit? With outmoded passenger facilities, poor service, poorer schedules is it any wonder that the lines are not profitable?

We are spending a huge sum of money on the STOL system from Ottawa to Montreal. As an experiment, I suppose I cannot argue, but as a long-term system there is no question in my mind that, given the same funds and backing, the railways could beat it every way—speed, service, economy, fuel savings, reliability. We have seen evidence in the United States of a resurgence of passenger rail traffic under its Amtrak system. That country, with all its industrial genius, is using the turbo and a turbo-powered train imported from France, as well as conventional equipment. We do not need to set up a separate operating service. The CN is government-owned and, given proper direction and guidance, is completely capable of carrying out a government policy. Which, of course, brings me full circle.

In Canada we have the need, the desire, the technology, the ability, in fact all of the ingredients to be a leader in rail travel. What is needed, as I have said and I am sure my colleagues will repeat frequently, is a decent transportation policy. We do not have one now and will not have until we have a minister who is prepared to tackle the job properly. In any organization to do this you must start at the top and shake up the whole works. By the time you get to the area level such as Rideau area headquarters in Belleville you will soon find that these people, who are hard working and conscientious, will take their example from above.

My final question begs the obvious answer. Given the example we have seen in the House of Commons recently, is it any wonder that transportation is in a mess?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity provided by the official opposition to discuss transportation as it refers to the maritimes in particular. Before proceeding further I should like to say why transportation is an issue of great concern to South Western Nova. My constituency is probably the greatest distance from Halifax and any other points in the maritimes on a time basis. This is one of the main reasons why we need a good transportation policy. It is absolutely necessary in the southern end of Nova Scotia to have ferries in order to reach our Canadian and United States markets by the most economic and fastest means available. I should like to mention the various industries pertaining to Nova Scotia at this end of the province.

In my constituency the fishing industry is probably the one element that is of prime concern to all of us. We have the highest value of fish landings of any area in Canada. This involves mainly lobster and other fresh fish. There is the problem of getting these products to the Canadian as well as the United States markets. Boats are required in this area. There are five particular ferries.

Before touching the subject of freight rates I wish to point out some of the areas in which the Ministry of Transport has been working in the last few years. I shall mention Digby, and point out that in 1971 a new Department of Transport wharf was built in order to facilitate the loading of boats with front and rear-end loading. Along with this the Department of Transport has maintained another wharf to facilitate the loading of freighters which carry pulpwood and more recently fish. This wharf not only brought a new boat to the area but in December, 1974, the Department of Transport bought the boat from the CPR, and since December 1974 the Princess of Acadia has been under the transport ministry.

I should add at this time that the people of the area are very happy with this take-over. For years they felt that there should be a more impressive service than that which they have had, a service that would be more in line with the cost of fares and in line with the other maritime ferry service. This is one area in which I believe the Ministry of Transport can play a vital role. The department has taken this lead already in respect of the purchase of the Princess of Acadia. I might also point out that the department maintains a wharf which is accessible to freighters which come in there.

Now I should like to turn to the Yarmouth area of my constituency. A new Ministry of Transport wharf has been under construction at Yarmouth since the beginning of this year, with an estimated value of $2.1 million. It is expected that this will be finished and in operation in the spring of 1976. This wharf will help carry the burden of handling the existing three ferries which come into the town of Yarmouth. One of the ferries is operated by the Canadian National under the Ministry of Transport. This ferry, called The Bluenose, is of great concern to the area. The Bluenose has been there for 17 years, and it is hoped that a larger boat might be available to handle the tourist traffic in the summer, and the truck traffic during the remainder of the year. Until now this service has not been quite adequate for the amount of traffic.

● (1600)

Now I would like to make a few comments about the tourist industry. The transportation policy at that end of the country brings a lot of tourists to the maritimes. This is probably the most convenient gateway from the United States, Ontario and Quebec to the maritimes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): I hope the hon. members who are applauding over there will come to visit us and thus help the trade in our area.

I would also like to point out that in my area there is much lumber. Many Christmas trees are cut down to be sent to the United States. For this industry we need a good truck ferry in the area.

Another way in which the transportation policy has been good to our area is in the erection of the DOT building at Yarmouth which was completed in 1972. Also, for the first time, Air Canada has provided a one day service between Halifax and Yarmouth and return, so that now we can go directly to either Montreal, Toronto or Ottawa within about four or five hours, which was once unheard of. If we leave the area at four or six o'clock, we can be in Ottawa at nine o'clock or ten o'clock. It is anticipated that we will soon have a direct route from Yarmouth to Halifax, and thus avoid having to go by way of Saint John. I would like to say that in these areas the transportation policy of the government has been of direct benefit to the maritimes.

Now I would like to say a few words about freight rates and discuss a subject to which I am sure my colleagues will take a negative attitude, which might produce more harm than good in the maritimes. The Minister of Transport has gone on record as saying that the National Transportation Act is not acceptable. We would like to see transportation used to stimulate the economy. It will be necessary to introduce, perhaps through the CTC, some degree of rate control to avoid discrimination in the freight rate structure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): I am sure that opposition members will recognize the fact that that is the policy of the federal government. The government, through the Minister of Transport, is working on such a policy and hopes to unveil it by late spring.

Now I would like to say something about federal-provincial consultations. We have a federal-provincial committee for Atlantic region transportation which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) set up in 1969, shortly after introducing the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act in the House. I would like to review some of the major recommendations that this committee made to the government, and the government's response to those recommendations.

One of the first major recommendations was for the introduction of a temporary trucking subsidy for intraregional traffic, to come into effect during the phasedown of the intraregional rail subsidy. The basic idea behind this proposal was to place the trucking industry on a competitive basis with the railways while the intraregional subsidy program was being phased out. This recommendation was accepted by the government and has been very effective in strengthening and building up the trucking industry in the Atlantic region.

More recently the federal and provincial governments have worked out a way of extending the westbound subsidy for rail and truck traffic to a level of 50 per cent on a selective basis. This was a first attempt at introducing selectivity into a direct subsidy program, and I think it is a tribute to our consultative mechanism that this was done with a high level of agreement between the government and the provinces concerned.

This program is beginning to show results, and we have seen examples of Atlantic region manufacturers who have attributed an increased penetration of central Canadian markets directly to this program.

I would like to quote from page 2 of the March 4 issue of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. The headline of this article reads, "Transportation Costs 'Are Often Used as Whipping Boy' ". The article reads in part:

> The effects of transportation costs on manufacturing industries in a region are "blown out of all proportions" on many occasions, Development Minister George Mitchell told the legislature last night . . .
>
> The results of the study revealed it is "cheaper" to ship to practically any market in Canada from Sydney, than it is to ship from the Vilas plant outside Montreal, Mr. Mitchell said . . .
> Mr. Mitchell said such a situation exists due to the 50 per cent rail subsidy that has been successfully negotiated by the government, and "which clearly removed most arguments with respect to freight rates".

Then he points out the differences in prices and costs, and goes on to say that people who have a hasty, unresearched and negative manner sometimes do more harm than good to a province such as Nova Scotia.

Now I should like to return to some of the recommendations of the committee. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion, jointly with the four Atlantic provinces, established a physical distribution advisory service in Moncton designed to help the small shipper solve his total transportation problems, including such things as choice of mode, inventory control, warehousing, etc. So often in the past consultants have come to the area, done a good job, and taken their expertise away with them. We have in this organization the beginnings of a permanent source of expertise which will be of great value to local businessmen.

Again through this committee, a regional position was established on priorities for air services to and from and within the region. This was a significant input to the recent CTC inquiry on that subject.

In terms of total funding, the direct subsidy money paid under the Maritime Freight Rate Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act has increased from $14.8 million in 1969 to $36 million in 1974. The full impact of the new selective westbound subsidy is not included in these figures, but it is expected to add a further $3 to $4 million in 1975.

Now I would like to direct the attention of hon. members to a meeting which was held in the Atlantic provinces in mid-January after the subsidy was dropped and freight rates went up all across Canada. This brought uniformity across Canada, and yet the maritimes retained their selective list of the 50 per cent subsidy on any product going west. At that time the Minister of Transport, in his statement in Halifax, mentioned that perhaps this might result in hardship in the area. However, he allowed for the fact that anyone suffering hardship could approach the provincial governments for assistance.

I hope that the effects of the lifting of the subsidy will start levelling out. Perhaps manufacturers in the maritimes will start filling the containers instead of sending them out half filled. Perhaps the advisory group in Moncton will assist them in this. Perhaps one should ask oneself where the money which previously went for the subsidy will now be directed. Perhaps the maritimes will put it into industry.

Having described to the House how the Department of Transport's policies have helped my constituency in the last few years and having spoken about the freight rate system, since I have some time left I would like to enumerate the major capital projects to which the department is committed. I will just read some of the highlights.

● (1610)

In Newfoundland the government plans to spend $19 million during the new fiscal year. The largest amount, $9.5 million, will be spent upgrading and developing terminals at Port-aux-Basques. The government will spend $2 million at the Goose Bay airport, nearly $1.5 million at the St. John's airport and $1 million toward a terminal at Cornerbrook. It will also spend $3.5 million toward the National Harbours Board terminal at St. John's.

In Nova Scotia the government will spend $8 million; $3.5 million of this will go toward adding facilities at the Halifax airport and another $2.3 million will go toward upgrading the terminal in North Sydney. This does not include, of course, the new wharf at Yarmouth.

In Prince Edward Island the government has earmarked half a million dollars toward the development of a new ferry terminal at Wood Islands. In New Brunswick it will spend $10.8 million during this fiscal year. The largest sum, $4.6 million, will go toward development of the Rodney terminal at Saint John, the estimated cost of which has been set at $37.5 million.

At Moncton the government will spend $2.5 million toward the construction of a new area control centre and related facilities to ensure air traffic safety. It will resurface and rebuild runways at Fredericton to the tune of $1.2 million, and in Saint John it will set up a harbour radar and collision avoidance system.

We are all aware of how important transportation is for the Atlantic region, placed as it is so far from its major markets. One might assume that if transportation had not been working well, there would have been a marked deterioration in conditions in the area over the last few years. Let us, however, look at some of the things which have been happening in the region. Disposable personal income—

An hon. Member: Order.

And hon. Member: Time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to her has expired.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I want to touch briefly on some aspects of air and marine transport and some of the labour relations factors which in my opinion are hindering the viability of these important sectors of our transportation.

First I would like to suggest sincerely that there are many areas in transport that the government has been less than frank in disclosing to the public, and to hon. members of this House. There are many areas which need to be exposed by means of public inquiries, or at least referred to parliamentary committees, but so far the government appears to be more interested in covering up its own ineptitude than in corrective action.

I want to speak for a moment about Air Canada and the answer of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) on March 5, when the latter asked about the matter of Mr. Yves Menard's resignation from Air Canada. The Minister of Transport replied in the manner of the late Will Rogers that all he knew was what he read in the papers. He went on to say that the president of Air Canada was making an inquiry into the matter.

We in the opposition would like to know when the president of Air Canada and his capabilities will be the subject of an inquiry in this chamber, in view of the various difficulties facing this once efficient and respected airline.

Since we are speaking about Air Canada and the departure of one of its vice-presidents, I want to raise another matter, and I do so reluctantly, but I want to make it clear that I checked with Air Canada this morning in an attempt to get an answer. I have before me, and I will table it if requested to do so, a confidential interdepartmental letter to Mr. G. J. Kendall, assistant treasurer corporate finance. It is directed to this gentleman and is signed by the treasurer, Mr. H. N. Seath, and it states:

> This is your authority to arrange for a cheque to be drawn as follows:
> Date: March 11, 1974.
> Payee: P. J. Chartrand
> Amount: $12,110.70.

The letter goes on to say:

> This cheque should be charged to suspense and will be cleared by March 15, 1974.
> The cheque is to cover an advance on a second mortgage transferred from Mr. Chartrand to Morguard Trust Company. Authority for this transaction was provided by Mr. Pratte in his letter of March 14, 1973 to Mr. Chartrand.

This may be a perfectly innocent transaction. I do not know; it may be, but I would like to raise the question in this chamber of what justification there is for this sort of accommodation, if that is what it is, to a highly placed executive in our national airline. It may be perfectly innocent, but one has to ask whether this is, prima facie as we say in the legal profession, a good thing and something which would be available to the ordinary employee and, as far as that goes, to other employees in the operational or managerial levels of Air Canada? It is obvious that this type of financial service is not necessarily a good thing, and I would hope that this can be explained, and will be explained by the minister.

I suggest that our airline has become a refuge for many highly paid people who are not really necessary for its efficient operation. It has around 22,000 employees, twice as many, for example, as North West Orient Airlines of the United States, a company of comparable size. However, on the operations level where the work is done, Air Canada is often understaffed and its employees are asked to work longer hours than they would prefer. Its labour relations are abominable.

When the Canadian Airline Employees Association sought, for example, to take action a while ago against Air Canada because of a legitimate grievance, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) sat on CALEA's request pursuant to section 148 of Part V of the Canada Labour Code, for such a long time that the solicitor for CALEA was compelled on September 27, 1973, to write the following letter, part of which I quote:

> The application for the minister's consent was filed on May 30th, 1973 and as you will recall, remained in the hands of the minister for a considerable period of time, a formal consent being received in this office on July 27th, 1973. It is perhaps more than coincidental that by the time the consent of the minister was received, the time prescribed by the Canada Labour Code for filing a complaint with the Board had expired.

The attitude of Air Canada from a labour relations point of view is terrible. So is the record. A partial list of labour disputes Air Canada has had in the past couple of years would indicate, briefly, that, in 1968 there was a work to rule; in 1969 there was a strike; in 1971 there were rotating strikes by the International Association of Machinists; in 1971 the CALEA people had a work to rule; in 1973 there was an 81 day strike in the finance division in Winnipeg; in 1973 there were rotating strikes by IAM again; in 1974 there were rotating strikes again by CALEA; in 1974 another wildcat by the IAM.

Also there have been continuing problems with CALPA and CALFA which have not resulted in strikes yet, and I emphasize yet. The situation at the finance branch at Winnipeg, as hon. members on the government side know, is chaotic, to put it mildly. There is approximately 100 man years of labour backlog of work required to clean up the situation, and in the meantime the computer capability of Air Canada is very badly fouled up, to say the least.

I have here a comparative balance sheet of assets and liabilities, another so-called confidential document which will be tabled in due course later, I presume, and there is some very interesting data on this as well. For example, looking at it we wonder why the accounts receivable have gone up from $102,278,000 in 1973 to $127,290,000 in the comparable period in 1974. There may be a perfectly logical explanation for this, but it is $25 million difference. The bank loan, on the other hand, was shown as $26 million in 1973. There is no trace of it in 1974, leading one to assume that it must have been put into the long term funding, which has gone up by over $200 million.

The unearned transportation revenue has gone up from $27,280,000 to $44,402,000. All this is going to make very fertile questioning areas in committee if we ever get these people into committee, and if it is possible that a proper audit can ever take place of Air Canada's operations.

The situation is so bad that it almost defies belief as far as the finance situation is concerned. I have interdepartmental correspondence here which indicates, for example, that there is an account which usually has a balance of $25,000 to $50,000. This is an account usually used in dealings with other airlines and what they call an OAL account. Yet in correspondence between Mr. J. C. Looney, manager of the interline accounting in Winnipeg and Mr. R. F. Kirby, manager of passenger accounting, dated late last year, the following excerpt appears:

> This account normally has a balance of $25,000 to $50,000.

However, the letter goes on to say:

> Therefore, the average balance in this account in the latter part of 1973 rose by about $10 million and at year end was some $14 million higher than normal.

● (1620)

> During 1974, the account balance dropped significantly because OAL exchanges on hand but unprocessed were not accrued until the November 1974 month end.

The letter goes on to say:

> This backlog has resulted in significant delays in billing other airlines. The balance in this account was in excess of $19 million in October, 1973 and as at November 30, 1974 was $10 million.

This is the part that is shocking where the letter says:

> The cost of late billing is estimated in excess of $1 million using a 10 per cent interest rate . . .

That is $1 million that is directly attributable to the deficit that this airline has incurred simply because it was not capable of collecting its accounts receivable. If that would not be cause for the resignation of the people responsible for the situation in the management of Air Canada, I do not know what would, Mr. Speaker. Surely the Minister of Transport must exercise more guidance over the various components of this department than he has done to date.

Anyone who has followed the progress of the SIU—and I am going to speak about the SIU here because it is related to marine transport and is a very important union—as it supposedly valiantly seeks to reform itself, must be disappointed at how long this is taking, particularly in view of the revelations on the front page of the Toronto Sun and other newspapers today. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) recognized that there may have been difficulties affecting the rights of union members from abuses perpetrated by their own union, but it seems to me he was slow to do anything about it.

The attempt by Mr. Gralewicz, president of the SIU, to sabotage a speech given last night by a former vice president, Mr. Lazarus, indicates that perhaps he is not the finest example of a sympathetic enlightened union leader, particularly when one considers the material that is available to document this. It would by superfluous to put on the record at this time the many newspaper stories detailing particulars of the abuses within the SIU, yet members have to sit here every day and listen to platitudes. One such platitude was advanced by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacGuigan) on December 19 in reply to a matter I had raised. He quoted from the final report of the trustees who had to take over the operations of the SIU a decade ago, as follows:

> The undemocratic union practices of the past no longer prevail and the individual rights of seamen are sufficiently well protected both in law and in practice.

What rubbish, Madam Speaker, when well known underworld figures are associated with the SIU, when a former vice president calls for a probe of the organization of the SIU charging beatings, and rigged votes, when the province of Ontario has made a similar request, when private investigators are hired by the union and presumably paid for by union dues to shadow dissident members. It is interesting to know that the price is not right because the SIU recently raised its dues, presumably to pay for the extra overhead. How much longer are the Minister of Transport and the government going to procrastinate before they call for an inquiry into this whole matter?

There is something else I should like to touch on briefly and about which the minister and I have had some dialogue already, that is, the Desjardins report. Madam Speaker, I deplore—and this is only my own submission which I do not suggest has any special weight—the way the terms of reference for Mr. Desjardins were set out. As I have already stated they required, among other things, that the investigation should not be subject to the customary rules of evidence nor evidence taken under oath, and that the investigation should not be conducted by means of public hearings.

I indicated to the minister that I would make some comments about the report itself and there are a few things that I should like to bring to his attention which, if they are true, certainly shock me. Although this report is dated July 30, 1974, the submissions of the Laurentian Pilotage Authority made to Mr. Desjardins do not necessarily follow through on this particular date.

The submissions of the LPA through Mr. Guy Major, were dated August 1, 1974, and supplemented on August 15, 1974, as indicated on page 2 of the report. That is to say these submissions appear to have been made after the report was written.

The submissions of the St. Lawrence River Pilots Association were made on July 30, 1974, and supplemented on August 2, 1974, according to page 3 of the report. Again, it appears submissions were made afterwards. Notwithstanding any observations about the propriety of this course of action, the submissions in support are well out of the time set out in the Pilotage Act, section 14(4), namely 30 days following publication in the Canada Gazette. I would point out that publication in the Canada Gazette took place on May 18, 1974.

These observations are rather disturbing, at least to me, and I hope the Minister of Tranport will consider them in due course because they seem to indicate that the report is not as bona fide as it should be. It is strange that it follows almost immediately upon an identical report under the same terms of reference made by Mr. Marler which came to an opposite conclusion.

One of the big difficulties about Crown corporations which come under the Minister of Transport is that they are reluctant to supply the type of information that is readily available from private corporations. I was told by a very reliable person who was participating in labour negotiations with PWA that they, PWA, are more frank in disclosing certain information than is Air Canada. The anti-labour bias of Air Canada is well known to anyone who has more than a fleeting knowledge of what goes on in it.

What this country needs, is for the government to have enough integrity to look into the obvious sloppy practices, complacency and carelessness that has permeated a great deal of its operations.

It is time that the people running this country made a commitment to honesty, and changed their priorities from doing anything to remain in power to justifying their continuing in office.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I understand that a number of members still wish to speak so I shall co-operate by taking less than half the time that is allotted to me. I rise in this debate on the operations of the Department of Transport to register once again my complaint that the department is so slow in doing something effective about the pensions of retired railway workers, especially Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

I recognize that in recent negotiations between employees and management the question of the terms and conditions of the various railway pension plans has been put on the bargaining table. But the discussions that take place in collective bargaining regarding railway pensions relate only to pension arrangements in the future for those now working. There is no way in which the plight of those already retired gets to the bargaining table when negotiations take place between railway employees and railway management. In my view that is where the government has to step in, Madam Speaker.

