> They were to provide regular route operations into the North, and to operate local and regional routes to complement the main carriers.
> . . . The government also proposed a modest subsidy policy to aid the development of marginal air routes.

It refers to the fact that in 1969 there was a refinement of government policy which divided the country into regions covered by the five present regional carriers. With reference to Transair, the prairie provinces and northwestern Ontario were the designated area of responsibility for this regional carrier. A little note is added here that later Transair was also given access to Toronto. I ask the minister: why does that responsibility end at Winnipeg? Why is it not extended to cover such areas as Brandon, Regina and Prince Albert? Transair had to withdraw from this obligation because of the withdrawal of the subsidy.

The minister has indicated that a third level carrier is about to be established. The government's participation in this third level carrier operation is to provide two aircraft. There is no operating subsidy. The provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have had difficulties meeting the obligations governing the operation subsidy.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I ask the minister to compare this with STOL for which the government has taken complete financial responsibility. It is a demonstration project. The same designation is given to the proposed commuter service between Yorkton, Dauphin, Brandon and Winnipeg. Let us be fair and equitable, and let us take a thorough look at the proposition that has been put forward by Transair and turned down. Will the minister use the authority that is granted him under the legislation to ask for a review, and particularly refer the matter to the people?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I see there are a few minutes remaining before six o'clock. I am very pleased to be able to intervene in this debate as a mere, humble backbencher. I have been here six or seven months, and I find that whenever the subject of transportation comes up for discussion in the House it is always discussed in terms of freight rates or the regional air policy, such as was referred to by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). Regional matters are very important, and it appears to me that parliament does not hear too often the voice from central Canada on intercity rail, for example.

Let me state briefly the problem of intercity rail transportation in the context of this debate. One thing we must remember is that the issue is very complex. I think that my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), summed it up very well when he castigated the opposition for expecting a well defined transportation policy to be enunciated, introduced to parliament, and to become law in the space of a few months. This is not possible.

A debate on transport has been going on now for two days, and I think that my intervention this afternoon contains the first mention of intercity rail transport. It is a very wide subject indeed. I will refer to the words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) when he spoke on Friday and said that we must find the best techniques to ensure the best possible service for Canadians. We should not try to rush off and implement a new policy just because the opposition members are getting hot under the collar and are prodding us every which way. To prepare a new policy takes time.

On Friday, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)—who was here a few minutes ago and who is now lurking behind the curtains—referred to our party's well received transportation policy in the last election campaign. He said that it was enunciated but that no legislation had come before the House as yet. He knows as well as I do that many of our proposals do not require new legislation. As I shall show later, the minister is leading the way in implementing these new policies. In fact I might say as an aside that one of the things that made me proud to stand as a Liberal candidate in the last federal election representing an urban constituency in Toronto was the party's transportation policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: I know it is hard for hon. members opposite to swallow that, but members on this side are certainly united in their belief that the policies enunciated in the last election campaign were good ones, and that many salient points were brought out for the benefit of all Canadians.

One of our proposals last summer was for the establishment of a Canadian Passenger Transport Corporation to assume responsibility for the operation of all intercity passenger train services which are now the responsibility of CNR and CPR. The government in a sense issued a warning to the railways, through this proposed policy for the establishment of a corporation, to start paying attention to rail passenger services, especially in the high density traffic corridor between Windsor and Quebec, and to pay attention to passenger needs between Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, southwestern Ontario, the Atlantic provinces and the links between Edmonton and Calgary.

This proposal was bold and had the effect of creating—to use President Theodore Roosevelt's words from a by-gone era—"a big stick," because it appears, from all I read, from my travels on CNR these days, and from the remarks I heard from the president of CPR, that the railways are getting the message and are making a conscientious effort to upgrade their services. We have now the Turbo train running twice daily between Montreal and Toronto. I believe it runs once a day between Ottawa and Montreal. On Friday night, due to the disruption in the air service, my colleague, the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon), and I travelled six and a half hours on that great CN train to Toronto. I think we were very well looked after, except for the speed at which the train travelled, something to which I will make reference in a moment. In any event we had a very comfortable ride!

It is clear that speed is essential in rail travel, but that the railways at present cannot achieve it. However, with the assistance of this government they will be able to achieve it. Madam Speaker, I see it is six o'clock. Perhaps I will be allowed to finish my remarks after the recess. May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I shall not be too long concluding my remarks as I understand there are a number of other members who wish to speak this evening.

Before the hour of six o'clock I was talking about the need for speed in intercity rail travel, and I put forth the argument that the railways really will have difficulty in matching our expectations unless the government comes forward with some assistance in helping to develop new technology, such as the very successful light, rapid, comfortable rail cars now being tested. Indeed, I believe the LRC test locomotive is being used on the daily Tempo run from Toronto to Sarnia pulling conventional coaches. These trains can attain speeds of up to 125 miles per hour.

The test with the LRC is essentially designed to allow railway personnel to become familiar with the operation of a daily service and to see how the equipment performs in an endurance sense over a certain period. Recently the LRC completed thousands of miles of testing at the Amtrack Centre in the United States.

There are other ways in which the government can be of assistance in the development of intercity rail transport. We must remember that there are massive capital outlays required to build a new double track paralleling the present CN right of way from Montreal to Toronto. The government can assist in funding a fully computerized signalling system on the railways, concrete ties, electrification, and continuously welded track. All of these will help facilitate a high speed rail system. I understand that discussions are now under way with CN to look into some of these possibilities. In fact I was informed that only last Friday, the day when this debate began, that the Minister of Transport met with senior officials from both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to discuss ways of improving intercity rail passenger services.

As for Canadian Pacific, the big stick of the Canadian Passenger Transport Corporation proposal to which I referred earlier in my remarks, I am sure prompted Mr. Sinclair, the president of Canadian Pacific, in his recent remarks to admit that existing technology would permit CP to introduce highspeed rail links on the Montreal-Ottawa line and to cut down the travel time to about 75 minutes; and I reiterate to my hon. friend from Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, who is not here at the present time, that no new legislation is needed in this case, only the good will and the determination of the railways to comply with government intentions. The failure to comply with what we believe on this side of the House is the direction in which intercity rail should go would leave the government in a very dicey position. There is one alternative left if we do not receive the co-operation of the railways, and that is the full nationalization of the rail section of CP and the creation of one Canadian railway company, publicly owned, and serving the interests of Canada.

Hon. members of the Official Opposition this afternoon sneered when this solution was proposed by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), but it is the responsibility of the government to see that Canada's railway companies, which receive so much in the way of massive financial assistance from the taxpayers of Canada in the form of bonds, debentures, loans, land grants, etc., serve the present needs of the Canadian population.

The revitalization of our passenger rail services will involve a vast construction program for public transport vehicles and thus create an enormous area of industrial employment opportunity. I understand that there are now about 800,000 Canadians already employed in the transportation field alone, and this will be vastly increased by revamping the rolling stock through the introduction of new types of railway cars such as the LRCs. Revitalization of our intercity rail systems with high speed trains will help to decentralize growth in our urban areas. As a member for the metropolitan Toronto region I am very concerned about this particular facet of intercity rail.

Intercity rail development will help to add stimuli to smaller communities by offering them a fast direct link to major metropolises. It will help them become small industrial centres. It will help them become bedroom communities for the larger centres. It will for the first time create competition for the airlines in many domestic shorthaul routes—shorthaul routes which wastefully consume jet fuel in an age of scarcity, crowd air terminals and exacerbate the noise problem for thousands of residents in the urban areas, especially in the west end of Toronto. Perhaps those of us who took a stand on this side of the House in doubting somewhat the wisdom of the government going ahead with the building of a second airport in the Pickering area will be justified in the end as a highspeed rail system could dampen demand for air transport in the dense corridor between Quebec and Windsor.

I would like to digress for just a moment to refer to the minister and his approach to the Pickering airport and the needs of that area. It is no secret that there was much discussion on this side of the House. There was much internal debate and opposition to the proposed full scale $1.5 billion Pickering Airport; but it is the measure of the present minister, who has suffered from the spurious and vituperative attacks of hon. members on the other side of this House, that he listened to hon. members on this side, took their counsel, and agreed after much deliberation to scale down the size of that airport. It is now a $250 million proposal. There is the option to expand if those critics of the airport are wrong, but I believe it leaves the door open to develop new ways of transporting people in the high density corridor along the Lake Ontario-St. Lawrence region.

I could go on to talk about the spinoffs of a highspeed rail system as it will affect our urban areas, such as weekend excursions for winter weekends for workers in cities, or to take masses of city dwellers to the lakeside in the heat of the summer, but I think I should conclude because I know there are other speakers who wish to contribute this evening.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, go ahead, don't be modest.

Mr. Collenette: To this day, until the threat of massive government intervention with the Canadian Rail Passenger Corporation, the limited subsidies provided by the government to railways for rail passenger service—80 per cent of the losses, I believe, are covered—have not been sufficient incentive to the railways to maintain and update their passenger rolling stock and equipment. However, changes are on the way, and these changes destroy the credibility of the motion we have before us. We are dealing with a complex matter, and I realize hon. members on the other side are not used to thinking in such complex terms.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Collenette: That is in essence the motion we have before us. We have a transportation policy which members of this party put forward in the election.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Collenette: It was widely accepted by the Canadian public, especially in the urban and the highly developed areas. Look at who won all the seats in the highly developed areas of Canada—members on this side of the House. We have a policy, Mr. Speaker, but they do not like it and criticize it because it takes a long time. Mr. Speaker, it always takes a long time to develop good, sound ideas.

● (2010)

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will be happy to know that I do not plan to speak very long on this motion. I would not want the minister to think that I am picking on him just because I think that he should have come up with a transport policy of some kind during the years that he has had his portfolio. After all, if a member accepts a portfolio, such as the Minister of Transport has, we in the opposition and the Canadian people as well, have a right to expect him to tell us from time to time what are his policies. If he does not have any policies then he can expect to have the opposition keep the pressure on until he comes up with some.

My own interest, strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, has to do with rail service, or the lack of rail service, in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, and in many parts of Canada such as western and northern Ontario. I know most people think of Parry Sound-Muskoka as a little corner of Paradise, or the Garden of Eden, and naturally think that it is off the beaten path, off the main line, so to speak. But that just is not so, Mr. Speaker. My riding is on the main line to Sudbury and North Bay, and for that reason you would think that it would be easy for the railways to provide adequate rail service through it.

There are a number of reasons why the people of Parry Sound-Muskoka have a right to expect the railroads to serve them, or at least to pretend once in a while that they know that we exist. The minister could show from one of his old timetables, that we used to have fairly regular rail service, passenger and freight, through my riding, and he could add that the people did not take advantage of the service and so it was cut off. The fact is that the regular service that we used to have came through at such times as to make it inconvenient, if not impossible, for people to take advantage of it. I know that it does not matter if a freight train runs through the riding on the way to Vancouver at three o'clock in the morning, but it matters a great deal if passenger trains go through at such an ungodly hour.

We find another example on the very important run from Ottawa to Montreal. A few years ago it used to be a pleasure to take the train, have breakfast on the way, and get to the big city in time to do some business and take the train back again in the evening. However, the railways decided that it was too much trouble serving mere passengers. They altered the schedules, took off the dining car and generally discouraged people from taking the train.

The government is spending tens of millions of dollars on an experiment to initiate the world's first downtown to downtown STOL airplane service between major cities. While this is certainly a step in the direction of providing adequate service between cities, it is still not a complete substitute for adequate rail passenger service between Canada's major cities and areas. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the government talks about using the new STOL service in order to prove that our aircraft industry can make a better STOL plane than anyone else, so that we can sell airplanes.

Just a couple of years ago we were involved in fierce debate over whether the two major rail systems in our country should be allowed to discontinue transcontinental passenger rail service. It was found then that the railways wanted to concentrate on freight service and gradually scale down passenger service to the point where people would just get tired of the whole mess and use the planes and buses. We just squeaked through that one and ended up with minimum transcontinental rail passenger service. But we in Parry Sound-Muskoka still do not have anywhere near the service we need and should have.

Everyone in this House knows that our highways are getting to the point where they are clogged with traffic almost around the clock. This means that people are burning gasoline at a greater rate than they should, and it means also that the incidence of highway deaths and injuries is rising yearly at an alarming rate. Automobile repairs and write-offs amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, and this is reflected in increased insurance premiums. I can speak with some authority on that as an insurance agent.

Adequate rail passenger service from cities like Toronto to outlying areas such as the Muskoka lakes vacationland would take hundreds and possibly thousands of automobiles off the roads, especially on weekends. I do not believe that anyone in his or her right mind would consider driving an automobile between these points unless it were absolutely necessary; therefore, proper train service would take much of the necessity out of this type of driving.

It is said trains run at a loss, but if there were a special rate for a vacationland train of this type it would pay its way, and would be filled to capacity.

Most of the stations in my area have been torn down, abandoned or replaced with a small leanto that could only be termed as a backhouse. There are no lights, and you have to stand out and try to flag down the passenger train as it goes through.

The railways are concentrating most of their efforts on providing freight service while scaling down passenger service, and even the freight and express service are not all that they should be. During the last strike, because there was no express train service the Grey Coach Lines started a parcel delivery service, and they are still in that in a big way. Buses going north are loaded because they are giving fast, guaranteed service.

Industries and businesses in small areas are not able to ship goods by rail because of the high cost of freight. As was mentioned earlier today in the House, short run freight rates are prohibitive. If something could be done to streamline freight rates I am sure it would be to the advantage of the railways. Of course they do not have too much competition. The two main companies own trucking services—in other words, you have to deal with the railway whether you ship by rail, car or tractor trailer transport.

The countries of western Europe have better railway service than we have in Canada even if they do not have the distances to contend with that we have in our country, with its vast areas and distances between major cities. Yet the railway is still the best means of transport, or at least it would be if we could have adequate and dependable rail service.

We hear today that with the airlines also, freight service is increasing at a faster rate than passenger service, and most airlines are using combination passenger-freight aircraft. In fact even some of the jumbo jets, designed for passenger services, are being converted into freight carriers.

This morning's Globe and Mail featured a story on its front page telling of how passengers on Air Canada flights to Toronto were landed in Montreal and abandoned to their fates. They were not fed, nor were they given any assistance in getting to the destinations for which they had bought tickets. It seems that the Air Canada officials felt that, as long as they landed their passengers somewhere in Canada, then they should be satisfied.

This diversion was made necessary because the runways at Toronto International Airport were covered with snow, and the runway cleaners were on strike. A spokesman for Air Canada was reported as saying that Air Canada could not accept responsibility for passengers whose flights were interrupted for reasons beyond Air Canada's control. It was also reported that passengers bound for Toronto on CP Air were fed when they landed at Montreal, and were afterwards sent on to Toronto by bus.

The government-owned airline seems to have the same attitude toward people as the government-owned railway, and this can only be explained as a lack of government transportation policy. It could mean also that the government-owned airline is more interested today in hauling freight than in serving passengers. Whatever the reason, let me tell the House that if I ever buy a ticket on Air Canada for a certain destination and get dumped in some other place, then I shall be talking to the minister or to the Air Canada officials about it.

I do not know whether the Minister of Transport will even get the point of what this opposition day is all about, but I do know one thing; we in the opposition will not fail to let the minister and the government know, on a day-to-day basis, that the Canadian people are getting fed up with not having a national transportation policy. They are fed up with being treated worse than cattle and grain when they travel on our railways and airlines. People deserve better, and if the minister does not feel that he can create some order out of the confusion in his department, I suggest that he do the decent thing and resign.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to join in this debate on the extremely important question of transportation, and particularly to follow immediately the observation of the hon. member opposite that "we are very concerned about the need in Canada for a transportation policy." Those words are very interesting. How often do members of the opposition use those words, and then immediately point to what they mean by them by indicating that there is a clear need for an additional airport runway in the village Podunk in order to make Canada's transportation policy perfectly effective.

The members of the opposition express their interest in transportation matters by asking the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about things such as that—an individual runway here, a particular subdivision there, and the line of a report some place else. I suppose this is a fairly classic opposition tactic, to attempt to make it seem that the minister should know about each of these small details, matters that in fact are only suitable for the order paper.

The fact of the matter is that such individual details cannot and should not be in the forefront of the mind of the Minister of Transport, who is attempting to formulate and develop an over-all policy for transportation in Canada within federal jurisdiction. The concern of the opposition about these petty and minor matters distracts from some other rather key issues.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) pointed out today what I think everyone should recognize, and that is that with our tremendous geographic problems, problems that make transportation an important, indeed essential element in this country, we have by and large been reasonably successful with our transportation system. Our criticisms of the system are really related to our desire for a better system, rather than contrasting how the job is done in other countries.

At the present time the opposition are concentrating on individual, minor issues. They are trying, as they have tried before, to make something strange out of the fact that because of my responsibility for grain and connection with the grains group, and because of my role in which I work closely with the Minister of Transport regarding the handling and transport of grain, both the Minister of Transport and I are interested in the same important subject matter.

I say it is an important subject matter; about one quarter of the ton miles of freight hauled in Canada is of grain. We have seen the railway perform this task extremely well during the past several years. While we have had labour troubles and have encountered other difficulties in trying to achieve internationally new and record goals, we have none the less achieved these goals.

I should remind hon. members that in the year 1972-73, notwithstanding significant closedowns because of labour and other problems, such as cold weather and difficulty getting through the Rockies, the railway system in this country moved over 800 million bushels of grain for export and in total close to one billion bushels of grain were transported, an amount never before achieved.

We have also made great improvements to the rail system in the matter of grain handling. Things like hopper cars, the block system and co-ordinators at terminals are all part of trying to make the system work more efficiently. Hon. members should be aware as well that one of the reasons transportation is such a massive responsibility, one that cannot be within the knowledge and purview of the Minister of Transport to the last detail, is that in this country we have developed a transportation system where we rely on the individual responsibility of the various parties to, and parts of, that system. It is not for the Minister of Transport to endeavour to try to run the railways or to run Air Canada. It is not as though he should be involved in every one of the system's facets. The system must always run with reliance placed upon the responsibility of the various individuals throughout the system; and the role of the government, and therefore that of the minister, is one of over-all co-ordination and development of planning to see that all goes well.

Under the present Minister of Transport development of planning and policy has been moving forward like never before. Here, of course, is a major area where the opposition has an extremely legitimate and useful role to play, namely, in putting forward to the government major policy considerations. I think it has, too, the responsibility and opportunity to repeat to us time and time again the promises and pledges we have made regarding a major overhaul of the transportation system. It is therefore not surprising that the opposition wants at this point in time to show impatience at the kind of job being done.

The important thing to remember, Mr. Speaker, is that as those promises are carried out and as those pledges are implemented, our national policy will show its new form in terms of developing the kind of transportation system that we need. That is what the work of transportation is all about at the present time. It is a matter of major planning, of such issues as the control of rates in this country for freight, and of determining a new technique. We are not satisfied with the technique of the past.

Let me remind hon. members that no one in the House should treat this matter as though it were a simple and easy one. We cannot expect solutions to be found and implemented overnight.

An hon. Member: Huh!

Mr. Lang: I remind the House, and the Conservative member who says "huh," that during the term of office of several years of the Conservative government under the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) the only step taken in terms of a transportation policy for Canada was the creation of a royal commission, which itself sat for six or seven years before reporting. That was the sum total of the development of a railway transportation policy from the party that now wants to say that somehow solutions should be instantaneous and implemented overnight. Hon. members will also notice that that party does not propose specific solutions but only agrees that the problem has been fairly stated by the government and that, therefore, solutions have to be found.

● (2030)

It is important that we find an appropriate mechanism for controlling the level of freight rates and relating them in some way to reasonable total costs and not leaving the railways free, as they have been largely under the law up to this point, to be limited only by competition. Where there is competition, and by not very satisfactory rules where there is no competition, rules which do not always hold the charges anywhere near total cost. We are not happy with that. A solution to that is what we are seeking. However, we will not pretend that the solution is easy. I challenge hon. members opposite to find one and put it forward if they in fact think it is so easy. It cannot be done.

These are important issues. And so is our pledge that there should be removal of inequities in freight rates, and we are going about this in the way the complex problem deserves.

If members opposite want to criticize, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) may be doing so much consultation with the provinces upon these issues that he is being that much more thorough in order to bring them along with the matters he is undertaking and studying. However, hon. members know full well if he were doing any less, that would be the front upon which the attack would be aimed. It is obvious he is doing exactly what he ought to in order to bring the provinces along to find solutions, in bringing about fair and equitable freight rates.

Members opposite talk in support of the principles of equity of freight rates. More specifically, I have heard them talk about the importance of and agreeing with the principle in our feed grains policy of producing equity in freight rates between meat and grain. They will say that, but not a word will they say about the manner in which they think it ought to be brought about, the issue that we obviously have to tackle in order to solve the problem.

The only solution of those who think they can do it safely politically is to suggest if there is a low cost freight rate on grain, then obviously a low rate on meat is desirable. However, this will involve further large payments from the treasury in order to support the rail costs that are involved over and above that low rate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) applauds. I have heard him say that this government ought not to spend so much, that it ought to cut back on spending, yet this would involve hundreds of millions of additional dollars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Rather than be concerned about that important issue, they will in their political way attempt to concern people about matters like the challenge to the Crowsnest rate. They put to the Minister of Transport the fact that I made some remarks about the Crowsnest rate. I would just like to say a word about what I did in fact say.

I can first say that no one is threatening the Crowsnest rate. In fact all I said was that in my opinion the rate at the low level was over-valued by farmers compared to receiving the same kind of benefit in a different way.

Let me just use the example of low freight rates for grain and meat as an example because some might think that in itself is a benefit to western Canada. That is not so because rates that are well below cost will still make it more likely that the bulkier or heavier commodity is moved farther than it would in other circumstances at rates that properly reflect costs. Therefore, the very question of the development of a livestock industry and processing of livestock in western Canada may depend upon appropriate rates which in fact reflect costs.

That is a serious proposition I put before hon. members, one we ought to be debating to try to determine the sort of program we should have in developing our transportation policy in this country. Those who want to agitate farmers about the Crowsnest rate should listen again to what I have said. No one is threatening the Crowsnest rate. I said clearly that no change should be tolerated except if farmers themselves see the benefit of the kind of change and agree to what is going on.

What we ought not obscure in this issue is the importance of knowing what it really costs to move particular products and to consider the economic impact upon development in one place or another by allowing that rail cost to be reflected, or hiding it in some form or another. That is the sort of important issue we have to face in trying to determine what kind of railway and freight structure we ought to have.

Hon. members have shown some concern in recent days, and certainly in the previous year, about the question of branch lines on the prairies. To a large extent we have allayed the bulk of that concern by putting into a basic rail network two thirds of the rail lines on the prairies. The remaining one third, almost all of the rest, we have dealt with by giving them protection for a further year. We would be prepared to extend that if the inquiry process we want to take on, region by region, is not in fact completed by that time. It is important that we not lose sight of the urgency of getting on with this job. It is not just a matter of determining which lines are not needed. The crucial issue is the determination and labelling of those lines which not only should remain, but which should be upgraded and built to a standard where they can carry fully loaded hopper cars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: That is the kind of significant thing we have to bear in mind in looking at this transportation question. Vast sums of money will have to be expended on capital improvements in the transportation industry, not only in air, but remarkably so in rail, in this next little while. The Conservatives did nothing but set up a royal commission that lasted for seven years. Therefore our transportation policy may take some months to develop. What is going to become evident as the Minister of Transport unveils and develops this policy is that it is designed to be a policy to serve all of Canada. The Minister of Transport has certainly shown interest in the area of the country from which I come by spending day after day dealing with the problems of western transportation and dealing with the western ministers of transport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: These are the major issues of policy. We will in fact find a way properly to control freight rates. We will find a way to do what can be done to remove inequities in freight rates in Canada. These are the major issues on which the opposition will press for results. I say boldly and plainly that before very much time has gone by the performance of this government, with this Minister of Transport, will justify to the full the pledges and promises which were made, and will give this country the kind of transportation policy it deserves.

[Mr. Lang.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to participate in this debate, particularly since we witnessed this afternoon the performance of two lieutenants apparently sent to bail out the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). I thought this was a transport debate. Apparently we are yet to hear from the Minister of Transport, who also spoke last Friday, but his arguments at that time certainly did not deal with transportation. They dealt with everything but the problem of transportation. That shows the attitude of this minister and why we are concerned about how that department is being administered. The minister is not running the department. That is our concern.

● (2040)

We heard a very good presentation by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson). He brought the debate on track. He concerned himself with transport problems. Why could not the Minister of Transport have done the same—after all, he is supposed to have the authority? He is head of the department and answers for it.

From time to time members have risen to question the minister about specific items. There is no point in elaborating upon them all, but I remember being concerned some years ago about the fact that locomotives were not equipped with flashers. I was told that a study was being conducted, but that is as far as I got. I was told that the cost of equipping locomotives with flashers was prohibitive—that it would amount to something like $700 per locomotive. I imagine it would be more like $2,000 today. Anyway, the minister said that studies were being conducted, and that is as far as the matter went. What was the result of those studies? What was the point in conducting them?

The transportation problem we face in Western Canada has already been well documented. Member after member has given an account of what has happened to shipments of cattle from western to eastern Canada in contrast to shipments of meat. As everyone knows, a conference was held in Calgary. It was supposed to seek solutions to the problems which have so long been irking the people of western Canada. The minister was told the nature of these grievances, as if he needed to be told; every year for the last 20 years successive Liberal governments have been told that the basic complaint is the existence of grave inequities in the freight rate structure.

To dramatize his concern the minister called a western conference, in the course of which all these difficulties were once again outlined. At the end of the conference, a communiqué was issued and the western spokesmen sat back and waited for further developments. The premiers who took part in this conference expected a lot from the minister. They said a break-through might finally have been achieved. From all indications, it should have been. But a minister must do something when an opportunity is presented to him. He cannot just sit on his hands.

I once had a teacher who told us in class, "If you cannot solve a problem, forget it. Otherwise you are like a hen sitting on a rotten egg. You will never hatch a chick out of it." The Minister of Transport just shrugs his shoulders while another minister bails him out. Then the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has to get involved because he is an authority on justice, an authority on the Wheat Board, and the be all and end all as far as transport is concerned.

One dictator in the cabinet is enough. I do not think we need another. The Minister of Justice has enough problems in his own department. He should leave transportation to the Minister of Transport. Why does he come out with transport proposals affecting Western Canada? We deal in more than agricultural products. There is sulphur, there is potash, there are minerals, all kinds of things. The Minister of Justice takes it upon himself to be the western spokesman. What a mess he is making of it. He himself started the debate on the Crowsnest pass agreement. No one else thought of tampering with it. The man who is supposed to be the western representative in the cabinet proposed doing away with the Crowsnest agreement because of the fact that cattlemen in Western Canada find themselves in a difficult position.

The government says, "Let us take this concession away from the grain farmers and give it to the cattlemen, because the cattlemen passed a resolution at their conference asking for extra consideration on the grounds that if there is a special rate for grain they should get a lower rate, too." Granted the cattlemen have reason to complain, but why take anything away from the grain farmers? For once they are getting an improved standard of living, and now the minister wants to take it away. And there is every indication that he will succeed.

Let us go back into history. There was a commission set up to inquire into transportation, and this commission came up with certain recommendations. That was some time ago. The minister talks about seven years. It is almost seven years now since the freeze was imposed. The freeze was put on in 1970 and it is coming to an end in 1975 by which time, maybe, that study should have been completed. The commission had one specific problem to deal with, and it has taken five years already. Another year is coming up rapidly, yet the minister has told us that a seven year period was too long for a transport study under a Conservative government. Why should we need that extra year? The government should have had a policy ready.

The reason I am taking part in this debate is that we have a block system and the minister has some responsibility for seeing that grain is moved. He says everything is rosy, but the facts are otherwise. Why is not greater use being made of the facilities at the Port of Churchill? Let me give an illustration of what I have in mind. The town of Norquay is closer to Churchill than are many communities in Assiniboia. Nevertheless the railways will not ship grain from Norquay though they are willing to do so from Assiniboia, perhaps as a reward for its electing a Liberal member. There is a shortage of boxcars. Everybody realizes we can transport grain from a large number of communities in Western Canada to Churchill and have the cars back within a couple of days. But they prefer to take the grain from distant communities; the cars take a week to go to Churchill and a week to come back. That is the way the system is being managed.

A few weeks ago I asked what was happening about freight rates. In the communities near Hudson Bay freight rates have shot up by 500 per cent, reaching an unrealistic level as far as many Canadians are concerned. We complain about 25 per cent. The government intervened and reduced the increase to 12½ per cent. This time the minister says he does not have the power to intervene. Yet when the increase of 25 per cent was in effect the minister did reduce it. So, what is he talking about when he says he does not have power under the existing act? I suggest the power is there, but there is no drive or willingness on the part of the government to act on these problems.

Let me illustrate what has happened in those small communities. They were getting their wholesale commodities in from Prince Albert. Before the increase went into effect on February 24, I believe it was, fresh meat came in at $1.89 per cwt. Smoked meat and bacon came in at $1.33 per cwt. and groceries came in under third class at $1.05. Then the railways came in with the new regulations. First of all they locked the rates altogether in one class, and then proceeded to impose the new rates. The new rate this time in respect of groceries jumped from $1.05 to $4.97. What kind of a percentage increase is that? This is much, much more than a 25 per cent increase, and no one needs a calculator to figure that one out.

The minister asks what our problem is and why the west is complaining. He says the government is doing everything it can within its power. I would ask the minister if the government is really doing everything in its power? If the government is concerned about western economic opportunities, and development in that part of the country, perhaps it should establish a branch within the Department of Transport which could work very closely with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

There are possibilities for development in this country, particularly in the west, but we need some co-ordination, and we must have some willingness on the part of the government to tackle these problems. In all the years I have been in this House I have never heard anyone complain when preferential freight rates have been adopted for the Atlantic region. We all know this is an area which requires special attention, and we are willing to give people there that assistance. I think the same thing is true of western Canada.

I suggest that what we are concerned about is when the government gives this type of assistance to that small circle in central Canada, which has a natural geographic preference in any event. The government does everything it can, from every angle, to improve the lot of those people in that small area. The government always looks after them, and I find that this has been true over the years. However, when it comes to improving the situation in western Canada or in the Atlantic area, the government is not quite so willing to act, and I think there is general agreement in that regard among hon. members in this House, no matter which province they represent.

The situation which exists in respect of it being cheaper to ship from central Canada to Vancouver than it is to Regina has been pointed out on many occasions. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has asked what the members and the people from British Columbia will say to preferential rates for the prairies. I suggest this does not have to be the federal policy. It would be all right for provincial governments to take this stand in order to improve the economic environment of individual provinces, but I do not think it should be federal government policy to discriminate deliberately against any region. Even if the government moves only one-half a step at a time toward resolving these discriminatory rates, that will be a move in the right direction.

The cost of shipping freight from central Canada to Regina should at no time be higher than the rate to Vancouver, but that is the situation that exists today. Even if the cost were the same it would not be fair, but at least then we would be removing half the discrimination, and instead of having a half a dozen burrs we would have only three.

I could go on to describe what is happening in general transportation policy so far as Churchill is concerned. Several years ago there was an item in the Blue Book in respect of development at Churchill. Everybody got excited because certain funds were allocated for this purpose. Because of a squabble that began between the officials of the department and some members of the Hudson Bay Route Association, that development never proceeded.

We now may well have a similar situation in disguise, but unless the government intends to proceed with its announced intention there is no point in fooling the people. A tremendous savings could be effected through the use of Churchill as an export port. There is a railway in existence at the moment that could be utilized. The CPR should certainly be allowed running rights by the CNR, and the CNR should be forced to make use of this line. We should always follow the shortest route to the port requiring the shortest period of travel time. I suggest there is no need for a duplication of services or the abandonment of many of these particular rail lines.

After five years of study what did this government come up with? It has put a freeze until the year 2,000 on abandonment in relation to some 13,000 miles of rail line. There is still some 6,000 miles of rail lines in question. We are not concerned about the 500 odd miles on which there is agreement for abandonment. Those are not the lines that one should be concerned about at this time. Nor should we be concerned now about the 13,000 miles that will be frozen, but it should be of immediate concern to hon. members that 6,000 miles are still in question.

What should be our immediate priorities in respect to this proposed rail line abandonment? I suggest the government must indicate to the communities concerned what is planned. There certainly must be co-operation between the federal government, the provincial governments and the local communities. The government must make known its intention in respect of upgrading these lines.

This involves another matter. No one has ever proven to me, or to many of the people involved, that there was ever anything wrong with the roadbeds in question. I suggest that the railways over a period of time have allowed those roadbeds to deteriorate, always keeping in the back of their minds the desire to abandon certain lines. Do hon. members know what transpired during the last five-year freeze on rail line abandonments? I suggest all this did was give the railways time to allow a few more lines to deteriorate to the point that they should be abandoned. That is all that came out of the last freeze.

A study in respect of all these problems should have been carried out and completed by now. All these communities should have been asked to state their problems and how they think they should be resolved. They should have been asked how they think the railways could meet the proposed highway programs which will have to be met if the railways are to discontinue this service. These people should know what facilities will be available for servicing their communities, but nothing like that has ever been indicated.

The railways have held general meetings at certain central points, at which a fast talking public relations man has attempted to illustrate to the few people who were able to attend, perhaps 100 miles from the community affected, that everything is going to be all right, just give the railways the opportunity and they will prove it. It has never been proven that the service has been improved as a result of the abandonment of any rail line. That has never been proven to the satisfaction of the people involved; those people have had to live with the situation.

We are talking about 6,000 miles of proposed rail line abandonment. That is a lot of line, and a lot of people are affected. This is the type of irritation that must be corrected. Transportation has been a very important factor in the development of the west. Transportation can be made to work for the west and for all of Canada, but we need a minister and a government that are willing to come up with solutions to the problems and act on them.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to limit my remarks to 15 minutes or less, partially because I would like to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) have an additional five minutes to defend his position and that of his department. I think he is going to need every minute he can get tonight to defend that position in view of the record of that department.

I had intended to begin my remarks with a reference to the statement by the minister in this House on Friday. I might say that there are 5,000 French Canadians living in my riding in British Columbia. Having listened this afternoon to the very constructive and statesmanlike address to this House by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), I have changed my mind. I do not think it is useful or necessary to dwell on that subject when there are a number of people in this House who can conduct themselves in that manner and who can avoid this issue. I wish the Minister of Transport were one of them because I suspect the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe spoke not only for me but also for my party, and I think for many members on the other side of the House.

● (2100)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Since I came to this House I have always wondered why British Columbia was prosperous. I agonized about this until this afternoon when the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) told me why.

It is not difficult; it is because of the policies of the Minister of Transport when he was Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. That is what happened.

It was because of all that wonderful industrial development which came about. I should like to tell the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas that the province of British Columbia in 1973 received one per cent of the amount of DREE money that went out from Ottawa. Out of an amount of $450 million we received $4 million. Between 1969 and 1973 the total amount received by British Columbia in DREE grants was $16 million while the federal government was spending $500 million a year. Many people talk about separatism in this country. I agree that there is a lack of understanding between one part of the country and the other, but it is a two-way street. When I hear a member from Ontario talk about that it seems to me that he has less understanding of my province than I have of his.

I also listened with great interest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) most energetically and eloquently defend the Minister of Transport tonight. In fact he was so eloquent and energetic that I suspect he is preaching for a call over there. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I would not be unhappy with that switch. Today the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) suggested that we need time in which to develop these policies. He said we require time in which to look at it and to do something about it.

I wish to give this House a brief history. There was something called the Darling report, which is a pretty significant part of the minister's responsibility. This report came out in 1970. Back on May 26, 1971, in this House the then hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster asked the Minister of Transport of that date, the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), a question on this matter, to which the minister replied:

> I agree that it is a 'Darling' report. We will do our very best to implement as quickly as possible those parts of it which seem to have public favour.

Then again in respect of the same report on June 8, 1971, the minister gave this reply to a question:

> Just as soon as we have these views, government policy will be formulated along these lines. I would hesitate to give a time frame, but perhaps by the autumn of this year might be a reasonable expectation.

Those were the answers by the minister in respect of the Darling report at that time. That is the kind of action we received from the previous minister. I can understand his defending this Minister of Transport so vigorously because his record is not much to write home about. As we move through this time frame we come to the present minister.

In respect of the Darling report, in 1973 the present minister had some comment to make. I cannot find his comments in my papers but I know he said something in 1973 about bringing down government policy very shortly. The reason many of us are concerned about the Darling report and its implementation—and the minister has indicated his interest in seeing it implemented—is that we have lost control of our shipping for a very long time.

If that report were implemented 40,000 jobs would be created in this country, at a time of rising unemployment. There is no doubt this is one of the specific things that need not wait for an over-all study and could be undertaken quickly, but this has not been done. That is one of the criticisms by the opposition. It not only would create 40,000 jobs but would give some impact to the Law of the Sea Conference. We are now going into this conference and there is a fairly good chance that we will have a 200-mile limit. What will Canada do in terms of coastal shipping? We will still have foreign navigation bottoms off our coast carrying Canadian goods. The implementation of the recommendations contained in this report is long overdue. We now have a second Darling report in respect of deep sea shipping. Will it take as long a period to consider this report before we will have a Canadian merchant marine? I expect this will take even longer.

Another aspect of the minister's policy is that it is easier to buy a ship in this country if you do not buy it for Canadian purposes than it is if you are a Canadian user of that vessel, because under the Export Development Corporation the terms for the borrowing of money are much more advantageous. The Darling report pointed out that this is a major failure in terms of our policy.

I wish to refer briefly to another phase of transportation. I refer to the ferry system in this country. Under the present ferry system most of the ferries are subsidized in one way or another by the federal government. The Trans-Canada Highway begins where I come from, on the coast of British Columbia. The only gap is across the Straits of Georgia. Not a dime has been received from the federal government in the form of a subsidy in respect of that ferry system. There are construction subsidies but there is nothing in terms of a subsidy for operation or for the building of terminal facilities. I know the answer of the minister is that because it is not an interprovincial ferry it does not come under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You never asked us.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, I have. The ferry running between Tobermory and South Baymouth is heavily subsidized by the government. A large amount of money is spent in this country in the subsidization of ferry systems, but not a dime is spent on the largest ferry service in the country.

We have more ships in the British Columbia ferry service than there are in the Canadian navy. We need a little help in order to have decent transportation, and we are not receiving this from the minister or from the department. Separatism works both ways. The mountains become very high when the people find that it costs $5 to go from Prince Edward Island to the mainland, and costs $10 to $15 to go from Vancouver to Victoria on the coast. There is no reason for that kind of discrimination in a country where we are trying to keep together, in a country in which we are trying to have one side appreciate the other.

In conclusion I should like to say a few words about small harbours. There has been a new impact in terms of harbours. People are now interested in ensuring that our rivers are clean, that we can fish in them, and that we can use them for recreational purposes. Yet the sole interest of the harbour commissions in this country—and that is certainly true of the one where I came from on the Fraser river—is in harbour development for commercial purposes. It is high time we amended the legislation to allow either for elections or appointments to the boards.

I do not wish to take up any more time of the House, and I am sure that this will not make anyone unhappy. Let me just say that in terms of an over-all transportation policy it is no excuse for the minister to say that he has not had time, or that he knows that the problems are difficult but he will come to them because, Mr. Speaker, we have had an election on this issue, a very interesting election.

An hon. Member: And you did not do very well.

Mr. Leggatt: One of the reasons we did not do very well was the kind of promises that were made to the Canadian people by my friends in the government. They promised a policy, they promised some action and some leadership. In the speech from the throne in the twenty-ninth parliament they went so far as to promise an improvement in the total transportation system so basic to overcoming the problems of distance. In the twenty-ninth parliament, on February 27, the minister promised that steps would be taken to end discrimination in freight rates.

Then, on March 7, the minister said in the House that transportation is a problem so important to the future of the country that we should at least look into each others eyes and say what we really think about this matter. Finally the minister told us that he really thought on January 22, 1975, when he said that we have no over-all policy, that it is still in a mess and more a mess than we think.

What kind of a reaction can members of the opposition have to such a statement in the House? I appreciate the minister's frankness, but where is the leadership? That is what we are looking for, Mr. Speaker. It is all right to say that things are in a mess, but you must try to do something about that. That is what we are going to get in the next election, another promise.

An hon. Member: There will be 16 less NDP members after the next election.

Mr. Leggatt: Anybody who counts those chickens before they are hatched is usually in a good deal of trouble, and has an element of self-confidence which is entirely unjustified.

In any event, that is the record of the minister and of the government. At least we have an acknowledgement of the mess, but no acknowledgement whatsoever that anything will be done about it.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes tonight to answer my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), just to make sure that facts are recorded in Hansard. As for the rest, I intend to talk about transportation problems, and not deliver a Sermon on the Mount.

There is one thing I never heard in the hon. member's speech, namely the word "transportation". I entirely agree with him on the principles put forward, but I wish to make sure that there is no misunderstanding; if you refer to Hansard, to what happened last Friday when I talked about racism, you will notice that I was mentioning an article published in the Ottawa Journal under the title "Only Marchand is amused", as if I was amused to see my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), and Mr. Kerr who resigned in Ontario, as if I found it funny. That is something extremely nasty. I believe every opposition member should agree with me that I did not do any such thing.

I did not. I talked about a journalist who was being racist, but I will come back to that later, I do not want it to be the topic of this speech.

Mr. Speaker, for the information of hon. members, and since that is what the speech of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe was about, here is what I said, and I shall quote the English version to make things probably easier:

[English]

This is on page 3896 of Hansard of March 7. I said:

Mr. Speaker, to be fair I must say that I am not referring to my hon. colleague—

I was talking about the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse).

—behind me nor to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Then, later on I went on to say:

Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member was justified—

I was referring to the hon. member for South Shore.

—in responding as forcefully as he did because he could have felt he was attacked. In that case, I apologize. I am not talking about hon. members but about this article written by a person named Fisher, who is often in the gallery. That does not concern you, therefore I simply say that people may discuss the transport policy, may attack me. I never feel—I have been attacked by some of my friends and I never held it against them—

I was looking at my friend, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), at that time.

—on the contrary, I believe we remained good friends. We should all agree, every time racism is exploited, to proscribe it everywhere in Canada, because this country is worth living in. There is no racism where people do not tolerate it.

This is what I said. I accuse no one in the House, and I apologize if I was not well understood. I think that with regard to the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), if I had said what he said I said, I would agree with him, but I did not say it. This is in Hansard, and I think that as a former judge he should consider as a piece of evidence what I just produced here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister accept a question relating to what he is reported to have said outside the House? What he said outside the House is something to this effect. The minister says look where the questions have been going during the last month. I have been putting a lot of those questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). Why did the minister say that, if he did not mean to indicate that the Official Opposition was attacking ministers because they were French Speaking? Is that not what he intended to convey outside the House?

● (2120)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is honest. The only one I accuse of racism is the newspaperman who was in the gallery. He is the only one, and I was referring specifically to that man who told me personally that I should not be a member of this cabinet because I was not fluent enough in English.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, yes, and I know that, so you have no reason not to believe it. I think that I formally excluded all hon. members of this House, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Perhaps I should not have approached it that way. You may say that it is a bad way of approaching such a problem, but I never accused the opposition of racism in this debate on transportation, and I do not believe it exists. I think that hon. members have tried to deal with the transportation problem because they are concerned about it. I do not accuse anyone. I am accused of not apologizing, but I did apologize to the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) if he thought that I was accusing him of being a racist.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this is an important question. It is important to the minister, and it is important to me. I asked the minister whether in fact he said outside the House what he was reported to have said in relation to the questions being put. Did he say, in effect, look where the questions have been going in the last month? Did he ask who has been under attack? Did he say it was the Minister of Transport, the President of the Treasury Board, and Mr. Pratte?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I was speaking of exactly the same person.

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize because this is a little irregular, but it is very important, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister say outside the House what I have just summarized? If he made these remarks relating to the question period and to the questions which are put, how can he expect us to put any other interpretation but that he has suggested outside the House that we have been deliberately attacking ministers in the House because they are French speaking?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is an honourable man. He will take my word that I never referred to the House. On the contrary, the only place where it is clear is here, and it is in Hansard. When I was talking outside the House—and some day I will say it openly—I excluded the House and I excluded the whole opposition, and I say that the debate did not take place on racism. I regret, but I do not think hon. members have the right to make an accusation of that kind. I do not believe that the hon. member is a racist.

I wish to talk about transportation, and I do not feel that I was dealt with justly on this matter. I wanted the situation to be clear, and I tried to clarify it.

I have been accused of having recourse to my friend the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), the former minister of transport, to help me out this afternoon. I did it first because he is intelligent. He knows something about transport, and as I had already spoken on Friday, I thought perhaps there would be a better balance this way. I know that I have shortcomings, but I do not think that fear is one of them.

I do not think it will be a big problem for me to talk for another ten minutes. I can do this if you want to sit and listen. This is not the problem. The problem is a problem of transportation. We promised during the election that we would transform the system; we were not satisfied with the system, we are not yet satisfied with the system. But the main opposition complaint—and during the debate I understood that I should have been more careful about this—is that I have not kept the House sufficiently well informed about the kind of work that is being done in my ministry. This is something that the opposition could not have found out by themselves without being told. I will think about that to see to what extent it is feasible to remedy this.

I think it would be interesting for hon. members to know of all those who are at work right now on very specific problems, trying to find solutions so that we can have a national transportation policy. Let us call it transportation policies for Canada because there is no doubt that the policy for the Maritimes is not the policy for the Arctic, it is not the policy for Quebec, it is not the policy for Ontario nor for the west, and it is not the policy for British Columbia. This means that we have to find solutions to each of those problems, and I am working on them.

Hon. members say that it takes a long time, and they are right, but just look at the history of this department—not only this department, but almost everything we have ever done here in the House. Just think how long it took—and I remember my hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) asking when we would produce the act—to create the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I think that is the role of the opposition and I do not complain, but the MacPherson report took seven years before being tabled in the House, and we waited about ten years, or not far from ten years for Mr. Justice Bernier in Quebec to complete a report on pilotage.

If there has been a mistake I think this is where it is; perhaps I could have kept the House better informed, not of results but of what we have been doing. When it is said that nothing has been done, I do not believe it, and the opposition does not believe it. That is probably the right way to attack the government, and I would probably do the same thing.

We have done a lot of things in the field of transport in British Columbia. My hon. friend opposite suggested that we look at regional development because he considered that too much was being given to eastern Canada and not enough to the west. Do not forget that British Columbia has had things the maritimes did not get. Just remember Roberts Bank; just remember the money we spent on the harbour in Vancouver, and the development of the harbour in the north, Prince Rupert, the opening of roads, and so forth. If we are going to have a balance sheet in this country in order to know which section of this country is getting most from the federal government, if we are going to try to do that we will kill this country because everyone profits in this country, but not all in the same way.

Of course in the maritimes they have the subsidy of 50 per cent for all westbound goods.

Mr. Stanfield: Not all.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not all, excuse me, but on a large number of goods, by truck or by train. We still have the intra-subsidy, which of course is being phased out. The Port of Halifax is being developed faster than ever before. The average income in Halifax is now higher than in Montreal, and that is true also of Saint John, New Brunswick.

Certain things have changed, but I do not claim that we have changed everything. We have the problem of the ferries in the maritimes. We have been working with the government of Newfoundland and we are going to have two new ships, and a new ship for Wood Island and Prince Edward Island. We have brought back the boat that goes between Digby and Saint John because the CP refused to operate it effectively. We are solving the problem of the ferry between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor in the United States. We have done a lot of things for that region, Mr. Speaker.

We have worked with provincial ministers and officials and have accomplished a great deal. We are working on highways, amongst other things. In Quebec the Mirabelle airport will be open in a few months time. Of course some people do not like airports, but there is nothing I can do about that.

I was listening to the speech of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and I should like to tell him that one month from now Air Canada, at the request of the government of Saskatchewan, is going to produce a plan for a regional air carrier. He did not know that, but I know it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister permit a question in that regard?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am talking about Saskatchewan, but it will join Brandon too. That is just to tell you that we have been working with the prairie provinces on the question of our national airlines and air carriers.

Mr. Epp: Who will be the carrier?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not know. In many fields the CTC has more power than I do and in this case they make the decision. So we are working—

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Some hon. Members: No!

An hon Member: Sit down!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): In my own office we are working hard on this policy. There is a special core group studying all the problems of transportation. The deputy minister has an advisory committee, there is a task force, an interdepartmental participation committee, federal-provincial consultations and consultations with industry, trucking, railways and airlines. We are trying to put all that together to formulate a policy in order to serve Canadians.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Speaker, a general statement is made that nothing is done in the area of transportation. When I said transportation was a mess I meant that coordination was not there. It is still not there for that matter, and that was the work I had to continue when Mr. Jamieson was Minister of Transport.

The CTC is a kind of Crown corporation with enormous independence. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is a corporation almost equally independent. Air Canada has even the authority to buy houses in Barbados from what I can see, and without my authorization. The CNR is an extremely independent company, and the same goes for the Northern Transportation Corporation. Then you have three great authorities within the department—for air, for land and for sea. I heard a Progressive Conservative member say this afternoon that all that is very funny but I know there are people who put their hearts and souls into trying to find the best system possible for Canada, the one which will make this country even more prosperous. For example, we have the whole far north to develop, we are making plans to build a cargo that will also be an ice-breaker and will be able to help develop the whole far north of Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the brief time I have I should like to devote my remarks to Air Canada operations, but first I should like to correct some comments made by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on Friday, March 7. At page 3906 of Hansard, he said:

> The safety record of Air Canada is similar to the safety record of the CNR, . . . members of the Conservative Party . . .

He was referring to me.

> seem to get some kind of sadistic satisfaction from continually accusing the airline in respect of its safety performance.

The hon. member for St. Boniface seems to be mixed up. Last February during an adjournment debate he remarked that I was to be lauded for my concern about passenger safety. He changed his mind over that, fast. Then he went on to say that he was amazed at people like me continuing to paint the worst possible picture of our country's flag carrier. He said I had never taken the trouble to accept an invitation to inspect Air Canada's servicing facilities. We have been over all this before, Mr. Speaker, even on April 23, 1974. I have spoken numerous times in the House on the subject and I have travelled to Dorval and reviewed the situation of employees there, many of whom I am in constant touch with, and I do not know why we are bringing this up again, Mr. Speaker.

These remarks in regard to safety are not mine; they come from unions, from employees, from newspaper articles. When I spoke in the adjournment debate last week I referred to articles like the one in the Montreal Gazette, a headline story on air safety. These articles do not refer only to Air Canada but to all regional airlines. This is the type of document the hon. member and the hon. minister should be reading.

I have here a document sent to the director of maintenance quality signed by eight shop inspectors at Dorval. They state:

● (2140)

Attached to this letter, please find a submission related to the unit and Support Shops Inspections Functions. It is a critical report presented in the interest of achieving a more effective inspection program and hopefully to create an awareness of an existing low morale condition.

There follow four pages of a condemning attack on Air Canada dealing with all kinds of problems with audits, manuals and what-have-you.

I also have a union document which states that the supervisor's only concern is in trying to run a scheduled operation at all costs. The results of this attitude causes one of their larger problems and one of the most frequent violations of the collective agreement, namely, safety. The collective agreement is quite clear in that management is specifically charged with the duty of initiating and monitoring all practices necessary to ensure the safety and health of employees, as well as ensuring the safety of all equipment. They go to say that because of the attitude of first level supervision and refusal to initiate safety the shop committee is handling the problem.

These are not my comments, Mr. Speaker. These are the comments in a union publication put out at Dorval Airport. This is why we are calling for a full scale investigation into Air Canada. Instead of giving us a series of alibis and excuses as to why the government should not do anything, the minister should go to Dorval and speak to these people.

Let me give another example. Members of parliament are continually receiving telegrams about the air finance branch in Winnipeg.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. McKenzie: In the twenty-ninth parliament we had the same problems with the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg. We are now in the thirtieth parliament and we are still asking the same questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. Is the parliamentary secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am addressing my question through you. Why is it that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) did not visit Air Canada when asked to do so?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary knows that is not a point of order.

Mr. McKenzie: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, in the twenty-ninth parliament we were discussing the Air Canada finance branch at Winnipeg. We are now in the thirtieth parliament and still discussing them, and we are still not getting any action. I have received dozens of telegrams and letters, and this is the reason we are asking for a full scale investigation into the Air Canada operation.

Let me discuss safety. I have a report from an Air Canada pilot which he sent to the vice-president of flight operations:

This letter is a letter that I have been trying not to write. However my conscience or possibly sub-conscience will not permit me to do otherwise. I might add that I ran into Capt. Lloyd and was given a little gentle persuasion. You will notice that I have gone beyond the incidents and vented by feelings and opinions of Air Canada today . . .

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize you have to put the vote on this matter now, but I simply wish to give notice that at the first opportunity tomorrow I intend to raise a question of privilege with regard to the remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) outside the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty pursuant to Section (9) of Standing Order 58 to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. The question, therefore, is on the motion in the name of Mr. Mazankowski. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Mazankowski), which was negatived on the following divisions:

Tuesday, March 11, 1975

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—REMARKS OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN YESTERDAY'S DEBATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the remarks made last evening by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He referred to his comments on the subject of racism inside and outside the House last Friday.

I raise this issue with deep sorrow. I do not wish to belabour the point and would much rather put it to rest.

[English]

Last evening in the House the Minister of Transport stated, and he repeated it, that he had not charged any member of the House with racism. He kept emphasizing it and returning to what he had said in the House on Friday. Last evening, referring to what he had said outside the House on Friday, in response to questions from me the Minister of Transport said the following, and I quote from page 3963 of Hansard:

> I think that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is an honourable man. He will take my word that I never referred to the House. On the contrary, the only place where it is clear is here, and it is in Hansard. When I was talking outside the House—and some day I will say it openly—I excluded the House and I excluded the whole opposition, and I say that the debate did not take place on racism.

● (1410)

I have listened to the tape of what the minister said outside the House on Friday, and I quote him again in my admirable French:

The minister was speaking.

> It means that I was here in 1965. So I have witnessed the Lamontagne affair, the Favreau affair, the Tremblay affair, and wherever there were French Canadians, they tried to attack them. And whom are they attacking now in the House? The Minister of Transport, Chrétien, Yves Pratte. Right? Well, all I have done is indicate to them that we are aware of it. Because if you look up the oral question period for the past month, you will see that this is what is going on.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the minister was clearly referring to the House and to the question period. He said last evening that he was only referring to Mr. Fisher and an editorial in the Ottawa Journal, but they do not ask questions in the House of Commons. I call the attention of the Chair once again to the use of the words "en chambre". These remarks could only be interpreted by the viewers on television, the listeners on radio, especially French-speaking listeners and viewers, as meaning that in the opinion of the minister the opposition was trying to injure or destroy ministers because they are Francophone.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: The charge is absurd: we have paid a fair amount of attention to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp), to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

An hon. Member: Even Jim Richardson.

Mr. Stanfield: But I say that it is not acceptable for the minister to make that kind of statement outside the House and to pretend inside the House that his remarks outside the House about the question period were not made and did not relate to members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister is in this position, I submit: in the House he has not charged any member of the opposition with racism, but outside the House that is the only interpretation one can draw from his remarks. The listeners and viewers who heard him and believed him must believe now that Francophone ministers are under attack because they are Francophone. That amounts to a charge of racism and I think the minister will agree with me, otherwise he would not have gone to such lengths to ask me to believe, last evening, that he had never made any reference to the House when he spoke outside the House on Friday. I cannot accept, and I suggest that the House cannot accept, a minister taking one attitude in the House and another attitude outside on a question such as this.

One can never catch up with this kind of statement having been made to the public: that harm is done. But I believe the minister is an honourable man. When he said last evening that on Friday he had not referred to what was going on in the House, and when he said last evening that on Friday he had excluded the House specifically, he misled the House; but I do not say, and I do not believe, that he did it deliberately. I assume that he forgot precisely what he had said on Friday and that perhaps in his enthusiasm at that moment he got carried away outside the House on Friday.

But I do say that it is a breach of the privileges of the House for the minister to go outside the House and suggest to the public that members of the opposition are trying to injure Francophone ministers in the House during the question period, simply because those ministers are Francophone, and then to come back into the House and say that outside the House he never said any such thing. I repeat, I believe the minister is an honourable man, and I ask him to withdraw the inference in the charges that he made against members of all opposition parties last Friday outside the House and which, last evening, he denied having made.

Mr. Speaker, I think the minister has committed a breach of privilege but my main concern is to have an end to this whole unhappy episode.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I presume you are accepting the question of privilege as presented. I shall therefore limit myself to a few brief comments. I believe the way in which the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has explained the facts is honest and I have no quarrel with it.

Mr. Speaker, when I rose on a point of order yesterday, I made it very clear that I did not feel that anyone had racist tendencies in this House, or tried to attack Francophones strictly because they are Francophones. That part, I believe, was made clear to the House yesterday. I believe the only point the Leader of the Opposition has made is that outside the House I inferred there were racist goings-on in the House. If that is the case, then I understand that he should link the two together and I am willing to withdraw my words without any restrictions. I am convinced that no one has attacked me in my duties as Minister of Transport because I am a Francophone, nor any of my colleagues, and the use of the word "House" had another meaning for me at that time. In any event, I am in the wrong and not my colleagues opposite. I have always understood that there are not just hon. members in the House. Be that as it may, I withdraw what I said and recognize that the Leader of the Opposition is right in his interpretation.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances, I am sure it is not necessary to prolong the matter by adding, although I should perhaps do so for the record, that the nature of the question of privilege raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was most interesting and important. As the House knows, it was not followed by a motion asking for action of the Chair. In any case, it seems to me that its intention or declaration was equally well met, and that would seem to have disposed of the matter finally and very forcibly.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS TO SEEK A CONSENSUS OF VARIOUS GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Finance. As he is not here, I will wait until he enters the chamber.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to inform the Leader of the Opposition that the Minister of Finance is engaged with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States at lunchtime and perhaps will not be here in time for his questions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, since the matter I am about to raise comes under the jurisdiction of the Prime Minister, perhaps I might direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Minister of Finance has recognized that strikes provoke more unemployment and as he has admitted that without some kind of national consensus on inflation and income restraints this country will face prolonged and bitter industrial strife, can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that before Easter he, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance will present to the House a full report on the consensus talks and a clear outline of what the government wants to achieve. Will he do that before the Easter recess?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an undertaking that we will report before Easter. These conversations have involved various ministers and members of the community at large, employers, trade unions, consumer groups, and so on. I know these talks are reaching the point where it will be desirable to enter upon the second stage. It would be the desire of the government to proceed with the second stage after making a public announcement, but I am not absolutely certain whether it will be possible to do this before the Easter break.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the first stage is nearing termination, perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could take the House into his confidence just a wee bit and tell us what this stage is, the first stage that has just about terminated.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it has been a very useful first stage. I have not had the privilege of being able to participate in these discussions because of my added responsibilities at the moment as Acting Prime Minister. But I have talked with my colleagues, who have said they received offers of co-operation from all groups in the community. That, I think, is the first stage.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I know that the House leader has been very busy as Acting Prime Minister. I assume, since this question comes under the general jurisdiction of the Prime Minister, that there have been discussions in the government on the precise purpose of this first stage. Can the Acting Prime Minister not tell the House what this first stage is all about? Does it involve more than simple assurance of co-operation? Can he tell the House briefly and succinctly what it is, in this first stage, on which the government has been asking for co-operation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and other colleagues of mine have explained this to the Leader of the Opposition on many occasions. He seems to be expecting something that is not there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition seems to have forgotten that his particular approach was rejected by the population. We are pursuing a procedure which we believe will bring better results and be more acceptable. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will have a sufficiently open and flexible mind to understand a different approach.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT FROM MEDIATOR ON POSSIBILITY OF EARLY SETTLEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question for the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government been advised by the mediator mediating the Longshoremen's strike if a negotiated settlement which will permit the movement of grain and other commodities will be arrived at within approximately, the next 48 hours.

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if I may reply, I should like to report to the hon. member that Mr. Kelly, the Assistant Deputy Minister, is now in Vancouver. He has met both parties and is carrying on further discussions. He is actively mediating at the moment.

Mr. Murta: I wish to ask the Acting Minister of Labour if he could get in touch with Mr. Kelly this afternoon, review the situation and report back no later than today as to whether there will be a settlement within the next two days. I say the next 48 hours because of the urgency of the situation at Vancouver. Will the acting minister get in touch with him today and inform the House as to specifically what the government is going to do, making a statement some time this afternoon or this evening?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the way the hon. member describes the situation, it becomes almost clearly impossible for a mediator to do his job. I should ask the hon. member to let the mediator do his job. I am convinced Mr. Kelly is as keen as all other Canadians on reaching a settlement as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the acting minister's reply raises another question. I now ask the Acting Minister of Labour in all seriousness how long he feels the mediator will need before a report can be made to the House? Surely to God the minister can answer that.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED NEED FOR NEW BUDGET IN VIEW OF INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. According to figures released today, compared with a year ago last month, unemployment in Canada increased from 6.8 per cent in February 1974 to 8.6 per cent in February 1975. In real terms, that represents a growth in unemployment from 635,000 to 839,000. Does the government intend to recognize the seriousness of this unemployment situation by bringing in a new budget soon with the prime purpose of generating employment in this country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government, of course, keeps the situation under constant review. There has been no decision to have a new budget nor any decision not to have one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: As the Minister of Finance has said on several occasions, at the moment the effects of the budget that was approved a few months ago are still working through the system. Until the results are clear, it would be unwise to make a definite decision as to a new budget.

Mr. Broadbent: It is working through the system like a dose of salts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO NEW PROGRAMS TO INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As housing starts last month were down some 44 per cent from the rate for the same month last year, running at an annual rate for this year of only 156,000 units, which is substantially below the minimum target of 210,000 set by the minister, does the minister have any new program in mind to provide the needed housing in Canada soon and also to provide jobs for the lumber industry which is so badly affected at this time?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concern about the low rate of starts. It is difficult to compare with last year which was a record year. This year certainly is not. One of the difficulties has been a slackening of demand. There is some existing housing stock which is being sold. We have programs that are functioning. We have other programs that will function if hon. members will co-operate in getting them through committee and through the House so that we can get to work.

Mr. Broadbent: Since in 1970 when we were confronted with a similar situation in terms of unemployment the minister's department directly financed some 42 per cent of the total housing starts, a marked increase over previous years, and since his present budget proposes to finance only 21 per cent of the starts for next year, I would ask the minister whether he has any plans to inject substantial amounts of increased capital into the housing market so as to take direct responsibility instead of relying on a system of incentives to get new housing under way?

Mr. Danson: If the hon. member really appreciated the scope of the existing program he would know that it was designed to bring a further $1 billion into the housing market without using public funds, and he would help in speeding up the process in getting the necessary legislation through.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO ARRANGEMENTS FOR COMPENSATION TO THALIDOMIDE VICTIMS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Following a question asked in 1973 about the victims of thalidomide, the minister had suggested that he had already had talks with Canadian manufacturers of that drug, and that he hoped to be able to give details on the nature of the agreement in the near future. In view of the time elapsed since then, is the minister now in a position to tell the House, for the guidance of the victims of the drug, whether they can still hope for fair compensation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised at the hon. member's question, since I have already answered similar ones in the House in 1973, and I answered a question from the hon. member for Joliette a few weeks ago. An arrangement was made which is still available to the parents of thalidomide victims. These measures were announced through a press release in 1973. They are still available to these parents. So I am very surprised to see that the hon. member does not seem to be aware of the arrangements that were made then and that are still in force.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

How is it that some of the victims of that drug are still not able to get answers or a satisfactory settlement from the companies concerned?

Mr. Lalonde: First of all, if there are specific cases to which the hon. member is referring, I shall be happy to be informed of them and to discuss them with him. But the cases which were on the headlines of newspapers are those of parents who preferred to go to court in the United States rather than making a private arrangement. Of course, nobody can force someone to make an amicable arrangement if he prefers to go to court and that is what happened in this particular case.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—DATE WHEN FIRST REQUEST MADE FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion. I should like to ask him whether he was aware in the summer or fall of 1972, when he was Minister of Transport, that there were allegations of illegal conduct involving the activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission and, specifically, whether he received a letter from Hamilton City Councillor Herman Turkstra dated September, 1972, requesting that there be an inquiry into the activities of the Commission?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to answer the question but in the interests of correct parliamentary procedure I should like some guidance from the Chair.

An hon. Member: Oh!

An hon. Member: Answer the question!

Mr. Jamieson: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether a minister can be asked about matters which are not within his responsibilities. I repeat, I am quite prepared to answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has put a question which is related to the minister's responsibilities as they were at the time the question was effective. The minister raises a valid point of order. I submit that responsibility for the Ministry or Transport now rests with another minister. Questions relating to ministerial responsibility ought to be directed to the minister who currently holds the portfolio. It might well be that a minister who was several years ago responsible for matters which were the subject of questioning would not, subsequently, be a minister and for that reason not be among those to whom questions in the House can be addressed.

Mr. Nowlan: On the sort of point of order raised by the minister, Mr. Speaker, in view of the very last statement made by Your Honour about the difficulty, I would say that if ministers are not responsible for the same ministry, they are still administering this government, this land, so obviously one should be able to raise questions. There has been an issue raised in this House for the last couple of weeks involving activities which come under the present Minister of Transport or the Department of the Solicitor General and one of the issues is just when did knowledge of some of these details come to this administration or the previous administration. While certainly I could not ask questions of ministers no longer in the House in any capacity, if there is a minister here I do not understand why a question as framed asking what was within the knowledge of the minister while he was minister is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The House ought not to get itself into a dialogue over this point of order. The fact is that the rules surrounding the question period give members the privilege or the right, whatever they may wish to call it, of directing questions to ministers in the House pertaining to their responsibilities at the moment. Questions directed at any minister have to touch at least on his responsibility at the time the question is being asked and not at the time of some occasion in the past.

Mr. Nowlan: I shall not prolong the question period at this point, Mr. Speaker, but I want to make it crystal clear, in view of the ruling, that certainly from the nature of this country and the question of privilege raised by my leader earlier today we may not now direct to the former Minister of Transport questions involving a question which now affects the present Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the present Minister of Transport, and make it perfectly clear that I am asking him questions as Minister of Transport and not as any pretended cultural czar—

Some hon. Members: Cheap!

Mr. Nowlan: —did he have any conversations with his predecessor in that department in September or after the administrative responsibility changed involving problems in the Hamilton Harbour Commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think I am perfectly authorized in the circumstances to say I will check the file and see exactly when the first complaint was made.

UNEMPLOYMENT—LEVEL AT WHICH GOVERNMENT WOULD INTRODUCE NEW POLICIES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman having said very clearly today that high and rising unemployment as reported by Statistics Canada is not sufficiently high to cause the government to bring in new policies to stimulate the economy to a satisfactory degree, I would ask him what is the level of unemployment the government has decided must be reached before new and innovative policies are brought in to stimulate the economy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The considerations which would lead the government to bring down a budget are many and extremely complex. The hon. member and his party have been criticizing the government for following policies designed to stimulate the economy; they have been critical of spending; they have been critical of taxation policies of this kind and I suggest they should make up their minds what line they want us to follow.

Mr. Hees: As the opposition has put forward many suggestions for getting the economy moving, such as a comprehensive income tax cut as has been introduced in the United States, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister how long the government is prepared to remain on square one without making any attempt to move off it.

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF TRIP OF MINISTER OF FINANCE IN VIEW OF ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Perhaps I may put a question to the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. With 839,000 people out of work, thousands on strike and real growth predicted this year at one per cent, and inflation continuing to rise,—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Stevens: —has consideration been given to postponing the Minister of Finance's trip to the middle east where many of the countries he is to visit appear to have fewer economic problems than this country?

● (1440)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House would expect the Minister of Finance to carry out his international responsibilities in one of the most important tasks that has ever been assigned to a Canadian.

SUGGESTED INCREASED CABINET SUPPORT FOR PROPOSALS OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Being concerned with domestic issues, and taking note of the Minister of Finance's rather unsettling statements this morning to the effect that budgetary policies are dictated in cabinet more by political expediency than economic realities, has the Prime Minister given any assurance to the Minister of Finance that he will get more support in cabinet for his economic proposals in future than he has been receiving in the past, bearing in mind that this morning the Minister of Finance complained that he is constantly outvoted in cabinet when he proposes economic measures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would doubt very much that the Minister of Finance ever made any such statements. In fact, he has just told me that he denies having made them. Moreover, the Minister of Finance has the confidence of his colleagues and we have confidence in him.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY MR. BAINS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SHOULD BE DEPORTED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the seditious statements made by one Hardian Bains, can the minister inform the House whether his department is conducting an investigation into whether or not this man should be dealt with under section five of the Immigration Act?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I noted the hon. member's comments yesterday.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH—REASON FOR REDUCTION IN FUNDS IN VIEW OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister and it is really supplementary to the questions asked by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. It arises from the jump in unemployment among Canadians under the age of 25, which is even greater than that of people over 25. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister what special programs the government has drawn up to cope with the high rate of unemployment among young people that can be expected this summer, and specifically, is the government intending to reconsider its decision to cut back somewhat dramatically the funds allocated to the 1975 Opportunities for Youth Program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has been defending the Opportunities for Youth Program and LIP very vigorously in face of the opposition. We intend to continue them and will be allocating funds for these programs and other programs within the control of the Canadian government. I hope we will have the support of the opposition and not their continued criticism.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that apparently the minister will not answer a straight question may I direct my supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I ask the minister specifically, in light of the fact that it can be anticipated in Canada that the unemployment rate among young people will be higher this summer than last summer, for what reasons is the government cutting the funds allocated to the Opportunities for Youth Program in 1975?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the total amount allocated to the student summer employment program for 1975 is precisely the same as it was for 1974.

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED INCREASE IN IMPORTATION OF CHICKENS FROM UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that since the beginning of the year the broiler chicken producers of Quebec have been complaining about the import of American chicken, that the Sain-Lin Maxi Poultry Company is said to have imported 1.3 million pounds of American chicken and that Quebec producers have decided to reduce their quota to 70 per cent, does the minister intend to recommend some limitation on these imports to help Quebec broiler chicken producers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I were to make any recommendations to my colleagues that we use the import act, for instance, then it would be for the poultry producers of all Canada. They know how they can prove to us that they have supply management. We cannot act in respect of one province's productivity; plans have to be national in scope.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question.

I mentioned Quebec producers to give a concrete example, but I believe chicken imports may be also prejudicial to other provinces. Could the minister tell the House if he intends to let the farmers settle this whole problem themselves or whether he is considering efficient measures to be taken as soon as possible to help broiler producers?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have offered to help the poultry producers of Canada. They fully know, as I am sure the hon. member knows, that hearings have been held regarding the broiler producers marketing board. They have not pushed at all to go ahead with this at the present time, and until they have some properly controlled and planned production and supply management programs, there is nothing very much we can do. Poultry producers in other provinces are also affected by this, not only those in Quebec.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF RESERVES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of statements which he made in recent days in St. Paul-Minneapolis and Estevan, Saskatchewan, to the effect that we are likely to face a natural gas shortage in the 1970's. In view of the fact that the National Energy Board report of March, 1974 stated that our marketable gas reserves had risen to 64.2 trillion cubic feet, which on the basis of our committed exports and domestic consumption represents a life index of 20-25 years, may I ask the minister this very simple question: What is the minister's present estimate of Canada's marketable reserves, and what life index does this represent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement that there was a shortfall. What I indicated was that there had been concern about it, and for that reason the National Energy Board has been conducting a hearing into supply and demand for Canadian natural gas. As the hon. gentleman may know, the board has now completed the hearing and is preparing its report. It seems to me that the most useful thing for all of us is to wait until the report is ready, which will be within a matter of some months, so we will be able to have a definitive report on the matter.

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY STATEMENTS CONCERNING SHORTAGE MADE TO INFLUENCE OPINION ON MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I may quote from the minister's own press release, at page 9 the following is stated:

From the evidence presented, it is clear that a shortage of gas is likely to develop in the 1970's, but if gas from the Arctic was connected a large new supply would be available.

I ask the minister whether these statements of his represent either faulty forecasting by his department and the National Energy Board or an attempt by the minister to join with the Canadian Arctic pipeline consortium in trying to frighten the people of Canada into accepting the Mackenzie valley pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on the second point, as the hon. gentlemen knows there were no attempts by the government to make any judgment on the Mackenzie valley pipeline before the National Energy Board reports. As the quotation just read by the hon, gentleman indicates, there has been evidence presented at the hearing that there is a shortfall. It seems to me that the most appropriate action for all is to await the National Energy Board report.

NATURAL GAS—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF EXPORTS IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE SHORTAGE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has told us that evidence has been presented to the National Energy Board indicating that there is likely to be a shortfall. Therefore, it seems to me he is entitled to tell the House what information there is indicating there will be such a shortage. I ask the minister this question. If he is convinced that there is likely to be a shortage of natural gas in the 1970's, is the government giving any consideration to reducing our exports of gas, which at the present time represent about half our total production of natural gas in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely to seek the informed judgment of the board in that particular regard that we have had the hearing, and it seems sensible to wait until the report is received.

AIR CANADA

TREATMENT OF PASSENGERS WHOSE FLIGHTS DIVERTED TO DORVAL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister agree to ask Air Canada for an explanation concerning the callous manner in which it treated about 1,000 Toronto-bound passengers last Friday when it unceremoniously dumped them at Dorval without any plans being made for their welfare.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already been in touch with Air Canada and Air Canada has promised me it would compensate all those affected in this way.

TRANSPORT

REPORT BY CN AND CP ON RAIL PASSENGER TRAFFIC—DATE OF PUBLICATION AND IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Transport. The minister has had in his possession for at least two years, with an upgrading in the last few months, a report from the CN and CP with regard to rail passenger traffic in Canada. Would the minister inform the House when he intends to implement some of the recommendations in the report, and when will he release the report if not to the House at least to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long I have had the report, but it is not a matter of years. It is probably a couple of months. I met last week with both the CN and CP in order to discuss the report, which is being processed through the department, to see how we can achieve what they are trying to do because, as you know, we want to have those new trains to see how the tracks will be used by CN and CP. This is still in a state of study. I think it would be preferable to wait a little while before I table the report.

REPORT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has to do with the report of the Science Council of Canada in respect of Canada's energy opportunities. In view of the fact that the minister indicated to the House his department had completed its assessment of the research work done at the federal level, and since this particular report advocates increased investment in research with respect to non-renewable resources and alternative fuels, would the minister be prepared, in view of the completion of his work, to have tabled in the House the document prepared by his department in respect of the research program now being carried on in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it would be my intention that the government report on research and development in the energy sector, not only in respect of my department but throughout the government of Canada, be put in a publishable form, translated and made available to members generally.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—REASON CANADA NOT PARTICIPATING—ARRANGEMENTS TO BE KEPT INFORMED

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister tell us whether the Government of Canada has had any discussions with the Government of France about the feasibility of Canada participating in the meetings on energy in France on April 7, and why the decision was made that Canada would not participate.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. I think the answer to the second question is there was a desire to keep the preparatory meeting to as small as possible a number and to that objective Canada acceded on the assumption that it would be fully represented at the full conference to be held in the summer.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. What arrangements have been made for Canada to be kept fully informed, inasmuch as this meeting probably will set the agenda for the plenary session later on.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the International Energy Agency will be represented at the preparatory meeting in an observer capacity and because of Canada's membership in that agency it will be possible for us to be kept informed of what is happening.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State who seems to have disappeared. Perhaps I can wait until later.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I hope the parties involved will be able to meet again before the end of the week. At the present time, I have no precise information on the subject, but I understand that it will be possible to find a way to meet again.

POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE IN EXTRADITION TREATY WITH UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice of which he has notice. The question is not what some people may think it is. I should like to ask the minister about the extradition treaty and the proposal that has been under study in his department. I wonder whether the government has now reached a decision about amending the extradition treaty with the United States to include criminal negligence, a matter of some concern to the people of Hamilton and I think to all citizens. Has the minister had sufficient time to look into that now?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at the question of specific events, but I cannot indicate a course of action at this particular time.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF TARIFF ON IMPORTED AUTOMOBILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, through you, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the government's stated policy to conserve energy, can the minister advise the House whether the present 15 per cent tariff on imported cars is being reviewed with the idea of reducing the tariff to a level comparable to that of the United States which is 3 per cent.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALBERTA DECISION TO ALLOW INCREASED EMISSIONS OF SULPHUR DIOXIDE FROM SYNCRUDE PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Since the federal government is now engaged in a joint environmental study with Alberta on the oil sands, does the minister support the decision of the Alberta Department of the Environment to allow Syncrude to double its sulphur dioxide emissions from 140 long tons a day to 287 long tons a day.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the levels of emissions from industrial stacks are decided on a national basis, and one province is usually not allowed to decide on a higher level of emission. I will have to look into the case the hon. member refers to.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's own environmental impact study of August 1974 which concluded that sulphur dioxide concentrations at Syncrude will exceed provincial standards and federal objectives several fold, will the minister now introduce federal anti-air pollution standards and also ensure that Syncrude SO_2 emissions be reduced to 40 tons a day as the minister's department recommended.

Mrs. Sauvé: The recommendations concerning emissions go to the provinces and the provinces are obligated to implement these recommendations. However, in a case of excess levels of emissions of such gases as are recognized as being toxic, several elements have to be taken into account such as weather conditions and direction of wind. I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing up this matter. I will look into the question. The purpose of the study with Alberta was precisely to enable us to calculate the levels of emissions which would be tolerable in that region.

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA ASSURED OF REPRESENTATION AT FULL CONFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the conference launched by France in respect of the consuming and producing petroleum countries and countries of the third world. Which is the correct statement of affairs? Is it that Canada is assuming she will be invited to the whole conference later on in the year, as the minister indicated earlier this afternoon and as Canada's spokesman in Paris indicated, or is it that we have the assurance of all parties that it will be a full conference and that Canada will be a full participant as stated last week in the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Have we in fact an assurance or are we assuming this?

● (1500)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, presumably it is an assumption because the preparatory meeting is being held and from that preparatory meeting the full conference will be developed. I consider that probably it is an assumption bordering on an assurance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

CRUDE PETROLEUM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF CANADIAN POSITION ON FLOOR PRICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): One could say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is the minister bordering on fraud, but of course I would never say anything like that.

However, I should like to ask him, in view of these preparatory discussions and the Canadian participation in the international energy agency, what is Canada's position with regard to a floor price for crude petroleum. With these important discussions about to take place, with guidelines to be laid down, and with the Americans pushing heavily for agreement among the consumer countries for a high floor price, what is precisely Canada's position? Could this outspoken minister tell us that?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would be glad to do that but the answer would be so lengthy that it could not be given in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the grave importance of this question to all Canadians as well as to members of this House, will the minister take an early opportunity—I would be satisfied with tomorrow—to inform the House one way or another as to what the position of this government is, and what position this government is taking on behalf of the Canadian people on this question which may vitally affect the future of this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that the intelligent and rational thing to do is to go into this very fully in the standing committee, which I will be very pleased to do. I hope we will have the intelligent participation of the hon. gentleman's followers in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Is the department aware of the nature and scope of these periodic talks between the premier and the governor?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been made aware of the talks to which my hon. friend refers. We usually like to be kept informed of these talks because our services are often valuable in rendering assistance.

GRAIN

DELAYS IN EXPORT SHIPMENTS—POSSIBILITY OF PAYMENTS UNDER PENALTY CLAUSES IN CONTRACTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. On March 3 I asked the minister whether delays in moving grain on the west coast had resulted in Canada being called upon to pay sums of money under the penalty clauses in contracts entered into for the sale of grain, and the minister said he would look into the matter on an up to date basis. Is he now in a position to give an up to date answer?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, there are many contracts and the details are rather voluminous. The matter is also a very complex legal one. Perhaps it might be amenable to a discussion between the hon. member and myself, which I am prepared to have at this time.

BAYDA COMMISSION—DATE OF REPORT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is he now in a position to advise the House, in view of the very serious situation with regard to grain handling in this country as a result of the series of strikes which took place during the past year, on the progress being made and the date on which we can expect to have the recommendations of the Bayda Commission appointed by this government some months ago?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I know that that inquiry is progressing and probably still on the schedule originally intended. As to any further progress reports, I think questions would be more properly directed to the Minister of Labour rather than to myself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In view of the answer given by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, would the Acting Minister of Labour be now in a position to advise the House when we might expect this very important report which will have such a great effect on the whole of Canada and, if he is not in a position to do so, will he be in touch with the commissioner to see whether or not that report will be forthcoming in the near future?

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): I will inquire and report to the House.

CONTRACT TO FLAHERTY MANUFACTURING OF HAMILTON—INQUIRY WHETHER PETER FLAHERTY ON DEPARTMENTAL PAYROLL WHEN CONTRACT AWARDED

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he indicate to the House whether on or about the time Flaherty Manufacturing of Hamilton received a $40,000 contract from the department without tenders being called, Mr. Peter Flaherty was in fact on the departmental payroll as a riding assistant to the then minister of national health and welfare?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I could inquire, but at this moment I would expect the answer to be in the negative.

CONTRACT TO FLAHERTY MANUFACTURING OF HAMILTON—PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR NEGOTIATING CONTRACT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Could the minister confirm that this contract was negotiated with Flaherty Manufacturing on behalf of Sports Canada by a former aid to the then minister who was parachuted into that agency without undergoing any civil service competition for that position?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I could not confirm that for the simple reason that quite a few employees in Sports Canada at that time were contract employees. This situation has now been remedied and most of the employees now come under the public service rules and regulations.

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister also undertake to give the House details of the printing contract let for brochures for the same fitness award program, a contract which I understand was given another Hamilton firm—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely, the hon. member recognizes that that kind of information should be sought in some other way.

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT NOMINEE FOR EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT APPEAR BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): In the absence of the Secretary of State, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the unusual interest in the appointment of the executive vice-president to CBC, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister will consider having the government's nominee for that position come before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for questioning by members of parliament before confirmation of his appointment?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in this country we follow the parliamentary form of government, not the congressional form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I welcome the Acting Prime Minister's belated recognization of that fact, but I should like to ask if, under this system of parliamentary government, his government will consider having the parliamentary committee responsible for the consideration of estimates and, in broad terms, the mandate of the CBC, given an opportunity to question the nominee for executive vice-president before confirmation of that appointment.

● (1510)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman once again is referring to American usages. We do not have confirmations in this country.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I wish to correct the understanding of the Acting Prime Minister. I was not assuming that the standing committee would confirm that appointment. I was simply making the perfectly proper parliamentary request that a parliamentary committee have the opportunity to question the nominee before that appointment is confirmed by the government, and I am not sure why the government is refusing to consider this very reasonable request.

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not also realize that the committees make their own rules. I do not direct them.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, an unfortunate conflict has arisen this afternoon between the work in this House on Bill C-50 and the work originally scheduled for the Standing Committee on Agriculture. After discussions with representatives from all parties on that committee, it has been agreed that the Standing Committee on Agriculture will not meet this afternoon.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that agreement, and I ask the parliamentary secretary to convey our deep regrets to the civil servants inconvenienced by our awkwardness.

Mr. Masniuk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The Minister of Agriculture, in remarks to the Assiniboia federal Liberal association and in remarks inside and outside this House, has indicated that the success of Bill C-34 is totally dependent upon the passage of Bill C-50.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raised a question of privilege concerning the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Masniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-50 neither gives the government of Canada or the Minister of Agriculture any authority which it did not have before under the legislation which it is proposed to amend. It does not enable the government to stabilize the price of any agricultural commodity in any area in Canada in any new or more effective way, and any statement or insinuation to the contrary is not in line with the honourable behavior expected from a minister of the Crown. I think that the government should be called upon to insist that ministers observe the standards imposed by the rules of this House in their statements inside and outside of this House in relation to misleading interpretations of legislation as it exists.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-50 I question whether agriculture has ever been in a more vulnerable position in the Canadian economy than it is at the present time, and unfortunately we have a minister who seems to be unaware of the real problems facing agriculture. We have a minister telling people, especially urban people, that they will have to pay more for food. I am concerned that eventually urban people will take exception to some of the comments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) because they will not want continually to be backhanded in the face as they have been in the past. They are a very generous people and they are willing to pay a fair price for produce. Unfortunately agriculture is in an extremely difficult situation because this government will not come to grips with the real problem facing our economy, and that is inflation.

The people who strike for higher wages are in no better situation after they have received those wages than they were before negotiations started, when there was a little more stability in our economy. At the present time there is no stability in the Canadian economy. The situation which now exists on the west coast is deplorable. The people who are on strike there will never catch up on wages they have lost. It is a vicious circle. We on this side of the House go from one minister to another in the cabinet, trying to obtain an answer as to what the government will do about it, and they say nothing. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) says that the government is patient and, hopefully, the parties will meet again this week. The government seems unaware of the complexity of the problems for the Canadian people in resolving the economic problems we are all facing.