I do not think it is good enough for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), or others in the cabinet, to mouth repeatedly the proposition that the Canadian National must be left to run its own show and that we do not own the Canadian Pacific Railway. These are both public institutions and are responsible to the people of Canada. I think the federal government has an obligation to say this to both these major railways, and to others like the Northern Alberta Railway and the Ontario Northland. The people of Canada want all of their retired railway workers to be given a better deal.

● (1630)

I recognize also that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) some months ago appointed Dr. Noel Hall as a commissioner to go into all aspects of railway pensions. I therefore have reason to believe that when Dr. Hall makes his report he will have something to say about railway pension plans so far as they affect those still working, and also that he will have something to say about the plight of those who are now retired. But somehow or other reports of commissions seem to take some time to come forward and I do not think it is appropriate for the government, Canadian National or Canadian Pacific, to stall just because Dr. Hall has not made his report.

Let me say in particular that, after much effort over many years, we were able to convince Canadian National that it should escalate the pensions of those already retired by 2 per cent each year. Last year, in 1974, Canadian National did better and escalated pensions by 4 per cent. But that escalation was still far below the actual rise in the cost of living. So far, in 1975, Canadian National has not escalated its pensions at all. I do not accept the excuse that the Hall report has not come forward. Whatever the Hall report will say will deal merely with matters of detail.

I think Canadian National should now be providing a 1975 escalation in the pensions of those already retired. That escalation should be in the order of at least 10 per cent, which was the increase given to retired public servants, retired members of the RCMP, retired armed forces personnel, and so on. That, also, represents roughly the amount of increase in the old age security pension, the guaranteed income supplement, war disability pensions, war veterans allowances, and so on.

The fact that many of these pensions and allowances which come under the aegis of the government have been increased makes one point clear. The government, having recognized the need to escalate pensions after retirement in those other areas mentioned, should carry that thinking through and say to both railway companies that they must do it, too.

I look forward to the publication eventually of the Hall report. I hope it will be a good one; I dare to believe that it will be. But I submit that action should be taken now to increase immediately the pensions of railway workers already retired.

I shall say another sentence or two, and then sit down. Another issue which must be dealt with in terms of railway pensions is the percentage of the pension paid to the widow. The idea that if the husband lives on, his wife having first died, he can get the full 100 per cent pension, but that if he dies his widow must get by on a 50 per cent pension belongs to a bygone age, to an age which existed before International Women's Year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that the rate of the widow's pension should be increased. It may be too much to hope that the rate will go up to 100 per cent very soon, but, at least, it ought to be increased to 60 per cent or 75 per cent right now. I have time for one more brief sentence. I agreed to keep my remarks brief. I plead with the Minister of Transport to act on the important issue of getting an increase in the pensions of railway workers already retired, and that he do so right away.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the hon. member who just resumed his seat, I hope, before too long, that we shall be able to take positive action along lines he has suggested. Hopefully, before long, we can bring about improvements in the area about which he is concerned.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I want to comment briefly on the remarks of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). He criticized Air Canada. He quoted a couple of letters. I suggest that he could obtain his information more readily in the committee considering estimates. He quoted excerpts from two different letters. He suggested that there may be an answer to the points he raised, and then said that there may be an explanation for the fact that the bank account stood at $102 million two years ago, but that now it stands at $127 million. I am sure there is an explanation. The hon. member insinuated that there is no satisfactory explanation. He raised the question but not in the appropriate place. I am sure he is anxious to learn the correct answer.

An hon. Member: What's wrong with hearing it in the House of Commons?

Mr. McIsaac: Most of the matters he raised can be raised in the committee considering estimates. I am sure that he will be able to get answers in committee. I am only questioning the insinuations and the context in which he raised these questions. He, and others, have criticized Air Canada without being specific and setting out the detail exactly of what they find wrong. If people have criticisms of Air Canada, it is about time for them to be specific, to let us know what they are talking about and say what they are criticizing.

We heard similar insinuations and innuendos aimed at this government's transportation policy. I was particularly disappointed and disturbed to hear a western member of parliament, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)—

An hon. Member: A western member?

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, a western member—launch an unjustified attack on the Ministry of Transport and, indeed, on the minister himself.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is what this whole exercise is all about.

Mr. McIsaac: No Minister of Transport has done more—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): He has done nothing.

Mr. McIsaac: —to deal with transportation problems in western Canada. The minister has done more than any other minister of recent years, including any minister who was a member of the party opposite when it was in power.

Mr. Murta: You are having a hard time saying that with a straight face.

Mr. McIsaac: I was disappointed to hear a western member make that attack.

Mr. Murta: When is he going to western Canada?

Mr. McIsaac: The minister has been there. The hon. member is well aware of the progress made in delineating and resolving transportation issues in western Canada—

Mr. Murta: Hogwash!

Mr. McIsaac: —since the WEOC conference.

Mr. Murta: What have you done? Nothing.

Mr. McIsaac: I know that hon. members opposite, and on all sides of the House, have a great tendency to exaggerate. At the same time I suggest that they underestimate the complexity of transportation issues in this country. I find it difficult to understand that western members particularly do not know that five meetings have been held since the end of the WEOC conference.

Mr. Murta: Will you repeat this on Monday?

Mr. McIsaac: I want to tell the hon. member about the five meetings held by the minister and the four western ministers responsible for transportation. Five meetings have been held in Calgary since the WEOC conference. The ministers met five times officially as a ministerial committee. A subcommittee has been established of officials from all four prairie governments and the federal government. It has met, I am informed, a total of 21 times since the conference.

It may interest hon. members opposite to know the items which have been discussed. They include rail cost disclosure. Some hon. members opposite, I believe, were on the committee which dealt with that. They also include the question of rate groupings, the highway strengthening program signed by the four western provinces since the conference, the western northland highway program, which involves highways going to northern Canada and across the western provinces. Agreements regarding the programs just mentioned have been signed, or in some cases are ready for signature.

The Committee also dealt with the problem of British Columbia ferries, the problem of the development of the port of Churchill—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Were B.C. ferries discussed?

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, B.C. ferries have been discussed at various meetings.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They may have been discussed; but what did you do?

Mr. McIsaac: As well, the committee discussed the problem of access to the port of Vancouver, something which is crucial to British Columbia and other parts of Canada. Branch line abandonment in western Canada was also dealt with—

Mr. Murta: That has always been one of our problems.

Mr. McIsaac: I agree. It has been sitting on the shelf all these years.

Mr. Murta: For at least 12 years.

Mr. McIsaac: It was on the shelf when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and it stayed on the shelf for a number of years afterwards.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And it still is on the shelf.

Mr. McIsaac: It stayed on the shelf because the people involved did not want to get down to business, deal with the issues and find the facts. That has been done.

● (1640)

The committee that arose as a result of the WEOC conference is dealing with a formula for examining those branch lines in western Canada. This formula is acceptable to the four provincial governments involved. That is certainly progress when it comes to dealing with that particular area.

The establishment of a mechanism of consultation between the federal government and the four western provinces is one of the key developments of the WEOC conference of a year or two ago.

An hon. Member: What are they complaining about?

Mr. McIsaac: They are not complaining. You are not hearing complaints from the four western premiers and their ministers insofar as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and transportation policies are concerned. They are sitting down and talking about the issues rather than standing up and haranguing, as members opposite have been doing for many months. Communiques from the western premiers and press statements from them are available to members opposite. They certainly have enthusiastic praise for the Minister of Transport and for his sincere effort to deal with the problems of transportation in western Canada.

I can quote some figures. Members opposite are not paying attention. Obviously they do not want to hear the facts. The northwest rail program in British Columbia involves an expenditure of well over $100 million. The Ashcroft Clinton has already been referred to; there was also the development of the port of Prince Rupert, various terminals on the west coast and a number of other things which could be mentioned to illustrate the fact that progress is being made, even though many members opposite missed that fact.

With regard to the question of air policy, there has been a very definite provincial input into domestic air operations. There have been discussions with the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan with regard to development of a third level air carrier and third level air service. That information is in the hands of the two western provinces. The federal government has made that information available to those two provinces. I am sure that before very long there will be an air service in operation as a result of federal initiative and assistance.

I referred to the fact that we now have cost disclosure of confidential cost data from the railroads. This was made available to the provincial governments for the first time last year so they can seek to determine the rightness or wrongness of freight rates for various commodities in their provinces. That came about entirely as a result of the WEOC conference in Calgary. Legislation introduced earlier this session confirms that that process is there today. It was not there for 100 years.

Just the other day the Minister of Transport forwarded to the western transport ministers copies of CN and CPR quick cost formulae to enable those in the provincial offices to look at railway costing procedures on various commodities that come to their attention. That is the first time this type of data has ever been released, let alone to the provincial governments. I say again, it is about time this was done. It is now forthcoming. Information is available to the provinces to enable them to assess better the kinds of policies and programs the various regions in Canada want to see the federal government bring forward.

The provincial officials have met with the CTC a number of times to discuss the more technical aspects of analysing this cost data. There has been a great deal of progress in that respect. By the same token, the western provinces, and I am sure this will also hold true for other provinces, are now providing the federal government with confidential information on trucking cost data and other material which up until this time has been almost completely within the provincial field. This is the kind of co-operation we have now. This progress has been as a result of the WEOC conference and the federal-provincial committee set up following it.

The entire consultative progress is a very essential first step if we are going to develop a rapport with the provinces, the agencies involved, the shippers, the suppliers and the people using the service. If we are going to develop policies for the various regions of Canada we must have this honest and open exchange of information and, Mr. Speaker, we are getting that.

The third major area of progress since WEOC is in the formulation of studies. I will be the first to admit that progress on some of these studies has been a little slow. However, the mere fact that some of them are being undertaken jointly with the provinces indicates ample progress. Some of these studies will be undertaken before very long. They will deal, for example, with new methods of setting freights rates for western Canada. If they prove worthwhile, they will apply to other areas of Canada. The pricing impact study, rail roadbed cost study and joint track usage study have been talked about for a long time without their feasibility having been determined one way or another.

I wish to refer to the 22 anomalies which were raised not too many days ago in the transport committee. The entire list of 22 anomalies was presented to the federal government. They have been rectified in the sense that they have been categorized. The different kinds of anomalies have been sorted out. These anomalies will be analysed and dealt with. If necessary, there will be legislative changes.

In conclusion I wish to quote from a press clipping that appeared in the February 26 edition of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix. The headline is "Lougheed lauds transport pact". Premier Lougheed is known to many members opposite. I quote:

> The accord reached Monday at a meeting of federal and provincial transportation ministers in Calgary was a major breakthrough for western Canada, Premier Peter Lougheed said—

That is what one western government, well known to members opposite, thinks of the progress in transportation policy that has been made by this minister and this government.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the tirade, abuse and nonsense that came from the other side of the House this afternoon are enough to make a member wonder what in God's name he is doing in Ottawa on this Friday afternoon. I might be home if the airplanes were flying.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

I wonder what happened to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He left the chamber about an hour ago. I am told he went to the hole downstairs to categorize over the French television network the debate this afternoon as a racial attack against him because he happens to be from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who said that?

Mr. Forrestall: The minister himself. The minister said to offer some solutions. I will suggest some things that should be done immediately, and they will be welcomed by all Canadians.

● (1650)

The government can get on with ratifying the UNCTAD agreement with respect to the new code of ethics for Atlantic conferences, and retain for Canada the $1.5 billion we have already poured into them. All it takes is a signature on a piece of paper.

With regard to equal opportunities between the ports and the National Harbours Board, because the port of Montreal is dying we have a shed rental policy about to be imposed on eastern ports. For what purpose, Mr. Speaker? To remove the difference between the cost of doing business in the port of Halifax and the cost of doing business in the port of Montreal, so that hopefully traffic will be diverted from Halifax and Saint John to Montreal. I say it will not be diverted. Let the government take a corrective step. It will not be diverted to Montreal; this traffic will go to the port of New York. Is that what hon. members opposite want?

We want a firm commitment to identify and charge some department, some departmental group or agency, with responsibility for maritime policy. The statement made a few weeks ago by the minister is not good enough. I refer to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé). She set up a committee on oceanology policy,4 and the other day we learned that it has not met for six months. Let us set up that committee and get on with it; again all it needs is a stroke of the pen. Let us strike the committee and get on with the steps required to establish a national maritime fleet. Let us announce our position on UNCTAD.

Do hon. members opposite want to know something else they can do with the stroke of a pen? They can bring into the House one sentence in a piece of legislation that will close the Atlantic, the Pacific and Arctic waters north of 60 degrees for passage solely by Canadian ships, with Canadian crews and flying Canadian flags. Save our extractive industries in the north. Do not let Murray River iron ore go into Europe in foreign bottoms; let us save it for Canadian bottoms.

The government can fire Yves Pratte, present chairman of the board of Air Canada, with the stroke of a pen.

We could ask the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) not to be so selective in her quotations. I notice that today she did not bother to quote Professor Wilson of the University of New Brunswick regarding subsidies on maritime freight rates. Do not let us hear too much more unmitigated nonsense about being subsidized in the maritimes on the movement of goods. Of course we are. We have to be. Look where we are.

We are talking about a total program costing $126 million over the last eight years. Last year it cost over $300 million just to pick up the interest and deficit on the operation of the St. Lawrence seaway, so hon. members opposite need not cry to us about how the maritimes are being subsidized. I ask them to make a simple decision. National transportation in Canada requires the will of the government to recognize that it must be subsidized if it is to serve the people adequately from one end of the country to the other. Let hon. members opposite not accuse us of not putting forward constructive suggestions because we have been doing that for the last ten or 12 years.

The other day we had an announcement from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) concerning shipbuilding subsidies, a program we welcomed and which we urge he continued. We are not opposed to it in any way, shape or form. The Export Development Corporation does an extraordinarily good job of enabling Canadian yards to attract offshore business. The other day the minister did not bother to come to the House but gave his report to a few selected reporters, and it was circulated the following day. In that report he removed the word "temporary" and said the program would be permanent, and his flacks at $1,900 a speech patted themselves on their backs and said "What a wonderful job we have done".

If hon. members look at the report very closely they will find another story. The subsidy is to be reduced by one per cent a year until it is down from 14 per cent to 8 per cent; or rather from 17 per cent if you get a matching grant for modernization, reconstruction and upgrading of shipyards. Instead of giving the shipyards notice so there would not be an unnecessary and undue interruption in long-term planning for renewal and modernization, the minister, who believes we are spending too much on them already, starts the reduction next year right in the middle of programming and budgeting for shipyards. Why did he not say that in two years' time, or three years' time—whatever the necessary period is to accommodate present planning—he will start reducing the subsidy by one per cent? He did not do that.

In addition, the minister extended the subsidy to federal shipping, ships built for the federal government, which incidentally must now have the third largest navy in the world, though we still have not got any cargo bottoms to generate new dollars or to save some of the $1.5 billion we are throwing away offshore.

I should like to pose a question to the parliamentary secretary. In the announcement of the extension of the subsidization program to ships built for federal agencies and departments, why did he not announce that it was also being extended to ships built for provincial governments and agencies? Why did he leave out the provinces? I hope it was an oversight, and if it was then with a stroke of the pen he can make a minor amendment, or issue another press release, and correct the situation.

I have referred to five or six areas, Mr. Speaker, but I think the response from the other side of the chamber to the sincere and meaningful points that have been put forward by members from one end of the country to the other is both deplorable and regrettable. The absence of the minister in the last hour of the debate is also deplorable and regrettable. Even the parliamentary secretary for DREE, who still thinks he is the be all and end all in transportation, I notice has left the chamber.

We have welcomed the opportunity this afternoon to draw attention to a number of points regarding the shortcomings in transportation services and the tremendous difficulties being faced by the transportation community in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m. it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the government House leader if he is in a position to tell us what we will be considering on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when I was asked this question yesterday I said I hoped I would have some consultations with the House leaders on Monday and agree on what might be a mutually satisfactory program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It being five o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALLMAND—HAMILTON HARBOUR—NEWSPAPER REPORT ALLEGING RCMP INVESTIGATION DELAYED FOR POLITICAL REASONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I wish to refer to two newspaper articles written by Claude Henault of the United Press, one appearing in the Montreal Gazette of Saturday, March 8, and the other appearing this morning, March 10. These articles might have appeared in other newspapers as well. In the first article of March 8 there is the following statement:

> The investigation into the Hamilton Harbour Commission fraud scandal was delayed at least six months and perhaps one year while the RCMP waited for political permission to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Allmand: This is a completely false statement. I told the reporter on Friday that it was false. There was no negligent or deliberate delay in these investigations. It was officially launched on February 22, 1973, soon after I received a letter from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) requesting such an investigation. It was proceeded with with all due dispatch, without any hindrance from any political source. This can be confirmed by the RCMP.

The RCMP communiqué issued on May 29, 1974, at which time charges were laid against five individuals, stating that the investigation was commenced in September, 1973, referred only to one aspect of the total investigation, for example, the particular investigation which lead to the five charges. But the investigation into the original allegations was started on February 22. This was explained to the reporter several times, but he negligently or deliberately ignored this fact.

I should, furthermore, point out to the House that a member of the Hamilton City Council approached the Hamilton detachment of the RCMP in September, 1972, with certain allegations of wrongdoing in the Hamilton Harbour Commission, but on examination the detachment felt that the matters involved were those matters which fell under the Criminal Code and, consequently, should be investigated by the Hamilton City Police or the Ontario Provincial Police.

We understand that the Hamilton Council member then approached the Hamilton City Police and the Ontario Provincial Police, but they did not have the resources to carry out the investigation and the Hamilton official came back to the RCMP at a later date. At this point the RCMP referred the matter to the Minister of Transport, who in turn wrote me requesting the investigation. I immediately turned the matter over to the RCMP and the investigation was started on February 22. There was no delay of six months to one year, as alleged in the article, while the RCMP waited for political approval. When political approval was asked, it was given immediately.

The second article appeared under the same reporter's name in the Gazette of this morning, March 10. The story reports that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has charged the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal government with covering up the politically explosive Hamilton harbour dredging contracts scandal. I do not know if the reporter reports the hon. member as the same reporter likes to report me; but in any case, if the hon. member did make that charge, I should like to ask him to repeat it in the House of Commons and defend it in the usual way.

● (1410)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I am surprised that an experienced member would rely on such flimsy evidence as newspaper reports to make such serious allegations.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my name has been mentioned in the question of privilege raised by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in connection with an article which appeared in today's edition of the Montreal Gazette under a UPI byline. The article in question was written as a result of an interview which was given to Standard Broadcast News on Friday. There is a tape recording of that interview and my exact words, so there is no question about what I said.

So far as I am concerned, the reporter did a reasonably accurate job of paraphrasing what I said in the tape-recorded interview. I base my evidence, not on some spurious newspaper accounts of what took place but on the ambiguous statements and replies to questions made in the House by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Solicitor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: If the Solicitor General is able to satisfy the House and the country on two points, then I am sure this whole matter could be clarified. The first point is: why the delay from the time of the inquiry in Hamilton to the commencement of the inquiry into the Île d'Orléans contract? The second question is: why would the RCMP, if they wanted to commence an inquiry into dredging contracts in the province of Quebec, go to the Minister of Transport?

The Minister of Transport has no jurisdiction whatsoever over the RCMP. The only minister to whom the RCMP could report regarding any apparent irregularity in contracts anywhere in Canada involving the federal government would be the minister responsible, and that is the Solicitor General. But the RCMP did not do that, and we have the minister's own words for it in the House on March 4 in reply to my question. I asked the minister:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question. Did the RCMP extend the investigation into the Île d'Orléans contract on their own initiative, or were they requested so to do by the Minister of Transport?

The minister's rather intriguing reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, they were requested by the Minister of Transport to begin investigations in Hamilton. Once the RCMP found there was evidence which led them to Quebec City, they reported to the Minister of Transport, and he told them to go full speed ahead in Quebec City as well.

Why would the RCMP have to report to the Minister of Transport? Why would they need his permission to go full speed ahead in investigations into very serious, alleged criminal charges? I submit that this whole affair has evidence, albeit circumstantial, of an attempt at least to confine this investigation to Hamilton, and when that failed the attempt was made to try to cover it up. Until the minister is ready to answer our questions, I am afraid he is leaving himself and his colleagues in the government open to suspicion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has given me notice of the proposed question of privilege. I am sure that he knows well, now that there have been equal contributions by both sides, that we are talking about a matter of debate and not a question of privilege. That debate should take place in this chamber, and I am sure it will in due course, under the proper framework within the rules; but it does not constitute a question of privilege and should not be debated at this time under that guise.

PROPOSED CABINET STUDY OF REPORT ON EFFECT OF POVERTY ON CHILDREN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask leave to present a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to more than 1,600,000 Canadian children. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands:

> That each member of the cabinet as a matter of urgency be asked to read in full the National Council of Welfare's Report on Children in Poverty in Canada entitled "Poor Kids", and that the cabinet meet at an early date to decide on steps to be taken to meet the serious challenge to the future of this country set out in that report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 and therefore cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: The Liberals said no.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL SUPPORT TO PREVENT RACIST DISTURBANCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 in reference to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This morning's Vancouver Daily Province has a headline "Vigilantes to Act Against White Racists" and goes on to say that a group of the communist party plans to retaliate against white racist attacks on East Indians living on the lower mainland. On Sunday about 125 East Indians were told that the Vigilantes will be armed and will not be afraid to use force.

In view of this announcement by a declared communist organization in British Columbia I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour:

> That the Solicitor General be instructed to provide additional support to the RCMP who seek to promote peace and security in that racially unsettled area and prevent an escalation of a potentially explosive situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented or debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REASON FOR RESIGNATION OF MR. GUAGLIANO FROM ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. The motion is seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer and is in regard to Mr. Charles Guagliano of Hamilton, Ontario who was appointed to the Canada Pension Advisory Committee on April 27, 1972 by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) in his capacity at the time as minister of national health and welfare. I move that:

The House requests the Minister of National Health and Welfare to make a statement on circumstances surrounding the resignation of Mr. Guagliano from the Canada Pension Advisory Committee on December 19, 1974 and specifically to state whether charges laid under the Criminal Code of Canada against Mr. Guagliano had anything to do with his resignation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, surely a motion which concerns itself with a hiring in 1972 and a resignation in 1974 cannot be considered to be a matter of urgent and pressing necessity in 1975 within the terms of the rule.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 11, 308, 830, 860, 1,030, 1,041, 1,042, 1,051, 1,169, 1,209, 1,268, 1,305, 1,333, 1,464, 1,477, 1,533, 1,535, 1,565, 1,597 and 1,729.

Order Paper Questions

If questions Nos. 57, 363, 759, 766, 985 and 1,040 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 1,528?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 11—Mr. Reynolds:

What would be the estimated cost to the Federal Treasury in each year if the old age pension were reduced from 65 to 60 over a five year period, eliminating one year, for example, the first year 64 years would be eligible, second year 63, third year 62, fourth year 61, fifth year 60?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The estimated cost of a year-by-year reduction in the present minimum eligible age of 65 for Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits is $300 million in the first year, $500 million in the second year, $900 million in the third year, $1.3 billion in the fourth year and $1.7 billion in the fifth year. These estimates are in 1974 dollars i.e. no account has been taken of adjustment to monthly benefits arising out of changes in the Consumer Price Index. The indicated costs are gross costs and do not take into account tax recoveries on OAS benefits.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

Question No. 308—Mr. McGrath:

1. Who are the members of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency?
2. Who are the Directors of CEMA?
3. How much is each Director paid?
4. How often does the Board of Directors meet?
5. How is CEMA financed?
6. Who appoints CEMA's Directors?
7. What methods are employed by CEMA to (a) control production (b) control inventories?
8. What rate of net profit does CEMA permit it's members?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Mr. Phillip Eldridge, Alberta; Mr. John Hyde, Ontario; Mr. William Jansen, British Columbia; Mr. Harold Crossman, Saskatchewan; Mr. Peter Dyck, Manitoba; Mr. Gilles Yergeau, Quebec; Mr. Harry Law, New Brunswick; Mr. John Eyking, Nova Scotia; Mr. Bert Haneveld, Prince Edward Island; Mr. Fred Wells, Newfoundland.

2. The Structural Committee of CEMA are: Mr. Phillip Eldridge, Mr. John Hyde, Mr. Harold Crossman.

3. It is the policy of CEMA not to disclose the salary paid to its membership. However, a per diem is paid for each day spent on CEMA affairs.

4. The structural committee meets as often as the need for such arises but on an average at least once per week.

5. CEMA is financed through the imposition of a levy of 1 cent per dozen eggs to producers.

6. The directors of CEMA are appointed by the members of CEMA.

Order Paper Questions

7. (a) There are no production controls as such, there are only marketing quotas. (b) A new storage policy is to be recommended in accordance with storage standards comparable to government policy.

8. CEMA does not set a rate of profit to its members. The level of management efficiency has a direct bearing on the profit of any producer.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—PERSONNEL

Question No. 830—Mr. Stevens:

1. As of March 31 in each year 1968, 1970, 1972 and 1974 (a) how many were employed by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation (b) what would have been their aggregate salaries if all were employed for a full year (c) how many had salary levels of (i) $20,000 or more (ii) $35,000 or more (iii) $50,000 or more?

2. What was the salary or the salary range for each of the five highest paid employees of the Corporation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation: 1.

Year	Number of Employees	Total Salaries	Salary Levels $20,000–34,999	$35,000–49,999	$50,000 plus
1968	3	$39,270	—	—	—
1970	3	45,320	1	—	—
1972	3	53,700	1	—	—
1974	3	61,000	1	—	—

2.

1968	$17,000–20,000;	$12,000–13,500;	$6,500–7,500;
1970	$20,000–23,000;	$13,500–15,200;	$7,500–8,600;
1972	$23,000–27,500;	$15,200–16,800;	$8,600–9,400;
1974	$27,500–31,000;	$16,800–19,300;	$9,400–10,700.

CONSIDERATION OF TAX MEASURES

Question No. 860—Mr. Herbert:

Will tax measures be considered to encourage pension plans to adopt more uniform regulations with regard to (a) sound financing and funding (b) vested rights (c) age discrimination (d) portability?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): A significant portion of time spent reviewing provisions of the Income Tax Act is devoted to problems of retirement income, including, of course, pension plans. The points raised in the question are always factors which are considered in the review of legislation. However, it should be noted that the four areas mentioned are covered to a major degree by provincial legislation and by federal legislation in acts other than the Income Tax Act. The major role of the provinces in the pension area makes it undesirable for the federal government to attempt to unilaterally legislate pension criteria. It should be noted that the guidelines of Revenue Canada for registering pension plans for purposes of the Income Tax Act have been drawn up to be consistent with provincial legislation and that there is constant contact between federal and provincial officials on matters dealing with pension plans.

[Mr. Whelan.]

LIP—MEMORANDUM FROM DEPUTY MINISTER TO MINISTER

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the memo dated January 25, 1973, signed by Mr. J.M. DesRoches, Deputy Minister of Manpower and Immigration and addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, saying in part with reference to the Local Initiatives Programme, "no project is approved without concurrence of the Regional Minister" (a) what are the names of all the Regional Ministers that were involved (b) over what geographic area did each have jurisdiction (c) as of what exact date was this system created (d) what part did the present Minister play in such creation (e) what part did his immediate predecessor play?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) See sessional paper 291-2-2319, tabled in the House of Commons on September 5, 1973; (b) See (a) above; (c) The custom of having cabinet ministers represent the interests of provinces and regions has been in existence since July 1, 1867. As R. MacGregor Dawson and Norman Ward point out in their standard work, the Government of Canada: "The Cabinet, in short, is federalized, a turn of events which was shrewdly forecast by one of the critics of the confederation proposals in 1865 and accepted by Sir John A. Macdonald in forming his first ministry in 1867" (fourth edition, pages 193-4); (d) None (see (c)); (e) None (see (c)).

LIP—RCMP INVESTIGATIONS 1972-73

Question No. 1,041—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were any Local Initiatives Programme projects for the year 1972-73 investigated by the RCMP?

2. What were the names of all projects investigated including, in each case (a) the address of the project (b) all names on its application (c) the constituency in which it was located (d) full details of the project's nature (e) the amount of funds granted (f) the names of all persons who recommended acceptance of the project application (g) the reasons for such an investigation (h) the results of the investigation (i) the name of person or persons ordering or requesting the investigation (j) the dates the investigation was carried out?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The RCMP conducted 17 investigations of the 5,823 LIP projects 1972-73. In four of the foregoing investigations, no fraud was involved. In these cases, it is the Department's policy not to disclose information concerning projects investigated as such disclosure might be detrimental to innocent individuals or associations. Additionally, information concerning the twelve projects currently under investigation is withheld pending the results of the inquiry.

2. Details of the one project investigated in which fraud was found are as follows: H-2217—Le Club des 40 à 60: (a) Mr. Guy Poulin, 5116 boul. Léger, Montréal Nord, Québec; (b) Guy Poulin, Robert Chandonnet; (c) Montreal-Bourassa; (d) The objective of the project was to provide such services for the old, sick and handicapped persons of the community of Montreal North as washing and cleaning homes, painting, bringing out the garbage and removing snow; (e) $193,581; (f) The Department of Manpower and Immigration regards as confidential the names and content of all representations made to the minister or the department; (g) Complaint from a confidential informant to the RCMP that Mr. Guy Poulin (sponsor) was also running a business under the name of "Les Ambulances Urbaines" in which non-project people were being paid by LIP funds; (h) October, 1974—RCMP report that charges will be laid; (i) Confidential local informant brought the matter to the attention of the RCMP; (j) December 22, 1973—RCMP confiscated files.

LIP—RCMP INVESTIGATIONS 1973-74

Question No. 1,042—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were any Local Initiatives Programme projects for the year 1973-74 investigated by the RCMP?

2. What were the names of all projects investigated including, in each case (a) the address of the project (b) all names on its application (c) the constituency in which it was located (d) full details of the project's nature (e) the amount of funds granted (f) the names of all persons who recommended acceptance of the project application (g) the reasons for such an investigation (h) the results of the investigation (i) the name of person or persons ordering or requesting the investigation (j) the dates the investigation was carried out?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The RCMP conducted 11 investigations of the 3,401 LIP projects 1973-1974. In first of the foregoing investigations no fraud was involved. In this case, it is the department's policy not to disclose information concerning projects investigated as such disclosure might be detrimental to innocent individuals or associations. Additionally, information concerning the nine projects currently under investigation is withheld pending the results of the inquiry.

2. Details of the project investigated in which fraud was found are as follows: 311-3520 Le Club des 40 à 60: (a) M. Guy Poulin, 5116 boul. Léger, Montréal Nord, Québec; (b) Guy Poulin; (c) Montréal-Bourrassa; (d) The objective of the project was to provide such services for the old, sick and handicapped persons of the community of Montreal North as washing and cleaning homes, painting, bringing out the garbage and removing snow; (e) Approved for $59,800.00 but suspended due to RCMP investigation; (f) The Department of Manpower and Immigration regards as confidential the names and content of all representations made to the minister or the department; (g) Complaint from confidential informant to the RCMP that Mr. Guy Poulin (sponsor) was also running a business under the name of "Les Ambulances Urbaines" in which non-project people were being paid by LIP funds; (h) October, 1974—RCMP report that charges will be laid; (i) Confidential local informant brought this matter to the attention of the RCMP; (j) December 22, 1973 (RCMP confiscated files).

GRANTS TO WOMEN'S CENTRES

Question No. 1,051—Mr. Jelinek:

1. Of the seventeen women's centres offering advice on abortion that are receiving grants from the Department of the Secretary of State, are any in the Toronto area and, if so (a) how many (b) what is their identity (c) what is the dollar value of their grants?

2. Are any other departments involved in giving grants to women's centres?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) Of the 16 women's centres in Canada which have received grants from the Secretary of State Department, two are in Toronto. These centres are engaged in a wide variety of activities including information and referrals with regard to community agencies serving the needs of women, libraries of books and other material on issues of concern to women, and forums for discussion and training. (b) and (c) Y.W.C.A. Women's Resource Centre, $8,000; The Women's Information Centre, $15,000.

2. The Department of National Health and Welfare, through its Welfare Demonstration Grants Directorate, is presently funding two women's centre projects which offer special counselling and shelter services to women undergoing changing life circumstances as a result of divorce, separation, widowhood, etc. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is also involved in giving grants to women's centres through LIP and OFY programmes.

APPLICATIONS FILED IN ONTARIO FOR INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LOANS

Question No. 1,209—Mr. Wise:

1. How many applications were filed by businessmen in the Province of Ontario for Industrial Development Bank loans for each year from 1970 to 1973 inclusive and, of these, how many were approved?

2. What was the total amount of money loaned to these businessmen for each year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The IDB provides comprehensive statistical information in its annual report but it does not provide nor does it publish the number of loan applications by province. As published in the IDB's annual report the number and total amount of loans authorized from 1970 to 1974 inclusive, in Ontario, are recorded below:

	Number	Amount ($000)
1970	978	46,490
1971	1,216	49,723
1972	1,568	65,124
1973	1,789	75,336
1974	2,391	110,850

CANADIAN POTASH

Question No. 1,268—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Has Canadian potash been included in any foreign aid programme and, if so, in the year 1974 how much was distributed under foreign aid and to what countries?

2. Is the government giving consideration to the inclusion of Canadian potash in such programmes in the future and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. Canadian potash has been included in CIDA programmes in the past. In the fiscal year 1974/75, a total of 280,400 metric tons was shipped to the following countries: India (240,000 metric tons); Indonesia (28,000 metric tons); Bangladesh (6,400 metric tons); Sri Lanka (5,000 metric tons) and Guyana (1,000 metric tons).

2. Yes. Canadian potash is being considered for future programmes. The actual tonnage shipped will depend on the supply situation which remains tight to a significant extent. It will also reflect the current priority of the recipient.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,305—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of Finance on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

[Mr. Andras.]

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) 561; (b) 591.

2.	January 1, 1974	January 1, 1975
(a)	270	226
(b)	167	226
(c)	100	83
(d)	24	56

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INCOME TAX RETURNS

Question No. 1,333—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What specific section of the Income Tax Act assures the taxpayer that his return is confidential to the officials of the Department of National Revenue?

2. What departments have access to individual or corporation income tax returns and, in each case, what is the method by which officials of departments other than the Department of National Revenue can have access to individual income tax returns?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Section 241 of the Income Tax Act states no official or authorized person shall communicate to any individual outside Revenue Canada, Taxation, any information obtained for the purpose of this act. However, an official or authorized person may, under prescribed conditions (as defined in Regulation 3000), communicate or allow to be communicated information obtained under this act, or allow inspection of or access to any written statement furnished under this act to the government of any province in respect of which information and written statements obtained by the government of the province, for the purpose of a law of the province that imposes a tax similar to the tax imposed under this act, is communicated or furnished on a reciprocal basis to the minister.

2. Statistics Canada, under the authority of the Statistics Act, has access to individual or corporate tax returns or computer files containing information extracted from these returns for the purpose of compiling statistics. Health and Welfare Canada receives information for the purpose of the administration of the Canada Pension Plan. Unemployment Insurance Canada is provided information due to our involvement in the collection of unemployment insurance premiums. In line with the legislative requirements of our department and other federal agencies, Revenue Canada, Taxation provides to other federal departments specific information obtained from tax returns. The agencies and activities or information involved are as follows: Supply and Services Canada, refund cheque processing; Public Archives, microfilming and storage; Finance Canada, public utilities; Treasury Board, uncollectable debts; Energy, Mines and Resources, verification of mine exemption; Industry, Trade and Commerce, scientific research.

FREIGHT RAIL CARS FOR SHIPMENT OF ATLANTIC PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,464—Mr. Howie:

Are there any plans to ensure an adequate reserve of freight rail cars for the shipment of Atlantic products?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): At present there are no reported rail car shortages for shipment of Atlantic products. The railways are reviewing their car needs continuously and order cars as required. The freight rail car supply and shipper service is now being monitored continuously by the Ministry of Transport in conjuction with the railways and the shipper groups.

HOME BANKS

Question No. 1,477—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government considering instituting a plan of "Home Banks" whereby senior citizens who own their own homes can sell them to the government at market price and retain the right to rent them for as long as desired?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The government is not considering the institution of a plan of "Home Banks".

*CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—LENGTH OF SERVICE OF HON. J. W. PICKERSGILL AS PRESIDENT

Question No. 1,528—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. For what period of time was the Honourable J. W. Pickersgill, P.C., President of the Canadian Transport Commission?

2. What salary per annum, year by year from the time of his appointment to his retirement, did he receive?

3. What is the amount of pension or retirement allowance that he is receiving monthly in consequence of his service with the Board?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Transport Commission and the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. Mr. Pickersgill was President of the Canadian Transport Commission from September 19, 1967, until his voluntary retirement August 31, 1972.

2. On appointment and up to December 31, 1969, Mr. Pickersgill received a salary of $40,000 per annum. His salary thereafter fell within the range of DM-3, which, for the year 1970 was $39,000-$42,000, for the year 1971 was $42,000-$46,000, and for the year 1972 was $45,000-$50,000.

3. It is not the policy of the government to disclose the pensionable income on an individual basis. The government understands that Mr. Pickersgill has written to the Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker providing him with all the details requested.

COST OF PHOTOGRAPHIC SERVICES DURING QUEEN'S LAST VISIT TO CANADA

Question No. 1,533—Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve):

How much did the government pay for photographic services during the Queen's last visit in Canada?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): In connection with the last visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Canada in 1973, the government paid $500 in fees for photographic services and $618.96 for travel expenses.

1. How many persons were excluded in 1973 and 1974 under Unemployment Insurance Regulation No. 145-9?

2. What province was most affected by this regulation?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. 1973, 92,871; 1974, 93,133.

2. 1973, Quebec; 1974, Ontario.

CIDA SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,565—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. On what date did CIDA institute the scholarship programme for students anxious to pursue their studies in the area of international development?

2. (a) How much was allocated to this programme each year (b) was it all awarded and, if not, how much remained each year?

3. How many Canadian students were awarded scholarships under this programme?

4. On a year by year basis, from what universities were these students drawn?

5. Is it one of the requirements that the study be carried out in Canada and, if so, at what universities?

6. Have any non-Canadians benefitted under this programme?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The CIDA scholarship program for Canadians was established on March 1, 1972 under the authority of T.B. 710122. A maximum of 25 scholarships can be operational at any given time, and not more than 15 new scholarships can be awarded each year. The first eight scholarships were awarded effective August 10, 1972.

2. (a) and (b)

Fiscal Year	Allocation	Disbursement	Unspent Balance
1972/73	$ 75,000	$ 37,221.87	$37,778.13
1973/74	125,000	95,779.83	20,220.17
1974/75	200,000	190,000.00 (est.)	10,000.00

3. The number of Canadian students who were awarded scholarships under this programme is as follows: 1972: 8; 1973: 11; 1974: 14.

4. Year	Institution	Number
1972	University of Toronto	1
	Queens' University	1
	University of Ottawa	1
	Carleton University	1
	not attending university	4

Order Paper Questions

4. Year	Institution	Number
1973	University of Ottawa	1
	University of Montreal	1
	not attending university	9
1974	Carleton University	1
	Laval University	2
	University of Manitoba	1
	not attending university	10

The number of students who were attending academic institutions is low due to the fact that the scholarship program is not necessarily directed at people who are attending university.

5. Studies and/or research are normally undertaken in Canada or in developing countries. Studies in another developed country may be undertaken when the required program is not available in Canada. The choice of institution rests with the applicant.

6. The program is limited to Canadian citizens.

CMHC

Question No. 1,597—Mr. Epp:

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE—ACTION AGAINST THOSE STRIKING ILLEGALLY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Now that the talks with the GLT workers of the Public Service Alliance have broken up, what are the government's plans to end the dispute? What is the minister waiting for? That with patience the strike will settle itself?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have a great deal of patience, and those workers have the right to strike. The right was granted to them by the Parliament of Canada in 1967, and we have every intention of respecting it.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister who told us on several occasions in the last week about his determination to see that those who were responsible for carrying out services designated as essential, did so. In view of the fact that services designated as essential to the safety and security of the public are not being provided, what does the minister propose to do?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What would you do?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing to do what the law authorizes me to do. We are gathering evidence against everyone who acts illegally. We are asking permission from the Finkelman Board to prosecute them and we will prosecute in court for every illegal strike as is provided under the law. We do not have any intention of withdrawing any of the cases.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKES INVOLVING MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, which I put to him in view of the obvious inadequacy of the responsible minister under the machinery available to him to assure that essential services will be provided, and in view of the tie-up of shipments of western grain as a result of two disputes involving the GLT and the grain handlers. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government will review both of these disputes in depth and advise the House tomorrow what his plans are, or must we wait until the return of the Prime Minister before the government undertakes its responsibility?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just one word in connection with the first comment made by the Leader of the Opposition who spoke about essential services as if it were a much broader term than the act itself provides. It is services that are essential to public safety and security.

Mr. Stanfield: I said that.

Mr. Sharp: They were not the words that he used on this occasion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We cannot help it if you are asleep.