Last year the minister responsible for the Wheat Board was very quick in getting into the confrontation when grain companies and farmers were going to have to pay the shot. But now it is a different story: we hear very little from that minister. By the same token we do not hear much from the Minister of Agriculture. I just cannot understand how some of the backbenchers on the government side of the House can be so naive. I should perhaps refer to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac). He said that the minister and the government are responsible for the stability evidenced in the beef industry. All the hon. member would have to do is talk to some of the beef producers to find out exactly what is happening in the beef industry. He should go out on the farm and see what is happening.

The minister says that we have a subsidy at the present time which is taking care of the beef industry. But it is not. Why in the world do we have to have a subsidy which pays the same amount to a producer who receives 55 cents for his beef as it does to the man who is getting 35 cents? This is not fair and it is not conducive to establishing a strong, viable beef industry in our economy. It is not good for the economy and it is forcing a great many people out of the industry. Eventually the consumer will suffer because the product will not be available.

The minister takes pride in his knowledge of agriculture. He says there have been previous ministers of agriculture who did not know the difference between a cow and a sow. I do not know whether he refers to the member from Calgary who is now in the other place, or the former member for Medicine Hat who is still in Alberta. However, I am sure there will be ministers of agriculture following this minister who will say that this minister laid an egg, not primarily because that is how the situation could be assessed, but because of the way he has mishandled CEMA from the very beginning.

There is no way our agricultural industry problems will be resolved by implementation of programs such as this stabilization bill. It has been suggested that it will not do much more than the measures already available to the Department of Agriculture and the minister. However, one of the things we must have is a responsible minister who recognizes the problem and takes action to resolve it. It has been brought to our attention that the minister knew a year ago last December that an egg surplus was developing under CEMA, but he was able to keep the lid on it until after the election. Then, of course, 28 million eggs were destroyed. The minister did not smell so good at that time.

The consumer resents this type of inaction and so does the producer because he suffers a lot. It is immoral to destroy food in a hungry world. I think the minister knows this, but he does not seem to be capable of coming up with a policy that will keep up with the production that Canadian agriculture is able to develop. The minister is a great promoter of marketing boards. I think they serve a useful purpose, but they must have the support of the Department of Agriculture if they are to function properly.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think Canada should try to develop a world food bank all by itself, but I do think there should be such a world bank to distribute food to the hungry people of the world. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in his position as chairman of the International Monetary Fund, could work toward this end. If we increased production by only 1 per cent or 2 per cent and channelled that amount to a world food bank, it would be of some help. If the 1 per cent or 2 per cent fell back on the Canadian economy, however, it could wreck the agriculture industry, and certainly the morale of the producer if the surplus were to be destroyed.

From December 1, 1974, to January 11, 1975, 50 carloads of eggs were imported from the United States, and in the week of March 3, 1975, 12 carloads were imported. That creates a problem for CEMA, and unless it has the support of this government and the Minister of Agriculture it just cannot cope with these things. Already Newfoundland and British Columbia have suggested that they will leave CEMA, and Alberta is considering holding a plebiscite on the question of whether to remain in the organization. No organization can operate efficiently in an atmosphere of indifference and indecision. It is up to the Minister of Agriculture to do something about it—but he is reneging on his responsibility to the industry and we will continue to have problems until he accepts his responsibility. I am just using CEMA as an example, Mr. Speaker. If the problems in that organization can be resolved, I believe the problems in other sectors of agricultural production can also be resolved.

The poultry population on January 1 of this year was 22,443,244 according to CEMA. According to the Department of Agriculture, however, it was approximately 26 million, and according to the production and marketing branch it was approximately 24 million. With this discrepancy in figures it is impossible to tally the total productive capacity. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) pointed out the problem of overproduction. Quebec increased production last year by 42 per cent over the previous year. Production as of February 8, 1975, was up 29 per cent over the same month in the previous year. This proves that we have the ability to produce in this country. But then the question arises, what are we going to do with the surplus? The government should be prepared to direct it into markets that are readily available in other parts of the world, but of course this would take a certain amount of organization.

For some time the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) has been urging the government to set up a program to help feed the hungry people of the world. We cannot do this at present, however, with marketing boards setting goals that are less than our domestic requirements. Much the same thing is happening in the dairy industry, Mr. Speaker. We import 50 million pounds of cheese and 50 million pounds of butter in a year because we are not up to our maximum production. Farmers cannot afford to take the chance of producing more in case there is not a market. We saw what happened in the beef industry and now many people are getting out of it. When the grain industry got into trouble, we had at that time a fairly viable meat industry, so many farmers switched. But they cannot switch back today.

I suggest that within two or three years we will see animals being raised on grass to a greater degree, as they were when most of us were girls and boys. This will probably mean they will go into the feed lots at 800 pounds or 1,000 pounds, so it will take a couple of years for them to get there. In the end, production will be down and we will be short of beef. We have not cut back on production at present, as has happened in the United States. They have 135 million head of cattle, compared to our 15 million head. A short time ago they had 150 million head, but they are getting it under control. Our count remains at 15 million. The selling price of beef, of course, has fallen and the minister should be prepared to do something about it.

Unless the cabinet supports the Minister of Agriculture, our difficulties in agriculture will continue. The minister suggested that he enjoys the support of the cabinet. I doubt it. Let me refer the House to what he said as recorded at page 3813 of Hansard for March 5, 1975:

There is also a provision in the bill which some of my colleagues in cabinet suggest gives the Minister of Agriculture a blank cheque to support the food producers of the nation. Never before has agriculture and its representative in the cabinet, the Minister of Agriculture, been given that authority. But—

And this is a big "but".

—I want to remind members of the House that before the Minister of Agriculture is granted that authority, there is an inter-departmental committee made up of five departments which studies all things pertaining to agriculture before a decision is made. There also are five cabinet ministers who decide on anything we do. That has been the situation for some time in cabinet. They consider the matter before any major decision is made which affects not only the agricultural producers but also the consumers in this country. Anyone who says that is not so is not stating the fact.

The minister, in the main, repeated what we have said. He has not enjoyed the support in cabinet which he, as the representative of the agricultural industry, deserves. Without that support it will be impossible for agriculture to be established on a viable, sound basis. Let me refer the House to the manner in which the government announced its restrictions, a little less than two years ago, concerning the cattle industry and involving exports to the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not the Minister of Agriculture, made the statement which signaled the downfall of the cattle industry in Canada. It has been losing money ever since. Cattle producers have been forced to refinance time and again. At some point they will not be able to refinance, and that is when the cows will come home, to use a cliché, for Canadian agriculture.

Who announced the appointment of the new deputy minister of agriculture? I will not comment on the ability of the new deputy minister as time alone will show if he has any. The agricultural industry does not like the idea of the Prime Minister appointing a man of his own choice. There are many capable men in Canada who could have helped the Minister of Agriculture in that capacity. The industry regrets the retirement of Mr. Sid Williams. We all hope that his successor, even though appointed by the Prime Minister, will fill his boots. But, Mr. Speaker, they are big boots to fill.

The building of a strong, stabilized agricultural industry will place a heavy load on the Minister of Agriculture. For this reason we hope he will accept advice from my side of the House more readily than in the past. Why do I say this? Let me illustrate. About two years ago, when the government tried to introduce a crop insurance program which would work and be accepted by farmers across Canada, we, in an effort to be helpful, tried to move amendments. They were not accepted. What happened? Farmers availed themselves of the program on an "on again, off again" basis. Some farmers tried to build up their own protection; nevertheless, the program has not accomplished its announced aims. You cannot institute a program like that overnight. We knew this and tried to introduce amendments to the bill when it was before the House. If they had been accepted, it would not have been necessary for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to bring before the House the present grain stabilization bill.

Some people think that crop insurance is different from stabilization. It is not necessarily so. Actually, insurance and stabilization are one and the same thing. Remember, Mr. Speaker, we are interested in maintaining a viable agricultural industry, an industry in which farmers show a profit. If they do not, they go broke. So it does not matter if you call the program crop insurance or stabilization; the objective is the same. We maintain that you do not need both programs, because with two programs you establish two bureaucracies, one under the Minister of Agriculture and one under the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Imagine what would happen with two bureaucracies. Inspectors working for the Minister of Agriculture would look in farmers' bins to see how much grain was stored before authorizing a payment. After they had left, inspectors working for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board would come to the farm and look in the same bins. Bureaucracy would be compounded. Actually, that is what is wrong with this government—there is too much bureaucracy. One department does not communicate with the other and too many bureaucrats are maintained in their jobs at the expense of the taxpayer.

Too many bureaucrats in jobs force taxes up. Because taxes are high, people strike for higher pay. If taxes were lower, people would be content with less pay. At present there is a vicious circle. We should reduce costs all through the economic chain so that ordinary people would derive the benefit. As things now stand, with grocery bills climbing, and clothing and shelter costs escalating, people will strike for more pay. If we are to cure this situation we must begin at the top. I hope the Minister of Agriculture pays attention to what we on this side suggest, because we do not want to have to tell him in two years' time that he made a mistake.

The minister said that eggs will not be included in this stabilization bill. I went to some pains pointing out why it is necessary to resolve CEMA's difficulties. Unless we resolve those difficulties, I submit it will be difficult to resolve other agricultural problems. I pointed out that the figures of Statistics Canada, the Department of Agriculture and CEMA are all different: they all tell a different story. CEMA itself now says it cannot rely on the figures of the Department of Agriculture or Statistics Canada, and wants to establish its own intricate system of record keeping. Surely it is up to the Department of Agriculture to provide such figures and to introduce policies which will benefit producers.

Although our agriculture is regionalized, I think the federal Department of Agriculture should take on the job of selling and exporting agricultural commodities—with the support of the provinces, of course. That would not mean taking anything away from the provincial governments. Goodness only knows, nobody is a stronger supporter of provincial rights than I am, but in the selling of agricultural commodities I think the federal department can do a better job than the several and individual provincial departments. The Wheat Board sells most of our wheat; why should not the Department of Agriculture sell most of our agricultural produce? Why not let one department handle all selling, instead of having the departments of agriculture of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and other provinces send delegations to Japan and other countries? These delegations are costly. Costs are duplicated. Why can we not decide on the price of a commodity before it leaves Canada? We could use marketing boards to set the price, if you like. Uniform marketing efforts would end the present dissatisfaction. These remarks apply equally to CEMA. Egg production is up in Quebec and down in other provinces, and egg marketing is in a mess. Until the Department of Agriculture gives more leadership, we shall not resolve these difficulties.

I was surprised to hear the minister say that wheat produced in Ontario will not come under the jurisdiction of this stabilization bill. The minister had better take another look at that, because he said Bill C-19 would cover wheat produced in Ontario; oats and barley, yes; but he said it would take care of wheat. However, it only takes care of 50 per cent of the wheat grown in Ontario. I am going to read some figures into the record. These were presented when the representatives of the Ontario Wheat Board were before the committee. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) was questioning Mr. Young, chairman of the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board. He asked:

● (1540)

MR. NEIL: You are a producers' marketing board, in other words?

MR. YOUNG: That is right.

MR. NEIL: And does it include all the producers of grain in the province of Ontario?

MR. YOUNG: Right.

MR. NEIL: And what grains does it cover; all cereal crops?

MR. YOUNG: Oh no, just wheat; all wheat producers in the province of Ontario.

MR. NEIL: And I would assume your function, then, is to get the best price possible for your members; is this correct?

MR. YOUNG: Yes, this is our aim and objective.

MR. NEIL: How much Ontario grain goes into milling, on the average?

MR. YOUNG: In the area of eight million bushels.

MR. NEIL: About eight million bushels?

MR. YOUNG: Yes; about half the crop.

The Minister of Agriculture will have to examine the situation in order to have that included. I have spent considerable time expressing my opinion and the opinion of those I represent. We want to see the bureaucracy of government reduced. We want the expense of production reduced. That is the only way to have a viable agriculture industry in Canada. We must first attack the cost of production. Until we get rid of government bureaucracy we will not be able to accomplish this.

Talk to some representatives of the industries. In the dairy industry, for example, the creameries and milk retailers with labelling requirements have extra work forced upon them. In certain areas bilingual displays are required on products even though the people do not require it. This is an extra cost of production. Why must all the ingredients be listed, when in a great many cases it does not mean anything to consumers? They know the products they want, and they buy them. Why does the Department of Agriculture not set up a data bank in Ottawa? If anyone wants to know the ingredients of a particular product, he could obtain the information from the data bank. He could then determine whether or not he wanted to continue buying the product. Surely, with our modern-day technology, such a data bank could be established.

These are some of the areas in which the minister is lacking: he lacks imagination and he lacks support in cabinet. Until this failure is overcome we will continue to have problems in agriculture. We are just jumping from crisis to crisis. That is the way it has been since I came to the House of Commons. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) agrees we have been going from crisis to crisis. The time has come for the operation to be run smoothly: if not, we are lost and I do not know what will happen: it will be a catastrophe.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to be a very important piece of legislation. It cannot be otherwise since, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) says, it deals with the production of food, of what he calls "the mainstay of life". While it is a series of amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act which has existed since 1957, it will give that act a much wider and more far reaching impact than it ever had before. The bill's purpose is to provide farmers with "a guaranteed floor price" for agricultural commodities. This means the bill has an importance far beyond the boundaries of the agricultural community itself, making up as it does only some 6 per cent of our labour force. In fact, the bill has great significance for everyone in the country.

However, in my view, so far in this debate a number of questions of vital concern to every Canadian have not yet been clearly or fully answered. These questions are important to all individual Canadians as taxpayers and as consumers. It would appear that the government intends, through the amendments set out in Bill C-50, to use the Agricultural Stabilization Act much more frequently and more fully than was possible in the past. However, the Minister of Agriculture has given us no indication of what the broader and more frequent use of this legislation will cost the government and, therefore, all individual Canadians as taxpayers. In the 1973-74 fiscal year, the Agricultural Stabilization Board spent $143 million, through the estimates, on payments to farmers. The recently tabled estimates say that the forecast of the board's expenditures for the 1974-75 fiscal year will be more than $301 million. These estimates also propose expenditures for the board during the coming fiscal year in the area of $261 million.

Does this proposed expenditure in the 1975-76 fiscal year take into account the more frequent and extensive use of the Agricultural Stabilization Board program contemplated by Bill C-50? If so, why is less intended to be spent in the current one? Is it possible that in spite of what is promised to the farmer through this legislation, it will in fact not be used as fully as the Minister of Agriculture implies? However, if more than $261 million is to be spent, we should be told, even if it is only in a general way, how much the government expects this greater expenditure to be.

Another key question for all Canadians is how much will the application of Bill C-50 cost them, not only as taxpayers but also as consumers when they do their shopping for groceries. In other words, what effect will Bill C-50 have on food prices? Bill C-50 would authorize the government to set base prices for the wide range of agricultural commodities to which it applies in a way that would make these base prices higher than would be possible under the formula used in the existing law. A significant question for Canadians, as consumers, therefore, is what is the connection between these base prices and retail prices for both processed and unprocessed food? Will a base price set under Bill C-50 operate anything like the intervention price set by CEMA under the national egg marketing plan?

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence before the special egg marketing committee established that the intervention price at which CEMA bought eggs from farmers was set at such a high level that it caused the retail price for eggs to be so high that it discouraged consumers from buying them. Is there a risk that Bill C-50 can cause situations with respect to those commodities to be supported under this new agricultural stabilization program similar to what took place recently with regard to eggs? I think this is a valid question, since the Minister of Agriculture said the following about the stabilization programs to be undertaken by the federal government under this new law:

None of these programs can work without proper supply management.

What does he mean by the term "proper supply management"? What commitment is the government making about the way supply management will be used to support the operation of the agricultural stabilization program? What will the government be doing to avoid the creation of situations with respect to other commodities to be covered under Bill C-50 like the one that arose in egg marketing?

At the same time, supply management generally has meant quotas, that is, the limiting of production. So far in this debate the government has not really attempted to answer the kind of question I raised in the House during the debate on the income tax bill. The question is: during this period when there is not just a shortage of food but actual starvation in many parts of the world, do we have an obligation to adopt policies of maximum food production no matter what the effect on market prices might be? Also, how would such maximum production be paid for, recognizing that the cost of such production cannot fall primarily on the farmer? To what extent could we afford this kind of policy at all?

Thus far in the debate no indication has been forthcoming as to the extent to which the bill before us may be part of a total food policy, or the degree to which the government and the Minister of Agriculture are committed to developing one. By a total food policy I mean a policy which deals not only with the role of primary producers but also, and equally, with the role of the others in the food chain—the processor, the wholesaler and the retailer. It is one which must include programs to encourage efficiency and productivity and also to review the pricing policies of those groups which operate beyond the farm gate.

The purpose of this bill is to protect farmers against having to bear alone the burden of receiving prices for their production when those prices from time to time are at their very lowest. But the government has said nothing, or at least very little, about what the rest of the Canadian population will actually be getting through Bill C-50, particularly in the vital area of prices. The government's silence in this area of policy, at least until this point in the present session, is not consistent with the commitment it gave the Canadian people in the Speech from the Throne of February 27, 1974, which said:

> Guarantees against unduly low prices for producers must be coupled with guarantees against unduly high prices for consumers.

Does the government not have an obligation to follow through with concrete action on both sides of the equation—guarantees against unduly low prices for producers and guarantees against unduly high prices for consumers? So far, only the commitment to agricultural producers has been set out in terms of specific legislation, that is, in Bill C-50. There is nothing in this bill itself which will ensure the carrying out of the commitment to consumers which the government made with equal force in the throne speech of February, 1974.

However, there is already in existence a program with regard to a key agricultural commodity which is based on the kind of approach I am talking about, the approach outlined in the throne speech of February, 1974. I am referring to the government's program for two-price wheat which is being turned into legislative form through Bill C-19. This program assures western farmers that for some seven years there will continue to be a floor below which the price they get for their wheat cannot fall no matter how low world prices may tumble. At the same time, along with this protection government policy provides for a ceiling above which the price in Canada cannot rise. Thus, the wheat farmer forgoes the opportunity to get world prices when they are at their peak in return for being protected against receiving world prices when they are at their lowest. This policy provides mutual benefits for both farmer and consumer.

There is nothing of this approach in Bill C-50. It contains only the provision respecting floor prices for farmers, but nothing specific about an equivalent kind of protection for consumers through some kind of ceiling on the prices they pay for the commodities which will be covered by the new agricultural stabilization program. Has the government abandoned the commitment made to consumers in the February, 1974, throne speech? Canadians generally, I am sure, hope this is not the case. After all, this was the throne speech on which the government went to the people and sought re-election. This was the throne speech which formed an important part of the basis for the judgment people made in re-electing the government with a clear majority last July 8.

The Minister of Agriculture says Bill C-50 will encourage production. However, the bill is a series of amendments to the existing Agricultural Stabilization Act. The preamble of this act sets out that it is—> —for the purpose of stabilizing the prices of agricultural commodities in order to assist the industry of agriculture to realize fair returns for its labour and investment and to maintain a fair relationship between prices received by farmers and the costs of the goods and services that they buy, thus to provide farmers with a fair share of the national income.

This preamble contains no reference to production, although providing farmers with a fair share of the national income is, generally speaking, an objective with which Canadians would be in sympathy. Questions can be asked as to the method the government intends to use to achieve this objective. Does the government intend to keep up retail prices for food by a combination of supply management limiting production and of base prices set under Bill C-50? Or, will the government encourage greater production but use Bill C-50 to prevent the law of supply and demand from operating so that the greater production cannot create a downward pressure on retail prices to consumers, allowing them to benefit from the effect of this kind of market force? The Minister of Agriculture said, when he spoke at the beginning of this debate:

> So long as we have properly planned programs such as this stabilization program it will cost the government hardly anything, if anything at all, in the long run. It will not cost the producers anything—

Well, to paraphrase the old song, most taxpayers will say that the expenditure of $261 million is "plenty of nothing." They are entitled to ask, on whom and in what way will the real cost of Bill C-50 actually fall? Such questions should be explored, since if the new bill is to be fully and actively used—and remember that only $261 million is allotted for it in the estimates—it could mean that the government intends that higher returns for farmers in respect of basic agricultural commodities will come primarily from the marketplace. But if this happens, the burden will not fall with equal fairness on all Canadians. The reason is that the burden of higher food prices in the marketplace falls most heavily on lower income consumers who spend a higher proportion of family income on foodstuffs.

This is a further argument for extending the floor and ceiling approach adopted in the two-price wheat program to other commodities. It is also an argument in favour of deciding that an appropriately larger part of the cost of the new agricultural stabilization program should be met through government expenditure since the funds for it come from taxpayers generally and are raised on the principle of ability to pay.

One can recognize and accept the importance and the justice of the concepts set out in Bill C-50, aimed, as they are, at sheltering the farmer from uncertainties caused by the state of world markets, alternating gluts and shortages of world production and varying weather conditions. However, the small businessman, the small manufacturer, the skilled tradesman, might well ask, "Why is there nothing like Bill C-50 for us?" They could argue that they, too, are self-employed, like the farmer, and that they face similar kinds of uncertainties. Nevertheless, the government is not giving them minimum prices for their production although it is asking them in one way or the other to help pay the cost of this kind of assistance for agriculture.

Of course, the answer may well be found in the importance of our agricultural sector to our country and to the world. If this is the case, it must be observed that agricultural spokesmen can hardly be justified in complaining, as they often do, about the attention being paid to agriculture today by governments, on behalf of the general public, through such measures as the Food Prices Review Board, the special parliamentary inquiry into egg marketing and various government programs. If agriculture has the importance its protagonists claim for it, then the over-all public interest requires that the government, on behalf of all Canadians, pay the same kind of attention to it that the government is expected to pay to other key sectors of the economy. Primary producers can hardly ask for wide-ranging support from the government and object to scrutiny from government as to how their role fits in with the over-all public interest in terms of the government's priority obligation to protect that interest.

I have asked the kinds of questions I have raised today in a constructive and positive sense and in the belief that Bill C-50, generally speaking, deserves the support of the House. However, I believe that these questions need to be answered before this bill receives final approval, to ensure that it will be administered in a way consistent with the general public interest and thereby in the interests of all individual Canadians.

The purpose of a national government is to work for fair treatment of all groups in our society, whether they be identified in terms of region, occupation or patterns of expenditure. This bill is aimed at providing fairer treatment for a very important group in Canadian society. The government must go on to put in place its policy to ensure equally fair treatment with respect to food prices for the rest of the Canadian population in a way that is consistent with the commitment it gave so eloquently in the Speech from the Throne in February of last year.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I thought it was too bad he was not a minister any more. It would have been very important for the hon. member to make such recommendations when he had certain powers.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this bill which is highly significant for agriculture. It will be called the Agricultural Stabilization Act. It will bring changes in the definition of agricultural products, in the establishment of basic prices and will reduce from ten to five the years of evaluation prescribed in the former legislation. The bill also contains an interesting provision recommending an allowance for production costs. That is very important. The legislation also provides for regional stabilization, taking into account the sharp differences that may exist in the various areas. It is something the bill should correct. The law already protects certain products. We are told that the bill will allow the governor in council to add any agricultural commodity that will be deemed necessary. As a few members pointed out, that will puzzle the poeple. Of course we would have liked this bill to cover all agricultural products so that, notwithstanding the products concerned, producers will be sure of getting the protection of the law.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to quote certain remarks of the minister, who recognizes that agriculture is the foremost industry in Canada, that one job out of three surely depends on agriculture and that this bill will give the minister powers that none of his predecessors ever had. The minister also recognizes the importance of creating a climate of confidence for farmers, so that young people may stay on the farm. I believe those are excellent intentions. I noticed that the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) said in his speech that it was a step in the right direction, and I believe we all agree as to the good intentions of the minister in respect of this bill although the same hon. member also pointed out quite rightly some concerns about certain commodities or methods of application.

Mr. Speaker, despite all the respect I have for the minister, the assurance of his good intentions, the efforts he made since he has been responsible for that department, I think it is also important to consider what happened generally—since 1968 as far as I am concerned—and what are the results of the government's agricultural policy. In the meantime, did agriculture gather extraordinary momentum? Is the farming community less concerned, more happy, better off? I think several questions remain unanswered.

I represent a riding quite interested in agriculture and in view of the unsatisfactory solutions that were put forward, it has been said, as the minister pointed out, that in recent years the government introduced several pieces of legislation in this House to improve the position of the agricultural sector, yet we are still faced with difficulties which do nothing to lessen the concerns of the farming community.

So, in view of that, the government having received briefs from several agricultural organizations, and in view of the importance of agriculture in this country, one must wonder whether the government did allocate the necessary funds. Indeed, recognizing the leading role of that industry, I think the Minister of Agriculture has failed to listen closely in cabinet when it came to apportioning the necessary votes to the various departments.

With respect to the milk industry, we know the position of milk producers. We must import rather large quantities of butter. The diminishing population of milk producers is disturbing, production costs have shot up beyond reason and, in this area as in others, there is a discouraging indebtedness, specially among young producers.

For instance I would like to point out to the minister that I read carefully the brief by the Canadian Federation of Dairy Producers which deals with the future policy to be applied by the minister and the government if they really are to make the effort needed by dairy producers especially. In other areas of production, expectations are similar; let me quote a letter by the Federation of Dairy Producers to members of parliament and to the minister in charge. I quote:

> This is to underline the extreme importance of decisions to be taken by the government in the few days to come with regard to its policy for the 1975-76 dairy campaign ... We hope that, through those decisions, not only will the base price be set at a higher level within the stabilization program, but that an indexing provision will also be available to provide for accasional readjustments of that price.
> Of course that indexing provision is important, but what is even more so is the basic level of revenues to which that index will apply. The present level of revenue is totally insufficient for that purpose; therefore the base price to be applied from April 1 and used for indexing revenues is a crucial decision. In its policy statement, the Canadian Federation of Dairy Producers requests an $11.62 per cwt. revenue for processed milk starting April 1. That level is substantially higher than the present $10.02 and shows the importance of a substantial increase in revenues as an indexing basis from April 1.

I therefore think for instance that it is important for the minister to take that recommendation by a leading Canadian industry into consideration.

I would also like to stress, Mr. Speaker, that I was personally very much in favour of that famous Bill C-176 which was expected to improve the situation of various categories of producers. When that marketing board would be implemented, we would manage to seriously cope with the shortcomings and difficulties of producers in general. We have had experience with eggs, as other members in the House have pointed out. We have had a very long study made by the board, in which it is recognized that there was a glaring lack of cooperation between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie). We could talk of poultry breeding and beef breeding. Everybody is well aware of these problems. There are the potato growers who are still meeting serious difficulties. The member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) spoke of the difficulties also met by the producers of maple sugar.

In the face of those unceasing difficulties, one can congratulate oneself and think that this legislation will correct the situation and calm down farmers or this class of producers. Personally, I have some reserves, as do other members in the House. And I wonder how deeply the government has thought and how much it has tried to control imports, which certainly seem to be a cause of trouble for our trade in agriculture.

During the commission's inquiry on the egg surplus, it was recognized there had been lack of control over imports. Today and yesterday, newspapers still reported massive imports. This is causing enormous hardship to our producers. Apparently, the minister does not wish to apply now stringent measures.

Under the bill, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has exceptional powers when a problem arises concerning a Canadian commodity. For that reason, Canadian farming is still undermined. Other producers are concerned. They wonder what the government is going to do. Some members indicated that the government had increased farm loans, that it had introduced longer repayment terms. They did not mention interest rates, almost prohitive for young farmers. In 1968, the interest rate on farm loans was 5 per cent. The ceiling was removed so that the market rate could be changed. A federal commission was established to get the facts about farming. That commission submitted reports informing us on an outdated situation.

In my opinion, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce deserves severe warning in the face of his inaction on imports and his lack of interest in problems now faced by the Minister of Agriculture. This makes things harder for the latter, because I feel he is looking for valid answers to farming problems. Producers hope the minister will be acting soon, because he has the power to control imports, which have enormously unsettling effects on our markets.

I would also like to emphasize the need for measures to preserve our agricultural area. There may have been a lack of coordination between the departments responsible for agriculture in general and already, Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing worldwide famine. It is therefore up to us to hurry up and make this industry efficient and more productive than ever before. We should not necessarily limit thoughts to available credits. I know that the government has found extraordinary funds to simplify the work of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

To come back to the importance of the agricultural industry in our economy, I believe that this industry also deserves particular attention. This is what has been lacking, as well as the interest of the cabinet in general, as concerns the necessary credits which would have allowed the minister responsible to meet certain demands. We have also often emphasized the lack of control over the cost of feed and farm machinery. We are learning more about this every day. I want to repeat these things in the House because we hear comments from farmers who are very worried and wonder when costs will stop going up so that we may finally have the stabilization suggested today by the minister in his bill.

We should not forget the consumer in all this. I was listening a while ago to the hon. member for Windsor West who was asking that any farming policy be geared to the interest of the consumer. He was wondering how the consumer would pay the cost. Of course, the consumer deserves the respect of those who must represent his policy and he must also know that the price for the survival of the farming class will have to be paid. I believe that the government should inform the consumer about the minimum that the producer must obtain, while investigating seriously the middlemen. Finally, what is important is that the producer gets an absolutely necessary income. I wonder when the government will start holding a little investigation on the middlemen, that is individuals who stand between the producer, who must get a minimum income, and the consumer who must also pay a minimum price for that product. I believe there is a gap between those two and we must conduct a serious study to find out who enjoys the best profits.

Right now it is not the farmer who makes fantastic profits and, taking into account the consumer's purchasing power, we have the responsibility to insure them quality products at reasonable prices.

As members of parliament, we could require the government and its responsible agencies to pay special attention to the middlemen who could have taken some advantage from time to time of any particular situation.

Mr. Speaker, on the whole we recognize that this legislation is a step in the right direction, as one of my hon. colleagues said last week. We do not intend to oppose an improving measure and we also hope that the minister will be able to give the answers to some questions asked during this debate. For example, the hon. member for Windsor West asked several questions. I think they were all very relevant and interesting. Personally, I would have liked this legislation to give more assurance to the producers who make up the so-called farming industry.

As to the escalation formula which seems to be applicable in as much as we provide for increases in input costs, we do favour it because it will solve the problem of the continuous increase in input costs. The only thing we still have to know is to what extent the government will be able to assure us some control over the increase in the input costs which unbalance any legislation which could seem proper today but which would quickly become out-of-date as the increase in those costs has gone unchecked too long.

Mr. Speaker, I will merely make those few comments acknowledging the import of that legislation and hoping that the minister will bring some amendments when it is under consideration in committee so that all producers may profit by stabilization while being assured of a minimum price.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the amendments in the bill before us to stabilize farm income are not very important. Basically, they do four things: they revise the named commodities in the legislation, they add a few commodities and take out a few, they shorten the stabilization period for the base price from ten years to five years, and they increase the floor for the basic minimums from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the previous five-year average. Also, there is a clause in the bill allowing producers in certain areas or provinces, one by one, to opt into the program and to supplement the legislation before the House.

The reason I say the amendments before us are not really important is that last year the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had four stabilization programs in which the minimums were above the minimum in this legislation. The bill before us provides floors—and I am sure that we are all happy with those floors—but it does not provide ceilings, and any program the minister might introduce could contain a floor that is above the ones we are considering today. So I suggest to the House that we should deal with this bill expeditiously. It will not create any fundamental or basic changes in the agricultural economy; it will just increase the benefits of the stabilization plan that we have. In other words, it is not a bill that is drastically important because it does not create any fundamental changes.

I want to mention six different areas about which I have questions and of which I hope the minister will take note. I do this because I think the agricultural community will be facing real problems. We have known for some time that beef farmers have been in trouble. The prices they receive for their commodities are much too low to allow them a decent standard of living. We know also that grain prices are falling, production costs are escalating, and as part of the world economy farmers will be facing difficult times.

I say that because I gather that on both sides of the House there is a feeling among members representing urban communities in particular that farmers have done very well in the last few years and that we should not be so concerned about them but, instead, we should turn our attention to other sectors of the economy. I want to remind hon. members that agriculture is the backbone of our economy and that although grain farmers in the last two or three years have not done badly, there are storm clouds on the horizon and we should turn our attention to them in particular.

The bill before us includes a whole series of commodities except western grain. We will be dealing with legislation on grain stabilization in the future. The first point I wish to mention to the minister is that of course I am happy to see him bring up the base price from 80 per cent of the previous ten-year average to 90 per cent of the previous five-year average. If we stabilize the price of commodities at 90 per cent of the previous five-year average, the farmer will fall behind economically because of general inflation in the economy.

There is every indication that inflation will increase rather than decrease, and if we stabilize the price the farmer will obtain at the previous five-year average, he will fall behind in economic terms. In order to counteract this, the minister has included a cost of production index. What worries me is that the definition of this index is left to the governor in council. What does the minister mean by "cost of production index"? Does he mean the whole cost in terms of fuel, fertilizer, machinery, and so on, that goes into producing a bushel of wheat, growing a heifer, growing a hog, or producing poultry?

I would like to hear the minister elaborate on what he means by "cost of production index," because even if we stabilize farm income at 90 per cent of the previous five-year average and put in a cost of production index, it might not be adequate. In fact, we would be stabilizing farm income downward from the economists' point of view. One could easily stabilize farm income at 100 per cent of the previous five-year average and still find the farmers falling behind. For example, are farmers' wages taken into consideration in the cost of production index? If they are, then the index might accurately reflect the true cost of production. That point should be clarified because this matter is left to the regulations. That is the most important part of the bill with which we are dealing.

The other point which I should like to mention to the minister is that there are still some commodities left out of the bill, and I wonder why. I am thinking particularly of oil seeds produced in western Canada. Why are they left out when western soybeans are in the bill? The third point I wanted to mention—and this is very important to my region—is that deficiency payments to be made under this plan are to be based on national averages for the commodities listed, but often there are regional or provincial fluctuations which have a bearing on what the farmer should be getting in terms of deficiency payments.

Let me give one example. In the region from which I come, namely, east central Saskatchewan, last year grain farmers encountered real difficulties in terms of weather. We had a very late spring, so the crop was put in late; then we had an early frost which froze the grain before it ripened. As a result, the farmer had a lower yield and a lower quality of grain in terms of grade and weight. We were below the average in the Wheat Board area. If deficiency payments were based on national averages, probably farmers in my area would not get any or, if they got them, their payments would be the same as those made in southern Saskatchewan where there was a higher yield of grain of a better grade, for which they got a better price.

Therefore, the minister should consider accepting amendments which would allow for greater regional flexibility. There is, for instance, the Peace River country of Alberta and the area of northern Saskatchewan north of my area where farmers experienced severe problems with weather during the growing season. If there is no flexibility in the legislation, farmers in some regions may be seriously affected.

The fourth point about which I am concerned is that adjustments made with regard to stabilization or deficiency payments are made on a yearly basis. I think this discriminates against farmers. If we consider beef, for example, at a certain time in the year when the farmer has to sell his livestock he might get 38 cents a pound, but a few months later another farmer may sell at 52 cents a pound since the commodity is on the open market. This applies to other commodities on the open market. When the farmer sells beef at a lower price, he does not get what he should from the stabilization fund. Perhaps the stabilization payment on the national average price for beef in that year, calculated on a yearly basis, would be 4 cents a pound. A person who sold beef at 38 cents a pound would lose, compared to someone who got 52 cents a pound when he shipped his livestock.

This is a question we should consider when dealing with the bill in committee. Why can we not have quarterly calculations, or calculations every six months? Perhaps quarterly calculations would involve too much red tape and too many bureaucractic difficulties. Let us seriously consider the possibility of calculating payments under the stabilization plan every six months instead of yearly, because different considerations come into play—different weather patterns and different production patterns in various regions. Many factors come into play and therefore calculations should be made more often than once a year.

Another point I would like to mention to the minister is that when one calculates the average price of a product in the previous five years, in my reading of the bill a deficiency payment is made in those five years but in the calculation the deficiency payment itself is not included. I think the deficiency payment should be included. The effects of the problem might be reduced sharply in one of the previous five years. There is a deficiency payment made to sheep producers, for example, and when you calculate next year the deficiency payment is not taken into consideration or made part of the previous five years' income. I think it should be, because that is the income the farmer received from the sheep or the vegetables he sold.

I think that if the deficiency payment were included there would be a much better reflection of the farmer's actual income in the previous five years, and 90 per cent of that would be added to the production index which the farmer would receive. If deficiency payments are not included, naturally the income of the farmer will be equalized at a lower level, which will work against his interest.

The sixth point I wish to make to the minister is that I agree with clause 6 of this bill. This is a provision whereby the producer or the province can decide to opt into the program in terms of supplementing it to bring up the threshold rate from averaging the previous five years at 90 per cent up to, say, 95 per cent or 100 per cent. I can visualize the Minister of Agriculture saying to producers and provinces that if they do not like this program they can supplement it. In terms of rhetoric, to most Canadian people that sounds very good: if they do not like it, they can add to it.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

That is fine for British Columbia which has a small agricultural industry, but how can Prince Edward Island get into this program? Prince Edward Island would be facing a massive expenditure. How could Saskatchewan, Manitoba or even Ontario or Quebec decide to opt into this program and bring up the threshold rate to, say, 95 or 100 per cent? It seems to me that this discriminates against the have-not areas of the country which have many farmers compared to areas which are industrialized. I would like the minister, instead of having that provision in the bill, to decide to take this federal legislation all the way and stabilize farm income at 100 per cent of the previous five-year average.

Those are just five or six points I am concerned about, points all of us should consider at the committee stage and points which I hope the minister will consider in terms of accepting or rejecting amendments which will come to him from hon. members on all sides of the House. I think these matters are important. I think it is also important to realize that this bill will not solve many of the problems we are facing. We have falling farm prices, to which I have already referred, we have instability in the marketplace and we have rising production costs. If we are to solve many of these problems we will need some fundamental changes in agriculture.

In a nutshell, I think our agricultural policy should be as follows: our objectives should be to maximize food production in this country. I think this should be the foreign policy of Canada. Canada is one of the few nations in the world which can produce massive surpluses of food products. It was a crime when during the last few months 28 million eggs went rotten because we did not have proper storage facilities and we did not have proper disposal units to channel them to needy countries. There is no world food bank and Canada does not have an adequate world food aid program. Those eggs represent only about one-half of 1 per cent margin of error by CEMA. It was about one day's lay for the hens of the nation. That is a very small margin of error.

If a large corporation made a margin of error of 1 per cent or less, we would say that the economists are doing a good job, but if CEMA does it many people are very critical because it is food being wasted. Eggs are going rotten while people are dying of starvation and while some people in this country are not getting proper nutrition. The other day there was a report which stated that over one million children in this country are not getting proper nourishment. Why do we not channel food into programs helping needy people around the world?

I think the prime objective should be to maximize food production. Food production can be maximized by doing two or three things. One is by stabilizing farm income so that the farmer makes a decent income for himself and his family so he can plan his production and so that, like any other wage earner, he will have an idea, when he plants his crop in the spring, of what he will receive in the fall. The farmer does not know that: he depends on the whims of the market, the whims of the weather and suffers from lack of planning by governments in this country. As much as possible we must try to eliminate these uncertainties. They cannot be eliminated entirely because we cannot tamper with weather conditions and many other things around the world. But we should put millions and millions of dollars into support prices in Canada and into subsidizing the price farmers get for needed foods.

If these foods cost the Canadian consumer too much, instead of the farmer paying the price by reduced farm income—if the foods are basic necessities such as milk—then the Government of Canada should subsidize the price as suggested by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Instead of the consumer paying a high price in the market, if food is important and children should have that food then the government should subsidize it so that Canadians can afford to buy it. I do not think one's financial situation should determine what he can eat when it comes to foods which are nutritious and needed.

We should be guaranteeing the farmer a decent, stable income whereby he can plan a good life for himself and his family. Along with that we need strong marketing boards. I know that the Minister of Agriculture agrees with me on this. I think we have to say to people in urban Canada that a marketing board for farmers should be regarded as similar to a trade union for workers, a medical association for doctors, a legal association for lawyers or a business association for businessmen. The farmer should use the marketing board to bargain in the marketplace.

There are many forces which put pressure on the farmer, but I think if he had strong marketing boards for all his commodities there would be a greater tendency toward stabilized production and stabilized prices. The farmer could plan, food production would be maximized and the consumer would not be subjected to constant fluctuation of prices. We buy bacon one day at, for example, 89 cents per pound and a few weeks later it costs $1.95. That type of thing would not occur if we had a strong marketing board, if we had an agency bargaining for farmers whereby they could negotiate with the government, with food retailers and wholesalers regarding the price they are to receive. If we had this type of planning in agriculture we would achieve maximized food production, farmers with decent incomes and enough food for the consumers of this country.

Those are just a few of the things which should be said about this bill. It is a bill which most Canadian farmers will agree to support as far as it goes, but I think it is still far short of what is needed in terms of a fundamental change in agriculture, a change which is necessary if farmers are to stay on the land. In the last few years farmers have been leaving the land. The small farmer is squeezed out: it is happening in the west and in the east. Unless farm incomes are stabilized to the point where a man, his wife and his children can profitably run a farm of ordinary size, we will have long-term difficulties in agriculture in the future.

With those remarks I ask the House to deal expeditiously with the bill on second reading and send it to committee. Hopefully, we will consider there five or six amendments which will strengthen the bill from the farmers' point of view and will certainly do nothing to harm the consumer who has to consider food prices at the retail level.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate with other hon. members in this debate on the stabilization bill. I wish to recognize the presence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) this afternoon and throughout this debate, as he was in the House last Wednesday and Thursday when the bill was before us. Bill C-50 amends the Agricultural Stabilization Act which was first passed 17 years ago, in 1958, and replaced the 1944 agricultural prices support legislation with the Agricultural Stabilization Board. The objective of the board is to help producers obtain a fair share of the national income and achieve an equitable balance between the prices they receive for key agricultural products and the cost of goods and services which they buy. I am certain all hon. members of this House—certainly those who have participated and will participate in this debate—will agree that the objective of the board is indeed a very noble and worthy one.

Having said that, I ask the government how effective this act has been during the past 17 years in providing producers with a fair return for their labour and investment. How effective has it been in providing a fair relationship between the price received and the cost of the goods and services which they buy? The answer to these questions has frequently been communicated to the government by producers, farm organizations and commodity groups in all parts of this great country and might be summed up as, "Not very effective."

Where does the responsibility rest for this neglect and ineffectiveness? We cannot blame the producers. They have met countless times and made numerous requests for changes. Compared to other segments of society, their management and efficiency is almost unequalled; I am sure the minister would agree with that. We cannot blame the management of the board, either. Without hesitation, and with great pleasure, I acknowledge for the record my appreciation of the excellent contribution made by Mr. Sid Williams, former chairman of the stabilization board and former deputy minister of agriculture. The responsibility for the neglect and ineffectiveness must rest squarely and solely on the doorstep of this administration and those who comprise its membership.

The Canada Year Book for 1973 indicates that the stabilization board has a revolving fund of some $250 million, and that under the act the annual cost of stabilization programs has averaged approximately $85.5 million. Thus, one must conclude that $164.5 million has remained annually in this fund unused, unutilized, kept safely in the treasury and out of the hands of the producers for whom it was appropriated by parliament. On the average, approximately 30 per cent to 35 per cent of these funds has been paid out to producers of key agricultural products, most of which—if not all—are for essential food products for support programs. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a pay-out of 30 per cent to 35 per cent might accurately describe the effectiveness of the past performance of this legislation. Needless to say, a 30 per cent to 35 per cent average, by any standard, could be described as somewhat less than a success.

The existing act provides that for each year the board must support, at not less than 80 per cent of the previous ten-year average market or base price, nine commodities—cattle, hogs, sheep, butter, cheese, eggs, wheat, oats and barley—which are produced outside the defined area of the Canadian Wheat Board. The board may, by order in council—and has at one time or another—support many farm products in addition to the original nine, some 28 in all ranging from such essentials as fluid milk, dairy products and potatoes to sunflower seeds and sweetheart roses. I have some doubt about supporting the last product. Perhaps when the minister sums up he will tell us why the government and the board saw fit to support sweetheart roses.

Support levels on the few commodities covered, amounting to 80 per cent of the ten-year average, during the early stages of the program provided some safeguards and no doubt some stability. Support levels of 90 per cent of the five-year average, as proposed in Bill C-50 during periods of a stable economy, low inflation and stable input cost would, of course, be an improvement over the old plan. But do these conditions exist? Certainly not. They have not over the past few years, and they certainly have not existed particularly during the last two to three years. Consider, for example, that the farm cost index has increased by 202.8 per cent since the best year of 1961, and that the consumer price index has increased by 175.8 per cent. The same report that gives these figures indicates that the 1975 farm net income will likely drop by 12 per cent.

We have, unfortunately, experienced under the government a very unhealthy economy, record high inflation—farmers suffer severely during times of high inflation—and record high farm input costs. It is because of these prevailing conditions and the failure of the government to respond to this situation that both the old program and the new one proposed in this bill will provide little, if any, assistance to producers of agricultural products.

This bill has been paraded by the government as the perfect solution, the be-all and end-all of stabilization programs, a fine example for all others to be patterned on, and the international leader. In an attempt to fool producers and others, this government should recognize—and I am certain that some government members do—that they are only fooling themselves.

Those of us who have maintained a grass roots interest in the primary sector of the agricultural industry and producers and producer organizations in all regions of this country have been quick to recognize the shortcomings of this bill. It falls far short of what is required. It falls far short of what has been requested and fully expected in order to regain confidence and stability in the industry. Long-term stability and adequate profit margins are absolutely essential if we are to have an adequate supply of food products not only for all Canadians but in order to fulfil our role as a producer of food for the underfed and the hungry of the underdeveloped countries of the world. Farmers cannot survive on green grass, clean air and sunshine.

It is simply unbelievable, and indeed something that we as Canadians cannot be proud of in this day and age of advanced science, technology and know-how—with the availability of rich agricultural land; with the will, the urge and the desire of our farmers to produce—that we as Canadians are not self-sufficient in all types of agricultural products that can be grown on Canadian soil. An earlier speaker indicated that he was unable to buy Canadian butter. We import huge amounts of butter. The importation of specialty cheeses is another prime example. In fact, the present situation regarding the import of specialty cheeses is intolerable, and the increasing volume of these imports is making dangerous inroads into the production of industrial milk.

I am certain that if time permitted, many similar examples could be cited. Many examples could also be cited of the failure of this government to act promptly and adequately, or even to act at all. This has led to hardship and even disaster for producers and others in the industry. No government stabilization plan, certainly not the one before us today, can be highly successful unless fair protection is given readily against large volumes of lower cost imports which often stem from heavily subsidized countries or from countries with natural and climatic or other advantages. Tariffs on agricultural products are only about one-half of those on industrial products—8 per cent in comparison to 16 per cent.

Many people believe that producer subsidies are sufficiently high at present. This thought can be argued and debated, but I submit that it is certainly not true. It is generally acknowledged that our American competitors have a 20 per cent to 25 per cent advantage, mainly because of their government support programs. Agricultural subsidies in Canada, in most cases, are a fraction of those of our competitors. The per person subsidy for agriculture in 1968, for example, in Canada was $350, compared to $1,300 in the United States, $1,000 in the United Kingdom and $1,500 in Switzerland.

I recognize that some changes have occurred since that time, but no marked difference has resulted. Regardless of that, consumers should not be upset because they have benefited both by an adequate supply and, more than likely, by reduced prices in the marketplace. These figures should be mentioned from time to time, Mr. Speaker, in an effort not only to keep consumers accurately and completely informed but also to prevent a division or gulf of misunderstanding between farmers and the rest of the economy about the reason and the need to assist and support the Canadian agricultural industry.

True, the bill before us updates the original legislation. It could be improved by further reducing the five-year period to four years or to three years, or perhaps even less. Similarly, the 90 per cent provision could be increased. But whichever way it might be further improved by alteration, this can be said: neither the old bill nor the amendments contained in Bill C-50 will provide the support and stability that is needed and expected by Canadian producers.

Once again, because of lack of leadership and action by this government on national problems, the provinces are beginning to move into this area with various support programs. They recognize that something has to be done. I only hope that what appear to be short-term advantages do not result in long-term disasters caused by the failure of this government to face what is really a national responsibility.

Consider for a moment the importance of the industry in terms of the national economy. Farm assets in 1951 totalled $9 billion; by 1971 they had increased to $24 billion. Farmers spent, on goods and services, $1.5 billion in 1951; by 1971 the amount so spent had increased to $3.7 billion. About one-third of our labour force is involved with food and agricultural production. Twenty per cent of the gross value of our manufacturing industry is based on agriculture. Farmers, in 1970, spent $131 million on fertilizer; in 1971 they spent $605 million on farm machinery and another $282 million on oil, gasoline and lubricants, making the agricultural industry one of the biggest consumers of gas and oil products in Canada today. Another $644 million was spent on livestock feeds, $325 million on interest payments and $338 million for farm help. Canadian farmers are major contributors in the establishment of export credit. The figures for 1971 show record-breaking exports: we exported more than $2 billion worth of agricultural products. By 1974 that figure had doubled to nearly $4 billion.

In summary, let me say this: if governments ignore or pay little attention to the importance of the farm economy, we must make it clear to them in no uncertain terms that they are failing to deal fairly with a major group in the Canadian economy. I have the feeling, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-50 and in fact all agricultural bills only interest the 6 per cent or 7 per cent of our population engaged in food production; that is to say, agriculture bills do not interest most people but interest only the dwindling number of our society who provide the food for our entire nation and, indeed, for people beyond our borders. The real truth of the matter is that good agricultural legislation which benefits producers, benefits the entire economy and provides significant advantages to all consumers.

I am aware that many farm associations are anxious to make presentations, to make their views known on this bill and to provide some input at the committee stage. These include the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union, to name but two. Such opportunity must be provided.

Marketing boards and farm marketing commissions have functioned reasonably well in recent years and have greatly assisted producers to obtain improved markets, greater stability and fairer prices. These marketing boards and commissions have provided secure supplies of high quality products to consumers at very reasonable prices. The situation is that marketing boards, regardless of their usefulness and contribution, cannot supply adequate stability on their own. This bill, even though an improvement over its predecessor, falls far short of providing much in the way of either short or long-term stability. In closing, I am hopeful that at the committee stage recommended changes and amendments will be acceptable to the minister, to his staff and to the government.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO ENABLE HOUSING REHABILITATION FOR PERSONS OF LOW OR MODERATE INCOME

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West) moved that Bill C-227, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member knows that the Chair has expressed some reservations about this bill inasmuch as it seeks to remove from the statute a specific subparagraph and substitute for it another involving the expenditure of funds which come under the statute. Accordingly, there is some question whether the bill infringes upon the financial initiative of the Crown. If hon. members want to contribute to that point of order, the Chair will listen to their representations and reserve final decision about the orderliness of the bill. We could then allow debate to continue for the normal time and perhaps make a decision some time later.

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) is highly irregular because it seeks to repeal subparagraph (ii) of section 34.1(1)(a) of the National Housing Act and substitute another paragraph the effect of which, if passed, would extend to the entire country the benefits of the program involved. The bill, if passed, would entail the expenditure of more than $1 billion. I submit that there are dozens of rulings of various Speakers of the House which say that only a minister of the Crown may propose a bill which involves the spending of public money. Citation 249 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition reads in part:

And I quote:

249. (1) "No cases can be found of any private member in the Canadian Commons receiving the authority of the Crown, through a minister, to propose a motion involving the expenditure of public money.

[English]

It is obvious, prima facie, that the bill does not conform to the fundamental rule which says that only ministers can introduce bills involving the expenditure of public funds. The object of the bill, as it is said, is to—

● (1700)

—to repeal the limitation therein and to apply it to the whole country. Considering that thousands of units must be renovated, we can easily infer that public expenditure will be greatly increased. That is why I ask the Chair to declare this bill out of order and inadmissible.

[English]

Mr. McKinley: With regard to the matter Your Honour has raised, I think your assessment is what would be desirable. The idea incorporated in the bill is what the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) is desiring to put before the House. I suggest we have this debate for an hour and it could then be ruled in order or out of order, whichever Your Honour sees fit. Your Honour's initial suggestion that the decision be made after a one-hour debate on the subject is preferable at this time.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no other hon. member who wishes to make a contribution to the point of order, perhaps it could best be expressed that it appears on the face of it that there are certain difficulties such as those described by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané). However, if the Chair were to reserve its decision perhaps the debate would bring forth, from members on all sides, explanations of the operation of the bill which might in fact persuade the Chair otherwise. The preliminary indications are that there would be great difficulty from the technical point of view because of the arguments made by the hon. member for Matane. Perhaps the best course to follow is for the Chair to reserve judgment, allow the debate to take place and see if there is anything during the course of the debate to persuade the Chair that the bill is in order.

Mr. Carter: Madam Speaker, I apologize if my motion is in doubt. However, I am not too familiar with parliamentary procedure. I am more concerned about the thousands of people suffering the effects of poor housing, people with no assistance to improve their housing. I am more concerned about that than the niceties of whether technically the bill, in the opinion of some hon. members, is not in order.

The intent of the bill is to extend the benefits of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program to families living in other than Neighbourhood Improvement Program areas or areas covered under the rural and native peoples housing policy as announced by the minister in March, 1974. The objective of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program is to improve the housing conditions of low and moderate income people by assisting in the repair of their existing dwellings.

As Your Honour is aware, families with low incomes residing in designated NIP areas may borrow from the government under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program up to $5,000, half of which is forgiven. This money is available to restore their homes, bringing them up to an acceptable standard having regard for their health, comfort and safety. The program could be of considerable benefit to our people except for the fact that its application is limited to families residing in NIP areas or those covered under the rural and native peoples housing policy.

If we accept the principle that all Canadians are entitled to decent housing—and surely this House must adhere to that principle—then the government's policy with respect to funds available for house repair and rehabilitation under the RRAP program discriminates against an estimated one million Canadians who, through no fault of their own, are forced to live in and raise their families in homes and under conditions that are totally unacceptable and far below the nationally accepted average. I make that charge on the basis of problems that exist in my city of St.

John's, Newfoundland, where we have one designated NIP area.

St. John's is unique in many respects, not the least of which is its housing stock. This is due in part to the fact that practically all the houses are of wooden construction. They are of a type and quality that is rare in North America. A large number of these fine old family homes are in urgent need of repair. As the gabled roofs and the bay windows rot, the occupant's income only enables him to go to the hardware store to buy cosmetics to replace the rot. That, of course, is no solution to the problem facing a large number of people who live in and try to raise their families in some of these old houses.

Having regard to the fact that in the majority of cases these homes are occupied by families with limited financial resources, it follows that with the absence of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program or some other government assistance, these homes will within a very short time deteriorate to a point where they will be beyond hope as far as rehabilitation is concerned. That is why it is essential that the amendments to the National Housing Act which I propose in my Bill C-227 be accepted and implemented by the government as soon as possible.

I firmly believe that the government must recognize that in many of our urban and rural areas the benefits of the rehabilitation program are badly needed. Today there is hardly a major city in Canada that is not threatened with almost total destruction of older neighbourhoods under the guise of urban development. So-called progress has destroyed the old and unique and often aesthetically pleasing but deteriorating communities and has replaced them with parking lots, commercial development and municipal infrastructure designed to service industry and the automobile.

In many parts of Canada a visual sense of the past is rapidly being destroyed. It will continue to fall victim to the bulldozer unless and until the government assumes its responsibility to all Canadians, not just those who live within the NIP areas. In a large number of cities—and I can speak with some authority about what is happening in the historic city of St. John's—a lot of housing stock that should have another 15, 20 or 25 years of life is falling down. These homes are being threatened by the bulldozer and by people who want to buy the property and speculate, and are able to do so only because the occupants are unable to raise sufficient money on their own to bring the houses up to an acceptable standard.

This is why it is important that the government should initiate a program extending the present arrangements, whereby Canadians living on low and middle incomes can qualify for assistance as is now the case under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program under which a person can borrow up to $5,000, half of which is forgiven and the other half of which is amortized over a number of years at a reasonable rate of interest. The only alternative presently open to these people is to try to obtain money under the home improvements section of the National Housing Act. I am finding that in my own city the banks are not co-operating as they should with people who apply for assistance under this section of the act. The banks are endeavouring to persuade them to apply for a conventional loan at the regular rate of interest.

I think this is grossly unfair since people in the income brackets I have mentioned find it extremely difficult to pay off their loans even at the rate of interest prescribed in the Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act. They are being invited to borrow money at higher rates and this, to my mind, borders on the criminal. Be this as it may, the home improvement section of the National Housing Act is not working: it is not filling the role it was intended to fill. The people I have in mind are not financially capable of meeting the payments or of retiring even a $5,000 loan in a reasonably short amortization period when it bears the rate of interest regularly charged by the chartered banks.

Not all our people wish to live in suburbia. Not all our people wish to live in new bungalows in subdivisions. Many Canadians still want to live in the older parts of our cities. Some of them cannot afford cars; they cannot afford the cost of private transportation to their jobs. I think it essential that they should be given an opportunity to remain in the neighbourhoods with which they are familiar and which are convenient to them. This is why it is important that serious consideration be given to removing the discrimination which presently exists.

There is widespread approval of the principle that all Canadians are entitled to decent housing. Why should people in all parts of our cities not be entitled to the assistance in rehabilitation of housing which is now available to those living in designated NIP areas? In Newfoundland, where approximately 500,000 people live, I can only think of two designated neighbourhood improvement areas. One is in the riding of my hon. friend from Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), at Cornerbrook, and the other is in St. John's West, the constituency which I represent. No one in other parts of the province can avail themselves of this assistance.

I realize there are certain exceptions and that the governor in council has the power to designate other areas, but this arrangement is not working either. This morning I had occasion to talk with a person who worked with CMHC in a rather senior capacity. He told me his office was swamped with people trying to get assistance under the rehabilitation section of the National Housing Act to enable them to undertake necessary repairs to their homes. They had to be turned down because only those living in designated areas could receive assistance.

In conclusion, I would again strongly recommend that the government and its supporters allow this motion to come to a vote. It is important for the future welfare of a large number of Canadians: I believe there are around a million who are living in homes under conditions which are unacceptable. In St. John's, I suggest there are a couple of thousand houses which are not up to acceptable Canadian average standards. These are homes which could, without any great expenditure, be brought up to an acceptable standard and provide another 15 or 20 years of usefulness with a little help from the government along the lines of that provided under the RRAP program. I hope the government will see fit to accept the proposal I am making, and that having done so it will implement the changes in the act as soon as possible to enable people to provide themselves and their families with better accommodation.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I should like first of all to take part in this debate on the admissibility of the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter).

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, this amendment should be allowed. In fact, according to my interpretation of our standing orders, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, and Bourinot's, no private member in this House may introduce an amendment which would result in either depriving the government of additional funds, or causing additional expenditures of funds by the government, which is precisely the purpose of my colleague's amendment. However, since 1957, and in 1958 in particular, a number of precedents were created in the House when a private member was allowed to introduce an amendment which resulted in either limiting the input of additional funds in the public treasury, or causing the government to spend more. And I feel the most recent instance is related to the last budget bill, when a number of amendments which had been introduced by opposition members were deemed in order by the Chair. Thus I believe, Madam Speaker, that the parliamentary procedure, as it is oriented now, generally expands the members' capacity to move amendments to this effect. In my opinion, we should support the one we have before us now.

On the other hand, as regards the very content of the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague, I am particularly anxious, Madam Speaker, to make my views known, because in my opinion the amendment deals with one of this government's most important priorities.

I would be remiss if, before getting to the content of the amendment, I did not reiterate certain statements of policy which have been recently stated anew by the Economic Council of Canada in their report entitled:

"Toward More Stable Growth in Construction"

The Economic Council of Canada pointed out specifically in their recommendation No. 7 that we should change appreciably our approach to the social housing problem. The council said, and I quote:

> We recommend that future low-income housing efforts be organized and funded so as to ensure a smooth growth path over a period of years, on a regional basis, independent of any swings in other residential or nonresidential construction.

I agree with that approach and look forward to seeing the government pass a law putting it into force. Indeed, until now we have always insisted on having housing construction or housing starts follow economic fluctuations. In times of economic growth, the government holds back on its budgets; in times of economic stabilization, the government pours additional amounts into construction. This has often resulted in slowing down public housing; in the final analysis, the first to suffer the consequences are those Canadians whom my colleague described a while ago.

I should also point out to my colleague the Dennis-Fish report on the low-income housing market in Canada. This report, published in 1972, contains a passage I should like my colleagues to recall. It is a quotation taken from the report of the Castonguay-Nepveu Commission of Inquiry into Health and Welfare published in 1971.

I quote an extract which, I think, underlies the philosophy of the amendment proposed by my colleague in the House this afternoon. The Castonguay commission stated:

> Therefore, to recognize access to housing as a universal right implies a direct intervention of the state in the whole industry which still today depends nearly entirely on private enterprise. As the universal access to education and care has required the state to take the responsibility of those sectors instead of private enterprise, so the recognition of the access to housing as a universal right implies a similar direct intervention in housing services.

Madam Speaker, I think it is important that our conception of the right to housing recognizes for every citizen of the country equal access to adequate housing conditions. And the amendment proposed by my colleague this afternoon underlies that philosophy which has been reaffirmed in two very recent reports tabled in this House.

Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention on a particular aspect of the amendment proposed by my colleague, namely the philosophy that is behind the joint program. As you are aware, Madam Speaker, our philosophy in the area of social housing has changed. In the past, when we realized that people in our country needed the support of the government to have adequate housing, we immediately thought in terms of high-rise housing for these people. In the sixties, this approach contributed to create what I call "the concentration of poverty".

One needs only visit the first projects which were implemented under those programs. I have a few in mind and I shall mention for instance the Dozois plan, in Montreal, which is now a strange thing in the city of Montreal, in the sense that we thought we could meet the needs of those people when we initiated such programs in a given area of particularly high density. So that at the same time were creating ghettos of poor in the city areas where private enterprise and the municipal and provincial governments were not able to provide decent housing for these people. Our philosophy has considerably changed because we realize today that the best way to respect adequate urban life conditions and, mostly, to protect a certain quality of urban life was to have a much more practical outlook on social housing.

Madam Speaker, the RRAP program is an application of this outlook. Indeed, one starts with the principle that, in its normal composition, the urban fabric must be respected. All of us who live in cities realize that on certain streets, we do not see only elderly people, younger people, middle-aged persons or citizens having the same profession. The urban fabric is very diversified in its composition and in its social origin; when a government considers social housing as a priority, it must respect the urban fabric. In renovating their districts, in ensuring that they do not literally rot down, in grappling with signs of ageing of neighbourhoods, small urban areas can protect their own urban fabric structure.

Madam Speaker, if you ever had the opportunity, like some of my colleagues, to visit certain European cities that were devastated during the last world war, you probably noticed as I did that those neighbourhoods are particularly monotonous. Indeed, all those neighbourhoods were rebuilt at the same time. Many of my colleagues pointed out very opportunely the monotony of suburban living.

Why? Because all those houses were built according to the same plan, the same alignment and at a time when similarity was the order of the day in both architectural and social concept.

Madam Speaker, questions are being asked nowadays about the value of certain old neighbourhoods. One knows indeed that in such neighbourhoods, there usually exists a community tradition. Our cities have not become metropolises overnight. For instance, less than 50 years ago, there were about twenty municipalities within the territory of the island of Montreal. All those municipalities had a city hall, municipal services and an institutional structure to sustain a community life. And the same can be said of all the large Canadian cities built 50 years or more ago.

Now one realizes today that the development occurring in suburban cities prevents us from re-creating the same quality of community life that still exists in old neighbourhoods. If we let them grow old and worn out, as can be seen in certain areas in this country, a time will come when it will be impossible to recover the ancient housing structures; it will then be impossible to re-create that institutional life.

I would be remiss in not reminding the House the degree to which the era of polyvalent schools during the sixties constituted an extension of that urban bigness. Nowadays we realize that the professor-student relationship should be revalued, as should the employer-employee or the citizen-city relationship, because there is an irreplaceable quality of life within an already built neighbourhood.

Madam Speaker, the NIP program as set up is designed precisely to protect that quality of life in neighbourhoods that my colleague described as presenting particular characteristics.

That program, Madam Speaker, is particularly timely in that it contains one of the most interesting innovative aspects there can be. I will limit myself to drawing the attention of my colleagues to National Housing Act section 15 under which a non profit corporation can buy certain abandoned and decrepit houses, receive loans, grants, and rehabilitate them and make them available to people or groups of citizens who need public assistance to meet their needs in decent housing conditions.

As far as I know, there are now only three projects of that kind in the Montreal area—one in the riding of Saint-Henri, another in the riding of Saint-Jean, and one underway in the riding I represent.

The initiative of that project comes mainly from people in the neighbourhood interested in participating in the effort to rehabilitate the neighbourhood. Those people from a non-profit corporation, as set out in the legislation, and explore themselves the housing market to find structures that are abandoned or could be bought at a relatively moderate price. Once that is done, they assess the orientation of the neighbourhood, that is to say they check to see if the territory is registered, whether it is still residential-oriented, and particularly whether the project is within an overall approach of rehabilitation of the neighbourhood.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, I think it would be utopian to rehabilitate a house or blocks on a street or in a neighbourhood that are eventually intended to be left open to land speculation or if it is intended to leave the district with all kinds of aging industrial structures, in other words without devising a global approach of the district rehabilitation. In fact, not only should aging structures be renovated, but those districts should also often be provided with urban services which have become necessary in a context of planned urban life. Mini-parks often have to be created, and districts also have to be provided with adequate public services. For instance, the whole urban transportation network has to be reworked in such districts in order to connect the district being revitalized with working areas, professional business areas where most of their residents will have their working place.

Our approach to district rehabilitation therefore has to be a global one, and should not be aimed at dwelling structures specifically. It should also encompass industrial structures and urban commodities.

All in all, I think the amendment as it stands would only extend the program to the whole land without in my opinion respecting its basic philosophy.

I think my colleague will realize to what extent I and several of my colleagues share his views on the priority to be given urban rehabilitation. But I think that if we are to ask ourselves what the outcome of that program was, we should also strive to recognize the efforts of municipalities to share in its implementation.

Let me point out, Madam Speaker, that within the city of Montreal our whole approach to those problems was reconsidered and the policy objectives of the city are of course not just to rehabilitate the residential structures. For example, the city of Montreal has also established a program of rent subsidies; it means that, when you have restored a house, you have not necessarily contributed to give this housing to poor people. You must also be able to help them meet the additional costs of housing due to these renovations.

For, if an owner invests $60,000 in the renovation of a house, he will of course increase the rent at the end of the year, so that he may recover the parts of the costs which have not been covered by a loan or a subsidy. For that reason, you must also give a subsidy to the tenants who live in this house. Furthermore, as I mentioned earlier, we must have provisions allowing us to intervene on a full area. For example, we must have targets in our renovations. We must also undertake the renovation of two or three housing structures which seem to have priority in a street, so that the structures which are going to fall into disrepair will be looked after as soon as possible.

We must also think of passing provisions to release land around residential areas, so that life in the open should be possible and appropriate parks could be organised. We must also be able to drive out of these areas all the undesirable elements which may have settled in the past, when our municipal by-laws were very flexible. In other words, we must have a global program of district renovations.

I believe that if we must bring an original contribution to this debate, we must rather aim at improving our programs on this global basis, and not at limitating them only to housing structures, because finally only a minimum part of the objective would be thus reached.

In such a highly populated area as the city of Montreal, more than 50,000 units would need renovation to meet the standards of the housing code. We realize, Madam Speaker, that all these housing units cannot be renovated at the same time and without some planning. I believe that RAPP provisions as they now stand also call upon community groups.

I would suggest that my colleague make a try in his province. I suggest he urges interested citizen groups in his constituency to regroup into a nonprofit corporation and use that section of the act. It is now realized that the amounts voted, especially for the implementation of that aspect of the program, were not entirely used, and certainly could create more healthy housing, if nonprofit groups were established to meet the needs of certain segments of the population.

Of course areas as designated by the Governor in Council create difficulties. This may not promote an overall, across-the-board program as might be desirable, in the light of the right to housing referred to earlier. Nevertheless, land development cannot be allowed to proceed haphazardly, especially in urban areas. Urban development cannot be left entirely to the whims of owners. Some invest in land, and let depreciation accumulate to the extent of the money invested. Others would show more decency if coercive provisions forced them to renovate their buildings when needed.

In my view, provisions promoting urban planning by municipalities, as they stand in the bill, favour land use planning, which is so vital if our cities are to conserve a measure of unity, especially in older districts.

I welcome the attempts made regularly by some of my colleagues to emphasize the need for a new approach to problems. If a number of colleagues proposed bolder reforms in our approaches, I believe we would meet one of the most urgent priorities of this decade, the promotion of housing as a basic right of every Canadian.

[English]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) is to be commended for bringing forward Bill C-227 because he draws to the attention of the House the shortcomings of the rehabilitation assistance program when it is confined to persons entitled to those moneys within the neighbourhood improvement areas.

I was rather surprised that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. De Bané) would attempt to block discussion on this very important bill, because if we have a crisis in Canada today it is surely the housing crisis, particularly when one realizes that there are 800,000 people unemployed and that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) says the target for new starts should be 210,000 just to keep up with present needs, while at the same time the latest news issue from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicates that housing starts for the month of February dropped to 156,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis, and that in January the figure was no more than 165,000.

We have a problem in respect of new starts and a problem in respect of rehabilitation and home improvements. May I remind you, Madam Speaker, that the only two programs we have with regard to rehabilitation are the one contained in section 31(1) concerning the residential rehabilitation assistance program, and the home improvement program under the National Housing Act.

I might remind the House that the home improvement program under the national housing provisions has been a dismal failure, which of course was pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's West. That program was financed through the provinces and many people were not aware that they could go to the banks for money for home improvements or, if they were aware of this, perhaps they thought that the interest rate would be too high. Many people who were completely ignorant of the situation went to finance companies where they paid almost double the rate they would have been charged for home improvement loans at a bank. This has created a very bad situation.

The hon. member for St. John's West, and all of us in this House, uphold the proposition that decent housing is a matter of a basic human right for all Canadians. We also consider that it should be decent housing at an affordable cost. Therefore we have to look not only at new housing but at the rehabilitation of houses. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has said that there are at least 800,000 homes across Canada that are in need of repairs and rehabilitation. The fact is that this need is felt in every city, town and village right across the country. Therefore it is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I almost think that if I were to argue whether or not this bill is in order I would fall back on the peace, order and good government clause in the constitution because if we are to have good government especially in times of unemployment, and a housing crisis, we must be given leadership by the government, leadership which we do not have now. As a result it is absolutely necessary that the government provide funds to take care of new housing starts and to take care of repairs and rehabilitation. I think that this is the time to put that money into the economy and thus help the unemployment situation.

The residential rehabilitation program has got off to a slow start since it was passed in 1973. I think one of the reasons, first of all, is that it is confined to people in the neighbourhood improvement areas, and also it is subject to a great deal of bureaucratic control across the country. Obtaining the necessary agreements has been a delaying factor in the implementation of the program. It is a good program because it has a forgiveness clause in the loan conditions, and moneys are amortized over a fair period at a reasonable rate. Therefore I think we should use the idea of a low interest rate with a long amortization because it is necessary that people be given money to rehabilitate their homes and, at the same time, not have a great financial burden imposed on them. This applies to people right across the country. It applies to Indians and Eskimos, it applies to old age pensioners, to widows and widowers, and to single men and women.

People must be given help in creating the type of home which will provide them with the best quality of living, since it is the home atmosphere that determines the social conduct of people within a community. We are paying at a very high price for housing because of the social consequences flowing from a shortage of houses and their poor state of repair. It is not only the physical structure that must be repaired but some times there is such a thing known as social obsolescence.

As we improve our living standard the old homes that we have may be inadequate to help us attain some of the social benefits that are necessary for happiness within the community. It may be that more space is needed for a car. The occupants of a house may need space for a hobby room or a music room, or they may need more space for a garden. In fact, maybe we are not talking about obsolescence and repair, but rather about replacement, and that is why it is so important.

Nevertheless, structural repairs are important. Let me give you an example. In my riding a group of houses in the lower end of my riding were built in 1910 at a cost of $1,500 a house. These houses were occupied until two years ago by people on very low incomes, many of whom needed social assistance to pay the rent. What happened is rather striking. Developers who moved into the city of Toronto acquired this group of row houses. They tore the insides of the houses down, and replaced everything except for the individual structure itself. However, these houses are now selling for between $70,000 and $75,000. The down payment on them is no less than $20,000, and I think the first mortgage is at about 10½ per cent with the second mortgage at 12 per cent.

This is what is happening in many of our large cities. People on low and moderate incomes are being driven out of homes which should be repaired for them, and the vacated homes are renovated and rehabilitated for people who have money and who are moving back into the city to attain what is known as social status. This is what is happening across the country.

When I heard the hon. member for St. John's West speak, I was reminded of housing in Newfoundland and the maritimes. Today I came back from the maritimes where I saw some of the homes there. A successful building scheme down there is what is called shell housing. We must put more money into shell housing because people must have money as they go on with the construction of their homes. It is onerous to assume a mortgage these days at 10 per cent or 10.5 per cent, with the heavy interest payments that people must meet. Therefore I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to speak to the minister.

The minister is a man of fine instincts, a man of decent qualities. It seems to me that he intends to do a good job in housing, but he is not getting the necessary support of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). He does not want to see 156,000 starts for February when his target is 210,000 and he does not want to see people living in poor quality homes. He needs the necessary money and the necessary co-operation.

In committee the other day the minister castigated the trade unions for not contributing to the housing fund scheme. They should contribute, and so should the banks and the insurance and trust companies. The minister should put a high priority on housing starts and the rehabilitation of houses so that every year he has a program and commitments from the financial institutions. If it means pension funds, then he should conscript all financial institutions into contributing to the program so as to ensure that he has the necessary moneys. That is the way in which it must be done.

Also, a reasonable interest rate should be established. We cannot consider an interest rate of 10 per cent or 11 per cent, especially for pensioners. How can one impose that on a pensioner, or on an Indian or Metis? How can one impose that rate on a father or mother who has other commitments? The Minister of State for Urban Affairs said that he would like to see the housing budget of any person not exceed 22 per cent of income, and I agree with him. But in too many cases it far exceeds 22 per cent. We find people with an income of $3,000 or less spending up to 50 per cent of their income on rent. Therefore it is a good thing that the hon. member put forward his bill today because he has underlined the deficiencies in our present housing program.

I hope that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, the Minister of Finance and all hon. members appreciate the seriousness of the housing crisis in Canada, and what a tremendous help its alleviation would be in solving the unemployment problem, while providing a better quality of housing so that people can live in decent housing at affordable cost.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I shall certainly be brief because I have only seven minutes left. I would still like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) for having introduced Bill C-227. As to whether the bill is out of order or not, I was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) ask the Chair to declare this bill out of order. The hon. member for Matane has been a member of this House for several years and I found the way in which he wanted to get rid of this bill very strange. As all other members, he is well aware that bills introduced during private members' hour have a life expectancy of only one hour. This bill will necessarily be killed by the clock like all the others, Madam Speaker, but it will give us the opportunity to express our opinion on certain subjects about which we could not otherwise talk in this House.

In my opinion, this bill is very interesting, as the previous speakers have proved, since it suggests an amendment to the National Housing Act, an amendment wanted by all the population, especially the low income earners who wish to obtain a dwelling. When I speak of a dwelling, I mean a family dwelling, and this afternoon, we have heard mostly about the programs and the needs of the large centres.

I know that there is a pressing need of it. What the members of the House do not know, it is what is needed for rural communities, villages and towns and in rural areas as a whole.

If the government were to accept this amendment, it would be required to introduce legislation allowing low income workers to repair their homes, especially in villages and in the country. If they could take advantage of the plans proposed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to rehabilitate their homes, it could be possible to improve them rather than build new ones. Nowadays they have to pull down old houses and replace them by new ones if they want to get a loan from the CMHC.

I believe that we are wrong. We should give priority to houses with a good structure and then give a chance to people who could renovate them. That would cost about one third the price of a new house. In my opinion, this amendment to the legislation will solve in part the family problem of low income families.

Madam Speaker, the interest issue has been raised. I believe it should be possible for those people who need low price houses to borrow money bearing a low rate of interest. What happens today? The low income families anxious to buy a house are disadvantaged because of interest rates, because those are established according to the paying capacity of the borrower; in other words, the lower the income of the borrower, the higher the interests, and that should be the contrary, if we want to work in a social spirit to help those people.

I will restrain myself to those few comments because another member is asking me for two or three minutes. I would like to call the attention of the government to the need for social interest rates for those people and the deductibility from their income tax of the interest paid when they buy a house.

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I always get in on the tail end of everything. In the couple of minutes I have left I would like to commend my hon. colleague from St. John's West for bringing in the bill. I participated in a debate on this same topic, as did the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), just a couple or weeks ago.

I think we should consider the aim of residential rehabilitation. It points out the importance of residential rehabilitation in Canada. The aim is to bring housing up to the minimum standards of health and safety. Everyone can realize the implications this brings to improving housing for low income people in Canada.

I would like to point out that the Dennis and Fish study on low income housing—and I have said many times that it was a good study on neighbourhood improvement—indicated that:

> There are provisions under the National Housing Act for federal financing... of rehabilitation projects. To date, however, little widespread use has been made of the program. This is due to a slowness in communication between Ottawa, the Provinces and the cities in defining program needs.

The program came into effect almost two years ago, and still only a small number of designated areas have been defined. I would like to go on, Madam Speaker, but I will sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in the past week Bill C-50 was described to me by a number of very responsible members of the agricultural community in my area as the bill that will possibly be referred to as the saving piece of legislation for agriculture in the years to come.

For a number of days we have been sitting here listening attentively to speaker after speaker from the opposition side deliver tirade after tirade against the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). But, Mr. Speaker, throughout all that high priced verbiage I have not been able to discern one iota of constructive suggestion of any substance that would give any indication that the hon. members have in their possession any workable solution to the problems that they claim have been caused by, or at least not solved by the Minister of Agriculture.

And while constructive criticism should—

An hon. Member: Where did you get the farm credit recommendation? It was the 1972 Conservative platform.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce): —and will always be encouraged by this government when given by well meaning members of the official opposition and all members of the opposition, I think it behooves us now to get on to the committee stage of discussion. Members of the committee concerned about the problems of agriculture can then debate this bill, study it clause by clause, and report to this House in the very near future. In this way improvements and recommendations for action outlined in the bill can be put into practice for the betterment of the farm population of this country who are now in need of the type of assistance proposed to be supplied by the bill.

It is all well and good to use the second reading stage of this legislation as a vehicle "to get the Minister of Agriculture," but it is more important now that the farmers of Canada get the benefits available to them under the provisions of the legislation. As a matter of fact, I too would like to get the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to get him to accept a permanent position as the Minister of Agriculture. He is the best one the country has ever had. If the members opposite disagree, I hope they will look around this House and realize that many of the seats they used to hold are now filled by members on the government side of the House. The people of this country, and particularly the farm and agricultural communities, put their trust and confidence in the minister, and expressed their feelings on the matter in no uncertain terms on July 8, 1974.

The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) earlier today said that only 6 per cent of the labour force is involved in agriculture and the provision of food. While that may be true, I would strongly point out, Mr. Speaker, that the other 94 per cent of us will be in a terrible mess if that 6 per cent should decide to stop supplying basic necessities at a reasonable and economical price.

I respect the hon. member for Windsor West in his attempts at upholding the rights of the consumer, and laud him for that stand. But I hope he did not imply that the 6 per cent he talked about were unimportant to the remainder of this country's citizens. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that he was trying to point out the great importance of that 6 per cent of our population to all segments of our economy.

Too many times we get the impression that farm stabilization legislation is a device used by government to help those poor downtrodden, backward bumpkins out on the back forty who simply cannot look after themselves. Mr. Speaker, in many cases support prices and stabilization plans are in reality consumer subsidies that are of benefit not to the farmer but to the consumer. Ask a western wheat farmer about the two price wheat system, or a milk producer about the dairy subsidy.

I hope that hon. members of this House who represent urban areas will pause to reflect for just a moment on exactly where we sit in this country. As consumers we tend to forget that farmers are also consumers, indeed very large consumers—consumers of petroleum, consumers of all of the commodities and services, consumers of farm machinery, of automobiles, and consumers that in some instances have been taken to the cleaners like no other group. Ask the farmer about price rises in fertilizer, farm machinery, machinery parts, binder twine, to name a few. I have not heard members who claim to be concerned about consumers create much of a hue and cry about these people or about protecting their jobs.

We have been asked where the total cost of this bill will fall. Mr. Speaker, I would pose a counter question. Where will the burden fall when farmers say to heck with it and quit producing the essential foodstuffs we all rely on, and tell the small businessman, the factory worker, the corporate executives, labour union leaders and their members of parliament to try to get along without them. We, as consumers, may think we have it tough now, but if that happens hamburger at $4 a pound will look cheap. Despite fantastic prices in the parliamentary restaurant even my hon. friend, the member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), would not be able to get nourishment from an empty plate.

We might as well face the facts. Farmers throughout this land of ours, whether in British Columbia or the maritimes, Ontario, Quebec, or the rolling prairies, are all concerned about today's conditions and the outlook for tomorrow. More than one has come to me since July 8 and suggested the possibility of withholding farm produce to point out their problems to the rest of Canada. I can tell you, Sir, that if they did so for only a week or two, all Canadians would view the farmer and his importance in a brand new light. These same farmers, beef producers, hog producers and yes, egg producers too, have all told me the farmers of Canada need the stabilization bill, and need it now. They ask what the Minister of Agriculture and the government are going to do for agriculture in this country.

In my hand I have a list of all the things the government and the Minister of Agriculture have done for consumers and farmers. In 1972 provincial marketing boards and egg producer boards signed agreements implementing a national egg marketing plan. Let me also refer to the Prince Edward Island agreement on the small farm development program, to changes requested by major livestock industry organizations in the contents of the blue book, to the Nova Scotia agreement on the small farm development program, and to the federal crop loss assistance program designed to help farmers in the Peace River area of British Columbia and Alberta. I could list page after page of other programs which have been implemented and which continue to help the farmer and consumer.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, should not be considered as an entity unto itself; it should be looked at in conjunction with other bills before the House, bills which have been brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture and others who are concerned about farming. I am thinking of the amendments to the Farm Credit Act which we debated recently. If we provide loans to young farmers, we must make sure that they know what prices they can expect for their produce and how much they can earn. It is especially important for young farmers to know what their input costs will be. I think the farm stabilization bill, in conjunction with the amended Farm Credit Act, will provide the young farmers of tomorrow with the needed stability.

The government will soon introduce the health of animals bill, the western grain stabilization bill, and the two-price wheat bill. This legislation must be considered as one package. These bills constitute a total program. They cannot be considered in isolation. As I said, we must look at the total picture, at the total effect of these bills on the farmers of the nation.

Earlier today the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said that the consumer sometimes feels the farmer has been doing well enough, thank you, and we should not worry about him. Let me tell him that many farmers of my area would love to meet him face to face, would love to tell people who think his way what has happened to farm prices and input costs. In the past year input costs have risen sky high, but prices have dropped. I am sure they could convince the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, and others who think as he does, of the wrongness of his opinions.

For, Mr. Speaker, now as never before this country goes as the farmer goes. It has always been thus. When the farmer is prosperous, this country's economy is prosperous. When he is in economic difficulty, so is the rest of our economy. The farmer is a good spender. If he has money he will buy new farm machinery; he will invest in this country. We depend on the farmer. As his economy goes, so will ours.

I took time the other day to look up the dictionary definition of stabilization. It is defined as, "to maintain or provide for the maintenance of the purchasing power of a country's currency by fixing its value in terms of gold." Another definition is, "something that is stable." I thought I had better look up the meaning of stable. I saw that the definition was, "something that is firmly fixed or established, not easily to be moved or changed, or fickle." The dictionary gave as an example of use, "the only stable politician of his day." That is exactly what we are talking about here. We are considering a bill which will give the profession of agriculture some of the stability which today is lacking. The bill is being brought in by one of the truly stable politicians of this day. Let us get on with it as soon as possible. Let us complete second reading and committee stages, so that those who need its benefits are not kept waiting.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the bill to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act will be, I hope, constructive for the minister's benefit, and educational for those hon. gentlemen who think history started in 1974. The original Agricultural Stabilization Act was debated in this House in 1958. It was introduced as part of a package for dealing with the fundamental weakness of the agricultural industry.

The sorts of speeches made by hon. members opposite tonight, and I include copies of the speech the minister's office has been distributing, raise the ire of farmers across this country. They are calling in to us and saying, "Why don't you tell that—

An hon. Member: Careful!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): —"Why don't you tell that—unprintable—what the facts are." That is why members on my side spoke about the plight of farmers in their areas.

The hon. member from the Okanagan area and the hon. member from New Brunswick, together with farm representatives across the country, are trying to tell the minister something. Put bluntly and simply, they are saying that for two and a half years the farming people of this country have held their breath waiting for the government to act. Farmers like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). He speaks like one of them. Every time a farm group raises a problem, he says, "I think you are right. I will look into it and do something."

We can see what the minister has done. Every proposal brought forward by the minister seeks to amend Conservative legislation passed in this House in 1958 or 1959. The program we are discussing is part of a package. The original bill was known as the Agricultural Stabilization Act. It was designed to provide insurance against disastrous drops in price. It was disaster insurance—that is all. You must have it. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Douglas) was quite right. You must insure against disaster before you can implement other programs. They are all connected. The hon. member also mentioned the Farm Credit Act, originally introduced in 1959 by the Conservative government, and soon to be amended by this House.

[Mr. Douglas (Bruce).]

I want to list the ingredients of the package which give logic and coherence to any over-all national agricultural program. First, you must consider accelerated sales. The farmer knows that, given his present productivity, he can produce far more than city people can consume. Therefore he must be helped to dispose of his product in the huge quantity which is made possible by modern technology. This product must be put in the hands of somebody who needs it. So the first step is a marketing program which will help the farmer to sell, and not restrict production. I will return to that point.

Second, the farmer must be guaranteed stability of price. This bill is supposed to do that. It seeks to guarantee the farmer who breeds an animal or grows a crop that, when it is time to market the product, he will not be forced into bankruptcy if the price drops.

This bill is a good bill. The minister has improved the original legislation by raising the 80 per cent provision to 90 per cent. That is all this bill does. It does not add to the minister's powers. They are the same as they were before. The powers have been there for all these years. The farmer has watched minister after minister take the office of Minister of Agriculture and never fully use the powers. That is why you see the fruit and vegetable people upset.

If you come from a potato area like New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba, or British Columbia, you can ask the local farmer what this act has done over the past 17 years. He can only mention about three or four things brought in to help him. The potato grower had low prices for 10 or 12 years, good prices for two years, and disaster in 1974. Here we are three months into 1975 and the government still has not got a clue about what it is going to do. It just met with the farmers last week. The crop conditions and price conditions were known last fall.

There is an awful awareness on the part of farmers. They remember the thirties when, as young men on the farms, they pleaded for stability of prices and markets, stability of income, a modern system of farm credit, re-development, and utilization of all their resources. All they got in the last half of the thirties when their needs were so great was the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. They got that in 1939, and that was all. As a matter of fact, in 1939 there were four acts of parliament passed and never proclaimed, to get rid of the wheat board. This brings me to what I really want to say.

Over the past 40 years of agricultural economic history, all farmers have known under Liberal administration has been chaos. The only party that ever gave them hope and any form of logic or coherence in its programming was the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In the early years of the depression it was the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act of 1934, the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935, and the National Products Marketing Act of 1934. Those were the acts brought in in the last three years of the Bennett administration.

When the Liberal government was elected in 1935 it took all the legislation it could to the courts and said, "Throw it out". It was thrown out. That was the Liberal contribution to agriculture, with the exception of the PFA which came in 1939. During the war when they planned to get rid of the wheat board, they found it was a way of keeping prices down. They then kept the wheat board as a way of restricting the farmer from producing by keeping down his price.

In 1946 we got the British wheat agreement. For four years we had to sell our wheat according to government mandate from Ottawa at a price below world prices. I am simply saying Liberal years to the farmers were chaotic years.

Then we had another period from 1957 to 1963. We did something in a small way about marketing the farmers' products. We did nothing substantial for the eastern farmer during that period. We never got around to it. We did something about stabilizing prices. In 1962, just a few years after, because the legislation was not changed it was already out of date.

This is why there are complaints from those members who represent farm areas. They know there is more profit in the big mandatory products. They know the legislation has not met the needs of many of the other products over the years. The farmer has held his breath for two and a half years hoping this new minister, who looks and talks like a farmer, will help them, but you only measure a farmer, or anything else, by productivity.

What the minister has produced is an amendment to a good law that makes it a little better. He deserves full credit for that. He moved the time period for averaging the base price from ten years to five. Let me remind the House that when the original bill was introduced in 1958 it had a three year average for the base period. That was taken out because in those days it was the Liberals who sat on this side of the House. They fought like tigers to get it changed into ten years. The farm organizations supported the Liberals at that time, and we agreed. That was a mistake we made.

I know the history of this period. I know this is a good bill, but it is only part of a package. It must be understood it does not provide what the farmer wants, which is not only security against price drops. He needs that. Now he is asking for security of income, and there is a difference a mile wide. The difference between stability of price and stability of income is what I am afraid the minister does not understand.

When the minister states he is going to bring in a stabilization bill that will answer all the farmers' needs, their hearts begin to palpitate with expectation. Then they get this warmed-over Conservative legislation. The minister is going to be in serious trouble unless he can find someone in his department, someone among his friends, who can sit down and visualize what the needs are in 1975 as opposed to 1972. The difference is a country mile apart.

A few years ago several members pointed out that prices moved fairly gradually. A moving average was fairly useful. However, today we have an inflation rate on equipemnt costs that is not going up by the 10 per cent figure that consumer costs are going up, but is going up at such tremendous escalation that even on average it is over 15 per cent, and in fact closer to 20 per cent.

Every member can quote examples of machinery that costs $4,000 when you go in to price it. You go out and sell your old machine, but by the time you get back the price is $9,000. By the time the order gets through company headquarters, it is up to $13,000. This is the type of thing we are facing.

If you want imaginative thinking today, set the base price as a cost figure today. After that put in the escalator factors. Every bit of common sense will tell you that what is the base price today at 100 per cent of your costs will be 115 per cent next year. However, under this bill's averaging device all you can take of that increase in cost, if you are measuring against cost, is only 20 per cent of 15%, which is 3 per cent. This bill does not measure against costs, however. It measures against marketing price, which has no relationship to cost.

The bill is good. However, let us not build up a great expectation among farmers that a bill that is good will do things that it cannot do. That is my first point, Mr. Speaker. This is good legislation for a small purpose. That small purpose is to guarantee to the farmer who has a debt, trying to go ahead and plan some thing or breed something, that there will at least be that as a floor price for the coming crop year. That brings me to the second point.

To repeat the first point, this is good legislation, sound in logic, and coherent with all the other parts of the package, but it is only a part. The minister was quite right when he said in Assiniboia last week that this is part of a package. I have the press release. I do not yet have a copy of his speech. However, he is wrong when he leaves those poor people of Assiniboia believing he is going to answer all their problems. That is where the trouble lies. They have great expectations that this legislation will solve all their problems. However, as several members have pointed out, when you look at the legislation, it is the same legislation that we passed in 1958. In fact, I do not think it is as good. It is true that provision is made for 90 per cent, and that is fair enough, but that moving average is as useless today as some of the appendages of a boar. That is the first thing.

The original concept was to tell the farmer before he planted his seed or bred his animal what he could expect by way of return. The term used was forward pricing. Forward pricing is not mentioned in this legislation.

I have brought down with me the last report of the Price Stabilization Board containing details about some of the things it supported last year. Take sugar beet. On June 4, 1971, and June 10, 1972, it was announced in press releases that the '71 and '72 sugar beet crops would continue to be supported at so much a cwt. When do they plant beets in Ontario, Alberta and Manitoba? If a farmer has not put in his sugar beets by June he should not be farming.

I go on to the next item, potatoes. Here is an Order in Council dated January 19, 1972, authorizing the board to purchase certain quantities of No. 1 grade potatoes. All this does is try to close the barn door after the potatoes have escaped.

Take apples—on November 9 the Board was authorized to make certain payments after the apples had been grown. Here is another order with respect to carrots dated December 21. Mr. Speaker, who raises carrots in the middle of winter unless it is in a hothouse? And so it goes. The price is always announced after the grower is committed.

If this legislation is to be used to encourage farm production, the department knows months in advance what the average will be, so tell the producer what price is to be paid by making it a forward price—it will not be of much help, but it will help a little.

On this subject of forward pricing let me elucidate in connection with a modern policy of inducement to production. Having heard the speeches made by the minister, farmers were expecting that this legislation would provide an income guarantee. They expected it would be something along the lines of what has been done in British Columbia, or what Ontario and Quebec are thinking of doing, that is to say, giving the farmer the benefit or the promise of a guaranteed income. But all the farmer gets from this bill is a guarantee that if he raises one of a certain group of commodities he will get 90 per cent of a five-year price average and that, if the provinces or producers want to contribute, a little more can be added to the guaranteed price.

What I am pointing out is that if the minister wants farmers to produce, more than this needs to be done. There has to be an incomes policy, and this is not an incomes policy. An effort is going on to provide an incomes policy for the grain farmers on the prairies, but there is nothing for the other poor slobs who happen to live outside the prairies. We need to insist in the committee that prices must be announced before the production season begins. This was the original philosophy behind the bill, but it has been ignored throughout in the course of the administration of the act. In the case of products whose prices are subject to violent fluctuations, I am thinking, for example, of fruit and vegetables, the answer will not lie in this legislation at all but possibly in some sort of marketing organization which will be prepared at a moment's notice to buy these products and put them into people's stomachs.

To get back to this question of forward pricing, let us look at it realistically. If we examine farm income in the various provinces in the last four or five years we find there are only three provinces where, after a farmer has covered the costs of his operation, looked after interest on investment, and set aside $3,000 or $4,000 for wages and management, there is any money left over. I am referring to the three prairie provinces where a large proportion of the production consists of grain.

The Ontario farmer is the most efficient in the world, yet all he is doing is running at high speed and remaining in the same place. To assure him he will get the average of prices over the last five years will do nothing to induce him to produce more. In the maritimes, farmers are running too, but they are not even staying in the same place; they are going backwards. In Quebec, with its tremendous agricultural potential, they are going downhill.

The only thing that has saved the prairie province in the last two years is that, thanks to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), we had no grain to sell, prices went up to the roof and for once we got ahead of our costs. Today, though, the grain farmer is as naked as a jaybird. He knows there is no international convention governing prices. He knows there is no floor price available to him, and that if there should happen to be one or two million extra tons of bread grain available in the world, prices will fall as quickly as they rose and then the only thing he will be able to do is go to the poor house in high gear, for which he is well equipped.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

If we were completely open in our approach to this legislation we would acknowledge that it is only part of a package. No financial institution wants to lend, say, $100,000 to assist a farm operation unless it has a good idea what the annual income is likely to be. Legislation such as this has a part to play, but it will not solve all the problems of farm income; it will not send farmers roaring into the fields to plant next spring, or roaring out to breed their stock when they know that a price based on a five-year average will not meet costs of production. There has to be a new and imaginative starting place, and on the basis of average prices in the last five years the government is not going to get much action.

I hope, I have explained with sufficient clarity the part this legislation plays in the overall scheme of things. I hope, I have made it clear that forward pricing should be put back into the legislation. I hope, the minister will seize the bull by the horns and agree that this should be started on a new basis. Having got that clearly in mind, let us also have clarity of thinking about what we have to do to give the farmer stability of income.

I should like to ask the minister, in a rhetorical way, to examine the speeches made by the hon. member from the Okanagan and the hon. member from New Brunswick who spoke of problems in their areas. These members represent two different extremes of the country, two types of product—fruit and vegetables—in regard to which there has never been justice from the legislation over the years. Let us see whether we can come up with a program on the marketing side that will give them some hope for the future.

I should like to conclude my remarks with this main thrust. My party will support this legislation. It will try to amend it, never pretending that it is going to cure all of the problems of the farmers. But this party wants the minister not to betray the faith that the people of Canada have in him. He will be different from his predecessors if he does something other than talk. If the minister would get rid of some of the people who surround him, and who publish one speech after another that should make us ashamed that we ever became connected with agriculture, he will be able to rest his jaw and let his brains catch up.

What I am trying to say is that we want action. We are willing to be co-operative. But one of the techniques that the advisers use in taking over a minister is to give the minister so many speaking engagements that he has no time to think. I say to this minister, take time off to think. The members on this side of the House may be called Conservatives but they are not evil men, and I say the same of all members of the House. There must be some good in everybody. I have learned from experience to listen. I do not know everything about agriculture, so all I can do is listen and then try to do something based on what I have learned. Let not the minister be known as a minister who talked and never did anything new and creative.

The minister has a great opportunity to get rid of one phrase that his speechwriters use, "supply management". This is a great subject of contention in the world today. The world needs food, so what we must do is expand. Supply management is the tool of the economist, the adviser to governments, who wants to restrict production. That is the difference.

Supply management started in Europe and was brought to North America in 1960. We, as a government in Canada, in 1960 resisted it and we continued to expand. The United States accepted it in 1960, and look at the disaster it was to their farmers. It got into this country in 1969 through that awful agricultural task force report which recommended that two out of every three farmers should get off their farms. It recommended that we reduce the acreage sown by wheat farmers by half; it recommended that the farmers be sent to the cities. It was called the small farms program.

Worst of all, this government, of which the minister was part—he sat on the back benches in those days—brought in legislation to restrict agriculture. It succumbed to the false doctrine of supply management. It succumbed to the doctrine of restricting the production of the farmer. It succumbed to the doctrine of taking farmers out of production and sending them off to the ghettos in the cities.

I suggest the minister should get away from all this. I know he said he did not belong to the government when all these things happened, and he is right. But he now has the awful task of proving that he does not belong there. Those of us who know nothing about agriculture have discovered one thing; we have been at the wrong end of the stick. I know it is said that in a full barrel of rat manure you will rarely find a good kernel of wheat. To put it in very blunt terms, if the minister stays around with the same bunch of fellows who did these awful things to us, I say he will not be a good kernel of wheat for very long either. That is the gut issue.

What the minister has to do is to turn his driving strength and power, with the faith of the farmers behind him, in the direction of selling organizations. We know the egg situation has been in a mess. Let us put the egg industry in the hands of a group of people who will not try to play God. Let us set up a selling organization for eggs. If people do not need protein, then I do not know what else they need. I do not care what the product is; almost all agricultural products can be sold in some form or another. Ideas have been floating around Ottawa all of the years I have been here.

The only market that the tobacco growers have is controlled by three major companies, and they decide what they are going to pay. Of course, they play games with the clock, but in practice they are the only three customers. With a strong minister and a selling board for tobacco we will be able to sell this product to Europe, pay the 25 per cent tariff, and still give the people of Europe the chance to smoke a mild cigar at half the price. We should slash away at this sort of market. The tobacco growers of southwestern Ontario themselves cannot do it. The people of Europe who smoke tobacco will be able to smoke twice as much at half the price, and go to the grave much faster. That is not our business, but I say selling is the key.

Let me talk about beef for a few moments. The amount of beef produced in the United States and Canada in 1974, and expected to be produced in 1975, is such that these two great agricultural countries do not produce sufficient beef to feed their own people. That just indicates how the industry can be mucked up. Their two governments have managed to do that. It seems to me that we are putting everything today into the hands of a group of advisers, and the only thing they know is how the restrict and control the farmers. They think all control should be in the hands of a group of technocrats, civil servants, or whatever you call them and that these people know better what to do than anybody else. They think they know when to plant, when to harvest, when to sell; they control the product from first to last.

In 1971 Liberals and NDP members supported the national marketing legislation. Thank God no member of the Conservative party did so, because all it was designed to do was to restrict the production of farmers, to control their activities from beginning to end, even right through the business cycle. We only accepted the legislation in so far as it applied to eggs and poultry. If the government had had its way, it would have applied to every agricultural product, but thanks to some P.C. members of the House the government was stopped at that time. I was not here, so I cannot take credit for that.

The doctrine of supply management and of restriction is obsolete today in a world where demand goes up at the rate of nearly 4 per cent a year and productivity increases at the rate of only 3 per cent. I am using round figures; the actual figures are 3.9 per cent and 2.7 per cent, but let me call it 3 per cent and 4 per cent a year.

Every year we drop behind to the extent of 500 million bushels in cereals which the world needs, and drop behind in resepct of red meat products, and yet we have all these governments throughout the world that are dominated by a group of economists who believe in running the show. Thank heavens there are a few in each country who differ. Surely the famine we have seen in the last five or six years in the middle belt of the world, and the awful scenes we have witnessed on our television sets, should strike home so that we will not be content to say that we will just support a world food bank under the United Nations.

The United States and Canada should stop this silly fighting and go out and meet the needs of these people. These people do not have the money. We should buy these products and sell them all over the world. This is being done by the Japanese, and by one or two Canadian and United States concerns today. We should have this concept of international trading companies. The minister should be listening to this.

I, for one, am not prepared to write off the minister. I think his heart is in the right place, but I ask him to please omit all this talk and give us the action farmers expect. Otherwise we will all be dead. I again make the plea I made at the beginning. Hopefully all my remarks will be constructive, but I want them to be clearly understood. The minister has not yet entirely shot himself down, but if he keeps on making statements without finding answers, the farmers will have no choice but to send the Liberals to the same place the Liberals were sent in the United Kingdom many long years ago.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to say a few words on the important Bill C-50, concerning the marketing of agricultural commodities. We know that there have been problems in this area for a long time and that for many years we have tried to solve them in different ways, either by bringing in new solutions or else by proposing amendments to existing ones.

One of the purposes of the proposed bill would be to shorten from ten to five years the period from which the base price for each agricultural commodity is determined, and also to alter in the manner prescribed the method of establishing the prescribed price in relation to a named commodity and to a designated commodity.

Mr. Speaker, since the first purpose of this bill is to protect farm producers, I agree entirely with the Minister of Agriculture that the government should establish a period which would be more equitable for producers.

It is a well known fact that a quart of milk is now worth 51 cents. Now, there are forty quarts in every hundred weight of milk, so the consumer pays $20.40 for 100 pounds of milk. I feel this is extravagant, considering the producer gets approximately $12 or less a hundredweight. Maybe the Minister of Agriculture could tell us where the difference goes.

I also find the price of beef unbelievable. It has been experiencing an astronomical increase. What does the producer get? Nothing at all, considering he sells his beef at approximately the same price as before. Clearly, the profits are going to the big corporations which enjoy the government's protection.

The time has come for new measures to extend fair treatment to both producers and consumers. Obviously, producers are doing the utmost to provide Canadian citizens with adequate quantities of food.

Therefore, I ask the government once more to discharge their responsibilities and meet the people's demands. In order to meet the demands of producers and consumers, the present majority government must take the necessary steps to introduce sensible and efficient measures to solve the present situation. I have doubts, however, whether a logical and sensible approach can be used under the current system.

In December last, a number of economists met in Washington. They spent a few days together discussing inflation, but after those talks everyone went back home empty-handed because no one could find a solution to the inflation everyone is complaining about. Mr. Speaker, that is where we are at with those economists of all sorts and our present system of indebtedness.

For years now, we have been suggesting very sensible and practical solutions to inflation. One of them is the compensated discount which is paid directly to the consumer through Statistics Canada, a discount that would ensure producers a just return while allowing consumers to pay a reasonable price for their vital needs.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

There is one solution the government should reflect upon instead of losing its head as it is now doing. That infernal inflationary spiral must be checked for it is leading us to bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, compensated discount is an ideal mechanism to check this inflation that is undermining our society. If we persist in remaining inactive in the face of this situation, tomorrow may be too late: we will be on the verge of bankruptcy.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any subject which, in terms either of our country or of the world, is more important than agriculture. I do not know of any matter that is more fundamental to our well being as a nation, and indeed to the well being of the world, than the producing arts undertaken by the farmers of Canada.

I think that there has been a tendency from time to time—and unfortunately the minister himself has been one of the factors that have led to this tendency, and indeed has promoted it—to place the producing elements of the community against the consuming elements. To this extent I think he has done the community itself a great disservice and perhaps he has done agriculture a great disservice as well.

The office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) does not require him merely to speak in the cabinet for the farmer. He has a duty as well to speak for the consumer. And he has a duty to speak in cabinet not just for the farmer or the consumer of this country, but also for the consumers of the world to whom a duty is owed by all people in a productive society such as ours. He has a duty to speak on behalf of the farmers of the world in the sense of the potential farmers who could be aided by Canadian technology being transplanted to other places less fortunate and less advanced. His duty, if I can put it that way, is not just to deal with agriculture from the point of view of the producer involved in it—although that is perhaps his prime duty—but to deal with agriculture as it affects the whole economy, from the stable to the table. This, in some respects, the minister has not done, and in those respects he has failed.

I think he has failed as well to supply certain answers to the problems that face Canadians. But he has been quite good, I think, at pointing out to those who cannot understand, perhaps because of differences of background and differences of interest, that there are problems with respect to agriculture.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), who made a very excellent speech a few moments ago, spoke about the great number of speeches that the minister has made, and suggested to the minister that perhaps his brain ought to catch up with his jaw. I have one of the minister's speeches in my hand. What he has illustrated in the course of those speeches is that in terms of agriculture he can point the strongest finger in the most direct way at all the problems affecting agriculture, but in terms of some new national policy with respect to agriculture little has come from him apart from the reiteration and reinforcement of existing legislation.

Looking at a speech that the minister made at the 53rd annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council, which was delivered on March 3, 1975—I took this from the tall accumulation of speeches which the minister made—in that speech, when he was an after breakfast speaker, he spoke about some of the problems that affect agriculture, and he gave some statistics. On the second or third page of the epistle he delivered that day the minister said:

> Now, I want to give you a few figures. They deserve some hard thinking. In 1972 Canadians grew 44 per cent of the fresh fruit you ate. That was down from 58 per cent in 1964. That's a 14 per cent drop in eight years.

He dealt with canned fruit. He said that we did better in canned fruit in 1964 than in 1972. In 1972, he said, there was a 16 per cent drop from 1964. He went on to give a number of figures which illustrated the fact that as a country we were consuming less and less of those things which we grow here, and as a result of that the industry finds itself in difficulty.

But did he offer a solution in that speech? No, he did not. He suggested a whole range of possibilities. He said that perhaps Canadians are buying more offshore vegetables, that perhaps our fruit lands are being bulldozed for highways and towns, and that perhaps there are some limitations in our climate. Mind you, the climate was the same in 1964. He said that perhaps our marketing systems and production scales are lagging behind those in other parts of the world. He asked the horticulturalists to think about it.

I ask the minister to think about it, because in the short period of time between 1964 and 1972 this minister and his predecessor have been in a position to deal with every one of those factors—except perhaps for the weather, and only the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) can deal with the weather—that affect the operation of agriculture. This is the same thing that he has done with respect to hogs, beef and every other agricultural commodity. He has pointed out the problems very clearly, but what he has not said is what he intends to do about them.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said, it is unfair to credit this piece of legislation anything more in terms of improvement than the text of the bill entitles it to have. As the hon. member said, it is really an adjunct or an addition to a policy that was formed under the Conservative government in 1958. So it is not fair to mislead in that sense of the word.

There are agriculturalists in my community who say of the minister that he is a great fellow and that he tells them everything that is wrong, that he gives them hope because at least he recognizes the problems. They say they are getting higher prices for their produce now but they are paying more for fuel, more for binder twine, more for machinery, fertilizer, feed, for all their investments which are large, and higher interest charges at the bank. Their profits are going down. That is the problem facing farmers, and that is the problem to which the minister should address himself.

The minister cannot address himself to that problem alone. He requires the co-operation of his colleagues in the government, and perhaps he is not getting it. Nothing concrete can be done to deal with problems affecting farmers, and therefore affecting consumers, until something is done by the government at least to begin the attack on the inflation which affects this country.

My heart goes out to farmers in my constituency, farmers in Ontario, and farmers in Canada generally who are suffering under this system whereby the harder they work the less they earn in terms of their investment simply because the government of this day has refused to attack the problem of inflation. The methods the government has used are the methods of trying to attempt a consensus, to do indirectly what it does not have the courage or the guts to do directly, trying to impose a voluntary incomes policy on the people of Canada. This is what the government is trying to do, and we have the results of it today in the silence on the Treasury Benches.

The farmer has a real problem. The minister gave a speech to the annual meeting of the Harrow and Colchester South Chamber of Commerce at Harrow, Ontario, on Tuesday, March 4, 1975, and in that speech he summed up the difficulties facing farmers. Many people should know about these difficulties, people who somehow think that agriculture begins at the refrigerator door. It does not begin there, and all of us know that.

On page 4 of that particular epistle the minister said:

> Look at the date from the last census. In 1970, the average income of Canada's plumbers was over $8,000. Doctors earned an average of nearly $28,000. Structural steelworkers earned over $8,000. Sales clerks were paid an average of $4,700. Yet farmers grossed an average of $3,800.

I ask the minister why? If that is the case with respect to farmers, what in the devil has the minister been doing about it since he came into that portfolio except talk about it? What has the government been doing about it since it took office in 1963? Nothing. Nothing, and that is the thing practicing agriculturalists in this country—using the minister's own statistics—look at, when they ask themselves about all of the speeches the minister has made and what they really mean.

There is a challenge to agriculture, and perhaps the minister should move in the direction of meeting the challenge. The challenge is keeping people on the land and encouraging them to stay on the land, to give encouragement in real terms to stay on the land with real returns to them. That is the first challenge. The second challenge is to ensure that young people are encouraged to come on to the land. I look at this litany of programs, and I look at the number of farmers going out of business.

I consider the number of auction sales advertised in the weekly newspapers, and I cast that against the problem of rising prices for food for the consumer, and the duty we have in a civilized and conscientious society of feeding a starving world, and I ask myself whether this minister is prepared to put before the farmers of this country the new tools, the new policies and the new programs which will allow the farmers of Canada to do what they want to do—make a reasonable living from farming, have a reasonable life in farming, produce food for themselves and for their countrymen, and have a reasonable place in feeding the unfortunate of the world. If we continue to rely completely on new technology as the main tool of increasing agricultural production and do not also rely on programs which will put farmers on the land and keep them there, then we will lose that race, and we will miss that obligation.

This bill before us does not come near to being what it has been touted to be, Mr. Speaker. It is not a new policy of agriculture. It is not a new tomorrow for farmers. It is disaster insurance. It is just the beginnings of finding stability of income for farmers. I think all of us, whether we live on the farm, in the cities, in the towns or the villages, whether we have a direct, indirect or no connection with agriculture, have a duty to recognize the plight of the farmer and to recognize also that there has not been much real progress in terms of widening the gap between earnings farmers receive and their cost of operation, which is driving many of them off the land—and this in a time when we hear pleas from others about high costs and other things.

That is the challenge facing this minister, and as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said, in his own way, we do not regard the farmer as the subject of partisan politics because he is completely fundamental to the operation of our country and the wellbeing of our country. We do not regard the minister in the same way to the same extent. He regards himself as a person given to partisan politics—and to the extent that he has conducted himself that way, he has probably misused his portfolio—but he does have a part to play in the scheme of things. His duty is not merely to point out the problems which face farmers. My God, the farmers know their problems themselves, without his putting the finger on them. The problem is to come up with some policies which are meaningful and new, and that, Mr. Speaker, the minister has not done. That is the duty of the minister, and it is because this bill is a small step in that direction—although it is only augmenting existing legislation—we are prepared to support it, but that does not relieve the minister of the challenge facing him as he faces the problems facing farmers.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is a real privilege to follow such a distinguished agrologist as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and his outstanding address on agriculture.

I want to speak on this bill because I support it strongly. I think it is good legislation for the agricultural industry, meaning that it is good for the consumer and for the producer. I think it is one of the first thrusts we have made which has particularly spoken to the problem of the eastern Canadian farmer, and particularly of the livestock and poultry farmer.

I think the most critical thing this parliament can do is work to pass legislation which will allow Canada to become as self-sufficient in food and energy as possible. I do not think there is anything more important with which to be involved. As important as other programs may be, some of them will have to take a secondary position in terms of spending so that we can work toward that objective. I think any country which is essentially self-sufficient in food and energy has to have less inflation, less unemployment, a stronger export position, a stronger industrial economy and certainly a leadership role in the world which no other country can attain.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

If hon. members doubt that, I suggest they consider some of the countries around the world which are importing the majority of their food and energy. I think Canada is one of the few countries in the enviable position of not having to do that, if this House supports the legislation now before it.

There are two matters of concern to agriculture, one being the retention of good agricultural land and the other the retention of enough good farmers to use what land we have. It is the second part I think we should be speaking about, and to which this bill addresses itself. It might be well to think of the role farmers have played over the past few years. We should commend the job they have done, because historically we have had reasonably priced food, and our farmers across Canada have done a magnificent job in providing that. They have been able to do so for a number of reasons. One is that their input costs have been reasonably stable.

Until recently most labour on farms was done by the family, but of course this is not the case today. No one can be proud of the fact, and I am sure none of us are, that much of the stability in food prices has come from the attrition of farmers. At one time 10 per cent of our population were farmers, but because of the boom and bust cycle many were forced to leave the land. Nobody worried too much about that because we had so many to begin with, and food prices remained reasonable.

Farmers should be congratulated on their efficiency as this is what gives us food at reasonable cost. They operate what is perhaps one of the most efficient sectors of the economy. It is interesting to note that in 1949 the price of turkey meat to the consumer was higher than it is today. This is because farmers now produce turkeys in three-quarters of the time and on half the feed, which is a good example of efficiency. The efficiency of farmers in this country is outstanding when compared to farmers in other countries.

Canada has done a good job in agriculture through the programs of the Department of Agriculture and the provincial extension services in such areas as genetics, nutrition, farm management and so on. The problem is, however, that this will not continue because those alternatives will not be open in the future. We have two basic choices. The first is to pay a fair price for food and allow farmers a fair return on their investment and their management skills. We must share their risk. The other choice is to import food and thus put agriculture in the hands of large integrated operations. If this happens then we are certain to have higher food costs.

The basic problem has been well documented, the problem of rising costs. During question period many questions are raised about the labour segment of the public service and other sectors of the economy. In the end these costs all filter down to the farm. If the cost of energy is a particular concern, we must remember that agriculture is one of the major users and any change in the price is reflected in farm and food costs. The cost of fertilizers, chemicals, feed, machinery and so on is reflected in the price of food.

We should note a couple of other things as well, Mr. Speaker, and one is the increasing investment that farmers have to make. We are far away from the point when most of the input was made by the family. We now have highly efficient farms and improved technology, but along with this has come a tremendous investment. It might be of interest to note that most farmers have about $1,000 invested in every steer they feed. This means that they must get 20 cents per pound just to cover interest charges. Many farmers may have $4,000 invested in a cow and would be faced with nearly $300 in interest charges. That is one reason why we are so pleased to see the introduction of the act to amend the Farm Credit Act, so that farmers may be given some assistance in this area.

Members opposite have had a great deal to say about the bill increasing the level from 80 per cent to 90 per cent and decreasing the time from ten years to five years, but there is another aspect of this bill which has been ignored and I think we should talk about it. The proper indexing of costs and the recognition that the farmer needs a return that reflects his cash flow in a crop year, and in addition have some return on his equity and for management and for investment, makes this bill much more effective than many members give credit for, Mr. Speaker.

It is true that the legislation at present on the books has not been too effective. Over the ten years of its history it has only come to the rescue of that part of the industry that has been in trouble a few times. This bill before us will be effective, not because the time has been reduced from ten years to five years, or the level increased from 80 per cent to 90 per cent, but because of the indexing aspect which recognizes the many things which the farmer must face. One of these is cash flow, and this is in serious jeopardy because of inflation. It will be taken into account in the indexing formula in calculating what is a fair return on management—in other words, his return to equity.

I want to deal with another aspect of this bill. In several debates in this House there has been mention made of the starving people of the world and the aid that Canada has given through its food program. Some members have commended the government's commitment of wheat, and others say we should have done more—perhaps there are even some who would say we should have done less. But, Mr. Speaker, I think we should realize what we are doing to the agricultural industry by making commitments of this size. If we continue to do this, and I think we should because it is a human and just thing, we will gear our agricultural industry to expansion and count on the world's food program to absorb much of the production.

I think we should reflect on what would happen if all of a sudden countries all around the world have good crop years and consequently we did not have an export market or a need for the world food program. One of the solid bases for this bill is to underwrite that very possibility so that we can be a stronger factor in helping the have-not countries of the world.

I said in the beginning that this is a bill that is of benefit not only to the farmer but also to the consumer. A lot of members opposite have made the point that this is a floor price. I think that type of analysis would lead consumers to think that the government is again going to subsidize farmers heavily. That is not the purpose of this bill. I think we should say that this bill rewards the efficiency of the farmer. The farmer who does an efficient job of production and marketing will still be miles ahead of the farmer who does not. I think we should be very careful that we do not give consumers the impression that this is a subsidy bill for farmers. It is a stabilization bill which acts in the best interests of the consumer and the farmer, and rewards the efficiency of the individual farmer.

I take issue with comments made earlier this evening by certain members, and particularly by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) on the day the bill was introduced for second reading. One could take from those remarks that the government, and particularly the minister should be doing something more substantial to help agriculture but without regard to a supply management arrangement. I am not too sure where such a line of thought would lead us. Surely members opposite would not say that we should have an all out production program financed by farmers. They are quick to say that we should reduce or control government spending but, Mr. Speaker, how can you marry those points of view?

Hon. members opposite would propose that we should subsidize the industry but have no say in how much is produced or under what conditions. I shall be vigorous in committee in opposing that point of view. It would be unfair to expect producing farmers to suffer; they deserve a far better support level than that.

I shall conclude by commending this legislation. Let us co-operate in committee stage and pass it quickly, so that farmers may enjoy a measure of security which is essential if there is to be long-range agricultural planning. The average farmer and consumer have been plagued in the past by the agricultural boom and bust cycle, in which overproduction leads to low prices and underproduction to high prices. This legislation will be significant in levelling out the price fluctuations in the agricultural industry. Prices will respond to input costs; this in turn will surely mean that consumers will have available constant supplies of reasonably priced food. For that reason I ask the House to deal with this bill quickly in committee and on third reading, so that the farmers of Canada can soon take advantage of this forward-looking legislation.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate of Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said that Bill C-50 is part of a total package of legislation which is designed to bring greater stability to the agricultural industry. Its total effect will be to provide producers with greater income stability while they produce high quality food for markets at home and abroad.

The minister stated that the bill will provide producers with greater income stability. But he has not stated that it will provide producers with greater income. What good is stability, or what good is stabilizing an income, when your income is in a loss position?

When the bill becomes law farmers will be guaranteed returns on the mandatory commodities equivalent to at least 90 per cent of the average price of the previous five years, and the price will be adjusted by an index to reflect changes in production costs over that period. I agree with the total over-view and with the expectations of this bill, but I feel at the same time, that there is a reluctance on the part of the federal government to develop and adopt positive and long-term goals for agriculture in this country. As a result, ad hoc policies are adopted from time to time to deal with crises when they occur. The effect of this approach is that many policies deal with the symptoms rather than with causes of the problem. We must address ourselves to the solving of the many problems created in a complicated age.

Our capacities for food production are functioning at less than maximum while malnutrition and poverty continue to prevail in large sectors of the Canadian population, and in much of the world. I believe the maintenance of a strong rural community in Canada is an essential part of our national culture, and that farmers must continue to hold a distinct place in it as basic producers of food.

It is in the best interests of our nation to maintain a sound rural community, which must be based on the strength of an efficient and economically viable farm industry in which ownership is vested in and controlled by farm families.

The government holds a heavy responsibility toward determining the structure of food production in this nation by the philosophical approach reflected through legislation and public policy. The vital issue today facing agriculture is government intervention, or, more specifically, the degree of government intervention. The debate becomes critical because, so far, no government has been able to establish a total agricultural policy for this nation. If food producers do not set the criteria for such policy, sooner or later the government will, and that is why I was pleased by the minister's remarks. He said he would be happy to hear interested groups and would welcome their appearance before the committee when this bill is studied there.

But let me refer hon. members and the minister to what happened in committee when we considered Bill C-19. All witnesses appearing before the committee wanted an indexing clause to be included in Bill C-19. The Progressive Conservative party, even before witnesses appeared, had such an indexing clause ready to propose as an amendment to the bill. The Grit administration rejected the indexing clause which had been proposed by the Progressive Conservative party, even though it was wanted by the farm groups appearing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Is this what the government calls consultation? It came forward itself with a flimsy excuse of an amendment. I cannot understand why it preaches one thing and practices another. If government members wish to have representations made, let them abide by some of the suggestions made at hearings. This has not been the case to date.

The farmer of today is established, organized, knowledgeable and wants to produce. Not only does he want to produce; he can produce. But, Madam Speaker, farmers see that the buyers of their produce are few in number. Power is concentrated in a few hands; farmers realize that this is not the best system under which to operate. The new generation of farmers today is not in farming necessarily for the way of life it gives, even though this may be a great factor. They are in it to make a living. I believe they want more stability in their operations, stability with a profit, not excess profit. They want to be assured of some consistency in income, just as we all do.

I could not help noticing that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture said, in a press release, that grain exports are the life blood of prairie agriculture and, for that matter, of a great part of the Canadian economy, and nothing is more important to the economy than developing grain markets and servicing them.

What good is a bill stabilizing income when an individual cannot sell his products? We must come to grips with the strike situation in our country. The strike situation is causing us to lose face internationally, particularly in the area of grain exports. I am thinking particularly of efforts to export grain to Japan, China and Bangladesh. All these export efforts have been disrupted because of strikes. The situation remains stagnant because the government maintains there is no simple answer. I agree there is no simple answer; but we cannot stop there. We must try to develop one. Answers for getting around the strike situation facing us today are available if we are willing to look for them. Among industrialized nations Canada suffered the second highest rate of loss in man hours because of strikes. We have the second highest rating in man hours lost through strikes. This is not an accomplishment to be proud of in Canada.

Again I ask, what good is stabilizing income when we cannot move our commodities? We must come to grips with all the problems we are facing in the agricultural sector today. New procedures must be developed to deal with strikes; we should ask ourselves what form these developments ought to take, and I think we will be able to come up with positive answers.

The Library of Parliament has an excellent book on collective bargaining and the right to strike. It lists a number of options, and we must choose the best alternative to the present system, for the only result of a strike is economic loss, both to the company and to workers. Perhaps it is the public loses more than both of them, because it suffers not only in terms of dollars and cents but in the terrible inconveniences which are inflicted on it in times of strike.

The booklet put out by the research branch of the Library of Parliament lists nine options in connection with strikes. Since the present debate is not on the strike issue but on the issue of stabilizing farmers' incomes, I will not dwell on strikes. I just throw this out as food for thought because I believe the role of collective bargaining, Madam Speaker, is likely to become more, not less, complex in the future. It is not possible to return to a system in which unions and management are left to settle their differences without reference to wider economic and political repercussions. Collective bargaining will inevitably have to take place within an overall framework of law, with an economic and political policy that will impose restraints.

The problem for the future will be to devise rules and institutions which will enable the collective bargaining process to operate smoothly and effectively within constraints. This would eliminate the unacceptable industrial disruption, unemployment, and the inflation which hurts everyone and particularly, at the present time, is seriously damaging the grain farmer in western Canada. Yet the government is not willing to come to grips with this problem. Because we are talking about stabilization, Madam Speaker, I would like to dwell just briefly on how it affects the beef industry.

Our beef industry, Madam Speaker, has suffered substantial losses this past while, and at present we have two support price policies recently announced by the Minister of Agriculture that relate only to the cattle industry. Last August 11 the support price of $45.42 for fat steers and hiefers was instituted and if deficiency payments are made when the year is up next August, I presume that they will be paid under the provisions of the original act. It is important to understand that this price of $45.42 for grades A, B and C was determined by taking 90 per cent of the average weighted price for these three fat cattle grades at three principal markets, in Calgary, Winnipeg and Toronto, and adding to it a cost-of-production index figure as determined by the farm input price index.

The beef-cow subsidy or support policy of $23.21, effective last November 16, is 100 per cent of average prices of the D1, D2, D3 and D4 cows over the last five years at the same three principal cattle markets, but without an indexing figure.

In dealing with the beef stabilization aspect of this program it is interesting to note there is an amendment which assures that regionalism of support prices will be recognized, but the cabinet makes this decision. It is not included in this bill and it can be assumed that the involvement of the cabinet in the regionalization process will render any decision a political one.

If I might refer to the agricultural standing committee minutes of the meeting held in the month of October at which I questioned the Minister of Agriculture as to whether there was going to be a beef program coming forward for the troubled beef industry, this was his reply, and I quote:

> As soon as I can work out some kind of program that I think is suitable for the beef industry of the whole nation, because I cannot do it for one part of Canada and not the other, and as I said earlier there are different feeding programs, different costs. For instance, in Alberta you can contract for cattle to be fed for 60 cents a pound on barley. In Ontario and other parts of Canada, you can contract it on silage for 40 cents a pound. So it is a hard thing to work out a program that is going to be suitable for all these people.

What does this lead one to believe? The Minister of Agriculture did state approximately what the cost of production was, forty cents in eastern Canada and 60 cents in western Canada. Yet we have a stabilization program for the beef industry now at $45.42. Who is going to benefit the most? Of course it is benefiting the eastern feeder again.

When is this agriculture minister going to realize that we do have western producers in this nation also, western producers who need to have substantial help now because of the crisis in the beef situation? I strongly believe that this is just another attempt to satisfy the main populace of our country and to neglect the western regions of Canada.

Again let me stress that the regionalization of support prices will be recognized by this bill but the cabinet makes this decision, not the bill, and this decision could very easily be a political one. Let me also suggest that since this stabilization program will take in the past five year period, that during that same five year period agricultural production costs have increased at a much faster rate than did our market prices at the farm gate. This is a very significant point and I ask the minister to take consideration of it.

In closing let me state that I appreciated having the opportunity to contribute to this very important debate, and I hope that some amendments will be forthcoming to this actual bill so that the agricultural sector of our country will not be neglected or taken advantage of, as it has in the past. We must recognize that we do have an obligation to produce food because we have millions of starving people in the world. The producer also has an obligation to the consumer, but we cannot and should not expect the producer to produce at a loss. Although I agree with the total over-view of this bill, there are many areas that can be improved upon in Committee.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Madam Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure to be able to speak on an agricultural bill or agricultural issue, not because I believe that agriculture is an important industry but because I believe it is the most important industry.

In the 50,000 years that human beings have been on the planet earth, they have either eaten every day or been in search of food for every one of those days. Most of the industries that we talk about in the world we live in and that we give a tremendous importance to are the kinds of things that we have developed only within the last one or two human lifetimes.

The automobile industry is an invention of less than 100 years. Oil and gas have only come into prominence in the last 50 to 60 years, but food has been the substance of mankind for as long as mankind has existed.

I need not tell the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the kinds of facts related to the tremendous importance of this industry on a world-wide basis. However, if I may, I will take some time to share with the House some of the important things that are happening in the world picture perhaps to show the inadequacies of this bill and how it simply will not fulfill the needs of the present day situation.

The fact is that 12,000 people died of starvation yesterday, 12,000 died of starvation today, and another 12,000 will die tomorrow. Four fifths of the world's population suffers from malnutrition. In the country of India human beings are dying of exposure at 57 degrees fahrenheit. That is a concept that is hard for us in Canada to comprehend when we have people living in the high Arctic at temperatures of 60 degrees below zero.

Another fact I think should bear importance in our argument here this evening is that on the continent of Africa 55 per cent of the human beings there are below or under the teenage bracket. What does that mean? When we take a look at the world food shortage today, the truth is that we do not have a world food shortage in the general sense. What we have is a world protein shortage. If we had a mythical distribution system, something like the one we run in Canada, that could give food to all peoples around the world equally, we would have barely enough carbohydrate to go around, and certainly a shortfall of a considerable amount of protein.

Going back to the situation of so many young children in Africa, everyone who has ever watched a teenaged boy or girl eat food does not need to be reminded that the intake of protein increases by almost 50 per cent when you reach your teenage years. Africa is a continent which cannot supply its population now and 55 per cent of its population is pre-teenage. The need for world food doesn't need to be underscored. When we come to the purport of this legislation we are certainly going to find out that it falls far short of giving the kind of incentives to farmers to produce in the way in which this world demands.

I am going to give one last example, because certainly my time will run out tonight before the issues of this legislation are exhausted. I want to bring home dramatically the importance of the need to produce food at a level which is accelarated to the absolute maximum. Just recently when the country of Chad was experiencing the most severe drought ever experienced in the world, a great epidemic of diphtheria broke out. As a result of that epidemic the World Health Organization of the United Nations made an offer to send vaccine for diphtheria and the government of Chad responded by saying "No, do not send that vaccine because diphtheria is an easier death for our children than starvation." I think this underscores the need to develop a policy that is not simply ad hoc but actually accelerates agricultural production in this country to a level unlike any we have ever experienced.

The United States National Academy of Science says that by the year 2025 there will be one million child deaths a month, and that also we will have a shortfall within five years from now of 51.9 million tons of cereal grain per year. Let's take a look at some of the situations which relate to the agricultural bill, and at some of the shortfalls that we are going to find in terms of incentives to farmers.

The first thing that we ought to be demanding when we take a look at any agricultural measure today is a bill that in fact encourages farmers to produce, and the way you do that is you pay them. This bill does only this. It talks only in terms of paying people, of giving more payment, but without having direct relationship—unless the cabinet should happen to decide otherwise, which is certainly as the previous speaker mentioned a very political decision—to link payment with the cost of production. Unless there is some kind of guarantee that the farmer is going to be paid, and paid well, then there can never be the concept of a professional farmer. I think it should interest all members of this House to note the fact that agriculture, wherever it is, has been treated as the bottom man on the totem pole. In every country in the world where we find nations existing on an agricultural economy, they are amongst the poorest of all nations, and when you take a look at the industrial nations the agricultural areas in them are the poorest areas.

[Mr. Malone.]

I think we might first take a look at this bill by citing the example of the fellow who started to drink to steady his nerves; finally he drank so much that he got so steady he couldn't move. And that's exactly what the limits in this kind of bill can do. We are talking about stabilization, but in fact what we really ought to be looking at is the kind of government incentive that speaks about getting food into the international market, with some thrust to get food to where it is needed. And if there were a tremendous drive to get Canadian food into the international market place then we wouldn't have to spend all of our time talking about stabilizing it here, because the fact of the matter is that we can stabilize these markets into such stability that they won't move. Once we start getting markets so stable that they won't move we have a situation in which the farmer is locked in, just as surely as he is locked in today, because of the failure in getting his product to market. There is certainly a failure in getting his product into the international market place. There can be no doubt about that. There just is not enough incentive to get his product into the international market place.

If the government is really sincere in its attempt to try to put some stabilization into the farming economy, there are some other things it could be doing that would make a tremendous difference. In the last couple of days of debate we heard some accusations made back and forth across the House about racism. Well, I say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) that I would like to challenge him with a real race issue. I would like to challenge him with a race issue that is of tremendous importance, and makes a tremendous difference to the agricultural stabilization of this country. The fact is that it takes 28 days for a rail train loaded with grain from my constituency to reach the port in Vancouver. That averages out, Madam Speaker, to three and a half miles an hour. Despite all that talk about racism and racing, and getting food to market, I can walk twice that fast. I will challenge him any day to get that grain to Vancouver. He can use his trains and I will walk with the grain.

We are talking about international markets and the very inadequate way in which we try to get grain to them, but the fact remains that we have rail systems that are tied up by strikes, and the trains themselves are moving at an average of three and a half miles an hour.

The other thing I would like to say, as my time is drawing to an end, is that the agricultural industry ought no longer to bear the brunt of strikes. There is no example in the business world where two people go into negotiations, incur a loss, and then charge that loss to a third party. Yet in the Port of Vancouver during the recent grain handlers' strike what happened there was that management and labour caused something like $70 million of demurrage charges to accumulate, and charged them to the farmers. I think the farm organizations of this country ought to sue the federal government, because there is no situation in the business world in which two people who enter into some kind of a business deal and then incur a loss can charge that loss to a third party.

I think that kind of jeopardy which exists in this country ought not to be allowed because it is absolutely illegal. I see it is ten o'clock. May I call it such?

Some hon. Members: Question.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been adopted.

HEALTH—ALLEGED FAILURE OF PRODUCTS OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES TO MEET STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, on February 27, 1975, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) whether he was aware of the situation which had developed at Connaught Laboratories which had been found in breach of regulations in respect to packaging and product stability. This came to light in January, 1973, and when the inspectors from the food and drug branch of the department returned one year later, nothing had been done. In fact the situation had become worse.

In February, 1974, the chairman of the drug board drew to the attention of Dr. R. J. Wilson, Chairman of Connaught, that there had been violations in connection with the testing of the finished products and in quality control, and that none of the other breaches had been corrected. I want to know why these breaches had not been corrected in the space of an entire year. This is of vital concern to the people of Canada as this is their investment. Connlab is a subsidiary of the Canada Development Corporation, which the people of Canada own, and they have a right to expect proper management as a business proposition.

It goes a little deeper than that, however. Connaught Laboratories is a memorial to the great work done at the University of Toronto by Drs. Banting and Best in the discovery of insulin. Canada at that time had a population of ten million. They produced insulin and saved the lives of many diabetics previously doomed to death, putting Canada in the forefront of the scientific world and giving hope to thousands of diabetics that they could lead useful lives.

Over the years they set a standard of quality unexcelled in any country of the world. No one ever had to question this institution as to the quality of its work or its prices. Connaught Laboratories operated with a research grant of about $80,000 per year, and had an annual endowment income of around $400,000.

When the people of this country bought Connaught Laboratories, which through legislation became a subsidiary of the Canada Development Corporation, it was able to receive yearly $1,228,000 in grants from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Connaught Laboratories made its reputation and financed itself by keeping the quality of its products as a standard for all the world, and its prices were the envy of the world. Connlab has not been able to maintain this quality or even to keep its prices competitive. Connlab's insulin became higher priced than others.

Let me give the House a comparison of some Canadian and U.S. prices. Regular insulin, 100 units, sold for $2.03 under Connlab; $2.12 under Squibb; Lilly sold for $2.20. NPH, 100 units, Connlab sold for $2.70; Squibb for $2.42; Lilly for $2.52. Both the latter are United States firms. Protamine zinc sold for $2.63 Connlab; Squibb sold for $2.42; Lilly sold for $2.52. Semi Lente, Connlab $2.93; Squibb, $2.42; Lilly $2.52. There is a difference of 51 cents there. Ultra Lente, Connlab $2.93; Squibb $2.42; Lilly $2.52.

These are quoted prices as at the present date, and it is an indication of what is occurring in a field that had been previously held solely by Connaught Laboratories. In 1973 Connlab was making adrenalin which is used for shock and allergies, but since the Food and Drug Directorate described their facilities as not being up to standard, instead of bringing them up to standard Connlab discontinued the line entirely, even though it was not made in Canada. It was also pointed out that Sabin polio vaccine was made in a facility not up to the standards set by Great Britain or the United States. Why was this not corrected so that the market could again be captured? It has been reported that vaccines of doubtful standard were sold to the province of Ontario and that this was under investigation. What were the results of this investigation?

All in all, instead of correcting the problems and improving quality and marketability, Connlab has discontinued several lines, one of them Pam Penicillin. This was a one dose shot used very successfully, in the treatment of venereal disease, and this discontinuance was very disappointing to the many people who had supported Connaught Laboratories over the years.

I am not going to go into the mistakes that have reportedly been made in labelling, particularly of smallpox vaccine, which in many cases gave very serious reactions. The same smallpox vaccine was sold to Bangladesh, and through mishandling or mismanagement did not give the desired results. Unquestionably some people may have lost their lives over the error.

Connlab dropped several of its drugs to correct its financial picture, and it also let 75 employees go. It even considered selling 583 acres of land belonging to Connaught Laboratories. In spite of the galloping increases in their prices, domestic sales, which are almost captive with governments being the big buyers, remained static, and they failed to meet world competition where international markets are much larger.

Connlab has been repeatedly warned by its own people, by the senior medical research and senior executives, that the facilities had to be upgraded and their quality control brought up to standard if they were to be competitive. Why was this not done? One of its vice presidents stated that over $300,000 was needed immediately to improve and renovate the plant to comply with the regulations.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Rynard: None of this was forthcoming. Now I understand that the president of CDC has stated that Connlab can have the necessary funds, up to $10 million if necessary, to bring the place up to standard.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Rynard: They have already built within the last two years a facility costing around $2 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Rynard: Madam Speaker, I am sorry to have to make my point, but this situation was allowed to go on for two years without correction. This is something the people of Canada own. It is run by this parliament, by this government and by the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House further details with respect to the question of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) concerning certain deficiencies in manufacturing conditions of Connaught Laboratories and the continued sale of this firm's products.

Regarding the action of Dr. Showalter, Chairman of the Advisory Board on Drug Manufacturing Facilities and Performance, I must explain that this board, which reports to the Minister of Supply and Services, is responsible for publishing a directory of firms in compliance with the Canadian government standard which is used as a purchasing specification. Officers of the Health Protection Branch of the Department of Health and Welfare work very closely with this board, but take independent action to ensure industry compliance with regulations involving manufacturing facilities and controls.

As the result of inspection in January, 1973, some deficiencies were discovered in requirements involving raw materials, packaging and product stability of potamine sulphate, epinephrine, oxytocin and heparin. These drugs are not controlled by licensing procedures but are, of course, subject to the over-all controls for quality under the Food and Drugs Act. These deficiencies did not constitute hazards to health and were not judged to be a breach of regulations. However, they were discussed with Connaught Laboratories during the inspection and confirmed in writing in line with the health protection branch policy to advise all manufacturers regarding areas of deficiency. The Advisory Board on Drug Manufacturing Facilities and Performance also questioned the firm on the observed discrepancies. Because of the overall acceptable rating of the firm, no further action was considered at that time.

During a subsequent inspection of Connaught in February 1974, two epinephrine products were examined and deficiencies were noted in raw material and finished product tests, quality control and stability. Although these discrepancies were discovered in the conditions under which these drugs were manufactured, no evidence was available to indicate that there was any lack of compliance with the established standards for the products themselves. Consequently, as with the products inspected in 1973, no action was considered necessary to remove these lots of epinephrine from sale as there was no indicated health hazard involved. These deficiencies were discussed with the firm during the inspection and subsequently confirmed in writing on April 2, 1974.

A further meeting was held with the firm in late April to discuss thoroughly all aspects of the inspection findings. At the same time the chairman of the Advisory Board on Drug Manufacturing Facilities and Performance requested a full explanation of this matter from Connaught Laboratories in accordance with responsibilities for listing firms in the directory. On May 28 Connaught Laboratories submitted details of steps taken which would eliminate the deficiencies in question and ensure compliance with requirements for manufacturing facilities and controls. These actions by the firm were considered as adequate remedial action.

In summary, therefore, in inspections conducted in early 1973 and 1974 some deficiencies were found in conditions of manufacture of certain Connaught products. I must emphasize that none of these deficiencies resulted in the production or sale of products which were considered to be a hazard to health, nor did the products themselves contravene legal standards. Adequate remedial action was undertaken by Connaught Laboratories to satisfy concerns of the Health Protection Branch.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—OVERHAUL OF BOEING 707'S BY TRANSAIR—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF EMPLOYEES OF CANADIAN AVIATION AND ELECTRONICS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, on February 19 I directed two questions to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) having to do with the decision of the government to award contracts on the overhaul of the Department of National Defence Boeing 707's in Winnipeg to Transair despite the clear promises by the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in May and June of 1974, that the work would be given, and indeed that work would be expanded, at the Canadian Aviation Electronics operation in Winnipeg. I am sorry that the minister is not here because I will be quite critical of him in light of the promises which he and the Prime Minister made during the election campaign and which have been so obviously and clearly ignored.

In May 1974 the Winnipeg Free Press reported in a front page story as follows:

> Air Canada will build a new maintenance hangar, valued at between $12 million and $15 million at Winnipeg International Airport . . . the Prime Minister announced Thursday.

The news story went on to say:

> In calculating the total employment of 800, he said the government is taking into account the existing 360 men at CAE and about 125 Air Canada employees involved in minor maintenance checks at Winnipeg on aircraft passing through.
> Prime Minister Trudeau said he sees no problem in accommodating any Air Canada technicians who want to move their families from Montreal back to Winnipeg. Many of the technicians moved to Montreal in 1969 rather than take work with CAE.

On June 14, 1974, the Winnipeg Free Press carried "A Letter from Jim Richardson about Air Canada and a Stronger Aerospace Industry in Winnipeg". In that letter the minister said:

> In addition to the aircraft maintenance work that will be done by Air Canada personnel on Air Canada's planes in these buildings, space will be leased to CAE in the Air Canada hangars to enable CAE to continue all of the repair, overhaul and manufacturing work now being done on defence aircraft and commercial aircraft. In particular CAE will be able to undertake the major 10,000 hour repair and overhaul of the National Defence Boeing 707 aircraft.

Later in the same letter the minister said:

The federal government has established as an initial objective the achievement of 800 aerospace jobs, including personnel working on the base for CAE as well as for Air Canada.

Later he said:

Because the major 10,000 hour repair and overhaul work on the National Defence Boeing 707's will be done in Winnipeg by CAE in the Air Canada buildings, Winnipeg will have a repair and overhaul capability equal to the aircraft repair and overhaul capability anywhere.

On December 28 an announcement was made that the contracts for servicing the DND planes had been given not to CAE but to Transair, despite the promises made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence to which I alluded. In 1971, CAE had a top employment of about 1,000. In the fall of 1974 this had fallen to 350. It is now down to about 200. The minister said again and again that there will be 800 workers working in the aerospace industry in Winnipeg. That may be true, although there are as yet no signs of that.

But the minister has given no assurances, and made no plans for the present CAE workers despite the promises made by the Prime Minister and the minister during the election campaign that the job rights of 200 CAE employees who were there a month ago—some of them are probably gone by now—will be given first opportunity on the work which supposedly Transair will get and which supposedly Air Canada will turn over to Transair.

These are the promises the minister made. Let me quote just one more which appeared in an article by Frances Russell in the Winnipeg Free Press. The minister is quoted as saying the following:

"I've been CAE's defender for five years and I don't want to see them shunted aside. We must resolve a phase-out with them and protect the jobs of the men until they can be taken by Transair and others.

I see that my time has almost elapsed. I am sorry that the minister is not here to explain the situation. I think he should be, not for me, but for the people to whom he gave such strong assurances. The minister and the Prime Minister promised that not only would the facility be maintained in Winnipeg, and that it would be expanded, but that the workers who had been working in the aircraft industry for CAE would continue to have jobs. Those promises so far have proven worthless, and I hope that the minister and his department can say very quickly what they propose to do to fulfil the promises which were made to protect the jobs of those who are there now, and to allay the real fears they have at the present time.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the minister regrets that he is unable to be here tonight, but the report I will give to the hon. member has been approved by the minister, and I want to make that quite clear.

As the hon. member knows, the contract for repair of Department of National Defence Boeing 707 aircraft has been awarded to Transair Limited of Winnipeg. The contract was let on the basis of the most effective use of public funds. That company is now in the process of hiring capable and responsible personnel and making preparations to commence overhaul work on the Boeings. The first aircraft is scheduled for overhaul in early June of 1975, with the remainder following at intervals of three to four weeks.

Transair Limited of Winnipeg has commenced hiring personnel, and preference is being given to CAE employees, especially to those who had previous employment with Air Canada. As the repair program develops more people will be hired, and it is anticipated that over 250 personnel will be in the employ of Transair by this summer.

When the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) responded to the hon. member's question on this subject last month, he said that the government commitments made in June last year are in the process of being fulfilled. One commitment was that the Boeing 707 repair overhaul would be undertaken in Winnipeg, and that is taking place. Another commitment was that there would be a larger Air Canada presence, and there has been an announcement of a new hangar, which is being constructed. Another commitment was the setting of an objective of creating 800 aerospace jobs. That objective is also in the process of being fulfilled.

I wish to assure the hon. member that every attempt is being made to find employment for CAE employees seeking employment at Transair or elsewhere, but particularly at Transair where the Boeing work is being done.

COMMUNICATIONS—ABANDONED PINE TREE RADAR BASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT DAMAGE—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE FUTURE USE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, while I appreciate the appearance of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hopkins) this evening, I think the subject I will be presenting to him goes beyond the Department of National Defence to Public Works, and I was hoping to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) or his parliamentary secretary here. However, I hope to get more definitive answers to my question regarding the need for action by the federal government to preserve the property and land known as the Pine Tree radar site located in western Newfoundland, about 10 miles from the fast growing area known as Stephenville in the Port au Port area. This site served the United States air force base during the second world war as part of a line of radar communication in their complete North American defence mission.

The United States Ernest Harmon air force base located in nearby Stephenville was vacated by the American air force in the early 1960's. The Pine Tree site remained in existence and manned until 1971, and the American government left the land and property to the federal government.

Just to give you an idea of the technical equipment remaining, there are two domed radar screens of untold value which were used to monitor all flights operating strategically in the defence mission, as well as saucer type pretty massive microwave beams. Strangely enough, Telesat Canada is evidently making use of the dome and the CBC is using a main tower, which still exists, in its system of communication, and evidently Marconi is operating a TACAN monitoring system.

Strangely enough too, in the forecast of improvements to the Stephenville airport it appears likely that some installations will be located on the site by the Department of Transport to support air travel to that airport.

Also left by the United States government was housing accommodation for the some two hundred officers and men who were stationed there, as well as a first class officers' club, NCO's club, a modern snack bar, dining facilities, a first class gymnasium and a bowling alley with almost new ancillary equipment. It has been provided with a water supply with pumping facilities. As an example, Mr. Speaker, one of the community leaders in the area was interested in obtaining a chlorinator which was on the premises, and ended up having to purchase one for $1,800.

Evidently caretakers were left there by the Americans after they vacated the site until I believe, June 1972. Is it not a wonder that federal departments and agencies that apparently had a decided interest in the use of the technical equipment were not interested enough to bring to the attention of responsible officials the continuing need for caretaker services, and so allowed the property to be vandalized to disgraceful proportions.

As I indicated before, the assessed value of the property at that time was $3½ million. I doubt those figures are accurate, but certainly at replacement value the buildings and property are worth double.

I think that I have done everything within my power to bring the matter to the attention of all concerned as I did in the House recently, on the basis of my feelings about the unfortunate circumstances that were allowed to prevail. I have been in touch with the property and management officials at the Department of Public Works and some officials at the Department of National Defence who are now pursuing the matter with regional officials.

It appears as if the Department of Public Works will ask the provincial government if it wishes to take the property over, subject to reserving the right to federal interest by the departments and agencies that I have mentioned. I have contacted the provincial minister of public works who indicated his readiness to consider a proposal by the federal government. I think we have things moving now, but it is imperative that the Department of Public Works immediately hire a caretaker staff to protect this very valuable property from further vandalism.

It is my opinion that the site could become a recreational centre for a wide area of the local population, or even on a provincial basis. It is my intention to bring this matter to the attention of provincial government officials responsible for sports and recreation. Further, there is no reason why the site could not become a historic site to hold in perpetuity the memory of the importance of the location in the over-all war efforts of our allies. I feel that the United States government might be interested in co-operating on such a project.

While the parliamentary secretary is here, Mr. Speaker, I would mention the increase in the militia battalion in Newfoundland and the evidence of the formation of a branch in Stephenville, which is just ten miles from this site. It would be an excellent training ground for militia on a regional or battalion basis.

My purpose in rising tonight is to impress on the parliamentary secretary the need to protect the property. Its protection should be afforded the highest priority. Personnel should inspect it and protect it from the ravages of vandals, who are causing many millions of dollars of damage.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, may I say to the hon. member how much I and many others appreciate the work he has done for the militia and the interest in it he again expressed this evening. I also appreciate his concern about vandalism. Recently a Pine Tree line radar station in my constituency was closed but, fortunately, we have not encountered the type of problem to which the hon. member alluded. Nevertheless, I appreciate his concern. I also agree with the hon. member that radar stations on the Pine Tree line were kept in excellent shape by the people who occupied them.

Until June 30, 1971, the 722 acres of land and buildings at Table Mountain, Newfoundland, were operated by the United States Air Force as a NORAD radar station. The land was granted to the U.S. government as part of the 1951 Pine Tree agreement by the government of Canada. The buildings and equipment were United States property. In June, 1971, the USAF deactivated the radar site and abandoned the property, taking with them their electronic equipment and other gear. The Tactical Air Navigation installation which had been operated by the USAF was turned over to the Department of National Defence, which has operated and maintained it as an unmanned but secure site ever since. The TACAN equipment is maintained under contract with Canadian Marconi Limited.

In October, 1971, Canadian Forces station Gander was designated as the caretaker unit for the Table Mountain property and requested to raise a declaration of surplus with a view to eventual hand-over of the property to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Unfortunately, because of lengthy and complex negotiations with the U.S. government, the Department of National Defence was unable to obtain title to the property until July 19, 1973. On August 8, 1973, the RCMP detachment at Stephenville, Newfoundland, was asked to maintain surveillance over the property.

Canadian Forces station Gander was unable to complete the report of surplus because of weather conditions during the winter of 1974, the final report being submitted in May, 1974. In December, 1974, the site was turned over to the real property division of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, now the Department of Public Works, for disposal. This action was delayed due to, among other things, inter-departmental discussions concerning the operation and maintenance of TACAN. Several other federal government and civilian agencies have expressed interest in portions of the property for their use. At the present time, in addition to the Department of National Defence's TACAN site, CBC maintains a transmitter on the property and the RCMP have a relay station there. The RCMP have been carrying out security checks since they were requested to do so on August 8, 1973. In the summer months these checks are once in each 24-hour period. In the winter there is one check every two weeks by snowmobile, as the area is otherwise inaccessible.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 12, 1975

The House met at 2.00 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, MR. SIMON

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members would like me to extend a warm welcome to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Mr. Bill Simon, who is present in the Speaker's gallery. We have had very fruitful discussions over the last 24 hours. We are very glad to have him in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received notice from three hon. members of questions of privilege. They are the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds).

All three notices pertain, on the face of it, to discrepancies or complaints about the quality of answers given by ministers in the House in recent days. I am, of course, duty bound to listen to the explanation of each member any time an hon. member gives the Chair notice of a question of privilege. In view of the fact that there are three of them, and that all three relate to a similar complaint, either about the quality of answers given by ministers or, alternatively, discrepancies between answers given by ministers in the House and statements made here or elsewhere.

I think I must caution the three hon. members that, again on the face of it, these constitute interesting questions for confrontation perhaps during the question period or other debates but probably do not, unless some other point is developed during their remarks, constitute questions of privilege.

I therefore propose, in the interests of all members of the House, to ask each of the three hon. members to develop the explanation of his question of privilege as briefly and concisely as possible.

The hon. member for Hamilton West.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALEXANDER—ALLEGEDLY CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I certainly abide by the ruling you have just delivered but I would suggest that I am not involved with the quality of the answers given by the minister—to whom I shall refer subsequently—but rather the contradictory statements that have been brought to the attention of the public and members of parliament.

My question of privilege revolves around the very strange and unacceptable circumstances involving the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), the Hamilton Police Force, and the Ontario Provincial Police. Your Honour will recall that on March 10, as recorded at page 3928 of Hansard, I asked a question of the Solicitor General concerning the need expressed by the Hamilton city council, as exhibited on October 31, 1972 by resolution, to have a full scale open inquiry regarding activities around the Hamilton harbour. The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, it is true that in September, 1972, some person or persons from the Hamilton city council came to the RCMP detachment in Hamilton with certain allegations of wrongdoing with respect to the Hamilton harbour. On examination of those allegations by the local detachment, the local detachment felt these were matters which gave rise to accusations under the Criminal Code and in the ordinary course such investigations should be undertaken either by the Hamilton City Police or by the Ontario Provincial Police. For that reason, the officials went to the OPP and the Hamilton City Police but the latter felt they did not have the resources necessary to carry on that kind of investigation—this is what I am told.

Further on the minister indicated as follows:

> They did decide to investigate in any case, because the others were not ready to do so.

It has also been alleged that the minister has indicated that any delay was at the police level in Hamilton. According to subsequent information we can come to the conclusion, and I say this with all due respect, that the minister either misled the House or has no idea what is happening in his department. Administrative negligence and incompetence are involved here.

After the minister made those statements one would assume that he knew what he was talking about. But then there was a strange revelation which is extremely damaging to the minister. I refer to statements made not only by the chief of the Hamilton City Police but also by an inspector of the OPP. In a lead story in the Hamilton Spectator of March 11 it is indicated:

> The Ontario Provincial Police and the Hamilton Wentworth regional police today denied they were ever asked to carry out an investigation into alleged wrongdoings involving the Hamilton Harbour Commission.
> Solicitor General Warren Allmand said last night that any delays in the harbour investigation were at the police level in Hamilton and not at the political level in Ottawa.

And what is most important, Mr. Speaker, is that the article goes on to say:

> Assistant Commissioner Ken Grice of the OPP said his department was never asked by anyone to carry out an investigation.

Most of the next sentence appears in quotation marks and reads:

"We were never asked and only became aware of the investigation after it was well under way," he said.

The assistant commissioner then said this about the Hamilton city police:

"We have a criminal investigation branch second to none and there is no question that we were not capable of carrying out an investigation. We have handled investigations far more complex than this, . . ."

The article goes on to say:

Regional Police Chief Gordon Torrance also said today that he could not recall his department being asked to carry out an investigation.

"We were not asked by the RCMP or anyone to investigate," he said.

It is evident that there is a serious and major conflict between the chief law enforcement officer of the land and others. He has openly contradicted the assertion of the local police of the city of Hamilton and of the Ontario Provincial Police. I suggest that this is unprecedented. It is incumbent on members to ascertain facts. When did the investigations begin? Who started the investigations? Who called for them? Why were they delayed, and who is correct, the minister, the local police of the city of Hamilton, or the Ontario Provincial Police?

Accordingly, if Your Honour finds I have a prima facie case of privilege, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the whole matter of police investigations into the Hamilton harbour activities be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the information I gave to the House in the last few days with respect to this matter was, of course, information I had obtained from RCMP headquarters in Ottawa. I did not personally get in touch with the Hamilton police or the OPP in 1972. I was not even minister at that time. Neither did the officials here in Ottawa do that. I am led to believe that the contacts were made at the local official level. I have now asked for details of how this contact was made and with whom.

Let me make it clear that the main issue in this case is that there was some wrongdoing in Hamilton. An investigation was undertaken by the RCMP. The wrongdoers were found.

Mr. Forrestall: Some of them.

Mr. Allmand: Five people have been charged, and three were found guilty. Today we charged an additional 14 individuals in this matter, and 12 more corporations. The investigation has been a very successful one, and justice is being carried out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is dwelling on incidents which took place at the beginning of the case, on discussions between police forces concerning who had jurisdiction. That is not the main thing; it is peripheral to the main issue. The main issue is that there was wrongdoing. An investigation has taken place and we found the people who are allegedly responsible for the wrongdoing. A large number of charges were laid before today, and also today and, as I said, justice will be done in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West gave the Chair notice of his question of privilege and, in accordance with what I indicated earlier, was given an opportunity to develop the contents of the question of privilege. In fairness, the Solicitor General was given an opportunity to respond. I should simply add that nothing that has taken place since I made my preliminary remarks persuades me that the hon. member has raised a question of privilege and not a question of debate. That being so, I will call on the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), who also wishes to rise on a question of privilege.

MR. BRISCO—ALLEGEDLY CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On March 10, during the oral question period, I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) the following question as reported at page 3928 of Hansard:

Has the minister written a letter or letters to Liberal members of parliament or Liberal party members asking for the name or names of lawyers in the respective constituencies who support the Liberal party with a view to awarding CMHC mortgage business to these party supporters who belong to the legal profession?

The minister replied:

In no such terms at all.

I submit that a reply of that nature couched in those terms would indicate a generalization and infer that regardless of the specifics of my question, the letter had not been written to Liberal members of parliament with reference to the acquisition of the names of Liberal lawyers who handle CMHC mortgage business. On the same day, the same minister made a statement outside the House which is a direct contradiction of the answer he provided members of this House. I am aware of the fact that Your Honour has ruled on this form of question of privilege with reference to statements made by ministers outside the House, but surely ministers have a moral obligation to avoid flirting with the truth in these chambers regardless of what they wish to say outside the House.

In effect, the minister denied the import of my question in this House, but on the same day the Toronto Star carried the news story "Liberal lawyers handle most of Ottawa mortgages" and under the picture of the minister it states "sent MP's letter." The first two paragraphs provide the truth which I sought in this House. I quote:

Legal work on "the vast majority" of mortgages issued by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is handled by Liberal lawyers, Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson admitted yesterday.

Danson made the admission after the Star obtained a copy of a "personal and confidential" letter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of privilege put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr.

Brisco) is a serious one, as was the previous question of privilege and as will be, I am sure, the following one. It is a matter of some concern that these questions have to be raised. I have given a preliminary view of what I feel is the correct interpretation of our Standing Orders with regard to these questions. However, I believe that any member who takes time to give the Chair notice of a question of privilege for the purpose of raising a serious point ought to be given the attention of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I continue the quotation from the Toronto Star of Tuesday, March 11:

> Danson made the admission after the Star obtained a copy of a "personal and confidential" letter he sent last month to all Liberal MP's asking them to be quick when invited to recommend a lawyer to handle a mortgage from the federal corporation.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Brisco: As matters stand at the present, we are subjected to direct contradiction of that policy. Surely, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of all members and the people that we serve, some vehicle must be developed that will oblige members of parliament, particularly ministers, to make statements of fact in the House of Commons that will not be in conflict with statements made later outside the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may quote the hon. member's question of March 10, he said:

> Has the minister written a letter or letters to Liberal members of Parliament or Liberal party members asking for the name or names of lawyers in the respective constituencies who support the Liberal party with a view to awarding CMHC mortgage business to these party supporters who belong to the legal profession?

I would not even bother rising to speak on this question of privilege except the hon. member suggested I was flirting with the truth and made statements outside the House different from inside the House. The import of his question was that I asked members for names of those who were party supporters. That is not the case. I asked for the names of legal agents—

Mr. Fairweather: Did you ask anybody on this side of the House? No!

An hon. Member: Who did you ask?

Mr. Danson: The hon. member's question of privilege, as I understand it, is based on the assertion that I did not answer accurately in the House. I did answer accurately in the House. I answered further questions outside. There was no suggestion regarding party supporters—simply the names of those qualified to handle this business. I have received suggestions from all sides of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson:—and they have been given due consideration. I find it a strange coincidence in this country that the best lawyers to handle this work in Ontario happen to be Conservatives, the best in British Columbia are NDP and the best on the national scale, as always, are Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The facts surrounding the question of privilege of which the Chair has given notice by the hon. member for Kootenay West are not dissimilar, basically, from those referred to by the hon. member for Hamilton West, and neither is the decision of the Chair.

MR. REYNOLDS—ANSWERS OF SOLICITOR GENERAL CONCERNING INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to the same subject as was raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West, that is to say, the investigations being carried out in British Columbia and the answers the Solicitor General gave us on February 27 and March 7. In order to save the time of the House, having regard to your two previous rulings, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my question of privilege; I am sure that in the long run the people of Canada will get the answers to this sorry mess as the people of the United States did when they had the Watergate investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: Cheap!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POSITION ON JURISDICTION OVER COASTAL WATERS AT LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Law of the Sea Conference is to take place in Geneva on March 17, 1975. Accordingly, I would move that the following motion be presented to all delegates at the conference in order to reaffirm the Canadian position on this issue, namely:

> That this House accept the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fishery resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of the fishery resources is the responsibility of the coastal states, that other states may fish such resources only with the permission of the coastal state, and, further, this House agrees that in implementation of this policy Canada must provide adequate surveillance so that swift action can be taken when Canadian interests are threatened or violated.

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—SUGGESTED MEASURES TO SETTLE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

On view of the fact that the current conflict—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Welcome!

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we could very well do without the comments of the hon. member who has nothing cheerful about himself but his name.

On view of the fact that the current conflict between the government and Public Service blue collar workers greatly disturbs the administration and economy of Canada, particularly with regards to the handling of feed grains, which is seriously damaging Canada's balance of payments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the President of Treasury Board summon all employees back to work and offer them salaries in line with those paid in the private sector, so as to put an end to work stoppages in the grain industry and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

AMENDMENTS TO INCOME TAX ACT

Question No. 10—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What would be the estimated cost to the Federal Treasury if the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials were removed?

2. What would be the estimated cost to the Federal Treasury if interest on the mortgages were allowed to be deductible before calculation of income tax?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. An exemption from sales tax for all building materials would reduce revenue by an estimated $830 million. The proposals in the November 18 budget to reduce federal sales tax to 5 per cent on a comprehensive list of construction materials will result in an estimated revenue loss of $450 million.

2. Allowing interest on mortgages to be deductible for income tax purposes would result in a revenue loss to the federal government approaching $1 billion.

CONDEMNATION OF MARIJUANA AND ITS HARMFUL EFFECTS—UNITED STATES SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE

Question No. 403—Mr. Reynolds:

1. To the knowledge of the government, did a United States Senate Subcommittee, in conjunction with the United States Department of Health, on Monday, October 7, 1974, issue a condemnation of marijuana and its harmful effects and, if so, does the Minister of National Health and Welfare intend to make these results known to the Canadian people through an educational format?

2. Does the government intend to make the youth of this country aware of the findings of the American Academy of Science, as published in their journal Science August 23 and 30, 1974 issues, regarding harmful effects of marijuana usage?

3. For what reason have no steps been taken by the Department to make available information and documentation on the harmful effects of marijuana to the potential marijuana users in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The government has received the Report of the United States Senate subcommittee entitled "Marijuana—hashish epidemic and its impact on United States Security." Twenty-four eminent researchers from a number of countries testified before the committee chaired by Senator James O. Eastland. The chairman states in the report that these hearings were convened specifically to demonstrate that a number of highly reputable scientists regard cannabis (marijuana) as an exceedingly dangerous drug. Comparable scientists and some commissions of enquiry, have failed to corroborate the extreme concern expressed by those who testified before the Senate subcommittee. The government has consistently stated that it considers that marijuana is a potentially dangerous drug. The policy announced on July 31, 1972, by the then Minister of Health and Welfare, the Hon. John Munro, made it very clear that the possession of marijuana would not be made legal because of serious concerns about the drug's effects on physical and mental health. These concerns remain unchanged as illustrated by the statement of the present minister on November 26, 1974. The government has taken steps to inform the Canadian public of the hazards involved in use of cannabis and other drugs through books, pamphlets, multi-media kits and films.

2. The government will continue to inform the public of hazards involved in use of marijuana and other drugs.

3. Answered in 1 and 2.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 553—Mr. Symes:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 by the Department of Finance on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: 1. 1972-73, $284,185; 1973-74, $203,529.

2 and 3. See reply to question No. 397.

NOTE: Where a report was submitted the title related to the purpose of the assignment.

LAND TITLE RESEARCH—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Question No. 629—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Department of the Environment or any other department conducting land title research along the St. Lawrence River waterfront or on the Gananoque River at Gananoque, Ontario and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) what specific land or areas are involved (c) on what date did such research commence and by whom is it being conducted?

2. What are all the plans the government has for the waterfront area at Gananoque, Ontario and do such plans include (a) redevelopment of the town waterfront and, if so, on what basis (b) development of waterfront recreational and boating facilities and, if so, of what nature?

3. Has the government through any of its departments designated the Gananoque waterfront area as a priority development area and, if so, what are all the details in regard to this?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and Public Works as follows: 1. Yes. (a) To assess the potential for future development of harbour facilities for recreational boating and sports fishing. (b) The federal boundaries of the harbour of Gananoque. (c) This research started in Ontario in October 1974. It is being conducted by the Regional Manager, Small Craft Harbours, Burlington.

2. At the present time, no plans have been formulated for either the redevelopment of the town waterfront or the future development of recreational boating facilities at this location.

3. The same priority has been given to the development of the Gananoque waterfront as other locations in the province.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—PERSONNEL

Question No. 827—Mr. Stevens:

1. As of March 31 in each year 1968, 1970, 1972 and 1974 (a) how many were employed by the Canadian Commercial Corporation (b) what would have been their aggregate salaries if all were employed for a full year (c) how many had salary levels of (i) $20,000 or more (ii) $35,000 or more (iii) $50,000 or more?

2. What was the salary or the salary range for each of the five highest paid employees of the Corporation?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Canadian Commercial Corporation is concerned: 1. (a) The Royal Commission on Government Organization (Glassco Commission) in February 1963, Volume 5, recommended that "The legal identity of the Canadian Commercial Corporation be maintained but its management and staff be provided by the Department of Defence Production (Purchasing and Supply)". In 1964, this recommendation of the commission was implemented and the staff of the corporation was merged into the Department of Defence Production (Now the Department of Supply & Services.) As DSS resources are used for the operations of the corporation, the applicable man-years are included in the supply revolving fund and the administration program of the Department of Supply & Services. The estimated cost of administrative services shown in the corporation's annual report represents an apportionment of manpower and related services costs based on the volume of contractual business in a given year. Other client departments are charged on a similar basis and it is therefore difficult to determine with any precision the number of man-years involved. (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

COMMODITY VALUE AND TRANSPORTATION COST WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN AID SHIPMENTS

Question No. 877—Mr. Stevens:

1. From April 1, 1968 to the date this question is answered, what was the total commodity value and transportation cost incurred by the government with respect to CIDA and other foreign aid shipments carried on ships recorded in the appropriate annual issues of the International Shipping and Shipbuilding Directory as being owned by World-Wide (Shipping) Ltd. of Hong Kong, a Company in which Mr. Y.K. Pao is a Director and a substantial shareholder?

2. For the same period, how many of such ships were chartered or part-chartered and how many liner shipments were made in such ships directly or indirectly by the government in connection with the shipment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. Based on Lloyd's Register of Ships 1972-73 edition, which records the registered owners of ships, we can report that no tonnage was carried by World Wide (Shipping) Limited of Hong Kong. The International Shipping and Shipbuilding Directory, 1972 edition, pages 140 and 141, lists the ships in service by World Wide (Shipping) Limited. We can, again, report that no tonnage, either charter or part charter, was carried on ships in operation by World Wide (Shipping) Limited.

2. The Department of Supply and Services undertook to arrange full characters as of April 1, 1971. As concerns liner shipments, a total of 9,167 were made on behalf of CIDA as follows: April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969, 720; April 1, 1969 to March 31, 1970, 972; April 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971, 1,108; April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972, 1,567; April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973, 1,416; April 1, 1973 to March 31, 1974, 2,110; April 1, 1974 to October 31, 1974, 1,274. The department does not have the necessary resources to research the many individual commodity contracts to ascertain whether the tonnage was moved on ships in which Mr. Pao has an interest.

NOTE: Prior to 1971, the information is not available.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—RETRAINING AND WORK PERMITS

Question No. 909—Mr. Herbert:

1. In reference to the answer to Question No. 254, what action is taken, if any, when the trained individual does not have and cannot borrow the other 50 per cent of the costs and what action is taken, if any, when the trained individual has been unsuccessful in his or her attempts to obtain a work permit in their trade?

2. Is training offered to a unilingual person if it is recognized that work permits or competency cards might be difficult to obtain because of the language of the individual?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare, through the Canada Assistance Plan will share on a 50-50 basis with the provinces in the cost of work permits and tools when the province recognizes this situation as a special need. The province may supply the assistance on a 100 per cent basis. The issuing of work permits is a provincial matter.

2. Work permits and competency cards are issued by provincial authorities, who are also responsible for the content of the training courses purchased under the Adult Occupation Training Act. Moreover, every effort is devoted by the federal-provincial manpower needs committee to ensuring that training priorities match the labour market needs in each province. There are very few cases in which those completing training encounter difficulty qualifying for the work for which their course was designed. Isolated cases can only be discussed in specific terms. In offering training to an individual, the prime consideration of the manpower officer, once the individual's basic eligibility has been determined, is whether employability or earning capacity will be enhanced by the training. All pertinent factors, including language fluency, are considered in this decision.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,002—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of Justice have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. All forms, stationery, employee directives dealing with the internal operation of the department, correspondence if necessary, press releases, competition posters and memoranda to all employees.

2. There is no requirement to translate past records except where and when any such records are put into general use or are distributed generally.

3. Not applicable.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of Justice, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Costs are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-73 and 1973-74. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 1,529,-659; for 1973-74 it was 1,602,088. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the translation bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. None. Existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. already meet the requirements of the Official Languages Act.

6. There are no records of the cost of ordering new forms and stationery in two languages compared to the cost in one language.

LIP—PROJECT No. X1074

Question No. 1,081—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the Local Initiatives Programme Project Number X1074 in the name of the Silver Harbour Manor Society, what is the job designation and what are the duties of Mr. Dobbie who wrote a hand-written memo dated April 26, 1973, stating in part "...originally rejected. Has been the subject of some political pressures. Does not provide employment to those likely to be seeking work"?

2. What is a full description of all details of the political pressures to which Mr. Dobbie refers, including in what ways and on what dates and by whom such pressures were applied and all details of the part played therein by the Honourable Jack Davis, Minister of the Environment at the time?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Mr. Dobbie was a project Officer (PM3) at the time that the Project X1074 was funded. His duties at the time were to close out the files of completed projects and to assess projects for possible extension should more funds become available. POST OFFICE, RICHMOND, B.C.