Mr. Sharp: On the general question of the strike and the negotiations that are now going on, the government has these under very careful review. We recognize what a serious problem is being created, particularly in the movement of grain, and this we are reviewing almost hourly.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—INQUIRY WHETHER ACTION TO SETTLE AWAITS RETURN OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of all the uncertainty, am I to take it that no action will be taken to end the public service strike by the government of Canada until the Prime Minister returns, even though our grain markets and other markets are suffering and deteriorating every day?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, all awaiting the return of the Prime Minister after a most successful tour in Europe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. member that the government will not wait for the Prime Minister's return in order to take any action that is necessary under the circumstances. The situation is quite clear. My colleague the President of the Treasury Board has been negotiating in good faith with the strikers. We are hoping that this will work. If it does not we will, of course, have to take other measures.

Mr. Woolliams: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that many members on all sides of the House will congratulate the Prime Minister on his skiing trip.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I can wait if hon. members can; I have lots of time. I ask the Acting Prime Minister, will the government take some action to end the strike before the Prime Minister returns from Europe, irrespective of what he is doing there?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I had taken the hon. gentleman's comments seriously until he made that most unfortunate remark. I think it is an example of the standard of taste of the hon. member; I regret to have to say that. When the Prime Minister is abroad engaged in serious public business, surely we should all regard with great favour the fact that the Prime Minister is taking his responsibilities with respect to Europe seriously, and is over there working on our behalf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: It was the sort of cheap crack that I really thought was below the standard of my hon. friend. If it is necessary, and considered desirable for this parliament to take action, then we will take action whether or not the Prime Minister has returned. If my hon. friend the President of Treasury Board can find an opportunity to complete these negotiations, then he will be only too happy to do so.

[Mr. Sharp.]

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT MAKE SERIOUS OFFER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question on this same subject to the President of Treasury Board. In view of repeated assertions on the part of the government that it supports the principle of collective bargaining and the right to strike for public servants, and in view of the fact that the right to strike carries with it the obligation at some point on both sides to try to reach an agreement, may I ask the President of Treasury Board when the government is going to make a serious offer designed to bring this strike to a conclusion?

• (1430)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have said many times that the House of Commons is not the place to negotiate. I can repeat what I have already said. Our final offer was much lower than the majority conciliation board report. Eventually, in order to arrive at a settlement, we concluded it would be good for the government to accept the report of the president of the conciliation board. If the union had acted in the same manner in that conflict, there would have been no strike at all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the assertion by the President of Treasury Board that he does not believe in negotiating on the floor of the House of Commons while at the same time he negotiates by radio, television and speeches outside the House, may I ask whether he realizes the strike has gone on for three weeks and that the time comes when, regardless of what offers have been made and rejected in the past, a serious offer should be made that would be fair to all concerned.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it was exactly for that reason we went back to the negotiating table last Friday. We made new offers over the weekend. As far as communications with the press are concerned, I have not talked to any members of the press since last Wednesday. However, I have to reply to questions in the House of Commons and I am doing my best to give answers. I would like to say to the House that we are willing to sit down with the members of the union to try to conclude the strike as soon as possible. At the same time, I do not think I have to abdicate my responsibility because it is not my money, but the taxpayers' money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a final supplementary, may I put this question to the minister. How can he say the government went back to the bargaining table when all it did was ask the employees to accept the offer they had already turned down.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think someone has spoken to the press. I have not spoken to them at all. I listened to the news over the weekend. At one point the press reported we were making progress. I was not the one who said that. We made offers and counter-offers, but unfortunately we could not come to terms. I hope we will soon come to terms.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSEQUENCES TO PUBLIC

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Does the government accept as a matter of principle that the public shall continue to suffer losses, businessmen will suffer serious slowdowns in cash flow, pensioners will have their cheques delayed and the general public, which is defenseless, should just stand idly by and suffer the consequences of this particular strike?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO IMPROVE TRAIN SERVICE TO NORTHWEST QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Considering the intolerable delays in the extremely slow delivery of parcels and freight by railway from Montreal to Val-d'Or and northwest Quebec, can the minister tell the House whether he will look into the matter and take the necessary steps to improve this situation which is most disastrous for the people of northwest Quebec?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, the trains serving northwest Quebec have not slowed down. I shall inquire from my colleague, the Postmaster General, to see whether this complaint is really founded.

ALLEGED DELAY IN COMMENCING INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Solicitor General. Is the minister now prepared to explain to the House the delay between the investigation into dredging irregularities in Hamilton and the allegations of serious irregularities in the contract of Quebec City or Île d'Orléans? Second, will the minister explain why it was necessary for the RCMP to report to the Minister of Transport and not the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked two questions. On the first question, there was no delay in the investigation with respect to the Île d'Orléans dredging contract. Certain evidence came to light during the Hamilton harbour investigation with respect to the Île d'Orléans case. As soon as that evidence came to light, the RCMP went to the Department of Transport and asked for certain files and documents with respect to the Île d'Orléans case. Those files and documents were given and the information was relayed to the Minister of Transport. He agreed that full co-operation should be given.

It was not necessary for the RCMP to go to the Minister of Transport or the Department of Transport to obtain approval to proceed with the investigation. However, they required certain documents. It was regular procedure to advise the department that the investigation was proceeding with respect to Île d'Orléans. They could proceed without any authorization, but they needed documents and so on. Therefore, they went to the Department of Transport to obtain these. Full co-operation was given. I think that answers both questions. If not, I will expect a supplementary.

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—WHEN AND BY WHOM DECISION TAKEN TO EXTEND INVESTIGATION INTO QUEBEC

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the minister's reply today is not quite consistent with the reply he gave to the same question last week whereby he stated quite clearly that the Minister of Transport gave permission to go full speed ahead on the investigation into Quebec. When was the decision taken to extend the investigation beyond the contracts in Hamilton and Quebec and by whom was this decision taken?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the RCMP found evidence in the Hamilton Harbour commission that there might be wrongdoing in the Quebec City area, they took the decision to continue the investigation. However, they needed documentation of other evidence from the Department of Transport. They went to the Department of Transport to obtain it. I never at any time said that permission was granted by the Minister of Transport. I said the information with respect to the Île d'Orléans contract was relayed to the Minister of Transport and he said go full speed ahead. He in fact said full co-operation should be given. However, the decision to proceed in Quebec was taken by the RCMP.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not replied to my question as to when the decision was taken to carry the investigation beyond the contracts in Hamilton and Quebec City. Perhaps the minister can now tell us if criminal charges are pending or are about to be laid in consequence of any investigations into dredging irregularities which have taken place apart from charges already laid in connection with the Hamilton incident.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the date in my memory right now. Since the hon. member wants me to be specific, I will get the exact date and give it to him. I have recently been told that the investigation is still continuing into the Quebec area dredging contracts and that the police are not yet ready to lay charges, but they expect to be shortly.

Oral Questions

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—REASON FOR FAILURE TO ACT ON REQUEST BY CITY OF HAMILTON IN 1972 FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Keeping in mind that the minister indicated the city of Hamilton had the local police as well as the OPP involved with the investigators in connection with the Hamilton harbour, which indicates that something was going on, and keeping in mind that the city of Hamilton asked this government by way of a resolution on October 31, 1972, to conduct a full-scale open inquiry, can the minister now advise why that request by the city of Hamilton was refused at that time, particularly when we note that an investigation had been asked for subsequently, sometime around January 8, January 12, January 26, leading up to February 22, 1973. Why was the request by the city of Hamilton not recognized at that time, because it seems they knew what was going on and were seeking assistance.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is true that in September, 1972 some person or persons from the Hamilton city council came to the RCMP detachment in Hamilton with certain allegations of wrongdoing with respect to the Hamilton harbour. On examination of those allegations by the local detachment, the local detachment felt these were matters which gave rise to accusations under the Criminal Code and in the ordinary course such investigations should be undertaken either by the Hamilton City Police or by the Ontario Provincial Police. For that reason, the officials went to the OPP and the Hamilton City Police but the latter felt they did not have the resources necessary to carry on that kind of investigation—this is what I am told. So, the Hamilton officials went back to the RCMP, and the RCMP said that since this was a case which was usually dealt with by another police force they would refer the matter to higher officials. This they did, and on balance the RCMP decided that they would investigate after consulting with the Ministry of Transport, even though it was a case which would normally be dealt with under the authority of a provincial government. They did decide to investigate in any case, because the others were not ready to do so.

● (1440)

Mr. Alexander: It seems to me there was a lot of action in the City of Hamilton in and around September, 1972. I want to know why it took the government so long to involve the RCMP. We find out, now, that they were not engaged in a full investigation until February of 1973.

Mr. Allmand: The government did not interfere. It was not even aware of what was going on in the Hamilton detachment at that time. It was the Hamilton detachment of the RCMP itself which came to the decision that the matter was not within its jurisdiction at that stage. That was the judgment based on the facts as presented to the detachment. The matter only reached the level of officials in Ottawa, and the RCMP in Ottawa, at a later date. At that time, as the hon. member knows, an election was in progress, or had just been completed, ministers had been changed, and so on. But as soon as possible, after the matter had been brought to the attention of Ottawa, a letter was sent to me by the Minister of Transport and the investigation was under way.

CANADIAN FORCES BASE, HALIFAX—ALLEGED VIOLATION OF RIGHTS OF PICKETERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary to an earlier question, Mr. Speaker. Might I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him whether or not he is satisfied, following investigations he may have caused to be conducted over the weekend, that the civil rights of picketers, legally on strike and legally picketing at the Canadian Forces Base, Halifax, were not violated? I have in mind searches conducted on their persons while they were on city streets, away from the Armed Forces Base.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied there has been no violation of civil rights. Reports today are that the picket lines are orderly.

Mr. Forrestall: Can the minister advise the House whether searches of private picketers, searches of their persons, did in fact take place away from base property and, if so, under what authority this procedure was followed?

Mr. Richardson: I cannot confirm that, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Has the minister written a letter or letters to Liberal Members of Parliament or Liberal Party members asking for the name or names of lawyers in the respective constituencies who support the Liberal party with a view to awarding CMHC mortgage business to these party supporters who belong to the legal profession?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): In no such terms at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: My supplementary question is this: has the minister sent similar letters to Conservative, Social Credit and NDP members of the House or their supporters?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer!

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION MR. BAINS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA MIGHT QUALIFY FOR DEPORTATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since Communist Party Chairman, Hardial Bains, has advocated the forceful overthrow of the Canadian government and is now organizing a vigilante group in British Columbia would the minister agree that Mr. Bains qualifies for deportation under section five of the Immigration Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will know that one of the restrictions during the question period is that a minister ought not to be asked to give a legal opinion.

FINANCE

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF EQUIVALENT OF FIVE PER CENT INCOME TAX CUT TO HOUSING BUDGET

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Finance. It arises from a CMHC report that housing starts in the last three months are down by 50 per cent compared with the same period a year ago, constituting the worst winter for house building in eight years. In view of this situation, would the minister consider transferring the equivalent of the five per cent tax cut on personal income to the housing budget, having regard to the emergency in the construction industry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I appreciate the thrust of the hon. member's question, but the motion her party put forward in connection with that five per cent tax reduction was intended not to stimulate the economy further but to control government expenditures. If the hon. member could tell me how to reconcile those two directions I would be happy to oblige her.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): What we were asking for was a transfer of moneys the government had already allocated. The fact is that total government spending has increased by 28 per cent while the capital budget for housing has been increased by only 12 per cent, which is less than the annual inflation rate, which indicates the low priority the government places on housing needs. If the minister is unwilling to increase the housing estimates, would he tell us what steps he intends to take to stimulate housing construction so as to combat the current recession, while at the same time providing an essential commodity.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): One of the government's priorities is to give sufficient leverage to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to enable him to achieve a rate of housing starts equivalent to 210,000 a year.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I ask him whether, in the light of the fact that government expenditure has risen by 28 per cent while the housing budget is up by only 12 per cent, what steps he proposes to take to urge his colleagues to increase the housing budget so that housing starts may be sufficient to meet the vital need of the people?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The hon. lady forgets that non-budgetary expenditures are up by 66 per cent, affording great assistance to Canadians in lower earning brackets; also, there is in effect a program for reducing interest rates in cases where assistance is needed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STUDY OF IMPACT OF PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION ON NATIVE PEOPLE—AVAILABILITY TO BERGER COMMISSION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the Berger Commission. Judge Berger has ruled that matters of gas processing and feeder lines and their impact on native people are within his jurisdiction. Would the minister advise the House whether his department is continuing to carry out an in-House study on this subject, a study which to some extent duplicates the Berger inquiry?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It is our intention to carry out that study and to make available to Mr. Justice Berger this information and the results of the hearings in all the communities.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the minister tell us when he expects that study to be completed and turned over to the Berger inquiry?

Mr. Buchanan: If things move along as they should, I would hope it would be toward the end of his hearings in the latter part of this year.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES TO INCREASE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. It is addressed to the Minister of Finance. I think it is generally accepted that one of the most important contributing factors to the slowing down of house construction has been high mortgage interest rates. Is the minister planning any action to reduce mortgage rates in general as they affect housing construction?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mortgage interest rates have declined over the last month or so by one, to one and a half per cent, to two points, and in certain cases housing mortgage rates are, in effect, subsidized under the Assisted Home Ownership Program operated by my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST HARI CHARAN SINGH—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he is aware of the case of Hari Charan Singh, a former policeman in Fiji, who last week was ordered deported after five years respectable residence in Vancouver? Will the minister investigate the circumstances surrounding the lifting of landed immigrant status from the father of a Canadian citizen, with a view to allowing this family to stay together and continue their new life in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this case has just been brought to my attention and I have requested the full preparation of the file so I can review it. Preliminary indications are that Mr. Singh entered Canada in January, 1970, on a visit and applied to remain permanently but failed to meet the selection criteria, so was subsequently ordered deported. He appealed that order to the Immigration Appeal Board and on August 20, 1973, the board ordered that he be granted landed status and the department was under the obligation then to proceed with landing. In that process, certain evidence was produced and placed before the department requiring referral of the case back to the Immigration Appeal Board. A subsequent rehearing resulted in the order for deportation. This is perhaps unfortunate in many ways, but it is the process of law. I am in the process of looking at the case to see what discretion I may or may not have. Certainly, the proper procedures under the law, have been followed, although admittedly it is an unfortunate case.

BILINGUALISM

REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE IN "MACLEAN'S" MAGAZINE

Mr. Allan B. James Richardson in fact believes that bilingualism is leading us to wrack and ruin"?

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, and I have had many conversations with my colleague, he supports government policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Does he deny the direct quotation which is attributed to him in the article on the subject of bilingualism which is as follows:

> You don't know how frustrating it is that I can't put my views on the record. It's really more important to me than the west.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I confirm what the Acting Prime Minister has said on the question of bilingualism. As long as I am a member of this government I support government policy.

An hon. Member: And with such willingness, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

BETTING AT RACE TRACKS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the intention of government policy to go into the betting business at race tracks under the jurisdiction of the federal government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take those representations under consideration.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is not a representation, it is a question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in following up my preliminary question, which was, whether or not it was government policy, to which he answered that representations have been made, under which department will this nefarious type of activity be placed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the purport of my previous answer was that this was the first time I had heard the suggestion and I thought it was coming from the hon. gentleman.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF ALTERNATIVES TO CONFRONTATION AS METHOD OF SETTLING

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to come back to the earlier series of questions on the problems we are having in the public service, addressing my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is it government policy to stay with the bilateral confrontation method in settling these disputes rather than explore other methods which have been proposed, such as a public interest disputes commission, or perhaps the final offer suggestion, both of which have been put forward?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these are the kind of general questions that are under discussion in the special committee which is considering the Finkelman Report. I hope that hon. members, such as the hon. member who posed the question, will take the opportunity of making their views known. These are serious questions. At the present time, however, this is not the law and we have to negotiate under the terms of collective bargaining.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, is the Acting Prime Minister suggesting that the government feels bound to avoid any other means or any other forum in trying to settle this matter in which the public interest is deeply involved?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, and that is the reason we supported the establishment of the standing committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The special committee.

Mr. Sharp: The special committee, I am sorry, which is studying the Finkelman Report. This is an opportunity to review in depth all those arrangements, and I hope there will be very active participation with many suggestions from members on the other side of the House.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I misunderstood or did not hear the answer the Acting Prime Minister gave to my question. I asked whether it was federal government policy to put the federal government into the betting business at horse racing tracks, and I thought his answer was that the government had received representations. I am informed by my seatmate that in his answer he actually thanked me for my representations. The point I want to make clear right now is that the Acting Prime Minister did not answer my question which was, is it federal government policy to put the federal government into horse racing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I recall correctly, the last answer of the President of the Privy Council was that this was the first time he had heard about it, and he took it as a representation by the hon. member who put the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF OBSERVER STATUS AT GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Terrorist guerrillas captured after the raid on a hotel in Tel Aviv have said they were told to blame Egypt for the attack, and Al Fatah has claimed credit, if that is the right word, for it. In light of the fact that there appears to be a deliberate attempt to sabotage settlement negotiations in the Middle East, what has the government to say as to what the effect will be of Canada's recognition of the PLO as an unofficial party to or as an observer at the Geneva negotiations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I issued a statement on behalf of the government of Canada expressing our condemnation of these acts of terrorism, or this particular outrage which cost the lives of innocent people. We have previously condemned these acts of terrorism, but this particular one seemed more outrageous than the others. In respect of the question my hon. friend has asked about the observer status of the PLO, you may remember that when the resolution requesting observer status for the PLO was put at the United Nations the government of Canada voted against that particular resolution which would have accorded the PLO observer status at the United Nations. In regard to the Geneva conference, to which my hon. friend has referred, that seems to be somewhat far in the future, and at the moment I am not aware of what the ingredients might be of the resumed Geneva conference.

● (1500)

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the PLO appears to have been a party to sabotage, which affects all peace settlements between Egypt and Israel and between other countries in the Middle East and Israel, will the minister on behalf of the government and on behalf of Canada oppose any attempt to draw that particular element into the negotiations.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I, along with the hon. member, deplore the effect that this particular act of terrorism might have on the negotiations that are now being conducted by Dr. Kissinger whose peace-making efforts in the Middle East we support. In respect of the second part of the question, I believe this is hypothetical at the moment, but when the situation arises the government will make its position clear.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we all hope that the interruptions are not a long duration and will be resolved very soon. In the meantime, within my responsibility, where there are documents or grants involved, or where income support is involved we will do everything possible by direct action or pick-up to see that the process is not unduly delayed.

URBAN TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—DEFINITION OF WORDS "COMMUTER SYSTEM"

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which I asked him on Friday, and of which I sent notice a second time. With regard to the urban transportation assistance program, what steps is the minister taking to ensure that the words "commuter system" will be defined to include municipal transit systems, so that, for example, the Northeast Rapid Transit line in the city of Edmonton will qualify for federal assistance in the amount of 100 per cent in respect of the cost of vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of stations and platforms?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member used the term conflict. There is never conflict between the officials of the Ministry of Transport and my ministry. There has been the greatest co-operation. Sometimes there is a disagreement, but we always reach an understanding. As my hon. friend said we will be bringing in a document in this regard in the near future.

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—POSSIBILITY OF REPRESENTATIVE OF CANADA ATTENDING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He has stated that there will be an important meeting between the oil-producing and oil-consuming countries which will open in Paris on April 7. As I understand it, the talks will cover not only future oil pricing policies but also trade in key raw materials in which Canada is vitally interested. Since this really will be a face-off between the industrial world, the oil-producing countries and the poorer developing countries is the minister planning to attend this conference to discuss not only oil problems but also the stabilizing of world trade in raw materials which is a topic of major concern to our country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that my hon.

friend is referring to the preparatory conference which is to be the prelude to a major conference of oil producers and oil consumers. Canada is not one of the invitees to the preparatory conference. It has expressed interest in attending. I have expressed the interest of Canada in attending the preparatory conference, but because there was an effort to keep the preliminary list down to the smallest number that wish was not acceded to. But we do expect to be in attendance at the full conference to which this preparatory conference is but the prelude. The preparatory conference will determine, among other things, the agenda and it may be possible that the subject of raw materials might be on the agenda of the main conference.

Considering that the CNR, in New Brunswick and in certain parts of the Atlantic region, keeps reducing or discontinuing services which people look upon as essential and which are partially subsidized by the federal government, would the minister ask his "hawks" to consider this question immediately with a view to restoring those services as soon as possible? I am referring specifically to night trucking services between Moncton and Edmunston, the two outermost localities of the province and all the intermediate points.