Question No. 1,205—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the advertising done for special collectors of stamps (a) for what reason does the Richmond, British Columbia post office have a sign on the collectors wicket "Closed owing to shortage of staff" (b) how long will this situation exist and, if until after Christmas, what are people to do who want to buy special stamps, books, collections, etc. for Christmas gifts as advertised?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): (a) The sign in question was not authorized by the station manager and was placed on the Philatelic Sales Counter without his knowledge by a person or persons unknown. Upon discovery of the sign, it was removed, which was within a few hours after it had been originally placed on the counter. MORTGAGE LOANS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 1,244—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the last twelve month period for which information is available, what proportion of lending in the Canadian mortgage market was by the chartered banks?

2. By how much per annum did this percentage change in the previous five years?

3. Does the discretion in the hands of the lenders as regards flow of funds and maintaining of interest rates create an artificial crisis in the housing market?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. In the 12 month period ending in August, 1974, chartered banks approved 28 per cent of mortgage loans on new and existing residential property.

2. Percent of residential mortgage loans approved by the chartered banks. 1969, 12 per cent; 1970, 12 per cent; 1970, 16 per cent; 1971, 24 per cent; 1972, 27 per cent; 1973, 30 per cent.

3. Many financial institutions compete for business in the mortgage lending market. Such competition ensures that the flow of funds into mortgages and that the mortgage interest rates charged by the institutions are basically set by market forces.

EXEMPTIONS FROM GARNISHMENTS

Question No. 1,246—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the Quebec Code of Procedure state that only military personnel are exempt from garnishment?

2. Do the federal authorities maintain the attitude that employees in the Public Service are also exempt?

3. Is there any evidence that those granting credit are hampered in the recovery of their claims against federal employees?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. No reply. The question relates to a matter which falls within provincial legislation.

2. Garnishee orders in respect of wages are directed to the employer. Moneys payable by the Crown as wages to public service employees cannot be garnisheed because the courts are not able to make an order against the Crown. The legislative provisions prohibiting the garnishments of wages of public service employees is contained in Section 81 (3) of the Financial Administration Act which reads as follows: "s.81(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), any amount due or becoming due by the Crown as or on account of salary, wages, pay or pay and allowances is not assignable and no transaction purporting to be an assignment of any such amount is effective to confer on any person any rights or remedies in respect of the amount."

[Mr. Reynolds.]

The question of garnishment proceedings has been reviewed several times over the years. For a number of reasons, including some evidence of a trend to restrict the use of garnishment proceedings in other jurisdictions and the present social climate of encouraging unlimited credit, it was decided that no change should be made in the legislation. However, as a matter of policy the subject is reviewed from time to time by the Treasury Board, most recently in 1970.

3. At the recent time there is another procedure available to a creditor to obtain relief against a public servant debtor. This is by equitable execution whereby a judgment creditor may obtain from a provincial court an order restraining the judgment debtor from receiving moneys which may be due and owing by the Crown to him. At the same time, such order provides for the payment of moneys to a sheriff who is appointed as receiver for the purpose of obtaining the moneys and of giving a valid discharge therefor. This procedure is cumbersome and is not always successful, but in this procedure the order is not against the Crown.

LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR WIVES OF SENIOR OFFICIALS

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 24 which, among other persons, listed Barbara Head, wife of an employee of the Privy Council Office, as one of those taking French language courses at government expense while not herself a member of the Public Service, is this individual the wife of Mr. Ivan Head, who is a member of the Prime Minister's staff?

2. What is the exact annual salary in dollars paid to Mr. Head?

3. For what reason did the government at taxpayer's expense pay for Mrs. Head's French language courses (a) was one of the reasons because the government believed that Mr. Head's salary was not sufficient for him to pay this expense himself (b) over how long a period of time did Mrs. Head take French language courses at taxpayer's expense and what was the total annual salary of Mr. Head during that period of time?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: A number of questions have been posed on language training programmes for spouses of members of parliament and senior Public Service personnel. It seems, from the points raised in each case and from previous inquiries, that some cost-related aspects of these programmes have been emphasized at the expense of other fundamental issues. It appears preferable, at this point, to provide a more comprehensive reply to questions raised in the House through clarification of these important issues. The provision of language training of spouses of Members of Parliament and senior public servants who are not themselves employed in the Public Service is founded both on legislation and on principle. Firstly, the Official Languages Act and the Parliamentary Resolution on Official Languages in the Public Service are juridical instruments which recognize and ensure the equality of status, rights and privilege of French and English in all areas of federal government action and the rights of Canadian citizens to deal with and receive services from the federal government in the language of their choice. Consequently, the government, with the support of all parties, has over a period of years, encouraged steps to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital Region and of the Public Service at large. Secondly, the government recognizes that, as is the case in dealing with the implementation of any government policy, some costs are involved in implementing the provisions of language legislation and it is prepared to assume these costs. The government also recognizes that spouses, even though they receive no remuneration for doing so, can play a major role in assisting their spouses to carry out his or her professional responsibilities. Since members of parliament and senior executives have major representational functions in which active participation of the spouses is often required and since Parliament and the Official Languages Act dictate that Canada be represented nationally and internationally as a bilingual country, it is important that both senior executives and their spouses have a command of the two official languages. This requirement is already recognized and approved in the case of spouses of Trade Commissioners and Foreign Service Officers, whose knowledge of both official languages of Canada has proven indispensable in assisting their spouses to carry out representational or promotional duties. The same holds true for the spouses of members of parliament, affiliated to all political parties, who have participated or are presently enrolled in the language training programmes provided through the Alliance française. Furthermore, implementation of the government's policy on official languages has become increasingly important within the Public Service. Most senior executives are involved with some aspect of implementation. Assimilation of the nature of the tradition, aspirations, socio-economic factors of the other culture which is one implication of language training programmes could ensure increased effectiveness and capacity in carrying out this task. Since senior executives must deal with other government priority programmes, the knowledge and experience that their spouses may have gained from their own participation in these programmes can be of considerable practical value to them. Finally, to senior public servants already carrying heavy responsibilities, the burden of learning French or English can indeed be heavy. And while some doubt has been expressed previously as to the validity of the need for a spouse's psychological support in such instances, it remains a realistic argument that such a support is most desirable. It appears reasonable, having seriously considered the different issues involved as well as parliament's expectations in the area of official languages that spouses of members of parliament and senior executives should have and continue to have some assistance in meeting these expectations.

OLYMPIC STAMPS AND OLYMPIC COINS

Question No. 1,476—Mr. Reynolds:

Are (a) Olympic Stamps (b) Olympic Coins classed as tax deductible items and, if they are not classed the same, for what reason?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Olympic stamps and Olympic coins are treated differently under the Income Tax Act. Paragraph 7(b) of the Olympic (1976) Act specifically provides that in addition to the amount of the postage rate indicated on the Olympic Action Stamp, an additional amount may be fixed for the purpose of providing financial assistance to the Olympics. This additional amount may reasonably be held to be a charitable gift, and is deductible therefore under paragraph 110(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act. The Olympic (1976) Act makes no similar provision with respect to Olympic coins, providing only that the proceeds to be received by the government of Canada shall not be less than the face value of the coins. In this case we consider that the purchaser has simply acquired a property at a price which is the total amount paid and no part of which is designated to be anything other than the price of the coins.

2. What was the breakdown of the totals on such dates in terms of (a) coins (b) bills (c) bank credits (d) deposits?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. There are various forms of money in Canada. These include currency (coins, Bank of Canada notes) and deposit claims on the chartered banks and on other institutions that offer deposit accounts to the public. The most commonly used definitions, which include currency and chartered bank deposits, are shown in the following table. Dates are for the last Wednesday in December because statistics for January 1 are not available. The table also shows the outstanding amounts of chartered bank credit in the form of Canadian dollar loans and mortgages. These statistics for bank credit are shown separately because they represent liabilities of bank customers rather than claims on the banks comparable to deposits.

REBATES ON PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 1,580—Mr. Jones:

Is the rebate presently being given by automobile companies on the purchase of certain automobiles taxable for income tax purposes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The rebates presently being given to the public by automobile companies on the purchase of certain automobiles will not be taxed as such. The rebates are viewed as a reduction of the cost of the purchased automobile. Accordingly, if capital cost allowance in respect of the automobile is allowed as a deduction in computing a taxpayer's income, the amount of capital cost allowance available to such taxpayer will be affected by such rebate.

(c) Yes.

2. Extensive research has been, and is being, conducted by many countries throughout the world, including Canada. These studies have served as the basis for the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection which, in turn, are the basis of the Health and Safety Regulations under the Atomic Energy Control Act.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—REASON FOR DELAY IN STARTING INVESTIGATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of the very serious charges that have been laid today against certain individuals and firms in Canada regarding dredging contracts with the federal government and the government of Ontario. Would the Solicitor General now tell the House whether any other investigations are underway into any other firms or individuals with respect to any other dredging contracts in any other parts of the country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out earlier, criminal charges were laid this morning against 12 corporations and 14 individuals for fraud and bid rigging of government contracts, the fraud totalling over $4 million. I understand that investigations are still underway. It is possible that as more evidence develops this will, in turn, lead to other investigations.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the dimension of the charges and the substantial amount of federal government funds involved, would the Solicitor General now make a statement to the House—and I ask him to do this because of his evasive and misleading answers during the last few days—

Mr. McGrath: —regarding the scope of the investigations now underway?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to take the hon. member seriously when he makes such ridiculous statements. I have been making as complete answers as possible in the circumstances to all questions put on these matters but, as I told the House before, it is against the public interest to reveal details of an investigation while the investigation is still underway. It would be counterproductive for an investigation to give publicly details of the investigation; and if the investigation proved negative, it would be harmful to the persons who were being investigated.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I might just say that anyone who examines the minister's replies in the House over the past ten days will find it difficult to take him seriously at any point. I ask the minister, because of the grave seriousness of this matter, whether he is now prepared to explain to the House, in view of the fact that the Ontario provincial police and Hamilton district police have denied any involvement in the investigation or that they were ever in fact requested to launch an investigation, how come it took five to six months to get this investigation underway?

Mr. Allmand: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not been listening too closely. I told the House on a previous occasion that, in the first instance, certain persons or a person from the Hamilton city council approached the Hamilton detachment of the RCMP and put forward certain allegations, which were vague at that time, with respect to wrongdoing in regard to Hamilton harbour. After preliminary examination of these allegations the RCMP and the detachment felt that this was a matter for provincial jurisdiction, since it concerned wrongdoing under the Criminal Code, and suggested to the person or persons involved that they go to the provincial or city authorities. I understand approaches were also made to the provincial and city authorities.

At a later date the matter came back to the RCMP detachment in Hamilton and in due course it worked its way up to the top level in Ottawa, and an investigation was authorized by the Department of Transport and the RCMP. I should like to make very clear to the House—and it seems that the opposition just cannot see this—that this has been a very successful police investigation. A large number of charges have been laid, people have already been found guilty and trials are pending. How the hon. member can suggest that anything is being covered up, I do not know; that is complete nonsense.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY PROGRAM—SUGGESTED WITHHOLDING OF PAYMENTS TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED—AMOUNT TO BE WITHHELD

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that this minister last week also left the impression with the House and the public that he was unaware of the seriousness of the allegations and charges which have been made public today and yesterday, in view of the fact that he announced that the most recent $265 million contract to Marine Industries Limited was going to go ahead as normal, and in view of the fact that that particular company yesterday in Toronto was charged under the Income Tax Act and that today the company was charged with an attempt to defraud two governments as well as the Hamilton Harbour Commission, and in view of this very serious allegation against officers of that particular company, would he now direct the Export Development Corporation to at least hold in abeyance, or somehow temporarily suspend, or make out some sort of trust arrangement so that money is still under the direct control and supervision of the government in some way pending the determination of criminality in respect of that particular company?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it quite clear that Export Development Corporation financing does not provide for loans directly to the corporations. This involves loans made to the buyers for the purpose of acquiring capital goods from Canadian suppliers. On the other point alluded to by the hon. member involving the question of payments in respect of existing programs under shipbuilding assistance, some payments are due or are coming due, and I have asked my department to seek legal clarification in respect of whether those payments should be made.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us the extent of the holdback in respect of the existing contracts he is talking about, and indicate the policy and intent with regard to the $265 million contract he announced last week as well as what he is now referring to when he says that, as he so gently puts it, he is seeking a clarification of legal implications?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member the amount of the payment that is coming due, but I would be very pleased to provide him with that information. I have tried to make it very clear to him that we are seeking legal clarification as to whether this payment should be made, and I hope to be able to announce a decision on that in the very near future. As to Export Development Corporation financing, I think it is important that the House understand that the $265 million contract to which the hon. member alluded is a contract between Marine Industries and the buyer, I believe a Greek corporation of some 12 vessels. That particular contract will be financed on the basis of approximately 40 per cent in the form of a loan by the Export Development Corporation to the buyer, not the manufacturer or exporter, supported by roughly 30 per cent from the private sector, the commercial banking system, and the balance, of course, by the shipbuilder himself.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO ALL DREDGING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister and I choose my words with care.

An hon. Member: For the first time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I hope the minister will choose his answer with equal care. In view of very serious charges laid by the Crown in Ontario involving political kickbacks and influence peddling in the Hamilton area, and considering that one of those charged today as the result of investigation into harbour dredging contracts was and may still be a very senior official of the Liberal party of Canada, will the Acting Prime Minister set up a commission under the Inquiries Act to investigate all dredging contracts and the possibility of related political wrong doing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the brief answer to the question is in the negative. I believe that if justice is to be done it should be permitted to take its course, and I think the intervention of any other proceeding such as has been suggested would compromise the outcome.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will put my question in a different way for clarification purposes and in the hope it might produce a different answer. In view of the fact that it is not only important that justice be done in politics, but that it be seen to be done, particularly as that relates to people in important political positions being cleared of any possible compromising circumstances that may not involve illegality but would potentially involve what appropriately could be called or considered political wrongdoing, in the sense of influence peddling, and I ask the question in that sense, will the Acting Prime Minister and the government not agree that the best way of clearing up this very important matter of public integrity in terms of governmental implementation of policy would be through a public inquiry?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat the answer I have just given. I suggest to my hon. friend that if there are allegations of this kind they should be made and should not be insinuated. If the hon. gentleman wants to make charges, then I suggest he should make them, and not only would justice be done, justice would be seen to be done.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest it is not in keeping with the practice of this House everytime something like this comes up for the government to call for the laying of charges. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby made no charges, but he alluded to charges that have been made in the courts, and I suggest he has the right to ask that matters relating to those charges be cleared somewhere other than in this political arena.

Mr. Sharp: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it has been one of the principles that you, your predecessors and all members have upheld, that when statements are made in the House either on the basis of newspaper reports or from third parties, some responsibility should be taken by those who use them.

Some hon. Members: Hear. hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which arises primarily from the point of order. Having in mind the intimations that have been made in the press and in other places outside this House, does the Acting Prime Minister not consider there have been sufficient prima facie allegations which justify—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Prima facie allegations!

Mr. Baldwin: —which justify the government, that has the responsibility for overseeing political turpitude and misdemeanors, taking the initiative to commence proceedings through an inquiry to determine exactly what the facts are?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer again is in the negative. I do hope that hon. members opposite will let the course of justice continue and not engage in the kind of insinuation and innuendo which they are engaged in now, and which are laying the foundations for a series of pseudo allegations being made outside the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised on a point of order which was contributed to in the final analysis by a supplementary question put by the hon. member for Peace River. To keep the record straight, the fact of the matter is that the answer or its quality in relation to the suggestion that allegations of this sort ought to be backed up by the hon. member who poses the question, and any comments on the quality or the nature of the answer, are really legitimate causes for debate but do not constitute a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the last remarks of the government House leader, and relates directly to a specific question I tried to put through you to the Minister of Transport with regard to the first time that knowledge was obtained of the allegations made in the Hamilton harbour affair. The rules of the House under Your Honour's direction prevented the then minister of transport from answering a question which went back many months to an earlier time than anything we have heard today. I say to Your Honour, with all due respect, that the government House leader, in his insinuations and in his last remarks, completely overlooked the recent history that on the other side of the border there were both congressional investigations and court proceedings. Does the government House leader not make any distinction between criminal conduct and political misconduct, political stupidity or administrative incompetence?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Basically, the hon. member is returning to the same point. The fact of the matter is that if the President of the Privy Council or any other minister chooses to give an answer of that nature to any question at any time, the kind of answer given may be the subject of legitimate comment either inside or outside the House. However, the fact is that the kind of answer given by any minister is his choice, and in fact he can choose not to give an answer at all. So this does not constitute a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister, in alluding to one of my questions—and I got the gist of what he said if not the precise words—referred to vague allegations or press reports—I see he nods in agreement—on which he said I based my question. I want to put on the record that I did not base my question on some imprecise information. It is my understanding that charges have been made today, in the courts of Canada against Mr. Hugh Martin who, I understand, was a former chairman of the federal Liberal campaign committee and is a participant in the court proceedings on this important subject matter which has been the subject of political questioning in the House for some time.

Also on this point of order, I referred to charges that were laid, not by a politician but by an attorney of the Crown in Ontario. In his words, there was political influence peddling of some kind involved. That is why my point was not based on vague allegations or press reports but on serious charges made by serious people, and I put this question to the minister: would it not be in the best interests of politics in Canada to get away from partisan bickering of this kind—

Mr. Broadbent: —and have a public inquiry conducted by a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada so that we could get back to other important political matters in the House of Commons?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best evidence of the impartiality of the proceedings that are now being followed is that this gentleman is being prosecuted.

Mr. Brewin: Speaking on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand the Acting Prime Minister to have said that this matter should be left to the courts of justice. I want to point out that the cabinet of which he is a member has the authority to cause an inquiry to be conducted by a judge of the Supreme Court or any one else the government wishes to appoint to deal with any matter for the sake of good government of Canada. I want to suggest to the Acting Prime Minister that this matter, far beyond the criminal charges laid, involves the good government of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: In the words of the Inquiries Act, this involves the conduct of any part of the public business thereof. I say to the Acting Prime Minister, in this case that comes before parliament it is more than obvious that a full and independent inquiry is required.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Solicitor General has said, the RCMP have initiated inquiries that have led to a number of prosecutions. Some were found guilty and others must be presumed to be innocent until they are found guilty. I believe that it would not serve the cause of justice at present to follow the suggestions of the hon. member.

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—DURATION OF AGREEMENT WITH INTERPROVINCIAL PIPELINE TO COVER FIXED COSTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

It is a question which I feel is as important as the one previously discussed. In view of the fact that the minister has just announced that an agreement has been concluded between the federal government and Interprovincial Pipeline Ltd., could he tell us whether under that agreement, the guarantee by the Canadian government to make up the probable deficit as a result of a shortage of oil to be carried will be in effect for an undetermined period or a specific term?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I must say that we have not yet closed the contract with Interprovincial Pipeline. Supplementary estimates are now being considered by the national resources committee and the contract is being discussed by that committee.

But if the minister is authorized by Parliament to carry out such a contract, there will then be an obligation, for the whole period of the bonds, of the 20-year investments, to give such a guarantee in the event the supply of crude oil from Sarnia to Montreal is cut off.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary.

In view of the announcement made recently that oil supplies in western Canada are almost exhausted, does the minister still believe that the pipeline is needed to bring oil that will no longer exist in four or five years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I must point out that the National Energy Board has indicated that until 1983, there will be ample supplies of oil for the eastern Canada market. If there should be such a cut-off of supply for the eastern Canada refineries, the pipeline being a reversible one might be used also for the Toronto and even perhaps the Sarnia refineries.

HAMILTON HARBOUR DREDGING CONTRACTS—ALLEGED DENIAL OF HAMILTON POLICE AND OPP THAT THEY WERE ASKED TO INVESTIGATE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General in light of the serious contradictions between the statements of the Solicitor General, the Hamilton police and the OPP.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Alexander: Now that the OPP and the Hamilton police have indicated that they have never been asked to investigate the Hamilton harbour activities, does the Solicitor General still maintain that they have been asked to do so? We would like to try to clear up this contradiction, and I hope the minister will give me an answer.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yesterday afternoon when I heard about this response from the Hamilton police and the OPP I checked once more with the RCMP here in Ottawa and they told me to stand by what they told me originally. I have now asked them for more details about the contacts that were made and I will give this information to the House as soon as I have it.

HAMILTON HARBOUR DREDGING CONTRACTS—IDENTITY OF PERSON REQUESTING HAMILTON POLICE AND OPP TO INVESTIGATE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question for the minister who does not seem to have known what he was talking about on March 10. I wonder if the minister can now look into his records, which I know he has, in order to determine who asked whom what with respect to the police and the OPP, whether it was his officials or the RCMP who went to the Hamilton police and the OPP, and would he identify him, or whether it was a member of the city council of Hamilton, and would he identify him and say where it was. Will the minister look into those records in order to give us his answers when he is replying to the other statement?

● (1500)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I explained to the House that these matters are not listed in my records.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Alexander: Not your records, in the RCMP records.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member said when I looked in my records. He should be more precise. When the question was raised in the House, I followed the usual channels. I checked with the RCMP in Ottawa. They, in turn, checked with the RCMP in Hamilton, and the information came through that way.

An hon. Member: Blame the mounties.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we have a real smart guy over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister will confine himself to answering the question.

Mr. Allmand: If the opposition thinks there is any contradiction between what I am saying and what the RCMP have on record, my estimates will be before the committee in a day or two and the RCMP will be there. Hon. members can come and put the same questions to the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: It seems to me that the minister is abdicating his responsibility. The minister knows darn well that when I talk about records, I talk about the records of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for which he has responsibility. All we want is the truth. Will the minister, as I said, look into the records of the RCMP and determine whether it was his officials who first went to the Hamilton police or the OPP and who it was, or whether it was a member of the city council, and when; the records should reveal that. I am not talking about the records of the Solicitor General. I am talking about the RCMP records for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I already said at the beginning of the question period that I would do that. The hon. member has not been listening.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO NEW MEASURES TO STIMULATE FOLLOWING DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I sense that the Minister of Finance is feeling neglected this afternoon.

An hon. Member: Did he write you a note?

Mr. Stanfield: With friends like that the Minister of Finance hardly needs enemies.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, following what he described as his fruitful conversations with Mr. Simon, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —whether, having had the benefit of those conversations he is now in a position to act upon or even speak about any new initiatives to improve the Canadian economy.

Mr. Muir: Why don't you get Simon for leader, John? He'd be a big improvement.

An hon. Member: In what party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we had some thorough conversations between ourselves and we also had the benefit of the reaction of the Secretary of the Treasury to comments put to him by several of my colleagues having economic portfolios. We will want to digest what he has said and his analysis of the American economy in due course as we reflect upon the stimulus already injected into the Canadian economy and the way in which a package of measures can be worked out between the United States administration and congress both in the energy field and in the economic field. Then, at an appropriate time, I will be back before the House.

An hon. Member: Did he sell you a ratchett?

INFLATION—OBJECTIVE IN SEEKING CONSENSUS OF VARIOUS GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether Mr. Simon sells ratchetts, but the minister expressed concern about strikes and creating more unemployment, and he also expressed concern about the escalation in the level of wages as a result of settlements in this country. In view of the fact that the only activity we see these days in the Department of Finance, apart from the elimination of the group of seven from the Prime Minister's office, is the so-called consensus effort, can the minister now tell us upon what the government of Canada has been seeking co-operation? Yesterday the Acting Prime Minister said to me that I was expecting something which is not there. I want to know what is there.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman and I have had several exchanges, some at length and some in a fairly curtailed way within the rules of the House at this stage of the proceeding. I can say to him, as I said to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates yesterday, that the rise in the rate of inflation is still not satisfactory despite some easing of the rate on an annual basis, below double digit. The rate is unsatisfactory despite the fact that an easing in wholesale prices and commodity prices will work its way through the economy, but the most disturbing feature of the current situation is the cost increases to which the hon. gentleman alluded reflecting wage settlements now running at roughly more than twice the rate of settlements in the United States. If these settlements in Canada continue at this comparative rate, Canada will find itself in an increasingly difficult position in our competitive ability in the world. This will jeopardize our exports and threaten Canadian jobs. I have said during the consensus process—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman had as much patience as he has throat, he would be a far more useful member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I have said to leaders of business, leaders in the labour movement, in the professions and leaders of agriculture, I quite understand the urge to catch up with respect to wages and prices. What is dangerous is that current settlements are anticipating rates of inflation which project the rate effective in 1974, and if this continues to happen, it will become a self-fulfilling prophesy and this country will be put into a very dangerous international position.

An hon. Member: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister must recognize that he did not even remotely answer my question. I would like to ask him how much patience he expects me or any member of this House to have with regard to a consensus program which was promised as long ago as the Speech from the Throne and which has been followed only by postponement and evasion. I and my colleagues have been prepared to exercise restraint and to withhold demands for stimulation in the economy in order to give the minister a reasonable time to get his consensus plan into operation and to give him more freedom of action. In response to that patience, I want the minister to give me the assurance that before the Easter recess he will give the House an open and frank statement as to what this consensus program is all about.

● (1510)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. gentleman an assurance that when it is appropriate to make that statement it will be made. In the meantime, I appreciate the statesmanlike attitude that the hon. member has adopted.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES TO DELAY PROCLAMATION OF PART II

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the government agreed to the requests of the provincial governments to further delay proclamation of Part II of the Foreign Investment Review Act and, if so, will this delay be for an indefinite period or has the government now set a date by which time the second part of the act dealing with new investment will be proclaimed in force?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the provincial ministers and I had a very useful and constructive meeting yesterday. We reviewed the administration of Part I and the provinces agreed on the six principles of consultation. We also discussed the question of the guidelines which are an integral part of the Part II proclamation. Provincial ministers asked for more time to consider and understand an admittedly complicated set of guidelines. The House may remember that I put forth a set of guidelines at the end of 1973 and asked for comments from the provinces and from industry. We put forward another set of draft regulations after consideration. I would expect there would be a meeting within the next three weeks at the deputy minister level of the various provinces with senior officials of the Foreign Investment Review Agency to conclude the consultation process with respect to those guidelines and the preparatory steps for second proclamation.

Mr. Gray: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

An hon. Member: He has a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INQUIRY TO DETERMINE WHETHER THOSE CHARGED IN CONNECTION WITH DREDGING CONTRACTS MADE CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Acting Prime Minister goes back to the first topic today. In view of the fact that he has not agreed to a public inquiry under the Inquiries Act will the Acting Prime Minister agree to an investigation in order to determine whether those corporations and individuals who have been charged have made contributions to political parties and if so, to which parties, how much and when?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that under the investigation that is being carried out this type of thing will not come to light because the election legislation was not proclaimed until August 1, will the Acting Prime Minister agree to investigate the political connection between those charged and—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that the presumption of innocence until proven guilty is fundamental to our system.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE DREDGING OPERATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friends opposite do not rejoice too much in the tribulations of the "in-laws", in Quebec.

Here is my question, Mr. Speaker, which is directed to the Acting Prime Minister: given the surprising development of the dredging contracts affair, and considering that on this subject the market is in such a state and that for all practical purposes real competition is impossible, as emphasized recently by the Minister of Transport, would the minister now feel that the lesson has been learned and that on the strength of that he should suggest to the cabinet that the Department of Transport buy its own equipment and do its own dredging, in the same manner as it already looks after buoys and icebreaking operations?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestions. We have great confidence in the Minister of Transport, too. But there is a serious problem in connection with the ongoing work of dredging that may have to be done in this country. Most of the companies involved in dredging have been named in the prosecution. I would not necessarily accept his suggestion about nationalization, but I recognize the problem that exists.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Transport.

As he seemed to nod his head in approval a while ago, I should like to ask him whether he is willing to approve this idea and expose his views on the subject?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I nodded in approval, Mr. Speaker, for the simple reason that I feel the idea is worth considering. The situation in Canada is not the same everywhere; that is to say that, if we talk of the west coast for instance, dredging can go on 12 months a year and depreciation of the equipment can be spread over 12 months; the same does not apply to eastern Canada where ice naturally brings the use of the equipment to a standstill in November. The idea is therefore worthy of consideration, which is what I wanted to indicate when I nodded.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RESTORE MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Could he advise the House whether the government has determined the course of action it is prepared to take or will take to restore the movement of grain and shipping generally?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this and other related questions are under most active consideration but no decisions have been taken.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question, the hon. member for Dartmouth—order, please, the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, with your agreement I should like to complete the answer to a question put to me by the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: They do not want an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could wait about five minutes until the end of the question period.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises partly out of the minister's response and partly out of what we consider to be the urgency and necessity of some information for the Canadian public. Would the minister undertake to advise this House—not today as we accept that negotiation and consideration is an ongoing matter—but on Friday on motions of the present situation with respect to mediation efforts in Vancouver and more particularly with respect to the general situation between the Treasury Board and the General Labour and Trades Groups?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly advise my colleagues the Acting Minister of Labour and the President of the Treasury Board to be as forthcoming as possible. I hope my hon. friend recognizes that there are two dangers which we should try to avoid. One is to have negotiations in this House and the other is for the negotiations to proceed under the threat of parliamentary action.

FISHERIES

POSITION TO BE TAKEN BY CANADA AT LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE ON JURISDICTION OVER COASTAL WATERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State responsible for Fisheries concerning a motion which I presented under Standing Order 43 about the position to be taken by this country at the forthcoming law of the Sea Conference. As the minister's colleagues refused to approve the motion, which refusal I consider to be a betrayal of the rights of our fishermen and evidence of this government's contempt for our fishermen, and as the motion is in effect the same motion which was debated and approved by the House in June, 1973—

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West has the floor for the purpose of asking a question. I wonder if he would ask his question.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, as the motion dealt with the position which was being espoused by the minister and his colleagues outside the House and in committee, will the minister assure the House and fishermen of the country that the Canadian position has not changed and that the position we shall put forward at the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference will be the same as that outlined by him and his colleagues on numerous occasions in the past couple of years.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the fishermen of the country need to be reassured after the excellent speech my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, made in Halifax a couple of weeks ago. But, if they need to be reassured, let me say that our delegation in going to Geneva with a firm mandate to negotiate hard on behalf of Canada.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister or his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, outline on motions and put up on public record the position which this government will take at the Law of the Sea Conference which is to begin in Geneva on March 17.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence last night, and in my opening statement set out once again the position which Canada will take at the Law of the Sea Conference. As the deliberations proceed, I will be prepared to answer questions on the details of our presentation at the conference. I assure my hon. friend that the position which is well known as the Canadian position will be upheld at the conference.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY PROGRAM—AMOUNT DUE TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham asked me how much the subsidy payment is outstanding under our commitments under the subsidy program when he put his question on the relationship of subsidy payments and the dredging contracts. I have just been informed that payments totalling $1,190,000 with respect to Marine Industries Limited under the shipbuilding subsidy agreements are due.

MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—AMOUNT OF CONDITIONAL AND UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, may I clarify an answer I gave the member for Winnipeg North to do with grants to Microsystems International. I had indicated that $13 million, of the total of close to $30 million in grants was conditional, and $16 million was unconditional. On checking, I find that the grants totalling $30.4 million were all conditional grants.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I assume, since Your Honour allowed the minister to get up and partially answer a question on the basis of knowledge he must have had when the question was asked in the first place, that you will permit me to ask a supplementary question arising from that answer. My point of order is this: I wonder if the minister would be good enough, at the same time, to indicate to us the total amount owing under both the income tax charges and the fraud and conspiracy charges, as indicated in the indictments relating to Marine Industries Limited, and whether these actually cover the amounts he is now talking about.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

If he cannot answer that, I wonder if the Solicitor General can.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to rise and move that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. This bill is a most important element in the government's long-term planning to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs. It is firmly rooted in the basic objectives of our energy and resource policies which are, to ensure for Canadians adequate and reliable supplies at reasonable prices, as well as a direct share in the wealth which development of our resources generates.

My emphasis on long-term planning is deliberate and necessary. We harbour no illusions that establishment of a national petroleum company is likely to lead to early and spectacular results in terms of massive energy development or financial success. I want the House to know that we are going into this venture in full realization of the fact that the hazards of exploration risk, technical and commercial uncertainty await this venture. We are nevertheless convinced that the national interests now require a significant degree of federal public enterprise in the oil and natural gas area. This enterprise will complement other federal efforts in the uranium and nuclear sectors, and reinforce provincial activities in electric power.

The vehicle we have chosen to carry out this function is a national petroleum company. Its organization, structure, objects, powers and duties are described in the bill and summarized in the Administrator's recommendation attached to it. The bill is neither lengthy nor complex, and detailed discussion of its provisions should be held for the committee stage. I do wish to spend some time, however, explaining to the House why this legislation has been brought forward.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that the energy policy review which I published nearly two years ago included extensive description of the role of state participation in the energy industry in Canada and abroad together with a careful analysis of the benefits and drawbacks which might stem from the creation of a Canadian national petroleum company. The advantages and disadvantages as represented in the review appeared to balance out, and no conclusion was drawn one way or the other. I think that this fairly reflected the government's position at the time.

I need hardly remind the House how much things have changed since then. The physical limitations of commercially-accessible energy resources in southern Canada have become even clearer. The economic, technical and environmental problems of developing the energy resources in our geographical and technical frontiers—the north, the oil sands and the offshore—have if anything been magnified by the passage of time. The terms and channels of access to overseas oil and energy supplies to meet deficiencies in our domestic resources have sharply changed. Fresh uncertainties have arisen as to the physical security of those supplies in certain circumstances. And we have experienced, and still face, huge increases in the real cost of our energy supplies, whether from the domestic frontiers or from abroad.

[English]

Our published analysis of the pros and cons of public enterprise in the petroleum industry was carried out towards the end of a long period of tranquillity, and apparent stability, in domestic and international energy affairs. The changes since then in circumstances and outlooks have been radical and, for the most part, permanent. It is the extent and nature of these changes which have in our view tipped the balance decisively in favour of federal entrepreneurship in the oil and energy industries.

This does not mean that the government finds that Canada has not been well served by private enterprise in the petroleum industry. Private companies, whether Canadian or foreign-owned, have generally worked vigorously to develop our oil and gas resources, to create transportation systems for them, and to refine and distribute efficiently oil products. The privately-owned Canadian oil industry has a good record of technical and managerial innovation.

The concerns which have led the government to propose establishment of a national petroleum company have much more to do with the future than with the past. These concerns relate principally to matters of energy supply, particularly the supply of oil and gas.

The government does not feel assured that the private sector can be relied upon to mobilize all of the enormous amounts of capital which will be required to secure energy development consonant with Canadian needs over the longer term. Nor can it be certain that, faced with attractive investment opportunities and geological possibilities abroad, the private oil industry will be able to concentrate as much effort on our own petroleum prospective areas over the next decades as our needs require.

There are uncertainties, too, in respect of arrangements to import the oil which we need to supply consumers in the eastern part of our country. Oil resources in overseas exporting countries are quickly coming under the ownership and control of state-owned petroleum companies. As I will elaborate later in these remarks, circumstances could well develop, in such a way that oil imports could more advantageously be made by a nationally-owned Canadian corporation than by the private companies which have so far served us in this area.

The compelling reasons for creation of a national petroleum company relate therefore primarily to security of supply—from our domestic resources and also possibly from abroad. Besides providing a new focus for mobilizing capital and skills in the service of necessary resource development, the company will bring to the petroleum sector the social benefit to Canadians of the pride, satisfaction and confidence of owning a portion of this critically important Canadian industry. I firmly believe that a majority of Canadians desire such a presence and a broadening of Canadian ownership in this industry.

As this enterprise develops, we can reasonably expect to reap a number of side benefits. A degree of knowledge and insight will be available which simply cannot be acquired by other means. This insight will extend to a first-hand experience of the effects of our own and provincial government's policies, and thereby to the appropriate design of those policies to the benefit of all parties. The national petroleum company may also be able to play an important role in regional development. Also within what might be regarded in part as a "social function", the company will be expected to pay special attention to education and training of native peoples in the petroleum sector. Finally, the company would be expected to carry out research into problems of petroleum development which are peculiar to Canadian circumstances.

Let me now exemplify how we envisage the company will be able to serve the national interest in terms of expanding our domestic supply potential, improving our access to overseas resources, and reaping a number of other benefits for the country as a whole.

We have chosen to set the national petroleum company in a corporate business framework as a means to better achieve our goals. In its organization and business methods, the company will be subject to the basic disciplines of an operating statement and balance sheet. The corporation will be responsible to its shareholders, the people of Canada. I think the directors of the company may from time to time judge that short-term profit maximization is not in the interests of these shareholders, all of whom stand to be affected directly or indirectly by the corporation's actions. That criterion may properly be modified in the interests of long-term future energy supply for Canada, and in terms of job opportunities or the development of particular parts of Canada.

The company will be able to mobilize capital on an important scale, even by the standards of those large private enterprises which characterize the energy business in Canada. The initial capitalization of $500 million can be supplemented by debt-raising to $1 billion. I would expect that the federal government would stand behind the company when it seeks to raise debt capital. The capital resources which the company will thereby be able to command are substantial and will enable it to play a significant role in our total petroleum investment picture at a relatively early stage in its life.

The government expects that the most important function of this enterprise will lie in the area of oil and gas exploration and development, particularly in our frontier areas. Private investment, both Canadian and foreign-controlled, will continue to play an important role in this area. However, we are looking to the company to increase the Canadian presence in a sector which is of critical importance to assuring future energy supplies. Where possible, the company would seek to operate jointly with both Canadian and foreign firms in development activity.

As the House knows, the federal government holds a 45 per cent interest in Panarctic Oils Ltd. For the past eight years this company has carried out an extensive exploration program in the Arctic Islands. The national petroleum company would co-ordinate government interests and objectives in relation to Panarctic's future activities.

There may be areas of exploration which are not undertaken by the private sector, either because commercial returns are not easily defined by the corporations involved or because they are deemed to be too far distant. There may also be areas of exploration which are not pursued by the private sector because of the financial burdens involved. These are cases where the company would carry out exploration activities of its own.

Mr. Speaker, this public enterprise will not be restricted to exploration for conventional hydrocarbons. Considerable technological advances remain to be achieved in the field of synthetic oil and gas production. Syncrude is a case in point. This important undertaking, which may become the first investment of our new petroleum company, is a large-scale step towards the commercial development of the oil sands.

The road ahead is a long and difficult one. The mining technology, which is more developed than the unproved in situ technique, can sustain access to more than 20 billion barrels of much needed reserves. The investment requirements are, however, very large—and probably beyond the capability of any single corporation or even group of companies operating in our country. Also, the largest private entities which may be potential participants in oil sands projects are necessarily the foreign controlled internationals. The best way to secure a Canadian presence a rate of development consistent with our national interest, a proper share of the income generated by such activity and full access to new technology, is by a direct government involvement in key ventures through a corporation which can develop the necessary expertise. Our national petroleum company would then be in a position to act as a catalyst for succeeding projects, assisting in their planning and financing as well as participating ultimately in their revenues.

About four-fifths of the immense resources of the oil sands can only be unlocked by successful development of in situ technology. It is clearly a matter of prime national interest to foster research in this area. Our national petroleum company should be the vehicle through which this federal participation in research is supported and monitored. It would thereby secure for the country the technology and access to patents needed for in situ commercial exploitation of the oil sands.

[English]

Exploration, development and associated research are but the first important steps toward commercial development of our frontier oil resources. To bring them to market will involve the construction and operation of transportation systems of unprecedented size, complexity and cost. To bring these facilities on-stream threatens to strain the financial resources of private industry and capital markets. An alternative to even heavier reliance on foreign investment to finance these projects would be participation in them by a national petroleum company. This would seem a natural extension to its efforts, by assuring that the energy resources it helped to find and develop are brought to the Canadian consumer without undue delay and at least cost.

However successful our domestic resource development is, over the next few years we are likely to remain dependent on foreign sources for petroleum supply to eastern Canada. The government has acted to reduce this dependence by promoting the construction of pipeline facilities to bring western Canadian oil to Montreal. It is also taking steps domestically, and in conjunction with other countries, to minimize the risks and consequences of overseas supply dislocation. And it has, of course, cushioned the eastern Canadian consumer from the effects of recent overseas oil price increases. The basic element of supply for eastern Canada, namely, the importation of foreign crude oil for refining here, nevertheless remains in the hands of private companies.

It is a striking fact that every one of the dozen countries from which we import significant quantities of crude oil has its own state oil company and is progressively increasing the role of that company in relation to international transactions. If circumstances continue to develop in this direction, it could be that it will be more advantageous for us to import some of our crude oil through a public enterprise rather than entirely by means of private companies. The national corporation will be ready to take part in petroleum importing activities if it is clearly in the national interest for it to do so. The obvious interest to be served is that of importing at lower cost than the private companies are able to.

It is conceivable as well that a national company might be able to enter into arrangements with a foreign state petroleum company which would offer greater assurance of supply continuity than could be provided by arrangements effected by private importers. In a general way the corporation might well be a most effective vehicle for the implementation of constructive political and trade relations with the oil exporting countries.

I would like now to turn to the matter of the domestic ownership of Canadian energy resources. Phase I of the energy policy studies revealed that the extent of foreign ownership or control of the petroleum industry is in excess of 90 per cent. One way in which Canadians can assert their presence in this heavily dominated sector of our economy is by having a nationally-owned company which could bring together smaller Canadian companies into a larger, more competitive entity through joint ventures and the forming of various consortia. I should emphasize here that the development of the north will require capital of a magnitude not normally available to most Canadian-owned companies. The national corporation can play a decisive role in the formation of joint ventures in an attempt to alleviate this problem. Such partnerships may offer viable alternatives to the small Canadian operators who, in the past, have had to sell out to the internationals when they ran short of risk capital.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this leads me to a most important aspect of the operation of the company, that of staff and manpower training. People are a company's most important resource and the Canadian petroleum industry has developed over the years a highly competent group of professionals who have become experts in all phases of industry operations including its management. The majority of these are employed by foreign-owned companies. The corporation will offer opportunities which are commensurate in challenge and scope, and as its role may ultimately be just as diverse as those of some large international companies; it will provide a good training ground for Canadians wishing to link their careers with the oil industry in the service of Canada.

Much of the activities of the company will take place in frontier areas inhabited by our native peoples and I look to the company to play an important role in training Canadians of Inuit and Indian origin. It could in this way make an effective contribution to the social as well as the economic development of the north.

The bill before us provides powers for the company to engage in "downstream" activities of the petroleum industry such as oil refining and marketing. While the government intends thereby to keep our options open and enable us to respond to future needs and opportunities, it is our present view that this sector of the industry is well provided for by private companies. Moreover, the costs of entering this phase of the business are extremely high and might not immediately be justified in relation to the more pressing need for development of the basic resources.

[English]

The House is aware that the economic growth and social progress of our country have taken place in an economic framework characterized by both public and private enterprise. Examples of successful public entrepreneurship in the fields of civil aviation, electric power generation, particularly in development of the CANDU nuclear reactor, the country's most successful energy project, railway transportation and petrochemicals are too numerous to mention here. Until recently our fuel industries have been characterized by almost complete private ownership. I want it to be clearly understood that the national petroleum company which we propose will not replace private industry or private entrepreneurship. We look to the private sector to continue to find, develop, transport and deliver the bulk of our fuel energy needs. The national petroleum company is intended to supplement and stimulate the efforts of the private sector in a co-operative atmosphere to the benefit of all Canadians.

Whether under public or private direction, a significant part of the Canadian economic activity is located in energy producing activities. The largest part of this production is vital to other Canadian industrial activities and to the support of the Canadian lifestyle. The climate of Canada and the standard of living to which we aspire, combine to make this sector of the economy one of the most important. The government has always recognized the special status of this industry. The creation of the national corporation will add to the instruments available to the Government of Canada to advance Canadian interest in secure and adequate energy supplies and in the sharing of the wealth which Canadian resource endowments make possible.

I trust the House will give Bill C-8 the careful consideration and prompt passage which it deserves. I can promise that, upon its enactment, the government will move equally quickly to set up the company and put it to work. The establishment of a national petroleum company is not a venture for the short-sighted or for the timid.

Mr. Bawden: What about the taxpayer?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Speaking about being shortsighted, I think the best example is the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden)—or is he the member for Houston? I really don't know.

Mr. Bawden: Now your prejudices are coming out!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That great Canadian, the member from Houston!

Mr. Bawden: Where are you from?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would ask the House, by passing this legislation, to show its confidence in the reality of our energy potential, its recognition of the magnitude of our needs, and its belief that the time is ripe for a bold step which will give public enterprise a significant role in this critically important industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do agree with one thing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has said—this is an important debate, for the government's proposal marks a milestone in the development of the Canadian economy; it indicates the direction the government wants the country to take in the future, and suggests the kind of society it wants to create.

● (1550)

We have a proposal today made by the federal government that it move further into the private sector, without there being any demonstration that there is a need for it to do so. The bill is so broad that it is clear the government is taking the position that the private sector can no longer be counted upon to develop natural resources in this country. However, most of the Canadian people believe we should have an economy that basically is operated through the initiative of its citizens, not its governments.

We in Canada have evolved over time a modern, contemporary view of economy policy. No one today objects to the proposition that it is the government's responsibility to provide a level of full employment, to keep prices stable, to do something about regional disparities and to lessen disparity of income among individuals in different parts of the nation. We all believe that this is an essential part of government's responsibilities.

Associated with that, however, is the proposition that the best way to do this is through general monetary and fiscal policy, and the application of regulations where there are natural monopolies in the system. The best way to assure a high standard of living is not for the government to move directly into the production and distribution of goods and services. The evidence is all too clear that in those areas where the government moves in directly the efficiency of operation is something less than maximum. One need do no more than to point to the post office and all its difficulties to illustrate this point; but evidence from around the world also demonstrates that those countries with the highest standard of living are basically those that depend upon the private sector to produce and distribute resources.

The government is bringing in a bill dealing with a major area affecting the future of this country, a bill proposing measures that are bound to replace the private sector to a considerable degree. The government clearly demonstrates by this legislation that it no longer has confidence that the private sector can operate effectively in this country.

What we should have in these days of runaway inflation is efficiency and effectiveness in the use of our resources, yet we have staggering statistics coming forward showing that in area after area, and particularly in the government sector, there is no increase in productivity at all. Yet the government wants to move even further into the economy than it has gone in the past. Surely if ever there was a time when we should pause and reflect upon expanding government activities, it is now.

What will the proposed company do? It will explore, develop and exploit our hydrocarbon deposits both within and without the country. It is interesting to note that the company will operate outside as well as within the country. It will carry out research and development, engage in the marketing of fuels, and will negotiate and acquire petroleum products necessary to maintain Canadian supplies from abroad.

Why does the government think that a new corporation to implement these measures is necessary? First of all on the question of exploration, presumably the creation of this company is an indication that the government believes there is inadequate exploration by the oil industry today. I say that the majority of informed people involved in natural resource development in Canada would agree with that. But they would point out that the reason there has been a decline in exploration activity in this country is precisely because the government has interfered. The government has evolved policies that make it impossible for the private sector to operate and explore in the way it has in the past. The oil and petroleum industry has never lived with such uncertainty as it has experienced the past two or three years. We have had a hodge-podge of tax legislation and confrontation making it impossible for the oil industry to operate in the normal way.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, the government has formulated no rules or regulations regarding exploration for oil in the vast northern areas of the country that still need to be explored. There is something very peculiar and paradoxical, about the fact that at a time when we are concerned about supply, about exploration and getting more oil on-stream, there is a whole series of activities on the part of the government that make it impossible for exploration to go ahead.

To suggest, for even one moment, that by the creation of another government entity we will automatically get more oil is a false assumption. If the government is really concerned about security of oil supply for this country, what it should do—something it could do immediately—is lay down regulations for exploration in the northern territories and set a tax structure that will enable the industry to go ahead and explore.

The problem the industry in this nation has been facing as we have moved from exploration to development is that it has not known just what the government is asking from it. Whenever the government has passed a series of laws or set a tax structure, we have witnessed a positive and effective response from the private sector. But once the government begins to change the tax laws and introduces uncertainty, this response falters.

One really wonders just what is in the back of the government's mind. It enacted a series of proposals that made it impossible for the industry to operate effectively, and now it wants to create a government company to take the place of private industry. Surely the thing to do before taking such a step is to work out a set of regulations and laws making it possible for the industry to operate, and then we will have a reasonable test and time to determine whether or not there is any need for some sort of direct government intervention of the kind proposed in the legislation before us today.

Additional clauses of the bill call for the distribution and refining of fuels. Does anyone really believe that we in the parliament of Canada need legislation today allowing the federal government to get into the business of refining? Does anyone really believe there is a need for the establishment of a corporation to distribute refined gas in this country? So far as refined products are concerned, a visit to any city, town, village or crossroads will indicate that the last thing that the government needs to invest money in at this time, if ever, is the establishment of a distribution system for petroleum products. Obviously the distribution system that we have is operating effectively; the government does not need to take the taxpayers' money to become involved in this kind of operation.

In addition, the bill calls for powers to negotiate and acquire petroleum products from abroad. Again I ask, do we need a new company, paid for by the taxpayers, to do this sort of thing? As some of my colleagues have suggested during the course of the speech of the minister, this is something that could be done by the Department of Supply and Services. This should give us cause to pause, because the one time that the Department of Supply and Services went to the market to acquire oil it acquired it at probably the highest price paid for oil at any time, certainly in the history of Canada.

It is very difficult to find any need for the establishment of such a corporation as is proposed. I am sure we all applaud the development by the government of agencies, institutions and other bodies that help solve the problems facing the country. But there is nothing that suggests that we need this particular corporation to do things the Canadian people want done. It will not produce one extra barrel of oil for Canada.

Surely we do not need to have the government enter the refining business. It is obvious we do not need the government in the distribution business. No legislation is required to enable us to deal with other foreign countries; existing departments can carry out this function. So why introduce the legislation at all? Why spend the taxpayers' money on the establishment of such a company, particularly at a time when we should be very much concerned about expanding the economy, and about the inflationary impact of increasing government intervention? Why should we go ahead and pass the legislation proposed by the minister today?

Indeed, if you look at other aspects of the legislation such as those in clause 7(1)(d)(c) and (e) you will see that this company will have almost unlimited power in respect to acquiring and lending money to other companies. This legislation will give power to the government to do anything it wants in so far as the petroleum industry is concerned. I think it is wrong in principle to pass legislation that gives this sort of unlimited power to any government. It may be all very well for the minister and his colleagues to say they do not intend to get into the distribution business or to acquire other companies, and so on and so forth, but the fact is that in this legislation we are giving the power to the government which will allow it, if it so desires, to move in and literally take over the entire petroleum industry in Canada.

The minister has made it clear he is counting on the private sector to be the chief element in the development of resources and for providing for the oil needs of this country in the future. If that is the case why does he need legislation of this sort? If he is going to count on the private sector he does not need clause 7 in order to do some of the things he thinks are essential. Many countries got into trouble by passing legislation allowing for blanket operations on the part of government, when the government itself did not specify why it needed that sort of legislation. We are very opposed to that sort of broad right being given to the government at this particular time. We do not believe it is appropriate that the government be given the power under this legislation to take over the entire petroleum development industry in this country, if it wants to do so. It seems to me far from clear why this legislation is needed.

We cannot see that any of the proposals which have been put forward in the bill will really answer the energy problems facing this country. We do not really believe that the government will have much impact on total pricing in the country through the development of a $500 million corporation, or that it will have much influence on the industry as a whole. When you realize that Imperial Oil has revenue of $2.6 billion, and Exxon with much greater sales, it is clear that a $500 million company will not have much effect.

The argument is made that the government needs this legislation in order that it may have a marginal effect on pricing by the OPEC countries, but it seems to me that this sort of influence will be quite ineffective. I doubt very much whether a government controlled company will have any more opportunity to buy oil cheaper from OPEC countries, or other suppliers, than the people who are buying that oil now. Certainly if it happens that the selling countries will not deal with anything except a government agency, we have the opportunity through various departments of the government to meet that particular requirement. As has been often suggested, we do not need a national petroleum company simply to buy oil from suppliers, and to suggest that this would allow us to buy oil cheaper I think is stretching our credibility a long way.

In addition, the minister says it is important to have federal government presence in the energy field. I suggest we already have a presence in that field through Panarctic. I think the government's case is far from made in this respect, because if it feels it should expand its position in this area why cannot it do so through Panarctic? Panarctic has the power to explore in the Arctic, and certainly if there is a need for further expansion of government into the private sector in this area then why not stay with Panarctic? Why is it necessary to start up a totally new corporation? It is this type of duplication that causes the government to grow so rapidly.

It is absolutely wrong for the government to suggest that Canadians cannot be protected in respect to their resources unless we have a national petroleum company. Canadians are protected now through the leasing and ownership arrangements that prevail in respect of all or much of the land where exploration is taking place.

Having regard to the minister's observation about foreign Control of the petroleum industry, one is well aware of this, but surely the suggestion is not seriously made that by establishing a national oil company to the tune of $500 million we are making an adequate response to this situation. This does nothing about the total question of control. If the government is serious about the proposition that there is too much control of the petroleum industry in Canada in foreign hands, surely the answer is to change the tax laws to make it more attractive to Canadians to invest in the industry, and more attractive for the companies which own the shares to divest them to Canadians.

The suggestion that because we are going to have a $500 million oil company and a greater national presence in the petroleum industry, this will really solve the problems, seems to me to be rather ludicrous. The argument that we should establish a national oil company in order to get better information about the petroleum industries can only be an indication of the failure on the part of the government to utilize its existing powers. It is suggested that the government cannot get the information it needs, or that the National Energy Board does not have the information. Surely the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the National Energy Board can get the information required to make appropriate decisions in respect of the development of our resources and the petroleum industry in general, if they are determined to do so.

Finally, it seems to me that during a period when there is a scarcity of resources, a tight market in respect of labour and a scarcity of trained geologists and other people needed to expand the petroleum industry, this is not the time for the federal government to compete with private industry for those resources, and I am sure the minister knows well the situation in the western provinces. To do so will only make what is a serious situation even more serious.

People have wondered when this proposed company would get under way. The best estimate is that it will be five or ten years, perhaps even longer, before it will have any impact. There is no indication by the minister that the company will produce one extra barrel of oil for the Canadian people. The only thing we know is that it will use more of the taxpayers' money, and will mean an even greater expansion of government into the private sector.

There is every indication that the establishment of this company will cost the taxpayers a lot more money through the expansion of government, at a time of chaotic conditions in the industry, most of which have been created by the government itself. It is impossible to assess really what will be fulfilled by the corporation proposed by the minister. We feel very strongly on this side of the House that there is no need for this institution. We believe that the things the minister thinks have to be done, such as the management of Syncrude, exploration, and other things of that sort, are being appropriately handled without this legislation by the private sector, which is the vehicle in force today, and to that extent it should be allowed to continue. We believe that by granting the broad powers that are proposed for a corporation of this sort we are embarking on a totally new approach in this country to the development of energy and resources, an approach that will not lead to more efficient use or to the quicker development of our resources, and an approach that will not benefit the Canadian people in general. That is the reason why we are going to oppose, as strenuously as we can, the establishment of this corporation and the passage of this bill.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-8 proposes to set up a Crown corporation which will be known as Petro-Canada. It gives wide and sweeping powers to the proposed Crown corporation, operating under a board of directors responsible to a designated minister and subject to the approval of the governor in council.

Clause 3 of the bill sets forth the purpose of the corporation, and that purpose is sufficiently wide to cover any activity in the field of exploration, development, refining or marketing of petroleum products. Let me put on the record Clause 3 of the bill which sets forth the purpose of the legislation. It reads:

> The purpose of this act is to establish within the energy industries in Canada a Crown owned company with authority to explore for hydrocarbon deposits, to negotiate for and acquire petroleum products from abroad to assure a continuity of supply for the needs of Canada, to develop and exploit deposits of hydrocarbons within and without Canada in the interests of Canada, to carry out research and development projects in relation to hydrocarbons and other fuels, and to engage in exploration for, and the production, distribution, refining and marketing of, fuels.

In clauses 6 and 7 the powers of the corporation are set forth, and I notice that the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) was expressing some horror about the sweeping nature of these powers. I want to say that so far as the members of this party are concerned, we think that the powers set forth in clauses 6 and 7 are absolutely necessary if Petro-Canada is to play an effective role in an economic area which has too long been occupied and dominated by the multi-national giants.

The powers conferred on the corporation are wide powers and I think they would gladden the heart of any advocate of public ownership, but even if these powers are used, and even if Petro-Canada becomes a very powerful force in the oil industry of this country, it will still be a pigmy compared with the members of the world's oil cartel.

Petro-Canada, under this legislation, will have 100 common shares at a par value of $5 million each, to be held by the Government of Canada. The corporation will have authority to borrow up to $1 billion, subject to cabinet approval. It will have authority to set up subsidiaries to carry out economic activities provided they are related to the objectives for which Petro-Canada is being established by parliament.

I want to make it perfectly clear that we in the NDP not only do not object but we welcome the wide powers and the financial investments which are authorized by the passage of this legislation. It should be remembered that the people of Canada have paid billions of dollars to enlarge and enrich foreign oil companies, and only now, belatedly, are we setting up an economic vehicle to develop our petroleum resources for the benefit of Canadians.

There are some changes that we hope might be made when the bill is before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and I will not take time to elaborate on them here except to say that one of the matters which I think should be considered by the committee and the House is a defect which we think represents a lack of adequate parliamentary control over the financial operations of the proposed corporation. I think the legislation should at least require that the annual report of this corporation and the appropriation for it should be reviewed each year by a standing committee, and that the report of that committee should be dealt with in the House before the House recesses.

Personally I am appalled at the extent to which Crown corporations and government agencies operate with only a token control by parliament. We do not think for a moment that parliament can interfere on a daily basis with the operation of a Crown corporation, but neither do we think that parliament should be asked to launch a corporation that is not responsible to the people through their elected representatives. After all, it is the people who pay the shot and it is supposedly for their benefit that the corporation is being established.

I want to turn now to ask the House to give some thought to the question of the role of Petro-Canada. As I have said, we welcome the legislation and we agree with the powers and the financial capacity which this legislation will give to Petro-Canada. But this measure can mean a great deal, or it can mean nothing at all.

The words in the bill are very inspiring, but until we hear the music we will not know whether or not we have a song on our hands. I have seen many bills passed with great fanfare, only to turn out to be a terrible disappointment. After all, it is the results that will count and not the words in the bill or the rhetoric in the speech which the minister made today. I must say, on the basis of past performance in some of the ventures that the government has made into the field of public ownership, that I am not very optimistic.

This House must recognize that passing this bill will mean nothing at all unless Petro-Canada is given a real role in the oil industry of this country. This Crown corporation is an economic tool, and nothing more. It can be used effectively, or it can lie idle and hardly be used at all.

What is the role that the corporation is to play in the oil industry? It has the powers, as set out in the legislation, to assert the Canadian people's sovereignty and to grant them the right to enjoy the benefits of their natural legacy. But will these powers be used effectively and, if so, how will they be used? In the final analysis we cannot determine the role of Petro-Canada until the government has decided upon a clear and definitive national oil policy.

What is the thrust of the government's program for developing oil resources? Will we continue to leave control in the hands of the multinational corporations? Considering the Syncrude arrangement, I gather that we will. Are the Canadian people in the future to have oil prices determined by the OPEC countries which set the international price? Judging by the agreement with Syncrude that would seem to be the case because the government is assuring the companies in Syncrude that they will get the international price. The international price on which they base their financial estimated returns is $13.45 a barrel in 1978, $15 a barrel in 1984, and running up to $35 a barrel at the end of the project. What makes me skeptical is that my experience over a number of years shows that the Liberal party has never had the courage to grasp the nettle and face up to its responsibility for public intervention in the economy.

Mr. Gillies: They have done too much.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Liberal party has always tried to be on both sides, so that we end up with two railroads, two airlines, and two broadcasting systems. When we go into oil development we take 45 per cent of Panarctic and 50 per cent of Syncrude.

If the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) will wait, I will refer in a few minutes to one kind of oil company which will really be doing something and not merely going through the motions. My fear is that if the government follows in the future the policies it has in the past, Petro-Canada will be nothing more than a sophisticated method of subsidizing the oil industry by joint-ventures, by taking over projects the private sector does not want to take over, and by drilling in areas the private sector thinks are too risky or too difficult. Petro-Canada will be nothing more than a means of subsidy. This, of course, has already been done with the Syncrude agreement, and in the agreement the government will be entering into with Interprovincial Pipeline.

What is Petro-Canada going to do? The minister's words were—I cannot quote him accurately, but he can correct me if I am wrong—that the work will be mainly exploratory work in areas which are too distant for the private sector. Will the role of Petro-Canada be to drill in the Arctic, up in the Beaufort Sea, and out in the icebound areas of Canada where no one else wants to go? The major promising geological formations have already been leased, both in the Arctic and in the southern part of Canada, by the major oil companies, so what is Petro-Canada going to do? Will it simply be a bird dog for the private sector? Will it go out looking for oil in unpromising, costly and discouraging areas, and if it finds something then turn it over to the private sector?

An hon. Member: It will be a haven for old Liberal politicians.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They will all be in jail.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member for Don Valley when he spoke suggested that if the government really wants to get into the oil business it could take a larger share of Panarctic instead of the 45 per cent it has now. That is part of the same mental attitude, that if the government is going to get into the oil business, then for God's sake it should go to some part of Canada where it is less likely to get oil, where it will be more costly to get oil, where less profit will be made, and the profitable areas should be left to the private sector which has already milked those areas and the people of Canada to the very limit.

What will be the role of Petro-Canada? Does the government really mean to use this economic tool, which is a good tool? If so, I congratulate the minister and those responsible for drafting it. What is the government going to do with Petro-Canada? Will it be an effective means of assuring the Canadian people a surety of supply of oil at reasonable prices? Or is it simply a charade to soothe the public indignation which is felt all across this country against the major oil corporations that have been gypping the public for decades?

If the government is really serious about setting up this Crown corporation, the minister should tell us and define clearly for us what its role will be, and outline for us the scenario within which it will perform some useful function.

I suggest to the House, and to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), that Petro-Canada can be a very useful economic instrument. It can be used to break the economic stranglehold of the foreign oil cartel which, as the minister said this afternoon, controls over 90 per cent of our oil production, and some 99 per cent of our oil refining. This international oligarchy has squandered our Canadian resources, fleeced the Canadian public, and now it stands ready to hold the government and the people of Canada to ransom to compel us to accept its terms in order to get the economic development we need to meet our oil and gas needs.

I respect the hon. member for Don Valley as a member of parliament, and I respect his right to have his own views. He said—and he can correct me if I am not quoting him accurately—that this bill represents a lack of confidence in the private sector. I agree with that statement. I think most Canadians have lost confidence in the private sector with regard to the oil and gas industry in this country.

The poll taken last year proved conclusively that the bulk of the Canadian people feel that the foreign controlled multinational corporations have fleeced them. They have shipped 50 per cent to 60 per cent of our oil and gas out of the country at low prices. They have brought us to the point where today we face dwindling resources and the possibility of being unable to meet our needs, and they have now put the gun to our heads and said that we must come across on their terms or they will not help us out of the mess in which we find ourselves. If Petro-Canada is going to have an effective role in meeting this situation, this will not be done by giving it some peripheral role up in the Arctic, or in a joint venture in which it has 10 per cent or 15 per cent or 25 per cent equity.

There are at least two things which Petro-Canada must do if it is not going to be merely a farce and a charade. First of all Petro-Canada should take over one of the major oil companies and operate it. That is the only way it is going to get into the promising oil bearing formations. It is the only way it is going to get refining facilities. The company which would be most logical is Imperial Oil, which has had generous leases given to it in the Arctic and the southern part of Canada by this and other governments. It has the refineries, and it controls interprovincial pipelines which could transport the oil.

If the government is really serious it should get Petro-Canada to take over one of the major oil companies and give the oil industry some competition. It could guarantee to the Canadian people that there would be oil produced and distributed in this country on the basis of the well-being of Canada, and not on the basis of making profits for Exxon or any of the large multinational giants.

Instead of taking over a large company the government keeps on subsidizing. We subsidize Imperial, Gulf and Cities Service by tax concessions and guaranteeing them an international oil price, and by putting up part of the equity capital. We subsidize the Interprovincial Oil Pipeline Company by guaranteeing it against loss if it builds a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal.

The country is getting a little fed up with these entrepreneurs who read us lectures about "standing on your own feet", "no government intervention", "no government subsidies", "welfare bums", and "unemployment rip-off" in the unemployment insurance plan, but the moment there is an election in the offing they are the first people to the trough wanting subsidies, tax concessions, protective tariffs, quotas—

Mr. Gillies: They should not get it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But they do get it, and have got it from successive governments, decade after decade. If the private enterprise sector of the economy is anxious to develop the oil and gas resources of this country, then the people in it should not be asking for the concessions they get. If they are not prepared to do it they should get out of the way and let the people of Canada do it for themselves. That is why I say that if Petro-Canada is going to have any effect at all, if it is going to change the picture in Canada with respect to the discovery, development, refining and distribution of oil and natural gas, it has got to nationalize one of the major companies.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

After listening to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) asking the government to nationalize the dredging industry in Canada I can say that maybe the Conservative Party would not think it is such a terrible thing to talk about nationalizing the oil industry.

The second thing which I think Petro-Canada must do, if it is going to be of value to the Canadian people, is become the sole importer of oil in this country. There is no reason at all why it cannot be the sole purchaser of oil. It would, of course, have to distribute it through the channels which at the present time are in the hands of private companies, but the oil should be imported through a Crown corporation.

The tragedy is when the government, in the interests of the people of Canada, tries to help the people and calls upon the private sector to co-operate in doing so, and the private sector rips them off. There is a very good example of that in this morning's newspaper, and it has been apparent to many of us for weeks. Ever since the government initiated the compensation payments program the major oil companies have been shifting their purchases from Venezuela, which was one of the best sources of supply over to Middle Eastern countries. They can get $1.30 more per barrel by taking oil from the Middle East rather than Venezuela.

An hon. Member: Another example of government incompetence.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is another example of the greed of the oil industry.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): It is commonsense.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): To rip off the Treasury of Canada to the tune of $1.30 a barrel on millions of barrels of oil is commonsense? If that is commonsense, then God help us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not "cents"—it is dollars.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is a deplorable attitude. For the oil industry which has had the benefit of these compensation payments to use the loophole of switching its purchases from Venezuela, which has been a good supplier and co-operated with us all through the embargo, over to the Middle Eastern countries for the sake of $1.30 a barrel, is deplorable. We import 800,000 or 900,000 barrels per day, and some 60 per cent of it comes from the Middle East. In my opinion this is reprehensible.

It is interesting that according to this morning's Globe and Mail officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources admitted:

> ... that the facts as provided by the Energy Supplies Allocations Board, which runs the compensation program, do seem to suggest that not only have some oil companies discovered a profitable loophole in the program, but that they seem increasingly to be taking advantage of it.

The minister has the tool at his hand when we pass this bill. The compensation payments program was designed to see that those who live east of the Ottawa Valley get crude oil at a price uniform with the rest of Canada, and it was a good program. But if the companies are going to take advantage of it to rip off the federal Treasury then the time has come for the minister to say that oil will now be imported not by the private sector of the oil industry but through Petro-Canada.

As the minister said this afternoon, nearly all the oil-producing countries have nationalized their oil industries . . . in the Middle East and in Africa. I notice that the Prime Minister of Venezuela has notified his parliament that legislation will be introduced within a week or two to nationalize the oil industry in that country. In most of these countries, particularly Iran, Venezuela and Saudi Arabia, they have said publicly that they would prefer to deal on a state to state trading basis. Actually, the Shah of Iran went so far as to say a short time ago that he was prepared to reduce the price of crude oil sold by Iran, on a state to state basis. He will not do this for multinational oil companies because he knows they will stick the difference in their pockets and not pass it on to consumers. But he said he was prepared to reduce the price of oil sold to state trading corporations. Brazil has set up a state trading corporation which is to purchase oil and enter into country to country trading agreements. There is no reason why Canada cannot do it too.

The minister now has the opportunity to establish the Petro-Canada Crown corporation as an oil marketing agency which will handle imported oil, so that we could on the one hand make sure that the compensation payments we are presently making are not part of a rip-off and, on the other hand, make the best possible deals with oil producing countries which are prepared to sell oil on a government to government basis.

Let me close by saying that the situation in this country is far too serious for us to be satisfied with timid measures which are neither fish, fowl nor good red herring. This country faces an energy crisis which, over the next ten or 15 years, can be extremely serious for the people of Canada. I think the crisis can be met successfully, although not easily. But we will not meet it with a Crown corporation which will be stuck up in the Arctic or used merely as a showpiece, to indicate that the government is making the proper genuflections in the direction of public ownership.

If we are to meet this crisis, there must be fundamental changes in the oil industry in Canada. The oil industry in Canada must be restructured. That can only be done if the government is prepared to act boldly, if it is prepared to break the oil cartel which has bled this country almost white, and if it is prepared to step in courageously and follow the trend which is becoming apparent all over the world, the trend which is making the production and distribution of fossil fuels the concern of a public utility.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, I was looking through Bill C-8 and I saw that the government wanted to set up a corporation at a cost of $500 millions. I looked into my pocket to check whether I could buy a few shares of that corporation, but when I read a little further the recommendations of His Excellency the Administrator of Canada, I saw that the shares were $5 millions each. I quickly withdrew my hand out of my pocket and I read further again in the bill to discover what benefits Canada would gain from the establishment of that corporation, which would be called Petro-Canada.

Mr. Speaker, after hearing the previous speakers, members will have understood that this House has before it a bill introduced by the hon. minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). Their speeches have a strong smell of socialist government.

I was surprised to see the reluctance of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) towards this bill. It seems that in his opinion, this bill is not quite totalitarian enough.

Mr. Speaker, the thinking underlying this bill is illustrated by the way all the clauses are printed: they are on the left page and this bill is also a leftist bill.

This bill also provides for the potential transfer of the shares of Panarctic Oils limited. The purpose of this bill is to control every oil-related aspect in Canada: research, exploration, production, import and distribution in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is like giving a blank cheque to a corporation of 15 people who will control this energy source which, even if it is depleting, is still important for some years to come.

In this bill, I have been surprised that I did not find, as would have been the case if the government had wanted to be sincere, other energy sources the Corporation could research on. It is as if oil were the only energy source which could be found in Canada's underground. We are aware of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that we have already succeeded in developing nuclear energy sources in Canada. We have not done much in the area of solar energy but we know that in the nineteenth century already, fairly conclusive research has been carried out in Europe. This developement was not continued, and I do not know why. But now that the main source of energy in the world is drying up I think we must look elsewhere.

We were given a report at the time of the famous oil crisis in the autumn of 1973. Newspapers carried out research and determined that at that time, in 1972, known conventional oil reserves in Canada were about eight billion barrels. Considering the projected increase in consumption, Canada's need could be met for 11 and a half years.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a recent report showed the accuracy of the previous one. We are also told that non-conventional reserves, that is tar sands, were estimated at between 300 and 770 billion barrels but that it would cost between $20 billion and $30 billion to develop those reserves. That is how things stand.

Mr. Speaker, known oil reserves are not limited only to Canada, and are not depleting only in Canada.

In 1972, known reserves in the United States were good for about ten years which represents world reserves of 5 per cent. Venezuela was good for only 11 years. Indonesia had enough left for only 13 years. It is in Algeria that known reserves are the largest. World reserve is 7 per cent, and world production only 2 per cent, while Algeria's reserves in 1972 was good for 120 years. As to Koweit and Lybia their reserves were good for 35 years. For the USSR it is 26 years, 54 years for Saudi Arabia, and 66 years for Iraq. Altogether, known world reserves were 664.5 billion barrels based on production in 1974. That reserve would last only 36 years.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the proposed investment is really justifiable. Will the exploration required from that corporation go over the same ground where private corporations carried out theirs? If those private companies found nothing, what is the point in returning to look in the same places?

If companies such as Imperial Oil Limited, Texaco Canada Limited, Shell Canada Limited, BP Oil Limited or others have found considerable reserves and have not revealed their content because they are keeping them for later, I think it is the responsibility of the government to find a way to compel them to divulge the results of their research.

That corporation will be composed of 15 members. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) will not have to write every Liberal member to get suggestions from good Liberals as to who should be appointed head of that corporation.

I suppose he has already thought of some people to manage that new corporation. Yet, Mr. Speaker, in view of the experience of other Crown corporations, we may be allowed to entertain some doubts. Managing a public corporation and managing a private one is quite different. In a private corporation, be it of a large, average or small size, one is accountable to someone; private investments are managed and must be managed wisely so as to grow or one's job is at stake. It is not the same in a public undertaking like a Crown corporation. Even if one is steering a wrong course, even if questionable experiments are made bringing no return, there are no penalties. It is public funds which are spent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have seen the same thing happening in other Crown corporations and this is the reason why I entertain some doubts about the outcome of this one. I cannot therefore support the government in the establishment of such a corporation. I have doubts about the results in the first place. Private companies looked after oil exploration and development, they provided Canada with reserves. I believe they did their best. They may have gone too far, because they are not exempt from wrongdoings. But that is something for the government to regulate.

For the benefit of Canadians, Mr. Speaker, if new discoveries are aimed at, we have had experience, in the province of Quebec with a Crown corporation named SOQUIP. It is affiliated with private companies. Until now the results are not so great. Nothing much has been accomplished, although it has been in existence for some years. I believe a federal corporation will not live up to expectations, other than giving jobs to a select group of public servants, and spending the taxpayer's money. The $500 million will have to be borrowed, because we always have a deficit budget. Therefore, money will have to be borrowed to accomplish what has not been done by private enterprise.

At the committee stage, where the details of the bill will be scrutinized, we will have the privilege of questioning people with expertise in this field. We will have an opportunity to obtain more information on every aspect of the bill. We will then be in a position to have a clearer picture of results that may be expected from this kind of corporation.

Therefore, I am not ready at this stage to support the bill. I would however approve its referral to committee, but I have serious doubts that the aims can be achieved. In a democratic type of society such as we enjoy in Canada, I find it amazing that we are constantly endeavoring to administer the socialist way.

[English]

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into the debate on the merits, or otherwise, of passing an abling legislation to permit the federal government to create yet another bureaucratic monster, for which the long-suffering Canadian taxpayer will pick up the tab, in the form of a national petroleum corporation, otherwise to be known as Petro-Canada.

It is quite clear and obvious from a perusal of clause 3 that the purpose of the bill is to establish a Crown owned petroleum company within the petroleum industry of Canada. Under the act, Petro-Canada, as the company is referred to in the bill, will be given the authority to explore, develop and exploit hydrocarbon deposits within and without Canada, carry out research and development projects related to hydrocarbons and other fuels, engage in distribution, production and refining and marketing of fuels and, finally, negotiate for and acquire petroleum products necessary to maintain Canadian supplies from abroad—in short, Mr. Speaker, a fully integrated petroleum corporation.

Its authorized capital is to be $500 million, and the legislation bestows upon the corporation those ancillary powers normally associated with commercial entities operating in the private sector, including wide borrowing powers.

In addition, by clause 22 of the statute, Petro-Canada is given what amounts to a blank cheque in the form of virtually unlimited ability to receive advances out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, either by way of loan, or by way of purchase by the consolidated revenue fund of preferred redeemable shares of the company, and the authorized capital of the corporation shall be automatically deemed to be increased by the amount of any preferred shares issued pursuant to such an arrangement.

Before undertaking a more detailed cost-benefit analysis of the bill before us, may I make the general observation that I consider it an unfortunate practice by government to frame legislation in terms far wider than are required to achieve a stated policy object, whether on the grounds of future convenience or otherwise.

A drafting approach appropriate to the private sector, when one normally drafts object powers for incorporation purposes in as broad terms as possible, is not, I suggest, appropriate to public business, particularly where to do so in this case might have the effect of inducing this House to forbear from in-depth consideration of all possible implications of what is before it through reliance on statements by the minister that, notwithstanding the form of the statute, the intention is not to engage in certain activities but rather to limit the Crown company to the business of tar sand development, frontier exploration, off-shore purchases, and research and development into alternative energy supplies.

The purpose and authority of the proposed company should be specified and frankly disclosed on the principle that if in the future it should be considered desirable as a matter of public policy to widen the scope of the proposed company's undertaking, the minister could then return to parliament with fresh legislative proposals and advance these on their own merits in the light of conditions and circumstances that may at that point in time apply.

Unlike some of my colleagues, whose views I nevertheless respect, I have no particular prejudice against government involvement in commercial activity when logic and circumstance indicate such involvement to be appropriate and in the public interest. Power utilities, telephone utilities, the Bank of Canada, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—all these are examples of such activity by provincial and federal governments.

However, I do suggest there should be criteria by which the need for and desirability of such government activity and involvement are judged, and such criteria would surely include the following test—has the private sector failed to meet a demonstrable social or economic need in connection with the commercial activity which the government proposes to enter? In the case of the domestic petroleum industry I submit to the minister that he has totally failed to meet this fundamental test.

On the contrary, in the 20-odd years since the Leduc and the Redwater discoveries in Alberta the domestic petroleum industry has developed from a relatively insignificant state into what could be characterized as a mature, aggressive, innovative and confident industry, willing and capable of undertaking the high-risk, difficult task of providing for Canada and Canadians self-sufficiency in petroleum and natural gas supplies for the decades ahead and, incidentally, employing directly hundreds of thousands of Canadians in both western and eastern Canada. That, at any rate, was the situation a little more than one year ago.

There are those, Mr. Speaker, who favour state ownership and control for its own sake and who would welcome creation of a national petroleum corporation regardless of considerations of cost and practicality. There are others who view state ownership of commercial entities as unacceptable per se and reject such a concept regardless of any benefits which might be forthcoming. For most Canadians, however, government involvement in the private sector is neither panacea nor Pandora's box. Most Canadians, I suspect, would wish to have each case examined on its merits. For this majority the judgment for or against the merits of establishing a national petroleum corporation will depend on the particular benefits that such an institution can offer, weighed against the costs which would inevitably accompany such a huge undertaking.

In considering this question it is important to bear in mind that longstanding, in-depth government involvement and participation in Canada's energy industry is a scarcely questioned fact of life. Control of the oil and gas sectors, the sectors most relevant to our discussion, is exercised by both federal and provincial authorities.

Conservation boards in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia control the levels of production of oil and gas in their respective provinces and pro-ration such production among the various producing companies.

At the federal level the National Energy Board is charged with the responsibility of ensuring the best use of Canada's energy resources. It regulates the construction and operation of inter-provincial oil and gas pipelines, and the import and export of oil and gas. It exercises jurisdiction and control over mineral lands situate beyond provincial boundaries in the Mackenzie Delta, the high Arctic and the east coast offshore, and makes use of other means of influencing the energy industry through fiscal and taxation measures and moral suasion.

It is evident then that government involvement in the oil and gas industry is not lacking. The question before us, therefore, is not whether to permit government participation in the industry but whether even further participation is warranted.

What can a national petroleum corporation be reasonably expected to contribute to the government's arsenal of existing weapons of control, and to the Canadian economy? What additional problems and costs might it create? Obviously a decision as to the creation of a national petroleum corporation should depend on the weights of the arguments pro and con. The respective weights, however, cannot always be objectively determined. In many cases they are entirely the product of subjective evaluations, and consequently are not quantifiable at all. It is therefore quite possible for individuals to agree on the facts while disagreeing on the preferred policy option. To the extent, however, that one's preference is based on factual considerations, it is important that the facts be accurate.

In the current controversy over the establishment of a national petroleum corporation, enough fanciful powers have already been ascribed to such a corporation to warrant a warning as to what it cannot do.

A national petroleum corporation cannot ensure an adequate supply of energy. If future Canadian needs are to be met from Canadian sources, policies beyond a national petroleum corporation will be required to ensure that domestic priorities are met first. If domestic sources of oil run dry, a national petroleum corporation will be unable to protect Canada from oil shortages, just as European state companies have been unable to protect their respective home countries. It cannot ensure a desirable rate of resource development. If the actual rate diverges from the desirable one, policies beyond the establishment of a national petroleum corporation will be required to induce companies to either speed up or slow down their exploration and development activities.

It cannot ensure low energy prices for Canadians. Provincial electric power corporations have been unable to keep power rates down, even with 100 per cent ownership of the industry. A national petroleum company will not even be able to institute a two-price system shielding Canadians from world energy price pressures. If continuation of such a system is desirable, government policies beyond the establishment of a national petroleum corporation will be necessary.

Finally, a national petroleum corporation, unless it makes up the major part of the petroleum industry, cannot equalize oil prices in all regions of Canada.

In short, there are few tangible policy objectives which a national petroleum corporation could achieve in the absence of support from additional government policies, and few tangible policy objectives which could not be obtained without establishing a national petroleum corporation.

What arguments can be advanced against the creation of a national petroleum corporation? First, I suggest it cannot be demonstrated that such a company would provide Canadians with either more oil or cheaper oil than will be provided by the existing private industry. Second, it is estimated that the cost to Canadian taxpayers of creating a national petroleum corporation which would be a significant force in the industry would amount to between $3 billion and $6 billion, and that the task would take from 15 to 20 years to accomplish, even assuming a high degree of exploration success. Such an assumption cannot be made in absolute terms. Moreover I would point out that, within the 15 to 20 year time frame I have mentioned, alternative energy systems will likely emerge, and in the result Canadian taxpayers may well have created an obsolete industrial entity.

The federal government, through its participation in Panarctic, its ownership of frontier reserves, and its fiscal jurisdiction, already possesses the capacity to ensure adequate participation for all Canadians in the possible economic benefits to be created by the petroleum industry without putting at risk the hard-earned tax dollars of Canadian citizens in massive amounts.

Finally, in a period of our economic history when Canada is experiencing a horrendous rate of inflation, it is singularly inappropriate for its government to pre-occupy itself in an empire-building oil exploration venture which will exacerbate rather than modify the inflationary pressures at work in our economy, and will render more scarce already scarce materials, personnel and hardware which would otherwise be deployed by the private sector.

Let me make this clear, Mr. Speaker—our party supports the government's initiative in Syncrude. Indeed, that initiative meets squarely the criterion referred to earlier in my remarks, namely, that the private sector was clearly unable to meet a demonstrable economic need in the tar sands development project. Without the initiatives taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) on behalf of the Government of Canada and, as well, by the governments of Alberta and Ontario, Syncrude would have floundered, and Canada's ability to utilize on a long term basis what really constitutes our energy ace-in-the-hole would have been jeopardized—a risk we simply could not undertake.

I have no problem either with respect to Petro-Canada assuming ownership of the government's interest in Panarctic, nor with it assuming responsibility for acquiring offshore gas or oil. If amendments to the bill were introduced limiting its scope to these activities, namely, tar sand development, Panarctic, offshore crude purchases, and research and development into alternative energy sources, they would enable easy passage at second reading of the bill so far as this party is concerned. However, so long as the bill remains in its present form, enabling the minister and the government to embark on a high risk entrepreneurial adventure bankrolled by the taxpayers of Canada, we of the Conservative party will remain opposed to its passage.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, Bill C-8 is a reintroduction into the House of the old bill C-32. By a queer coincidence bill C-32 was moved in the last parliament just a few days before the government knew it was going down to defeat on the budget of May 6. It was introduced on May 2.

To put the position into perspective, it will be recalled that at that time the government in power was engaged upon a political exercise to try to divide Canadians as between west and east. The government in power at that time wanted a villain; it wanted the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan to be painted in the minds of the people of Ontario and Quebec as the blue eyed Arabs of this country. That was the fundamental political pressure that brought that bill into the House on May 2, 1974, and it was nothing less than pure political posturing.

As the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) has just pointed out, the government knew that the bill would not produce one extra barrel of oil in the next 20 years, and certainly there was no indication that the oil would be produced more cheaply. It was, as I say, political posturing, and I think this bill has been seen in the same light.

It has always been the tradition of the Conservative party to act in the interests of Canada as a nation. If the record of all political parties in Canada were placed on a chart showing which party had moved into the field of enterprise, or business if you like, the Conservative party would rank first. This does not mean that we happen to support the nationalization of industry or that the government should be moving into the field of private enterprise as a matter of philosophy. We take this stand primarily because our country comes first, and if something is not being met by private enterprise, which is supposed to be the dominating philosophy in the western world, and action is needed, then we will provide that action through government effort. So there is no question of principle at stake in this debate. What we as Conservatives have to do is to examine what is best for our country.

The question must be asked, is Petro-Can in the best interests of our country at this particular moment in time? I do not think any person would seriously argue that it is not going to take 15 to 20 years to get the corporation to the level of efficiency that it will produce oil. I know how long the lead time is when one moves into this very expensive and dangerous type of enterprise. Certainly the corporation will not produce oil more cheaply. It is really a question of keeping up with the Joneses; because other countries have some form of national enterprise in the petroleum industry, therefore Canada should have something similar. That is the essence of the question.

I should like to put forward a better alternative for Canada. In the closing part of my remarks I think I will be able to make it clear that this is not an idea that has just been produced over the last two or three years. It is a lifelong ambition of mine, knowing full well that if it is achieved in the way I see it, the potential for Canadians as individuals is beyond measure.

Canada is one of half a dozen nations in the world that, for the next 100 years or so, will have surplus resources. The opportunity that this gives us must not be lost by the fumbling or posturing of politically oriented government. So far as political orientation is concerned, I suggest that the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan are not the enemies of Canada. As I have pointed out in this House before, every Canadian must realize, if he is morally just, that when the people of those two provinces, through their governments, voluntarily subsidize the consumers of oil in Canada to the tune of almost $3 billion a year as part of their contribution to national strength and unity, they are obviously not the enemies of the people of Canada. But this political issue has disappeared. The issue now is how to take the best course of action to bring to the people of Canada the opportunities our resources give them at a time when the world needs our resources so desperately.

I think the simplest, easiest and best alternative is to let Canadians as individuals own this country. If the government threw away as unworkable, immoral and wrong, the silly budget that we have just passed, and brought in a new budget providing a tax incentive to Canadians as individuals to increase their ownership of the five major companies that control the oil industry in Canada, this could be done within three years. Then Canadians as individuals would own the majority of the shares in the five major international oil companies that presently control our oil resources.

The following figures are based on tabulations that were made about a year ago, but their parameters are still valid. At the present time the total value on the marketplace of the five major oil companies that control the bulk of our oil and gas resources is about $9 billion. Individual Canadians, who through institutions have invested in these oil companies, own about 30 per cent, roughly one-third, of this $9 billion worth of capital assets. If we gave them an inducement of $500 a year, say, how long would it take the Canadian work force to get control of another one-third of these five major companies?

At the present time the government offers inducements under the Income Tax Act to people who want to look after themselves in their old age; they are permitted to invest up to $2,500 in a registered retirement savings plan, or up to $4,000 if they are self-employed. When the figures are published in another year or so for the year 1974-75—people had till the end of February to apply for this plan—they will indicate that almost 45 per cent of the Canadian work force is taking advantage of this inducement to invest in a registered retirement savings plan.

● (1720)

People know these registered retirement savings plans give them a very moderate return in interest on their investment, but because they have this incentive of reducing income tax by this device, over 40 per cent of our Canadian working force is putting money into this type of savings.

Let us assume that just 20 per cent wanted to put their money into the ownership of these large oil companies at $500 a year. It would then take about three years before Canadians, as individuals, would own the majority of the shares of these five major oil companies.

It is so easy to get control of this oil industry, if we get the majority of shares into the hands of individuals, to me it has been a matter of shock and concern that no finance minister in my day has ever made this move. Every move we have had on the part of our tax collectors, at least in my day, which goes back a few years, has been in the direction of doing things that turn the ownership of our resources over to people outside the country.

The Canadian working man wants to have a stake in the future, and I include farmers, clerks and everybody else in that designation. They want the opportunity to share in the profits that will occur.

The oil companies calculate that it will be necessary in Canada over the next 25 years to invest $250 billion in the development of our oil and gas reserves and appurtenances. That is an investment rate of $10 billion a year. Let us look at this now as an inducement to those Canadians who want to own Canada as individuals. If the bulk of this investment comes from these five companies, and if the working man is given an inducement to own these companies, then as a result of the investment of that $250 billion some will end up as assets, and by the end of the century, 25 years from now, that $250 billion investment may well make these companies worth about $100 billion or $150 billion on the market. Where can a working man find an investment today in which he can put $500 a year, saving income tax on it, knowing that down the road when he wants to retire he is not tied to a fixed income type of thing, but rather tied to something that is growing with the country?

I should think we would have no trouble in getting 20 per cent of the working force in this country to take advantage of that opportunity. I should think the rush would exceed the rush into registered retirement savings investments. Once we got finished buying out the oil companies why should we not move into all resource companies, one after the other? We would not be leading the working man into a blind alley. This is a risk investment, sure, but the law of averages is with us, and the wealth that will come from this type of development would be in the hands of Canadians as individuals.

If we start a Petro-Canada company it will take 10, 15 or 20 years to build it up. With all the knowledge you can get from science and modern technology such a company will not find oil unless there is one ingredient, and I will not shock your ears, Madam Speaker, by telling you the vulgar word for that in the oil industry, but that one ingredient is luck. They have a different word for it. In other words, the brainiest men you can hire to look for oil, with all the information they can obtain, with the basic fundamental knowledge of geology, and all the information you can get from geophysical gimmicks, will not discover oil until somebody with a God given insight figures out where to punch the hole.

Canada was absolutely helpless in so far as the supply of oil and gas was concerned in 1946. All the big companies that were here in the 1930's got out of Canada in the war years after spending millions of dollars without any luck. We still had to import our oil at that time. One of the last companies to remain was a small subsidiary of an American company called Exxon, or as it was known at that time, Jersey Standard. It had a small subsidiary in Canada called Imperial. After looking at all the tough luck they had during the previous period of 25 years or so, the directors decided they would drill one last well, backing their geologists in one more effort.

One very low level man kept on telling them they were looking for the wrong type of structure. With his knowledge of the formation of the earth's surface on the prairies he told them they should be looking for reef fields. The men drilling that last well on that last desperate gamble at Le Duc pulled out the pipe after going through that reef, and that was the big Le Duc find. From that point on we have found reef fields all over Alberta and in a few places in Saskatchewan. That man is dead today. He had the God given insight to put his finger on something that in retrospect was obvious, yet with all the high-priced help the oil companies had they were not able to figure it out.

There always has to be that person with the insight in each area of the world, so what guarantee has any company that it can get that man in its employ? You never know who he is, because he looks the same as every other human being. One of the reasons we have had doubtful success in the Mackenzie River basin and on the fringe of the Beaufort Sea is that the three top men in Canadian oil development are no longer available. We are relying on the law of averages to find oil and gas. What we need is an individual with God-given inspiration, and what guarantee is there that Petro-Can will find that man? This whole thing depends on a matter of luck, backed up by tremendous resources and all the knowledge you have collected in respect of exploration.

The point I am making is that we cannot say we oppose Petro-Can in principle. All we are saying is that it will involve a tremendous draw on the people's money in order to set up this huge corporation which, in ordinary logic, has no chance of success for 15 or 20 years. Why should we go to all this trouble when we have in place international oil companies which are out looking for oil? These companies are not our enemies in this regard.

We have been lax as Canadians in not looking after our own interests. What we want is the full benefit of our resources, and this involves not only laws to control these corporations that operate in our country, but the ownership of the shares so that we can take the profits. I would suggest, as a very simple and fundamental alternative, that we should change our income tax regulations to allow individuals to claim exemption from tax on an investment of $500, $750 or $1,000 a year provided it is invested in the purchase of the stocks or shares of these big oil companies, to start with, and then of all the other resource companies we want to own. I think that this is a simple alternative for Canada, and a better one.

● (1730)

Just to demonstrate that I am not talking simply as an individual, I will quote the first seven points of a program published last March, a year ago, as the Progressive Conservative policy entitled "Resources for Canadians". It reads:

1. Canada in 1974 urgently requires a comprehensive resources policy.

That we do not have.

2. The Progressive Conservative party in government initiated the northern development policy to open up our resource areas for exploration, set up the National Energy Board to give control and ownership of the transportation of oil, gas and electricity to Canadians, originated the oil and gas regulations in federal lands to protect the Canadian future, and worked with the provinces on hydro power development and transmission.

3. As a result Canada derived great benefits, particularly in terms of non-renewable energy resources. What is needed now is a clear-cut statement of policy by the federal government and the provinces in order that industry and the public can proceed in proper priority to undertake the actions required for Canadians to take full advantage of their resources in the national interest. These future projects have a great potential for Canada not only in material wealth, but in adding to the quality of life of all Canadians in all parts of the country. In short, an imaginative resource policy properly carried out is the main foundation of our development strategy and our life-style for centuries to come.

4. To maximize the benefit to Canadians the Progressive Conservative party believes that as a cornerstone of such a policy for the 1970's and the 1980's Canadians must dedicate themselves to acquiring and holding ownership of more than 50 per cent of the non-renewable resource industries in Canada.

That is what I proposed a few minutes ago.

It goes on to read:

5. A Progressive Conservative government would take the lead in this direction through the establishment of a Resources Canada program. In conjunction with overall national development strategy the Resources Canada program would be directed to this objective. A Progressive Conservative government would negotiate realistic arrangements for the phased marketing of foreign-held shares to accomplish the objective in an orderly fashion.

6. It would also be the aim of a Progressive Conservative government to see such acquired Canadian ownership widely held and steps would be taken to encourage and facilitate opportunities for the average Canadian to participate. Such steps would include appropriate investment incentives for Canadians of modest means.

7. We propose an overhaul of the federal Income Tax Act to provide a "Canadian-firts" policy with respect to resource development.

Those are just seven points out of 22, but they state in an orderly fashion what I have been trying to propose as a better alternative.

The arguments for a Petro-Canada national corporation are only two in number, as I see it. One is that we need some organization in Canada to deal directly with the organizations that exist in other countries. It has been clear for many years that Venezuela, for example, wants to deal with Crown corporations or agencies rather than with big international oil companies. The people of Venezuela have been asking themselves how they can get national sovereign control over their wealth, their oil. Their oil was controlled almost completely by large international oil companies. With the surplus oil in the world over the last 50 years, in effect these companies controlled the destiny of Venezuela. Venezuela wants to deal with either a Crown corporation or an agency of Canada, it does not care which.

This type of feeling is expressed by nearly all the oil producing countries. For reasons of nationalism they wish to avoid as much as they can dealing with international oil companies, which they consider to have dominated them over the last 50 years.

I think that the minister could make a very good argument on this score, but when I raised this question in the House a year and half ago and pleaded with the minister to establish some form of national structure, it turned out that there was one in place already. During the war the then minister of trade and commerce, the late C. D. Howe, had set up such a Crown corporation with the purpose of buying oil or the other products that we needed to carry out the war effort. That organization has sat idle for all these years, and we only discovered it at the time of emergency a year and a half ago.

I think that if we simply want this type of structure to deal with other countries, it is already in place. Of course it needs strengthening in terms of its personnel so that they are not babes in the woods in the tricky dealings connected with oil and energy resources. But the fact is that that is the reason for having some form of state structure to deal with other states.

The second argument one would advance—and of which I gather the minister was not aware—is related to the fact that under the oil and gas regulations of 1961—if the minister could persuade his colleagues to restore in particular the regulation dealing with how the value of the soil will be shared—approximately 60 per cent of all the oil and gas found in federal lands outside the provinces reverts to the people of Canada. Therefore one could argue that there must be some institution in place to handle this huge volume of oil and gas. If it is in the form of land to start with, decisions must be made as to whether it should be farmed out or dealings undertaken with the company that is the original finder. We must have some government machinery to handle all these choices.

At present we do not have such an organ of the government trained and able to calculate the value of an oil field that is partially developed. One could argue that we need a skilled group to handle this, but if you do have such a skilled group that is part of Petro-Can, and Petro-Can is simply one of the five or six major competitors in finding and distributing the oil, the other five companies will call foul play. So it is not fair competition if the 50 per cent of 60 per cent goes automatically to one company which has not even found the resource.

I think that this argument is sound in theory, that we must have some institution to handle the 50 per cent or 60 per cent that goes back to the people, and we must handle it in such a way as to prevent criticism that we are giving advantage to Petro-Can over other companies.

I put these two arguments to the minister in the hope that he will look at them, with his officials, and not let us be caught in a position that when a major oil or gas find is made we must make a decision on land choice, and are caught with our pants down. That in the north is a serious problem. You have to keep covered up, but we do not have an institution in place to deal with this. We must have an institution right now whereby, if one company wants to lease, we have the machinery for handling our share of the land which comes back to us, and the interests of Canada are protected. But I suggest that that institution will not and should not be Petro-Canada.

I indicated earlier that I wanted to come back to the question of what is good for Canada. In response to the concern of the United States government about the tremendous utilization of resources to carry on the war effort, 23 years ago a group of Americans under the leadership of a man named Paley issued a five volume report telling the American people, according to a list of strategic resources, including both oil and minerals, that their country would soon be helpless and in a desperate position. The target date they estimated for this was 1980.

This same report indicated to the American people, if they wanted to read it, that the oil regulations set up in the United States, which had grown up like Topsy from the early days in Pennsylvania, were wasteful to the people's interests, and the report recommended that oil regulations be changed to give a larger share of the economic rent from these resources to the people of the United States. Not many Canadians read that report, but some did, and I was one.

When I came to this parliament in 1957 I was asked to be the resource minister. Within days after I took over we put through an order in council throwing out the old oil and gas regulations which, in the days of the previous administration, said that all the oil and minerals found went to the party finding them. Then I went before the industry with new regulations based on how the maximum amount of return could be given to the people who owned these resources, the people of Canada, and yet get the money invested to bring them to public use. The oil and gas regulations which were finally promulgated in 1961 ostensibly are still the oil and gas regulations of Canada.

These regulations eliminated all the front end loading charges which add tremendously to the costs of an oil company. They stipulated to the oil companies that in return for taking off all these charges we wanted them, when they came to the production stage or the lease stage, which is ownership, to agree that approximately 60 per cent of the value of this oil and gas would go to the people of Canada, compared to about the 12½ per cent or 15 per cent the provinces were charging.

The oil companies, after a long debate, accepted that because they found out that if we took off these heavy front end loading charges, even though they received a much smaller percentage of the oil and gas value, that gave them sufficient return in capital to keep them operating. The return estimated to keep them operating was 14 per cent, but the people of Canada, through efforts made in those years between 1957 and 1961, were assured under those regulations of receiving the value of 60 per cent of resources found in federal lands. This, to me, was probably the most I could do for my country. Instead of spending all the money paying interest on charges built up over 15 or 20 years, this money would be paid to the people of Canada so they would enjoy some return on these bountiful resources.

The key regulation dealt with a sharing. In the month of February, 1970, five years ago, the government of the day put this regulation in abeyance, and today none of us know what the government officially has in mind to share these resources. Two years ago this allowed rumours to begin that the government had sold out to the oil companies and would give them all these resources, and all that we were going to take back was 10 per cent. I never supported those rumours because I could not believe any government of any name would do such a terrible thing to the people of Canada. That was 1972. This is now 1975, and they still have not restored that cause. All I can gather is that they cannot make an agreement with Newfoundland, and that therefore the development of our oil and gas in federal lands waits until they solve their dispute with Newfoundland over who owns that oil.

I suggest that if the minister would use his considerable influence, and force his colleagues to a decision on what will be the sharing between the people of Canada and the oil companies, we would have much better results for the people of Canada than we would get by this posturing device of Petro-Can. The minister knows, from remarks I have made in committee and in the House, that with the capital intensive cost not only of the oil and gas industry but of all its related industries, the government will have to change its system of financing.

I would like to put to the minister these proposals I officially made here in the House on January 30. Before I made those proposals I gave a copy of a hypothetical cash flow for an oil sands development to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I suggested he study them. I suggested he take those proposals to the provinces and to private industry and let them study them.

For nearly 25 days in that budget debate we could not get an answer from the minister. Then on the last day he turned down the proposal on the ground that industry was not in the habit of financing this way. If ever I have heard of a reactionary attitude on the part of any responsible minister, that takes the cake. Just because it has not been done before, we cannot do it in the future! He sounded like a bank president. This is what killed our banks; they would not take any new ideas.

I put this to the minister: that if we are going to have development of our oil pools and gas pools in the north and offshore, if we are going to finance these tremendous capital intensive undertakings, he, as the defender of the peoples' rights in all these resources, must take the lead in finding a new way of financing them whereby over half the money or the value of those resources does not have to go to the payment of interest but instead comes back to the people to help pay the costs of government and give us the quality of life we should have.

Just to make certain that it is understood that this is not a one man idea, two weeks ago the United Kingdom accepted this type of proposal. In their North Sea developments the government has told the oil companies that it would charge only 12½ per cent royalty and then give them a 150 per cent immediate writeoff, which means that if the oil companies have invested over $2 billion in an oilfield, they can pay that off in four or five years, and the 150 per cent represents return of capital, return of all interest and pre-production costs.

Then, after this capital is repaid, the government of the United Kingdom representing the people of the United Kingdom steps in and puts on a petroleum revenue tax of 45 per cent which, added to the 12½ per cent, gives them roughly 50 per cent or 55 per cent of the gross returns, almost the same as the figures we put into effect in 1961, where it was roughly 60 per cent. The oil companies will accept that in the North Sea, and they will not suffer because they will get their money back with interest. Afterwards they get an amount which has the effect of giving them 25 per cent on their investment.

Under one of the proposals I made to the Minister of Finance the oil companies would get along with about 19 per cent, but within that range. To say that we are going to have a big Canadian national petroleum company that will be able to buy gas and oil much cheaper, is pure posturing. We should forget about that and think about the needs of the people of Canada. If we do that we must come to the conclusion that they instinctively know that these resources we have had all these years will eventually be needed by the world, and that will be our opportunity. In fact the time is now. As a person who has been interested in this for many years, I am deeply hurt when I see a minister fumbling with something that is so important to Canada.

If the minister wants to do something simple and in the best interests of the Canadian people he should shuffle aside Petro-Canada and ask the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and his other colleagues to give the Canadian people, as individuals, a chance to own this country, starting with the oil industry. That would be better for the Canadian people than Petro-Canada. The arguments that can be advanced to end such an institution can also be advanced for other institutions that are already in place or are going to be put in place.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the continuing change in the basic philosophy of the Liberal government could not be more starkly illustrated than it is in the structure which it is proposed to impose upon Canada in the form of Petro-Canada. The multitude of reasons given in support of the proposition by the minister are really pretty hollow. All the things that he claims could be done with the vehicle of Petro-Canada could be done by a concerned government with the vehicles that are already in place.

I agree that all this has been said before, but I would add that Canadians must recognize the philosophical change in the Liberal Party as illustrated by the present Liberal government. That change, of course, is the belief that no Canadian knows how to handle his own money, his own resources, or maybe even his own family as well as the paternalistic, philosophical group that sits on your right today, Madam Speaker.

As an illustration of this I should like to draw to the attention of the House clause 7(2) of this bill which reads:

The corporation shall comply with any directions from time to time given to it in writing by the Governor in Council or the minister with respect to the exercise of its powers.

In spite of all the freedoms which have been exercised and granted in this bill, the final control reverts to the minister at worst, and to the cabinet at the very best. All the other clauses can only be read with that clause in mind—that the minister or the governor in council may direct, redirect, alter the course, or at any moment in time interfere with the operation of the company.

How much will members of this House ever know about the operation of this company? Like other Crown corporations it has all the means of financing such as those that have been extended to the CNR and Air Canada. It has the opportunity for the government of Canada to buy preference shares through the consolidated revenue fund. It also has virtually unlimited capacity to borrow from foreign sources. When one goes through the whole bag of economic opportunities for this company to borrow either from the state or from the private sector, without reply to the taxpayer and the House of Commons, one finds it has a relatively uncontrollable structure, excepting only clause 7(2) under which the government may change its course at any moment in time.

Petro-Canada

It has been suggested that some Canadian oil companies might need help and that this would be a wonderful vehicle for such assistance. Some local companies have been gobbled up by the large corporations, and I must agree that to some extent this is detrimental to Canada. But I submit, Madam Speaker, that we do not need a Petro-Canada if it is the desire of the government to have Canadian people develop petroleum resources with Canadian money. That could very well have been achieved through a glorified CDC or a magnified IDB, or any other vehicle the government might have put in place. Basically, however, the government chooses to socialize the petroleum industry. That is the intention of this bill and the people of Canada should be aware of it.

We should be concerned about the integrity of this government. When the voluntary controls were removed we were advised that the price of gasoline would not rise in the east, but a few days after controls were removed we were told that a 6 cents, 7 cents, or even a 10 cents increase was anticipated in the Atlantic area. The credibility of the government is negligible, and its intentions are questionable at this time. I see it is six o'clock, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS—OBJECTION TO THEIR BEING MADE ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For a number of years I have placed on the order paper a set of questions having to do with pensions in a number of fields. Because of the general interest in these questions I have designed them so that their answers would appear on the order paper. But every year or so some of these questions are made an order for return, even though the answer is from one department and is not very long. I protest the fact that this was done yesterday with respect to question 1,550 which was made an order for return as noted in Hansard at pages 4028 and 4029. I realize that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) is not able to be here today, but I hope a note of my objection will be made for his successor so that this will not happen again.

Mr. Baldwin: He is going to be there forever.

PRACTICE OF CAHA IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN SIGNING AMATEUR HOCKEY CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This will probably be my last Standing Order 43 motion. As the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is forcing children to sign forms which are, in effect, contracts which prevent them from playing amateur hockey with the team of their choice, as there is an increasing number of cases coming before the courts for settlement of similar disputes, and as this situation is not consistent with the philosophy either of amateur sports or with the right of young people to participate in games in this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare be instructed by this House to intervene in the CAHA and ensure that the CAHA will discontinue immediately the practice of signing children to contracts in amateur hockey which in any way restrict the right of the players to choose the team they will play with.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion is presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MALONE—RIGHT OF ELECTED MEMBERS TO SPEAK FOR THEIR REGIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the fact that after the July 8 election in which the province of Alberta returned only Progressive Conservative members, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took it upon himself to appoint a Senator from the other place to be a spokesman for the province of Alberta. I contend that the right to be represented in this House is one which flows directly from one's voting privileges. It is the people who have the right to say which elected members shall represent them and be their spokesmen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: I am concerned because in recent weeks the member of the other place has made statements which are diametrically opposed to my own. The situation is extremely serious as the member of the other place, who claims he is speaking on behalf of the people of Alberta, says that the province and its politicians are separatist in nature.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the minds of the people of this country must not be marinated in the kind of poison which, under the guise of patriotism, pits region against region. Certainly, my effort, as a member of this House, is directed towards working for a cohesive and united Canada. I am not here as a Progressive Conservative member, but rather as a member of parliament and I have a duty to all people in my constituency.

I want to make it clear that I do not contend the Prime Minister should not gather information from anyone, but rather that he does not have the privilege of appointing someone as being official spokesman. It is the official nature of that position to which I obeyed, because certainly there are other Senators and other people. I think my privilege is being usurped by the fact he has appointed someone who is able to gain public attention to raise issues, but who does not have a mandate from the people of that province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member gave the Chair notice of the question of privilege. Hon. members will note that the question of privilege does not seek action by the Chair. In all fairness, the alleged question of privilege suffers from other disabilities than that. However, no action is called for by the Chair and that would finalize the matter.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

AMENDMENT TO MAKE CONTRACTS CONTAINING DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS UNENFORCEABLE

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-382, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, one needs a good reason to propose an amendment to a bill of such integrity as the Canadian Bill of Rights. However, that bill is directed only to acts of discrimination which have their origin within the Canadian community. Since it was enacted, serious threats to human rights and equality within Canada have come from direct meddling by the national policies of some foreign governments and their agents deliberately designed to encourage discrimination in Canada. This amendment is designed to protect Canada from this disgraceful international development.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REMOVAL OF DOCUMENTS FROM HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR—SUBJECT MATTER OF INVESTIGATION AT THAT TIME

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In putting this question, I want to make it perfectly clear that I am not implying any wrongdoing on the part of anyone. However, it is important that there be full disclosure of any political links, and the nature of those links, where waterfront activities have led to widespread charges being laid. Will the Solicitor General advise the House of the subject matter of the investigation being pursued by the RCMP when they visited the office of the Minister of Labour in May, 1974, went through his files and took away certain material from his office.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I answered this on a previous occasion in the House. I understand they took out that search warrant in the case concerning Mr. Elliot and four other individuals. I listed their names in the House at that time. I think the question had been asked by the hon. member for Calgary North. The search warrant was issued as a result of investigations into the affairs of private individuals who were charged in Hamilton in May, 1974.

NATURE AND USE OF DOCUMENTS REMOVED FROM HAMILTON OFFICE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I assume that, in view of the importance of the matter the Solicitor General, although he might not have examined the material himself, is familiar with the material taken from the office of the Minister of Labour. Can he tell the House whether this material is either relevant to continuing investigations or whether it is intended to be used in evidence in a case or cases where charges have already been laid?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I cannot answer that question. As I have told the House before, it is not in order to discuss the details of an investigation which is under way, nor is it for me to discuss the evidence which will be put before the court in trials which are to take place. The prosecution in these cases is under the authority of the Attorney General of Ontario and the two prosecutors are under his authority.

POSSIBLE POLITICAL LINKS IN INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the nature of the charges laid and the office which the hon. gentleman holds, would the Solicitor General not agree that his response is extremely unsatisfactory; it must lead to suspicions—suspicions which arise from the evidence and the fact that the Solicitor General has not regarded it as important enough to satisfy himself as to the nature of the material. I do not think this is fair to the Minister of Labour or to anybody else. I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, in view of the unsatisfactory nature of the response of the Solicitor General and the suspicions which exist in the public mind, he is not prepared to commit the government to an independent judicial inquiry to examine possible political connections with waterfront activities which have led to these charges of wrongdoing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I can only repeat what I said yesterday: the answer is in the negative. If the Leader of the Opposition has some evidence of this kind to lay before the House there might be some reason for action. I have listened to my colleague, the Solicitor General, who gave an answer which I am sure must have been agreeable to the Leader of the Opposition, that it would not be in the interests of justice to reveal, as he requested, information which might prejudice the trial of people whose innocence must be presumed until they are found guilty.

Mr. Allmand: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition has made certain disparaging remarks about me and my answers. The answers I have given to the House with respect to the investigation are answers of a kind which have consistently been given by law officers of the Crown, whether provincial or federal, throughout time. I have checked this out. It is contrary to sound practice for a law officer of the Crown to reveal details of an investigation while it is still under way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Will either the Acting Prime Minister or the Solicitor General explain to me how it would prejudice anybody who is subject to any charge, or likely to be subject to any charge, for the Solicitor General to indicate to the House that the material taken from the office of the Minister of Labour is not being used in connection with any further investigation, or not being used in connection with any trial which is taking place—or, on the other hand, if it is? Would anybody explain to me how this information could possibly prejudice anybody's trial?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there were no doubt several documents taken from the Minister of Labour's office. Some were used as leads in following up other evidence. This is an operational matter, not one that I, as Solicitor General, would check into. The police are free to pursue their own investigations. I am not involved with the prosecutions and I do not know what evidence will or will not be used.

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister and government House leader. In view of the fact that the government refuses our request, which we initially made in the House two weeks ago, for a full scale public inquiry to put to rest some of the intriguing political ramifications of this whole affair, is the government House leader now prepared to bring in an appropriate reference of this matter either to a special committee or to a standing committee of the House which would enable members of the House to direct questions to ministers who held particular responsibility at the time of the commencement of the investigation and to whom, under the rules and practices of the House, we cannot now direct questions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen no reason to make such a reference. Nothing that has been said from the opposition side has convinced me that there would be anything to refer to a committee. There are now under way prosecutions of a number of businessmen who may have engaged in bid-rigging and in fraud. They are being prosecuted. I want that process to continue and I hope my hon. friend does, too. I have seen no evidence of there being any other activities which would justify a reference of this kind to committee.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government House leader, then, prepared, as a means of making a reference, to refer, for example, the reports of the Auditor General for 1963, 1966, 1967, 1970 and 1973, wherein he singles out government dredging contracts, the suggestion being, of course, that there were no proper departmental audits? This would form an appropriate reference to the public accounts committee, where we would then be in a position to call witnesses.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I understand that they have already been referred.

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NECESSITY FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Both in the House yesterday and again today in reply to questions regarding the need for a public inquiry into a situation that is causing considerable concern throughout the country, the minister suggested that in terms of the criminal law correct procedures are already being taken. I and my party fully agree with what the Solicitor General has said in that regard. I want to put to the minister another question. The Inquiries Act deals, not with criminal proceedings, but has broader terms of reference. Since one of the purposes of the Inquiries Act is to enable an inquiry to be made, and I quote, "into anything connected with the good government of Canada", and since under the act the government has, if "it deems it expedient", authority to initiate such an inquiry, then considering this broader scope—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I listened to the hon. member's preamble and then his first phrase in which he said he would like to ask the minister a question, but he then went on to another sentence and cited the act. Surely, it is time the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. In view of the important charges that have been levelled against 14 senior businessmen who have important political connections with the government party, does the minister not deem it in the public interest to clear up the implied possibility of political wrongdoing, which is of concern of many people throughout the country, by holding such an inquiry, or does the minister deem it not necessary to have an inquiry within this kind of framework?

● (1430)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I was asked this question yesterday I said this, and I will read it as it appears at page 4030 of Hansard:

I believe that if justice is to be done it should be permitted to take its course, and I think the intervention of any other proceeding such as has been suggested would compromise the outcome.

I was referring to the suggestion yesterday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I have reviewed that answer and I stand by it. I can see no way in which there would not be some presumption of guilt, or some other presumption that would compromise the course of justice. Therefore, I am very strongly against the suggestion made by the hon. member, and so is the government.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer I would like to be clear on this. Is he telling the House that in so far as this public matter is concerned, what is now regarded as a public scandal, it has to be dealt with exclusively within the appropriately narrow confines of the criminal law of Canada? Is that the Minister's and the government's position?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that is the government's position at this time.

An hon. Member: Until the boss gets back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL SECURITY

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTERPOL—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 OF CHARTER

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General.

As Interpol filed over 2000 pieces of information in 1973, and as the Soviet countries, which are members of Interpol, have access to that information, would the Solicitor General order an inquiry into the Canadian participation in Interpol, and another inquiry into the violation of article 3 of the Interpol Charter which forbids intervention of its organization in military, political, religious or racial situations, especially since under Heydrich, between 1939 and 1946, Interpol participated in planning the annihilation of six million Jews, and also since Paul Dick, president of Interpol until 1972, was a former SS lieutenant bearing No. 337259?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I am not aware of that story—

Mr. La Salle: He is not either!

Mr. Allmand: . . . I shall have to check with the RCMP.

Mr. J. M. ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer by the Acting Prime Minister to a question directed by my leader, to the effect that nothing he has seen or heard yet has convinced him of the need for any special reference, does he not think that the very fact that some of the documents from the office of the Minister of Labour are being used in proceedings, as well as the time gap between when this whole matter was brought to the attention of certain officials of the government, that is during the summer and in September of 1972, and when the Minister of Transport instructed the RCMP in February of 1973, would warrant a public inquiry in order that certain conditions might be clarified?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I think my colleague, the Solicitor General, has made very honest and direct statements in answer to the questions that have been asked here. It is my understanding that he is always prepared to answer more questions in the same spirit. I also understand that he and the commissioner of the RCMP are to appear tonight before a standing committee at which time there will be an opportunity to clarify the record.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into an argument about the totality of the answers of the Solicitor General. We look forward to his appearance tonight. However, I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister which I tried to bootleg in yesterday on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I tried to refer to what to me is the fundamental issue involved in questions by members of the opposition, by bootlegging it in under a point of order. I now have the floor, so I will put the question directly to the Acting Prime Minister. Does he not think there is a distinction between the narrow element of criminality, which is obviously being considered in the law courts of the land, and other conduct, whether it is political misconduct, administrative incompetence or administrative indifference, and that the difference would warrant such a public inquiry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the hon. member has asked a question which is of a very general nature and which was asked about 15 minutes ago.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think this was just a mistake but I do not want it to appear in Hansard without correction. I never gave an order to the RCMP to make an inquiry.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT—ALLEGED DELIBERATE PROVISION OF POOR SERVICE ON SOME LINES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board whether there is any deliberate attempt to provide substandard service on those rail lines that are due for review by January 1, 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. Of course, some of those lines are in need of significant upgrading, and for that reason we attach some urgency to the process of determining which of them will be transferred into the basic rail network in order that upgrading can take place. In the absence of that upgrading, certain limitations occur in service.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the same minister whether there might be an investigation into this since a number of these rail lines due for review by January 1, 1976, are providing almost no service, which gives the appearance to those communities of an attempt by government to withhold services in order to justify the removal of those rail lines?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it has been our custom to investigate any specific item brought to our attention by hon. members. If the hon. member would bring the specific items to my attention we will look into them.

SUGGESTED NEED FOR FULL TIME MINISTER OF LABOUR IN VIEW OF STRIKE SITUATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Prime Minister advise the House when the government intends to rectify the present situation which is; in the face of strikes which are crippling this country there is in effect no Minister of Labour in charge of the department, and no one who is fulfilling on a full-time basis the heavy responsibilities of that office?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the acting minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, met with me this morning at which time we were talking about all these disputes throughout the country. He is very much on the job, and the fact that he is not here in the House now is evidence that he is on more important work.

Mr. Fraser: Without accepting for a moment the explanation of the Acting Prime Minister, would he advise how much longer the government believes it is proper to be without a Minister of Labour who can fulfil the responsibilities of that office? I am sorry the Minister of Labour is tired, but the Canadian people are sick and tired of this appalling abdication of responsibility on the part of the government.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Mr. André Raynauld, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, recently called for a public debate on the council's role, commenting that many of the council's reports do not get read. When Mr. Deutsch was chairman, way back in 1966 and 1967, the council addressed itself to the problem of inflation, and recommended that its studies and recommendations should be referred annually to a joint committee of the House and the Senate which would look at the council's recommendations and hold hearings on them. In light of the rising inflation we have in Canada at the present time, along with our rising unemployment problem and the need for establishing some outside organization to assist the government in establishing appropriate policy, I would like to ask this question.

● (1440)

My question to the Acting Prime Minister is will he give the recommendation of the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada some consideration by setting up a joint subcommittee of the committee composed of the House and Senate which might be helpful to the government in solving some of its present economic problems.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to turn down a useful suggestion of this kind without consideration. However, I think it would be equally possible or appropriate in standing committees of the House for reference to be made to the Economic Council reports that provide a valuable comment upon a number of matters of proposed policy. I would think that would contribute usefully to the debate. I think it is more dubious whether we should establish sort of a congressional committee in which economic policies would be discussed having as a text the views of an outside body such as the Economic Council. I think it is more profitable in our system of government to deal with the proposals of the Minister of Finance.

TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTERS REQUESTING INVESTIGATION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. On March 4 the minister stated he would not table letters in respect of his order of inquiry into the Hamilton dredging irregularities, and subsequently in respect of the Quebec dredging, because it would be unjust to mention the people named in them. In view of the fact that serious charges have now been laid against 12 officials who have attempted to defraud two governments and the Hamilton Harbour Commission, would the minister today or tomorrow table his letters now that we have the names of those persons criminally involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman is right. I will have to check.

An hon. Member: We are always right.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, always! I will check with justice about the letters which have been sent.

Mr. Stanfield: Don't do that.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No? The Leader of the Opposition does not want me to do that.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Just arriving in the House, I am told that opposition members are complaining about my absence. I want to remind them that if I was delayed it is precisely because I was discussing a matter dealing with the British Columbia ports. I am totally in disagreement with the innuendo that nobody is looking after labour relations.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South on a point of order.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say on a point of order that the minister is misinformed. The complaint is not that he is out of the House. The complaint is that he is trying to run two portfolios at a time when the other portfolio for which he is substituting for a minister needs a full-time minister.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, apropos to the comments of my genial friend, the Minister of Transport, it is not that I do not want him to table the letters; I do. The point is that I do not want him to consult the Minister of Justice who will probably tell him not to do it.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

PROPOSED BAN ON IMPORT OF BLUE FIBRE ASBESTOS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that this week the province of Saskatchewan banned the use of blue fibre asbestos in places of employment, and in view of the fact that blue fibre asbestos on inhalation may cause an always fatal cancer known as mesothelioma even in those exposed for short periods of time and is a product used in the Johns-Manville plant in Scarborough, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs agree to use the Hazardous Products Act to ban the import of this product into Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for dealing so quickly with such an important matter. My department officials are now discussing with the Department of Justice to find the best way to draft regulations which could efficiently and effectively cover this matter.

TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION INTO DREDGING CONTRACTS—POSSIBLE SUSPENSION OF PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN BRITISH COLUMBIA COMPANIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With regard to the dredging contracts that were let in British Columbia to Marwell Dredging, Canadian Dredging and Sceptre Dredging, and in view of the fact that payments had been discontinued under a legal opinion to those in Quebec, Marine Industries Limited, would the minister advise the House if payments are now suspended to the British Columbia companies that have been charged under the Criminal Code?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will have to inquire about this and I may give an answer tomorrow.

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF COMPANIES CONNECTED WITH DREDGING COMPANIES BEING INVESTIGATED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Solicitor General. With regard to the matter of the continuing investigation that the minister referred to yesterday in the House, would the minister advise whether the connections of those who have been charged in terms of other directorships and those companies which may have contracts with the federal government are also being investigated as well as dredging contracts?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I would have to check on that, Mr. Speaker.

AIRPORTS

SAINT JOHN—LENGTH OF TIME CLOSED AND REASON FOR TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, once this consultation between ministers is finished I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: It is all right. The Minister of Justice is saying not to table a letter which will probably be leaked anyway. I gave the minister notice of this question in view of its serious nature. How long has the airport at Saint John, New Brunswick, been closed and have Department of Transport firefighters had their employment terminated as part of what one of the Minister's officials to me was a management game played in the strike situation.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Saint John airport has been opened and closed alternately until March 13. Now it has been decided to stop paying.

[English]

I think we ceased paying the firefighters yesterday or a couple of days ago. This comes under the Treasury Board and is a policy which is being applied everywhere in Canada.

SAINT JOHN—RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROTECTION OF PROPERTY—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board. Who is protecting the Department of Transport property and the Air Canada DC-9 which has been strike-bound on the runway for a week at Saint John? What is the distance of the alternate firefighting equipment from the airport and are there any other firefighters who have had their employment terminated as a part of the game that is being played.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to give a specific answer to the question of the hon. member. I shall give him an answer when I have the information.

GRAIN

POSSIBILITY OF LOST SALES AS RESULT OF STRIKE AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the minister aware that the Japanese have been forced to purchase emergency wheat supplies from the United States because of Canada's failure to meet its commitments out of the strike-bound port of Vancouver as reported by Victor Mackie of the Ottawa Journal, and can he advise whether or not any contracts have been cancelled or sales lost to Japan or any other country as a result of the current strike.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, obviously the particular purchase of wheat by Japan cannot be directly and easily attributed to any specific situation, but I certainly would not deny the possibility of what the hon. member has said.

ESTIMATE OF LENGTH OF TIME TO CATCH UP ON DELIVERIES FOLLOWING SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board whether any evaluation is being made presently concerning the time it would take now to catch up in respect of the contracts to which we are already committed in view of the fact that we were behind prior to the beginning of the strike.

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board watches the situation on a day to day basis to determine how quickly they will be able to be in a catch-up position.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not respond to my question. I wonder if he could inform the country how far we are behind and whether we can expect the Wheat Board to take any contracts after the strike, or whether we should forget about seeding grain this year.

Mr. Lang: I object to the suggestion that I did not give an adequate reply. I indicated that the matter is being reviewed on a day to day basis, which is an obvious thing, and it should be obvious to the hon. member. The fact of the matter is that there can be no precise calculation as to how long it will take to catch up. All we can do is indicate that we will be doing everything humanly possible to catch up as quickly as possible, and we usually do that faster than anyone would predict.

Mr. Korchinski: Is there any use growing grain this year at all?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: How much?

POSSIBILITY OF MAKING SHIPMENTS THROUGH UNITED STATES IN VIEW OF STRIKE AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the severe hardship to western farmers in the agricultural community, I would like to ask him whether his department has investigated making these shipments by way of the United States until such time as the problems in Canada are settled, and if not, why not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have frequently considered many contingency plans. It happens, however, that the ordinary system of shipping Canadian wheat out of the west coast is to move it in an uncleaned condition to the terminals and clean it there. The typical terminals which might be available in the United States do not have cleaning capacity, and therefore it is not a practical suggestion.

MANPOWER

FARM LABOUR—AVAILABILITY OF OFFSHORE WORKERS IN VIEW OF GOVERNMENT POLICY GIVING PRIORITY TO CANADIANS

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister aware of the dilemma farmers are facing because of the government policy of hiring Canadian workers before offshore workers and Mexican help? If so, can he give hon. members of this House some direction in how manpower centres can make these offshore workers available to farmers since Canadians will not work in these areas?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I think the premise is not totally correct. We are certainly directing our attention to the priority of searching for Canadians available for work in Canada before we enlist the services of people from other countries. This program should be very well known to farmers in southern Ontario because of the many releases which have been made and the many consultations we have had. We can assure them that there will be labour, but we are determined to search and find Canadians first as the first priority before we resort to bringing in offshore workers.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—SUGGESTION AMATEUR ASSOCIATIONS NOT SIGN CHILDREN TO CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the minister was approached last year with respect to the case of 16 year old Michael Laffrade of Toronto who was prevented from playing hockey because he had signed a contract with an amateur team, and in view of the fact that the minister had expressed outrage and incredulity at the effects of that contract, and in view of the fact that the minister on the program "Ombudsman" had promised to speak to the CAHA about this situation, would he inform the House if he has contacted the CAHA and instructed it and its affiliated bodies to cease and desist from forcing children to sign contracts or forms which restrict their opportunities for playing hockey?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I let the program "Ombudsman" know that I should be pleased to give them all appropriate information on this subject. I already appeared on this program last year and I find rather astonishing the kind of remark that was made recently on it. I already got in touch with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association but unfortunately, and contrarily to what the hon. member is suggesting in his question, I am not in a position to give orders to a private organization such as the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that many more cases similar to that of Michael Laffrade have surfaced this winter, will the minister inform the House as to what steps he is prepared to take to ensure that children do not become embroiled in legal disputes in the pursuit of voluntarily playing amateur sports in this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, all I can recommend to the hon. member is that he read the British North America Act where he will find that the responsibilities of the provincial and federal governments in this area are clearly defined.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary and then I will see the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a question of privilege.

COMPETITION ACT

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF PROVISION TO ENSURE CHILDREN NOT RESTRICTED IN PARTICIPATING IN AMATEUR SPORTS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the reluctance of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to deal with this situation in a satisfactory fashion, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tell the House if he is prepared to give an assurance that Bill C-2, amending the Competition Act, will make provision to ensure that children who wish to participate in amateur sports in this country are not restricted?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for a rather long time now, I have been asking that this bill be concurred in. I am happy to see that the hon. member is willing to support me, so that this bill might be brought back to Parliament as soon as possible and adopted.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from an earlier exchange between myself and the Minister of Transport on his question of privilege when he said that he did not give orders to the RCMP to do anything in the matter of the Hamilton harbour inquiry. On February 27, as recorded at page 3622 of Hansard, the minister stated:

> Oh, yes, there are answers. First, I must inform the House in connection with this matter . . .

Referring to the Hamilton matter.

> . . . I probably should have done this before, but I did not have the complete file before me—that I am the one who, in January 1973, two years ago, ordered the RCMP to inquire into alleged Hamilton irregularities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: On March 4, 1975, as recorded at page 3754 of Hansard, on the question of who did what to whom and when, the minister, when asked about the letters which he said he would gladly table, said:

> The letter I have here is written to the Commissioner, RCMP, Ottawa, Ontario . . .

And he gives the postal code.

There is real confusion as to what the dates of the letters were, and at one time the minister said that a publication of the letters would prejudice innocent people. I suggest that to clarify once and for all who did what to whom, the minister should table the letters, deleting the names of those who have not yet been charged. This would at least clarify this one fact in the murky picture.

An hon. Member: Better stick to driving.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the letters and the intervention of the federal government and the Department of Transport, there was a misunderstanding which I clarified with the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: You confused it; you didn't clarify it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member may infer what he wishes, but the fact is that he wrote me a letter and wanted me to tell him exactly what letters I sent to whom. This has been done because he sent me a letter, and probably five minutes later he gave the letter to the newspapermen, and I did about the same. I took ten minutes, not five.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The simple confusion is that there was a letter in the file prepared in the department, but that was never sent, and I did not know at that time when I gave the date in the House. After that I wrote an answer because the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham wrote to me and asked what the letters were. I answered him publicly, and all this is in the public record. I said after that that if the whole answer is read it can be seen that I wrote to the Solicitor General of Canada, not to the RCMP, in order to ask for an inquiry.

Mr. Lawrence: You don't know what you did when.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE DISPUTES WITH EMPLOYEES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the considerable experience of the Postmaster General in dealing with labour relations which, as he has stated, was the key consideration in his appointment as Postmaster General, and in view of the rapid deterioration of the Canadian postal service as it continues to be torn by illegal strikes and now a postal code boycott, will the minister advise the House and the people of Canada what action he is taking to settle the current disputes and how soon he expects that they will be settled? Can the minister say how he will attempt to guarantee that these disputes, so costly to the country, will be halted in future?

● (1500)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there is one illegal strike at the moment and that is in Montreal. What little experience I have had in the field of labour has convinced me that the worst possible way of settling an illegal dispute is to be blackmailed and I do not intend to do that. The strike in Montreal is illegal and I have ordered the suspension of certain militants in the organization. I have appealed to the people of Montreal to bear with me and, if necessary, keep that Post Office closed for months in order, once and for all, to clean out of the Post Office those who prefer to draw money and not do an honest day's work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

COLLAPSE OF MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF REASON AND ASSURANCE NORTHERN ELECTRIC NOT ALLOWED TO APPLY LOSSES INCURRED AGAINST PROFITS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with respect to the collapse of Microsystems International which will throw 500 families into some financial jeopardy and will mean the loss of some $37 million to Canadian taxpayers. Would the minister agree that a full and independent public inquiry should be held to investigate the reasons for this collapse particularly in view of the tremendous infusion of public funds? Could the minister also assure the House that Northern Electric will not be allowed to apply the losses incurred by Microsystems against their profits until the completion of such an independent inquiry and the presentation of its report to parliament? Finally, in view of the importance of this industry to Canada and our present necessity of relying completely on the United States for semi-conductors, would the minister inform the House whether there are any plans to initiate a new industry in this country and if so, what they are?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is more than one question there and I shall do my best to answer as quickly as I can. The department supported the Microsystems project because according to the best advice then available, the company seemed to have a technically advanced product in process. Considerable sums of money were advanced in support of this product over a period of years and there was every evidence that it was technically up to standard internationally. Unfortunately, during the last couple of years there has been a major shift in international markets for that product, the result of which the hon. member is now aware. I do not think an inquiry would serve any useful purpose. This is an example of market forces combining against this project.

As members will realize, when you get into advanced technology you are getting into a risk business, and there are going to be failures. We have had successes and very few failures to date. As to losses on that particular enterprise and whether those losses may be used to offset profits earned by the parent company, I think this question should be directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF VETERANS LAND ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I received an answer on the order paper yesterday which indicated that, as a result of the extension of the Veterans Land Act, 7,648 applications were approved between January 1974 and January 1975. This is evidence which contradicts what the minister said last year, that the Veterans Land Act had outlived its usefulness. Apart from the new veterans housing legislation, and because the decision on the extension of the Veterans Land Act was justified, would the minister consider continuing it as it is so popular?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy and there is no indication of it at this time.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question. Contrary to the statement made last year that operational expenditures would be increased by $50 million, the annual report indicates that the operating expenditure was reduced by $741,000 and that $53.6 million was collected on capital account besides $26.3 million in interest, so would the minister take these figures into consideration and have discussions with his colleagues before March 31, 1975 with a view to extending the Veterans Land Act?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to look at the figures and give them some consideration.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—PROPOSED NEGOTIATION OF ARRANGEMENT TO PERMIT FOOD SHIPMENTS TO NEEDY COUNTRIES

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Has he or any member of the cabinet met with, or would they consider meeting with, representatives of the Public Service Alliance to attempt to negotiate, strictly on a moral basis, at least some temporary arrangement so that food shipments destined to certain foreign countries in desperate need of food can proceed unimpeded?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board is now engaged in negotiations and I think there are improved prospects for success. I understood the motivation of the hon. member's suggestion but I do not think it would be advisable to put it forward at the present time.

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HARBOUR FACILITIES TO PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the House whether officials of his department have had formal meetings recently with officials of the provincial transport department to discuss the whole question of the transfer of ferry wharfs to the province and, if so, has a schedule been established so that these wharfs may be repaired and transferred to the province as soon as possible?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know there have been meetings and contacts. I shall be able to give details on the dates of the meetings and the results of the talks tomorrow morning.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege deals with the answer which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) gave to my supplementary question this afternoon, which may have been misleading. I know it was not intentional, but I think we should not leave it on the record. The minister does indeed have a competition bill before a committee of this House, but he has also introduced an amendment to eliminate the amateur sports provision of that competition bill. I do not see why we should help put that bill through the committee when it discriminates against young children in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member that the parliamentary committee—

An hon. Member: Here he comes—

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain could calm down a little. I understand he is under severe stress; the run for the Progressive Conservative party leadership has not yet begun, as far as I know. The hon. member should be reminded that the suggestions made to the parliamentary committee have not yet been approved as amendments to the bill. When the bill is discussed clause by clause, it will be possible to reassess whether it is convenient to exclude amateur sports or not, and I am convinced that the hon. member will have ample chance to put forward his point of view.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what the business is for the rest of this week and next week. While he is telling us, I should be glad if he would deal with the question which I have raised with other House leaders, namely, whether certain of the supply days set down as allotted days might be taken over to the next session, having in mind that the committee on procedure has made some changes with regard to supply procedure. That procedure will not come into effect until later and may not affect the supply days just mentioned. I ask the government House leader to deal with this matter quickly, as tomorrow is to be an opposition day and we must know by five o'clock what is to happen: by five o'clock we must set down tomorrow's motion.

● (1510)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there are two bills being debated at second reading stage which we should like to see read the second time, hopefully without excessive debate. They are Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill, which has been debated for three days at second reading stage—presumably the debate is more or less finished—and Bill C-8, in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, which deals with the establishment of a national petroleum company. These bills are urgent. In addition, there is a list of bills which are in various stages, some at third reading stage and others at the report stage, as listed last Monday. These, I hope can be disposed of at the same time.

I thank the House leader of the official opposition for his offer to make available to the government before the Easter break some of the debating time which is now set aside for allotted days. I gather that our colleague the NDP House leader is agreeable to some transfer forward. I must confess that if this time is simply to be used for an unnecessary extension of debate on measures which the opposition does not intend to dispose of within a reasonable period, I would be reluctant to accept the offer.

An hon. Member: Since when has debate been unnecessary?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that House leaders ever engage in debate inside or outside the House. Nevertheless, let me tell the hon. gentleman that the record shows that this House has expedited the passage of a great many pieces of legislation in a short period. Bill C-50, which the hon. gentleman mentioned, is considered to be a most important bill. I notice that even government supporters participated every day in the debate. I think we can dispose of it in one more day. I will simply leave it at this: we are looking across the aisle at a sorry aggregate, politically speaking, of course—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Just look at the empty seats on your side.

Mr. Baldwin: —of members masquerading as ministers of the cabinet and we see some inviting targets for an opposition day motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that no matter whether House leaders debate amongst themselves or just chat with one another, we shall have to do this bit of negotiating somewhere else and not here on the floor of the House.

An hon. Member: Why not here?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not? Don't encourage me too much.

Mr. Nystrom: Please don't.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If agreement can be reached to put one or two allotted days off to the next semester, we will be prepared to go along with it. As for Bill C-50 and Bill C-8 which the minister mentioned, I believe I can say that we have only a few more speakers to put up on Bill C-50, and perhaps none at all. Bill C-8 has only been before the House for half a day's debate. We would be prepared to see it read the second time after no more than another half day's debate. Perhaps we can negotiate these matters between now and five o'clock.

While I am on my feet, may I express the hope that the government House leader is holding discussions with the Minister of Veterans Affairs and that we will soon see the motion to refer the Hermann report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I hope he will also discuss with the Minister of Veterans Affairs the possibility of making available time in which to make an announcement, to bring in legislation or do whatever he must do before the end of this month with respect to replacing the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister gave a solemn undertaking that he would do something.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank my associates for their hopeful comments. I am greatly encouraged by seeing so many empty seats opposite. I hope we will be able to make rapid progress. Perhaps I can say to the NDP House leader that I consulted the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who wrote that the reference—probably next week—would be suitable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I may raise a supplementary point, has the minister had discussions with the Minister of Veterans Affairs about the other matter to which I referred? We had the solemn commitment that there would be an announcement before March 31. If we break for Easter, we shall adjourn three or four days before that date.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET TO IMPROVE CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That this House urges the government to introduce, within two weeks, a new budget, for the purpose of dealing with the increasingly dangerous state of the Canadian economy, and specifically to cope with mounting unemployment, the housing needs of our people, and the scourge of poverty.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the reasons for my party's recommendation for a new budget within two weeks which is to deal with unemployment, poverty and difficulties in housing, let me say something about this country's potential for industrial and social development which could be realized given the right kind of political and economic leadership. We are one of the world's richest nations in terms of natural endowments. Given the size of our mineral deposits, our gas, oil and lumber resources, our agriculture, and our potential for developing our sea resources off the east and west coast we are, by any standard, one of the best endowed countries in the world.

In addition, our labour force is able and determined to work and—perhaps this is more important—it is highly educated. Clearly, our abundant natural endowments and our highly educated labour force make us unique. Unlike the countries of western Europe, Japan or the United States—unlike other industrialized nations—we do not depend on imported raw materials for our development. Unlike the labour forces of third world countries and underveloped nations, our labour force is highly educated. We are, then, unique in our, then, advantages.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Of course, I am speaking of our potential, which can only be mobilized with the right kind of political and economic leadership. But what about present economic reality? What is happening in March, 1975, shows that reality falls short of potential. Let me put on record four important items. First, we have high and increasing levels of inflation. According to the most recent figures, the cost of living in February, 1975, compared with that of February, 1974, increased by 11.8 per cent. There is every indication that that inflation rate, or one somewhere in that neighbourhood, will persist for the rest of the year. This is an extremely bad situation for millions of Canadians, particularly those on low incomes.

Secondly, we have high and increasing levels of unemployment. The most recent figures show that in the month of February, 1974, there were 635,000 unemployed in Canada. In February 1975, the total number of unemployed had increased to 839,000. In percentage terms, this is an increase from 6.8 per cent to 8.6 per cent of unemployed Canadians. There are 839,000 men, women and young adults out of work in Canada, the highest figure since the depression.

The third point I wish to make, in terms of adding to the general description of the current economic situation, pertains to our trade position. Measured in real dollars, Canadian exports have been at a virtual standstill since the last quarter of 1972. In fact, if the current trend for this year continues it is expected that by the end of 1975 the drop in our trade position will be the largest, in absolute terms, for any year since 1954: it will be the largest drop in 20 years. In contrast, Canadian imports have continued to rise. Indeed, the rate at which our imports are rising and our exports are declining has led experts to predict that we could be in for one of the worst years, in terms of trade, since the depression. These are not experts within the party structure of the House of Commons nor, indeed, within the government; they are people in the academic community and other sectors outside of government—the business community, for example.

The fourth point I wish to make is also in the context of our discussion on import and export trade. Ministers of the Crown, in particular, when talking about our problems of foreign trade should really refer to our imports and exports vis-à-vis the United States. We are not, in any meaningful sense of the term, a world trading nation: we are a trading nation with the United States of America. Sixty-seven per cent of our exports go to the United States. In dollar terms the vast majority of these exports are unprocessed, undeveloped raw materials. At the same time, 69 per cent of our imports are from the United States. Most of these, of course, are in the form of finished goods; They have built into them more jobs per dollar invested than occurs from investment in the raw materials sector of the economy.

These are four general economic points. We have high and increasing rates of inflation and high and increasing rates of unemployment. We have declining exports and increasing imports. The fourth point—our import and export trade—is, and has been for many years, almost exlusively a matter of trade with the United States and not with other countries of the world. This government has been a complete failure in dealing with these issues. It has not done anything of consequence with regard to inflation. In spite of promises from 1972 on, no effective legislation has been brought before the House to deal with price gouging, profiteering, or whatever label you want to give it. On many occasions our party has called for the establishment of an effective prices review board, one with teeth to enforce some effective control and review the mechanism in respect of price gouging in the market. The government has not seen fit to bring forward anything of substance in this area.

The budget of last fall was an opportunity to deal with inflation in some way, at least in terms of its effects on average and low income people. However, it was one of the most regressive budgets in years. It was regressive even in terms of Liberal standards—which is pretty bad. At the top end of the income tax scale there were tax cuts of $700, going all the way down to a few dollars at the lower end of the scale which affects the poor people. Those not in a position to pay any income tax got nothing out of the budget.

A progressive budget, in terms of easing inflation, would have had something in it for both poor and average income people. Instead, it removed the subsidy that existed on an essential product, milk. It should have extended federal subsidies to essential products, particularly food, so that low income people could at least be assured of a nutritional diet in times of an inflating economy. Instead, the government moved in a clearly regressive way, removing the subsidy on milk which had been put on in a minority government situation.

The government did not do anything in its budget, nor has it done anything since, about revamping the pension structure in Canada either directly in terms of pensions under federal jurisdiction or indirectly by bringing forward legislation to provide any kind of incentive, financial or otherwise, to the private sector to revamp their pension plans so that people so badly hit by inflation, particularly those on fixed pensions, would be in a better position to eke out a reasonable existence.

Another area in which the government has not acted is with respect to its whole wage and salary policy vis-à-vis its own employees. In the view of our party, recent and current strikes in the public service are overwhelmingly the responsibility of the government. I say this because Treasury Board has not seen fit to make wage proposals to the blue collar workers in particular to enable them to make up for lost income as a result of increases in the cost of living. The government has failed to provide an adequate salary proposal to enable these workers to cope with increasing levels of inflation which are predicted for the years ahead. This is an area where the government could have acted directly in terms of its own employees. However, it has not done what it should in terms of easing the impact of inflation. It has not helped those whom it employs directly, nor has it indirectly set a moral precedent that might have had some kind or impact on the private sector.

We have continued, and in fact strengthened, our traditional role as an exporter of raw materials and an importer of finished goods. Current figures show there is a surplus in our trade of raw materials amounting to some $8 billion: this represents the value of the raw materials we are exporting in excess of those we import. As a result of this surplus we enjoy a slight over-all trade balance.

What does this mean? It means that aside from the impact on our trade and on the value of the Canadian dollar, we are, in effect, exporting countless jobs because, as I have explained, the jobs which arise in the resource sector do not compare, in terms of numbers, with the jobs that arise in the manufacturing and processing sectors per dollar of investment. Thus, the more we depend upon the export of our raw materials, the greater the loss of jobs we shall suffer in the years ahead. The situation is analogous to that of the farmer who decides to pay off his debts by selling a quarter section of his land each year. We all know it would not take long for the farmer to go out of business. If we continue, as a country, along the lines the Liberal Party has been following, we shall find ourselves in the position of that farmer before very long.

The most recent significant policy initiative announced by the government—I refer to the Syncrude project—reinforces this trend toward both the sale of our raw resources and the domination of foreign ownership. If I wanted to single out the most symptomatic project of this kind in the history of Canada, I would point to Syncrude as being the best, or perhaps the worst, example.

In short, in this aspect of the economy the Liberals remain what they have always been, particularly since C. D. Howe gained the great influence which he exerted over the party—a party ready and willing to sell out our resources to our neighbours to the south, instead of providing the economic leadership which would entail, as a minimum, a national plan designed to include an industrial strategy for developing our own resources instead of selling them off. Included in such a plan would be provision for federal government involvement in all major investment decisions affecting the economy. This is the kind of action which is required and it is the kind of action the government has failed to take.

I wish to refer, now, to two particularly odious consequences of the absence of a national economic policy. The first is poverty. What are the dimensions of this problem? Does it affect merely a handful of people, as some appear to think? Here are the facts. In 1973 there were almost six million Canadians—5,778,000, to be exact—living at or below the poverty line in our country, according to Statistics Canada. How, in particular, are the children affected? Surely, one of the most moving and disturbing reports which has ever come into our hands is, that which came out last week—all members of parliament received a copy—prepared by the National Welfare Council and entitled, appropriately and sadly enough, "Poor Kids".

What did we learn from that report? We learned that one out of every four children in Canada lives in poverty. In gross terms, 1.7 million Canadian children live in poverty. All these children grow up without as much food as other kids get to eat, without the same kind of clothing as other kids wear, without the same quality of shelter as other kids enjoy, without the toys that other kids play with: without, in short, the sources of joy in childhood which make adult life a desirable possibility. This is what poverty means. In addition, such children are much more likely to fall sick. They are more likely to incur permanent brain damage as a result of malnutrition. They are less likely to go on to institutions of higher learning. They are less likely, in short, to do all the things the more affluent three-quarters of our children take for granted. This, surely, is one of the most damning indictments of a government of any advanced country.

The tragedy is compounded by the fact that, unlike India, China or other countries in Southeast Asia and South America, Canada has no excuse. There is no justification for the situation described in "Poor Kids" because there is no justification for poverty in a society such as ours. The report itself says: "There is no need for poverty in Canada". The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) made the same point in a speech delivered last fall in Toronto when he used very similar statistics based upon the population as a whole. In a moving speech, he documented in unequivocal terms the maldistribution of income in Canada; the fact that after 25 years of so-called progressive government, government which has supposedly been concerned about tax policies leading to a redistribution of income, no such redistribution has taken place. He showed that the whole operation had been a sham. I say this as a man who at one time really believed that such policies were working and that they were significant instruments of social change. However, I repeat, no such redistribution has taken place. The top 20 per cent of our population enjoys 40 per cent of our income, and the bottom 20 per cent—the poor people of Canada—have something less than 10 per cent.

What needs to be done, Mr. Speaker? Other nations of the world, the developing nations, have to generate industry to bring their economies to capacity. This takes decades. What we need to fight poverty is simply a change in governmental attitude, policy and direction that will take the wealth we already have and more fairly distribute it in society. The minister who made that fine and moving speech in Toronto last fall, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, does not speak hypocritically, but the government as a whole is being hypocritical when it does not heed the minister's expressed concern and call for leadership in this regard.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in the same month as the minister's speech, presented a budget that did nothing to rectify the evils that the Minister of National Health and Welfare so vividly described. It seems to me that you cannot express fundamental and moral concern for the people of Canada, either inside or outside the House, without taking the opportunity which presents itself in a budget to demonstrate in some way an intention to remedy the social evil you have described. That is exactly the situation with the present government. On the one hand, the government talks of society's problems, particularly poverty among adults and children; and on the other hand, when it gets a chance to act it completely fails to do so. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not responsible for the budget, of course; that is the direct responsibility of the Minister of Finance. But the government as a whole cannot be excused for failing to act.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare over the past two years has been developing a guaranteed minimum income program. Two or three weeks ago ministers from the provinces met the minister in Ottawa to discuss what a lot of people thought was going to be the framework for a minimum income program to deal with the poverty that he himself had described in such moving terms last fall in Toronto. What has been the government's decision in regard to that program? Did the government say that it is time we in Canada eliminated a situation where one kid in four lives in poverty? In fact, about 20 per cent of our total population live in poverty. The government did not say, Mr. Speaker, that it was going to remove this evil. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, I understand under pressure from his cabinet colleagues, backed away from taking the kind of action that could have led—I say this with care and with seriousness—to the eradication of poverty within one year. As the report has documented, this could be done in this country within one year if income were redistributed.

This is not an utopian scheme for Canada in 1975, Mr. Speaker. If you had talked about it ten years ago, then you could not have said it could be done within one year. But if we want to eliminate poverty today, we can do it either by bringing in a negative income tax scheme, the details of which are well known to the cabinet, or by amending the Canada Assistance Plan Act. This was a step that a number of welfare ministers from the provinces wanted the government to take so as to make sure that all families in Canada living at or below the poverty line could overnight have their level of payments under the plan increased. Two or three weeks ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare scuttled any move in that direction, putting off once again to some future date the implementation of some kind of minimum income program in Canada. I say this is a national tragedy. It is something that could have been avoided and not put off to some distant date in the future.

The last area of specific concern, in terms of the national economy, about which I wish to say something is housing. Our party regards housing as a social right. It should not be considered a commodity that can be compared to a colour television set or an expensive car; it should be regarded by Canadians, in 1975, as medical services or elementary school education are regarded—as a basic right in an industrial country like ours. It is something we should take for granted if we are willing to work for it. Nobody gets anything for nothing, but if people are willing to work they should be able to get housing in 1975, just as they can get medicare or elementary school education. Housing should not be contingent upon having an exceptionally high income.

The government has failed to recognize that housing is a social right. It continues to try to rely upon financial incentives of one kind or another. It continues to give special tax concessions to investors. It continues to provide financial subsidies to the banks in order to get them to reduce mortgage rates, rather than deal with housing directly. I see, Mr. Speaker, you are about to indicate that my time has expired, but if I could have a few more minutes I will conclude my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: The minimum need for housing is somewhere between 800,000 and one million units. The Minister of State responsible for housing, last fall said that we needed 800,000; the Canadian Council on Social Development has said we need one million units. The government should have told the Minister of Finance to make provision for this in his budget. As I have said, we must create jobs, with so much unemployment in Canada, so let us create jobs in this area of need. But instead, the government, in terms of real dollars, chose to freeze the housing budget. The 1975 housing budget is no different from the 1974 budget in terms of real dollars.

The housing minister's own target is 210,000 housing units. According to figures released a month or two ago, he will be lucky to get 165,000 units. I say the minimum target of the government for this year should have been 400,000 units, for which they could and should have allocated funds. In view of our unemployment situation, for fiscal reasons this would have been the responsible thing to do because it would create jobs, although in terms of human need also we need additional economic impact. Instead of restricting the housing budget, the cabinet should have doubled it and therefore doubled the projected target of the minister.

In my judgment, the reason the Liberal Party has failed to come to grips with housing is that it has failed to assume the obligation to direct investment into certain sectors of our society at a certain time in order to meet human and social priorities. This would mean they would have to say to the banks insurance companies and other financial institutions in Canada that a certain percentage of their investments in 1975 and 1976 must be set aside to provide the housing which Canadians need. To do that, of course, the government would have to change the Bank Act and other financial legislation; and to do that it would have to take on the banks and financial institutions in a political battle. The Liberal government is unwilling to do that. Therefore, my party does not expect the Liberal government to win the battle in respect of housing as a social right, just as it did not win the battle in respect of medicare or any other major social innovation. This battle will have to be fought and won by somebody else, and when that is done and the situation is politically safe, the Liberal government will come along and take over again.

I want to conclude by saying that we need a new budget within a couple of weeks which will recognize that unemployment, rather than inflation, is the principal issue in 1975. Let me assure the Minister of Finance, in case he should think that somehow it is a bizarre proposal when I say that we need a budget within two weeks, that I suggest this with a great sense of probity and responsibility. In view of the answers the minister has given the House since the beginning of this parliament last fall and since the last budget, to the effect that the government is monitoring the situation, it was not prepared to bring in a new budget but might do so in the future, I assume that his professional advice is fully abreast of the current situation. For that reason, and having regard to the request for a new budget within two weeks, I assume the government is capable of doing just that, particularly if it has been doing what the minister has said in his answers during the last few weeks.

We need a budget which recognizes that unemployment in 1975 is the crucial problem, a budget which recognizes that poverty does exist in Canada to an alarming degree and should be eradicated in 1975; and, finally, a budget which recognizes that housing needs in Canada are not being met but ought to be met and will make the kind of funds available so that instead of a mere 200,000 housing units in 1975 we can have at least double that number this year, and within a couple of years totally eradicate our housing problem.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I personally want to congratulate the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) for bringing this subject before the House. No matter how much we disagree as to the ways in which these problems ought to be resolved, this is an issue with which this House of Commons and the country ought to deal. This involves a matter of judgment. As I have said on other occasions in the House—and I will make it quite clear again—we are leaving our options open at this stage until we have completed a further analysis of the facts. As I have made quite clear, we disagree with some of the fundamental positions advocated by the New Democratic Party. I hope the leader of that party will not misunderstand me if in the course of my remarks today I put on the public record some of the inconsistencies which he and his colleagues have presented for the scrutiny of the Canadian people.

I also congratulate the hon. member on his style of debate in dealing with the issues. I enjoyed listening to him. Obviously, when you look around the chamber, in spite of the fact that this is the number one problem in the country it is not a big grabber at the moment as far as the House of Commons is concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: There are four committees sitting.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) points out that there are four committees sitting. This problem is not even a big grabber for our friends of the fourth estate, who seem to be more interested in the Hamilton harbour dredging scandal than in what I believe to be the crucial issue before the country.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): It is not a grabber so it's a wonder you are here at all.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would not mind at all if the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) would like to take a breather. I want to say at the outset that the nature of the rate of unemployment and inflation is not satisfactory at all. These are both troublesome problems in this country and they are twin problems of great concern to the government. They have to be dealt with simultaneously. In spite of the human problem in terms of the concern of men and women out of work in this country, I would insist that we will not have the growth necessary to provide new jobs if we do not get the problem of inflation under control.

To this extent, I agree with the United States Secretary of the Treasury who said to the members of the press at the National Press Club yesterday afternoon that the recession was brought on in the United States because of the effects of inflation on the economy of that country. We have to deal with both these problems at the same time if we are to get the type of growth we need in order to provide jobs for the young men and women of our country who are joining the labour force at the highest absolute, relative, rate in the world.

The first point I want to make in answer to the terms of the hon. gentleman's motion calling for a budget within two weeks is that that there is already significant stimulus injected into the economy. Before the United States, Germany and other European countries moved we had already, on November 18, injected $3 billion, in terms of a combined budgetary and non-budgetary deficit, into the Canadian economy. To put that in terms of United States figures, which are roughly 12 to 1, it is equivalent to a deficit of about $35 billion or $40 billion on total account. Because of stabilization factors built into the economy, because of lower prospective corporate revenues and because of rising unemployment, these stabilization figures have probably moved the cash deficit closer to $4 billion than $3 billion. The tax cuts provided in the November 18 budget, expanding the May 6 budget, are now already in effect for the 1974 and 1975 years in terms of payroll deductions. Fortunately, our cash balances are good and even with that amount of deficit I will not have to go to the market for amounts that would adversely affect our interest rates.

I want to draw to the attention of the House the difference between the position we face and the position recognized publicly yesterday by the United States Secretary of the Treasury. He will have to finance about $80 billion to $90 billion to cover the deficit in the 1975 calendar year in the U.S. economy, and the effect that may have on interest rates in the New York market toward the end of the year is something I will have to take into account in terms of our own debt management and management of our economy. The second point I want to make is that our economy, in 1974, experienced real growth of 3.7 per cent, against negative growth in the United States of 2.2 per cent. In other words, when we look at the respective stimuli we have to compare the respective stages of these two North American economies.

As I said to the House in answer to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), or to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—I cannot recall whom—one ought to take into account the fact that for 1974 our gross national product grew at a real rate, inflation discounted, of 6.8 per cent and the 3.7 per cent in terms of real total growth or gross national product represents a drag on or a leakage in our economy because of falling exports. This is what has happened to Canada's economy because of a flat, stagnant, recessionary economy in the United States which takes, as the hon. gentleman has said, 67 per cent of our trade. Our next biggest customer is Japan, which is also in a state of recession, as is the United Kingdom, our third largest customer. That is why I say that for 1975, although we can expect growth, and we are probably one of the few of the 24 industrialized nations who are members of OECD that will experience growth, in real terms, in 1975—

Mr. Stanfield: How much are you expecting?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have shaded off our growth figures from 4 per cent in the budget, and I will be coming up with some definitive figures when I have analysed the effect of our stimulus here and the effect of whatever package the United States puts together after the administration and the President are able to negotiate an economic package with the U.S. Congress.

It is because of the drag on our economy resulting from falling exports and the state of the economy of the United States and the economy of European countries, all of which is crucial to us, that this situation has developed. I want to analyse the first quarter figures in Canada to see how the stimulus is biting. I shall analyse the situation as it develops in the United States. Our economy has suffered, primarily, through 1974-75, not because of the falling off of our domestic economy but because of exports, now reinforced by lower housing and some diminishing in the consumer demand rate.

The third point I want to make to the hon. gentleman from Oshawa-Whitby who brought this motion to our attention is the fact that in any economy there are time lags between the presentation of a budget or the enactment of legislation and how it works its way through an economy. Traditionally, the economists underestimate the time lag, as do politicians and journalists. The budget presented on November 18 is already in effect for the 1975 and 1976 years. As I said on budget night, we hoped it might take by the third and fourth quarters of 1975 and particularly by 1976. I repeat again that $3 billion to $4 billion is already injected into the economy by way of a total deficit of budgetary and non-budgetary requirement.

The crucial question in trying to analyse how best to achieve growth without exacerbating inflation is, when is the economy going to turn up and, particularly, when will the United States economy turn up? The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States expects a substantial growth in the fourth quarter of this year. If that is so, and there should be a similar effect for the Canadian economy, that is just when the added stimulus recommended by the hon. gentleman would begin to bite and would compound whatever inflationary tendencies were still in the economy. Those are issues against which I must exercise judgment and reflection and I must have better correlation in respect of the facts than I now have.

The hon. gentleman said that unemployment is 6.8 per cent. He said this is the highest it has been since the depression. That does not happen to be true. In terms of absolute numbers, he recognizes that the labour force now is larger than it was in the 1930s. He also recognizes that we had no figures: Statistics Canada, or its predecessor the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, did not start to publish unemployment statistics until 1953. We have no way of knowing what the percentage figures were during the depression. I can say to the hon. gentleman that in the early 1960s and 1970s—

Mr. Broadbent: I did not give the percentage. I gave the figure of some 800,000.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, but in terms of percentage of the labour force we had higher unemployment in 1962, 1961, 1960, 1959 and in some of the early 1950s. I am saying to the hon. gentleman that this is not the worst unemployment we have had since the depression. We must compare the men and women out of work with the total labour force. I can recall to him—and I take limited satisfaction from it, in view of the current human conditions—that this government has been interested in new jobs. In the last three years we and the Canadian economy have found one million new jobs for Canadians.

The hon. gentleman mentioned housing. In the budget, I said that this remains a fundamental requirement of the government. It is one of the prime thrusts in the budget. We expect, and will continue to do so with the co-operation of my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), to inject the necessary stimulus into the economy to attempt to reach the target of 210,000 new units and new starts.

Mr. Broadbent: You need more than 210,000.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We will argue that in a minute. I was impressed and, as a matter of fact, moved by the description the hon. gentleman gave on the state of poverty of this country. I share his concern. I say to him, again, that although we may disagree in respect of the approaches to a number of these issues, he has no monopoly on compassion. We are all trying to eradicate what is a blight on the Canadian scene.

I want to point out to him and to our colleagues in the House that we have done a great deal in an effort to protect those who are least able to defend themselves against economic cycles, against the erosion of inflation. We raised the old age pension and adjusted it against cost of living. We adjusted the guaranteed income supplement and increased it. We tripled family allowances and adjusted those against the rise in the cost of living to protect those families with small children, particularly those below the poverty line. We came up with the largest tax reduction in Canadian history, and 70 per cent of those reductions affect people with incomes of $10,000 or less. We eliminated what the hon. gentleman considered to be a regressive sales tax for all clothing, all food and all drink except alcohol. We do represent, after all, the party which brought in medicare and hospitalization programs and we are committed to a guaranteed annual income.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us about the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now I want to recall to the House some of the policies of the NDP if, perchance, by way of electoral accident, the hon. gentleman and his friends were ever to form a government in Canada. Hopefully, that is only remotely academic. In any event, I think the House deserves—

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, sir.

Mr. Stanfield: In respect of the American economy and the trend of that economy the minister referred to the view of the United States Secretary of the Treasury that there would be an upturn in the fourth quarter. When will the minister determine whether there will be an upturn in the fourth quarter? Will it be at the end of the fourth quarter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. gentleman knows me better than that, and also knows himself better than to take that question too seriously. I have given the best analysis I can at this stage of the situation. Since the hon. gentleman's party will in due course want to bring forward its own motion, for the moment I want to deal with the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I just hope, Mr. Speaker, that the time allocation is being adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I feel the House will agree to extend the time of the minister in the way he so generously did for me. I just want to say to the minister that unfortunately I cannot remain for the completion of his remarks; I have to visit one of his government's ambassadors. I did not want him to think that I was leaving because he was now getting into the most interesting part of his speech.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can forgive the hon. gentleman if he will give me the undertaking that he will read this speech in the morning. I recall that the House leader of the New Democratic Party spoke during second reading debate on the income tax bill on February 11, 1975, at which time he held up West Germany as a model for Canada to emulate. He said that if we had half the competence in managing our economy which West Germany has, we would be going somewhere. He stated that West Germany imports virtually all its petroleum, has the lowest rate of inflation in the world and has the fullest employment, but that this government, with all its resources, manages to maximize the worst of both evils. He said we have high inflation and virtually full unemployment.

That contention by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby indicates that, if anything, he is even more badly informed about the West Germany economy than about the Canadian economy. Without reflecting in any way on the management of the West German economy, let me point out that whatever success the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby attributes to it has been achieved primarily by fiscal and monetary policies that are totally contrary to those advocated by the New Democratic Party.

Conversely, let me point out that the policies the NDP is advocating are almost guaranteed to ensure that the performance of the Canadian economy would be very much worse than that of Germany or any other industrialized country. It is quite true that Germany has experienced significantly less inflation than most other industrialized nations. In large part this is the result of severe fiscal and monetary restraints which the government imposed on the economy early in 1973 and maintained until very recently. These restraints served to curtail sharply German economic growth.

German imports were also curtailed sharply, while its exports remained buoyant, which contributed to the substantial appreciation of the exchange value on the market which in turn helped to insulate Germany from inflation abroad. I might add that the moderate claims by German workers for increased wages and salaries have also contributed to achievement of Germany's moderate rate of inflation. Last October, the member for Oshawa-Whitby maintained the exercise of any restraint by Canadian trade unions was "totally insupportable". During 1974 the real gross national product in Germany rose only by 0.4 per cent, compared to the Canadian increase of 3.7 per cent. In 1973, Germany's real GNP rose by 5.3 per cent, compared to 6.8 per cent in Canada. Employment in Germany today is lower than it was in 1963. Unemployment has more than doubled in the past year, to 5.1 per cent, a figure that no doubt would be considerably higher if measured in the same way in Canada with our regional differentials. Germany has announced its intention of reducing its foreign migrant work force from 2.3 million to 1.5 million.

Does the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby really consider that we should have followed the German example in imposing tight fiscal and monetary restraints on the economy as much as two years ago? Would he consider that the consequent slow growth and sharply increased unemployment which would result in this country because of a very rapidly growing labour force would be a measure of the kind of competent economic management which he espouses? In his words, we would certainly be going somewhere, but hardly in the direction he advocates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What is the NDP position? I have some difficulty here, but I shall do my best to try to reconcile some of the economic pronouncements of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues. The fact is that the NDP has loudly and consistently clamoured for the adoption of policies which are the very antithesis of those followed by successive German governments, including the hon. member's fellow Democratic Socialists who make up the present German administration.

When did the NDP in this country ever advocate even the smallest measure of fiscal and monetary restraint? To the contrary, they have at all times advocated pulling out all the stops, dismantling the brakes and pushing the accelerator down to the floor. Their position at present is no exception to the rule. If anything, the policies they propose are more wildly expansionary and inflationary than any they have ever advocated before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Hon. members will recall that during the course of the same speech on February 11 in which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, House leader of the NDP, set up Germany as a model for us to follow, he also made a number of proposals which he claimed would deal simultaneously with the problems of unemployment and inflation. He proposed, first, a $400 tax credit for every Canadian family with two children regardless of whether they were liable for taxes. Second, he proposed payment by the federal government of 100 per cent of all labour costs for municipal public works programs.

Then, third, he proposed the abolition of the sales tax on automobiles after ordering the auto manufacturers to eliminate the price differential between Canadian and U.S. cars. Fourth, he proposed an unspecified increase in the basis OAS and the CPP to provide what he called adequate pensions. Fifth, he proposed an increase in federal civil service salaries equivalent as a minimum to the rise in the cost of living since the last contract was negotiated, plus the increase in economic growth, plus a cost of living adjustment for the future tied to the increase in the consumer price index.

The last two proposals constituted the program advocated by the NDP to disabuse anyone of the idea that it was suggesting for one minute that "nothing could be done about inflation." Of course, neither of these proposals would do anything about inflation. They might help some Canadians to live better with inflation, but they would do nothing to help bring it under control. On the contrary, these measures, together with the others proposed by the hon. member, would only serve to add fuel to the inflationary fire. What would be the cost to the federal treasury of the NDP proposals, in terms of increased expenditures and lost revenue? It seems they have no answer, but that is the least of their concern.

I remember very well that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) asked the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, during that speech, how much his $400 tax credit proposal would cost. The NDP House leader replied: "We do not have any precise figure for that." He went on to say:

> I can say with reasonably good authority, from a number of economists, that the total impact of this on the situation we are headed toward, would result in a very significant deficit in terms of the federal budget for the coming year. There is no doubt about that, but it is this kind of deficit in our current economic situation we think is not only justified but required.

Those were his words. Even from the NDP that adds up to an incredible piece of mumbo-jumbo. Here we have the principal spokesman in the House of Commons for the NDP telling us in one breath that he does not know how large a deficit would be created by the program his party advocates, and in the next breath telling us this deficit of large but undefined magnitude is exactly what our economy requires in the present situation. He does not know how big it will be, but boy, it is right for the country. Of course, I can understand the hon. member's difficulty in arriving at any estimate of the cost of the program his party advocates since many of the proposals are so vague as to be virtually meaningless. We have it on the authority of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and I am using his words, that the tax credit scheme alone——will mean that something like $4 billion will be put back into the bottom level of the economy, on a one-shot basis, to get this thing back on the rails.

That quotation will be found at page 3134 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker. Pulling another figure out of the air, he blithely calculated that a tax reduction of $4 billion would, to use his words—

—regenerate about $1.5 billion in taxes—

Leaving a net cost to the treasury of a mere $2.5 billion! To indicate just how well thought-out the NDP proposal is, let me point out that while the hon. member for New Westminster was suggesting that what was required was a tax cut of $4 billion, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) told the House on February 21, as reported at page 3450 of Hansard:

What is needed to stimulate the economy is another $1 billion or $2 billion in the hands of the people in the low income bracket.

Well, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville says $1 billion and his colleague from New Westminster says $4 billion. To the NDP, what is $3 billion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Then we have the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) who told the House on January 30, 1975, as reported at page 2752 of Hansard that he thinks, and I am using his words—

—The economy is essentially strong and healthy and not even the government can damage it very much.

He said that with his usual charming sense of humour. He went on to say that he had difficulty understanding how the Conservative proposal for a $500 million tax reduction would at the same time stimulate the economy and reduce inflation, as claimed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He indicated that what was required was not a tax reduction to stimulate the economy, but a change in the tax system to provide for a more even distribution of income. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge contended that the tax cuts proposed in the May and November budgets were "enormously regressive". We return to the view of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville who told the House on December 6, 1974, as reported at pages 2020 and 2021 of Hansard and I like these remarks because I was here to listen to them:

Our income tax system is now the most progressive in the world. It takes into account the needs of individuals. We should do the same sort of thing with other taxes.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge says our taxes are regressive, but not the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. To return to my main theme, let me point out that we have it on the authority of an unnamed aide to the NDP leader in the House, one of those researchers supported by Mr. Speaker's estimates, and we are all for that, though I do feel the NDP members ought to get together with the same researcher and make sure they are working on the same material—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —we have it from an unnamed aide to the NDP leader in the House, as reported in the Toronto Star of February 12, 1975, that the tax credit scheme would cost more than $4 billion—he did not say anything about regenerating taxes—and that a $5 billion estimate for the total NDP package probably was a little conservative. That is the NDP aide to the current House leader of the NDP. That may well prove to be the greatest understatement of the parliamentary year.

Let us accept, for the sake of argument, the NDP cost estimate for the tax credit of more than $4 billion. Let us abolish the sales tax on automobiles as proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. That is $400 million or so. That brings us close to about $4.5 billion right there. What about the cost of the increase in old age pensions? The hon. member was particularly vague about what he had in mind, but so far as the OAS alone is concerned, I suppose I am safe in assuming that he was not advocating anything less than that advocated by the leader of the NDP during the last election campaign, an increase in the OAS to $200 monthly and the reduction over a five year period of the eligible age from 65 to 60.

I am advised that just in the first year the cost of that proposal would be more than $2 billion, a cost that would escalate by two or three times that amount over the course of the five year period. What the NDP has in mind with regard to increasing the Canada Pension Plan, I hate to guess. Leaving that proposal aside, it is not difficult to bring the total cost of the tax credit, abolition of the auto sales tax and the increase in the OAS, to more than $6.5 billion.