In view of the disturbing number of children who are suffering from poverty, and in view of the fact that many schools across the country are indicating concern to the provinces about the fact that children are unable to participate in their studies because of a lack of nutritious food, would the minister treat this matter as an emergency and consult with the provinces in order to come forward with some sort of a program so that the children may obtain the nutrition they require.

POSSIBLE ACCORD OF MINISTER OF FINANCE WITH VIEWS OF LEADER OF OPPOSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance in view of the depressing statistics we have been receiving in recent weeks about the growth of the economy and the unemployment figures, which I think are to come out tomorrow and which the minister probably has now. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of the tremendous respect he has paid during the past week or two to the opinions I have expressed in the past with regard to the economic policy, he feels he needs my permission to engage in any policy now to stimulate the economy. If he could assure me that he needs my permission or advice, I would be very pleased to let him have it.

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In view of the parliamentary system under which we operate, I never felt that I needed the hon. gentleman's permission, but I always appreciate his support.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the government House leader whether he is now in a position to state what government business will be proceeded with tomorrow and the next day.

Mr. Sharp: Tomorrow we will resume debate on the second reading of Bill C-50, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, followed in this order by the report state of Bill C-13 and Bill C-48. Then, if we manage to get past those bills, we will take up Bill C-25, resumption of the debate on second reading on the contaminants bill and, Bill C-19, the report state of the bill on two price wheat. On Wednesday, we will take as the first order of business Bill C-8, the bill to establish Petro Canada.

Mr. Marshall: I have a supplementary question which I should like to put to the President of the Privy Council. Could the minister say, in view of the concern and the promises made over the past two or three weeks, when the Hermann report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Time is passing and the committee is awaiting the report.

Mr. Sharp: I will talk to my colleague immediately and we will put it on the Order Paper.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the answers to two questions on the Order Paper given today which were recently delivered to my desk. I refer to questions No. 1,041 and No. 1,042 which ask for certain details of LIP projects investigated by the RCMP in the past several years. The answers today stated that two projects, applied for by Mr. Guy Poulin in the constituency of Montreal-Bourassa, involved fraud with sums of public money involved, in one case amounting to $193,581 and in the other almost $60,000. The answer stated that charges are being laid by the RCMP.

My question of privilege is this. It seems to me a breach of my privileges and the privileges of all members of the House that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) in giving these answers hides the identity and the names of the persons who recommended the acceptance of these fraudulent projects. He has no authority extended to him by the House to hide such information with the words:

> The Department of Manpower and Immigration regards as confidential the names and content of all representations made to the minister or the department.

On what decision of the House was the withholding of legitimate information undertaken? Can a government department override the will of the House? Surely, it is within my rights and the rights of any hon. member to ask for legitimate information and not to have this information refused by a government trying to protect its political hide.

I raised a similar matter to this a week or so ago. I feel that members of the House, such as myself and others, have the right to have our questions answered honestly and accurately, and not refused in the way they were today, especially when the case involves the defrauding of the public purse to the tune of a quarter of a million dollars. I think we have the right to know who did it, who recommended the projects, and all the details. I think it is shocking that the minister hides behind some pompous phrase and that he has taken it upon himself not to make this information available. I think the House has every right to demand this information, and I think it is within the rules for me to raise it as a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest of regrets I must differ with the last statement of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). The fact of the matter is that under our existing rules there is not even an obligation upon a minister to give any answer at all, and in providing an answer, whatever information he proposes to retain on a confidential basis, or for some other reason, is within his discretion. As the hon. member well knows, the action on his part may be the subject of debate, which it surely is, but under the rules as they are presently drawn, it does not constitute a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO PRESENT CO-ORDINATED TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

> That this House condemns the government's failure to present a co-ordinated transportation policy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe the timing of this motion bears some significance for it was one year almost to this day—on March 7, 1974—that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in a speech to this House said the following, as recorded at page 267 of Hansard:

We do not have what we can call a real policy for the future. If I stay in this post I shall surely ask the authority of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet to try to elaborate this kind of policy so that we know where we are going.

Perhaps I should repeat the last phrase, "so that we know where we are going," because in a nutshell it summarizes the state of affairs in which we find ourselves. Judged on its performance, this government and this minister simply do not know where they are going in developing a national transportation policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister went on to say, as recorded at page 268 of Hansard:

Something we do not have is a real policy and I hope that sooner, rather than later, it will be possible to have such a policy.

The question that one must ask is this: after we have gone through a general election campaign in which the subject of transportation was one of the major issues, after the Liberal Party received a mandate, after the Speech from the Throne, and after a signal of willingness from all parties of the House to co-operate in developing a worthy national objective, where is the government's policy on transportation? We still have nothing that resembles, in the slightest sense, a comprehensive, national transportation policy. In fact, by the minister's own admission on January 23, 1975, as recorded at page 2530 of Hansard, there was then still no over-all policy and the means of transportation had not been integrated.

That is the purpose of the motion I have introduced in the name of my party today. This is our way of registering our protest against this government and against this minister for their inaction and for their disjointed approach to this very important and vital matter. Where are we going, and what has happened? The minister indicated himself on March 7, 1974, that transportation was in a mess. On October 3, 1974, in another speech to the House, he reiterated that statement by saying, in reference to his speech of March 7:

There is not a single sentence in it that needs to be changed.

That was said in October. It is significant that at the time the minister first made his comments about no policy and the fact that transportation was in a mess, he was praised by the news media for his candour, his frankness and his originality. However, as time passed the phrase was reused and it began to wear thin. We found the minister referring to that phrase only on rare occasions when he was in a state of depression or flippancy, as he did on January 22, 1975, as recorded at page 2509 of Hansard—almost a year later. In response to a question posed by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan), he repeated that we have no over-all policy and, further, he agreed that transportation was still a mess, "and more than you think".

● (1520)

This simply means, in the words of the minister, that no progress has been made. The minister can shake his head in the negative: I do not know what interpretation he puts on those phrases. But what is more astonishing is the fact that the minister attempts to blame the Conservatives for the mess, as he did on January 22, 1975, when he said as reported at page 2509 of Hansard:

—while the Conservative Party was in power they did nothing to correct this mess.

That was twelve years ago. I should not have to remind the minister of some of the bold initiatives which were taken during that administration. I think the minister knows very well, and surely he should not have to be reminded, that it was a Liberal government of which he was a member which developed the present National Transportation Act which to this day provides the umbrella of transportation policy in Canada and from which he now, for the sake of expedience, conveniently attempts to dissociate himself.

Mr. Baldwin: It's a leaky umbrella.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, a year ago the minister said that this policy was fundamentally wrong. If it is fundamentally wrong, what does he propose to do about it? He is in command; he is in power; his party is in power. His party certainly had all the answers at election time, but today we see the minister resorting to his old tactics of political gamesmanship and phony rhetoric.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am the first to acknowledge the minister's ability in debate: I commend him for the spirit, the enthusiasm and the vigour with which he pursues topics in debate. But last Friday, once again, he showed his weakness when, desperately on the defensive, he tried to turn the subject around. He tried to distort the issue by blaming the Conservatives and asking them for their policy. This is the kind of slick political gimmickry we do not buy: we find it devious and deceitful.

We have a policy, and if time permits I will enunciate some of the broad objectives in our approach to policy. Surely the minister and his colleagues know our policy very well because some of our proposals found their way into Liberal propaganda and into the Speech from the Throne. If they would move toward implementing some of the proposals we have advocated we would be the first to support them. The fact of the matter is that our policy is not the issue; the issue, on the subject of transportation, is the Liberal government's policy. So far, it can best be summarized as one big, fat question mark.

An hon. Member: Zilch!

Mr. Mazankowski: The issue is the failure of the government to fulfil its promises. This government was elected to lead. It is its responsibility to bring forth a national transportation policy based upon its election platform, based upon the promises advanced to the Canadian people and based upon the mandate it received in the July election. And if it fails to deliver, we can only assume that it deliberately misled the Canadian people, that Canadians were sold a bill of goods; and if that is their only defence, then the minister should stand up and sincerely and courteously say so.

Mr. Stanfield: They should all be in jail.

Mr. Mazankowski: Or, as my leader suggests, they should all be thrown in jail. And that is not all. The minister repeated last Friday another of his well known tactics. Once again he tried, vainly, to distort the issue by suggesting that the debate represented a personal attack upon him and upon his French-speaking colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: Such insinuations are cheap and inflammatory, and they are obviously weak-kneed excuses for his incompetency and ineptness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manzankowski: Quite frankly, my colleagues and I have always thought of ourselves as being Canadian. Notwithstanding different ethnic backgrounds, I think the minister should think the same. Speaking for myself, in the arena of politics and standing up for what I believe in in this chamber and outside, I have never taken any remarks against me as personal or racist, and there is no reason in the world why the minister should not do likewise.

Some hom. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We all know that the minister is charming and delightful; he is disarming and candid. But I say to him in all sincerity that whether he is French, English, German or Polish, he has not proved himself to be competent in his portfolio, and until he proves otherwise my view will remain the same. The Ministry of Transport and the minister himself can best be summarized as being in a state of suspended confusion with regard to Canada's transportation system. One can only sympathize with the very hard working, dedicated people attached to that department who have been starved of leadership and direction and who have been promised government leadership but, instead, have received nothing. I am not alone in reaching that conclusion. A well known and well respected journalist, Mr. W. A. Wilson—I presume the minister would not place him in the same category as Mr. Fisher or Mr. Barkway—in the February 3 issue of the Montreal Star headlines it as "A transport policy run-around, nothing achieved".

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I never attacked Mr. Barkway. On the contrary, I cited him and I said that he was right.

Mr. Mazankowski: That may or may not be a point of privilege, but I simply want to reiterate the fact that there are some journalists who are objective. The Minister of Transport may have his views and opinions on some of them, but I believe the person whom I have just quoted, namely, Mr. Wilson, is indeed an objective, well respected and well known journalist and I think his comments and summary should not go unnoticed.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Let us look for a moment at some of the commitments and promises advanced during the election campaign of 1974. It seems to me that the minister has a short memory, as do some of his colleagues who support him. Their objective seems to be to say anything that will win votes, and hope that the opposition and the people will forget. But we shall not forget the promises that were made; we shall not forget the commitments. We shall remind this minister and this government, at every opportunity, of the commitments and promises they made to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I wish to put a few things on the record which are included in the $2 billion transportation package unveiled back on June 19, 1974. I will quote in some detail because it seems the minister must be reminded of some of the commitments and promises which were made. The June 19 press release of the minister, given at a news conference, reads as follows:

> Transport minister Jean Marchand today announced sweeping changes in the institutional structures which manage Canadian transportation, a radical departure from past transportation philosophy and a comprehensive set of new transportation programs for Canada. "These changes and these programs are going to move Canada toward world leadership in the use and construction of passenger and freight transportation systems. We are reaching for world leadership in quality equipment and systems", Mr. Marchand said.
> Canada is going to be given a new generation of management mechanisms—and a new set of programs—for transportation . . .
>
> The government is going to develop a new relationship with the Canadian Transport Commission, and with the private sector and Crown corporations which provide transportation to Canada, to ensure that the government can review and co-ordinate plans formulated by our transportation industry. The Minister of Transport will have all the authority he requires to put policy into place and make it work, and to ensure key national priorities are not sacrificed to other considerations. It will be the federal government, on behalf of the Canadian people, that will play the leading role in managing transportation policy in Canada.

● (1530)

It goes on to say that a Canadian passenger transportation corporation will be brought into existence, and later it says:

> Federal support will be made available to municipalities for both the design and financing of top quality Canadian designed and built city and suburban transit systems.
>
> Air services to Canada's populated remote areas will be improved. "In effect, we are moving toward abolishing the term 'isolated' from the Canadian vocabulary as far as Canada's populated remote communities are concerned," Mr. Marchand said. "We are going to guarantee first class citizenship to residents of Canada's remote areas through equal quality transportation networks."
>
> A second major priority of these new transportation policies will be the redevelopment and upgrading of Canada's rail and port systems so that Canada can handle the doubling of its exports expected within the next seven to ten years. A central part of this thrust will be a "reserve freight car fleet" . . . a new "national freight car leasing corporation."

This is hilarious. It continues:

> In the west, railway access from the prairies to the west coast and to Thunder Bay is going to be strongly upgraded. This program will involve strengthened rail roadbeds, some double tracking and eventual electrification. The government will be launching a comprehensive program to improve railway access to the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert . . .

The third major priority of these new transportation policies is the removal of regional inequities in freight rates. Mr. Marchand said it has been demonstrated over the past six years that the principle of competition on which Canadian freight rates has been based, that is, competition between different modes of transport supposedly resulting in fair and low rates, has not worked for many areas in Canada. The Liberal government will adopt the principle of consistent and equitable pricing of freight rates rather than the old "what the traffic will bear" principle. "This will be a dramatic change ... a "Transportation Information Act" will be introduced ...

New legislation will make it clear that henceforth the Canadian Transport Commission will be exercising its powers within the guidelines of government policy. The CTC will function less as a "court of record" and apply regulations in a fashion that encourages the positive development of the Canadian transportation system ... "Canadians deserve a transportation system that matches the imagination of the country—and they are going to get one," Mr. Marchand emphasized.

It goes on to deal with urban transportation policies and then continues:

The Liberal government will ensure adequate funding for capital expenditures from both public and private sources to meet the public's minimum capacity and service expectations in transportation.

I could go on and on. But what happened to those lofty proposals? They were lost somewhere between the election and the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne advanced about ten specific commitments, but to this date action has been taken on only one, Bill C-48, the amendments to the Railway Act. The opposition co-operated in the passage of that bill by allowing limited time for debate in the House. It was considered in committee at two short meetings and has been proceeded with. If this were such a priority item, one might ask why it took so long for it to be introduced.

The Speech from the Throne referred to grain handling and the urgency of facilitating grain movement. But no plan of action has been brought forward. We must give the government credit for moving to end the strike which stopped grain shipments last September, but we must also ask why it hesitates to act now. Grain has been tied up on the west coast since February 17. Is it not considered essential to move it because there are two different parties involved, or is it because the government has a policy of selectivity in disputes of this nature?

The situation is urgent and people in the world are starving. In the port of Vancouver, the Liberian tanker which was destined to carry the largest grain cargo ever sent to the hungry and starving people of Bangladesh remains tied up, half loaded. Close to 50 ships are waiting now, and demurrage charges are piling up all the time. In the last year, demurrage charges to farmers in Canada were $17 million. Grain has not moved for three weeks, Mr. Speaker, and sales are being lost. The forward sales arranged last year were made on the basis of price set at the date of delivery. We all know that wheat prices have dropped significantly over the past 60 days. It has been estimated that Canadian producers will lose in the order of $200 million or $300 million because of the delay in delivery.

Canada's economy is being severely impaired. In total, the public interest is being severely undermined. I believe it is time for the government to act. In my view—and this is only my view—it is time the movement of grain in this country were classified as an essential service and the right to strike withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I say this after a great deal of deliberation, Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the grain economy to this country and the importance of our international reputation. I do not believe we can tolerate this situation any longer. Surely when lives and Canada's reputation are affected it is time to put an end to this stupidity and nonsense. We must be the laughing-stock of all nations. Surely we can manage our affairs with much more command, with more order and sensibility. The government must seriously consider ways to stop this horrendous waste now and in the future. For goodness sake, in the name of humanity let us inject some sensibility into the handling of this important matter. This must come, and it can only come through government leadership.

Some things have been done by this Minister of Transport, and I want to give credit where credit is due. There have been a number of studies—the roadbed study, Alberta's equitable pricing technique, Manitoba's destination rate principle—but of all these studies and seminars only one has been tabled, and that was done before the committee. Why all this secrecy? These studies were paid for with public funds and were supposed to be for the benefit of all Canadians. It seems to me that members of this House are entitled to this information, Mr. Speaker. But this is another example of the government's contempt for members of this House. Surely, if we are to consider national transportation and the objectives of a realistic and comprehensive policy, all members should have the benefit of studies that have been carried out to date.

There have been meetings in the west and in the maritimes, technical committees and federal-provincial committees. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board even has his own study group apparently working in isolation from the others. But we have not seen any progress reports, Mr. Speaker. What are they doing? What guidelines do they operate under? We get the odd communiqué, but basically this information is for political consumption. A communiqué issued on February 24 was described by some as a breakthrough, but in reality it was only a regrouping of anomalies and amounted to nothing more than a repeat of a commitment given two years ago.

The best we can say is that the steps taken to date represent a hodge-podge, a patchwork of proposals without any national direction or purpose. The same disjointedness and inconsistency applies when members seek information in the House or in committee. Anyone who wants to review the situation should read the debate that took place on the estimates on October 23, or the minutes of some of the committee hearings. It is no wonder members of the House are frustrated. When we get into major items such as the Crowsnest freight rates, rail line abandonment or policy issues we only get evasive or flippant answers; and, when we speak to different ministers we get different answers.

So far as the Crowsnest freight rates are concerned, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is calling for a complete review. The Minister of Transport has indicated that no officials in his department are reviewing the Crowsnest freight rates, and that certainly there is no intention to modify them. So we have that double standard. Then there is the rail line abandonment issue which must be considered. About 6,000 miles of trackage is due for study and review. We get one answer from the Minister of Transport and another from the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. The question of the rapeseed freight rate case has been the subject of consideration by the CTC since 1970. An interim decision was handed down in 1973. There was an appeal to the cabinet in March of 1974, but still no action has been taken.

The minister asks where is our policy. When we look at the question of air policy, where is their policy, Mr. Speaker? So far as third level air carrier service is concerned, on March 7, 1974, the minister stated, as recorded at page 267 of Hansard, that we would be silly to establish a third carrier air system. Then during the election campaign we were told that there would be a third level air carrier service developed in Canada, engineered, managed and with assistance provided by Air Canada. Last Friday the Minister of Transport as reported at page 3893 of Hansard, said:

We are now formulating a comprehensive system, a third level of regional carriers.

There is inconsistency on the part of the Canadian Transport Commission, the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The CTC is evidently operating in a vacuum with respect to regional and third level carriers. There is no pattern to any of the actions that either the commission or the ministry have taken to date. We have unfulfilled commitments, no planning, no co-ordination—just ad hoc, political gimmickry.

It is, surely, essential that this country be linked by and served with the safest, most efficient and effective transportation system known. It is as important as, if not more important than, issues such as energy, communications, health and welfare, the economy, the constitution or the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. I mention these specific items because they have been the subject of consideration by first ministers' conferences, federal-provincial conferences and national forums. Transportation is by no means a small item. We spend well in excess of $15 billion a year on transportation, more than on food and the federal health budget. Surely we must stop dealing with transportation in little bits and pieces here and there.

Having regard to the importance of transportation to this country, the link it provides in maintaining national unity and the role it plays in achieving social and economic justice, I believe the time has come to convene a national conference on transportation to deal with this national problem in a national way. It should be a conference that will draw together the various provincial and federal governments, the various modes of transportation, all the elements of our transportation system and those who are specialists in the field. I think such a conference should be broad enough to allow input from all interested parties. The federal government would naturally have to define the national goals and objectives—the guidelines, if you wish—and serve as a leadership catalyst.

In this over-all review, with all elements working together, it seems to me that a broad, national consensus may be achieved that would serve as a national instrument for achieving unity and national purpose. I admit it might be difficult to achieve such consensus, but I do believe it is possible even though it is a very complex subject. I believe it can be achieved, I believe it should be achieved, and I recommend this suggestion to the minister.

I should like to continue, Mr. Speaker, but I see that my time has practically elapsed. I will close simply by saying that the subject of transportation is indeed a very serious one. It is something that should not become a game of political gimmickry; it is an issue that is far too serious for such tactics. In my opinion, transportation in this country is at a critical juncture. It requires strong, determined leadership—not phony showmanship or political gamesmanship.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to say that I agree with the motion before the House today. I believe the issue of transportation is very complex and complicated, and is very badly co-ordinated and planned throughout the economy. Transportation is central to the future development of this country. It is essential to the present economy and to almost every walk of life. In fact, if you examine the transportation system in this country you find that the minister was not only right when he said that, essentially, transportation is in a mess, but historically it has served the interests of the CPR and the huge corporations in terms of facilitating their profit motives rather than providing the people of Canada with service. it has perpetrated a hinterland economy to the detriment of areas like the north, the prairies, many parts of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces and to the favour of the golden horseshoe area and the lower mainland of British Columbia, to give two examples.

I should like to give some examples later in my remarks of how our transportation and freight rates systems discriminate against western Canada and the prairies, but I think transportation itself typifies or personifies the very nature of our unplanned economy. We find ourselves often subject to the many whims of international economics, particularly those of the United States. We are suffering, in this country, from unemployment and inflation but many of our problems stem from the fact that we have a transportation system that is inefficient and does not allow certain areas of the country to thrive as they should. These are anomalies that must be removed.