I imagine that it is anybody's guess how much it would cost for the federal government to pick up the tab for all municipal public works labour costs as advocated by the leader of the NDP, but I might point out that the estimated municipal construction outlays this year, not including school construction costs, will total more than $1.6 billion. If our experience with the winter capital projects fund is any guide, then labour costs will amount to around 65 per cent of that total, which would involve a federal expenditure of about $1 billion. That would raise the grand total for the NDP program to $7.5 billion. That is over the $3 billion to $4 billion deficit already in force in the economy, so we are talking about a $10 billion package from the NDP.

I will not even try to estimate the cost of the federal public service wage package proposed by the member for Oshawa-Whitby. Nor will I try to guess what is involved in his proposal to double housing construction to some 400,000 units. The member for Oshawa-Whitby spoke of the government infusing "enough capital into the economy to allow for the building of 400,000 new housing units". I do not know whether he is proposing that the Bank of Canada simply turn the credit tap wide open so as to generate private mortgage funds to finance such construction, or whether he is proposing that the government do the whole job itself. Let me just point out, however, that Statistics Canada estimates that capital investment in housing will amount to $6.7 billion this year, and to double housing construction would require the investment of double that amount.

Some weeks ago it was reported that the leader of the NDP government in British Columbia had emphasized the need for "fiscal responsibility". It should be blatantly obvious that what is proposed by the NDP in this House is the ultimate in fiscal responsibility. To inject the kind of stimulus into the economy proposed by the NDP leader in the House would be like giving a person a massive overdose of speed pills with the same ultimately disastrous consequences.

When you are number three, it is easy to be all things to all people; it is easy to promise the moon and the sun and the stars. When you are number three you do not have to count the costs because you know there is no day of reckoning close at hand. Therefore you can go on making wild proposals that only make sense to Alice in Wonderland. Unlike Alice, however, the vast majority of Canadians are too preoccupied with the problems of unemployment and inflation. They do not live in wonderland and, happily, are too sensible and realistic to be taken in by schemes that are out of this world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought we would have had some indication from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) today of what he proposes to do to correct conditions which have 839,000 Canadians out of work at the present time. Rather than the minister making fun of the speeches made by other members of this House, I would have thought he would have attempted to explain the fiscal irresponsibility of his own tenure of office. Rhetoric is fine, but let us not forget the fact that for three years this minister has contributed to the 30 per cent inflation that has occurred in this country. In the previous three years, his predecessor, Mr. Benson, was able to keep the rate to 11.5 per cent.

An hon. Member: Big Ben and Little John.

Mr. Stevens: It is ludicrous for a Minister of Finance with this minister's record to talk about fiscal irresponsibility. He likes to ask everybody for ideas and presumably he is shopping the world for new ideas now. Certainly he seems to like our ideas, so we will offer a few today. I find it interesting that the minister is so at sea in March, 1975, that he cannot hazard a new guess as to what our real growth rate for the current year will be. Our financial institutions are willing to hazard a guess, various economic research institutions will hazard a guess, other countries are hazarding guesses—but this Minister of Finance is playing the political game; he will not stand up and say that he believes real growth will be "X" per cent.

When you look at the record, it is perhaps easy to understand why he is a little hesitant to do so, because whether it has been on his own advisers' advice or on the advice of the mysterious group of seven, his record has not been too good in estimating the future fortunes of the country. In May, in his budgetary speech, the minister stated that real growth in 1974 would be 5 per cent. In November he had scaled it down to 4 per cent to 4½ per cent. We know now that the actual growth was 3.7 per cent in 1974. In the November budget the minister stated that he anticipated real growth would be 4 per cent in 1975, and he said this was partly due to the stimulus he was putting into the economy.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? The minister will not tell us, and I honestly believe that he does not know. He is drifting as he has drifted for three years. The Conference Board of Canada believes that the real growth in this country for 1975 will only be 1 per cent. The Bank of Montreal believes it is going to be 1.3 per cent. Certainly it is going to be much less than the 4 per cent mentioned by the Minister of Finance in November. I mention this because I believe we have to accept the fact that economic conditions have changed since November of last year. The minister admits that his November 18 budget was based on forecasts that have not materialized. That is his gentle way of admitting he has made a mistake. In my opinion, it is a colossal mistake. In the meantime, we have bought ourselves a recession the like of which has not been seen since the 1930s.

We, of course, are pleased that the NDP caucus, in their motion today, have at least joined us in pressing the government to rectify the inadequacy of their present economic stance. Let me reiterate our position. We have been pressing this government constantly to take some action to relieve the unsatisfactory situation that exists in this country. At second reading and at committee stage of Bill C-49 we moved that the government cut personal income taxes by $500 million. Such a cut would result in a saving for most Canadian taxpayers of $60 to $150 in this year alone. Unfortunately, the government blocked both our moves to give that tax break to Canadians.

During earlier debate on budgetary enabling legislation we pressed the government to reduce the sales tax on building materials. This would have meant a cost saving of $380 million to the construction industry which at the present time is bearing a disproportionate share of the current slump. During the last election campaign we advocated that interest in excess of 8 per cent payable on mortgages on private homes should be deductible from income as an expense before the payment of income tax. We reiterate that position today and urge the government to accept our proposal or at least to accept the principle that some portion of mortgage interest should be a tax deductible item. We estimate that our suggestion would amount to a concession to overtaxed present and future home owners of approximately $250 million per year.

To accommodate these tax cuts or concessions of approximately $1.1 billion, the government can, should and must curtail its spending programs by a like amount. This government has demonstrated that it cannot discipline itself on spending matters. Parliament must therefore accept the responsibility of restraining the government. This, frankly, we cannot do without the support of the majority of the members of the House, including members of the Liberal caucus.

The irresponsible record of the Minister of Finance is clear. His imprudent handling of the economy, or at least the government's reckless programs involving spending, have contributed to our current unsatisfactory economic conditions. The Minister of Finance complains these days that he and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) are out-voted in cabinet when they attempt to restrain government spending. Perhaps these two ministers need our sympathy as they attempt to function within a cabinet filled with starry-eyed dreamers who, for short-sighted political advantage, jeopardize the very foundations of our way of life.

For the benefit of hon. members who did not attend last Tuesday's meeting of the miscellaneous estimates committee, I point out that at that meeting the minister was pressed to explain why he has been making certain statements to the private sector in this country. He was asked why he had said at outside meetings that he is being out-voted in cabinet when he tries to restrain spending. In answer he said:

> You know, Mr. Chairman, one of the first men I talked to after having been sworn into this portfolio was Dr. John Deutsch, then the principal of Queen's University and the former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, a good friend of mine. He indicated, and it was not the first time I heard the view, that in democracies today there are no such things as economic cycles. There are political cycles, depending on the pressures of public policy and the spending on the parliamentary or congressional process at the time. Certainly we were under political imperatives where the pressures are stronger in a minority rather than a majority parliament. Those happen to be facts of life.

I asked the minister:

> You wanted to be re-elected.

The minister replied:

> Those happen to be the facts of life.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not think the hon. gentleman should quote selectively from the committee report. I ask him to read the entire report and he will get the sense of what I had in mind, because he is misinterpreting and deliberately putting another construction on what I said. I also ask him to indicate to the House where I have spoken publicly about alleged conflicts within the cabinet. The hon. member is playing a game, the game of selective citations and selective quotations.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. That is a point of debate.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I was quoting directly from remarks as recorded in the Minutes and Proceedings of Evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. The minister went on to say, as recorded in the Minutes and Proceedings of Evidence:

> The parliamentary structure at the time reflects it, the types of expenditures that were approved.

Putting it simply, the Minister of Finance says that political expediency takes precedence over economic responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps the minister will set the record straight and tell us why we are in our present economic plight. The fact is that the government, in its lust to retain power, jeopardized the very economic foundations of the nation. Surely the minister must ask himself why he has done so poorly, during his years in office, in coping with his colleagues compared with his predecessor in office, Mr. Benson. For example, the minister will, in the period 1972 to 1976 allow government spending to double from $17.7 billion to $34.9 billion. I say this on the basis of the minister's own budgetary statements. Government spending will be twice as great as that at the end the previous four years, four years in which the much criticized Mr. Benson at least held government spending increases to half their present rate in percentage terms. How can the minister live with his colleagues in cabinet?

The Minister of Finance indicated that government expenditures, on a national accounts basis, would rise from $23.7 billion in the fiscal year 1974 to $34.9 billion in 1976. That rise in spending represents an increase of $11.2 billion in two years, or 47 per cent. That $11.2 billion increase almost equals the total average budget brought down by Mr. Benson. Let us not stop there: let us compare the record of both ministers of finance. When Mr. Benson left office he had succeeded in reducing the rise in the cost of living in this country to 2.9 per cent per year. The average rate of increase for three years had been 3.6 per cent per year. The rate of increase under the present minister has never been below 4.8 per cent and the average for his three years in office is 7.8 per cent—nearly 8 per cent.

As well, the unemployment rate has been higher, on average, in the past three years than in the previous three years. Our current account trade balance has shifted from a three-year average surplus of $165 million under Mr. Benson to a three-year average deficit of over $1 billion under the present minister. At the same time, real economic growth in the country has not changed significantly. Think of the handicap we are working under. Real growth under the régimes of both ministers of finance has been relatively the same if taken on a per annum basis. But, today we face the impossible situation of high unemployment, high inflation rates and a deteriorating trade balance. I suggest that these conditions have been aggravated by a government which has lost control of its spending perspective, has artificially stimulated the money supply in this country by over 20 per cent per year, and has through indecisive leadership so confused the business community that they no longer have confidence to commit funds to long-term investment.

Having created this climate, having tolerated an inflation rate of 30 per cent in the past three years, compared with one of 11.5 per cent in the previous three years, the Minister of Finance should not now be turning to labour and criticizing the working-man, who naturally is trying to protect himself from the ravages caused in part by this government. I suggest that if the government restrained their own spending and their demands on the economy, the private sector would look after itself and the Minister of Finance would not have to create a bogeyman to divert attention from the real problems in this country. The problem is that this government has acted irresponsibly in monetary, fiscal and economic field. We all know of speeches which the Minister of Finance has delivered to labour union leaders, in which he has chastised them and said, "Hold your wage demands down." Surely it would have been much more fair for the Minister of Finance to have gone to those labour leaders, laid his cards on the table and said, "Sorry, fellows. In order to keep power and win re-election we tampered with the economy. We over-inflated money. We spent too much. We caused inflation and we hope you will understand." That would be an honest presentation if the Minister of Finance would make it. Instead, the problem having been created, he goes to labour and says, "Hold the line, men." I suggest the government should show the first leadership in holding the line, and I do not think a 43 per cent increase in government spending in two years is holding the line.

Governments are elected to govern. Leaders should lead. It is time the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada gave clear direction to our economy so that our capital markets could get on with the job of righting the imbalance that has grown in corporate liquidity throughout the land. Included in that direction must be encouragement to allow interest rates in this country to fall. Our interest rate structure is not falling at the same rate as interest rate structures in other countries. This situation should not be allowed to continue. The Bank of Canada should show leadership by reducing the bank rate from its present level. While doing this, debt capital should be encouraged to enter the country, especially from nations which have been selling us their oil. I hope during the trip which the minister apparently intends to take to certain oil countries he will endeavour to negotiate some debt loans in order to improve our dollar position.

Present government policy of maintaining relatively high interest rates in Canada to support our dollar will lay this economy low if it continues. We are being faced with colossal deflationary pressures. The nation will better respond to these pressures if the economy is allowed to enjoy lower interest rates, especially on mortgages which people have to handle on their homes. The Minister of Finance is undoubtedly aware of the current liquidity crunch in business. He must be aware, for example, that the short-term loan to bond ratio has risen from .59 in 1962, which was looked on as a normal ratio, to .72 in 1970 and it is now at an alarming .90. Other corporate liquidity ratios are equally alarming.

As I said at the beginning, economic conditions have worsened dramatically since November 18. In his budget speech on that day, the Minister of Finance stated:

> The situation may change. If so, I will not hesitate to recommend a change in course. But this is how I see the issues today—and these are the policies I believe to be suitable today.

The situation has changed. It is time for the minister to act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the hon. member shall complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Why don't you say something.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Perhaps the most important thing I could say is, why doesn't the government resign and let us get another government? It is time for the minister to act. We believe he should act by lowering the tax rate in Canada in three important areas, namely, a reduction in personal income tax, elimination of the sales tax on building materials, and the allowing of interest on mortgages over 8 per cent to be a deductible expense before paying income tax. The minister and the government should give leadership in restraint by insisting on less government spending. Apparently it is even more important that the minister's colleagues accept this restraint. As I have already mentioned, we have learned that this minister has little clout within cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: I mentioned the unfortunate position that the minister and apparently the President of the Treasury Board are in, but we at least have the group of seven off the minister's back. Freed from the group of seven, I would think he could be a little more decisive. We believe interest rates should be encouraged to fall to lower levels, but above all we believe it is essential that this government start giving leadership in the economic field. It is time the charade of consensus chats ended. It is time that decisions were made. It is time that ad hockery ended.

● (1650)

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the House, the member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), has introduced today a motion dealing with three specific points—increased unemployment, shortage of housing and poverty. The Leader of the New Democratic Party is merely asking the government to introduce within two weeks a new budget to cope with the situation. I wonder whether he is serious when making such a suggestion, because in my opinion to ask point-blank the government to introduce within two weeks a budget with provisions to control unemployment, shortage of housing and poverty is Canada is to expect a great deal from this Liberal government.

We are now experiencing in Canada a rate of unemployment which is far too high. For the past few months, there has been a shortage of consumer goods. There is no reason why the rate of unemployment should be so high and we know that its cost is inflation.

Whenever questioned in the House, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) or any other minister invariably answer, as in every one of their public statements: We cannot help it, it is an international problem. The same thing goes on in the United States, in Europe and in Japan.

A few days ago, I was attending the question period in Canberra. The first question the right hon. Prime Minister of Australia was asked dealt with unemployment and inflation. The answer of Prime Minister Whitlam was exactly the same as the answer of the Prime Minister of Canada when he is asked similar questions; the same thing goes on in America, in Europe and in Japan. Now that proves that the government feels unable to complete its fight against inflation and its attempts to bring unemployment back to a more reasonable level.

Madam Speaker, since 1962 when I first came to this House, the government has initiated all kinds of fights:

fight against poverty, fight against unemployment, fight against inflation. But the more the government fights those problems, the greater they become.

Madam Speaker, I could almost ask the Minister of Finance to cease fighting, since the more he fights, the worse things turn out. Maybe the time has come when we should look for other solutions, and find out the causes of that excessive and overly rapid unemployment rise and all the resulting problems.

In 1966, I believe, the Economic Council of Canada declared that a yearly 2 per cent rate of inflation and price increases could be termed acceptable. Our annual rate of inflation now is about 12 per cent. This is unacceptable. It annihilates the results of every federal, provincial, municipal, corporate or individual undertaking.

Inflation is robbery, because it deprives the worker of purchasing power, and mainly because it destroys his savings. It is no longer possible to put money aside for bad years, because inflation destroys revenues that could be gained from savings. Inflation destroys not only revenues, but savings. Solutions have long been overdue in this area.

Housing is a real disaster. Housing starts declined to catastrophic levels, and in a few months rents will be on the upswing because housing will become increasingly scarce. The Minister of Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) travels across Canada, making speeches and statements before almost every builders' and financial clubs or associations. He keeps repeating that the government is trying to increase housing starts. Obviously this has no effect on builders or those in need of housing, for the simple reason that people cannot afford the ever higher cost of those houses. We have one more disaster there, and I find it hard to believe that government measures announced by the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of Urban Affairs will spur housing starts, or that some day every Canadian will own his own house.

This brings me to the main point of my remarks, proverty. It has been plaguing us for quite some time. I have here reports dating from 1963. This one by Maurice Huot appeared in Le Droit of Ottawa; it indicates official agencies have been set up to eliminate poverty or rather hide it.

As University of Alberta vice-president Malcolm Taylor said in 1963 at the 43rd Annual Convention of the Canadian Welfare Council: the poor are still with us in Canada. The Ontario Federation of Labour, at a convention in October of 1964, stated after an inquiry:

> Almost 2,500,000 Canadians, in other words, over 13 per cent of the population, live . . .

—or lived, at that time—

> . . . in dire poverty, and 1,500,000 others barely survive.

The report added:

> . . . 2,500,000 other Canadians lack comfort or some of the basic needs.

That was in 1964.

● (1700)

Now, in 1975, despite all the achievements of science, we face situations far worse that those. Indeed, while about 13 per cent of Canadians then lived in extreme poverty, their numbers reach roughly 20 per cent today. In a recent report published by the Canadian Welfare Council on poor children, we are told that 25 per cent of all children in Canada live in poverty. I shall come back to this later on.

Now, Madam Speaker, let us go back to 1963-64. I have here the statement of a journalist, since then become minister, made precisely before the Canadian Welfare Council. On May 30, 1963, one could read the following news in La Presse:

> Taking offence at the sight of the poor who still dare exist, modern society covers its face not to see them.

The editor-in-chief of La Presse at that time, Mr. Gérard Pelletier, made that statement:

> . . . to a specialized audience, the members of the Canadian Welfare Council, at the dinner which brought to a close the council's annual general assembly.
> Mr. Pelletier reproached them their modesty and silence, claiming that they should cry out and shock the public with the scandal of poverty in Canada.
> "Misery in Canada will not disappear before it becomes unbearable to most Canadians. For the time being, we can live very well with it, thank you."
> "The fact that there is no research being carried out into the possible ways of destroying it is due proof that we accept it. Where are the social laboratories we need, where scientists well provided with tools and funds would try to identify its causes and propose remedies, just as physicians by the thousands are doing now with cancer and rheumatism?"

Would poverty be a sickness?

> "Poverty disturbs us whenever we think about it, but this is something which happens to us less and less."

Later on, the La Presse editor added:

> ". . . Let us admit it, we have removed poverty and those who are faced with it from society; we have surreptitiously established, through the indirect means of bank accounts and the idea of solvency, a system of segration as implacable as that instituted by racist southerners, although it may not seem quite so odious at first glance."

At the time, the newspaperman who made this statement was the editor of the Montreal newspaper La Presse. He is a minister now, but we no longer hear from him the type of statements he used to make as a newspaperman. Yet, he had been blaming the Canadian Welfare Council "for not crying out loud enough". Well, although the very same Canadian Welfare Council has cried out very loud and still does, the government remains unfeeling.

Another one, who made a splendid speech in 1964 as a member of parliament, is also a minister now.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Basford) had said that—

> . . . in many areas in Canada there are nuclei of poverty where people derive very few advantages from the present social security legislation. "Within this affluent society we live in, when we have never had it so good, there is a group of people who are in dire need of government aid," . . .

He had made this statement before the Liberal National Council. He is a high official, Madam Speaker, who apparently would have a lot to say in the present Cabinet. What is poverty? Professor Gosselin answers:

> Poverty is the situation people are in when, owing to lack of resources, they cannot reasonably satisfy needs that are considered essential according to standards and values determined by the environment they live in. According to those standards, the needs and services regarded as necessary for a minimum decent life are not within the reach of the poor, are beyond their material circumstances and cannot be satisfied by the resources available to them.

That is a definition.

For the National Welfare Council . . . A poor family or individual is one who must spend more than 62 per cent of its or his income to meet its or his vital needs: food, housing and clothing.

I believe that this is also a very good definition of poverty. It is reported that 20 per cent of Canadian families and individuals are in that situation, Madam Speaker. This is why I agree with the motion of the New Democratic Party to request urgently not parsimoniously given measures, but effective measures to solve once and for all the problem of poverty.

In the report submitted recently by the National Welfare Council on poor children in Canada, it is said that, according to Statistics Canada following the 1971 census:

One quarter of all Canadian children (24.5%) are now living in poverty.

This situation has an impact on the whole development of the child, on all his education, on all his training. As concerns health, for instance, and I quote:

The implementation in Canada of the Health Insurance Plan in the 1960's aimed at giving the whole population of Canada access to medical services. Obviously, this goal has not yet been attained. One study entitled "Economic Class and Access to Physician Services under Public Medical Care Insurance", which examined the use of medical services in Saskatchewan between 1963 and 1968, concluded that:

"After six years of experience with a medical insurance system, low income classes still have less access to physician services."

Madam Speaker, we can see the same thing in the province of Quebec, without having to make an inquiry. You only have to visit any one of our hospitals to realize it. I quote:

Why? You cannot change old behaviour patterns overnight. If a mother must take her child to see the doctor and has to take a taxi to do so, the taxi will cost her something.

That is obvious. But if the mother is poor and has a low income, this becomes important.

She may also have to pay a babysitter.

And if the illness requires transport by ambulance, it is catastrophic because it is then very expensive and no public service, in the province of Quebec at least, pays for transport by ambulance. I quote further:

. . . If she sees the doctor, she will perhaps have drugs to pay for, because drugs are free for only a few people. Thus the so-called "free" access is not really free.

The sources of these health problems can be found even before birth: the child from a poor family has 50 per cent more chances to be born prematurely . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allocated to him is over.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to advise the House of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—National Defence; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Prime Minister's office.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order not related to the present debate. I saw the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen) in deep consultation with the government House leader, who was going to come into the House at around five o'clock to make an announcement of interest. I wonder if he knows when the government House leader will be back, and can he give us any exciting forewarning of what he is going to say?

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, my information is that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has played his usual statesmanlike role and accepted the suggestion of the hon. member, and that tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-50.

Mr. Baldwin: Further to the point of order, the only reason I rise again is to say that if more ministers were statesmanlike and accepted suggestions from this side of the House, this would be a better parliament. In addition, we might have to have an order of the House discharging the order for tomorrow and the days next week which are set down as allotted days. I assume the proposal would be that any consequential order of the House that is required to carry these proposals into effect would be made. As the matter now stands, there is set down on the order paper for Friday next, which is tomorrow, an allotted day, and also on Tuesday and Wednesday. I think part of the arrangement is that these days should not be allotted days, certainly not tomorrow. I think we would require an order to this effect before six o'clock. I may be wrong in that, but I assume it would be acceptable.

● (1710)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would think the hon. member's suggestion, in the present mood, would be acceptable. We would be willing to agree to an order of the House discharging the opposition day and deferring it to another day, provided we proceed with Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill. If we finish that bill, we will be in a better position to advise the House on its business. In any event, we agree to that order of the House.

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET TO IMPROVE CANADIAN ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House urges the government to introduce, within two weeks, a new budget, for the purpose of dealing with the increasingly dangerous state of the Canadian economy, and specifically to cope with mounting unemployment, the housing needs of our people, and the scourge of poverty.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I recognize the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think our friend in the Creditiste party had finished what he wanted to say. Perhaps the House would give him a few minutes in order that he may complete his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: It seems to me I did not have much time available. I would have had many other things to say but I have been told that my time was over and I no longer have my notes.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The minister says you may continue.

Mr. Laprise: I no longer have my notes, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, I think my notes have left too. However, I am pleased to be able to refer to notes of remarks made by my friend and colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), because I think they contain very largely they kind of answers we need to the problems this country faces, in spite of some comments to the contrary.

Mr. Stevens: What notes are those?

Mr. Abbott: Having regard to the motion proposed by the leader of the NDP, while I think the spirit in which he introduced it, with his manifest concern for the unfortunate in the country, was obviously sincere, I was disappointed that apart from venting his spleen he did not propose any formula that might be used to improve the financial conditions of the country.

An hon. Member: That is normal and has been the case since 1968.

Mr. Abbott: Right. He simply stood there and shouted in a loud voice that there were people suffering in poverty and the Minister of Finance had failed abjectly to meet the problems of this country. There was no suggestion whatever as to how he or his colleagues would deal with the situation. Their dwindling numbers in this House would give credence to the belief that the Canadian people got their message and found it wanting.

As to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), he did make a few more substantive comments, but I would share the view of the Minister of Finance that by the cunning method of extracting quotations he attempted to persuade the House and the country that the cabinet is deeply divided and the Minister of Finance is engaged in a losing struggle with his colleagues.

Mr. Stevens: They were the minister's own words.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Show me those words.

Mr. Abbott: I suggest that is almost as much wishful thinking as was his final cry, that the only solution was for the government to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: I assure the hon. member that his cry was heard throughout the country last year, and a suitable response was given us on July 8.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: I am only surprised that the hon. member for York-Simcoe got back.

Mr. Abbott: That was an unpleasant surprise, but you can't win them all. I made reference to the comments of the Minister of Finance today and I should like to refer briefly to some words he delivered in a speech in Toronto not very long ago. These are brought to mind by the evident attitude of hon. members opposite, particularly the hon. member for York-Simcoe, which would seem to suggest or imply that Canada is an impoverished island in a sea of prosperity, with the rest of the world suffering none of the problems this country has. In fact, the opposite is true. The hon. member indicated that the unemployment rate in this country is 6.8 per cent, but he did not tell the House that the United States rate of unemployment is 8.5 per cent; that the unemployment rate in the state of Michigan is over 20 per cent and in Detroit it is 45 per cent. He does not tell us about those rates. Perhaps he does not know about them, or if he knows about them he is not prepared to tell us.

Mr. Stevens: What about Germany? Give us a few of the European unemployment rates.

Mr. Abbott: The minister, in his speech in Toronto, said:

The fact is, however, that the world is confronted by a series of complex and difficult problems without precedent in our history. Governments of many countries have joined together in an intensive effort to devise ways and means of overcoming the difficulties confronting them. But there are no easy answers and no instant solutions. Cosmetic politics should not be confused with effective leadership, nor should action just for the sake of "doing something". We shouldn't forget that in the uncertain situation facing us there is always the danger of doing the wrong thing, making our problems just that much worse. There are, for example, those today who seems to feel that this is a time for sacrifice and for donning sackcloth and ashes in pursuit of that old-time religion, as it has been referred to south of the border. That was the approach adopted by many governments but not in this country.

I suggest the Minister of Finance has disclosed to the House the extraordinarily serious difficulties faced by this country, both in his budget of November 18 and subsequently today. He has never failed to disclose frankly the real problems that face Canada. The Minister of Finance has not tried to gloss over the problems we face and has not tried to suggest they are going to be cured by easy slogans or partisanship of the type demonstrated today by the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

I suggest that other voices have been heard, not his alone, such as the voice of the DECD which has forecast that the expansion in the Canadian economy this year will outstrip that of any other economy in the world. The fact is that reputable people in the business community such as Earle McLaughlin, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, have paid tribute to Canada's performance and its governmental policies. Let me refer to what Mr. McLaughlin has stated. He said that the success can be attributed to the avoidance of economically crippling price and wage controls, the adoption of a deliberate policy of encouraging increased supply to combat inflation, increased output of employment through tax cuts and other incentives aimed at encouraging expanded business capital investment, the maintenance of a reasonably accommodating monetary policy which forestalled the severe credit experienced south of the border, and the maintenance since 1970 of a floating exchange rate.

This is in very real contrast to the comments we heard today by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. In spite of the problems this country faces, more responsible observers have acknowledged the fact that there is no country in the world today whose finances are better managed. The question is not whether the economy is in the strongest possible shape. We are not suggesting today that expenditures have not risen at a very high rate both in government and elsewhere. We are not implying that there are not problems and we are not suggesting that everything that has been done by this government is perfect.

In the area of housing, I hope that in future budgets there will be steps taken that are urgently required to stimulate the housing market in this country. In fact, I hope measures are taken to stimulate the housing market prior to any future budget. The hon. member for York-Simcoe referred to a $500 million cut in taxes and suggested that that had been recommended by his party. Where were his recommendations during the last election? All we had during the last election were recommendations that the country be placed in a straitjacket, that tight monetary policies be enacted, that the budget be balanced and that there be consumer credit and wage and price controls. This was rejected. The circumstances have changed, and of course the wise and perceptive critics—they certainly are experienced critics—of the opposition have decided that new policies are in order and are attempting to suggest they have already recommended those policies even though the reverse is true.

Mr. Stevens: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Abbott: I am not so sure my hon. friend would recognize facts. The fact is that in 1974, in the first three quarters of the year the disposable income of the average Canadian, income after the payment of direct taxes and after dealing with the impact of inflation, was 4.8 per cent over the level of the year before, in contrast to a decline in the United States. This is a fact.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Stevens: How about the last quarter?

Mr. Abbott: How about the last quarter in the United States? The point is that relative to the whole industrial world, Canada has out-performed those countries and is being better managed by this government.

An hon. Member: Balderdash.

Mr. Abbott: Madam Speaker, I know there are other members of the opposition who are anxious to tell us what is wrong with the country. I do not wish to take up their time. All I shall say is that the country at large, the international community and almost every sound and sensible observer does not agree with the hon. member for York-Simcoe that our Minister of Finance lacks clout.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). It seemed to me he said exactly three things. First, he said this country is doing all right. The last speaker said the same thing. Second, he said we are doing better than most other countries. Third, he stated that we will do even better late in 1975 when the United States recession bottoms out. He brought forward as authority for that opinion the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, William Simon, with whom he has been meeting during the last couple of days.

Let us consider the three arguments the minister has propounded. He said that, really, we are doing all right and that things are going relative well. When the minister says we are doing all right, what does he mean? The facts are that there are well over 600,000 unemployed this month and that the real rate of unemployment in this country is over 8 per cent. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment for February was 6.7 per cent, one of the highest unemployment rates we have had since the end of World War II.

When the minister introduced his budget last November he predicted that Canada would have a growth rate of from 4 per cent to 5 per cent in 1975. The fact, as we predicted at that time, is the recession which the United States was into last November has since turned into a real depression and has totally destroyed the unrealistic prediction the minister made as to our growth for 1975.

On March 5, 1975, the Toronto Globe and Mail reported that Canada's gross national product, discounting the effects of higher prices, grew only by 3.7 per cent in 1974 according to figures prepared by Statistics Canada. That might be compared with a real growth of 6.8 per cent in 1973, a 5.8 per cent increase in GNP in 1972, and a 5.6 per cent increase in 1971. In other words, in 1974 we had one of the lowest growth rates we have had for many years. What makes this even worse is that the GNP for the fourth quarter, on a seasonally adjusted basis, was up by only .7 per cent—less than 1 per cent. In terms of real growth, the quarter dropped by 1.3 per cent compared with the preceding quarter. This marked the sharpest quarterly decline since the recession of 1960 and 1961.

After a strong first quarter and no growth in the second and third, the economy was operating in the fourth quarter at about the same level as in the fourth quarter of 1973. Those are the facts. This country is in real difficulty. The minister argued that we are doing better than most countries. The real question in fact is, are we really doing better than other countries and are we doing as well as we can in a country as wealthy as Canada? No other country in the western industrial world except the United States has as high a rate of unemployment as Canada. As I indicated last month, the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 6.7 per cent, a real rate of 8 per cent. There is hardly a country in the western industrial world which has a rate of unemployment even half that of Canada except the United States.

The minister has opposed the idea of having a more expansionary budget by arguing that the proposals made by the NDP, by many economists in the business sector of this country and by academic and labour economists would supposedly further fuel inflation. One would think we were speaking of a country in which there is no real inflation. In fact, we have had the highest rate of unemployment in the last six months that this country has seen in many years, and we had an inflationary rate last year of almost 12 per cent. The minister rejected any proposal to expand the economy because he felt he must deal with inflation, but he has not done this.

The minister speaks of the programs the government has initiated to help the needy. The fact is that the 12 per cent inflation in the last year has been particularly difficult for people in the lower income brackets because the inflationary rate for them is substantially more than 12 per cent, since they spend the bulk of their income on the basic necessities of life such as food, the cost of which is up probably 18 per cent, and shelter and fuel which have gone up more than 12 per cent. Another point we must keep in mind is that all the programs of the Liberal government in respect of redistributing wealth in this country have had absolutely no effect.

According to figures released by Statistics Canada, in 1957 the lowest fifth of the income earners in this country received only 4.2 per cent of the gross national product. The highest fifth received 41.4 per cent of the total production. The last year for which I have figures shows that the lowest fifth of the people in 1971 received less than they received in 1957. They received only 3.6 per cent of the total production of this country, while the highest fifth received 43 per cent. In other words the poor became relatively poorer in the years from 1957 to 1971, while the upper fifth, the rich, became richer.

Senator Croll's poverty committee, certainly no flaming, wild eyed group of radicals—no socialists there—has estimated that in 1973 the poverty line for a family of four was $6,990. A very large percentage of the people in Canada, 25 per cent or more, earn less than that, and that is the situation we face.

My colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), referred to the study released a few days ago by the National Council on Welfare, a body established by this government, which has its offices in a government building. In a report which was issued last week entitled "Poor Kids" it estimates that out of 6,750,000 children under the age of 16, 1,650,000,or 24.5 per cent, are living in poverty. That is the situation which the Minister of Finance and other Liberals tell us is satisfactory and adequate, and say that we have never had it so good.

Mr. Cullen: Who said that?

Mr. Orlikow: The minister told us that we were doing as well as we could do.

Mr. Cullen: He didn't say that.

Mr. Orlikow: That was the whole tenor of this argument.

Mr. Cullen: You weren't listening.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course I was listening. If hon. members do not like the facts I extrapolate and the observations I make, I am sorry. The facts are there. I did not make the calculations. I did not appoint the National Council on Welfare. That council says 24.5 per cent of the children in this country are living in poverty. I say that that is a disgrace. I say that the government could have, and should have taken steps to change that situation.

The last argument the minister made was that we really did not need an expansionary budget, and we should not be so concerned because our economy is tied to the United States—that is true, unfortunately—and that the United States economy will begin to improve in the last quarter of 1975. That assumption has been challenged by almost every economist in the United States—not radical economists, not socialist economists, but economists such as John Kenneth Galbraith, Paul Samuelson and Arthur Okun, economists who have worked for United States governments, who say that not only is the United States faced with a recession at the present time, but that in fact the United States is into a depression the like of which it has not seen since the 1930's.

Unemployment in the United States is higher than in Canada; 8.2 per cent of American workers are unemployed. That figure is higher than President Ford's economic adviser, Mr. Greenspan, estimated it would be two months ago. Very good and cautious economists in the United States are estimating that the unemployment rate will, in all likelihood, go over 9 per cent, and possibly approach 10 per cent. We have a situation in the United States where President Ford, an economic conservative for all his political life, which goes back more than a quarter of a century, faced by the extremely difficult situation in the United States, has proposed tax cuts which would mean a deficit of $20 billion. That proposal has been rejected, not just by the Democratic majorities in the House of Representatives and the Senate, but it has also been rejected as being too little and too late by the economists whom I have already mentioned—by J. K. Galbraith, Paul Samuelson and Arthur Okun, who have argued that what the United States needs in order to get people back to work is a budget deficit of $50 billion in 1975.

That is the kind of proposal we have made and we are making again today. We have argued that this country does not need to have an unemployment rate of 6.7 per cent seasonally adjusted—8.2 per cent in real figures—that this country does not need to have nearly three quarters of a million people unemployed, and that this country has the resources to put people back to work. How can that be done? It can be done by a tax cut—but not the kind of tax cut the minister implemented, which has meant for people in the middle and upper income brackets a cut of from $500 to $750 a year—those are not the people who need the tax cut. People earning $20,000 to $30,000 per year do not need a tax cut, because if those people are given a tax cut they are likely to save the money.

We need a tax cut for people in the lower income brackets who, when faced with the 12 per cent increase in the cost of living last year, and probably as much in 1975, have had to cut their standard of living, have had to cut back on the kind of food they buy, and on the purchase of homes and automobiles. We need a tax cut for the kind of people for whom the minister's tax cut has meant a tax benefit of $150 a year. We need a tax credit for people whose incomes are so low that they do not pay income tax.

Instead we have had tax cuts, not just of $750 in income tax for those in the middle and upper income brackets, but larger tax cuts through the kind of provision for not paying taxes on up to $1,000 in income earned from investments, stocks, savings bonds and so on, and we have had tax exemptions for people putting $1,000 a year into saving toward buying a house. Those are not the people who need the tax cuts. People at the bottom need tax cuts. They also need government programs of expansion.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) have talked about a goal of building 210,000 housing units this year, when there are tens of thousands of people in the lower income brackets still living in housing which, in the year 1975, is a disgrace. We talk about 210,000 housing units when we have tens of thousands of people in the lumber industry in British Columbia, Ontario and the maritime provinces who are unemployed because we are not building enough houses.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) allow a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Cullen: Is the hon. member suggesting that the market in Canada could meet all the requirements about which he is talking? Would he not be prepared to concede that it is the American market that is in a slump, and that most of the jobs that have been created are due to that particular market?

Mr. Orlikow: Of course I am not suggesting that the Canadian housing market, even at our suggested level of 400,000 units, could put all the people back to work. But a hell of a lot of them would be put back to work if we were building 400,000 units. What bothers me is not just that the minister's objective is too low but that we are not coming anywhere near it. The number of housing starts in February was down by 44 per cent from the same month in 1974. If the number for last February were projected over 1975 it would not produce 210,000 homes but 157,000.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We can pass the bill that is in front of the House.

Mr. Orlikow: The bill before the House will not build a home, and the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) should know that. What will build homes is a reduction in interest rates on mortgages, with no further incentives to the mortgage companies and banks. What will provide housing units is a real federal program for building public housing.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Also provincial.

Mr. Orlikow: We must build public housing for those people who need it. The money allocated for public housing by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs for 1975 is down in every province, including Manitoba. I want to tell the hon. member for St. Boniface that the amount of money to be provided for public housing in Manitoba by the federal government in 1975 is down $1 million from the amount provided in 1974.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I hope they use it all.

Mr. Orlikow: They have always used it all. We need a program to provide houses for people who are really in need, not a program to encourage the few people on the fringe, which is what AHOP will do. We need a government program with government money put into building homes. Where will that money come from, Madam Speaker? The savings of the Canadian people have never been as high as in the last year. Banks, mortgage companies and trust companies all have more money than they ever had before, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if I could have one more minute, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there agreement for the hon. member to finish his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What we need is a government with the courage to say to the banks, insurance companies and trust companies that a substantial percentage of the money they have should be directed to building housing units—not housing for the wealthy as in the past, but housing for families whose income is anywhere from $4,000 to $10,000. These are the kind of people who need it. Every program developed by Liberal and Conservative governments in the last 25 years simply has not been able to provide rental accommodation or homes to meet their needs. This country can afford it, and this government should do it.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, it has been reiterated more than once in this debate that the Canadian economy is in an increasingly dangerous state. All the major social and economic indicators draw attention to this fact. We see unemployment and inflation escalate month by month, while the gross national product declines and housing starts drop drastically.

The figures need no further repetition. Unfortunately they are only too well known. Housing is one of the most crucial problems in Canada today. In the past few years Canadians realized that there was a problem in housing, but today that problem has become an emergency. It is an emergency because the construction industry, one of the foundation blocks on which the economy of this country is based, is in serious trouble. The signs are evident, and one of the most evident is the fact that today there are well over 200,000 fewer people employed in the construction industry than there were a year ago. Last year the industry contributed $21 billion to the gross national product—15 per cent of our gross national product. Now it is declining, and the multiplier effect of that decline on the ancillary industries related to construction, forestry, textile, furniture, plastics, while incalculable, is certain.

The perilous state of residential construction has serious economic consequences. It has, as well, serious social consequences. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians do not have adequate shelter today. And of those who do, millions are being faced with having to spend an inordinate portion of their income on shelter with incredible repercussions on their ability to meet other necessities of life—food, and clothing.

Housing is not a statistical or physical phenomenon. It is a human problem. Just as the construction industry permeates the whole of our economy, the housing crisis permeates the whole of our social fabric. Substandard, inadequate housing for many Canadians breeds social unrest, tensions, and social problems that cannot be calculated in dollar terms or numerical projections. Yet the government continues to treat housing as a fiscal tool to manipulate the economy without any regard to the social aspects.

We have heard a good deal, both in this House and outside, from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) about government programs to deal with the problems of the economy, particularly of housing. The Minister of Finance has implemented measures which he claims will stimulate the economy through increased activity in the construction sector.

● (1750)

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has placed great faith in the amendments to the National Housing Act, and thinks these will be instrumental in providing for many new housing starts this year. Let us look at his predictions and see how close they are to being on target. The Conference Board of Canada and the Economic Council of Canada have estimated that 250,000 housing starts are needed this year to meet present requirements. They are needed not to improve shelter for Canadians; they are needed to maintain their shelter at present standards. The minister has repeatedly stated that his target is not the 250,000 new units advocated by others, but only 210,000 housing starts. The minister said to his provincial counterparts, and I quote:

It is evident we will need at least 210,000 starts in 1975. If we can hit that mark we will head off any serious deterioration of housing conditions and, at the same time, give the general economy a good shot in the arm.

An hon. Member: That is a minimum target.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): That is a minimum target. We should be happy if that figure represented the minimum in housing starts. But what do we find? We find, one month after the minister made that statement, that housing starts for February were down by 44 per cent, and that the projected or seasonally adjusted rate indicates housing starts for this year totalling 156,000, not 210,000.

An hon. Member: But February is a bad month for construction.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): For the benefit of the parliamentary secretary, let me point out that the projected figure shows that we shall see 54,000 fewer starts than the number the minister accepts as a minimum.

An hon. Member: But February is a poor house building month.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The number of projected starts falls 100,000 short of the minimum target set by the Conference Board of Canada and the Economic Council of Canada. Think what that shortfall will mean in terms of fewer jobs, less consumer spending, and lack of buoyancy in the economy. Yet the minister talks about what the proposed amendments will mean for the economy. When asked in committee the other night their meaning in concrete terms, he said the government's housing program when fully in operation—he was speaking of AHOP and the limited dividend assistance program—would be instrumental in creating an additional 33,000 starts. Even if we accept that figure, and I question the minister's figures, and add the 33,000 starts to the 156,000 already projected, we shall still not build enough homes to meet the demand in 1975. May I call it six o'clock?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET TO IMPROVE CANADIAN ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House urges the government to introduce, within two weeks, a new budget, for the purpose of dealing with the increasingly dangerous state of the Canadian economy, and specifically to cope with mounting unemployment, the housing needs of our people, and the scourge of poverty.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, before the House rose for dinner I was pointing out that whereas the Conference Board of Canada and the Economic Council had expressed the view that 250,000 housing starts would be needed this year if we were to meet the demand in 1975, and whereas the minister himself had set 210,000 housing starts as his minimum target, figures for the first two months of 1975, seasonally adjusted, indicate a rate of 156,000 housing starts this year. This is, 54,000 housing starts below the minister's minimum target rate, and almost 100,000 starts below the minimum target rate set by the Conference Board and by the Economic Council.

What does this mean in terms of fewer job opportunities, reduced consumer spending and lack of buoyancy in the economy? To take the minister's own figures, his programs of AHOP and LD assistance will create 33,000 starts. His own optimistic prediction was that overall 210,000 starts would be achieved. We have already been given one set of figures which seem to be widely off base, and I suggest we should approach even those figures with caution. Moreover, direct AHOP funding was already in operation during the last quarter of 1974 when housing starts began to drop drastically. Even allowing for the minister's statement that AHOP was so successful that the funds dried up in October of 1974 and that new moneys were not available until the 1975 calendar year, we are looking at a 49 per cent drop in housing starts by comparison with January, 1974, and a further 44 per cent drop in starts for February, 1975 over February, 1974.

I think it is time we were given some honest answers by the government, an honest assessment of the proportions of the housing crisis and the importance attached to it on the other side of the House. We, on this side, are tired of the juggling of figures, the attempts to cover up the facts, the reliance on rhetoric to confuse the public, and the reliance on prayers to produce solutions.

No better example could be given of the minister's attempts to confuse the issue than his reply to my inquiry as to whether or not the increase of 12½ per cent in the capital budget of the CMHC was an indication of the importance the government attaches to the housing crisis. I was referring to an increase of 12½ per cent in housing at a time when overall government expenditures had soared by an alarming 28 per cent. The minister answered that non-budgetary expenditures, by which I presume he meant non-capital expenditures, were up by 66 per cent, offering great assistance to Canadians in the lower earnings brackets. The minister knows very well that these budgetary items which have increased by 66 per cent, and I can list them—housing research, sewage treatment, operating costs of present programs and losses resulting from operating public housing—do nothing to stimulate construction. They do not build one single house, create one single job, or stimulate the economy in any way.

My hon. friend from York-Simcoe has drawn attention to the extent of the increase in the government's estimates for the coming fiscal year—an increase of 28 per cent. Compare this with the increase in the capital budget of the CMHC. The 12½ increase in the CMHC budget is equal only to the present rate of inflation. The corporation's capital budget, the $1.4 billion which does stimulate housing construction, which does generate housing starts, remains in real terms static.

Why cannot the government rearrange its expenditures so as to give housing at least the same priority as it accords to other sectors of the economy? The capital budget of CMHC does not represent money lost. It is not a grant. It constitutes loans, moneys which are recoverable for the most part, moneys which can create a capital flow throughout our floundering economy at little cost to the government.

We have been talking about fiscal restraint, and we shall continue to do so. Surely the Minister of Finance can reconcile fiscal restraint with a readjustment of the government's spending policy in order to ensure that housing needs are met. Housing, unfortunately, is somewhere near the bottom of the government's list of priorities. What is badly needed is a reorganization of those spending priorities. Housing is one of the most critical sectors of the economy, and as such deserves greater consideration. The issue is not one of increases in spending. The issue is one of priorities in spending. Obviously, the government does not see housing as a priority, and we on this side do.

I wish to make a few more comments about the capital budget of the CMHC. Over the past four years the policies and programs incorporated in its budget have encouraged provincial and municipal governments to gear up their housing component to take advantage of federal-provincial sharing programs for social housing. All across this country there are projects and programs that are ready to get under way, that have been carefully prepared over the past few years in response to initiatives on the part of the federal government. Provinces have set up mechanisms and have adjusted their own priorities to take advantage of federal government participation in this sphere, in expectation that the federal government would continue to honour the commitment it had initiated.

Suddenly these initiatives have been curtailed. On January 30, when the provincial housing ministers met in Ottawa with the minister for urban affairs, they indicated they had take-up capacity for $400 million in new residential housing. What was the federal government's response? It was to reduce the allocation to the provinces for social housing from 24 per cent to 22 per cent. These co-operative programs with the provinces and municipalities are being curtailed to make way for the unilateral housing programs of the federal government, programs such as AHOP. The centralizing tendencies of the government are becoming increasingly apparent in the field of housing.

In addition, the capital budget of CMHC is making possible another policy change. Aid to the lower income groups, once the main beneficiaries of social housing, is now being directed to moderate or middle income groups through such programs as AHOP. More than 50 per cent of the CMHC budget now goes for AHOP or limited dividend programs, program directly controlled by the federal government, and which benefit moderate income groups. This shift in emphasis is of real concern not only because people who are desperate for housing are not receiving the assistance they require, but because major shifts in policy can take place via the CMHC capital budget. It is this capital budget that determines housing policy, yet it never comes before parliament for debate. It never comes before committee for study. It is presented to this House and to the country as a fait accompli.

We are talking about a sum of $1.4 billion. Surely parliament should have the opportunity to scrutinize this sum. Such scrutiny is the basic principle on which this House has been founded, even though members opposite have done virtually everything in their power to erode this right.

The CMHC budget itself has not increased in real growth terms, but the number of programs operating under its budget have increased. The pie is the same, but the slices are thinner. And the thinnest slices are being dished out to the social housing component, the real poor, the senior citizens and the handicapped. Are we to see a continuation of this policy in years to come? Are the provinces and municipalities to be ignored, and perhaps misled, because more and more of the capital budget and decision making will be directly under the control of the president of CMHC?

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has placed great emphasis on the results the amendments to the National Housing Act will produce for housing. Yet what guarantee have we that these programs will work? I suggest none. What reliable figures can the minister give us indicating that his new programs will be any more successful than earlier programs? The minister confidently predicts that 12,000 new starts will be created by his indirect AHOP program, yet he can produce no certain figure or guarantee that the private lending sector is going to come forth with the $1 billion on which he is counting.

An hon. Member: Billion?

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): That is what I said, billion. There are several steps which the government could take immediately to stimulate the sagging construction industry and to provide badly needed housing. First and most important, it could reorganize its expenditure program so that housing is given much higher priority than now is accorded it. Secondly, it could remove the remaining 5 per cent sales tax on building materials. The government took a half measure at the time of the November budget. Surely now it could go all the way, ensuring savings of some $380 million, savings that given a proper monitoring mechanism, could be passed on to the home buyer. Thirdly, it could make a proportionate amount of municipal property tax and mortgage interest payments deductible from the federal taxable income of home owners. I suggest that these steps would be a beginning in tackling the problems of high interest rates, high land costs, and high house prices, problems that the government seems content to ignore.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and her overview of the housing situation as she sees it. I also wish that the proposed solutions were that easy.

I have said in the House before, and I repeat now, that Canadians are among the best housed people in the world, and I do not think anyone has denied that. Our record over the past several years in providing housing of all kinds for Canadians at all income levels has never been surpassed, and we have no intention now of allowing unfavourable economic circumstances to do serious damage to our efforts to give all Canadians access to decent housing.

This government year after year has consistently put more and more money into housing. It has broken records each and every year up until last year, when economic circumstances in Canada, indeed around the world, caused much sharper drops. This gives us little consolation, but compared with our neighbour to the south our production is at least double on a per capita basis. This is little satisfaction to me as minister responsible, but at least it is some measure of the commitment that the government has consistently undertaken year after year to produce a record number of good houses for Canadians in all income groups.

Although it is true that housing starts last year dropped by 17 per cent from the previous year to 220,000 units, this was largely due to inflationary pressures that affected the economies of all countries. We should not lose sight of the fact that housing completions last year were the highest in Canada's history, totalling 255,000, and this number represents units that were ready for immediate occupancy.

The lag in starts in the second half of 1974 has continued into this year, and it is essential that quick starts be emphasized so that the critical rate of completions can be maintained into 1976. Measures which I will presently outline are designed specifically to achieve that objective. We have established a minimum floor—not a target but a minimum floor—of 210,000 starts for 1975, and that volume of new housing construction can be reached through the implementation of programs now in effect as well as those awaiting passage through the House.

It is true, as my hon. friend has said, that the rate of starts for February was at an annual rate of 156,000. That is a discouraging rate, but one which we are determined to overcome. If we are talking about the percentage drop from last year then it is dramatic, some 47 per cent. I think my hon. friend said 49 per cent, but we will not argue about those two percentage points although they are important to those who need housing. We are talking of a year ago when we had starts at an all time record level.

My hon. friend also indicated that AHOP and Limited Dividend would only provide for the construction of about 333,000 units, but this is not the only program. We also have non-profit housing, co-operative housing, public housing of various types and senior citizen housing. These units continue to be built, and are on top of those figures. It must be admitted that in this country, while CMHC represents a major and strategic factor in the housing market, the houses are to a large degree built by the private sector and private builders, and we supplement that by especially looking after those who have difficulty in finding housing in that market.

The government is not the only segment in the housing market by a long shot. The capital budget of CMHC has been increased to over $1.4 billion. This represents a 16 per cent increase over commitments made in 1974. It is 12.5 per cent in budgetary terms, but actually it is a 16 per cent increase in expenditure. My hon. friend says that these are just loans so it does not cost anyone anything. First of all, I am sure she knows that much is subsidized and a lot is forgiven, and this still is money, even though it is in the form of loans, and it has to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada. That is why, in addition to the budget, these measures before the House are expected to attract at least the $1 billion, which my hon. friend spoke about, of new private capital into the housing market.

The hon. member asks for a guarantee, but there is no guarantee. There is an indication from lenders in the private sector, to whom I and my officials have spoken, that there is no doubt that more than that is available, but I think we could term that a conservative estimate. These measures are certainly being examined by the committee when the estimates are being dealt with, and at every stage when estimates are dealt with in the House.

In addition to the capital budget, CMHC expenditures in subsidies and other contributions are estimated at more than $276 million for this year, an increase of more than 92 per cent. There was some confusion, and I believe my hon. friend referred to 66 per cent. The figure is 92 per cent over the amount that was spent last year for these expenditures. That figure alone provides an accurate picture of the priority this government is giving to housing this year.

I would like to summarize the measures taken since last fall to stimulate the production of housing while assisting Canadians in obtaining the shelter they require. I feel there is every reason for confidence that the housing industry will be rejuvenated this year. The decline in interest rates is an important factor, but there are three other principle reasons for optimism.

These reasons are the measures contained in the budget brought down last fall by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to assist the housing industry, the highly encouraging response to programs introduced last year through CMHC, and amendments to the National Housing Act now before the House and the standing committee.

In the budget the Minister of Finance eliminated the sales tax on construction equipment and on materials used in municipal water distribution systems. The sales tax on building materials was reduced from 11 per cent to 5 per cent which, I am sure, decreases the government revenue to the extent of some $460 million. The budget restored capital cost allowances for a year on new multiple-unit residential buildings for rental accommodation, and introduced the registered home ownership program to help people put together more quickly the money needed for a down payment on a home.

Bill C-46, which is before the committee now, contains a proposal to extend the assisted home ownership program to provide up to $600 yearly in interest reducing grants to buyers of new homes who meet all the qualifications of AHOP assistance and who obtain a loan from an approved lender.

The purpose of these grants is to bring the monthly payments of home buyers within a reasonable proportion of their income. I do not think hon. members fully realize the tremendous success of AHOP last year. It provided $450 million in loans to 20,000 families of low income for the purchase of homes, and this success has produced a demand for more funds than the government can be expected to provide. This is why we are seeking private capital to enlarge the program.

We are making interest-reducing grants available to owners or builders of rental accommodation who arrange an NHA insured loan with an approved lender, with the stipulation that the entrepreneurs enter an agreement with CMHC to maintain rents at an approved level for at least five and up to 15 years.

We are providing further assistance to non-profit and co-operative housing projects by allowing CMHC to buy the land on which they will be built, and then lease it back to them at a low rate. At the present time there is a 10 per cent forgiveness provision on the total loan to provide for the purchase of land. In some cases of high land costs that is simply not sufficient, so non-profit and co-operative groups are given the option of having CMHC purchase the land for them and leasing it back at a rate which will allow them to provide economic rents.

We are also extending the life of the federal sewerage assistance program. My hon. friend suggests that this does not help to build homes, but I do not know how we can build homes without this. I realize that sewers are not glamorous, but they are terribly important if you want to build homes, and especially if you want homes with toilets. We must keep up with this program.

Bill C-46 also proposes extra help to municipalities where per capita costs for sewage works is very high because of the size of the community or difficult or rocky terrain making construction costs unusually high. There are many other measures. CMHC has just offered loans amounting to $200 million at 8 per cent interest to builders in critical market areas who are prepared to act immediately in creating good family rental housing for people of modest incomes, at rents to be agreed upon with CMHC. I have no doubt that this program will prove as instantly popular as a similar program last year budgeted at only $58 million, but which could have used substantially more funds to meet the demand. We have tried this program and we have seen that it works well, so we are building upon success in each case.

There is also a $500 grant available to first time purchasers of moderately priced new homes. By the end of February CMHC had already sent out $3 million in cheques to some 6,000 new home buyers, and many more are being processed each day at CMHC offices across the country.

The cabinet recently extended Section 44 of the National Housing Act to give rent subsidies to as much as 25 per cent of the units in non-profit and co-operative housing. This is really getting to the people in the lower income groups, and also reinforces our determination not to repeat the mistakes of the past, which were made with good intentions to provide the lowest possible cost housing for the very low income people. This is to prevent the ghettoization of these projects and the institutionalization of poverty. It is to make certain that wherever government assistance is given there will be a proper socio-economic mix. We are getting to the low income people, but not by putting signs on them telling the world they are low income people. If the opposition would have the kinds of programs which label the people "poor" then they can have them, but we will maintain the dignity of those people who benefit from our assistance.

When I met with the provincial ministers at the end of January of this year I listened to their stories. I have had additional discussions with them, and I am certainly prepared to show some flexibility in trying to achieve those goals we all consider important in helping to provide housing for low income Canadians. It is not our intention to be immodest, but government programs are going well and we are getting quicker starts for family and low income accommodation. I understand their concern as they understand mine. So long as we can see our priorities together and perhaps make a readjustment, much will be done. These are the measures that have been taken or are proposed to stimulate the housing industry and to give many thousands more Canadians access to the accommodation they require.

I might mention that we are not only interested in the production of houses but in their quality as well. I have announced a warranty system regarding the quality of a house and its continued performance over a reasonable period of time to protect home buyers. A meeting will be held early in April with representatives of provincial governments, builders, consumers, lenders, and other interested parties to consider the proposal, which is already agreed upon in principle.

In addition, I know that there are many innovative ideas and approaches that could provide a better quality of life within Canadian communities but that have not been tried on a large scale basis because of the cost. This is very important, because in setting up new financial measures I think my hon. friends will agree that it is important to improve the quality, to devise new and better building systems, and to devise better types of communities for Canadians to live in. It is simply not enough to put up the accommodation. It must be attractive accommodation. It must be on a human scale. It must relate to human needs.

In order to test new and different ideas in community building, CMHC is committed to a series of demonstration projects across the country. These will not be scale models, they will not be toys, but will be living communities of balanced socio-economic dimensions in which people will live and work. They should be instrumental in producing a blueprint for the future, but it will be far more than a blueprint. It will add to the housing starts in attractive ways with technology, planning, and a social approach which can be duplicated elsewhere. I am sure there will be mistakes but we will learn from those mistakes. I hope that in any program with which I am associated we will be prepared to take those chances, and be prepared to make mistakes in seeking better methods and better housing for Canadians.

The measures and proposals that I have outlined tonight have an enormous potential for housing in Canada. It is vital to their success that they be made effective efficiently and with dispatch. Recognizing this, CMHC has moved toward operational decentralization so that effective action can be taken at the local level, where the need exists. This is not an easy and simple process but is taking place deliberately with planning and with experimentation, so that the highly qualified regional managers have a greater degree of autonomy and are tuned in better to the local situation and the local government because we are regionalized on a provincial basis now. They will be especially sensitive to the needs of the locality while bearing in mind the national objectives at all times.

I think hon. members will agree that we are meeting the housing challenge in Canada with realistic and progressive action. We cannot overlook the problems presented by world wide economic conditions, but we are determined that Canada's housing production keeps pace with our needs. We are concentrating on those programs which produce the quick starts. We have asked our provincial partners to take up these programs, and the funding that is available to them, and to accelerate this so that we get these starts and provide not only employment but the homes that are needed this year.

We know the problem is not an easy one to resolve under present economic circumstances but I assure you, Madam Speaker, we are facing up to the times and will not be found wanting.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate as briefly as I can because I know there is limited time and quite a number of members of the House wish to participate. I shall say very little about housing not because it is unimportant but because, quite frankly, since I have watched the way successive ministers of finance have opposed any reduction in the building tax year after year and have seen their sudden reversal when they find it politically expedient to do so, I find it difficult to take this government at all seriously in the area of housing.

May I say that it is reassuring these days to feel that the members who sit to my left who have sponsored today's motion are once again in the ranks of the opposition. I do not wish to prolong this beyond saying that I look forward to an allotted non-confidence motion by the NDP representatives in the House some day. In my time here I have seen the NDP use non-confidence motions when the government was in a majority, ostensibly to make parliament work. I have also seen them not use them during a period when they had the balance of power. In that demimonde of minority they said they did not use them on those occasions allotted to them in order to make parliament work. Without being argumentative or controversial I can only gather than the NDP logic is as much a matter of convenience as NDP principle.

This evening we are not asked to vote on the proposition put before us, so we are not obliged to take a hard and fast position on the specific request for the introduction of a new budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) within two weeks. I am not prepared to say that anything quite so simple as a new budget, with new spending programs, is the key to improvement of our economy, particularly an improvement which can be substained. At the same time I certainly sense the frustrations spreading around the country concerning the government's inaction. For example, I listened to the Minister of Finance this afternoon. He said they are waiting to see what will happen in respect of the United States economy. He heard a prediction from the United States Secretary of the Treasury that things might turn upward in the United States in the fourth quarter.

It is impossible to find out how long the Minister of Finance will wait before he can really see the future with enough confidence to act. I doubt very much whether the Canadian people are very happy to float along in the meantime.

We have the statement that during 1974 the Canadian economy grew at a rate of 3.7 per cent. I refer to the GNP. As a matter of fact the GNP was little if any higher at the end of 1974 than at the commencement of 1974. It is merely the way in which the government brings forward statistics that suggests there was any real growth during 1974. The real growth took place in 1973, and it is the average over the year which represents a 3.7 per cent increase in 1974 over 1973. So in fact we have had virtually no growth in our economy for approximately a year.

I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here, but he can read what I have to say in Hansard tomorrow. He spoke of how good the cash balances of the government are. Why would they not be good? Who could not sell savings bonds at a rate of 9¾ per cent and have the government of Canada reduce the short-term interest rate right away?

I should like the minister to admit just how much this manoeuvre will cost the Canadian taxpayers during the life of these Canada savings bonds. It will run into many billions of dollars. I think we have had enough of this kind of sleight of hand with figures, and this kind of manoeuvring which is costly to the Canadian people, while the minister boasts about having the government of Canada in a very good cash position.

The need for some action by the government surely is not a new discovery. Going back a couple of years, we had the government talking about a contingency plan to deal with an emergency situation in the economy. That contingency plan was, of course, price and income controls, as was admitted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Nobody knows whether that particular contingency plan still exists.

● (2040)

Back in 1973 and early 1974 the government stalled things along by laying every increase in the cost of living at the door of shortages. For months the Minister of Finance indulged in one of the most gross over simplifications ever perpetrated in this House. For many months, with the help of my hon. friends in the NDP, he was able to get away with doing virtually nothing about high prices except to blame the weather. We are now well into 1975, and we see that the so-called consensus—and it is mainly this which I want to discuss tonight—as pursued by the government has become like the weather in at least one respect. Everyone in the government is talking about it, but no one in the government is doing anything about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest that it is a very dangerous thing to hold out hope of consensus and then to let matters drag on indefinitely while hope is left unfulfilled. I suggest that the government has created a strong impression around the country that all its talk about pursuing a consensus has been just that, all talk, and part of a strategy of stalling. I say that this impression holds danger, not just for the interests of the government party, but dangers for the interests of order and confidence throughout our society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Let us go back to the throne speech at the opening of this thirtieth parliament on September 30, 1974. This was the language used by the government in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

> There must be a greater awareness of the need for restraint by everyone in what each seeks to secure in incomes, profits, prices or taxes if inflation is to be mitigated. Demands to secure more than the economy can provide, or indeed for those who already have a respectable return to seek to benefit relatively from inflation, must be resisted, and the government believes it has a clear responsibility in this area. Just as no one group in society should benefit at the expense of others from inflation, so should no one group shoulder an unfair burden.
> The government has therefore initiated a series of consultations with the principal groups in our society—business, professions, farmers, labour and provincial governments.

Then a bit further on it was stated:

> The federal government believes that it has the responsibility of playing the leading role in bringing Canadians together to discuss their common problems and challenges and to develop proposals for their solution.

That was the government's position going into this session almost six months ago. Note that the government said it had already initiated some discussions. No results have been reported.

Then came the budget on November 18, and here is some of the inspiring rhetoric of the Minister of Finance on that occasion, and I quote him:

> We have to find a better way of reconciling the competing interests of the various groups which make up our society. No group need lose in this search. Indeed, if we succeed, all can gain because the over-all performance of the economy will be enhanced by controlling inflation.
> This is why we need a national consensus about what the various groups can safely take from the economy over the next few years. Co-operation must be the watchword. We will give leadership, but we will not try to impose solutions.

Again, as in the Speech from the Throne, the promise of leadership was made.

I am glad to see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen) is here tonight.

Mr. Cullen: Thank you.

An hon. Member: It's nice to see someone interested in finance over there.

Mr. Stanfield: It is about six months since the Speech from the Throne, almost four months since the budget, and no results have been reported in this consensus effort at all. There was a promise of some report of progress before Christmas. This was extended to the end of February, and it still floats in limbo, and the promise of leadership is exposed as nothing more than a gimmick in a game of stalling.

An hon. Member: All they can do is ski.

Mr. Stanfield: I have told the Minister of Finance at various stages of development since the House opened that I did not think a voluntary scheme of restraints would meet the need, but that I and my colleagues would support him in the effort to achieve one if only we could get some clarification as to what he had in mind and what he wanted. The minister has thanked me from time to time for my patience, and other sterling qualities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As time wore on my patience has worn out, and I have been compelled to ask the minister just how long he intends to lend his good name to a con job—because what else could this be? I still wonder why this minister is involved in it. When the minister expresses his concern, as he did again yesterday, about strikes and disruptions and the level of settlements, I have every reason to believe that he is sincere in expressing that concern. When he tells me that he would be on a better footing to proceed with initiatives to expand the economy if he had a restraint program in place, I take that as a sensible response to a question that I put to him.

Why then, why oh why, is this minister, who expresses these concerns, and supports that premise, simply going along with the gag of this stupid game of stall? The minister may say it is not a game. He may claim that the pursuit of consensus in the way it has been undertaken is on the up and up, and that it is simply taking a little longer than he thought it would. I would be prepared to take even this explanation, or an explanation like that seriously, if the minister would tell me on what ground he is pursuing this consensus. What is the nature of this consensus? Where is this leadership, in practical terms, with some proposal?

A couple of days ago the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) told me that the government had been given some assurances of co-operation, but no one in the government has any answer when asked, co-operation on what? One begins to wonder if we would be in exactly the same position as we are if the Prime Minister were overseas seeking a consensus and the Minister of Finance stayed back home pursuing a contractual link with the principal groups in our society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The way this government plays with words, it may have become mixed up as to who was supposed to be seeking what when the marching orders were translated into the government's third official language, to which it is now resorting. The Minister of Finance himself treated us to a textbook example in the course of his town hall meeting the other night. I presume he was reported correctly as saying, and I quote one of the more profound remarks of the twentieth century "Strikes provoke more unemployment." This is what the minister said. It bothers me that the minister may now have succumbed completely to this kind of lingo. He may have lost those of us who cannot write immortal prose. He may have lost us forever. I do not know. Next he may come along telling us that he is wrestling things to the ground after other things have begun to bite. This is like standing on the bridge of the Titanic and saying, "Ice provokes more problems".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: "Strikes create more unemployment"! What a great comment was that from the Minister of Finance. I wish the minister could find it in his residue of decency—and I think there is a substantial residue of decency there—to disassociate himself from the sham aspects of the government's alleged pursuit of consensus. I say quite frankly that I do not think we can afford the luxury of this kind of game. Tempers are flaring, and it is not only my patience that has worn out. It is time that the government came clean with the Canadian people.

The minister always gets upset whenever there is any suggestion that he is not fully and frankly taking the House and the country into his confidence. He may try to make a show of righteous indignation in this situation, but he must recognize that in this case the emperor has no clothes.

The minister will not undertake to give us a report prior to an Easter break. He refuses to give us any such assurance, and after that he will be going abroad in April. After a couple of postponements he will only say now that we can expect some report on this consensus program at an appropriate time. I do not need to remind him of Lord Keynes' remark that, "In the long run we will all be dead".

I am sorry, I cannot hear my hon. friend—

Mr. Railton: —help to get that bill through.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Speaker, I do not know what bill my hon. friend is referring to—I do not know of any bill before the House that is going to make very much difference in saving the economy.

My hon. friend probably knows the name at least of the eminent psychiatrist and author, Dr. Eric Berne, who wrote about people waiting for death or Santa Claus. If the Minister of Finance thinks we can afford to wait for some Santa Claus recovery, particularly the recovery of the United States, he should tell us that and cut out the dishonesty of stalling and telling stories. If the minister really has something to offer as a proposal on which he is seeking a consensus from the principal elements in our economy he should say what it is, and get on with it.

Mr. Railton: He has told you. Just wait for about three months and you will see the effects.

Mr. Epp: We will all be broke.

Mr. Stanfield: Great stuff.

Mr. Epp: From when do you start counting, Vic?

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Speaker, I think I have now had confirmation from the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) of what I have said—that the Minister of Finance and the whole bunch over there are engaged in a con game. All the talk about consensus is only a stalling device. They say if we will just wait three or four months everything will work out well because things are going to recover in the United States. I could not have had more confirmation of what I have been saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Stanfield: No, Madam Speaker, I do not want extra time. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) made my point for me.

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, there have been discussions and I believe it is agreed that a House order could be made that the addresses between now and ten o'clock be limited to ten minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It is agreed that the addresses from now on be limited to ten minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate on the motion sponsored by the house leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). He and his party are proposing, as I understand it, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), having brought two budgets before this House in a period of six months, should now bring a third.

Mr. Howie: A real one.

Mr. Martin: The budget of last spring was overwhelmingly endorsed by the Canadian electorate who, thanks to the party now led in this House by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, were given the opportunity to express their viewpoint in the most basic and direct method known within our democratic system.

If my recollection is correct, Madam Speaker, that particular budget and the ensuing activity resulted in the party of the hon. member losing 50 per cent of its representation in this House. The second budget has not produced the same kind of redistribution of the membership of this House only because I submit the opposition of the New Democratic Party to the November 18 budgetary measures could not at this time bring the country and the government to a standstill. Had its opposition to Bill C-49 been adequate to defeat once again the duly elected government of this country I suggest that once again the electorate would have overwhelmingly supported the government, and those responsible for voting against the budgetary measures would have suffered a second calamity at the polls. Who knows how many representatives of that same party would now be with us?

Bearing these factors in mind, Madam Speaker, can they be serious in wanting a third budget at this time, which obviously they would be duty bound to vote against? I can hardly believe that. Therefore I must conclude that there is a degree of hollowness in this motion before us. I believe it is largely a ploy on the part of the NDP to take more of the time of this House to continue debate on the budgetary measures included in Bill C-49, and this after days and days that the opposition parties spent impeding passage of the clauses in this important bill that meant so much to the taxpayers of this country.

There is a plea before us today, Madam Speaker, for the government to introduce "within two weeks" a new budget. This proposal is coming foward at a time when the last budget has just been made law within the last two hours—when the significant measures contained in this red booklet I am holding, the budget summary, are just coming into effect. Yet it is suggested that we should immediately move to another one—that we should implement at this time a new shift in the economic policy of the country. We have hardly had an opportunity to test the effect of the most recent budget let alone had time to permit the measures to be assessed in their over-all impact on the economy in any meaningful way.

A budget is a serious document. It aims to assist in shaping economic policy over the several months to come. While economists are not in agreement on what economic ground rules should be in vogue at any one time, I believe there is general agreement that one thing that has not helped the recent economic climate within the borders of our neighbour to the south has been, on the one hand, a move to tighten significantly the economic hatches, followed shortly thereafter by a major move in the opposite direction to loosen substantially the purse strings to such an extent that Mr. Simon is quoted today as saying in Ottawa that his own country was "playing with fire".

Stability is a most important factor when the economic climate is so fragile and unpredictable. The November 18 budget provided stability with leadership, as expressed in the courses of action to be followed by this Liberal government. Surely it is hardly responsible to suggest the reopening of the whole, massive budgetary process within four months of the introduction of the last budget, and within hours of the passage of measures introduced pursuant to that budget and, yes, before, the passage of reasonable time which will permit a fair and meaningful assessment of those budgetary measures.

The shifts in government leadership and economic policy must be accorded their proper significance. Such shifts are not to be taken lightly, and we would be taking them lightly if we were to give the motion before the House serious consideration.

I wish to probe somewhat deeper the proposal of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby—assuming for the moment that he is serious in proposing that another budget should be placed before parliament and the Canadian people soon, and I must so assume, or what we are witnessing today is an exercise in futility. He makes this proposal on the same day as royal assent is given to measures contained in the November 18 budget. On this day the New Democratic Party, for whom the hon. member speaks, requests the government to introduce another budget. The question then is, what does the hon. member and the NDP want in this new budget? What would they propose? This is a vital question since, if the new budget were introduced and did not contain measures to assuage the "dollar deficit appetite" of the New Democratic Party, that party could start the process again on the next opposition day. One can visualize this chamber being turned into a veritable budget office in which a new budget is constantly being requested just when the previously introduced budget is being considered.

It will be interesting to see how the official opposition votes on this motion.

Mr. Stevens: There is no vote on it.

Mr. Martin: Are they, too, anxious to turn this chamber into a forum in which little legislation can be debated, in which little is discussed except budgetary policy? I hardly think they will go along with that. Yet, Mr. Speaker, this will be their stance if their "dollar deficit appetite" induces them to support the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Is the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby really serious in wanting the Canadian national debt to be substantially augmented? Does he want the debt that we and future generations must bear to be even larger? Does the NDP not appreciate the danger of artificially over-heating the economy when inflation in the western world is at such high levels? Surely they understand that government stimulants to the economy at any time, particularly at times like the present, must be provided with a steady, firm, yet gentle hand, so that the medicine is not worse than the disease it was intended to cure. Yet that is exactly what their proposal would involve.

Not content to let current budgetary measures work their way through the economy, the NDP seeks to fuel the fires of inflation by creating artificial wealth. The government which follows such advice might purchase political popularity, but in all likelihood the serious repercussions which would follow could undermine the economic life of the country to such a degree that a normal economic stance would be difficult to achieve. At the same time it would do little or nothing to increase the production of goods when international markets are weak. And they are weak, even though Canadians would prefer them to be strong.

We are living with an international problem. Yes, there are things we can do at home, and we are doing them. However, undermining national and international confidence in our country's economy, which is surely what would happen if we were to support the proposal before us, a proposal which asks the government to change the direction of economic policy just when we have placed the stamp of approval on a major thrust which is aimed in a particular and specific direction, will not help any of us. Of course the government which I support will not conduct itself in such manner. I only hope the members of the official opposition have the good sense to follow our lead and dissociate themselves from the unreasonable and irresponsible proposal placed before the House today by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we are not asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to make the usual kind of budget statement. We want the government to bring in a budget which will do three specific things, and in my opinion we should bring this proposal forward on every opposition day, until the government listens.

If the government were to use for housing the $4 million which certain wrongdoers obtained through graft, the minister responsible for housing could reduce interest payments for substantial numbers of families who have bought NHA homes. Or, we could build 1,000 homes costing $40,000.

As everyone knows, the budget will bring few changes in this country, particularly to poor people. According to a recent Senate report, a great many Canadians live on or below the povery line, the poverty line for a single person in Canada now being $3,100. Old age pensioners in this country get a pension of $2,450, which is considerably below the poverty line. Statistics Canada says a family is living on or below the poverty line when it must spend 70 per cent or more of its income on basic necessities like food, shelter and clothing. In 1974, according to Statistics Canada, the poverty line for a single person was at $2,518, which is about $100 more than we paid old age pensioners.

The publication entitled "Poor Kids", which is a report by the National Council of Welfare on children in poverty in Canada, says on page 36:

> There can be no hiding behind myths that we can't afford to ensure income adequacy to all Canadians. The recent federal budget proved that. The Minister of Finance redistributed $1.75 billion for the 1975-76 fiscal year through reductions in the personal income tax alone. He redistributed another $885 million of the 1975-76 national income by changes in sales tax and tariff provisions, more than half of this—$450 million—through reduction of the sales tax on building materials.
> All of this $2.6 billion that the government has chosen not to collect represents a redistribution in the national income. But in what direction? The personal income tax cuts range from $200 for those in the lowest tax bracket to $750 for those in the highest. In other words, if you were too poor to pay taxes you got nothing; if you were a low-income taxpayer you got $200; but if you were already rich enough to be in the top tax bracket you got $750. The rich got most, presumably because they needed it least. Are these our values?
> The deduction of $1,000 of interest and dividend income will, of course, be welcomed by all those with significant income from bank deposits and stock holdings. Self-evidently, these are not the poor.

● (2110)

> The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan and cut in the sales tax for building materials are designed to benefit those in the home-buying market. Again, not the poor. Even the deduction of $1,000 of pension income will benefit only the best-off of senior citizens.
> Yet no one suggested we couldn't afford these tax cuts. Economists argued whether they were too much or too little economic medicine for a situation in which everything but the inflation rate was slowing down, but no one suggested we couldn't afford it.
> A guaranteed adequate income that eliminates poverty in Canada will cost roughly the amount of these tax cuts—about two-and-a-half or three billion dollars. We can afford it exactly as easily as we afforded the tax cuts. The question is whether we choose to.

If a new budget were presented within two weeks it would face the problem of whether we wish to redistribute income in such a way that the poor or the rich would receive the benefit of it. Obviously the Simards, the McNamara's and others like them have done well by governments, and are doing well today. Whether or not we throw away $4 million, we can have a scandal of that magnitude, and that is probably only the tip of the iceberg.

It is my guess that when the smoke clears we will find that not only in that field but in dozens of others where the government uses the tender system, we will have squandered millions and millions of dollars. There would have been enough money for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) to lower the interest rate, which is the only way of enabling the average Canadian to buy a home.

[Mr. Peters.]

Most people are not in the category where they can afford to buy food and the other necessities of life and still make payments of $300 and $400 a month to buy a house in one of our major cities. What does the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) do when he is not in the House supporting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)? He is making statements such as the following one:

> —the question will not be whether politicians ought to believe in a more or less egalitarian society, but rather whether they are able to "read" the community's values correctly, and express them correctly in terms of basic income levels, and in terms of income distribution generally.

I again quote from the document:

> What are Canadian community values? How much do we care whether for 14-year-old boy "it will always be this way"? Does it matter to us if poor kids are hungry or sick, if they are shamed out of schools and into dead-end jobs from which they are the first laid off when the economy slows down? Do the aged and disabled matter to us? Do we care as much about them as about the millionaire industrialist who benefited most from this year's income redistribution? . . .
> The probabilities and likelihoods which we have described in this report will remain unchanged or be transformed to an extent that will be determined by our value choice. That choice, which we the Canadian community will make, will tell us a great deal about ourselves.

We will have to make that decision. It is fine for members of this House, who make a fairly good salary, to be given tax concessions with regard to dividends and interest rates. If we have never owned a house, it is fine for us to save $1,000 a year for ten years tax free to be able to buy a very expensive house. However, would our values not be better if we put that money toward taking over one of the banking or financial institutions of this country and, instead of paying 6½ per cent on deposits, make that money available at 6½ per cent for the social good of this nation?

Are we always going to be satisfied with living off the misery of the poor of this nation? This affects all senior citizens in this country, as well as most of our low income people. It is true that in some families two or three people are physically able to work. In that event I am sure they will be able to come up to the standard. Those three people only have to earn $6,145 to be at the poverty level. Is that our goal?

As long as there are poor in this country, if any member of parliament will say that we should not call for a new budget to end all poverty, as well as the sickness and disasters that go with being poor, he should re-examine his sense of values. Canada can only be rich when there are no poor or disadvantaged people.

I see no reason why we cannot have a budget to change our tax structure in such a way that the rich will begin to pay their share. There are four people in Canada earning $200,000 who pay no income tax at all. There are few poor people who do not pay income tax. If we settle for anything less we will not be doing the best we can for the Canadian people and the future of this nation.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on the NDP motion for a new budget, as well as on the mounting unemployment and housing problem. I am well aware that money does not grow on trees. I believe the budget for this year with the supplementary estimates will be in the neighbourhood of $26.53 billion. That is an awful lot of money Canadians will have to raise for various government projects. I am also aware that we have a high rate of unemployment, 6.8 per cent.

An hon. Member: Very high.

Mr. Darling: It is very high. I am sure members on all sides of the House want to do everything possible to reduce it. There are government work programs and we all hope they will work. This brings to mind the Capital winter works program of a couple of years ago. I believe it involved a total of $150 million which money was distributed among municipalities across Canada. It resulted in the building of many worthwhile projects. Municipalities were loaned money at good rates, between 7 and 8 per cent. They received a forgiveness of 100 per cent of the labour costs if the work was done in the winter period, and 50 per cent during periods when there was not high unemployment. I hope the minister and the government will consider reintroducing that program.

If the money is not available, maybe it could be taken from some other place. I wonder about some government departments where the priority is not so high. I have the greatest sympathy for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson). His target is $1.4 billion. I think he should have considerably more than that. Some government projects could very well be pared without causing any great crisis. I think of the CBC, which some people call the "crazy broadcasting corporation", which has a budget of $225 million. Certain programs aired by that august body would have been better left in the can. By that I mean the can for the film.

I am also told that the CBC news offices in Toronto or whatever you call them, have a tremendous number of staff there just to get together and administer the 11 o'clock news program. I believe it is one of the largest newsrooms on the whole of the North American Continent, and that certainly covers plenty of territory. Money could surely be saved on this operation. I am sure there are a great many expenditures which could be classed as frills. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) certainly has within his jurisdiction a number of high-sounding wonderful programs, but I do not think they can be regarded as bread and butter issues.

There is another direction in which money could be saved. I have in mind these palaces, these huge civil service castles in which the mandarins live. I think that as long as the poor civil servants are kept dry in reasonably good offices, no great harm is being done. Members of parliament manage to get along in offices which are many years old, but it seems that the delicate civil servants need air conditioning, palatial offices and so on. I believe money could be saved here.

I understand the federal budget includes provision for consulting fees totalling $900 million. That is a hell of a lot of consulting fees. The Company of Young Canadians has a budget of $4.9 million. Well, there may be some good projects under way here, but again this is not a top priority. Then there is a firm about which we have heard a lot recently, Marine Industries Limited. I believe that $250 million has been allocated to this company through the Export Development Corporation by way of a loan at very favourable interest rates between 7 and 8 per cent. Then again, we have also lent Iran, not a poverty-stricken nation, $1.5 million at an interest rate of 7 per cent.

I appreciate what the minister is doing though, naturally, he will be able to do more; we hope he can find more money to get housing production on the rails and build more units as soon as possible. The minister maintains that a sizeable amount of private money is likely to be poured into housing. I am aware—it was mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters)—that the present budget allows for $1,000 to be tax free, provided it is earned by way of bank interest or bond interest. I believe that in 1975 the concession will include dividends. I certainly feel that rather than see this money staying in the banks, the Minister of Urban Affairs should be able to encourage the use of these funds as private mortgage money.

If a private individual wishes to put out his money by way of a mortgage, why should he not be given the same concession? It might surprise the minister how much money would flow into mortgages if this were allowed, and how much additional housing could be provided. I do not think this is a crazy idea. I think it has merit, and perhaps the Minister of Urban Affairs could suggest it to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

I am well aware there are certain types of housing which the federal government is sponsoring 100 per cent. These concern federally oriented programs, AHOP and the rest. I hope the government will reconsider its attitude and change AHOP—that it will return to the situation which existed before July and allow the scheme to apply to existing homes in rural areas. Maybe I am slightly biased, but there are a great many people who cannot afford to buy or build a new home. If they were able to buy an existing older home, qualify under AHOP and fix it up later, the former owner might well move into a new home, and housing would be generated in the long run.

Again, I hope the government will see fit to divert more money into low rental housing for senior citizens rather than extend the federally oriented programs to which I have referred. The provinces and the municipalities have a very good idea of the type of housing which is needed and where it should be built. They are already contributing to the cost of construction on this basis, though not to the same extent, proportionately, as the federal government. Consideration should be given, in my view, to providing a cheaper type of housing than that which is currently available.

Another aspect with which I should like to deal relates to rural and native housing—I mentioned this in the housing committee. Naturally, those of us who live in the rural areas when we look at the concrete jungles of Montreal, Vancouver, and, yes, even of Ottawa, and see new buildings going up all the time, wonder why some of that money cannot go into the smaller towns and villages. I am hoping something can be done to this end.

Again, on the subject of native and rural housing, I draw attention to the fact that the cost of land in rural areas is much lower than it is in the cities, and that consequently dollars spent on housing will go a lot further, bearing in mind that it costs a minimum of $20,000 for a lot in Toronto, Vancouver, or possibly in Ottawa at the present time.

Another thing the provinces have requested in the housing field: is that they be given prior notice of the housing projects the minister is dreaming up, instead of having to read about them in that Liberal clarion paper, the Globe and Mail. The provinces would like to know about these things in advance. There is something else the provincial governments want. They would like commitments from the federal government over, say, three years in advance so that they could plan ahead with assurance, and not be obliged to go cap in hand to Ottawa. I trust the minister will do what he said he would do in committee and give the provinces a three-year forecast.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order. In accordance with the order agreed to earlier, the hon. member's time has expired.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to speak on this opposition day. In particular I should like to direct my words to the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on how the government is coping, and I quote from the words of the hon. member, with "the scourge of poverty". My own experience has dealt with one federal policy which is put forward for people with lower incomes, and that comes from legal aid experience. Tonight I should like to direct my words in my capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I should like to take all the members here tonight back to April, 1973, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) tabled the working paper on social security in Canada. Our government has always maintained that the best security for the individual is a good job. There is no need to go into this at this time, but the many programs developed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration such as LIP, LEAP, OFY, as well as other working programs under DREE, all show the concern of the government for keeping the individual in the work force.

In the working paper there were five principal strategies. These were an employment strategy, a social insurance strategy, an incomes supplementation strategy, a social services strategy and a federal-provincial strategy. Substantial progress has been made since April, 1973, toward the realization of these strategies.

On the first strategy federal-provincial ministers have agreed that a community employment strategy is needed. To this end 20 developmental projects have been launched across Canada by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and provincial ministers. This developmental work can only increase the experience of the government in finding and developing employment for people.

The object of the social insurance strategy was to enable all Canadians to make provision for their retirement through social insurance plans and to insure themselves against temporary losses of income due to sickness, accident, unemployment or maternity. The Canada and Quebec pension plans have been amended so as to increase maximum monthly retirement pensions, from $90 in December, 1973, to something like $250 in January, 1980. These changes were made in the context of the increase in old age security pensions in 1972 from $80 to $100, and the full indexation of both pensions as announced in 1973. Taken together these measures mean that total maximum old age pensions in 1975 amount to about $241 a month for a single person and $361 for a couple both over 65 in receipt of one Canada pension.

The object of the income supplementation strategy was to ensure adequate incomes for people who are working but whose incomes are not sufficient to meet family needs, and equally for people who are retired or unable to work or find employment. This objective is being accomplished for people 65 years of age and over by the increases in OAS as well as in the Canada pension plan and Quebec pension plan pensions, as I have already mentioned. Since October, 1973, the old age security pension for a single person has been increased from $100 to approximately $123.42 this April. This is probably one of the largest increases ever made over such a short period of time.

Another part of the government's income supplementation strategy is the guaranteed annual income supplement. With the cost of living indexation, as of April 1, 1975, a single person could receive a maximum old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement of $209.99 a month and a couple would receive $400.60.

As for the social services strategy, this was designed to ensure that over a period of time social services would be available to enable people to achieve their full potential. Services such as rehabilitation, vocational training, day care and home maker assistance are often required to enable people to enter or to retain useful employment, or sometimes simply to assist them to realize fuller potential as citizens.

One major national measure that was of help to a lot of working adults with families was the introduction of day care centres in 1974. The spouses of these families were able to use day care centres on the basis of need.

The fifth strategy, the federal-provincial strategy, was designed to ensure the harmonization of federal and provincial social security systems, while providing to the provinces the flexibility they required in order to adapt such systems to the needs of their citizens. For example, under the new Family Allowances Act provinces can vary the federal family allowance payment according to age or the number of children in the family. These variations were subject to a national minimum and a national average per child paid in each province.

The social policy review has progressed to the stage where it was agreed at the February, 1975, meeting of federal and provincial ministers of welfare that a policy framework for the next stages in the reform of Canada's social security system be set up. This framework would work toward the provision of an income support program for individuals not able to enter the labour force because they were handicapped, or because there was no job available in the area, or because a single parent had family responsibilities. In addition there should be supplementation of earnings, with the creation of a work incentive measure to ensure that every Canadian would be better off at work than receiving income support.

Before concluding this review of the progress made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the government over the last two years at federal-provincial meetings, one must remember the economic climate in which this progress is being made. Our economy has been growing at a rapid rate over the last four or five years and the government has been allocating a large part of that growth toward alleviating the burdens and sometimes the distress of the lower income members of the Canadian community.

The federal government will continue to be concerned for the well being of the community as a whole. I should like to quote a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare at the February provincial health ministers meeting. At page 14 of his speech he said:

> So long as it lies within the power of the government of Canada, it will not be the poor and the economically weak who will be asked to bear the brunt of economic difficulties confronted by the western world.

May I sum up by saying that as a result of these meetings and the framework that now lies between the federal and provincial ministers of welfare, the Minister of National Health and Welfare views this framework from two perspectives. It will be designed to provide an income to those who have been unable to find jobs and to reinforce the work incentives for all who are working but at low wages. This can only help the economy over a long period and will also provide some kind of assurance that the legitimate needs of all Canadians in need of assistance will be met.

This illustrates that the government is aware of the needs of all individuals in Canada. It has shown its concern by providing innovative and new programs of the kind I have already referred to in my speech tonight. These programs have already been referred to by other speakers on behalf of the government, such as the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) who discussed the housing needs of all Canadians. As I have said, this illustrates the government is concerned about the economy of this country. I see my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the official opposition representing an area of Canada that has shared the problems caused for all Canadians by the government's mishandling of the economy, I am pleased to take part in this debate tonight. To restore the health of our economy will take more than a new budget. I fear it will take new leadership in Canada.

Since coming to Ottawa I have become aware that, for the members of this administration, power is not a means to an end, a tool for doing away with the injustices in our society and for alleviating the problems of many Canadians. Instead, the holding of power has become an end in itself. Canadians have become cynical about those of us in politics, and they have every reason to be cynical. They question whether the government has any goals for our society, any blueprint for the future, and they fear that it prefers the trappings of office to the potential that possession of public office holds for making this a freer and more humane society.

Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his supporters must feel a twinge of embarrassment to recall the promises made in the summer of 1968 that a new administration under this Prime Minister would provide Canadians with a just society, because during his six and a half years as Prime Minister the inequities among our citizens have increased instead of declined, the freedom of individual Canadians to live their lives in peace has been further restricted by ever-increasing taxes and miles of new government red tape, and our economy has been laid waste by a government without the will or the imagination to bring in strong measures to put our economic affairs in order.

In my own constituency, which is located in the heart of our most prosperous province, the effects of the government's failure to provide leadership have been deeply felt. Our people are among the most industrious and most fiercely independent anywhere in this country, but our small businessmen are smothered by bureaucratic restrictions and taxed almost to the point where they would be better to close their doors.

Our farmers, many of whom have been on the same land for several generations, are leaving their farms in record numbers. Our working men are being laid off as the effects of the current recession deepen. Our senior citizens have found their life savings stolen by the tax of inflation, and many of them do not even know where they will find the money for next month's rent. Our young people are beginning to realize that their hopes of some day owning a home of their own have vanished. The memory of last summer's election campaign when they were told by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that "leadership is the issue" is a bitter memory in the winter of 1975.

If our farmers are to stay on the land they need more than hollow promises from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), because promises will not cover their production costs. If small business men are to continue in business they need more than smug assurances that the problems are worse in France, or Germany, or the Soviet Union. If the working people are to save for their retirement they need to know that their savings will not be taxed away either directly to finance governmental empire building or indirectly through the menace of inflation.

I am appalled that it is necessary to remind the Minister of Finance that there is more to being a minister of the Crown than driving around in a chauffeured limousine, or attending important meetings in other countries, or having battalions of assistants to make work for each other. He has a responsibility second only to that of the Prime Minister to provide leadership in solving this country's problems.

A couple of years ago the Prime Minister said that any government which could not come to grips with self-inflicted inflation deserved to be thrown from office. The Prime Minister needs to be reminded of that statement because, as long as it is in office only this government can introduce new policies that will resolve our economic problems. If it continues to refuse to act it should be removed from office.

The Minister of Finance has been decisive in rejecting the proposals we have made for our economy. He has rejected our proposals for a price and income policy, and he has had the government members stand up twice to defeat our proposal to return some $500 million to the taxpayers. Surely his responsibility goes beyond rejecting other peoples proposals. Surely he has a responsibility to come back to the people of Canada with some proposals of his own.

What is the economic policy of the government? For one thing, it has decided to bring in a record budget with an increase in terms of main estimates of 28.2 per cent. This big spending Minister of Finance has made his predecessor look penurious by comparison.

Look at what has happened to federal expenditures under this government. In 1968 when the Prime Minister took office every man, woman and child in Canada paid an average tax of about $550. Today the figure is about $1,325. In 1968 the federal budget was $12 billion. It had taken this country over 100 years to reach that figure, but today, six years later, the budget is about two and a half times that size, and the total proportion of our gross national product now controlled by government at one level or another is about 40 per cent.

The Minister of Finance is travelling around the country discussing the need for restraint in business and labour. The details of the proposal he is making are secret. While the details are being kept secret from the Canadian public it is clear that he is asking them to exercise some restraint for the common good.

If we cannot give the Minister of Finance any credit for demonstrating courage in dealing with the economy, we can at least acknowledge that he has demonstrated he has a lot of nerve when it comes to asking private businesses and individual men and women to show self-restraint for the public good at the very same time he and his colleagues wallow in the excesses of waste and extravagance being paid for by the taxpayers' earnings.

What I would like to do today is provide the House with a few examples of the exploding amount of waste financed by money coerced by this government from the taxpayers. One of the areas in which this waste is most apparent is in the federal government's information bureaucracy. An excellent series of articles was prepared recently by the Canadian Press, and they give some interesting facts about the waste in this section of government.

In the past five years the information bureaucracy has doubled in size, and now includes 863 people at a cost of $200 million a year. There are also some 403 vacancies. Of course most of the propaganda work is contracted out, generally to Liberal advertising agencies that dream up campaigns to try to convince you that the post office feels "Your Mail is Vital", or that the problems of women in Canada can be solved by wearing a "Why Not" button, or that filling out your tax form this year is really easier than you think.

Perhaps it is because the government has become so conscious of its image that it refused to release a 1973 survey which deals with this matter. Many members of this House will recall the reports recently about the minister of health's speech to this chamber in which he defended his decision to deny Canadians the right to watch WFL games. Those remarks, which none of us had realized were worth much at all at the time, cost the taxpayers a total of $1,950, about 36 cents a word.

Many of us do not realize that the minister has also done well in the government's television sweepstakes, creating within his department a television studio that, according to one information officer, anybody would be proud to own. His officials showed their resourcefulness in 1972 when they dispatched a film crew to the 1972 Munich Olympics. When they were denied permission to film the games because they had not bothered to get proper credentials, they took pictures of the stadium which became part of a 25 minute children's film entitled "It's not the winning". Apparently it was not.

According to Canadian Press, the minister's department developed an $80,000 television studio in Tunney's Pasture where it had ambitious plans to produce television shows. Since then the plans have fallen through and the equipment is now used for such purposes as filming autopsies on farm animals.

Last fall one of my constituents wrote asking me to look into the research and development contracts being handed out by the Department of Supply and Services. We have spent a considerable amount of time reviewing the activities of that branch of the government over the past couple of years. As members will know, in August of 1972 the government announced a new policy designed to encourage research and development to be done for the government by the private sector. The government was concerned about the scientific bureaucracy within government, and it decided it should try to spread the wealth, sharing it with the private sector.

A new bulletin will be released soon by Supply and Services, but their last one which includes the contracts awarded up until January 31 shows that some $26,960,986 had been given out between last April 1 and the end of this January. That figure represents a considerable increase over the same period last year.

None of us on this side of the House would dispute the value of the government showing leadership in the field of research and development. Nor would we quarrel with the policy of having much more of this work done by the private sector. We do most certainly look with skepticism at a number of the projects and the way they have been handled. Some seem to be extremely wasteful, but may indeed be justifiable. If they are, I would welcome the government's explanation. I would also welcome explanations in respect of projects which cannot easily be justified.

Let us take a look at some of these contracts. In October of 1974 the government reported a contract of $3,000 for "preparation of six newspaper articles describing the work of the environmental protection service". The payment of $500 an article would be enough to make any reporter in the press gallery begin to salivate. What is also interesting about this contract is that it went to a chap in Victoria who, up until last summer, was employed as an information officer with the public information branch of the environmental protection service. It is too bad that they could not have got him to do the work while he was on salary.

Also in the October bulletin was the report of a contract for $40,500 to "Canadian Facts" of Toronto for "a survey of Canadian public awareness of scientific developments and achievements as obtained through the news media". No doubt that is a worthy project if you have $40,000 sitting around.

In the same bulletin it was reported that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had a contract for "a study, through selected methods of human reactions to the introduction of the metric system in Quebec". This little gem will cost a mere $65,000.

In the same issue it is reported that a decision was made that a fellow from Bergen, Norway, should also get a piece of the action. He will be receiving $1,250 for the "preparation of a lecture on Norwegian developments in ultra-sonic methods of current measurements".

In July of 1974 a contract for $9,560 went for an "analytical study of methods to popularise science and technology". That sounds like a great way to spend an extra $9,560.

I see that I am quickly approaching the end of my time. There are many other examples I could give of extravagant waste within the government. For example, a sizable grant was given in respect of the "interpretation of data available on the site-change responses of native trees in the national capital region."

I would invite hon. members of this House to avail themselves of these editions of the Department of Supply and Service bulletins, in order to see the sort of grants being given out by that department. A new bulletin will become available in the next couple of days. It disturbs me that at the same time the Minister of Finance is asking Canadians to show restraint he continues to indulge in this type of waste and extravagance. As I said at the beginning, perhaps it will take a new budget to put our economic house in order. But even more than that, the fact is that we need new leadership in Canada.

● (2150)

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who agreed I might have five minutes of his short time to put forward a few remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I would be grateful if my colleagues would applaud the hon. member rather than me.

In a very summary way I might observe that no one in this debate on this side of the House has by any means indicated we are proud of the unemployment rate in this country, the rate of inflation or the rate of growth. I do not say that. But by international standards of performance we are doing better than the major powers around the world, some of which are going bankrupt.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Kaplan: Italy, to name one. I think it is a tribute to the minister that he has been listened to specifically for leadership by the most powerful nations in order to try to find solutions to these international problems. I noted in the remarks of the minister that he did not foreclose the possibility of a new budget being introduced some time soon. I am sure he would introduce one if it were considered to be helpful. In this spirit I should like to make some suggestions in respect of areas where activities might take place, if international activity evaporates, and where internal activity might be generated to provide real growth and real jobs. First, we in Canada have something few other countries have; we have our frontier. When our foreign markets decline we can turn to this frontier and direct our energies and full productive capacities to developing it.

There must be ten projects on the shelf which are of tremendous magnitude, any one of which would be a great stimulus to the economy. One has been committed. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) should be congratulated for Syncrude. The very decision to proceed with Syncrude has tremendous impact on our economy, not only in the west where the centre of gravity will be but in all parts of the country. And there are other projects on the shelf, such as pipelines for oil and gas, electrical plants in Fundy and James Bay, and offshore development and exploration projects. I think it may be time for the government to look on the shelf and indicate that some of these projects should be proceeded with, giving heed to the ecology and to human-considerations. The green light should be turned on. However, the frontier is only one place to go.

There is another industry whose entire production is domestically consumed and for which world markets are not needed. That is the housing industry. It is the classic generator of economic action including production of roads, schools, parks, furniture, carpets, appliances, and 100 other things which go when housing goes. It is the best generator of jobs at all levels of skills. It is a decentralized industry which can provide action in every community in Canada.

Apart from all the economic considerations, housing is badly needed. In my own riding rents may go up 25 per cent in the next year. In this spirit I would urge the government to take action. The federal government can give housing a big push. It has done so in the past. Last year of over $1,200,000,000 offered to this country in housing, less than $1 billion, only about $900 million, was taken up. The government can give such encouragement and should continue to do so.

Government stimulated production has always followed tax reductions. I wish to make the suggestion that the next budget, instead of stimulating by tax reductions, should stimulate by special new housing programs. CMHC has the ideas. The minister knows what he wants to do. What is needed are more funds for land acquisition, for servicing, for sewers, for roads, for mortgages and for subsidizing interest rates and rents for public housing. Let us call the next budget a housing budget.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the key words in the motion we have been debating today are the last four words, "the scourge of poverty". Some hon. members across the way do not like those words appearing in this sedate House of Commons, but I suggest it is one of the facts of life in Canada today to which we really must address ourselves with all the seriousness at our command.

Members who know anything of the conditions in the outports of Newfoundland, in the core areas of our cities or among the native peoples, and those who are aware of the fact that about a million of our senior citizens receive the guaranteed income supplement because they have nothing else, will have to agree that there is in this affluent land of ours a scourge of poverty that could be very serious for us in the years that lie ahead.

I congratulate the National Council of Welfare on the several reports it has produced in recent years, particularly its report entitled "Prices and the Poor," which appeared in April, 1974, and also its report entitled "Poor Kids" which was published in March 1975, just a week or two ago. This latter report has been referred to frequently today and is one which I believe every member of this House should read.

The fact is that although we may be afraid of what will happen to us in Canada or in the world because of pollution, the lack of energy, nuclear war or what have you, I submit that when in Canada there are over 1,600,000 children living in poverty, our future is not very bright.

Among the various documents which have come to our attention in recent months which underline the scourge of poverty is a copy of a speech made in Toronto on October 31, 1974, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) entitled "Income Distribution: A question of community ethics". It was a tremendous speech in which, although he referred to the gains we have made in social welfare, the minister pointed out that despite all those gains the distribution of wealth in this country is still terribly unequal, with a very large number of Canadian individuals and families living below the poverty line. This is a challenge this country must meet, and I trust members on all sides will pay no attention to those who say that our asking for a new budget is just a ploy, but will listen to the sort of things that were said earlier by my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and will realize that the future of this country really depends on our solving this problem, getting rid of poverty and inequality and making sure that the wealth we produce is distributed as equally as possible among all our people. This has to be our goal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that although the intention was clear there was some uncertainty this afternoon when there were discussions about tomorrow's order of business. It might be useful to have a House order rather than just the words of the Minister of Finance. I am told by the Table that the words of the minister were not exactly a House order. I suggest it be made clear that the House has agreed that tomorrow is to be a day for government business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I find it very difficult at this time to make this clear if it is not already clear in the mind of the hon. member or other hon. members. Perhaps the minister has something to add.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will not argue with the Table, because I never win those battles in any event. I felt, when we put the question to the House earlier, that there was a general grunt of agreement that the opposition day be a future day and that we hold tomorrow open for government business. When the question was asked concerning what the government business would be, the answer was that it would be Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill and, if that were disposed of, the bill relating to metric conversion.

● (2200)

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous consent to that effect, and that we can assume that a House order has been made.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied, but Hansard does not record a grunt. I just wanted to be sure that the House is officially doing what it intended to do.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES REFLECTED IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the recently tabled main estimates Blue Book there are many shocking and amazing figures, but none more shocking or amazing than the 29 per cent jump in the budget for the Prime Minister's office, with corresponding increase for the Privy Council office and cabinet secretariat.

In the 1974-75 fiscal year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) somehow got by with a staff of only 95 and a mere $1,643,000 budget. But for 1975-76 he has apparently decided that he cannot operate on that meagre stipend, so the budget is for $2,124,000 and a staff of 101—over $2 million to operate the Prime Minister's office and residence.

In 1962-63 the total budget for the Prime Minister's residence was $23,930. This was broken down under six headings. The Prime Minister's office was funded by the Privy Council office which had a total administration budget of $563,600. This year the Privy Council has an operational budget of over $14.5 million, without counting capital expenditure or grants. This is a direct increase of $3,241,000 over last year, or a 28.7 per cent jump for the second year in a row.

Few of these figures are broken down substantially. They are left in blocks of $2 million, $3 million or even $6 million under nebulous titles and descriptions. In the estimates in the early 1960's expenditures were explicitly described down to amounts in the hundreds of dollars, so that we knew how the Prime Minister was spending taxpayers' money.

Now the estimates allot $2.1 million under the heading of the office of the Prime Minister, with no further explanation than the operation of the office of the Prime Minister, maintenance of his residence and allowances to former prime ministers, the latter of which is only $5,556. These figures raise some very serious doubts. Where is all this money going, what is it used for, and why is it necessary? If the Prime Minister feels he can justify these expenditures, he should voluntarily table a full breakdown. If he does not think he can justify them, it is imperative that the House insist on receiving this explanation so that the Canadian people can see how their money is being squandered.

It is becoming tragically apparent that this incredible amount of money is being used by the Prime Minister to surround himself with an army of politically appointed personal advisers who are facilitating the concentration of power in the Prime Minister, usurping the role of parliament, and duplicating the work of the senior public service and even the cabinet.

The Prime Minister is apparently conducting an experiment in running the country from his office, and as a result we are heading toward the U.S. presidential system of government in this country. Parliament has been emasculated, and the morale of the senior levels of the civil service has never been lower. This experiment of giving presidential power to the Prime Minister has obviously been a dismal failure. The evidence is all around us. Hon. members simply have to pick up a newspaper, or glance through their daily mail when it is delivered, to see proof that civil unrest and public dissatisfaction are at an all time high.

In 1974 our country lost 9.5 million working days because of strikes—67 per cent more than in 1973, and more than any other industrialized nation except one. We all know what is happening now in 1975.

And, of course, the main reason for the unprecedented magnitude of strikes is the unpredecented magnitude of inflation that has been cultivated by the government. Apparently the group of seven did not have any more effective solutions than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), nor does either have any ideas to ease our unemployment rate, which is at 6.8 per cent and rising.

It is abundantly clear that the result of the Prime Minister's experiment are not positive. In fact the experiment is very damaging to the country as a whole during the present trying economic period, and will be permanently damaging to the institution of parliament, the make-up of the civil service and the very system of government in our country.

The Prime Minister must take immediate steps to return the power of governing to parliament before that power is irreparably eroded. He must cease surrounding himself with a huge staff of personal appointees who are loyal only to him and not to the government as a whole, as is the permanent civil service with which his advisers are in competition. He must begin to show some example of frugality and restraint to a country that is desperately in need of some form of leadership from the government in the fight against inflation.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must say that the remarks of the hon. gentleman have been addressed to the House as a member of the opposition and that in many ways they can be refuted because he has quoted figures that go back to the early 1960's. But today we are living in 1975 and I am sure the Canadian people will realize that not only have costs risen since the early 1960's but also that the Canadian people have written to their members of parliament, and certainly to members of cabinet, and to the Prime Minister's office, in far greater extent in this modern age than they did in the early 1960's. I think it is only fair to say they expect answers to those requests.

Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that the operation of the Prime Minister's office is included within the estimates of the Privy Council office. As far as the estimates for the Prime Minister's Office are concerned, the cost of its operation has been carefully scrutinized by the Privy Council and the Treasury Board and it is entirely within the practices and procedures of the government. The increased estimates do reflect the side effects of inflation which is the case with all levels of government and within the private sector.

In the case of the over-all estimates for the Privy Council office it should be remembered that additional funds are required to support an expanded responsibility in the field of federal-provincial relations which are necessary in a federal society, and which was recognized in a bill passed by this House last December.

In conclusion, I can only say that I think it is more important than ever before today that Canadians have a personal liaison with members of cabinet, with members of parliament, and with the Prime Minister's office in particular than they have ever had. That process is going on, and I think this is a very valid argument in this particular case.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.12 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS TO ANSWER QUESTIONS RELATED TO PREVIOUSLY HELD PORTFOLIOS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning which I gave Your Honour notice earlier this morning. It pertains to the incapacity of members of the House to obtain information from ministers of the Crown on matters which were properly their responsibility when they were ministers of different departments on previous occasions. On Tuesday of this week Your Honour ruled concerning a question put to the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on a matter for which he was responsible when minister of transport. Your Honour ruled it was not proper for a minister to provide answers to questions which pertained to his previous responsibilities.

In light of Your Honour's ruling, and in light of further revelations concerning criminal proceedings which have arisen as a result of alleged illegal activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, there is very real concern by members on all sides of the House, and the public, with regard to obtaining from the former solicitor general his view of the proceedings alleged to have taken place in the summer of 1972.

A councillor of the city of Hamilton stated that the former solicitor general was given documentary evidence, on the basis of which he should have initiated certain proceedings. It is alleged he did not do so for many months. If Your Honour finds there is a prima facie case of privilege with regard to former ministers providing information which is of concern to members of the House, and for the purpose of clearing the record for their own benefit, I would like to move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that the minister in question will have the opportunity to appear before that committee and clarify the situation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question of principle. I believe it is in accordance with the traditions of the House and its usages that ministers are cross-examined on their departmental responsibilities. While I recognize that it is a very difficult problem, I feel that unless we adhere to this principle parliament will not be able to fulfil its function as it should.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I admit this is a very difficult problem which has been posed to Your Honour. You must consider a number of factors. For example, the public accounts committee deals with matters which go into the past. If a rule of that kind were adhered to, it would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to obtain the kind of information the committee wished if ministers in charge of departments at the time the items complained of were in the government's responsibility were no longer there.

I refer Your Honour to Standing Order 39. I think we have to commence discussion on the rules with regard to written questions, because the rules for oral questions spring from the rules for written questions. I quote from Standing Order 39:

> Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs—

I emphasize the words "public affairs": it is not "public affairs limited to the responsibility of the minister of the department concerned". I suggest that when we address questions to ministers of the Crown, we are questioning the ministry as a whole. One minister, because he occupies a certain portfolio, might have specific knowledge of a particular subject matter, but I suggest to Your Honour that until the discussion the other day I doubt whether there had been a hard and fast ruling on that point; and, of course, the question period itself has been developing over a period of time into its present form.

I submit to Your Honour and to members on the government side that it would be monstrous to permit a minister who had been in charge of a portfolio and who subsequently had been removed from that position to say that because his responsibilities had been changed he could not be questioned as to events which happened during the time he occupied the previous position. Of course, the questions must be related to public affairs, and what we were trying to discuss in the House and in committee are surely public affairs of the greatest magnitude.

It is all very well for one minister to say he will inform himself from another minister; this does not have the same effect as subjecting the minister directly concerned to public scrutiny by way of questions from the opposition or, for that matter, from the government side. If it all has to be done by hearsay, one minister might hide behind the interpretation placed upon a situation by another minister and a great deal of the value of the question period would be lost. I ask Your Honour to consider this matter seriously because your ruling could have an impact on the value of the question period.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I heard your ruling the other day with some astonishment. Certainly, it has never been my impression that a minister could not be questioned about a matter over which he had exercised responsibility. The ruling that a minister could not be questioned about matters for which at one time he was responsible, but for which he is no longer responsible, means that in order to wipe the record clean of anything which may have transpired, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can simply ask the members of the cabinet to play musical chairs by stepping over one pace to the right; the whole record would be wiped clean, or at least questioning would be prevented. I do not think this was ever the intention of our rules.

Ministers who have been responsible for certain matters ought to be open for questioning about those matters. The situation is analogous to that of a privy councillor; there is a shared and continuing responsibility even for actions taken when a member occupied a portfolio which later was relinquished for another. I respectfully submit that Your Honour might wish to reconsider the effect of your decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will hear other hon. members—there are several who wish to contribute to the discussion—and I shall certainly give the matter very careful consideration and reserve my decision. There has, however, been comment that some hon. members were caught by surprise or somewhat astonished by my recent decision that ex-ministers ought not to be questioned. Before the discussion proceeds, I think I should refer hon. members who want to participate in the discussion to citation 171 (ll) of Beauchesne, found at the top of page 149, which provides that questions ought not to "seek from an ex-minister information with regard to transactions during his term of office". That is as clear and explicit as it can possibly be, and I have a little difficulty understanding why hon. members are astonished by that.

Furthermore, at page 323 of May's eighteenth edition, under the heading "Questions to unofficial members", under paragraph (u) the following appears:

—and a question to an ex-minister with regard to transactions during his term of office has been ruled out of order.

I put that on the record only to indicate that there is a very clear and explicit foundation that I think would direct us into a situation where questions could be put, on a broader interpretation, to privy councillors who sit on the opposition side of the House in regard to responsibilities that they had at one time when they were in the ministry, and I would have some difficulty with that.

In any case, I want to put the foundation for my decision on the record. What I am troubled about is not so much the very clear citation that relates to use of the question period and the specific responsibilities of ministers during the question period, but I take it that the point raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) relates to a much broader context, namely, that there is difficulty, not so much on the question period but in getting information from ministers in other ways before the standing committees; then it would seem to me that any member can be called before a standing committee and asked questions about matters on which he may be able to contribute information that would be of some value in the study of any matter put before the standing committee. If there is some difficulty there, this is a point that I should like to review further, but I did want to put that on the record before hearing other members.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, about the question of privilege, may I say first of all that I understand very well the concern of hon. members who want to know the whole truth and it is also my concern that all the facts be disclosed.

My attention was drawn to statements reported in the press and allegedly made by Mr. Campbell who I understand is a Hamilton city councillor. I would like to assure the House of two things: first, I have never met Mr. Campbell; second, I have never seen a letter that Mr. Campbell is supposed to have sent me. This being said, I have asked for an immediate inquiry on all allegations contained in Mr. Campbell's statements and for a report as soon as possible, not later than Monday.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rising on the same question of privilege?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In light of what the minister has said, I wonder whether he is speaking for the government. If so, is the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) now prepared to agree to the kind of investigation for which we have been asking? Obviously the minister wants one, and we want one.

Mr. Speaker: I was not aware that we had slid into the question period that fast. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): This is strictly on the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I can well imagine and appreciate the concern of the ex-solicitor general, the present minister, in this matter. I am trying to be as helpful as I can, sir. If I may put forward this point of order, I will do so.

The minister has indicated he would like to get this matter cleaned up as soon as possible. Perhaps I could make this simple suggestion. Last night an attempt was made to have the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs call the minister so that his side of the story could be presented. That committee is still a valid committee of this House and the members who were there last night are here today. I would ask if the House leader would agree to a request by the chairman of that committee to meet, say at 12 noon today, in order that the committee could hear the minister and have this matter cleaned up as soon as possible. In this way, his position could be presented to us, to the House and, of course, to the public as a whole.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Initially, I should like to point out that my friend was very careful not to question the ruling Your Honour made the other day. I may feel, as my leader does, restricted by the nature of that ruling; but I have to say that it seems to be supported by citations in Beauchesne's fourth edition, not only the one to which you referred but also citation 178 which states:

> Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible.

The point of the question of privilege is that under the rules as they are, and in light of the precedents, we are stuck with this difficulty of not being able to question a minister concerning a responsibility that is no longer his because he has been moved to some other department. As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out, this could pose a real difficulty. If, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) comes back on Monday, he were to move the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to some other post, then we could not question him on what has been going on, and so on.

It is because of this that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby would like to see this matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections on the basis of a motion under a question of privilege so that in the committee there could be a discussion of how we can cope with this matter. I realize that many questions of privilege do not meet the definition under the rules, but I think the privileges of members of parliament are affected, in the sense that they are trying to get information to which they are entitled but are frustrated by a situation over which at the moment they seem to have no control. I think, therefore, Your Honour's ruling should be that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

In the meantime, we have had the statement of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) and the suggestion of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). I would urge Your Honour not to try to give a ruling today, but to hold this matter in abeyance for a day or two until we see whether ways are found or offered of getting this information. If that is the case, nothing further may need to be done about it. If we are still being frustrated in respect of legitimate right that should obtain for members, then I think Your Honour should find in favour of the proposal made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

I submit that the issue is a terribly important one. No one is suggesting, even by questions, any guilt; but when questions are raised about the conduct of members of parliament or members of the government we owe it to the people of this country to have the matters clarified. We also owe it to the ministers whose names have been mentioned to have the matters clarified. I think, therefore, that the matter is of such importance the Minister of Supply and Services should take the opportunity of pursuing his suggestion of a few moments ago. If that does not meet our needs, then after consideration I submit Your Honour should rule in favour of the question of privilege.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, with specific reference to the matter raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), last night there was discussion with regard to what witnesses should be called by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and it was suggested that the steering committee should meet at the earliest possible time to determine what business would take place. I do not think it is proper to suggest that the committee should meet at two o'clock today, in the absence of discussions concerning what witnesses we wish to hear and what evidence could be obtained. I and other members are willing to meet at the earliest possible moment to discuss future business of the committee.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a few moments on the very important principle of whether or not members of this House have a right to require or invite a former minister to appear before the appropriate committee which is dealing with a matter which came under his jurisdiction at some former time when he was a minister of the Crown.

In 1964, when I was not a member of this House, the question arose in the public accounts committee about whether or not there had been impropriety in the letting of a contract to operate the restaurant and bar at the Montreal airport. I had been minister in charge of the department at that time. The public accounts committee decided that, as the minister who six years before had been in charge of the department, I should be asked to appear before the committee to answer questions put to me by the members of the committee.

The chairman of the committee at that time, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), contacted me in Montreal and asked me to appear before the committee. I immediately accepted the invitation and came to Ottawa, where I was subjected to very searching questions for a very considerable time before the committee. I might say I was able to demonstrate clearly that there had been no impropriety—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: —as you would expect, Mr. Speaker. This, I believe, demonstrates the need and the right of members of this House to be able to ask, and in fact demand, the attendance of former ministers before the appropriate committee and to subject them to questions put by members of the committee, and in that way to maintain the integrity of our whole parliamentary system. I urge that that principle be followed when you consider this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, there is one point I should like to make to Your Honour before you consider this matter. Last night I moved a motion in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to have the former solicitor general, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), called as a witness as a result of a question asked of his successor the present minister. That motion was ruled out of order by the chairman of the committee.

Your Honour has already read the citations with regard to questions asked in the House of ministers in respect of their previous administrative responsibilities, but if we are to be further restricted in standing committees during the examination of the estimates, then we would be denied any opportunity whatsoever to call ministers and question them regarding any of their administrative responsibilities past or present. Therefore, I would ask Your Honour to consider this matter very carefully and review the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of last night and, more particularly, the ruling of the chairman of that committee.

Finally, may I say that the whole matter could be resolved quickly if the government House leader would stand in his place and have this whole matter referred to a committee, as we have been endeavouring to have done for the past few days.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I, too, should like to say a few words. My first words might surprise Your Honour. With respect, I think that the question of privilege of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is almost out of order in the sense that it is in a vacuum or is hypothetical. Four or five days ago I asked a question about which, obviously, we had all had notice. At that time, because we were in the midst of the question period, I did not really debate the point at issue with Your Honour, although I was interested in the ruling which certainly changed the form of my question.

I think there are two points which have not been mentioned yet. We are discussing this matter in theory, really, because obviously there are times during the question period when this very point might arise and I would have thought, with respect to all my colleagues, that that would have been the time to debate the point, when Your Honour had before you the actual situation of a question being asked and could see just what the question was trying to get at.

Your Honour said that some of the rules in Beauchesne show quite clearly that the practice is that one cannot ask ministers of previous administrations about past transactions in their departments. There is no question about that so far as I am concerned. However, what is different here—and, again, it depends upon anticipation of questions and I think we know what the questions may be—is that this is not a question about a departmental transaction in terms of policy of the Department of the Solicitor General and why, for example, there was rehabilitation for prisoners under the former minister and not under the new minister. In that way, obviously we would pollute the whole parliamentary process more than it is polluted today.

This matter goes to something not in a departmental way. First, if we had the facts before us in the question period—undoubtedly the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), from the general statement he made, knew that he might be involved in these questions—it would be evident that they did not involve the Solicitor General in terms of how he administered a certain policy of his department with respect to which now, four, five or three years later we are trying to ask questions retroactively.

The minister is a member of the Privy Council and a member of this cabinet and this government. That is a little more relevant than the case of a minister who is no longer around, or the case of an opposition privy councillor who is no longer in the administration. So, first, it is a relevant situation because he is a member of a government. Second, and most important, it is not a question of departmental transactions but a question of credibility, where the minister involved is in the cabinet and is a member of the Privy Council. Surely that must be relevant and it separates this matter, I suggest, from the precedent cited where questions concerned past departmental transactions.

The third matter which really points out why the issue is credibility is that in the evidence given to the committee last night, quite properly the Solicitor General said he had talked to his predecessor who told him certain things. That is hearsay. Since last night many of us have heard a direct contradiction of the hearsay evidence given by the Solicitor General about his predecessor. Obviously, the best way to clear up any conflict in respect of this evidence is to hear direct evidence from the former solicitor general, or direct evidence by the man who is contradicted—in this case, Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): There are charges.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, forget the charges. The fact is that at the moment there is no charge against anyone, but there is a real conflict of evidence given before a committee and involving the ministry. Mr. Speaker, the matter is important. Because the hon. member is still a member of the administration, and because the contradiction occurs with respect to the administration, I think the matter should receive not only the serious consideration which Your Honour will give it, but a very important and different interpretation from the one Your Honour first gave to the House.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): As a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs who participated in the debate last night, I rise to say just a few words because I feel the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) may have, unwittingly I am sure, given Your Honour an erroneous impression of what transpired at the meeting last night and of the chairman's ruling. The chairman's ruling was with regard only to the supplementary estimates for 1974-75 with which we were dealing last night. These supplementary estimates have to be taken strictly. It was discussed, argued and decided that they should be taken strictly and that the committee should not be given the scope to hear witnesses in this kind of inquiry. But the Chairman, in his ruling, specifically left open the question of what might happen when the main estimates were considered. I might add that the government members on the committee who spoke, such as myself, also indicated an open mind on the subject.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I just wanted to make a couple of brief points on this matter which has already been discussed so fully. My first point is with reference to citations, which Your Honour has quoted on two occasions, in which the word "ex-minister" is used. It seems to me that it is possible to interpret that word a little more broadly than one might suspect. Ex-minister may not necessarily mean a minister who was formerly responsible for a department and is now responsible for another department. He is still in fact a minister, not an ex-minister. Ex-minister may mean someone who is no longer a minister at all.

The second point I want to make is that the practice in this area has not been as clear cut as some people might suggest. May I say with the greatest respect to you, Sir, that I have before me a copy of Hansard containing a question and answer which you have allowed concerning a matter which had been the responsibility of a minister at an earlier time. I should like to refer you to page 2879 of Hansard for February 4, at which time a question was put to the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) concerning an event which occurred while he was minister of national health and welfare.

I will read the question and answer, which deal with arsenic pollution in Yellowknife. The following is the question put to the Minister of Labour:

> Having been the minister responsible for health at the time this report was initially produced and tabled, could he explain why the health study was not initiated at that time?

The question was allowed, and the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall at the moment, but I could check into it with my colleague.

This is an example, it seems to me, of this procedure being allowed.

An hon. Member: The minister did not answer the question, he said he would check with his colleague.

Mr. Yewchuk: The fact is that the question was allowed and an answer was provided. So, it seems to me that the practice in the past is not as clear cut as one might think in the first instance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As indicated earlier, this is a matter which I think deserves the most careful consideration. I think there are a number of areas that are quite clear. I take it that the citations in Beauchesne make it quite clear where the responsibility lies during the question period itself. There are both precedents for prohibitions or disallowance of questions put to ministers about their former responsibilities and admonitions that questions should be directed to ministers about their current responsibilities. I think that fact remains strong and clear.

However, I feel in addition that the chair does not have the power ever to prevent a minister from answering a question which he wishes to answer. It is one thing to suggest that, if a minister raises an objection on technical grounds to answering the question, the question must be examined to see whether the technical grounds are correct. However, if a question is put and the minister wishes to answer it, I am sure it would be improper for the chair to try to stop him from doing so.

In addition, suggestions have been made that the chair review the procedures of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Whatever the dimensions of the problem may be, it is also abundantly clear that the chair does not sit on appeals to procedures in standing committees. These committees are masters of their own procedures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I should say that the corollary of the committees being masters of their own procedures is that the committees have very wide powers, provided they are in agreement to take a certain step. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), once the committee agreed to invite him, there was no problem with his being there. There may be difficulty with the committee coming to such an agreement, but in that case it is not a matter with which the chair should concern itself.

In the final analysis, I again see the question of privilege of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) as touching not simply the narrow question about the question period, but also the wider question as to whether hon. members' privileges are restricted because they are stopped, not only by the rules in the question period but by other procedures, from having access to information which they feel they have a right to obtain. That is the wider question which I propose to review and upon which I shall reserve my decision, not only in the hope that the arguments provided will throw some light on the question but also because possibly, with the passage of two or three days, there may be some agreement among members of the House to try to resolve this question on their own volition.

PROPOSAL COMMITTEE HEARS MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES WITH RESPECT TO HAMILTON HARBOUR—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity in view of what I think should be the desire of us all to permit a member of the cabinet to clear his name, to clear the air and to present information so that further derogatory statements and innuendos will not be circulating at least this weekend in our public press. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be instructed to convene immediately, and no later than 12.30 p.m. this day, to hear the testimony of a member of the ministry, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer), pertaining to his knowledge of the so called Hamilton Harbour matter and in particular the allegation that has been made that the hon. member had documents and information presented to him in September, 1972, by a member of the City of Hamilton council, namely, one James Campbell.

Mr. Speaker: The motion which is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented or debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister, in light of the very proper request made by the Minister of Supply and Services—and I say this quite sincerely—for an investigation into the matters which we have been discussing, whether the Acting Prime Minister will take immediate steps to set about establishing a forum in which this investigation can take place and the terms of reference of that forum.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to have misunderstood what the Minister of Supply and Services was saying. He said that he was having an inquiry made in his department as to the circumstances surrounding the presentation by Mr. Campbell of a letter to him. That is quite different, of course, from the sort of suggestion that has been made by the hon. member. I can assure the hon. member that so far as this government is concerned, we have absolutely nothing to hide.

Mr. Hees: You said it with a straight face, Mitch.

[Mr. Speaker.]

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—WILLINGNESS OF MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE OR ANSWER QUESTIONS IN HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, following the distinction made by Your Honour in your ruling a little while ago, I should like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether he is in fact anxious to have an investigation by the committee of this House, and is he prepared to appear before that committee? In addition, following the suggestion of Mr. Speaker, is he prepared and willing voluntarily to answer questions in the House on the matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, of course I am prepared to submit to any practice accepted by this House. I do not intend to escape in any way. I have too much respect for this House and for hon. members to try to use regulations which could hide the truth. There is no such practice in this House. I think you took your decision and I readily submit to it.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—SUGGESTED INTERVIEW WITH MR. CAMPBELL CONCERNING INFORMATION ALLEGEDLY GIVEN FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General with respect to Mr. James Campbell who apparently had, as he states or was alleged to state, delivered material to the former solicitor general in mid-September, 1972. Will the present Solicitor General now ask the RCMP to interview Mr. James Campbell, a city of Hamilton controller, to ascertain whether he gave information to the former solicitor general, Jean Goyer, in mid-September, 1972 regarding dredging irregularities or abnormalities related to Hamilton harbour activities?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I stated last night I will ask and I have asked as a matter of fact, people in my department and the RCMP to check into that. This has been confirmed by the former solicitor general who has said that he also will look into this and report to the House as soon as possible.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—SUGGESTED INTERVIEW WITH MR. CAMERON, ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT TO FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A further supplementary. It was reported in the Hamilton Spectator on September 13, 1972 that a Mr. John Cameron, administrative assistant to Mr. Goyer, indicated that his department had in fact received information from Mr. Campbell. According to the newspaper article Mr. Cameron said:

We did receive a communication from Mr. Campbell but it was decided that if there was to be any federal government involvement it would have to be with the Department of Transport.

In view of this alleged statement, would the Solicitor General undertake to see to it that his department, through the RCMP, contact Mr. Cameron in order to determine just what occurred mid-September, 1972 with respect to these documents?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have already contacted Mr. Cameron and asked him to provide us with all details necessary.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—SUGGESTED INTERVIEW WITH FORMER MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): One final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that it was reported in the same issue of the Hamilton Spectator that the said documents were subsequently delivered to the then minister of transport who at the present time is Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, would the Solicitor General undertake to contact his brother minister in order to ascertain whether those alleged reports are true and report back to the House?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I have already done that, Mr. Speaker. I must say that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion had already left for Newfoundland to attend an important meeting with fisheries people but he will be back on Monday.

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF COMPANIES CONNECTED WITH DREDGING COMPANIES BEING INVESTIGATED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday my colleague the hon. member for New Westminster asked the minister if the RCMP or other appropriate agencies within his department were involved in an investigation of contracts with companies with which the 14 individuals recently charged on other matters are involved; that is to say, companies that have contracts with the government for operations other than dredging. The minister said he would check into that and report back to the House. I wonder if he can now tell the House what the situation is?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I did ask for information on that question. A lot of information was given to me as I came into the House. So much has been given to me at the last minute that I will have to check my documents to see if I have the answer to that question. I apologize but so much has been put before me in the last few hours that I have not had time to read it all. I will try to get back with an answer in the next few hours.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS BACK TO 1963—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to an answer to that question. Evidence has been provided in the reports of the auditors general from 1963 until just a couple of years ago which documented a very substantial overrun in dredging contracts in each of a series of years. These are overruns between cost estimates and what was finally paid on dredging contracts. I refer the minister specifically to two years. In 1966, in four contracts there was an overrun of $629,000 and in 1967, in seven contracts, there was an overrun of $472,000, making a total in excess of $1 million paid over the original cost estimates. In view of these very significant discrepancies between estimates and what was actually paid for dredging operations, would the minister assure the House that these and other contracts for dredging operations going back to 1963 will be investigated by his department?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the RCMP if the items referred to in the auditors general reports were the subject of their investigation and if not, I will ask them to look into it.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I want to get absolute clarification of the last point. The minister is saying to the House that if they have not investigated those contracts he will take steps to ensure such investigations take place?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will ask if they have already looked at those items in the auditor general's reports as part of their inquiry to date. If they have not I will ask them to look at those particular items in the auditor general's reports and follow them up.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MR. CAMERON, ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT TO FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the previous question put to the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the conflicting statements made by the minister and his successor as Solicitor General, the present minister, before the committee last night and in the House today, and in view of the statements reported to be made to the press by the minister's administrative assistant, Mr. John Cameron, which would indicate that the Solicitor General either misled the committee last night or the Minister of Supply and Services misled the Solicitor General, would the Minister of Supply and Services now rise in his place in this House on a question of privilege and set the record straight?

An hon. Member: Maybe McGrath is wrong!

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think the question tends to divert the attention of the House from the real subject. In my opinion, there is no contradiction between what the Solicitor General said yesterday in committee and what I said today. To be more specific, I shall say to the hon. member that I spoke from memory and according to the personal records I have.

When I left the Department of the Solicitor General, I respected absolutely a rule that has always existed in all previous governments, namely that the records belonging to a department must remain within that department, particularly the Department of the Solicitor General. Give me time to consult these files, to which I still have access because of a tradition long established by all previous governments and ministers, and I shall certainly be able to answer your questions. I can say clearly today that I never met Mr. Campbell and that I never read the letter he supposedly sent to me.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary. May I ask the minister if he can now tell the House if his administrative assistant, Mr. John Cameron, made a statement to the press to the effect that:

> We did receive a communication from Mr. Campbell but it was decided that if there was to be any federal government involvement it would have to be with the Department of Transport.

Did his administrative assistant make that statement and if so, is the minister now prepared—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. McGrath: —to revise the answer?

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. From the hon. member's question I am not sure whether he is asking the Minister of Supply and Services about an action by his administrative assistant or—

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Nonetheless, not a departmental person.

Mr. McGrath: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. My question has to do with the present administrative assistant of the Minister of Supply and Services, the same gentleman whom I understand was acting in that capacity when the minister was Solicitor General. I think it is a very important question and I think the minister owes the House an explanation.

● (1200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is still not clear to the Chair whether the hon. member is asking a question about actions which took place under the minister's past responsibilities, or his present responsibilities. If it has to do with actions which took place under his present responsibilities, I think it is in order.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any statement made to anybody. I based my reply on the circumstances I know, that is all.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING OF STEERING COMMITTEE TO DECIDE ON HEARING CERTAIN WITNESSES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I appreciate that in the debate on the point of procedure the hon. member said something about the steering committee meeting to define the future course of conduct of the justice and legal affairs committee. In view of the questions which have arisen today could the hon. member as chairman on that committee, even before the steering committee meets, get in touch with all necessary people, perhaps including the present Solicitor General, to make sure that we can consider at the next meeting of the steering committee, which hopefully will take place early next week, the presence before the committee of the present Minister of Supply and Services and also the gentleman known as James Campbell who has been featured prominently in connection with certain matters, so that certain questions and conflicts can be clarified as soon as possible.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Annapolis Valley for giving me the first opportunity to answer a question in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Poulin: As the hon. member knows, and as Mr. Speaker just said, the procedure of the committee will be decided by the committee, which is master of its own proceedings. As I indicated to the hon. member last night, I and members of the committee would be prepared to meet with the steering committee at an early date. Really, I am only waiting for them to tell me when we can meet, so that we can set the business of the committee.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, following that admonition, may I ask a supplementary question. I tried to get in touch with the hon. member this morning, as I think his secretary will confirm—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Question.

Mr. Nowlan: Will you be quiet for a moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You know, my Grade 6 teacher said—

An hon. Member: Your mother?

Mr. Nowlan: No, no, my Grade 6 teacher.

Mr. Speaker: That remark is too far afield, not on the grounds of passage of time, but on simple philosophical grounds.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, if you knew my Grade 6 teacher, you would not think my remark is so far afield. She said that empty vessels make the most sound. The hon. member for St. Boniface should remember that and take it seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asked the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, in his capacity as chairman of the committee a question relating to the possible procedure of the committee. That is quite in order. If he has a supplementary question, perhaps he will ask it now.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will come directly to my supplementary question, and I appreciate the hon. member's answer. It was very sensible. I will not comment about some things which take place on the government side which are not so sensible. In view of statements made, especially by the Minister of Supply and Services, and information which came to the fore after last night's meeting, will the hon. member, as chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, move with despatch to convene a meeting of the steering committee, hopefully this afternoon, so that we can make arrangements to clarify the matter I have raised.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—KNOWLEDGE OF FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL OF MEETING BETWEEN MR. CAMERON AND MR. CAMPBELL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Was the hon. gentleman informed by Mr. Cameron about any meeting at that time between Mr. Cameron and Mr. Campbell regarding affairs at Hamilton harbour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not clear to the Chair what time the hon. member's question relates to.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, the reference is to mid-September, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS AND GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. On Wednesday the Acting Prime Minister, answering my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, said that no decisions have been taken to restore the movement of grain and shipping. When asked to advise this House on Friday, that is, today, about the situation, he said that he would advise his colleagues, the Acting Minister of Labour and the President of the Treasury Board, to be as forthcoming as possible. Can the Acting Prime Minister now tell this House what is the situation and what action the government intends to take?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, active negotiations have been taking place with respect to public service employees, and I understand the situation is more hopeful for an early settlement than it has been at any time previously.

An hon. Member: You said that yesterday.

Mr. Sharp: So far as the Longshoremen are concerned, one of our most experienced mediators is now on the west coast working with a sort of deadline, so that he can make an early report. When we have this information we will decide whether it is necessary to take further action.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that a negotiated settlement and resumption of service can be achieved this weekend?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the House want a negotiated settlement and are in favour of parliament not having to intervene.

FISHERIES

COLD STORAGE AND INVENTORY FINANCING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for fisheries. As the $4 million extension to the cold storage and inventory financing costs assistance program administered by the Fisheries Price Support Board terminates on March 31, 1975, and in view of the marketing problems still faced by the industry, is the minister giving thought to extending this program beyond the cutoff date.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice. The gradual phasing out of this program appeared desirable, since we wanted to encourage the industry to liquidate inventories before the start of the new season. We recognize that this has not been as successful as we should have liked. In fact, last Tuesday I met with the crabmeat producers of the Atlantic area to study this very problem, and they are looking at solutions with which we will assist them. Perhaps my remarks are not couched in the best English, but I hope they are understood.

As for continuing the program, we are looking at possible assistance programs as from the end of April on. We want to integrate the assistance programs and take into account all these questions which have been raised, especially the one concerning high inventories, which worries us. In conclusion, I hope that all hon. members will eat as much fish as possible.

ICE COOLING FACILITIES—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the extension of ice cooling facility subsidies. As the program was phased out on December 31, 1974, can the minister now say if it is being extended?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Yes, Mr. Speaker; that program was extended for a further six months when it was realized that there were a fair number of requests which could not be processed in time for the cut-off date chosen at the beginning of the program.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF TIME FOR APPEALS TO STAFF RELATIONS BOARD IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE STRIKE OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns strikes and rumours of strikes and is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Given the prospect of a mail strike, or at least a hold up in the near future in mails across the country, will the Acting Prime Minister, in consultation with his colleagues most directly concerned, ensure that all necessary measures are taken so that all deadlines for appeals to the Public Service Staff Relations Board will be appropriately extended in order that persons in the process of making appeals concerning employment shall not lose their cases because their letters of appeal failed to reach Ottawa in time for the hearing.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice. I assume it is a representation as well.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS—SUGGESTED JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I return to the statement of Controller Campbell of Hamilton City Council. As everyone who listened to the morning news heard, Mr. Campbell said that he had come to Ottawa and placed certain information before the Department of the Solicitor General in September, 1972, and as today we heard the present Minister of Supply and Services, who was then Solicitor General, say that he had never met Mr. Campbell, had received no such document and that his department had received no such document—

An hon. Member: He didn't say that at all.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —I suggest that this indicates either that someone is not telling the truth or that there has been administrative incompetence or a misunderstanding which would be very difficult to explain.

An hon. Member: Campbell could be wrong too, you know.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the standing committee of the House of Commons is not the proper place to reach a conclusion with respect to this matter. Is the government prepared to reconsider its position to have this matter looked at properly under a judicial investigation so that both sides will have an opportunity to place their facts before properly trained people and the country will have the privilege of knowing the actual facts?

● (1210)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not, of course, quoted the Minister of Supply and Services accurately. On the question of privilege, the Minister of Supply and Services said that he had never met Mr. Campbell and at that time was unaware of his letter. That is what the Minister of Supply and Services said. I want that to be on record so that the interpretation placed by the hon. member on the transaction is not accepted as a fact. As various ministers have said, the government is now searching the records. As far as I am aware, we would be only too happy to put the full story before hon. members, either in committee or in the House.

As I said earlier, there is nothing on the record for which we have any reason to feel ashamed. There has been no suggestion at any time that there was any political interference with the process of justice. Until that is the case, I see no reason to suggest that there should be a special inquiry.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—POSSIBILITY DOCUMENTS RECEIVED BY MR. CAMERON CONCERNING ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some difference of opinion between the Acting Prime Minister and myself as to what the Minister of Supply and Services said. May I ask the Minister of Supply and Services, who is quite capable of speaking for himself, whether any document was received by his department, and particularly by Mr. Cameron, with respect to complaints from the Hamilton city council regarding certain alleged improprieties in the management of the Hamilton Harbour Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the hon. member is posing a question to the Minister of Supply and Services concerning his function as a former minister. I do not want to be unduly restrictive, but we have gone over this ground rather thoroughly. However, the minister in the interval perhaps changed the circumstances by rising on a question of privilege. If the hon. member's question simply asks the minister to clarify his comments on the question of privilege, it might be more appropriate.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not see really how I could clarify such a precise statement. On the question of privilege, I said that I had never met Mr. Campbell, that I have never read a document or letter which Mr. Campbell is said to have delivered, and that I have ordered an investigation into this matter. Moreover, I have requested that a report be made available to me by Monday at the latest and, for further clarification, have indicated that I no longer have in my possession the files related to the responsibilities I assumed when I was Solicitor General, but that I still have access to these files, under a long tradition honoured by all previous administrations.

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS—SUGGESTED JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a final supplementary to the Acting Prime Minister. There is a great deal of difference between looking into alleged criminal activities by certain persons whose conduct is now under investigation and in making a suggestion, such as has been made by Mr. Campbell, that there has been an attempt to delay or even obstruct justice, which would lead one to suspect that the subject now before the Canadian people is whether or not there has been an attempt to cover up the situation with regard to the activities of the Hamilton Harbour Commission and the dredging contracts which have been given by the government. In light of those facts, will the Acting Prime Minister at least consider between now and Monday the advisability of dealing with this matter in the proper manner, which is through a judicial inquiry, particularly in view of his often stated remarks that the government has nothing to hide and it wants to have a full investigation to ascertain all the facts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said before. I have seen no evidence that there was any attempt to cover up, delay or otherwise interfere with the course of justice. The government is only too happy to lay all the facts before the House or whatever is a suitable place for this to be done. We will consider what is the best way of bringing all the facts before the House. However, I have not seen anything to suggest there has been anything such as has been alleged by the hon. member by way of action to delay or interfere with the course of justice or any suggestion of political interference. Until there is some such evidence, I think it would be most improper to have the kind of inquiry of which the hon. member speaks.

DREDGING CONTRACTS OF HAMILTON—KNOWLEDGE OF FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL OF MR. CAMPBELL AND EVENTS OF SEPTEMBER, 1972

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of what was said on his behalf last night by the present Solicitor General, namely that he had been informed the Minister of Supply and Services had no knowledge or information whatsoever with respect to the Hamilton Harbour matter, can the Minister of Supply and Services now inform the House, apart altogether from Mr. Campbell, departmental officials, reports or correspondence, of his own personal recollection and memory of the events of September 1972, a Mr. Campbell and material presented to him?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been dealt with exhaustively in those terms. In any event, it is again asking the minister to give information about his responsibilities in a previous capacity.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Your Honour earlier permitted the Minister of Supply and Services to rise on a question of privilege relating to this very matter. I think it was three weeks ago yesterday in this House that Your Honour set a precedent in relation to another minister of the Crown rising on a question of privilege to speak about a matter that related to his administrative responsibilities in another department or in relation to his personal affairs and his own recollection and memory. Now that this matter has been raised in this fashion by the minister himself, all I am asking is that we have the opportunity to ask him a question like that. If Your Honour wishes me to rephrase my question or be more specific, I am certainly willing to do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister, of course, changed the circumstances somewhat by rising on a question of privilege today. I submit that makes it in order to ask him questions with regard to clarifying the statement he made in the House today on the question of privilege. That is something he has done in his current capacity as a minister of the Crown. That was the nature of the question put by the previous questioner. The minister clarified that statement. It seemed perfectly clear to start with, but he clarified it to eliminate any uncertainty as to the nature of his comments. Further questions relating to what the minister said today might be in order for the purpose of clarification. If there is still room for clarification, I will listen. However, as I understand the precedents, it is still not in order to ask a minister about his responsibilities in respect of some capacity he enjoyed prior to the capacity he represents at the present time. I do not see any shadow of doubt.

Mr. Lawrence: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the—

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has put a question which I have disallowed. The hon. member raises a question of privilege which I see only as an appeal against that ruling of disallowance. It is not a question of privilege. If the hon. member has a further question of privilege or something different, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is simply this. I am asking the minister to clarify the points he made on the question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Members opposite can hoot and holler at me and tell me the minister has already clarified it. Your Honour can say that you are satisfied it has been clarified. That may be Your Honour's judgment, but it is not my judgment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I have every right to raise this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whatever consequences it might have, there is clear precedent that as between the hon. member's judgment and my judgment, perhaps fortunately for both of us, mine stands without appeal.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—POSSIBLE CONVERSATION BETWEEN FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL AND EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT CONCERNING LETTER FROM MR. CAMPBELL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Supply and Services. As the statement made by Mr. John Campbell, the Hamilton Controller, was reproduced on the seven o'clock and eight o'clock CBC news programs, and as I am sure the minister, when he arrived at his office this morning, talked to his executive assistant who, I understand, is the same executive assistant as he had when he was Solicitor General, and as it would be very natural for the minister to ask his executive assistant, Mr. John Cameron, whether he had ever received a letter from Mr. Campbell, the Controller of the City of Hamilton, and, if so, what had he done about it, I would ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether such a conversation took place this morning, and, if so, what was the result?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, to clarify what I said about the question of privilege, I must say that I ordered an inquiry precisely that all the facts might be sorted out and that I might then be in a position to give the House the required information. Perhaps the House would rather have that information bit by bit to create some sensationalism instead of seeking out the truth but if, as I believe, hon. members want to know the whole truth, as I do, then I should at least be given time to complete the inquiry. All I ask is the weekend. I shall work over the weekend to sort out the information since I have access to the documents of the Department of the Solicitor General pertaining to the time when I held that office. That is all I ask. Please, let no one accuse me of having ulterior motives.

[English]

Mr. Hees: I am perfectly willing to give the hon. minister the time he requires. I thought it would be an easy way for him to clarify the situation if he were to answer my question. However, I am perfectly willing to wait.

SAINT JOHN—INQUIRY WHETHER AIRPORT OPEN AND FIREMEN ON DUTY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am in a slight dilemma because I have given notice of this question to two ministers and each of them is competing to answer. The definitive word, however, is that this is a transport question and the acting minister is gazing at me now. Is the Saint John airport open. Are the firemen back? What is the current situation? This airport has been closed for eight days.

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Minister of Transport): The runways were cleared early this morning by management personnel. The firemen were called back by telephone this morning and then by wire. The airport manager is endeavouring to call them back to work. The latest word I have is that the firemen are not yet back to work at the airport.

Mr. Fairweather: Does the minister not find it incongruous that the firemen are not back at work because of a game plan, to use the ministry's own words, and that the authorities should now find themselves in a difficulty of their own making—they let the firemen go, and now they are unable to get them back.

Mr. Basford: I am not so advised. I am told the firemen were laid off work because there was no work for them to do.

PROPOSED STEEL PLANT IN CAPE BRETON—POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In the light of the press conference held on Wednesday morning of this week by Premier Regan, at which time the premier announced several appointments to a body whose duties will be to bring together the planning, partners, organizations and capital requirements for the building of a large internationally competitive steel plant in Cape Breton County, and in view of the statement made by the premier that he has been assured of the understanding and co-operation of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and of the federal government, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether he can advise the House that this understanding and co-operation will also consist of dollars?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): There has always been very close co-operation between the governments of Nova Scotia and Canada, at least in recent years, and usually there has been some dollar assistance given to that government. I would assume there will continue to be that kind of co-operation.

Mr. Muir: In view of the action of the federal government in commissioning the Canstel study on the proposed steel complex, would the minister not agree that the Nova Scotia government, in an endeavour of this magnitude, will require not only understanding and co-operation from the central government but that such co-operation will of necessity involve the provision of a great deal of money along with what might be raised from private sources?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member is an eloquent advocate.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED DENIAL OF RIGHT OF CERTAIN PLUMBERS AND PIPE FITTERS TO WORK IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration been made aware of the contents of a telegram sent by Frank D. Moores, premier of Newfoundland, to the Hon. Mr. Justice Robert Cliche in which Premier Moores protests that Montreal Local 144, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the pipe fitting and plumbing trades, refused to allow some 50 or more Canadians, whose place of domicile is Newfoundland, to work at the Quebec Cartier mining operation job site? Does the hon. gentleman consider such action to be discriminatory? Does it severely restrict the application of the principles of confederation and the freedom of Canadian employees? Does conflicting provincial legislation prevent the minister from taking action to forestall similar occurrences in the future?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am aware of the circumstances. I understand that at Mont Wright the plumbers and pipe fitters union has ordered some of its members off the job. I am aware that the Premier of Newfoundland has expressed his concern since there are Newfoundlanders involved. I would have to say, however, that this is a matter which is entirely between the union and the employer, and that in terms of jurisdiction it is entirely a matter for the province concerned. To the best of my knowledge, there is no action I can properly take in response to the circumstances raised in hon. member's question; it is doubtful whether it is a matter for federal intervention.

STRIKES AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATED SETTLEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister—it is related to one which was addressed to him earlier in connection with the grain handlers strike at Vancouver. Since the minister, in his answers earlier today, seemed vague about the intentions of the government, I should like to ask him whether the cabinet has emergency legislation ready to bring in and, if so, whether it would be used in the near future should a settlement not be reached involving both the longshoremen and workers who belong to the public service? Will legislation be brought in in the very near future to settle this strike before it spells complete disaster for the Port of Vancouver?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): These questions are under very active discussion by the government. We have not set any deadline; I think it would be most unfortunate if deadlines were to be set because it is our desire, as I am sure it is the desire of the hon. member, that these strikes should be settled by negotiation rather than by parliament having to interfere once again with the process of collective bargaining.

Mr. Murta: One short supplementary, Mr. Speaker, because this is the last chance we shall have to question the Acting Prime Minister on this matter before Monday. Can he tell us whether or not the government has emergency legislation ready to be used in the event nothing is settled?

Mr. Sharp: I hope the government is always ready to meet all emergencies.

An hon. Member: No way!

INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CONTINUED TO DO BUSINESS WITH COMPANIES FOR TWO YEARS AFTER INVESTIGATION COMMENCED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Acting Prime Minister. Based on the dates contained in the information made available this week by the RCMP concerning certain corporations and individuals, would the Acting Prime Minister confirm to the House that the government continued to do business with these companies a full two years after the Minister of Transport himself said he had asked the RCMP to investigate?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is basic to our consideration here that we always have a presumption of innocence. Charges have been laid recently, but no one has yet been brought to trial. There are some difficult problems involved in this area. As the hon. member will have noticed, practically all of the dredging companies of any size in the country have been charged with some crime or other. Problems will arise when dredging has to be done, and it will be necessary for the government to make a decision as to how it is to proceed, so that the public interest is not jeopardized by the fact that certain companies are under charge.

Moreover, other problems have been raised previously with regard to subsidies for the building of ships. I am sure that the hon. member would not want people to be thrown out of work because the government cancelled contracts.

Has the minister arranged any discussions with the minister of mines of British Columbia in regard to the development of coal deposits on blocks of land in the south-east Kootenay which are under federal jurisdiction?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM THAT IS FAIR TO CITY OF TRAIL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that both the minister's office and mine have received numerous letters of protest from all parts of Canada with reference to the character assassination of the city of Trail by the National Film Board production "Where are you going, Company Town?", and in view of the fact that Miss Wendy O'Flaherty of the CBC has produced a film on the city of Trail that places it in fairness rather than in prejudice, would the Secretary of State use his good offices to urge the CBC to show this "Hourglass" production on the national CBC network to help redress the wrong perpetrated on Trail and its citizens?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the question, I know the hon. member feels strongly about it and I will certainly make a representation for him.

OIL—REASON FOR TRANSFER OF IMPORTS FROM VENEZUELA TO MIDDLE EAST—POSSIBLE RECAPTURE OF SOME SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but it seems that he is not going to be back in the House so may I direct it to the acting minister. Has the government made any inquiries of the oil companies to find out why there was a transfer of imports from the Venezuelan fields to the Middle East fields, and what explanation have the oil companies given for this transfer of imports?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on such a technical, important and very complicated question I am sure the hon. member would prefer to hear from the minister himself, so I shall be pleased to take notice of the question and refer it to the minister.

Mr. Gillies: I am glad the minister understands that it is an important question because hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of the taxpayers' money is affected. My supplementary question is this. If in fact there is no legitimate explanation provided by the oil companies for this change other than the fact that they would get a larger subsidy from the Canadian government, is the government prepared to recapture this money from the oil companies on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, refer that question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I just say that I hope to recapture some of that oil money myself when I lead a trade mission to Venezuela next week.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—SUGGESTED JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Acting Prime Minister and it concerns a matter that has already been discussed, namely the effect of statements made in the House today that question the credibility of an elected official, namely Controller Campbell of Hamilton. Would not an inquiry by a judicial officer to clear up the matter be fairer than an inquiry by this House or any committee of this House, which is bound to have political bias in the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, it appears to the Chair that that is precisely the question that was put by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands earlier today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader whether there has been any change in the order of business for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, when I hope a very large number of ministers will be present to entertain questions and give answers?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am also hopeful about today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, when I hope we will make progress on some government legislation. Today, as the House knows, we will be resuming debate on second reading of Bill C-50. If that is disposed of before four o'clock, it would be my hope that we might turn to the resolution on metrication standing in the name of my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If it is not concluded today, that will be the first order of business on Monday.

The exact order for that day I am not quite certain about, because on Monday I should like to see the opportunity taken to clean up some report stages and third readings of a number of bills that have been through committee and which I think should receive royal assent so they can be put into effect. Bill C-8 is our next priority. So if I may summarize, we will take Bill C-50, then metrication, report stage and third reading of a number of bills, and then Bill C-8.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since there were references to government business covering Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, does this mean that the designation of Tuesday and Wednesday as opposition days is being revoked?

Mr. Sharp: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the other day the House leader of the official opposition and the House leader of the NDP suggested they would like to move those opposition days forward into the next period. On consideration, the government is prepared to go along with that, and it would be necessary, of course, to effect that transfer for next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then are we transferring, now, those two days into the next semester? If so, we agree.

Mr. Sharp: I would so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed, and shall it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY AND BASE PRICE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-50, to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, quite a few speeches have been made on this particular bill, a fair amount of ground has been covered and some very sound advice has been presented to the minister.

An hon. Member: Except for the NDP.

Mr. Korchinski: I agree with the hon. member—except for the NDP.

Mr. Nystrom: Especially the NDP.

Mr. Korchinski: I rise this afternoon to make a few comments on matters that I think have not until now been mentioned and which should perhaps be brought to the attention of the minister and the country. In the last several months following the throne speech debate the minister has indicated that a steady stream of agricultural legislation would be presented. There appeared, to everyone who read the press, to be a long list of measures that were apparently intended to open up a new era so far as agriculture is concerned. I think that anyone who perhaps did not give this matter very serious consideration, keeping in mind the complications and implications of all these legislative items, might in fact get that impression.

● (1240)

The minister has travelled throughout the country reciting one item of legislation after another which will come before the House. In fact, some of these items are now before the House. What the minister does not tell the people and the country is that in none of these items of legislation is there an inkling or a suspicion of new areas being opened up in so far as agriculture is concerned: the minister is merely introducing amendments. Certain amendments may be necessary to update the legislation, but it is not acceptable to the agricultural community in this day and age to have to depend on legislation enacted at some period of time in the past to cover specific situations which do not necessarily exist today. The fact that the minister's proposals contain nothing more than amendments to existing legislation indicates that this government has no new ideas of its own.

I find that most of the legislative items dealing with farm credit, stabilization and other matters pertaining to agriculture relate to ideas introduced at the time the Conservative Party was in office. I am not suggesting there is anything wrong with the legislation; the legislation is good, and certain amendments are necessary. It is totally incomprehensible that this minister should roam around the country making one speech after another without putting forth any new idea of his own. He certainly has enough people writing speeches for him as it seems he is delivering, on average, about two speeches a day: they are coming fast and furious from all sides.

I have been hoping, in vain, that the minister would take a new approach. I find it almost disgusting that the minister should always refer back to the original piece of legislation. The preamble to the original bill, for example, recognized the increase in the cost of production as compared to the income received by farmers. The minister simply rearranges the preamble and puts it into the new bill, then refers to it as a great, new innovation or new approach to agriculture. Then each one of his trained seals gets up one after the other and praises the minister to high heaven.

I really wonder why we must spend time debating this bill, because when looking at the past performance of the government under this legislation it is obvious that the minister could have done almost anything he wanted. This legislation already gives him the authority to support agricultural products. The minister shakes his head, indicating that he cannot. Let me suggest again to the minister that he could have done anything he wanted; he could have supported any item he felt required support, under the provisions of this act as it now stands.

It is true that there are certain commodities in respect of which there is mandatory support. I have before me an annual report which lists about 28 commodities that have been supported in the 16 years since this act was enacted. This indicates that the minister did have the authority to support any agricultural commodity he wished to support. The minister has supported various commodities in the past by order in council. As a result of research, I have found that the minister not only can support whatever items he wants but he can support them at whatever level he wishes.

The minister makes a lot of noise about the fact that with the new amendments it will be possible to support the mandatory commodities on a five-year average rather than a ten-year average, and that the new level of support will be 90 per cent rather than 80 per cent. For the information of the House, there are many items which have been supported in the past at a level higher than 80 per cent. I would ask the minister to indicate to the House the present level of support in respect of cattle. I can tell the House that at the present time the minister obviously has the authority, because support is at the level of 154 per cent on the ten-year average. No new ground is being broken by these amendments; the minister has the authority to support these commodities at any level.

Let me go through this list very quickly to indicate some of the items and the levels at which they have been supported in the past. In the year 1971-72 hogs were supported at 88.5 per cent; in 1971 sugar beets were supported at 117 per cent, blueberries at 105.5 per cent, rutabagas at 83.3 per cent, and carrots at 93.4 per cent. Further on in the list we find that in 1972-73 apples were supported at 90.3 per cent, and fowl at 251 per cent. What new ground is being broken? Let us consider the other side of the coin. In 1973, for example, the support in respect of potatoes was at the 78.1 per cent level. In other words, the minister could have supported any item above or below the 80 per cent level except for those mandatory items.

Without the provision of additional funds, what additional safeguards will the farmers have as a result of these amendments? I suggest that what the minister is telling the farmers around the country about the results of these amendments is just a lot of boloney. This minister has the authority to support these commodities, but he is doing nothing. He is telling everyone that the farmers must get more, but he does nothing about it himself. The potato producers are at this moment crying to the minister to do something. He does not require additional authorization, he can act under the existing legislation. Potatoes have been supported in the past and there is nothing preventing the minister from introducing support again at this time. All that is required is a few minutes in cabinet to convince the minister's colleagues. That is what he should be doing, instead of running around the country talking to all the farmers but doing nothing.

If one looks at the record of the minister's speech, he will see that the minister is actually preparing the farmers for a drop in income this coming year. He is paving the way by telling the farmers that they will have to accept a reduction in income. He tells us here that he has a formula to take into account the cost of farm production, but there is nothing that would prevent him from supporting potato prices under the existing legislation, for example. The minister can support any commodity that requires support in order to increase the farmers' income. He is not doing it; he is running around telling everybody that their prices are too high and that the farmers need more money, yet he will not do anything about it.

He has legislation in effect today to do this. The minister can run around telling everybody that legislation is being introduced, but now is the time to act. He makes speeches in which he threatens one group or another. Obviously he cannot do anything about the cost of production, but he can do something about the income of the producers. The minister has the legislation but is not acting on it. Now he says he needs more. This is all window-dressing which makes it possible for the minister and all his supporters to write letters and have every newspaper in the country, every week, write columns in which it is suggested that amendments have been introduced to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Then everybody sits and waits in expectation.

What happens? The farm incomes will go down about 15 per cent. The minister says he will guarantee a certain cost of production and that he will set it at 90 per cent. At best this is a backward process. It is to be set at 90 per cent of what the producers have had in the last five years. The fact is that cattle are supported at 154 per cent at this moment, and farmers find this insufficient for their needs today. We might take a look at the cattle industry. The minister did not have to stop at even 154 per cent. The farmers' unions have been asking for a support price of $65 per hundred, while at this moment I believe it is $45.42 per hundred. The minister has one thing stuck in his head.

An hon. Member: Otto Lang.

Mr. Korchinski: No, not Otto Lang. The minister has marketing boards stuck in his head. This he considers to be one cure for all the problems. Do you know what the minister represents?

An hon. Member: Eggs.

Mr. Korchinski: Yes, he has egg all over his face. The minister represents restricted production. The minister has told us that he will take into account the increase in the cost of production and other needs. I might mention some of the things we see when we pick up the newspapers. I will give one example. I see that the posties are demanding a 71 per cent basic salary hike. Their present salary is $4.59 an hour and they are asking for an additional $3.26 per hour, which will bring their salary up to almost $8 per hour. A salary of $8 per hour, calculated on a weekly basis, represents almost $300 a week.

Without arguing the pros and cons of the demands of these workers, may I say that these people come in at an appointed hour, do a certain amount of work and no doubt have a coffee break and a warm place waiting for them. No doubt a cafeteria is provided for them so they may have their lunch, and so on. I have seen some of these things around the departments, and it seems that they are ready to leave about 15 minutes before quitting time. Like horses at the starting gate, they wait for the bell to ring and are off to catch a bus. That is as far as their responsibility goes.

I wonder how many people would like to receive $300 for a steer. If one had 50 steers a year, this would represent $15,000, equal to the posties. This does not necessarily mean that that would be clear money, because not only must the producers pay for the feed but they also have their capital investment, the land, the interest and the input costs. The producer must consider all these things before he can think about the same amount received by one worker. This amount of $15,000 would equal the sale of 50 steers.

If this minister were realistic and realized what is going on around him today, and if people such as the posties have the right to make such demands, then the minister has the right to ask the same for the farmers. His responsibility does not end just by making a speech. He must do something with the legislation he has before him, and he has not done so. There is no indication that he intends to do this. This is what is so frustrating to us. The minister could have been doing something, but instead he stands up and says that rather than a ten-year average there will be a five-year average, and the guarantee will be 90 per cent.

Why must the minister stop at 90 per cent? What is wrong with 100 per cent? This still would not be enough: with the addition of the cost of production, it would only be a break even point. What is the minister's explanation for setting the support at the level it is? It is not intended that the producers make a profit; this is a "stop loss" program. I wonder how people like this when it comes from the Minister of Agriculture who is touted around the country as being a friend of the farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: As a farmer, if he said he was my friend I would expect him to put money in my pocket instead of just using a lot of words and hot air. His supporters, instead of telling him there is something wrong with this legislation and that not enough is being provided for the farmers, run around telling the people that the minister is a great guy. This is the extent of their responsibility. This is supposed to be agricultural policy but this bill is a waste of time. I must point out again that the minister has the authority to do something about the situation and is doing nothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was saying that the minister had travelled through this country leaving the impression with the press and with all those who cared to listen to him that he was introducing updated legislation, and that it was necessary for the survival of the farming industry. In fact, he even left the impression that this would improve the business of farming. However, I was able to point out in the course of my remarks that the minister already had the necessary legislation which was passed by a Conservative government, and he did not have to run around the country making speeches and suggesting that further legislation was necessary. What he does not have is the will to work for the people, and will cannot be legislated. It will be up to him and his colleagues in the cabinet to produce that will. If there's a will, there's a way, as has been pointed out to the government frequently in the last 16 years since this legislation was first introduced.

Let me illustrate a point with regard to the stabilization of the price of certain commodities, for example, certain grades of cattle. Under the present bill the government has extended the stabilization program for the first time in 16 years. When one looks at the annual report, one finds that it contains no mention of cattle; but for the first time in 16 years the government is proposing to stabilize the prices of cattle, specifically of grades A, B and C. Of course, those are not the only grades of cattle. The minister must realize that if we are to assist farmers, we must provide them with sufficient income to enable them to stay in farming. However, obviously the minister will not do it because he does not have the will. Another approach must be adopted.

I should like to go on to another matter. The other day the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) asked the minister about the possibility of a stabilization price for honey. It may interest this House to know that not only do we produce grain and a lot of cattle in the area I come from, but we also produce honey. There is a need for stability in that product. The minister wanted to know what kind of a system there was for marketing honey, and that implied to me that the only way producers will get stability is to go to a marketing board. That is the only purpose the minister has in mind, I believe; but he does not need a marketing board in order to provide stability. There is no marketing board for cattle and he can provide stability there, so he does not need one for honey.

Several years ago a subsidy was provided for wool, but then it was dropped. It had amounted to something like $12 million. My information is that the subsidy was dropped because production was not increasing sufficiently. That would appear to mean that perhaps the subsidy was not high enough to entice producers. It seems that in the last few years all the problems of agriculture have been solved by gradually cutting down the number of producers and the amount of production to the point where we have to import commodities.

It is amazing that a country that is so forward looking in other ways should be so backward in its thinking in this regard. It seems there is a stigma attached to agriculture. If you speak on behalf of agriculture, you are not supposed to know anything else; this is the prevailing attitude. It does not matter what kind of background you come from, if you are associated with an occupation other than agriculture you are on a higher level. As a result of depressed prices we are losing farmers every day and a strange parallel is developing. Just about a year ago we were told we had ample supplies of natural gas: we had oil to burn, so to speak; we were able to export it and did not have to pay any attention to fuel consumption in automobiles, and so on. Then suddenly there was a great shortage and we started scrambling in the other direction.

We now find ourselves in the same situation with regard to agriculture. I think we should treat the farmers as well as anybody else. The posties have demanded a 71 per cent increase in salary, which would bring them to something like $8 an hour. Surely we should pay the farmer an adequate price for his commodity and encourage him to stay on the land. Farmers do not want a guaranteed income just to sit around and do nothing, and I am not suggesting this; but I am in favour of paying them enough for their products so they will see the advantage of staying in production. Farmers can take their ups and downs. The annual report for 1973-74 published by the Agricultural Stabilization Board shows that $1,459 million was spent to stabilize the prices of commodities during the 16 years to 1974. Of this amount, $875 million was transferred to the Dairy Commission, $92 million was for hogs and $154 million was for milk. Indeed, if you take away all the dairy aspect of the subsidies, only about $300 million was spent in subsidies for other agricultural products in that 16-year period. Mr. Speaker, this is not sufficient to keep farmers in production.

Farmers have accepted quotas for the production of wheat for human consumption; indeed, they have been asking for it for years. This shows that they are willing to accept quotas, but they want a good price for the commodity. We should gear our production policies beyond our domestic requirements, however, to the extent of 10 per cent or 15 per cent to provide protection against the difficulties of nature and other circumstances over which we have no control.

The world will always demand food and as taxpayers, not as individual producers, we should willingly donate any surplus to the hungry people of the world. If we can obtain agreements in this respect with other countries, that is fine, but if not we should do it alone. If necessary, we should build storage facilities so that when the time comes these commodities will be available to others. A shipment of grain destined for Pakistan, where people are starving, cannot leave the country because of a stupid shipping tie-up. When we have to work under a threat with a gun at our head, so to speak, it is time that we had storage elsewhere. We have a moral obligation to the rest of the world. We have the capacity, the ability and the know-how to produce grain and many other commodities, but we have only diverted $300 million in 16 years, roughly $20 million a year, to encourage production.

We are not doing a lot for agriculture. The minister reminds me of a puff-ball. Anybody who has walked around on the prairies knows what a puff-ball is. It is big, but if you step on it there is a cloud of dust and then nothing. With this minister you might expect something solid in legislation, but when you test it, there is nothing there. If the government were to say, "We will base support prices on other prices prevailing in society, plus 10 per cent," we could go along with it; I do not think farmers would argue with the minister. But he wants to base support prices on the average prices of the last five years. Mr. Speaker, nobody wants to work for last year's salary. Why should agriculture be forced to produce for prices that could be as much as five years old?

What is wrong with the minister? He is like a car with only a reverse gear. It is time he looked forward. Farmers must be enabled to produce enough income to support themselves, otherwise they will go out of business. We do not need the sort of "stop loss" program the minister introduced for cattlemen. How can he protect them adequately with such a program? It is not enough. As it is, cattlemen are not earning enough and the minister's program will only prevent great losses. I do not see how it will enable cattlemen to survive. That is why I say the minister's policies are backward-looking. Why, even now some people are demanding 71 per cent more salary than they were paid last year.

I find that the price guarantees in this bill are totally unacceptable. When you consider the minister's record you will not be reassured that farmers of western Canada or of other parts of the country will be induced to stay in agriculture. With farmers leaving the farm our situation will become difficult. I think that cattlemen have already touched bottom, so to speak. The minister can manipulate the price structure any way he wishes; he can base it on quarterly figures, yearly figures, or any way he wishes—but what good does that do if he will not act? I wish the minister would take into account increases in production costs when considering support levels. He might take some flack from consumers, and Mrs. Plumptre might make a nasty speech about him, but he would be doing the right thing. It is no good saying what must be done and then doing nothing. The minister could do the right thing; he has the means but not the will.

The government, with its majority, will force this bill through, but its approach to the establishment of marketing boards is faulty. The minister comes from an area which produces considerable quantities of milk. I know milk producers face difficulties, but they are not the only ones. If we can spend large sums of money on the dairy industry without being hurt by taxpayer flack, I suggest we can spend similar sums on other areas of agriculture. The national interest demands the support of agriculture. After all, amounts spent on agricultural support will not be overly significant, given total government expenditures which, with supplementary estimates, will approach the $30 billion mark this year.

Frankly, I do not think we need this bill. It does not give the minister powers he did not previously possess. Subparagraph 1.1 of clause 5(2) on page 4 of the bill reads:

For the purpose of stabilizing the price of an agricultural commodity, the board may exercise such other powers as are prescribed by the governor in council for that purpose.

In other words, it does not really matter what the board says, as the decision depends on the cabinet. An order in council must be passed. Mr. Speaker, the old bill contained the same provision; an order in council was necessary. If the minister wants to save the agricultural industry, he will need to act on sound advice. It is clear that in the next year or so there will be a shortage of cattle, primarily because cattlemen cannot survive at present-day prices. The industry will only survive if it is told, under some sort of program, that Canada will require such and such an amount of meat in the next given period and if the price paid for the meat is fair and bears some relation to cost of production. Never mind "stop loss" programs. Don't look back. I ask the minister to look forward, otherwise the situation in agriculture will be comparable to the situation in our petroleum industry. Already we are being told about petroleum shortages.

As the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) pointed out clearly and ably, our farmers will only produce the food needed for feeding our population and the starving peoples of the world if conditions are right and if they are induced to stay in food production. If conditions are not right, they will leave the business of farming and we shall all lose. This bill is not adequate. The minister is looking back. Only if he turns round and looks forward will he provide the stability for agriculture which is necessary if the industry is to survive.

I do not think I need say any more except this: I hope that one year from now we shall not find that the agricultural producer's income has declined and that the minister has done nothing to help him. So far he has not demonstrated that he truly wants to do anything. Mr. Speaker, it is not a change in legislation that we need; it is a change in attitude.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I shall make a few brief comments on Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) covered many of the things I wanted to say. His comments about the public profile of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) were particularly apt. I will not dwell on the lack of action in implementing satisfactory agricultural policies. We on my side of the House will in all probability support this bill, but we do not underestimate the dangers inherent in this type of legislation. I am troubled by that part of the bill dealing with support prices across Canada for a commodity. Clause 1(4) on page 2 of the bill reads in part:

The powers ... conferred by this act may be exercised in relation to an agricultural commodity throughout Canada or in any region in Canada when, in the opinion of the governor in council, the market situation for the agricultural commodity in that region is substantially different from the market situation therefor in the rest of Canada.