I think the greatest tool to fashion a regional development policy in this country is massive subsidization of freight rates in the maritimes, many parts of Quebec, the north and the prairies. The present freight rates structure discriminates against the processing of raw materials in those areas and favours such processing in the golden horseshoe, particularly the city of Toronto. It is cheaper to ship livestock from Saskatchewan to Toronto than it is to ship the processed product. Therefore, this means we are exporting jobs from Saskatchewan to Toronto.

We in this House must get the government to become serious about transportation and to pour hundreds of millions of dollars into equalizing freight rates and removing these anomalies. Perhaps we should favour areas that are now discriminated against. We must have equality of conditions if the maritimes are to be developed. One of the first steps we must take is to provide potential industries in these areas with equalized freight rates to enable them to ship finished goods from the maritimes, the north or the prairies at basically the same cost as shipping products from one of the larger urban centres.

We should have, as minimum objective in this country, a freight rates structure that is no more expensive for any part of the country than the average rates in the United States. As long as we do not have this, there is no way we will be able to compete with industries in the United States. For years Canada has been an exporter of raw materials and an importer of finished goods. We have been exporting more capital than has come in by way of new investment. We have been exporting jobs because we do not refine and manufacture our raw materials. Before we can attempt to do this in a planned industrial economy, we need a freight rates system that does not discriminate against manufacturing goods. Indeed, we should provide incentives not to discriminate.

For the last two years the government has been saying that transportation is in a mess. When the minister first said that a year or two ago, I was very pleased by his honesty, frankness and candour before the House. But I have now reached the point where I am becoming very frustrated at the lack of action. The minister has had about two years to go through his department, study it, meet with ministers and governments across the country and find out what is wrong with transportation. But nothing has happened. There has been no concrete activity on the part of the government during the last two years.

I want to read into the record some statements made by the government many months ago, statements they are still making in the House today. I go back to the throne speech after the 1972 election when a minority government was elected. In the January 4 speech, the government proposed a western economic opportunities conference. One of the goals was——an improvement in the total transportation system so basic to overcoming the problems of distance.

● (1550)

On March 20, 1973, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said in this House:

I am as amazed as anyone in the House when I come across freight rates that are higher for goods transported to Regina than for those transported to Vancouver or elsewhere. I can understand it in the context of the capitalist system... Anyone who believes in profits and in the private enterprise system knows that any company tries for the highest yield that the market can absorb. And that is the only valid explanation... it is a provocation... the present situation is frequently intolerable.

I agree with the minister. The present system is based on so-called competition, the free enterprise philosophy. We in the prairies have no competition. We cannot ship our cattle by air to the markets in the east. We cannot ship our goods by river, lake or ocean. There is no competition with the railways. That is why it costs more for people on the prairies to have many goods shipped to them from Toronto than it costs people in Vancouver to have goods shipped from that city. We have a market that is growing. Our only alternative is to have a government with the guts to carry on and do the things the Minister of Transport talked about in this House a year or so ago. He does not have the guts to do them. All he does is talk. In the March 21, 1974, issue of the Globe and Mail, the minister is quoted as saying:

We don't know where we are going.

It is obvious the minister does not know. On June 12, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in Edmonton about our outmoded transportation system, that some planning is needed, we cannot rely only on competition, and so on. We still have no concrete action from this government. In the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the thirtieth parliament there was a repetition of what had been said a year and a half earlier. On January 22, 1975, the minister said in this House:

We have no over-all policy... It still is a mess, and more than you think.

As I said at the outset, I was willing to tolerate the minister saying that when he first took over the department. However, he has been Minister of Tranport for over two years, and if it was a mess when he took over two years ago, why has he not done something about it? I know it is a very complex, massive department, but why have we not had the changes the minister talked about when he took over the department? Freight rates are still rising, anomalies are still increasing, discrimination is escalating. I want to put on record some of the anomalies and discriminatory freight rates to which we in the prairies are subjected. The Minister of Tranport and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) will be participating in this debate. They must understand how the sort of freight rates which we have discriminate against various regions.

With regard to canned foodstuffs, to ship 100,000 pounds from southern Ontario to Vancouver costs $2.57 per hundredweight. To ship the same amount of foodstuffs to Saskatoon, which is on the main CNR line, costs $2.75 per hundredweight. It costs almost 20 cents more per hundredweight to ship about half the distance. Why does that anomaly exist? The Minister of Transport and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion both know this. How can we eliminate regional inequality if the freight rate structure, which is the backbone of this country, has these built-in discriminations?

To ship an 80,000 pound lot of packaged foodstuffs from southern Ontario to Vancouver costs $2.43 per hundredweight. To ship the same amount of the same kind of goods to Saskatoon costs $2.93 per hundredweight, 50 cents more. Because of the way freight rates are set up, it might be cheaper to ship from southern Ontario to Vancouver and then reship back to Saskatoon. After two years in office, how can this minister still go on saying, in effect, "The damn thing is still a mess and we cannot do anything about it"? Where is the minister's intestinal fortitude? Why can't he stand up to the CNR, the CPR and others in the transportation field and make them do something about the blatant anomalies that exist in the freight rates system?

I now go to the open tariffs which took effect on March 1, 1975, just a few days ago. They widen, instead of close, the gap in discrimination against Saskatchewan. I wish to deal with the cost of shipping live cattle versus dressed or slaughtered beef. The rates from Saskatoon to either Toronto or Montreal are the same. The old rate for live cattle was $3.24 per hundredweight. As of March 1 it was increased to $4.23 per hundredweight. If the cattle are slaughtered and processed in Saskatchewan, providing jobs for people there, the rate as of March 1 is $5.40 per hundredweight, compared with the old rate of $4.15 per hundredweight. Why does the Minister of Transport tolerate that type of discrepancy?

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion professes to be getting rid of regional discrimination in this country. However, it now costs $1.17 per hundredweight more to ship dressed beef to Toronto. Any company engaged in the business of packing beef will obviously locate in Toronto or Montreal. That is not being anti-Canadian; it is sound economics. Obviously, any such operation would be expanded in central Canada because the freight rate structure is designed for them, not the people in the prairies, those in much of Quebec, in the north or the Atlantic provinces. These anomalies must be cleared up very quickly.

I will give two or three more examples. Iron and steel articles such as bars, rods, plates and studs can be shipped in 80,000-pounds lots from Hamilton to Vancouver for $2.43 per hundredweight under the new freight rate structure. The rate to Saskatoon is $2.84. To ship the same goods on the same line costs 40 cents per hundredweight more to ship to Saskatoon than it does to Vancouver. Why is that not changed? It is for this reason I have no confidence in the government's transportation policies or the handling of its affairs by the Minister of Transport.

Let us now look at more agreed charges. To ship a 75,000-pound lot of chemicals such as calcium carbide from Niagara Falls or Shawinigan to Vancouver costs $2.63 per hundredweight. The rate to Saskatoon is $3.12 per hundredweight. There is a difference of 30 or 40 per cent. I am not against the city of Vancouver. What I am saying is that freight rates should be lower for shorter hauls. Saskatoon and Regina are about two-thirds of the way to Vancouver, yet the freight rate for the same product on the same rail line is higher. That does not make sense: it is blatant discrimination against the prairies.

I could give other examples such as phosphates and sulphates which can be shipped to Vancouver at a lower rate than to Saskatchewan and, indeed, to many parts of Manitoba. The minister understands the situation. He knows the present freight rates structure is controlled by the railway companies, the private corporation. He knows they do not serve the majority of the regions of this country. Why does he not change it? Why does he not tell the CN and CP that there should no longer be anomalies in the freight rates structure? It should be equalized across Canada. If that were done, this country could be developed from coast to coast.

● (1600)

Why do we have to crowd our people into two or three large centres instead of dispersing our population around the country? And you will not be able to do that, no matter how much money DREE pumps into Newfoundland or other areas, if you continue to have a freight rates structure that discriminates against the very areas that DREE puts money into. It just won't work, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't the minister—and I think that philosophically he believes it—nationalize the CPR and have one efficient transportation system in this country? We do not have competing sewers. We do not have competing roads. Why don't we have one railway system?

An hon. Member: Why don't we have one political party?

Mr. Nystrom: I do not think railways are there to make a profit. It should be a service to the people of this country. Why have two competing airlines. Why not have one Air Canada that has all the routes in this country? I think the minister made a comment about this when he spoke the other day. CPR often has the very lucrative routes in this country. Air Canada is serving many areas of the country where you wouldn't have service if it were not for the publicly-owned airline. So I very strongly urge this minister to follow his own gut instincts and nationalize the CPR into one comprehensive transportation system that is efficient, that is run with a tough, efficient manager for and on behalf of all the people of this country.

Pour into that transportation system hundreds of millions of dollars. Subsidize freight rates in areas where they need support. Provide equality of conditions in the maritimes, the north, the prairies and other regions which I have mentioned. Unless you do that, Mr. Speaker, you are not going to develop this country. Unless you do that you will continue to have unemployed, because it is just not worth processing our own goods in our own country. Unless you do that you are not going to have the political sovereignty to make a lot of the economic decisions we must make if we are to plan our country. Unless you do that you can no longer have a national development plan to put more people into areas where they are needed, and slow down growth in areas where growth is occurring too quickly.

I am sure people in Toronto would like to see growth in that city slowed down and rationalized. They would like to see some of their growth and industry go to the north, to the prairies or to the eastern part of this country. But that will not happen as long as we have a government which believes in the centralization of all industry in this country into central Canada, the golden horseshoe, as governments have done ever since confederation.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister, when he replies tonight, will agree to some basic changes in the transportation system, some of the things that I have talked about and some of the things to which the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has referred. I hope he will also look at the grain handling system: we are having many problems there. Also, we have rail line abandonment; about one-third of the rail lines may be abandoned after January 1, 1976. we have a grain handling system that is inefficient mainly because the railways aren't repairing the tracks and maintaining them. They feel they don't make enough money out of handling grain.

We have many many problems in the west, problems that we must solve if we are to preserve the rural community from which some of us come. We must also make it very clear that the Crowsnest pass agreement which was made back in the 1800s must be upheld. The Crowsnest pass agreement is God in the west, and once again I tell the Minister of Transport that if he tampers with it, then he is tampering with something that everyone in western Canada will fight him for all the way down the line. So I hope he reaffirms his intention not to tamper with the Crowsnest pass agreement when he speaks in the House later this evening.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things I could say. However, I realize that my time is up and I want, in closing, to ask the minister to respond very sincerely to many of the points we have raised. When he replies tonight, I ask him not to raise some of the old bogeymen, not to treat it as a personal attack upon his character, but to take it as constructive criticism of his department and the policies of the Government of Canada which most of us in the opposition see as falling short of what they should be. I know that many Liberals in all parts of Canada agree with me in that respect.

If we are to plan this country for the twenty-first century, for those who come after us, we must start with a transportation system that is publicly-owned, efficient, serving all the people, and subsidized in order to serve the whole country equally from coast to coast.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure nothing could more graphically demonstrate the complexities of trying to devise in this country a cohesive transportation policy than the differences in approach taken by the first two speakers. The Conservative Party has put down the motion. The New Democratic Party, announcing that it will support it, then proceeds to demonstrate in the most graphic fashion imaginable that the elements the NDP would put into a national transportation policy would be totally rejected by the Conservative Party.

For example, just a moment ago when the spokesman for the NDP called for the nationalization of Canadian Pacific, I heard murmurs of indignation among Conservative Party members. Yet nationalization is the basic plan of the NDP program.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The motion is an attack on your policy; that is the point.

Mr. Jamieson: I am sure that when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) replies, as he will later in this debate, he will be perfectly able to defend himself. I say this with particular regard to some of the suggestions which have been made as to his intestinal fortitude and the like. I do not intend to deal with the broad spectrum of issues which have been raised; I shall confine my remarks to the aspects which concern regional development.

A number of speakers, including the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), have acknowledged the element of regional development which exists in any transportation policy. It is one which we, too, acknowledge. I hope I shall be able to show the hon. member that some of the proposals which he is advocating would have precisely the opposite effects from those he is seeking and, certainly, from those we on this side of the House are seeking—and here I speak as the minister responsible for the DREE program.

When I first entered the House of Commons I was, within a matter of days, assigned to the standing committee on transportation. Few who were members of the committee at that time are still in the House, though I can see one or two of them on each side of the House. I think they would agree with me that the fundamental issues we are debating today are not greatly different from those of nearly a decade ago. Many go back several decades, and some to the very beginnings of confederation.

It is interesting to note that the opposition, as well as individual critics outside the House, are suggesting that in some way or other it is these fundamental issues which have been creating problems. The implication is that, having existed for so long, they could in some magic way have been resolved between July 8, 1974, and March 10 of this year. Let me emphasize that I am referring to fundamental issues, not to day to day transportation problems which are bound to arise in a country as vast and as complex as Canada. Over the years we have been able to deal reasonably well with these problems, as any objective observer would agree. For example, to my personal knowledge, as one who was minister of transport for four years, transportation authorities from other countries are unanimous in agreeing that the over-all structure of transportation in Canada is one of the best in the world. Nevertheless, the fundamental issues remain, and by and large it is these which give rise to most of the criticism.

During the present debate I hope to put at least a few of these issues into perspective, and I hope hon. members will appreciate that in this context I am using the word "issue" as meaning a question about which there can be legitimate differences of opinion with important and valid interests ranged on opposite sides. I gave a good example of this when I referred to the position taken by the two speakers who preceded me. The real task is to recognize this interest to the maximum extent possible, and in many cases the methods of doing this have evaded governments of all political persuasions—federal, provincial and in some cases municipal. The various modes of transportation have not been able to resolve them and successive royal commissions, inquiries and regulatory agencies have been something less than wholly successful. What are the types of fundamental issues to which I have referred? I am not going to take the time to list all of them, but I will give a few examples without at this time coming down on the side of any particular interest group.

There is the long-standing issue referred to by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, the Crowsnest pass rates, and a couple of larger problems, such as grain movement rationalization which involves both economic and social considerations and which, I am fully aware, is a highly emotional issue, as the hon. member has said, in terms of western Canada. But it also can be said that the Crowsnest pass issue and its related questions have bedevilled the development of rational, so-called developmental policies for perhaps as long as we have been a country, or at least as long as the western provinces have been in Canada.

In the east there is the Maritime Freight Rates Act and related subsidy programs. This is another fundamental issue. The appropriate level of tolls and long-term financing arrangements for the St. Lawrence Seaway is another. Then there is the difficult and continuing problem of determining with more precision what the role of various national carriers and agencies ought to be, how much autonomy they should enjoy and what their relationship should be to the government and to parliament. I propose to come back to some of these questions in a moment.

The same questions apply to Crown corporations and agencies and could be asked of federal-provincial relations as these relate to transportation, a field where there is divided, and sometimes fragmented, jurisdiction. Other fields where there are wide differences of opinion and of interest include ports administration, the type and size of merchant marine Canada ought to have, and shipping policy generally.

These few examples illustrate the complexity that surrounds Canada's transportation system; and I did not mention the air mode with the conflicting objectives of transcontinental or major carriers and the regionals. I could add the issue of the federal role in the operation of ferries, in the building and upgrading of highways and in coastal protection and services of various kinds. This is just a random sample and I am sure there are many important aspects of transportation which I have omitted in this brief review.

The essential point is that there is no unanimity on how these issues should be resolved; there is no unanimity on this basic question. Quite the contrary: anyone charged with formulating transportation policy—and here the Minister of Transport has my total sympathy, as he has the main responsibility in this regard—is inundated by conflicting views. The difficulty is, and this is a very key point I would ask members to note, that it is not simply a matter of separating sound opinion from the unsound; it lies in choosing between proposals that are frequently of equal validity but which are mutually exclusive.

Let me illustrate by dealing with the hardiest perennial of them all, freight rates, to which the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville gave a good deal of his time. Let me say at once that there continue to be anomalies and inequities in the freight rate structure that must be eliminated. Much has been done along these lines in recent years. If time permits, I will give certain examples because I do not think it is fair to blanket this issue and I do not think hon. members would want to be unfair by simply saying nothing has been done. A good deal has been done to eliminate certain anomalies, but even with further improvements we, as Canadians as well as legislators, will have to come to grips with certain basic questions. I suggest this in total sincerity, trying to put this matter into proper perspective.

It is my judgment that in most of the debates we have in this chamber, these questions tend to be ignored, perhaps because it is more immediate and more urgent to deal with some specific matter and perhaps, also, because it is easier to get one's mind around a specific matter than it is to come to grips with certain basic questions, which I shall attempt to do in the interest of generating what I hope will be a worth-while debate. For example, is the principle of compensatory rates valid? This principle is basic to the present National Transportation Act, but judging by the frequent comments of members in all parts of the House there are serious doubts on the issue. It is not enough to be opposed to the principle; it is necessary to decide what should be in its place if, in fact, it is going to be changed.

The record of the last seven or eight years makes it clear that this government has been prepared to make significant modifications to what was proposed and eventually passed into law in the act of 1967. There has not been rigidity on the question of compensatory rates. There have been, for example, periodic freezes applied to certain categories of rates; substantial additional subsidies have been added under the MFRA and related legislation; the movement of various agricultural products, including feed grains, has been assisted at a cost of many millions of dollars; there have been increased subsidies for various types of coastal shipping, and the government has moved in directly to provide specialized rolling stock for the railways.

There are many other ways, also, in which the government has shown itself prepared to depart from the principle of compensatory rates. The argument persists, however, that there should be still more, even though the totality of demands one hears from all sides of the House—incidentally, not always from the opposition—is still on the basis of ad hockery and reflects no coherent plan. I find it difficult, and I hope I will be able to illustrate this as I go along, to rationalize the variety of proposals which come from members opposite, which in many respects, I suggest, if you look at them in isolation and then try to put them together into a package, are contradictory and not what the motion would call a cohesive and generally comprehensive transportation policy.

The reasons are perfectly clear and very understandable. Once a concession has been obtained, no beneficiary wishes to give it up. Therefore, the principle of compensatory rates becomes more and more distorted. Furthermore, there are grounds to question whether such individual measures designed to ease the impact of particular rates actually achieve their objectives. I want to re-emphasize that point if I may, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is important for us, when we are seeking ad hoc solutions which are very costly to the taxpayers of Canada, to ask ourselves whether in fact these individual measures are designed to ease the impact of particular rates and whether they achieve that objective.

Let us look at one example which bears on my responsibility to encourage regional development. When representatives of regions of the country away from the centre—that is most of Canada, in geographic terms; and I am sorry the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is not here because this bears particularly on the remarks he made—complain about freight rates, it is often because such rates result in higher costs for goods which they purchase from central Canada. That is a very important point. Criticism of the rate structure may be entirely valid, but essentially that is the main basis for the complaint—that it costs more in various parts of the country to bring goods from central Canada.

I repeat that these complaints are understandable. If, however, there are substantial forms of assistance for traffic inbound to western Canada, eastern Canada or northern Canada, such assistance—I would ask members who make this point in Atlantic and western Canada to bear this in mind—really constitutes a subsidy to central Canadian manufacturers and shippers. It makes it harder for manufacturers in these areas, that is, the west and the east, to compete and in many cases it runs counter to the outbound subsidy programs the government has in place.

This is the reason I find it difficult, without hearing more detail on the question, to understand why the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville would suggest some equalling out of the freight rates structure all across the country. It seems to me that, clearly, would be counter-productive in terms of regional development initiative and what we are seeking to achieve. For example, all Atlantic provinces benefit from a 30 per cent subsidy on goods shipped out of the area. For certain value added commodities, the subsidy has been increased by my colleague the Minister of Transport—one of the many things he has done. It has been increased in recent years to 50 per cent. This subsidy is paid on truck as well as rail shipments. So 50 per cent of the total cost of moving certain goods out of the Altantic provinces is now subsidized.

Now, if Atlantic province manufacturers and processors, as well as certain primary producers, are to see their central Canada competitors subsidized to ship their goods into the eastern market, then the value of the subsidy, obviously, is reduced accordingly. What I am saying is that you cannot have it both ways in terms of subsidies. You cannot say in the Atlantic provinces or in western Canada that you want a break on the shipment of agricultural products to the centre, fisheries goods to the centre, or manufactured goods from both ends to the centre—that you want those subsidized—and at the same time ask for subsidies on goods moving from the centre to the outer perimeter of the country. It is clear that the same is true, as my friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has said, of tariffs.

I should touch briefly on this matter once again because it is a good example of two worthy examples which can be self-defeating. In the first place we have consumers wanting to get their goods from whatever source at the lowest possible shipping cost, but every such concession can make it more difficult to achieve regional development. One of the most frequent complaints which I receive from western Canada relating to regional development concerns the freight rate on steel shipped from the east. In a broader context, the hon. member raised—as I am sure other members will, and I am sure the chief spokesman for the opposition is concerned about this—the question of so-called short haul rates versus long haul rates.

I agree with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, who has said on many occasions—as I have said in this House, and I am not altogether certain why some of these things should suddenly have new prominence because they are spoken by the present Minister of Transport, but perhaps I was not as effective as he in getting it across—that essentially the short haul-long haul differential is something with which this government has coped for many years and with which its predecessor government coped for many years. I should like to deal with it in steel terms, to start with, and then perhaps elaborate a little further.

On the question of steel, I concede readily that the arguments have merit in many cases, but my department is convinced that one of the major developmental opportunities that exists in western Canada centres on capacity in that region for a major steel producing facility. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I believe that more and more the examinations and discussions we are having with Alberta and Saskatchewan in particular tend to support this fact. Is it good policy? I ask the question, not rhetorically but in the interest of generating a worthwhile discussion on the question. Is it good policy, therefore, if the capability exists for further steel development in western Canada, to make it easier and less expensive for eastern steel manufacturers to penetrate the western market by an artificial lowering of rates, or should we in fact be encouraging, as we are, more steel making and thus a stronger economic base in the west?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the rates were not artificially high you would not have that difficulty.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who seems to have a very pat answer off the top of his head for every question, will have an opportunity to speak in this debate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I asked a question.

Mr. Jamieson: I shall be quite prepared to answer the question if there is time at the end, Mr. Speaker. On the major question of short haul-long haul rates, of course here again in my conversations with other spokesmen, as well as those which I am sure have been held by the Minister of Transport, one discovers that the stance, if one can call it that, of unanimity about it quickly disappears when this particular issue is raised. Will the members from British Columbia, for example, regardless of where they happen to sit in this House, support an idea which in fact deprives British Columbia of its beneficial rates?

There have been many conferences, and I have attended many discussions at which you begin with the premise that no short haul rates shall be higher than long haul rates, and then quickly you see it disintegrate in terms of any kind of consensus as you discover it bears differently upon different regions of western Canada. I have no quarrel at all with the proposition that there must be some kind of levelling out of rates in western Canada and that there must be some kind of concession, but I say that simply putting forward a simplistic kind of suggestion such as that, without examining the ramifications, will lead to prolonged discussions with the provinces before any worth-while conclusion can be reached.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Jamieson: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe as the first speaker on this side I am entitled to 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The minister raises an interesting question concerning his rights. He is quite correct, 30 minutes are allowed to the mover of the motion and the speaker replying. It was the understanding of the Chair that it was the Minister of Transport who later this day would reply. If the Chair is incorrect in that, I would be prepared to hear from the government side on the matter.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I thought the matter had been agreed to by the parties. The Minister of Transport and I discussed it, and I understood it was the first speaker who had 30 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to allow one of them 30 minutes, but not both.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, at the time of your comment I had given two examples of the complexity of a couple of regional development problems of major significance as they relate to transportation. I want to emphasize that neither of these examples is clear-cut. I do not suggest that I, or anyone else, have all the answers, recognizing that even within regions, trade and transportation issues compound the problem. For instance, it would not be sufficient to set up a steel freight rate from central Canada to western Canada and let it go at that. Our inquiries and studies indicate that if we are to have a major steel making capability in western Canada, this will require a very definite shift in the freight rate structure within the regions. This, I acknowledge and agree, is something that needs further examination.

Nevertheless, I suggest my basic point is valid. General freight rate freezes and blanket subsidies tend to work against regional development whatever benefit they may have to consumers. I might add that I have not been able to determine that many of the freight rate subsidy programs do in fact find their way to consumers, and here I speak particularly of the individual consumer. Consumers do not receive any significant benefit from them, so far as I have been able to determine. One has only to look at the recent study of consumer prices in the province of Newfoundland to see that transportation is by no means the main factor affecting consumer prices. Therefore, the concept that you can use transportation or freight rates specifically in order to reduce consumer costs is certainly open to question and should be examined thoroughly. It was determined that the distribution system within the province itself was a much more significant contribution to increased costs for consumers than the long distance transportation charges into the region.

● (1630)

In other words, once commodities get into the region, distribution services really need to be modernized and improved. I would expect this is true to the same extent in Atlantic Canada. This involves a good deal of private enterprise participation, which I do not rule out but which is certainly not the sole responsibility of the government.

Since time is short, I want to say a few brief words about another fundamental issue. I will be brief because of the limitation on time. I wish to speak about the toll system on the St. Lawrence Seaway. Here is another all-party effort, if you are talking about really fundamental issues on which decisions have to be made. It is significant that members of all parties from central and western Canada—it does not matter where these members happen to sit in the House—are strongly against any increase in Seaway tolls. In this, from my experience, they are accurately reflecting the views of their constituents.

At the same time, Atlantic province members—I include myself in this number—rarely, if ever, join in representations to keep tolls down on the St. Lawrence Seaway. In this they, too, are echoing the views of those whom they represent, that the ports of Atlantic Canada suffer unfair competition from low Seaway tolls. Here, once again, we have another example of legitimate regional views being in conflict; and there are no easy answers. The government is being urged to cut costs, to behave in a business-like manner; but if the logical steps were taken—I use the St. Lawrence Seaway simply as an example—in many of the other examples I have given, there would be greater inequities between regions and many national objectives would be thwarted.

In conclusion, I wish to touch briefly on one of the most difficult fundamental issues affecting Canadian transportation. It is the issue of jurisdiction, control and policy-making. A great deal has been made of the federal role in this regard, and of course no one quarrels with the key position that the federal government holds in this whole problem. I have spoken of a transportation system, in the singular. However, in reality we have dozens, even hundreds, of different and often competing components within that system. Not all of these are subject to federal control, and where there is federal responsibility it is exercised in a variety of ways.

I would invite hon. members to examine this structure. It is not this government, or any particular government, but parliament itself which has frequently reaffirmed its belief that Crown corporations must continue to enjoy a high degree of autonomy. I have no quarrel with that view, and certainly many instances have been brought forward in this House where indeed there have been claims that the government has been interfering too much with Crown corporations. There is, however, an inconsistency in the view often taken by members—again, I am not referring to any particular party—that the government should direct CNR or Air Canada, for example, to follow a particular course of action. Having said that, I repeat what I said at the outset, namely, that the role of Crown corporations, especially in the transportation field, is something that generates a great deal of heated debate with many valid arguments on both sides.

Harking back to the first comments that were made this afternoon regarding the nationalization of CPR, any kind of rationalization that would be massive in scope and would change drastically the long-established precedents for the relationship between Crown corporations, the government and parliament would be hotly debated and there would be no unanimity of view in the House on that important subject.

The same can be said of the Canadian Transport Commission. Parliament has given the commission certain wide-ranging powers, and it did so deliberately. I was here at the time as a member of the committee and I am sure that others who were there at the time—I do not want to single anyone out—would be prepared to confirm that it was done deliberately to cut down on the degree of direct government intervention. That was deemed to be a wise course at that particular time. Once again, this may be a highly commendable objective. The government or the responsible minister cannot be faulted for observing the law and allowing the processes set out in the act to be followed. If there is to be a change in the CTC approach and in the responsibility that it has, then parliament itself will have to decide whether it wishes the government to become more directly involved. Indeed, this is a question, I repeat, on which there is no unanimity of opinion and which, I hope hon. members will appreciate, makes the job of any Minister of Transport exceedingly difficult.

There is another important aspect of jurisdiction, and that is the authority of the provinces, particularly in the matter of highway regulations and similar matters. While there are undoubted federal responsibilities in this field, the jurisdiction is shared, at the very least. Incidentally, it is interesting to note the history of federal responsibility in this field. It was on the basis of a 1956 Supreme Court judgment in the long run, and not so much because of any desire on the part of the federal government to be deeply involved in highway management or trucking, that the federal government was brought into the field. Therefore, there is no way to proceed other than through agreement and consensus, which are sometimes difficult to achieve.

The federal government, and particularly my own department, is helping many provinces to upgrade their road systems and to achieve certain national standards. Many millions of federal dollars will be spent on this objective again this year in the east, and also through the efforts of the Minister of Transport in consultation with western provinces to do upgrading on certain key network roads in western Canada. This will be an ongoing expenditure.

It is interesting to note that if one takes the average year since the end of construction of the TransCanada Highway, despite the fact that the primary responsibility is with the provinces the federal government in one way or another has contributed, on average, something like $190 million a year to road building in this country, a significant and important sum in terms of what it has been able to achieve. As we get better standards, in highway terms, across the country, a consensus is more likely to emerge in terms of provinces. But one should not underestimate a good deal of the anxiety that the provinces have about yielding any more than they have to of provincial jurisdiction or authority in this field. In this, frequently they are aided and abetted, for its particular reasons, by the trucking industry.

My objective today was to show in a realistic fashion some of the very real complexities that exist within the Canadian transportation framework. It is these to which the Minister of Transport refers when he discusses, with his usual candour as the hon. member has said, the difficulties involved both in policy-making and in keeping such a huge system operational. The difficulties are not new; they are not the creation of any one government or of any one period. They will not be solved by criticism alone, or by simply pointing out the flaws in the system, which everybody concedes continue to exist even after 100 years. They will not be solved by criticism, although frankly I consider constructive debate to be useful. If there is a debate in which suggestions can be made of specific ways in which transportation can be used to better advantage to aid regional development, then I want to hear those suggestions regardless of the quarter of the House from which they come.

What we must do, and what a great many others outside parliament must do, is to make some choices, because this is not a problem that can be resolved purely by legislation or co-operation between different levels of government; there are enormous private industry factors here which have to be part of the over-all exercise. Incidentally, perhaps a national conference might not be a bad idea, and I am sure the Minister of Transport would accept it as a worth-while suggestion.

It seems to me that if there is a great weakness—and perhaps I should plead guilty to part of that weakness, having been the responsible minister for some time—it is that in transportation, when it comes to the crunch, it is frequently easier and, perhaps one could say frankly, in the national interest to achieve some kind of accommodation that falls short of perfection rather than try abruptly to remove from the various elements in the transportation system some key element to which a particular region or interest group is very strongly dedicated.

So I say that we must make some choices if we are to get the cohesive policy to which reference is made today in the motion of the opposition. None of this will be easy, and on the fundamental issues which I have outlined there will be wide differences: I am sure that the same will be true of others I have not touched on because of time limitations.

● (1640)

If all hon. members go about this task in a reasonable, orderly way which gets to the root of the problem, and if they are prepared to face up to these root problems, whether they live in the east or the west, and examine some of the issues I have outlined, I do not suggest we will find all the answers: that may be too much to expect and, quite frankly, in a rapidly changing field like transportation I have no doubt that it will be difficult to achieve perfection. Nevertheless, we will continue to make what I think we have made over the years, and certainly over the years of this government, namely, progress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, Friday last on March 7, a motion of the Progressive Conservatives questioned the ability of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to organize and develop a sure, efficient, co-ordinated modern transport system on par with the needs of national and regional economies, external trade and social welfare in Canada, in accordance with the undertakings made in the Speech from the Throne. And now today, Mr. Speaker, motion No. 15 introduced by the Progressive Conservative party condemns the government's failure to present a co-ordinated transportation policy.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Transport will have heard enough about transport problems since Friday to retain his attention. However, since I have been sitting in Parliament, I denounced on many occasions this lack of co-ordination in transport generally and more especially in our railway system.

This is not a new problem, Madam Speaker, since it has existed under both governments, which seem to take pleasure in accusing each other and rejecting the blame on each other.

Last Friday, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was telling the Progressive Conservatives: You did not do better than us in the past; you are always criticizing, but make concrete proposals, tell us what is your policy, tell us what to do, and we shall act. This is the behaviour of a government which was so strong, which said that it was strong and capable of the greatest things during the whole election campaign and is now weak and powerless when it is in power. The government is suddenly so devoid of ideas that it must beg the opposition for some answers. In his speech of March 7, 1975, last Friday, as is reported on page 3894 of Hansard, the Minister of Transport, when he realized that his appeal was falling into deaf ears continued his speech by saying, and I quote:

The only answer I get from the opposition is: It takes a long time! But, Mr. Speaker, should I, as Minister of Transport, be quicker about changing the whole transportation system in Canada than the Conservatives about designating a new leader?

This is how the minister clowns to get rid of a serious problem which is of great concern for all Canadians. I sincerely ask you what the replacement of the Progressive Conservative leader has to do with the transport situation. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Transport to be a bit more serious, and I know that he can do so when he is clear-minded in the House. The minister must realize once and for all that the election campaign is over, that we are here to find answers to the problems, and that it is up to the government to propose solutions to the House since generally all the legislation to be voted is introduced by the government.

I am in favour of this motion, and I hope that the government will not consider it simply as an insignificant criticism, but as a pressing appeal from the Canadian people to work concretely to solve the big and thorny problem of transportation across Canada. Be it transportation by water, by air or by land, I am sure we have everything that is needed to provide Canadians with an adequate and well coordinated transportation system.

Last week, we discussed our ridiculous situation with regard to the nonexistent merchant marine in Canada. On Friday, many members referred to our air transportation system, which is far from being adapted to our needs. In my region, at least, we have no congratulations to extend to the present minister and even less to all the other ministers who preceded him.

During the last six election campaigns, Madam Speaker, we received in my riding of Roberval dozens of ministers who gave rise to the highest expectations among the people. The Minister of Finance himself (Mr. Turner) came and promised on his honour of gentleman that if his government were reelected, he would order the complete rebuilding of the Roberval airport. Let us see what we "salvaged" from the visit of that flight of doves?

I ask him again today: where is his honour of gentleman, and why did he come and give false hopes to our people? I ask the present Minister of Transport who, at the time Minister for Regional Economic Expansion, had $500 million to distribute as productively as possible electorally, what has happened to all those beautiful promises for an airport at Dolbeau and Saint-Félicien? At the time he said an airport was needed at almost every centre in my riding to meet the demand. What has he done since? And particularly, what will he do now that he is a full-fledged minister? We are still waiting.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

● (1650)

I cannot miss this wonderful opportunity of speaking once again to the minister about the problems we have been running up against for years with regard to the Canadian National, since it is the only Crown company in our area.

First, let us speak of the freight service. After ten years of requests, has the problem of freight cars been solved? Here is some correspondence, Madam Speaker, that speaks for itself. This letter is dated February 21, 1974; it is addressed to the Minister of Transport. It comes from the Domtar Company. I quote:

The problem of the shortage of railway cars for the transport of newsprint, pulp and shavings seems to be widespread.

A few of the fifty-six pulp and paper industries in the province of Quebec depend almost entirely on railways for the movement of freight, to and from their facilities. The remaining ones, while having access to other modes, still count on rail to a large extent for their incoming and outcoming trade. Although the size of the shipments involved cannot be determined exactly, since they include raw materials and finished products, we know very well that the volume and revenues of such movements by rail are very high indeed. In any event, adequate rail service is one factor in the maintaining and economy of production of these plants.

For more than a year, railway cars have not been available in sufficient numbers. The problem is aptly summed up in the following remarks by one freight movement officer: "The availability of freight cars is a day-to-day affair; there are never enough cars to meet the demand, and we must constantly pressure railways to get our share of available rolling stock".

There is a serious scarcity of cars for newsprint. Very often the type of car required cannot be obtained. The use of another type of car entails higher costs, since it is impossible to load the specified minimum into shorter cars, with the result that we must pay freight on dead weight. The lack of cars when needed forces companeis to store their products and rehandle them, at extra cost. Some companies have to use trucks to compensate for inadequate rail service. One major company indicated the loss of sales by reason of a persisting scarcity of cars. As far as the movement of chips is concerned, substitution of boxcars for the usual gondola cars creates difficulties, as well as needless costs caused by dead weight; because at certain times, loadings are below minimum . . .

Time is lacking to read the whole letter through, but this proves to the department that the companies constantly requested more adequate and more cars, without avail.

Let us now talk about our famous passenger service. On April 17, 1973, I pointed out to the Minister of Transport the need for an immediate improvement in passenger services. There was at that time an outbreak of derailments that were attributed to all kinds of causes, without the real one ever being denounced. There were even wild accusations that train engineers had shortened the allowed time for a haul by half an hour. Let us not forget that on our local circuit speed should not exceed 25 or 30 miles an hour. I am sure that Montreal or Ottawa travellers would not want to hear about trains anymore if they travelled at such speed.

Are the railway tracks between Montreal, Chambord and Dolbeau too weak? Let us go and watch freight trains more than 100 cars long roll by. Incidentally, we have always exposed the lack of maintenance as the great evil.

Teams of three or four men are designated when those teams should be made of six or even eight men.

That is the first mistake technoracts in Montreal offices make when they perhaps never went on a field check. When I say field check I do not mean spend five or ten minutes in brain centre offices before returning to Montreal with their report. I mean they should run the track with maintenance attendants. That way, Madam Speaker, we could get much better results.

If CNR decided one day to play its role which is to give good service, its clientele the heads of that Crown corporation should stop thinking that hotels are their first priority in that system of transportation. Those people forget entirely that if they want to ensure a good clientele for hotels, here again, a good and well coordinated system of transportation will enable them to achieve it.

It CNR wants a profitable passenger service, it must first provide an adequate service with planned schedules and well maintained cars. It seems quite strange to talk about those matters, Madam Speaker, but in my area I think the directors of that corporation have completely lost sight of the basic principles, with the result that fewer and fewer people want to use CNR services.

On several occasions we showed that the Chambord-Montreal passenger run could be done in five hours, while it now takes eight or ten hours, if there is no delay. I would say incidently that delay is the trademark of CNR in our area. The cause of that slowness is that at present freight has priority. Consequently, we must wait hours along the route to allow freight to run freely. That is ridiculous, one might say, but it is the simple truth.

● (1700)

I shall just take the example of the Montreal bound train which leaves Chambord on Sunday night. In spite of all the useless delays, it reaches Montreal by 7 a.m., so that we can take any other train to Toronto, Ottawa or elsewhere. But if you happen to take the very same train any week day, you have to wait for the train from Abitibi, which is always very late. And so you reach Montreal by 10 or 11 a.m., and even frequently after 12 noon.

We have been wondering for years why it should not be an all-Sunday week for the CN in our area. The Sunday night train might very easily take two hours less if the authorities would give Montreal bound passenger trains priority. We also suggested the implementation of a direct daytime service to Montreal.

Madam Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There is no private members' hour today.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Our voice always remains unheard in the offices of increasingly numerous technocrats while services keep diminishing.

In our opinion, the Canadian National is a group of Montreal technocrats who send orders, prepare all projects in their Montreal offices and do not often leave them to actually check the situation on the premises. We are only presented with accomplished facts, which we have to accept and put up with. But I believe that as long as we shall have, at the Crown corporation level, and ivory tower management, we shall have that dictatorship without any consultation with the people concerned in the region, and we will keep having the problems we are facing today.

When will the government, through its Minister of Transport hold a public inquiry, since in the end deficits are always paid for by the people, in order to at least once a year meet all those technocrats, all those civil servants? Today, you only see civil servants wandering in the area, and you can frequently, although this is a delicate thing to say, see two foremen for three workers.

Another mistake of the Canadian National was to put an end to all the repairs which had been carried out for years in Chambord.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him is expired. I recognize now the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Madam Speaker, this debate which occurs at a very appropriate time is indicative of the inability and inconsciousness of the government regarding transportation. We are obligated to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for having submitted to the attention of the House the motion we are now studying, which faithfully reflects not only the concern of the official opposition, but also that of all Canadian citizens about the complete and permanent disorder existing in the Department of Transport.

It is obvious, Madam Speaker, when considering the government's performance in this field, one would be tempted to say as in the song: "Faut-il en rire ou faut-il en pleurer?" But when considering the minister's accomplishments, I fear there is no alternative but to pity him. This is what leads me to adopt towards him perhaps a more sympathetic attitude than would justify the mess his department is in, sympathetic because I had hoped that before this debate or perhaps during the first day on Friday last the minister would find a way to answer the members' concerns and set forth the solutions he wants to bring in, indicate a general policy, the new policy he intends to advocate in transport.

However, to our great disappointment, the minister rather took delight in falling back on means which in the art of oratory have certainly their merits but are not acceptable on the Parliamentary level. That is how, Madam Speaker, I have considered the minister who, noticeably disturbed, irritated by the questions put to him for some time on account of this mess existing within his department, and under pressure about this issue of the Hamilton and Île d'Orleans dredging contracts, the Minister of Transport, in my opinion one of the most pathetic ministers in Canadian history—I am saying this almost with a measure of friendship—had to raise his voice in the House last Friday. And over the weekend, Madam Speaker, the papers printed the following headlines:

"Marchand Alleged Victim of Racist Campaign"

"Marchand blows his top and is blown up".