The bill will assure that the regionalization of support prices will be recognized, but the cabinet is to make this decision. It can be assumed that in any democratic country like Canada, intervention by the federal cabinet will be based on a political decision taken at a given time. Quite possibly, the decision would be based on political expediency and the desire of the party in power to retain power. This is certainly an area that we on this side of the House would like to see changed for the good of agriculture. When the bill is passed, farmers of that particular commodity from that region of the country who want a specific amount of money will, because of low prices, have to lobby with the government. A lot of valuable time will be lost; the minister's time will be taken up with the various lobbies that must take place because the decision will not necessarily be set down but will be a political judgment by the cabinet of the day.

I wish to raise a point that does not necessarily pertain to the bill. The support price is available for all commodities, as I mentioned before, only in certain regions of the country. This brings me to the point that is starting to be of major concern to many Canadian farmers and farm organizations. Three provinces have already moved toward what has been called a guaranteed income. British Columbia is into this to a certain degree. According to press reports, Ontario is looking at it, and Quebec is certainly looking at it. At the present time there is talk of drafting legislation to be brought forward within the next few months.

When we talk in terms of a guaranteed income we must realize that this will come about in various forms; it will not be standard across the country. Programs would not necessarily be criticized to the extent they are if they were not always tied to production controls. I have not seen all the programs and I have not talked in detail to the ministers involved in drafting the programs; however, it certainly appears as though the guaranteed income approach will be attained through controlling supply and production allocating quotas, and so on. I come from a part of the country which produces more than its people consume. I refer to western Canada. This whole approach could ultimately eliminate the kind of exporting western Canada must do if we are going to maintain a viable agricultural base.

I hope the Minister of Agriculture is looking at the problem. It is of grave concern in various regions of the country. Farmers feel they could not operate under this kind of guaranteed income approach. If this were carried to its logical conclusion, there could in effect be ten so-called guaranteed income programs, one in every province, if in fact the provinces wanted that and if the population or tax base were there to warrant that kind of expense. If that happened, Canada could conceivably be divided into ten regions. In that event it would be very difficult to move products from one area to another because of the controls involved, our borders and the balkanization that would take place within this country.

If we are going to have any kind of guaranteed income, and I suppose it could be justified for certain commodities, I firmly believe the base for that kind of approach must be established by the federal government. With this legislation, one of the provinces I mentioned previously could supplement the federal money and use it to help run its own guaranteed income program. With the kind of land base and people base we have in this country, I do not know whether Canada is ready for that kind of agricultural program.

I am certainly not an expert on the guaranteed income approach as far as the Quebec situation is concerned. While it may be commendable for some commodities produced in that province, it appears to almost be a European Common Market approach to agricultural problems, whereby you become involved in price support to a very high degree over a period of time, and it disrupts normal market functions. I would not want to see Canada become involved in that to any great extent. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will give consideration to the concerns that have been echoed in this debate and across the country. The minister has discussed the matter with people in various parts of Canada. If the provinces each go their own way for the good of the province, this could have a devastating effect on agriculture in the future.

Talking now about stabilization and the bill itself, the minister will hear one criticism when he brings the bill to committee. Farm input costs have increased tremendously. The price of everything a farmer has to purchase to grow a crop or feed his animals has increased so rapidly that 90 per cent of the five-year average may not be adequate. Because of the present inflationary cycle it may have no significance. This should have been done in the mid-sixties when there was a much lower rate of inflation; price increases did not occur on an almost monthly basis. Looking at the past five-year average, it might have worked; however, I frankly do not think it will have any bearing on the present long-range future of the commodities affected.

When we get to the clause by clause study of the bill I hope the committee will consider this question in total and come up with an amendment to meet the present economic situation. The cost-price squeeze which farmers experienced in the years 1969-71, and from which we moved away to some extent during 1973 and 1974, is back with us again. Farmers have not yet realized the extent of the squeeze which is likely to be forthcoming. In the last few weeks there has been a drastic decline in the prices of most agricultural products. Blame for this cannot be placed on any one government; it is a consequence of general instability in the economy and I cannot see us moving away from this situation for some time. The farmer-businessman who is keenly aware of his costs, and who knows what he must do in order to keep pace with them, is the farmer who will survive what I think is likely to be an extremely difficult period in the next year or two.

There will be opportunities to give the bill further scrutiny in the standing committee. I should like to see committee members sit down with some of the officials and try to agree on an amendment which implies less attention being paid to cost averages when fixing floor prices. Remember, the situation today is different from what it was even two or three years ago and, as I have suggested, the biggest factor has been the rate at which costs have increased. The bill will pass whether the committee does this or not, but unless it is amended it will not prove to be of any real help to the people it is intended to help. I therefore hope that all members of the committee will work toward an amendment of the kind I have outlined. Such a change is needed, and in the future I think it will be desperately needed by farmers in Canada.

[Mr. Murta.]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill before it goes to committee. I support the bill. I think we have to recognize that it attempts in some way to provide a reasonable support price for specific agricultural commodities. Of course, such legislation is in no way a substitute for an aggressive marketing policy, something we badly need. We have shown that we are efficient producers, yet in the last five years we have become a net importer of agricultural products. Thus, one of the main priorities—and I am sure the minister shares this point of view—must be to work out effective marketing programs rather than speak about production control and supply management.

Producers want to produce. They do not want to be bound by quotas and regulations. They do not want an agriculture policy which causes them to look inward but, rather, a policy which will create a desire to produce in abundance. I confess I find some contradiction in government policy in this area. We hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) telling farmers to produce to beat the band, and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) says the same thing. At the same time, we hear the Minister of Agriculture talking about supply management. I find it difficult to reconcile these two points of view. When you have asked farmers to produce to beat the band it is difficult to expect them to take kindly to the imposition of quotas and restrictions.

The egg marketing board attempted to control production, albeit ineffectively. What we saw as a result of the efforts made by CEMA was the greater concentration of production in the hands of relatively few people. Two provinces in particular took advantage of the situation and overproduced, as did a number of individuals. Unless we are prepared to place policemen on duty in every egg-grading station, it will be impossible to supervise a supply management program effectively. I do not think agriculture is ready for restrictions of this kind.

Then, again, as members who sat on the committee inquiring into CEMA know very well, it is impossible to administer a program of supply management in the absence of control over importations of the product concerned. I may be wrong, but I believe that among the conditions under which the provinces agreed to become parties to the national egg marketing plan was a stipulation that there should be effective import control; in other words, the imported eggs would be considered on the same basis as though they were supplied by another producer, otherwise there is no possibility of getting a supply management program to work effectively. According to a

Canadian Press report quoted by a Prince Albert newspaper, a member of the executive of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency said on Friday that the agency——is having serious internal problems and will either succeed or fail during the next month.

● (1450)

Harold Crossman, one of three executive members on the agency, says the oversupply of eggs in Canada has led CEMA to ask Ontario and Quebec to reduce the number of their laying hens.

Mr. Crossman said he is not optimistic about the agency's future.

He said Quebec would have to make reductions of about 11 per cent and Ontario about 9 per cent.

That agreement was entered into supposedly in good faith, yet we have a situation where the producers and the provinces failed to uphold their terms of the bargain. Indeed, the federal government failed to uphold its terms of the bargain in that it failed to control in any effective way the importation of eggs. The operations of the national egg marketing agency can only be described as nothing less than shameful and wasteful. After all, this is the reason we lost 28 million eggs. Certainly at this juncture it does not augur well for Canadians to be party to a situation where we have people in this world starving and anxious to get their hands on this kind of food, yet we waste it carelessly.

In my opinion, the federal government has not provided a fair climate for giving Canada's agricultural producers confidence in the economy. The producers of this country are entitled to a fair return so as to cover their cost of farm input, production, management and labour. Certainly that is a worthy goal. I realize this bill goes part way in an attempt to achieve that goal, but in my opinion many of the things done by the federal government over the last two years have not necessarily worked toward providing the right kind of climate. As a matter of fact, there have been a number of irritating measures put forward by the federal government. For example, there have been a number of ad hoc, piecemeal attempts to correct industry that is in trouble, but these have met progressively with failure. Since the Minister of Agriculture assumed his portfolio there have been in the order of 29 variations of policy in the beef industry. How, in the name of heaven, can a beef producer plan his future with any degree of certainty in such a situation? Did the minister say he accepted that?

Mr. Whelan: I said you cannot say I will not accept change.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is quite true. I would never accuse the minister of lack of trying, but when there are 29 different policies affecting the beef industry in a period of two years, this must bring about utter chaos, confusion and frustration. The cattlemen are not used to this kind of government intervention.

Mr. Whelan: Are you suggesting they have not asked for assistance?

Mr. Mazankowski: No, I am not suggesting they have not. When an industry is in trouble, particularly the agricultural industry, it must go to the federal government and seek its advice, guidance and wisdom as to how to save itself. The minister professes to be a farmer himself, so surely, with the backing of all his bureaucrats, he should have the ability to iron out a policy that will be effective. The minister has access to information that the average cattleman or member of parliament does not have. He has constant access to the international marketplace and the market south of the border. Yet we have this dastardly, piecemeal approach that has thrown the beef industry into utter chaos.

I remind the minister, who champions the cause of the farmer and producer, that it was under his guidance and administration that we started manipulating and mucking around with the tariff structure between the United States and Canada. So far as our dealings with the United States are concerned, it seems to me that had we not embarked upon unilateral approach of developing a system of proportionate quotas and reciprocal tariffs, we might have been able to work out a better arrangement. In view of the lack of consultation and co-operation, it seems to me the responsibility for this has to be laid at the doorstep of the minister.

There have also been a couple of beef stabilization programs, and here again the minister, at least on the surface, tried to assist the beef producer. But what has been the effect of these programs? We have had nothing but lofty words. Not a nickel has been paid out at this point in time to the cow-calf producer or to people who raise slaughter cattle. As a matter of fact, we are informed that they might get six cents out of the cow culling program.

Mr. McKinley: The 2 per cent guys.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is right. It is almost a non-program. I remind the minister that at a time when producers are selling canned or cut cows at four cents a pound, a six-cent subsidy is not going to defray—

Mr. Whelan: It was 24 cents yesterday.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I can table, for the minister's information, evidence showing that a couple of weeks ago cows were selling at four cents a pound. As a matter of fact, I ought to put on the record the fact that in my area a producer sold three cows weighing 2,560 pounds at four cents a pound, and by the time he paid his trucking and commissions he ended up with $69.61 net for the three cows. Surely, this kind of nonsense cannot continue, and if it does it can only do more harm to an already precarious beef industry.

In addition, there is discrimination in the minister's beef program. A producer who may have sold his slaughter cattle for 50 cents a pound will get as much, in the end result, if a subsidy is paid, as a farmer who gets 30 cents. I think that is unfair. Furthermore, what can a producer who has cattle ready for market do when he cannot sell them and the packers simply do not want to take them? I urge the minister to take another look at his beef stabilization program and to consider the possibility of averaging over a quarterly or six-month period, so he can put some money into the hands of the producers when they need it and who at the moment are going out of business or have their backs to the wall, particularly the small producers.

Another way in which the government has failed to produce a climate that is conducive to a strong agricultural industry is in its failure to deal with inflation. Input costs over the last two years have increased appallingly. I should like to refer to a Free Press report on farming for November 16, 1974. This report gives a pretty good outline of the way in which input costs have risen over the last five years. For example, 11-48-0 fertilizer cost $103 per ton in 1970; this year the projected cost is $200. Weed spray, 2,4-D Ester, five-gallon pails, in 1970 cost $24.95 and the projected cost in 1975 is $70.

Carbyne in 1970 cost $59.90 for a four gallon pail, and the projected 1975 price for that same pail is $75. Avadex was $78 for a pail in 1970 and the projected 1975 price for that same pail is $92. I could go on to tractors, diesel fuel and what not, but the point is that most of these things are manufactured in this country. We hear the argument that our inflation is imported from abroad, but that certainly does not hold true in respect of these products which are manufactured here.

The over-all approach of the government is that we must learn to live with inflation. I suggest the government by its policies is fanning the fires of inflation, and this has caused a great deal of the difficulty in the agricultural production sector of our economy. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) talked about past averages. If the government does not adopt an effective anti-inflationary policy these past averages will not work to the benefit of the farmer. This policy of failure on the part of the government does not only perpetuate these difficulties in respect of the producers but also in respect of the consumers and everybody else.

The government has also failed to deal effectively with strikes. All we see in newspaper headlines today are references to strikes in various parts of the country. The Ottawa Citizen of Friday, March 7, carried the heading "Govt. should end strikes: wheat pool official". The Edmonton Journal of the same date carried the heading "Government won't end grain tie-up". Why will the government not act on these matters?

An hon. Member: They don't care.

Mr. Mazankowski: This minister does not have any impact with the cabinet when he speaks on behalf of the western farmer. I would like this minister to tell us how he can sit idle and allow 300 or 400 grain weighers and samplers to tie up the movement of grain out of western Canada.

An hon. Member: What about the longshoremen?

Mr. Mazankowski: The longshoremen were not on strike on February 17, but they are now. When the Public Service alliance embarked upon a program of rotating strikes, why did it choose to single out the grain moving industry by imposing on that particular trade a continuous walkout?

An hon. Member: Get back to the bill.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister of health suggests I should get back to the bill. I am talking about costs which have to come out of the earnings of producers in this country, and I have pointed out that this bill will not help them in defraying these unnecessary costs. The only thing that will help them is strong decisive leadership from that group over there. The Minister of Agriculture sits there very smugly, and suggests that we must let the collective bargaining process take its course. I suggest that when 300 or 400 grain weighers and samplers can tie up a multi-million dollar industry it is absolutely shameful. The minister cannot take consolation in the fact that his colleagues say we must not interfere with the collective bargaining process. Surely the public interest is more important at this stage of the game than the interests of these few hundred people. The government could act, but it has failed to do so.

The minister can boast very boldly about this piece of legislation. I am not denying him credit for introducing this bill, but is he prepared to recommend to his government that the producers who are being severely affected by these strikes should be given some protection or some insulation? They paid the $17 million demurrage bill last year. That was a total waste of money, but nothing compared to the loss of something in the order of $200 million to $300 million in income to the farmers. This loss is being incurred because of our forward sales agreements which establish the price of grain at the time of delivery. There has been relatively no grain shipped for the last month, and prices have tumbled in the last 60 days by as much as $1 to $1.50 a bushel. In spite of that this minister, who contends to be the champion of the farmer, will not put pressure on his cabinet colleagues to move to help those farmers immediately, and not on the basis of a five year average.

The solutions are not simple, but they require some guts and some leadership. Transportation is another area directly related to the income capability of producers. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board talks about abandoning Crowsnest pass freight rates, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) says we are not going to touch those rates. This creates confusion, apprehension, and frustration in the minds of producers in western Canada. It seems that, if we do not have a strike that slows down the movement of grain, we have a transportation failure.

The philosophy of the government is to use a lot of words, mouth a lot of expressions, but when the chips are down it fails to come through with any meaningful actions or programs of assistance.

Mrs. Holt: Whine, whine, whine, whine.

Mr. Murta: Now, Simma.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister's legislation is acceptable, but I must say that it was conceived by the Progressive Conservative Party back in the late 1950's. It seems that any good legislation in the last 15 years was inspired by the Conservative party, and most of it still forms the beneficial cornerstone of our agricultural policy.

The only agricultural policy the government seems to refer to is that policy enunciated by the task force report on agriculture. Our marketing legislation and the grain stabilization bill seem to have emerged from that report. That task force report was a product of the bureaucrats, and I hope this minister will dissociate himself from it once and for all. His former colleague did not dissociate himself from it, and look what happened to him.

Let me conclude by reiterating that we do not need lofty pieces of legislation. The producers in western Canada need assistance right now, particularly in the movement of grain but also in other fields, especially the cattle industry. Most of this assistance can be provided by the government through order in council, or by the adoption of adequate policies. Perhaps all that is required is a shift in government policy. We certainly do not need complicated legislation. As my hon. friend suggests, all that is required is common sense, guts and leadership.

I hope this minister will consider these problems right now, because by doing so he might save an industry that is on the verge of going under and speak of the beef industry. Perhaps the minister is willing to meet with members on this side who are concerned with agriculture in order that we can work out something together.

We have always supported the minister in respect of good legislation, and we will continue to do so. We must impress upon him the importance of dealing with these specific problems right now. If he does not deal with them soon it will be too late to do any good for the producers or, and just as important, the consumers in Canada. If he does something he might even get back the support of his colleague, the hon. member from Windsor, who is the champion of the consumer. The two points of view are not contradictory. I think in order to have a good productive sector in agriculture we must have people who can buy and can afford to pay the price. So, I commend these suggestions to the minister. We will certainly support his bill and hopefully he will support some of our suggestions and amendments in the committee.

● (1510)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Before I recognize the minister I remind members of the House that the minister's statement will close the debate on this bill.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) wishes five or six minutes to make a contribution. If it is agreeable to the House this would be agreeable to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have always been somewhat like the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) who, on starting his remarks, said he was a wise man. Like him, for many years, I have tried not to keep the House too long and simply repeat speeches to get my name into Hansard, to show that I had spoken or that I knew this or that.

So, I have been good, and today I did not even want to speak because, knowing the importance of this bill and the good results it can have, I would have liked to have seen it passed as soon as possible. But when the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) spoke a while ago, I said to myself: It is almost impossible to overlook all those remarks. Two things occurred to me: either he knows nothing about the administrative past of his own political party, or else the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) repeated each other. I then thought of putting a question to the hon. member for Mackenzie because his remarks were exactly contrary to the accusations of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) against the minister.

I agree with some hon. members that that bill will bring no fundamental change in the field of agriculture. I agree that the bill should be introduced as soon as possible, but I did not understand why one hon. member had followed another in such quick succession to study the bill until today, to then refuse to refer it immediately to the committee. One hon. member followed another hon. member simply to kill time, without listening to each other.

On this side of the House, not too much of an attempt was made to fight back. I was offended when it was explained that the minister was only running around. First of all, my good friend for Mackenzie said that, to improve the bill, the minister should stop running about. It may be that the minister explains the agricultural policy throughout Canada well enough to describe to the population the preparation of some changes in the policy, in the philosophy underlying the adaptation of certain measures, and that somewhat hurts the hon. member for Mackenzie.

That hon. member, whom I tried to listen to with the most possible wisdom said: the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should do as he did in the milk industry in order that we realize that he is sincere about the measures concerning other farm commodities. What is amazing is that, last week, the hon. member for Crowfoot said: in agriculture, and especially in the milk industry, it is a total mess. Hon. members from eastern Canada should rise and scold the Minister of Agriculture. That is what the hon. member for Crowfoot was saying last week. On the other hand, the hon. member for Mackenzie is saying today that the minister should reorganize his policies along the same line as our dairy industry. There must certainly be a misunderstanding.

I suggest that the changes which this bill proposes, namely to use the average price over a five-year instead of a ten-year period, are important. What is still more important, however, is the adjustment on a yearly basis of base prices for farm products. I feel therefore that one and half or two years from now, we shall come closer to production costs. I do not want to take too much of the minister's time, but I want to make it clear that I did not agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming when he blamed the minister for providing the Canadian Dairy Commission with $140 million. In fact, he should check his figures, for these $140 million apply to last year only. He also blamed the government for establishing quota . . .

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege I wish to say I did not criticize the minister for making available to the National Dairy Commission $143 million, which figure the hon. member will find in the annual report if he takes the trouble look at it. Secondly, I would suggest he should read the bill and know exactly what he is talking about rather than criticize other members who may have done so.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you consider it a question of privilege. So he just said $143 million, but he is completely wrong again. I will not tell him the exact amount, I shall let him search so that he will remember it. I do not want to criticize hon. members in any way. I just want to know what they tried to tell the House. They claim that with respect to administration the government introduced no reasonable policy. Everything is criticized. I just want to let them understand that they should at least back their criticisms with figures, to have something real at least. Then we shall have to confess that the government is wrong. But right now their criticism is unfounded.

I guess the hon. member for Timiskaming might listen to me. I am going to ask him another question, and he may refer to the official transcript of last week's debates. He was then blaming the government for introducing quotas, and he said that it had resulted in dismal failure for the dairy industry. Quotas were not imposed by the government, but by us farmers. I was a member of the Farmers Union then. We asked the government to fix quotas for the dairy industry in order to match production with consumption.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I had to say. A question was raised by an opposition member, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), and I appreciated that. If we had had on the bill such remarks as those made by the hon. member for Lisgar, I believe we would not have strolled about so long, and probably we could have referred the bill to the committee last week. I support his suggestions, and I would like to discuss them with him, because they apparently make a lot of sense.

Instead of being criticized for roaming across the country, the minister should be encouraged to continue his travels. Instead of hearing speeches, we could have gone through 5 or 6 bills, now before the House, to help the farm industry. Those 6 bills could be voted and the minister could go and inform the people, which the opposition will not do because they are not interested in explaining legislative items.

This bill deserves our support. It may need improvements from year to year, and I hope that in committee opposition members will not take all the time. I have noticed that opposition members have control over the time of the House, while we on the government side control only legislation. Time is controlled by the opposition. This prevents us from getting the bills into the book. Therefore, next week or the week after, when the bill is deferred to committee, I would ask opposition members if they would agree that two or three representatives from each party state their views, vote on amendments and carry the bill through as fast as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

[Mr. Peters.]

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1520)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the debate that I must try to set some things straight.

An hon. Member: Hurray!

Mr. Whelan: Bill C-50, contrary to what some hon. members have said, is important. Also, it breaks new ground in the stabilization legislation of Canada. Some hon. members have said that this is just old legislation to which some improvements have been made. Let us go back a few years. What was the first bill? The original agricultural support bill was established in 1944. In 1958 we had the first stabilization bill. In the bill before us we put forward the first major amendments to the original agricultural stabilization legislation.

We can even go back to the legislation which first established the Canadian Farm Loan Board, the present Farm Credit Association. This is being amended. Hon. members have said that we have created no new legislation. I ask, what do hon. members think the Canadian Dairy Commission is? The act establishing the commission was one of the most successful pieces of legislation ever created in the field of agriculture. It was passed in 1966. Some hon. members have asked why I have not put forward the same sort of legislation to protect the beef industry as I have for the dairy industry. Let us not forget that the legislation under which the dairy industry operates, and similar legislation put forward by the provinces themselves for fluid milk marketing are a supply management program. The dairy farmers in Canada today average about $2.75 a hundredweight more than dairy farmers in the United States. There is no other commodity that receives that kind of protection. All I can say is that this is not bad for quotas.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is why we are importing butter.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke about wheat. I would dare him to travel across the prairies and say we will get rid of the quota delivery.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not supply management.

Mr. Whelan: Is the hon. member suggesting that what is good for one segment of the population is not for other parts of our society? I hope that is not what he is suggesting. When the hon. member was speaking about the labour groups I had the impression that he thought the Minister of Agriculture should say that that is a small, insignificant group, let us crush them like a road roller crushes a bug, push them out of the way, and make the elevators work. I had the impression that he thought those other several thousands are more important, that perhaps it is more dangerous to do something to them so we will let them do what they want. Again I hope that that is not what he was suggesting.

I have said, and I am sure that the hon. member will agree, or at least I hope so, that we should have some system which would make strikes unnecessary. Many suggestions have been made about putting a matter before a parliamentary committee. A joint committee of the House and the Senate is right now today studying the Finkelman report, trying to work out solutions. I and other hon. members know that the work of the committee will not be completed in time to settle the present problem, but perhaps the committee can work out a system, or make some suggestions and report to parliament so that some solution can be found that will work. There is no denying that we must have such a system.

With regard to the beef industry, to which reference was made about 29 times, although I am not sure of that number because if one includes all the provincial programs it may have been even more than that, let me tell the House that our beef producers are 29 times better off than beef producers in the United States as a result of the action we took.

Mr. Mazankowski: Don't say that in Vegreville.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member should not forget that rarely does the government move without some representation being made to us. We never take action without consulting the industry and the provinces.

I have been reading Hansard, and I have listened to most of the speeches made in the House in this debate, and I find that, with the exception of the last two speakers from the opposition, who did not criticize me for it, most hon. members have said that they think I should be present more often in the House. I would challenge them to find any other member of parliament who stays around here more than I do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I apologize to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The fact is that nobody has ever seen him outside these buildings. Somebody has even said that he lives in the Peace Tower. I could never manage to be here as much as he is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Somebody has to mind the store.

Mr. Whelan: I am a strong believer in not making people come to the government. There is nothing wrong with taking the government to the people. People get copies of the speeches I make—and hon. members even object to that—but I want them to know what I am saying, or at least to see a reasonable facsimile of what I am saying. I would challenge any one of them to find an inaccuracy in anything I have said, and I challenge them to do some research.

I told farmers to prepare for the future because times will not stay good forever. Never once did I say that I was totally responsible for the prices they were getting. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) also took part in the debate. In his province income in 1974 increased by 360 per cent, and in the whole nation there was an increase in 1974 of 215 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I admit there are some problems in agriculture, but to hear some hon. members who took part in the debate one would think there is nothing but gloom and doom in agriculture. It is my duty to state some of the facts. It must be admitted that the press in the big cities does not do the job it should in telling the people of Canada what the score is, so I believe in taking the government to the people. I myself do it on Wednesday nights when this institution is not sitting, and I also do it on Friday evenings and on the weekends, so let no one say to me that I am jeopardizing my job here. I work seven days a week, and that is my business if I want to make that sacrifice on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I think there are two damn many politicians holed up in this place who forget that there is an outside world, and again I apologize to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not say that the minister was going out too much. I said he was not doing anything here.

Mr. Whelan: I did not hear what the hon. member said. I am lucky, I have a slight hearing impairment after having run machinery as a young farmer and industrial worker. I have that affliction, which one is sometimes fortunate in having, because one does not have to listen to everything—that goes for cabinet meetings also.

Some hon. Members: Explain!

Mr. Whelan: I only accept one out of twenty invitations that I get. If I am saying bad things, tell me about it. People are certainly not telling me that I am saying so many bad things. I was accused of doing that just before the election in 1974. They said, "That is Whelan's job." I want it made plain here and now, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or nobody else never told me what to do. They said, "You do your job the best way you know, and we will not stop you from doing anything." I felt it was my duty as minister not just to talk to farm audiences but to urban audiences also. Over 90 per cent of the meetings I go to are non-political; they are meetings called by service clubs, rural-urban nights, chambers of commerce—you name them, Mr. Speaker, and I have been there.

● (1530)

I was in Saskatchewan again last week. I can tell the hon. member for Mackenzie that I did not hear a thing about him because I do not think they have seen him for a while. One person told me he sees me more often in Saskatchewan that the hon. member for Mackenzie. He thinks he is holed up here in Ottawa or some place, and you know we have made special provisions for the hon. member, to go home every weekend on an airplane if he wants to, with a free ticket. He only has to drive a couple of hundred miles through the beautiful province of Saskatchewan. That would do him good, and he could familiarize himself with it more than he has in the past few years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Hon. members opposite say the legislation has been delayed, Mr. Speaker, but they delayed it more than I did. I never called the election last July—they called it and delayed parliament several months. This should have been undertaken earlier but we delayed all these things, and I say we are delaying some of them too long at the present time.

I was also criticized for saying that we had inter-departmental discussions when we made decisions on agriculture, food production, etc. I told hon. members about the flexibility of the new bill, how it gives me wide powers, and gets the support of producers. I also said that in some of these areas governor in council approval would be needed, and that inter-departmental discussions were utilized. You would think I was a dictator or something! But, Mr. Speaker, we are running a parliamentary system. I believe in consultation, and on this bill we have had consultation with all farm organizations.

You would think that nobody had ever heard of this bill before, but in the gallery right now are members of the Stabilization Advisory Board with whom I met at noon today. They were appointed a long time before I came here. Indeed, I think some of them were appointed in 1958 when the bill first became law. I have a report from them on what they think of the stabilization bill, and I can tell you that they think it is a big step forward.

I see nothing wrong with departments that are concerned about trade and all these other things working together and coming to a mutual understanding on what we are trying to do about food production in this country. I have been accused of being just a representative of the farmers. That is a damn lie, and I will say so at mass on Sunday if anybody wants me to do that. It is a damn lie, because if I can make a strong agricultural industry, all society benefits, not just agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) insinuated that I tried to pit people against people, but I have never done that, Mr. Speaker. Some people in the media have tried to build that great war, but I would let the House know through you, Mr. Speaker, that the riding I represent is 90 per cent urban. It is mostly working people that I represent, and this kid was a factory worker. I was a member of Local 89 UAW CIO at one time. I have the respect of labour and the working people in my area, and I won the biggest majority in my life in the election of 1974. Anybody who says that I represent just a bunch of farmers is paying me the greatest compliment of all.

Nearly 75 per cent of our society in Canada—and the opposition had better take a few lessons from this—is rural oriented. These people are not fully one generation away from the farm. The biggest contributors to urbanization in this nation were from agriculture—bigger than all the immigration. And the immigrants who came to this country did not come from big cities, Mr. Speaker. They came from rural parts of the world, mostly from Europe. They are the people who make up society, they are the people who understand the problems of rural living, and that is why this government has their support also.

My reference to the five ministers and inter-departmental discussions was to make it clear to the House and the public how this government operates to co-operate programs for the good of Canadians. This is a matter of co-operation and consultation, and I commend this approach to hon. members opposite. It works, Mr. Speaker.

We talk about what we have done in some of the communities, and the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) mentioned this the other day. Mr. Speaker, I have five pages of items of things that I have done for agricultural Canada since becoming minister. For hon. members opposite to say I have done nothing just proves that they do not even read our news releases. I think we have done nearly 400 things to improve agriculture.

Mr. Mazankowski: And 29 changes in the beef program.

Mr. Whelan: Our aid for storage to provide stability to the food industry in the Okanagan Valley has cost over $700,000, without any strings attached. They were improving storage so that they could keep food in better condition to supply the market in a supply management fashion.

Mr. Mazankowski: And 29 changes in the beef policy.

Mr. Whelan: That money has gone to 17 districts across Canada, but the area of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary received the largest contribution.

Mr. Mazankowski: Tell us about the 29 changes in the beef policy.

Mr. Whelan: As Minister of Agriculture one of the first things I did was to protect the cherry producers in that area, something that had never been done before. Generally it was not done until after disaster struck, and then action was sometimes taken too late. For hon. members opposite to say I have never done anything but talk—by God, I love talking—but I love doing things too, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that.

I could mention Alberta, Mr. Speaker, the richest province in the nation. Who takes more advantage of the loan program we have for small communities, community centres, etcetera? Naturally the province of Alberta does. I sign more agreements with the province of Alberta to build community centres—I just signed one with Edmonton for $6 million, and one with Calgary for $6 million and one for $4 million. They are going to take pretty nearly the whole fund we have set aside. We will have to use more supplementaries. I do not want the hon. member to criticize me because we are going to be helping Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: We have a good government in Alberta.

Mr. Whelan: They need help out there, that is for sure. I have visited some of those community centres and I agree with the programs to help keep the small rural communities alive. Its a helluva good program, and I only wish more provinces in Canada were taking advantage of it, but they are not taking advantage of it the way they should. That is one of our programs, Mr. Speaker. The opposition did not do that.

An hon. Member: We have a good Conservative government out there.

Mr. Whelan: Now let us talk about the national marketing legislation. Eggs have been mentioned here today. That is a good four letter word, Mr. Speaker; there is nothing wrong with it. Eggs are the cheapest thing you can buy today, and anyone in society who says eggs are too expensive does not know what he is talking about. There was never a time in our history when an hour's wages would buy so many eggs. I would ask hon. members to check anything they like, and I will say more about that later on.

They said that CEMA did a poor job of marketing. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) talked about "those gods who are running CEMA". Mr. Speaker, those gods were only farmers who were running CEMA. I dare him to ask any farm meeting out west, or any place in Canada, if they think they are gods. They never thought they were gods. They were just trying to do a job with the God given powers that they have, and they didn't do that bad a job when you think of the problems they had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: They lost 1 per cent of total production, and they did not even know where the chickens were laying them. How can you condemn them for that?

You could look at the automobile industry in my area. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) did not say a damn thing about that the other day. The highest priced computers you can buy, the highest priced market analysts you can hire, the highest priced marketing forecasters you can get all made horrendous mistakes in the automobile industry. They did not know what happened. People quit buying cars. All computers told them was that production should continue, but did you see a request for an inquiry into that?

We know that losses in automobile production have cost this country 1,400 times the amount we lost when eggs went bad. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that some of the experts on whose predictions automobile production is based earn more than the Prime Minister. We do not say that the difficulties in automobile production were the result of stupid marketing policies. If unemployment rises by 4 per cent in any district, the entire nation pays the bill for unemployment insurance. In my area unemployment is at the 10 per cent level because of the horrendous mistakes made by some high-priced market computer specialists. Do people say that the workers are at fault in this situation, or that marketing and computer specialists were wrong? Why blame the difficulties in egg production on agricultural producers?

I was surprised to hear a farmer condemn the system. I am not surprised when the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), or wherever the hell he comes from, condemns the system; he is liable to condemn anything. But I am surprised to hear a farmer condemn the good job being done in egg marketing.

The system is not without fault and the people running it are not perfect, but egg prices have not been as stable as they now are for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I want hon. members to think about farmers and farm organizations; when they look at Hansard they expect to see a straightforward account of what this bill will mean to them. I hope they will derive more benefit from the last few speeches than they have derived from previous speeches. They look to this House for sharp, clear-cut, thought-provoking debate; they do not expect confusion.

Before I finish I want to set a few things straight for you, Mr. Speaker, and for the farmers of this nation. The bill calls for shortening the base period to five years. We did this because the ten-year period proved to be too long. Costs and prices can change so sharply in a ten-year period that the base price no longer does its job. And that is exactly what did happen. Right now the legislation on our statute books is little more than token legislation.

Let me refer to a comparison some hon. members have made. They say that all I have done is improve on old legislation. I ask them to think of what the Wright brothers did when they made the first successful powered flight at Kitty-hawk; then let them think of the sort of aircraft they fly home in, the DC-8 and Boeing 747. Certainly, these are airplanes, but they are big, magnificent improvements over the original. That is exactly what we are doing with this legislation; that is exactly the type of job we try to do in parliament. We do not tear down this institution and build it up again. We try to improve it all the time. That is exactly what we do on our farms. We improve livestock breeding, plant cultivation, horticulture, and our cultivation procedures. We try to improve all the time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then bring in 29 more beef policies.

Mr. Whelan: That is exactly what we are trying to do with this legislation. I cannot understand all the criticism of this bill. Such criticism is not based on any philosophy.

Stabilization law must be more than just that. It is set up to be stop-loss legislation. However, to do its job the support price must be high enough to save efficient producers from going out of production when prices nose dive. There is nothing in this bill for those who are not productive. This legislation will not rob efficient producers of incentive, no matter what anyone says.

Many members have taken pokes at the five-year period. They say it is still too long. They would be right if the bill did not go any further; but it does, it goes a lot further. This bill builds an indexing system, and this index will be tied to everyday costs of production. This is our check on the five-year base. If the base lags behind changes in production costs, the index will make up the difference. The index will keep stabilization legislation current in the same way as the cost of living index keeps a pensioner's cheque current. In the debate many members chose to overlook this index. Well, I will tell you one thing: if you overlook the index you are overlooking what farmers feel is the most important part of this bill. Farm organizations presented briefs to us in which they asked for this index. Think about that. What they want has been incorporated in this legislation.

Some hon. members of the opposition have charged that this bill has nothing new in it. If you want to know how off-base these charges are, ask a farmer. I will give you an example to prove my point. Say the bottom falls out of the price of farm produce X. The base price over the previous five years was $2, but the index shows the costs of production are $1 higher than during the base period. What does that mean to the farmer? It means that the supply price will be 90 per cent of $2, which is $1.80, plus $1 to keep stabilization in line with today's production costs. That totals $2.80 a unit. That is the minimum under the new bill. Under the law we now have the farmer would only be guaranteed $1.30 if the average price over the 10 years was $1.63.

On the farm there is a big difference between a floor price of $2.80 and a floor price of $1.30. Some members can say that is nothing. But farmers would again disagree. A price of $2.80 is 215 per cent of $1.30. Three factors lead to that 215 per cent increase. One is the five-year base period. The second is the index. The third is also important. The named commodities under this new bill cannot be supported at less than 90 per cent of the base price. That is up from 80 per cent. This 10 per cent increase has been belittled by many people as a petty change. In terms of cash in farmers' hands, it is far from petty. Some hon. members insist that the old legislation is able to cope with today's demands. That legislation went on the books in 1958. I have already explained that we need up-to-date legislation so that what we can do what must be done to meet the changing needs of society. The example I have just given you is proof that the legislation we already have is not good enough.

Some hon. members point out that the current act has no ceiling, so that we can shelve our new bill and merely raise support prices whenever we need them. There are two purposes to stabilization legislation. One is to give farmers a floor price that will protect them from ruin. If the floor price is high enough, the legislation also serves another purpose. It gives farmers the security they need to invest in land, buildings, equipment and stock. Farmers want a realistic support guarantee written into the law. Using the old bill would probably mean less cash in their hands. It would also definitely not give them as much security to invest in their farming futures. It would not give enough security if they want to borrow from a credit union or bank.

One of the criticisms hurled at this bill is that it balkanizes the country. It allows top loading. In short, this means that provincial governments and/or producers can pay the cost of boosting the base price about 90 per cent. The federal support will not give advantage to producers in one province over another.

The charges of balkanizing could be true if the government of one province raised the base price to 95 per cent or

100 per cent of the five-year average, while the level stayed at 90 per cent in the province next door. This could give one province's producers a competitive advantage over producers in another province. That is why any top loading of a product sold across Canada will have to be uniform in all provinces.

Say two provincial governments wanted to pay the cost of increasing the base price for hogs to 100 per cent and the other eight provinces only wanted to increase it to 95 per cent. If the two provinces would not agree on 95 per cent, then the federal government would have no choice. It would have to withdraw all federal money form the stabilization of that commodity in those two provinces. That is wielding a big stick, but we will use it to prevent federal money from being used to give one province an undue advantage over another. I am sure the provinces will respect this power.

The only exception is where the legislation provides for regional supports. This only applies where there are distinctly different regional markets in Canada for one commodity. Potatoes are a good example. Potatoes raised in the Maritimes sell in one market. Potatoes grown in the west sell in another. Few potatoes cross from one market to the other. So a regional stabilization plan in potatoes would not pit one region's producers against another's. It could work very well. But none of these plans for support will work unless there is a production agreement and a market for the production. I am not going to spend taxpayers' money on production so large that it would come out of people's ears, or on production which cannot be sold. That would waste our production capacities and waste energy and resources.

Some of you have called for the support level to be changed every six months. Some want it changed every three. Whether you know it or not, that is not criticizing Bill C-50. It can be done. But think for a minute, and you will find that it makes a lot more sense for some commodities than it does for others. Grain crops come off once a year. Because they can be sold in orderly fashion throughout the year there is no need to shorten the stabilization period. Where a shorter period may do a good job is in seasonal crops. When you ask for stabilization price periods to be shortened, there is one over-riding fact you must be aware of, and that is that every time you change the support level you risk disrupting the normal marketing patterns.

There has been a lot of dispute about the list of named commodities. I want to explain this. Cattle, hogs, sheep, industrial milk and cream, corn and soybeans, plus oats and barley produced outside the Canadian Wheat Board area are automatically covered under the new bill. And there is a good reason for this. These commodities, plus the prairie grains covered by the western grain stabilization bill, add up to more than 88 per cent of the total value of Canada's farm production.

No commodity is excluded from protection. I think I should repeat that. No commodity is excluded from stabilization protection. Butter and cheese are no longer named commodities because they are now covered by the Canadian Dairy Commission Act. The CDC receives money for its support programs from the agricultural commodities stabilization account. Therefore, it is simply good housekeeping to strike them from the list of named commodities.

Eggs have also been dropped as a named commodity because the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency has the power to manage supply. They talk about more power. I think they are going to be given it because they are meeting at the present time, and will be meeting again next week. If CEMA is well run there should be no need to use stabilization legislation. Yet, as I said, no commodity is excluded. Eggs could come under the bill. The governor in council can select any product for stabilization if it is needed. Bill C-19 already guarantees a floor price for wheat grown outside the Canadian Wheat Board area.

There is one important part of the bill that has been poked at by members of the opposition. Some obviously do not understand how the deficiency payment works. Say the support price is $45 per hundredweight. However, farmers only got an average weighted price of $43 that year from the marketplace. What deficiency payment will the farmer get? He will be paid $2 on every hundredweight he marketed during that bad year.

That $2 is a flat rate. That is what the farmer who sold his animal for $46 per hundredweight will get. It is also what the farmer who sold his animal for $40 will get. The reason behind this is important, and it needs to be understood. Producers should not rely on a deficiency payment to make up for sloppy marketing, even in bad times. The way this legislation is written, a farmer who sells his product wisely and gets the top price will come out ahead. The farmer who does not market his product as wisely will be paid less. This way it is always in the farmer's best interest to bargain well and market wisely.

I resent people saying that this government did not put the legislation that is now on the books to its full use. That is hogwash. Between 1958-59 and 1962-63, the government spent a total of $220 million in stabilization. That worked out to about $44 million each year. Then the Liberal government came in. Listen to this. From then until the end of the fiscal year 1974-75 we spent $1½ billion. That works out to about $133 million each year, so do not say we do not do anything. Just think what you did not do with that good legislation you passed in 1958.

It is simply not true to accuse this government of not making the best use of the stabilization legislation we have had. In 1974-75 alone $318 million will be paid out in stabilization cheques, and that does not include the consumer milk subsidy or the two-price wheat support price.

Recently this House gave second reading to Bill C-34, amending the Farm Credit Act. The aim of the credit bill is to make more low-interest mortgage credit available to young farmers. This stabilization legislation we have before us goes hand-in-hand with Bill C-34. There is no way that young men and women should be encouraged to buy a farm without the protection of this stabilization legislation.

These are two planks in this government's farm policy. They are both part of the legislative framework that farmers need in the future. It is most important we have that.

This new legislation will let us do a lot more in stabilization. That's the plain truth. Some hon. members have charged that this is not the truth. They point out that because the main estimates for stabilization payments in 1975-76 are less than we paid out in 1974-75, this new legislation is backward, is not progressive.

They are wrong. The fact is that the main estimates in the Blue Book are for known expenses only. These are expenses that can be accurately measured for the coming year. The Blue Book estimates are, in fact, a minimum. In each year since we have had stabilization legislation we have spent more money than we budgeted in the main estimates—yes, in every single year. When the bottom drops out of the market for a farm commodity we need to be able to act right then. If we were pinned to the estimates in the Blue Book, how could we possibly respond to farmers' needs? Answer me that. When we need more money than the main estimates provide, we get supplementary estimates. Our Stabilization Act needs this kind of flexibility. If anyone wants to read the annual report they will see this happened for the past ten years.

Some have implied that we paid our stabilization payments with money from hidden sources. How can they possibly say that? Supplementary estimates are voted on, and each member knows it. Every dollar and cent spent on stabilization is on the public record. It is dishonest for any member of the House to suggest anything to the contrary.

Let us look at the figures the hon. member for Windsor West attacked. He points out that we spent $301 million on stabilization in 1974-75 but that the main estimates for this year are only $261 million. Therefore he concludes that we would make less use of stabilization legislation than we have in the past. As I said, that is not true. Remember that the main budget for 1974-75 was only $129½ million. We ended up spending more than twice that.

An hon. Member: Not so fast.

Mr. Whelan: I only have a minute to go.

As a matter of fact, and I think it is worth repeating, we have spent more than the Blue Book estimates in every single year that we have had stabilization legislation. Two years ago we spent $31 million more than was allocated in the main estimates.

Now let us take a realistic look at the Blue Book estimates for 1975-76. Sure, the main estimates of $261 million for this year are a lot less than we spent last year. But remember this includes no funds, not one cent, for two on-going programs. Neither the cow stabilization nor the beef stabilization legislation are included in these estimates.

There are many more things I could say, Madam Speaker, but I, too, would like to have second reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the minister a question in the one minute remaining before four o'clock? Will the minister explain why calves were not supported during the last year under the Stabilization Act when cattle, of which calves are a part, are a designated product? I am curious as to why calves were not supported when that industry is in such serious difficulty, particularly because of provincial government intervention.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, we discussed all the pros and cons of establishing a possible program. I think this needs to be explained, and I will be glad to do that in greater detail before the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, I think you will find there is general agreement to take the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), Bill C-231, to amend the Holidays Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the bills standing previous to this bill be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is agreement, Madam Speaker, but I hope that one day soon the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) will present his Bill C-208. We have jumped over it quite a few times. If we do not deal with it soon, another Heritage Day will be missed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

HOLIDAYS ACT

SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT OF DOMINION DAY BY CANADA DAY

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved that Bill C-231, to amend the Holidays Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1600)

He said: Madam Speaker, I do not propose to take the time of the House for very long. The purpose of the bill, as stated in the explanatory note, is to discontinue the use of the word Dominion in the Holidays Act and to eliminate the divisiveness caused by this word, so that all Canadians can celebrate their national holiday with pride and pleasure.

[Mr. Peters.]

There may be some disposition on the part of the House to refer the subject matter of the bill to a committee, in which case the bill could be discharged. The committee discussion would be of assistance to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) who will be bringing down at some future date—I hope in the early future—a measure to amend the Holidays Act, and this will embrace the general content of the bill now before us. If this should be the will of the House I would be happy to move that the subject matter of Bill C-231 be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Somebody else will have to move it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is that a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I did not rise, it is true, but I suppose what I said was a point of order. I would have no objection to what was suggested by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), but since he is the mover of the motion for second reading he would have to get one of his hon. friends to move the motion to which he referred. On the other hand, if he would just allow the bill to be debated, it might be passed.

Mr. Baldwin: No!

Mr. Francis: I am prepared to so move.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am a little confused about what is going on. I understand it is now the subject matter of the bill which is to be referred to the committee. What we are being asked to do is, essentially, to change the name by which this holiday has so far been known, Dominion Day, to another name which has been gathering a certain amount of recognition through customary use, though it still flies in the face of tradition that we should sanction such a change. The tradition upon which the name of our national day rests is to be found in line three of the preamble to the British North America Act.

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but I think the amendment to which reference has been made ought to be proposed and accepted in the House before we discuss the subject along the lines the hon. member wishes to pursue. I understand the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is ready to do this. We cannot have an orderly discussion before the motion is put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I would remind hon. members that we now have before us the second reading of Bill C-231. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is speaking to that motion.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, Madam Speaker, he is speaking on the bill, but did you recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) who wished to move a further motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do you have it in writing?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): When the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has finished, the hon. member for Ottawa West can put his motion.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am quite prepared to defer to the rules and allow the hon. member for Ottawa West to move his motion and speak to it later, if that is the recognized procedure. I am in the hands of the Chair.

Mr. Lefebvre: That's right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It doesn't matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The recognized procedure is to allow the hon. member who has the floor to take part in the discussion of this motion.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I presume I may now address myself to the matters raised by Bill C-231. If I am out of order I will again defer, but since there seems to be general agreement that I can continue along these lines, I shall do so. I should like to cite the basis of tradition upon which the name of our national day rests and remind hon. members, if they need any reminder, that the day on which we celebrate our national day is July 1—I have celebrated this day in many countries of the world, I have always done so proudly, and I shall go on doing so.

In the opening phrases of the preamble of the act which brought our country into being, we find the following words:

Whereas the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have expressed their desire to be federally united into one dominion—

So we find the words "Canada" and "Dominion" in the first three lines of that preamble. The suggestion in the bill before us today is that we eliminate one of those words and replace it by another. Madam Speaker, we are forgetting our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Canadas, according to our history, were Upper and Lower Canada. We have now come to accept the Dominion of Canada as incorporating the Canadas, and, at that time in 1867, the colonies which had enjoyed responsible government for many years, indeed, the first responsible government on this continent—Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Those four jurisdictions came together in the Dominion of Canada. The BNA Act was, of course, proclaimed on July 1, 1867, having been submitted on March 19 of the same year. It is on July 1 that we celebrate this gathering together, this federal unity in one dominion under the Crown of Great Britain, etc. We have used this particular form, and all the symbolism related thereto, throughout our history. I do not believe we should cast this tradition aside in favour of a formula which reminds me a little of "Air Canada" and similar expressions, but not quite.

The hon. member's suggestion is "Canada Day". I submit that "Dominion Day", the title under which we presently celebrate our national festival to commemorate the coming together of those four original sections of our country, to which was subsequently added the other six and, later, the Northwest Territories, is still perfectly satisfactory.

The proposer of the bill claims that the word dominion engendered divisiveness. I submit that divisiveness in this particular instance is in the eye of the beholder. I do not see it. The word dominion is a respectable word, one that stands on its own feet. It has a very impressive heritage. I could probably quote from any dictionary, but the one I have chosen is the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary which I obtained from the Library. I would just remind the House that this particular word reaches us in its present form via the old French "dominion," from the medieval Latin "dominium", meaning "property", and also from "dominus" meaning "lord, master".

I think all of these are reputable concepts, bearing in mind that they are interpreted in a democratic way. When we speak of dominion we are not talking about the feudal times through which this particular word was developed, but are referring to its modern sense in which it is a respectable word that need cause no divisiveness and which should give us nothing but pride in retaining.

The first definition of dominion given by the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary is "The power or right of governing and controlling". I think that is a worthy concept, one of governance, the state of being governed. We have to be in our particular society. We would not be the dominion of Canada if we did not have the discipline within ourselves to be governed and to accept being governed. The second definition is "sovereign authority". There is nothing the matter with that. That, too, is a worthy concept and should be preserved within the symbolism of our festivals and our parliaments. The definition also includes "sovereignty, rule, control". I submit to the proposer of this bill that these are words that need cause no divisiveness; indeed, they should be given the respect necessary to live in a modern society, one organized in such a way as to accord respect to other people. For this reason the notion being put forward in this particular bill does not gain my support.

There is one other aspect regarding the change of this word that I should draw to the attention of the House. There was brief mention in the preamble to the act which brought our country into being, and of which we have just cause to be proud, that there was a union of the Canadas. In other words there were two Canadas, an Upper Canada and a Lower Canada, before Canada as we know it today came into being. We must remember that this is part of our history. By transposing words from, if you like, our colonial past into the modern sense, let us not provide symbols around which people can become divided and say, "Well, this applies only to the other part of Canada, one of the Canadas, not to this part of Canada". The one word that covers all of Canada, the umbrella under which we all live, is dominion. That is the word, the symbol, to which we submit voluntarily and gratefully, and it is the concept to which I adhere.

So, Madam Speaker, in view of the reputable family from which the word dominion comes and which I will not see denigrated in the manner I have just heard, and because there were two Canadas before there was a Canada, I suggest we stay with the word dominion and refuse to recognize the change put forward in Bill C-231. With those few remarks about the manner in which we describe our national festivals and holidays, Madam Speaker, I will take my seat.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa-West): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson):

That Bill C-231 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak for a few brief moments on this bill which now seems to be subject to amendment in the House. I should like to make a few brief remarks in regard to Dominion Day, and I now understand it is up to us to decide whether or not the subject matter of the bill will be sent to a committee.

While dealing with the subject matter, my lack of knowledge of the other official language has made me rather curious. In the French translation of the bill the last line reads "under the name of 'Canada Day' ", whereas in the French it is "fête du Canada". I had always been under the impression that "fête" meant holiday, and that "jour" is the literal translation of "day". However, this is a small point which may get ironed out in committee if the bill does in fact get to committee.

I am pleased it has been decided to refer only the subject matter to the committee, on the clear understanding that there is another bill somewhere in the works which is going to have something to say about Dominion Day. I understand the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) is planning to introduce such a bill later in the session. It is not unusual in our history to have bills concerning the first day of July. A rather interesting comment was made about it some time ago, on April 17, 1879, a date to which I will refer a little later in my remarks. If we examine Hansard for that date, the question at that time was a bill to bring about Dominion Day, and Mr. Holton said:

● (1620)

—as the hon. gentleman had appealed to him, he would say that Bills from the Senate were treated precisely like Bills originating in this House.

There was some question about dealing with those which originated in the Senate. This goes on to state:

They went through the same stages, and were also subject to rejection very frequently. There could be no objection, therefore, in point of form. He thought there was a great deal of force in the suggestion of the hon. the Minister of Justice, that this proposal rested on an entirely different footing from the proposal of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville).

Mr. Mills then replied:

—he did not exactly see what was intended to be accomplished by this Bill.

Later it is reported:

He did not think this House had the right to say to a man in the employment of another man that he was discharged from any obligation to work on a particular day. Dominion Day was, he believed, universally kept as a holiday, at least, it was in Western Canada, but it was not kept under the authority of any Act of Parliament.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

I just quoted that passage from Hansard to show that the tradition of Dominion Day in western Canada goes back considerably further than it does in eastern Canada, and it was always observed in western Canada under the name of Dominion Day. It is part of the heritage of western Canadians that the 1st day of July shall be considered as the day the Canadian provinces joined to become a country.

As we were speaking of holidays I thought I should dig out a list of all public statutory holidays in Canada which is:

DOMINION OF CANADA—in accordance with the provisions of the Interpretation Act, the Bills of Exchange Act, the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations, the Victoria Day Act as amended, the Dominion Day Act, and the Remembrance Day Act, the holidays to be observed throughout Canada are as follows:

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

"(a) is the provinces of Canada. Sundays, New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day.

I understand it was only the result of a misadventure in this House that we do not have a holiday called Heritage Day. While I am on my feet I might point out an injustice that is occurring in this country because of the failure of this parliament to pass a bill to establish Heritage Day.

A number of people working in Canada were sent back to work by parliament. Parliament forbade them to remain on strike and ordered them back to work, I believe about two years ago. These were the non-operating union railway workers. They were ordered back by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, and part of the arbitration award by Mr. Hall was that these people would get the Heritage Day holiday. As parliament failed to establish Heritage Day, that part of the settlement is not being observed, and in fact these people are being cheated out of a rightful holiday which was agreed to in the settlement which put them back to work.

I suggest that instead of bringing in froth like this, now would be an appropriate time to do something for these people in order to fulfil the contract on the basis of which they went back to work. We would be doing something then instead of considering the subject matter of spurious bills like this. I strongly recommend that the government get in touch with the railway companies through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), suggesting that the honourable thing would be to give these workers one extra day holiday this year and one more to make up for the one they lost last year.

According to the act of 1879, July 1 is the day it was decided we should celebrate Dominion Day. Whether this is right or not, this is the day on which we did become a dominion. If we want to have a Canada Day, an utter independence day, or a day of transition from our former status, proud though it may have been, we should take some other day than the 1st of July. July 1 is the day that Canada became a dominion with various provinces.

If we want a Canada Day there are other days that can be chosen. Perhaps when we move on to days of even more freedom we can adopt the date of the Treaty of Westminster, which made the basic change in the Commonwealth. Perhaps we should adopt the day that the Righ Hon. Sir Robert Borden prevailed upon our allies in World War I to give Canada a separate seat at the peace negotiations. That marked a real step forward for Canada toward full fledged nationhood. Canada Day might well be chosen as the day of Vimy Ridge, April 17, which strangely enough is the same date from which I quoted from Hansard when they were discussing Canada Day, which was some 40 years before.

There are many other days we could usefully celebrate on which Canada has taken a step forward in its progress toward full nationhood. The 1st of July was intended to be celebrated for one reason, and that was the day on which Canada effectively became a dominion. I understand that this parliament sat on that day for the first time, and there were great celebrations in Ottawa.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They didn't sit until November.

An hon. Member: Don't tell us you were there, Stanley.

Mr. McKinnon: I do not see any reason for having a great deal of discussion on the subject matter of this bill. The bill is short and requires little discussion, perhaps just enough to straighten out its terminology. It might be well to obtain the feeling of the people throughout the country. It may well be their wish to change this old established holiday. I am not, nor are the people of my riding, among those who seem to think all change is progress. Surely there are some things we do not wish changed.

There are some things worth preserving. I should like to see a stop put to this constant ferreting out of anything traditional in order that it can be changed to something new and modern, with the result that none of us will eventually know where we came from even the day before yesterday.

I see that there are others who wish to speak on this matter. Let me conclude by saying that if the subject matter of this bill is referred to the committee, I hope it will have full and wide discussion and that the feelings of the people will be considered in the most meaningful fashion possible. This matter is of considerable importance to many constituents in western Canada who have lived with Dominion Day on the record for 96 years. For 96 years they have celebrated the 1st of July as Dominion Day, and they may well wish to continue doing so.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, we certainly have no objection to the passing of this motion that will send the subject matter of this bill to the appropriate standing committee. That will be at least some progress in that the matter would receive further discussion. As a matter of fact, if the amendment had not been moved and we were dealing with second reading of the bill we would have been prepared to vote for the motion sending the bill itself to the committee.

A moment ago when I interjected by suggesting that the first parliament of Canada did not meet on July 1, 1867, but not until November of that year, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) wanted to know if I was here then. I was not, but I was here in the mid 1940's when we passed the bill changing the name "Dominion Day" to "Canada Day". As I recall, the sponsor of the bill was an hon. member for Matapedia, a Mr. Côté, I believe. The bill passed through all stages in this House, and people began to think we were going to start calling July 1 Canada Day. What happened? You guessed it; there were some in the other place who did not like to make that kind of change. So the bill did not become law.

As I say, I hope the motion to refer the subject matter of the bill to the committee will pass so that there can be further discussion of it. I hope at some point at least that much consideration will be given to two or three other bills on the order paper having to do with holidays. I have one in my name which asks for a ninth and tenth general holiday under the Canada Labour Code, one in February and one in August. I refer to Bill C-249. I also hope that some day the subject matter of that bill might go to the appropriate committee. I think the bill in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) calling for a Sir John A. Macdonald Day might receive similar treatment, and that its subject matter might go to a committee. I hope, and I am encouraged in that hope by what has just been said by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) in respect of the proposal for a Heritage Day, that we might get a holiday in February. The hon. member for Victoria spoke strongly in favour of this, and expressed regret that there was a slip of some sort which prevented us from getting it through a few weeks ago.

I have to remind the hon. member that it was his colleague, the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), who denied the consent which would have made it possible for the subject matter of that bill to have gone to the committee some time ago. So, because the hon. member for Palliser is not here today perhaps we could deal with that one also when we have Conservative support.

I was a little taken aback by the fine line of reasoning used by my friend from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) who quoted from the British North America Act and suggested that Canada means just Upper and Lower Canada, Ontario and Quebec. The hon. member said that the name Canada applied to those two parts of this country.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It did then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, they were Canada. The point I want to make is that as a person from Manitoba I think I live in Canada, and I think my friend from British Columbia lives in Canada. If he will read the British North America Act a little further he will find it says that, unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, the name Canada shall be taken to mean Canada as constituted under this act, this act at that time providing for four provinces.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I think in all fairness in respect of the record it should be made clear that I was talking about the Canadas as they were in the beginning. If we might paraphrase or use broad parlance, as it was in the beginning there were Canadas, and as I said, clearly this concept of Canada and the Dominion of Canada put an umbrella over the Canadas, the two provinces which then existed. I think my words were quite clear at that time, but I want to make them doubly clear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not object to that interjection. It does not seem to me that the hon. member changed the situation at all. He said there were two Canadas and that the phrase "Dominion of Canada" became an umbrella over those two Canadas, and the other two provinces. The name "Canada" was enacted as applying not just to the two Canadas that were there in the beginning but to the entire country constituted by this act. I submit that the name "Canada" applies across the country. If the hon. member were asking for July 1 to be known as Dominion of Canada day that might fit his argument, but to say that we cannot call it Canada Day and must call it Dominion Day because it was on that day we became a dominion I think is like, to quote his phrase, having it as it was in the beginning.

Now we are a country from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island and I do not think it is a venial or mortal sin to call July 1 Canada Day. As I say, a bill to this effect passed through the House I think in the parliament between 1945 and 1949, Canada's 20th parliament, but was turned down in the other place, and of course that puts me more on the side of it than I was even before. I hope the motion to refer this subject matter to the committee will be agreed to and that we will soon do something about Heritage Day and the other holidays that have been proposed.

Mr. McKinnon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member who has just spoken made some comment to the effect that I should realize that the Conservative Party prevented his bill passing. The hon. gentleman sits a long way from me in the House, but my recollection on that day was that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had intended to put forward a private member's bill which was receiving fair consideration around the House, but instead the Liberals presented a bill. At that time I thought the NDP said no to the Liberal's bill and that the Liberals said no to the NDP bill. I could be mistaken because I sit at one end of the House and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sits at the other end.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member is aware that this is not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to something at a time when motions under Standing Order 43 were moved. It was not my bill but Bill C-208 of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) which was before the House. When unanimous consent was asked for that bill to be referred to the committee, not only did the hon. member for Palliser say no but he also stood up and spoke against it and thus blocked it that day.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I simply want to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is absolutely right. I was speaking of the day when the two conflicting bills came in under Standing Order 43.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Madam Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak about this particular motion as one who has a regard for words that have a ring to them, and words which seem to be leaving our vocabulary at an amazing rate and dropping out of our conversations and out of our life in a way which I think will leave us impoverished rather than enriched.

There are several of these words which have to do with the country and the way the people in this country see themselves and the country. One of them is dominion; one of them is realm; one of them is kingdom. All these expressions can be applied to this country of ours, and all of them have a fine ring to them which has been hallowed by tradition and which has a reference to the form of constitutional government we have. I contend that we add nothing whatsoever to our national life, to our patriotism or to our civic pride by eliminating or removing these words as references or in fact as titles of the land in which we live.

I do not think it is necessary to go back to the history of the reason why the word Dominion has been in the name of this country, but the source was of the highest if we can believe the story that has been told about the Father of Confederation who was struck by the line of scripture which refers to dominion from sea to sea. It was in that spirit that the word Canada was attached to the country. There was something higher, greater and above the mere earthly involvement.

It may be old fashioned, but I still think there is something to be said for the somewhat mystic approach to one's country, and if we ignore that, we lose. I know it is too late now even to talk about these things, but it seems to me that there was an advantage to being a British subject that is not found in being a citizen. Perhaps that is an argument for another debate and it is one that I will not develop now, but in the concept of being a subject there was a promise of regard, protection and provision, for that was the basis of a very ancient system of government that provided certain guarantees to every subject in the land.

The whole problem with the idea of being a citizen is that we find that citizens disagree, and the people who run the show tend to be the ones who are in power at the moment, whereas the older idea of a monarchy—because this country is still a monarchy—suggested that there were rights for all individuals and that it did not really matter who was in power at the time because there was a relationship between subject and monarch that could not be broken.

Now we find that in this country there is an increasing tendency to cease using all such fine sounding words as dominion, realm and kingdom, and I suggest that if we let them go, in a very short time we will be confronted with actions that will move us to the next stage along the way to a form of government that is not Canadian, that is foreign to Canada.

Our history has always been the history of a monarchy, whether it was through the French regime or through the continuation of the British regime.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Canadian regime.

Mr. Baldwin: Now it is imperial.

Mr. Johnston: The hon. member across the way cannot ignore the history and the evolution of government in this country that has taken place from 1608 onwards. I suspect in a way that it has been considerably more rapid in the years of the British regime. Of course we moved along to that remarkable invention of responsible government which we borrowed from the Mother of Parliaments. We owe an enormous debt and great freedom to the parliamentary tradition which we have borrowed. We tamper with it at our risk.

I suggest also that there is something about the term "Dominion Day" that enriches this country, this domain—another word which is related very closely. Domain is a word that has dropped out of our current speech, as almost all these other words have.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is still used in French.

Mr. Johnston: We are left with nothing at all to refer to the type and kind of country we have. We have the name of the country, but I think we still need an indication of the kind of country we have.

I am proud of the traditions that have come to us. I think that our form of government is the best guarantee of democracy to be found anywhere in the world. I made that statement some years ago to a well known sociologist at the University of British Columbia, Lionel Tiger, who has written many books. I wrote to him in response to a talk that he had given on CBC, and he wrote back to me. He was critical about what I had to say about the monarchy at that time. I was reading his book called "The Imperial Animal" which he wrote in conjunction with Robin Fox, and as I looked through the book I discovered the statement that the best guarantee of democracy to be found in this world was in the constitutional monarchy. I realized that through the years he had come to my way of thinking.

There was a footnote to the statement, and I hurried to see if in the footnote he had given me credit for the original thought. Unfortunately, he had not, he credited some learned academic from the United States for the comment. But I still feel that I had planted the original thought in his mind.

I hope that in these few remarks this afternoon I have planted some thoughts that may be considered through the years. I urge the mover of this motion, and anyone else who thinks in terms of dropping the descriptive designation of this land of ours, to think again and realize that in that action there is a loss and nothing is presented to replace it.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I surely did not intend to take part in the debate this afternoon, but the comments of hon. members opposite prompt me to make a few short remarks. I would like to reassure them. I see that my colleague agrees when I say that I will speak briefly, but it could be dangerous.

Madam Speaker, I have never understood certain things stated by previous speakers. I have been sitting in the House now for over 11 years. I was a student at the Ottawa University for six years from 1953 to 1959. I used to come here, but I never did understand why each time a French-speaking or an English-speaking member——independently of your country of origin. I say again that I could never understand exactly why people refuse to look forward to what unites us all here in the House, that is, the creation of true Canadianism through respect for the past. I share the views of my colleague who spoke before me when he spoke of respect for the past, but I would like to add that respect for the past must not stop us from creating what we have been elected to do, that is to create true Canadianism.

I have great respect for the French regime of Canada which was replaced by the British regime. I like to live under the British parliamentary system, and I say so openly. That system gave us a lot in this country. But what is wrong in having true Canadianism? Every small step that can be taken in this House toward that goal should receive the unanimous consent of the House. When one is abroad and Dominion Day approaches, if one says that one must go back to Canada because it is Dominion Day, it does not mean as much as if one said—and that does not mean a lack of respect for the past—that one is going back because there are great celebrations taking place on Canada Day.

[Translation]

I would like to know, Madam Speaker, why changing the name Dominion Day to Canada Day would show disrespect for our old institutions.

● (1650)

We must remember one thing, Madam Speaker, that Canada is one of the very few countries that has known Canadianism through evolution and not through revolution. A country that was under the Indians and Eskimos became a French colony and then a British colony. We have known, slowly, a great deal of independence. We have stopped going to the Privy Council in Great Britain for civil torts and criminal matters.

I participated in the debate with my colleagues on the Canadian flag. I see some members on the other side who are still here who said then, "No Canadian flag because it is going to divide". They said "This Canadian flag will divide the country forever," yet today, only ten years after, people in all parts of Canada are proud to fly the Canadian flag.

This is a Canadian debate, we are having evolution and are proud to use the word "Canada" as much as possible—one flag and one country and two official languages. All of us together will celebrate next July 1, our great day. I do not see why we should have that long a debate. Regardless of the country of your origin, you should be proud to use the word Canada as often as possible. I use it anywhere in the province of Quebec and I like to use it everywhere—in western Canada—with the same intonation.

—the Canadian experience, Constitution, flag, and Parliament, and I think it is fair and normal that we should have a holiday called "Canada day".

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WHELAN—ALLEGED INADEQUATE REPORTING BY PRESS OF SPEECH MADE IN HOUSE

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In the debate on Friday, March 14, I was the final speaker. I spoke concerning criticism, and so on, which was levelled at the Minister of Agriculture. I rise on this question of privilege not because of lack of reporting but lack of printing what I actually said. It makes me wonder how far we can go. This question of privilege affects many members of the House of Commons because of the impression that is left. For example, in the March 15 edition of the Ottawa Journal, all that I could find reported about me was a brief article headlined, "Whelan defends speaking tours". I quote from the article:

"Too many damn politicians hole up in this place and forget there's an outside world," he said, adding that he spends much of his time away from Ottawa talking to service and consumer groups.

Part of that is accurate. However, what I actually said should be put on the record to show what I meant. I said, as recorded at page 5025 of Hansard:

It must be admitted that the press in the big cities does not do the job it should in telling the people of Canada what the score is, so I believe in taking the government to the people. I myself do it on Wednesday nights when this institution is not sitting, and I also do it on Friday evenings and on the weekends, so let no one say to me that I am jeopardizing my job here. I work seven days a week, and that is my business if I want to make that sacrifice on behalf of the people of Canada.

It has also been reported in several other newspapers, as intimated in telephone calls I received over the weekend, that I said members of the opposition were damn liars. One headline reads, "Criticism just 'damn lies' ". I spoke when Your Honour's assistant was in the chair. I talked about consultation, and so on, with members of other departments concerned, and about consumer and producer concerns. I said, and I quote:

I see nothing wrong with departments that are concerned about trade and all these other things working together and coming to a mutual understanding on what we are trying to do about food production in this country. I have been accused of being just a representative of the farmers. That is a damn lie, and I will say so at mass on Sunday if anybody wants me to do that. It is a damn lie, because if I can make a strong agricultural industry, all society benefits, not just agriculture.

If what I said had been reported accurately, there would be a better understanding, which would be better for all of us. What I said may have been reported, but if it was, it was not recorded in the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the opposition, may I extend the deepest sympathy of the opposition to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on his difficulties with the press.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: I might only add that the Chair has at least equal difficulty in finding a question of privilege.

MANPOWER

FAILURE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION ON FRAUD CONNECTED WITH TWO LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43—

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Cossitt: —to seek the leave of the House to move a motion arising out of answers given to two questions on the order paper last week. It concerns a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre:

That in regard to the answers to order paper questions 1,041 and 1,042 revealing approximately a quarter of a million dollar fraud involved in two local initiative program projects applied for by Mr. Guy Poulin in the constituency of Montreal-Bourassa, and in regard to the refusal of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his answers to reveal the names and addresses of all persons recommending these fraudulent projects to the government, the House requests the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to make public forthwith all files pertaining to these projects and to adopt a policy in future of making public the names of all persons involved in local initiative program projects where charges of fraud have been laid and proven. And, further, the House believes that parliament possesses the right to know and to receive information that cannot be deprived by arbitrary and unauthorized actions of a minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Being proposed under Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated unless there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PRICE OF INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the precarious situation of Quebec industrial milk producers and the absolute necessity of that industry, and in view of the decreasing number of producers and the present difficulty to have adequate relief, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House unanimously recommend to the Minister of Agriculture to seriously consider the request of Quebec milk producers to get a minimum price of $11.60 per hundredweight of industrial milk.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

Would you be so kind as to call starred questions No. 1,445, 1,553 and 1,665?

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

ADVERSE EFFECTS OF MARIJUANA

Question No. 12—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is the government aware of the increasing availability of new information on the adverse effects of marijuana smoking and, if so, for what reason is the Department of National Health and Welfare not making this known to the youth of this country?

2. Is the government aware of a recent study by Dr. Masters and his team (April 16, 1974—New England Journal of Medicine) and, if so, is the Minister prepared to publicize the results of that finding which indicated a forty per cent reduction in the body's protection against disease in a once-a-week user of marijuana over a year, as well as reports of serious chromosome breakage in sixty per cent of those using marijuana once a week?

3. Does the government intend to publicize the results of the January 1974 issue of the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology dealing with chromosome breakage in marijuana users?

4. Is the government planning any kind of a national advertising campaign, particularly in light of new findings to make known the harmful effects of marijuana smoking?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The government is fully aware of all new information regarding cannabis from Canada, the United States and other countries. In general, these findings have confirmed earlier evidence that cannabis has a number of complex effects on the human body after smoking or ingestion. These effects are both physical and psychological in nature. A large amount of conformatory and analytic research is presently underway in both Canada and abroad relating to the significance of these effects in terms of their potential hazards for public health and society as a whole. It should be noted that there is a wide discrepancy at this time between the conclusions of various researchers partly because of the difficulty that has been experienced in carrying out animal research with cannabis, and partly because of the greatly varying strengths available in one country as compared to another.

2. There have been reports of an effect of cannabis on the reproductive cells of some animal species but not present evidence of any lasting effect in humans. There is no evidence that the children born to parents who utilize cannabis have an increased incidence of congenital deformities and no child born of a cannabis-using mother has demonstrated cannabis addiction after birth. The recent communication of Drs. Kolodny and Masters reported that sex hormone levels in cannabis users was approximately 40 per cent less than levels found in control persons who do not use cannabis in any form. It should be added that cessation from marijuana use for a period of two weeks resulted in a return to complete normalcy. A recent verbal report soon to be published has failed to confirm the findings of Kolodny and Masters. The disparity may be explained by the fact that most cannabis users also employ other drugs some of which by themselves depress sex hormone levels. The work which has been carried out regarding the effect of cannabis on immunity is based on laboratory evidence only and refers to the ability of certain white blood cells called lymphocytes to react to a chemical form of stimulation. The precentage changes in function cannot be readily extrapolated to the clinical situation where cannabis is metabolized into many derivatives during the time that it is circulating in the body and coming into contact with specific organs and cells.

3. The study of Dr. Morton Stenchever was published in the January issue of the "American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology". It is available for any media to publicize further.

4. The government will continue to make information available that will keep the Canadian population aware of the effects of various psychotropic substances including cannabis (marijuana).

DREE—PROGRAMMES UNDER WAY

Question No. 229—Mr. Howie:

1. What programmes are now under way as a result of the general agreement on Regional Economic Expansion signed by Canada and New Brunswick?

2. Other than the agreement to assist fruit farmers, what sub-agreements are under negotiation and at what stage of negotiation are these agreements?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): At present, the following subsidiary agreements have been signed and are being implemented in New Brunswick under the authority of the General Development Agreement between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the province of New Brunswick. 1. Canada-New Brunswick Highways Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Agricultural Development Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick King's Landing Historical Settlement Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Kent Region Pilot Project Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Miramichi Channel Study Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Saint John and Moncton Arterial Highways Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Industrial Development Agreement; Canada-New Brunswick Forestry Agreement.

2. A number of other subsidiary agreements are at various stages of negotiation. They include such areas as minerals, tourism, fisheries, and planning and implementation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BASE CONSOLIDATION PROGRAMME

Question No. 969—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to the reductions in the Canadian Armed Forces next year, have any discussions taken place between the government and the provincial or municipal authorities involved respecting closings under the Base Consolidation Programme and (a) if so, with whom (b) if not, will the government undertake to carry on consultation with the responsible authorities prior to any decision to either close a facility or effect substantial cut-backs?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): (a) Consultation between the department and the provincial and municipal authorities of the province of Quebec and Ontario were held with respect to the status changes at Canadian Forces station Val d'Or and Moosonee publicly announced on the Jan. 16, 1975. (b) Consultations with federal, provincial and municipal authorities are held in accordance with well established procedures whenever any major reductions are contemplated.

MANUFACTURING PROCESSES OF COINS OR BANKNOTES

Question No. 1,023—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since 1960, have the Royal Canadian Mint and the Bank of Canada received suggestions with respect to new manufacturing processes of coins or banknotes and, if so (a) how many (b) on what dates?

2. How many of the suggestions were (a) considered (b) accepted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The copper penny and the five cent nickel have not been changed. Two changes have been made in the remaining coins. In 1967, the silver content was reduced from 80 percent to 50 percent, and in 1968, the silver content was eliminated. In both these changes, silver was replaced by nickel. It should be noted that changes in metallic content apply only to coins used for transactions purposes; i.e., the silver content of the commemorative dollars remain unchanged.

2. Not applicable.

LIP—PROJECT ALDERGROVE

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the name of the constituency in which Local Initiatives Programme Project No. 311335, known as Project Aldergrove, was located?

2. (a) Were government auditors refused admittance to the premises of this project to examine records (b) were such auditors admitted after certain negotiations took place (c) did these negotiations in any way include correspondence, telephone calls or any other means of contact or communication between a man named Mr. Michael Carson and the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Honourable Bryce Mackasey and, if so, what were all details involved?

3. (a) What was the exact connection with this project on the part of Mr. Carson (b) what were all the places in the files on this project that his name appeared and in what specific connections in each case?

4. Is, or was, the Department or the present or previous Minister of Manpower and Immigration aware as to whether this Mr. Michael Carson is the same M. Carson whose name appears on page 12 of the Norris Report of July 1963 in regard to the SIU-CSU situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Greenwood.

2. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) Yes. On May 18, 1972, the Hon. Bryce Mackasey explained to Mr. M. Carson by registered mail the nature of project audits. Being in accordance with the project contract, refusal would constitute a breach of contract and as such provide grounds for termination of project.

3. (a) Mr. M. Carson was the sponsor of Project Aldergrove. (b) As sponsor, Mr. Carson's name appears on various documents as endorser of the project.

4. As of December 18th, 1974, neither the present minister nor the Department of Manpower and Immigration was aware that Mr. Michael Carson, head of the Ontario Anti-Poverty Group, was the same Mr. Carson whose name appeared on page 12 of the Norris report of July 1963, in regard to the report of an Industrial Inquiry Commission on the Disruption of Shipping on the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River System and Connecting Waters, in his capacity as Toronto representative of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers.

LIP—PROJECT RESEARCH ANTI-POVERTY

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the name of the constituency in which Local Initiatives Programme Research No. 311981, known as Project Anti-Poverty, was located?

2. (a) Were government auditors refused admittance to the premises of this project to examine records (b) were such auditors admitted after certain negotiations took place (c) did these negotiations in any way include correspondence, telephone calls or any other means of contact or communication between a man named Mr. Michael Carson and the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Honourable Bryce Mackasey and, if so, what were all details involved?

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 24 which, among other persons, listed P. A. Bourne, wife of an employee of the Department of the Solicitor General, as one of those taking French language courses at government expense while not herself a member of the Public Service, is this individual the wife of Mr. R. Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: see reply to Question No. 1,446 answered March 12, 1975.

*PENSIONS PAID TO RETIRED CHARTERED BANK EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,553—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Has the Minister of Finance, or the Inspector-General of Banks acting for the Minister, since April 10, 1974, had any further discussions with the chartered banks concerning the need for the pensions paid to their retired employees to be escalated annually by an amount at least equal to the rise in the cost of living and, if so, can the Minister now say whether the chartered banks are implementing this practice with respect to their retired employees and, if not, whether they have made any improvement in this regard since they reported to the Minister as indicated in his statement recorded on page 1323 of Hansard for April 10, 1974?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not the policy of government to impose conditions on pension plans of private employers beyond those conditions contained in the Pension Benefits Standards Act, and there have been no further discussions with the chartered banks concerning the pensions of their retired employees. As reported earlier, however, the banks normally review the situation annually, taking into account the rise in cost of living, and make special supplementary payments particularly to the older pensioners or their survivors.

INCOME TAX—INCORPORATED FAMILY FARMS AND TAX RATES

Question No. 1,585—Mr. Schellenberger:

Is the Minister of Finance considering removing incorporated family farms from the ordinary category of incorporated business for the purpose of income tax, such measures in some instances raising their tax rate from 21 percent to 50 percent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, there is no contemplation of removing incorporated farms from the ordinary category of incorporated business for the purpose of income tax. Incorporated farms benefit from the small business deduction, thereby effectively paying corporate taxes at a 25 per cent rate on the first $100,000 of active business income under the recent budget proposal. (Previously, the first $50,000 was eligible for the low rate of tax.) Only the excess over $100,000 in a taxation year would be subject to the higher rate of tax under Bill C-49, until such time as the cumulative limit of $500,000 was reached.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

UNIVERSAL PRODUCT CODE

Question No. 1,605—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made an investigation into the new checkout system of supermarkets, called the universal product code, with the view of ascertaining how this automated system is going to affect consumers?

2. Is the Minister also checking into the concerns of the Consumers Association of Canada that credit information compiled by the supermarkets and stored in their computers will be sold to other businesses?

3. Is the Minister also investigating the psychological effects of this system, particularly the concern of the Consumers Association of Canada, that the removal of a visible price will remove the consumer's price consciousness and that this is the aim of the universal produce code?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is monitoring the operation of the one retail food store now using the new computer operated checkout system involving the universal product code.

2. Yes, the department has been considering the concerns of the Consumers' Association of Canada. However, there is no evidence to indicate that the computer will be used to store credit information or that credit information will be sold to other businesses. For the most part, supermarkets do not extend credit, but rather cheque cashing privileges.

3. No, at this time the department has not undertaken any research into the psychological effects of the system on consumers' price consciousness, nor to our knowledge, have the retailers involved in Canada or the United States. As far as the Department is aware there is no intention to remove visible prices. The system at present being tested replaces prices on the items by prices on shelves.

*SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO AIRPORTS STUDY PROJECT

Question No. 1,665—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. (a) In connection with the Ad Hoc Advisory Committee of the Southwestern Ontario Airports Study project, were the municipal councils of the Town of Ancaster and the Township of Glanbrook requested to suggest representatives for this Committee (b) did these municipal councils recommend any names to the Department of Transport (c) were any of these persons appointed to the committee (d) if recommendations were made and these people not appointed to the committee, what was the reason or reasons for omitting these citizens recommended by the municipal councils?

2. (a) Did a vacancy arise on the membership of the committee as a result of Mr. Walter Stayshyn being appointed to the bench (b) does this vacancy still exist (c) is the Minister of Transport considering the filling of this vacancy by appointing a representative recommended by either the municipal councils of Ancaster or Glanbrook?

3. (a) Has the Minister of Transport received representations from the Chairman of the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth, and Mayor Ann Sloat of Ancaster regarding the government's failure to appoint citizens recommended by the councils of Glanbrook and Ancaster to the committee (b) on what dates and by what means were these messages received and transmitted (c) on what date were these representations replied to by the Department of Transport?

4. Is the Minister of Transport considering expanding the Advisory Committee to include representatives designated by the municipal councils of the Town of Ancaster and the Township of Glanbrook?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Yes; (b) yes; (c) yes, Mr. C. E. Stewart from township of Glanbrook. (d) It was felt that an ad hoc advisory committee made up of representatives appointed by municipal councils and organized citizens groups would necessarily be too large and inflexible while not necessarily providing genuine and balanced "citizen" participation. Consequently, a balanced group of "citizens" were appointed to sit as citizen representatives rather than as representatives or appointees of groups with which they might be associated or to which they might be sympathetic. It was impossible to keep the group to a workable size, and also to balance 16 people against all possible criteria such as home location, age, profession, airport stance, civic group affiliation, etc. Although we were not able to offer a position to the town of Ancaster's nominee, Ancaster has been informed that its representatives may attend the committee meetings as observers and/or present their viewpoints and briefs to the committee if they wish.

2. (a) Yes, (b) no; (c) a citizen of Glanbrook, C. E. Stewart, filled the vacancy. Mayor Hylsop was consulted.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to questions Nos. 531, 532 and 533, which ask for information concerning the functions of Ivan Head in the Prime Minister's office, the part he is playing in Canadian foreign policy, his relationship with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and details regarding possible manipulation or management of the news media on behalf of the Prime Minister's public image. These questions have remained unanswered since October 31 of last year, a period of approximately five months. They are straightforward. I believe the information could have been given within a matter of a very few days, and I know of nothing to authorize anyone in the Prime Minister's office, including Mr. Head, literally to thumb his nose at the elected parliament of this country when its members ask for information. I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he can give the House any indication of when these questions will be answered?

DREDGING CONTRACTS—WHEN PRIME MINISTER FIRST AWARE OF POSSIBILITY OF FRAUD—POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF PROCEDURE FOR LETTING CONTRACTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister who will be aware that since he left these shores there has been a substantial number of charges laid in connection with dredging contracts, the basis of which is a massive fraud. Since these charges arose out of an investigation requested by the Solicitor General, who would have received progress reports from time to time as the investigation proceeded, would the Prime Minister tell the House approximately when he was first informed by the Solicitor General of the possibility of such a massive fraud, as has now been reinforced by the charges that have been laid?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, subject to checking my memory and my files, I would say that my knowledge of such events from the Solicitor General was quite recent. He did talk to me in my office about the SIU series of events, but I cannot remember that dredging was brought into the discussion at that point.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister caused any investigation to be conducted directly under his own order or direction into the procedures followed by his government with regard to the letting of contracts for dredging, and the supervising of the letting of such contracts, in order to satisfy himself that the procedure followed was proper?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. When I first heard about the possibility of misconduct in that area I did discuss it with the Minister of Transport to ensure myself that he was looking into the files to assure himself that everything had been correctly performed as far as the department was concerned.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the scope of the charges and the possible extent of the conspiracy and fraud here on a national scale, and I emphasize that word "possible" because nothing is fact until it is proven, does the Prime Minister really feel he is satisfied in discharging his duties as Prime Minister in pursuing what seems to be a very casual approach to such a possible massive fraud, and can he not assure the House that in the interest of reassuring the Canadian public and reaffirming the good name and openness of his government throughout the country that he will sponsor a public inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom or to what the Leader of the Opposition is referring when he mentions a casual approach. Surely, the fact that charges have been laid, verdicts of guilty have already been rendered and the extent to which this inquiry has been conducted and charges laid would seem to prove to the contrary, that neither the police nor the government have been lax or have taken a casual approach to this whole matter. I forget the second part of the question.

Mr. Stanfield: A public inquiry.

Mr. Trudeau: At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I have given the matter some thought; I understand it was brought up during my absence. I must say that