"Marchand notes evidence of suspicion and racism".

"Accused of incompetency, Marchand seeks an end to racist attacks".

"Strong attack by Marchand against English-speaking racists' aspersion casting".

Last weekend, Madam Speaker, these media reported to the Canadian public the statements the minister made and which he will not withdraw, judging from what I have just heard, statements he made both in the House and outside to the reporters of French-speaking press. In all fairness to and out of regard for him, I refer him to this statement he made to the French-speaking press and I quote:

"I have been living here since 1965, and I have witnessed the Lamontagne affair, the Favreau affair and the Tremblay affair. Wherever there were French Canadians, they attacked them. And who are they attacking in the House now? The Minister of Transport, Jean Chrétien, Yves Pratte. If you look up the oral question period for the past month, you will see that this is what is going on."

This last remark was made by the Minister of Transport, as though his outburst had not been enough, and as though he needed hidden threats, he added:

"And if they want to play this little game, we are going to play it rough".

Madam Speaker, I wanted to report those remarks, to note the minister's attitude and behaviour, in order that he knew how essential it is for Parliament that a Crown minister act with objectivity and impartiality, and foremost how essential that he was not too sensitive about some criticisms and that he never thought that when a minister's competence is questioned, his race, his colour or his origins are attacked.

[English]

Madam Speaker, it is not surprising that when the issue of the minister's competence is raised, when the issue of the minister's admitted transportation mess is raised, the minister claims that my colleagues are making prejudicial and racial attacks on him personally. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and his now well known consensus have been attacked by members on this side of the House of both English and French background, yet he does not feel personally slighted or racially attacked.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has been attacked at times for lack of direction, and for a basic sloppiness of approach, by myself and others, yet he does not feel particularly slighted or racially offended. If we attack a minister who happens to be of French Canadian origin, according to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) we do so for racial or prejudicial reasons. When we attack a minister of English Canadian origin, according to the Minister of Transport we do so to divide English from French in this country's government.

While paranoia expressed consistently in an emotional fashion either inside or outside this House does not constitute a direct infringement on the privileges of members, surely the House can understand that the workings of government and the processes of this House are not aided by the type of shrill accusations and meanderings of the Minister of Transport. Surely, Madam Speaker, compared to his cabinet colleagues he has little to be worried about. The Minister of Finance must have at least every second taxpayer in this country after him. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has a steadily diminishing but nevertheless 80,000 loyal and well armed defence forces upset with him. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has taken on all of Canada's consumers and, despite a basic kinship with the fertilizer producers, he has them to worry about as well. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) must have to hire people to open his mail. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has thousands of unemployed speechwriters trying to break down his door—

• (1710)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: —not to mention all the Larry Czonka fans in Toronto. And so the list progresses. If all these men were to take the substantive criticisms levelled against their departments as personal attacks, personal slurs, racial references, then we would have descended from the steps of parliamentary democracy to a level of operation not befitting this parliament or the people it serves.

I appeal to the Minister of Transport to think carefully and seriously about the silliness of his ramblings on Friday. No one in this House has ever doubted his sincerity. We doubt his competence, for reasons being enumerated in this debate and because that happens to be part of our responsibility as members of the opposition. If the minister is unprepared to make the distinction between an attack on his administration and an attack on him personally, if he is unable to separate the two, then I submit that he should reconsider the reasons for which he and his colleagues from Hochelaga and Mount Royal came to this federal House originally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: They came, as many are prepared to believe, to show Quebeckers that there is a role for them in the national politics of this country and perhaps to illustrate to Canada the role that Quebeckers can play. That, Madam Speaker, is a mission with which many of differing political persuasions can identify. However, if it is now to be the minister's function to portray Quebeckers as so entrapped by their ethnicity, so hypersensitive and suspicious as to make it impossible for them to interpret any criticism as anything other than an attack on their person or their origin, then the minister does himself, the people of Quebec and the people of Canada no good whatever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Madam Speaker, the minister owes my leader, my party and this House an apology.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: While I may be naïve enough to hope that such an apology might be forthcoming, I say to this House that should it not be forthcoming the minister will have laid open to attack, not his background as a Quebecker, not his competence as a minister but his decency and sense of balance as a member of this House. That Madam Speaker, is very serious indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I know, Madam Speaker, that time is running short, and I would like to remind the Minister of Transport of different aspects of his department that leave so much to be desired that I would need at least one hour to detail them.

I found it strange that the very day the director of the Association for the Unity of Christianism, Mr. Allan Wilding, ended a two-week march between Toronto and Montreal to make the public aware of the unity of Canadians, the very day the pope welcomed our right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Rome and praised our pluralism and the policy of bilingualism and biculturalism which is being built year after year in our country, giving them as examples of cooperation, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) chose that day to show what I would call a thoughtlessness which can seem to be childish or cynical, depending on the way you look at it.

Now that this incident is over, I think the minister should go back to his previous functions. He should be able to find again in himself the energies, the dynamism that characterized him in the years he was an impetuous trade unionist in Quebec. It seems to me he should bring back from this experiment enough strength and objectivity to be able to give at last the Department of Transport the impulse Canada is expecting from the government in such a matter.

I express the wish, Madam Speaker, that this debate will not merely provide the minister with the opportunity of accusing hon. members of the opposition of childishness, as he did, of obscurantism,—how learnedly these things are said—of showering them with abuse, of telling them they know nothing, as we can read in last Friday's Hansard, that they do not know how to win elections.

That attitude is far too arrogant, complacent, self-satisfied. Could the minister, in all humility and modesty, not see the errors of his department, accept the suggestions made to him by hon. members of all parties, perhaps even follow the advice just given to him by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), and by grouping all those suggestions at long last give this country a co-ordinated and overall policy to reassure Canadians and above all to guarantee this country the economic future it is entitled to expect from any government?

● (1720)

[English]

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Madam Speaker, I anxiously look forward to taking part in this debate for two main reasons. First, I want to comment, from a different perspective, on how I see the government's transportation policy and, second and more important, I want to come to the defence, on a personal basis, of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who I feel very strongly has been unfortunately much maligned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Members opposite say the minister should not take their criticism as being directed to him personally. Show me a man who is challenged as to his competency, or asked "Where's your guts?" or "Where's your fortitude?" and does not take that on a personal basis, and I will show you a man who will not stand for what he believes in, something the Minister of Transport certainly does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I believe, Madam Speaker, following the representations I made on a non-partisan basis when I was a mayor of my municipality, that the results we obtained as a result of the policies set down by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) when he was minister responsible for DREE, as well as his policies as Minister of Transport, would demonstrate it was not the same kind of story as opposition members would like us to believe. This also gives me an opportunity to say "thank you" to the minister and to the government; on behalf of my constituents, for the tremendous job they have done for our area.

I am sure the only thing that members on both sides of this House would agree upon is the fact that regional economic expansion and transport policies go hand in hand. In 1970 the present Minister of Transport was minister responsible for DREE, and in the latter capacity he came to Cornwall. We had a very low base of economic power, to say the least, with over 20 per cent unemployment. At that time, in his usual candid manner, the minister did not make any false promises; he set out the facts as they were. We did not tell the people what they needed or what they did not need, but promised that a study would be undertaken. As today, he was criticized by some of the local people in the riding. In 1974, when the results of the very policies he advocated at the time had brought the unemployment situation down to the national level, there was no criticism left to be heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: In 1972 I recall reading Hansard and listening to criticisms of opposition members with respect to DREE policies. If I am not mistaken, although I did not participate in the elections at that time, the election was conducted on the issue of regional economic policies. In 1975 I do not hear hon. members opposite from the Atlantic provinces, talking about in-migration for the first time in their history. I certainly do not hear members opposite from the western provinces talking about economic prosperity and the problems of economic prosperity they are presently experiencing. Many of these accomplishments were the result of policies advocated by the present Minister of Transport and his government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Rubbish!

Mr. Lumley: The minister followed through with his policies in Cornwall in 1970, he followed through with his DREE policies in Canada in 1972, and he will follow through with the transportation policies which he set out in 1974.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I am sure hon. members will agree that the position of the Minister of Transport is probably one of the most difficult in the entire dominion.

An hon. Member: He's in difficulty all right.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lumley: I shall be glad to entertain a question at the end of my remarks. The Minister of Transport holds one of the most complex offices in the world. There is not a corporate executive in Canada who faces the problem of the Minister of Transport. The company for which I worked has perhaps the broadest distribution base in the world.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Things go better with Coke.

Mr. Lumley: I am glad to recognize that statement from the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Our country comprises 14 million square miles, almost 3,000 miles north to south and 3,000 miles east to west. I wonder how many members sit down and try to comprehend the problems the minister faces. The company for which I worked is involved in every city, town and hamlet in the country. It is one of the most profitable corporations in the world. Yet never once did we meet the magnitude of the problems this minister faces.

We keep talking about transportation policy in general. Hon. members may say that there is no policy. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) commented about freight rates and regional expansion, as did the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) on Friday. I hope they do not really believe that equalization of freight rates would solve all the regional economic problems across Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: It would go a long way.

Mr. Lumley: There is far more to regional economic expansion that the equalization of freight rates. Members opposite talk about the lack of foresight in the Minister of Transport. In my riding an announcement was made a year ago, prior to my being a member, concerning a new Ministry of Transport training institute. I challenge members opposite: if they do not think there is any future in the transportation policy the government is advocating, take a tour down to Heron Road and find out the future policy and programs of the Ministry of Transport. Let them find out about the new school that is going to be started in Cornwall in 1975. I guarantee the philosophy would change across the House.

At the present time, the Ministry of Transport is conducting senior management courses involving new training techniques in transportation. These courses are unique in the world. This is something which came under the administration of the present Minister of Transport. Provided all sectors of the economy, including the private sector and provincial governments which are actively interested in the programs of the Ministry of Transport training institute, can co-operate, hopefully this institute can become a national transportation centre.

I should like to comment on something the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said the other day. He was talking about the inadvisability of DC-9 flights between Ottawa and Montreal. Who was the Minister of Transport who introduced STOL? That will answer the question. If that is not progressive, I really do not know what is. I do not mean the kind of "progressive" that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, who is looking at me, is thinking about now. The foresight of this government in the transportation field goes back many years. I recall the years during which Hon. Lionel Chevrier, then the hon. member for Stormont, was minister of transport: another great Liberal.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Little things, Madam Speaker, when you see the bridge between the United States and Canada in Cornwall; little things like having the foresight to add a span extension so that some day when the all-Canadian Seaway is built, maybe in 1980, maybe in the year 2000 no extra cost would be incurred. Foresight, Madam Speaker, foresight such as this government advocates in transportation policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I realize there are many members who would like to take part in this debate, so I will close with this final remark. I mean this most sincerely. I also mean this in a non-partisan way, as a former mayor of the city of Cornwall. If every community in the country could benefit in as short a period of time as my community did because of policies, attitudes and working relationship we had with the Minister of Transport and this government, we would not have any economic problems in this country.

● (1730)

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I want to concentrate on one vital aspect of transportation policy in Canada this afternoon, namely, regional air policy. Unfortunately, discussion on this subject has been sidetracked by the introduction of extraneous matters by the minister, so I want to get back on target this afternoon by zeroing in on a specific problem.

The speaker who just preceded me referred to the Hon. Lionel Chevrier as an outstanding leader in the development of transportation policy in Canada. I had a conversation recently with Mr. Chevrier in his capacity as President of Nordair. I can assure the hon. member that he was less than happy concerning the direction regional air policy has been taking during recent months.

I have some sympathy for the minister and the problems that confront him so I am not going to personalize my remarks this afternoon by zeroing in on any particular minister. The problems that have been outlined effectively by opposition spokesmen are the by-product of several recent ministers.

I was interested this afternoon to hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) take part in the debate. He was a former Minister of Transport. In fact, he changed places with the present incumbent in that position. I listened to the minister in charge of DREE and suspected that he was preaching for a call, as though he would like to get back on the job as Minister of Transport.

There was a little bit of uncertainty as to who was going to be the major spokesman this afternoon in replying to the presentation of opposition members, and it will be interesting to see the permutations of any Cabinet shuffle, as they unfold in the weeks that lie ahead, particularly if there is to be a transfer of responsibility in this portfolio.

The major difficulty in transportation policy arises from the failure of the government to come to grips with the MacPherson Report, which in the early 1960's resulted from an examination in detail of transportation problems in this country. After several years' delay, following the change of government in 1963, a new transportation policy was finally forthcoming. It established the Canadian Transport Commission in place of the old Board of Transport Commissioners. Placed in charge of the CTC was a former minister of transport, who has been referred to from time to time in this Chamber. In fact, during the question period today we had a very interesting question answered in respect of the position of that former minister of transport, the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, who shifted sideways from a ministerial responsibility to the chairmanship of the CTC. Incidentally he was followed by another former minister of the government.

In 1972 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made the specific promise that should he become leader of the government in Canada this business of shifting ministers of transport and other former ministers of the Crown to head important bodies like the CTC would end forthwith. The tendency is to politicize those bodies which should above all else have an independent expertise in respect of transportation problems.

One of the major reasons we are in the mess that has been described by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as "a mess that is worse than anyone realizes" is that we have not had the leadership from the body designated by this parliament to bring the required expertise into the resolution of the extremely complex problems of transportation, recognized by everyone in this House.

Mr. Stanfield: A political graveyard.

Mr. Dinsdale: Because it is a political graveyard it has also become the graveyard of all the fine hopes expressed in the MacPherson Report, which ushered in the legislation establishing the CTC with the hope of bringing order out of existing confusion.

To get back to the specific problem, the failure to move forward on a rational regional air policy, I point out that in 1973 the present minister announced route divisions between Air Canada and CP Air as designated international flag carriers for Canada. That was a good and positive step, and we applauded the minister for his initiative. He announced also that there would be two further announcements to deal with the fundamental problems involved in regional air policy, plus a supplementary statement on third level air carriers which would fill the gap in existing air transportation policy.

Some two years later we have not moved beyond the original initiative of the minister. As a result, general air policy and third level carrier policy have been a matter of flying by the seat of the pants on the part of the minister and the government. There is no guidance, no direction, and no policy which makes it possible for the five designated regional carriers to plan on a long-term basis.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What about the agreement with the government of Manitoba on S-27 service for the Yorkton-Brandon region?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am coming to that in a moment, and I will not be sidetracked at this stage of my remarks.

The tragedy in respect of regional development is that air policy, as it has been designed to the moment, is geared to the needs of Air Canada, and I think this can be easily demonstrated by some of the recent decisions in respect of regional air policy. I cannot go into too much detail, but the application by Nordair to provide a service between Thunder Bay, Sudbury, Ottawa and Montreal was rejected. This is where the Hon. Lionel Chevrier quarrels with the present lack of policy. Air Canada expressed no interest in that route, but as soon as Nordair submitted its application Air Canada submitted an application and Air canada was given the right to provide that particular segment of regional air service.

At every opportunity this minister comes to the defence of the monopoly position of Air Canada, as he did in the House the other day when the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) asked for a copy of the Air Canada contract, which was formerly called a contract between the government of Canada and Trans-Canada Airlines. The reply by the minister was that to reveal this information would do irreparable harm to Air Canada. We have now discovered that the information is available in the National Archives of Canada.

It has become the case that whatever Air Canada wants, it is that which determines what the Cabinet decides. That is why Nordair has decided to appeal the decision of the Air Transport Committee, with every right, because Nordair was operating under the designated regional policy laid down by the former minister in 1966, and extended as recently as 1973.

Now I should like to move to the specific problem to which the minister has already referred as it applies to Manitoba and Saskatchewan. For over a year now the western part of Manitoba and the eastern part of Saskatchewan have had no air service whatsoever. This situation has existed in spite of the fact that the minister said that adequate air service is absolutely essential for regional economic development. He was supported in this statement by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion when he spoke this afternoon.

In order to help us understand how this situation of a complete vacuum and void in prairie air transportation policy has developed I have in front of me the regional air carriers' latest information booklet in which they show the routes that are already covered by the regional air carriers in Canada. The province of Saskatchewan has absolutely no regional air service whatsoever, and west of Winnipeg Transair is not carrying out its responsibility. This again is related to the basic broad orientation of the minister that what is good for Air Canada is good for everybody else.

Let me give a little history. Air Canada originally accepted the responsibility to provide the service. It provided an excellent service right through from Calgary to Winnipeg. With the announcement of the regional policy in 1966 Air Canada asked to be relieved of this responsibility and to have it turned over to the designated regional carrier, Transair. Because that run was not economically feasible a subsidy was provided. Let me talk about this business of the subsidy.

Because there are very few air services in the smaller communities which actually pay for themselves it is essential that such services be subsidized from the national treasury. If the subsidy had been continued it would be a lot less expensive than the program of the commuter air service which is about to be launched. This service will not involve a regional air carrier but will involve a third level carrier even though we have not yet had a policy for third level carriers enunciated by the minister.

As an indication that the government had long term plans, runways were strengthened and lengthened. In 1970 the new terminal at Brandon was opened and it was such an auspicious occasion that the Minister of Transport at that time, the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, attended in person the terminal opening and made marvellous forecasts of how the service would be expanded in the future. Since then everything has been downhill. The subsidy was withdrawn and the service was downgraded to commuter third level service provided by Midwest Airlines, a subsidiary of Transair. Since January a year ago there has been no service.

It was the Air Transport Committee that gave permission to stop the air service into that area over a year ago. I shall deal with this in a moment in relation to a decision which that committee brought down with reference to an application Transair had before that committee for a year, in which it offered to meet its obligation to the regional air policy and to provide a first-class jet service between Prince Albert, Regina, Brandon and Toronto, without subsidy.

In giving a negative decision on the jet application, the Air Transport Committee obviously was looking over its shoulder, because on page 11 of its decision it states:

> The concerns of the Saskatchewan government and the Regina Chamber of Commerce stem in part from the intervention of Air Canada respecting the adverse effect of the Transair proposal on Air Canada traffic and hence on its future plans for improved service.

In other words the committee was aware of the fact that if this were done Air Canada would not improve the service as it had intended. In its decision the committee states:

> The committee is sympathetic to the concern expressed by Brandon and the communities in the Brandon area that the citizens of that area have to travel via surface to Winnipeg in order that they may connect with flights of a mainline or regional nature. The committee wishes to point out, had Transair or any other applicant made application to serve Brandon in a different manner than Transair has in this application, and, in addition justified the need for such a service, the committee would have given serious consideration to such an application.

In other words the decision of the committee was based on the attitude that Air Canada takes to these important matters. I want to suggest to the minister, who has referred to this third level commuter service, that it will not serve any useful purpose unless it is linked to a regional first-class service which makes it possible for Transair to discharge its obligation west of Winnipeg. I am sure the minister will agree that it is quite unreasonable and out of context with regional air policy to have Transair and its service at Winnipeg. It flies between Winnipeg, Dryden, Thunder Bay and Toronto, but does not provide any service west of Winnipeg because the ACT has refused to authorize the provision of service in that area of responsibility.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

I wish to make some precise suggestions before my time expires, whereby the minister can enhance his reputation and deal with a specific problem. I have been in correspondence with his former parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I received this reply in a letter signed by the deputy minister, Mr. Stoner:

> Under the Aeronautics Act, applications for licences to operate commercial air services are made to the Canadian Transport Commission, and the Commission, not the Minister, may issue the licence. However, under the National Transportation Act an appeal from a decision of the Commission on an application for a licence under the Aeronautics Act is provided to the Minister. It would hardly then be proper for the Minister to interfere with a decision of the Commission in the first instance or to express his opinion on a matter before the Committee which might later be the subject of an appeal to him.

I ask the minister to accept his responsibility under the Transportation Act and appeal the decision of the committee, since it seems that this is the only way we will ever have adequate air service under the regional air policy. I would hope a public hearing would be held in this regard. The decision of the committee was brought down after a delay of more than a 12 months' period, and there were no public hearings. As is indicated by the decision from which I quoted, the ATC was sympathetic to the application in the realization that the air service was inadequate in the context of regional air policy. I believe the commission would have been willing to acquiesce, but because there was opposition by Air Canada to the effect that it interfered with its monopoly position in that part of western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, the proposition was turned down.

I would hope also that the minister would meet with the regional air carriers. The regional air carriers obviously are quite concerned about the present policy. I trust that the minister has read the booklet which outlines their concerns. Perhaps I can best draw his attention to the situation by reading from the booklet itself. It refers to the fact that the policy was laid down in 1966. It states:
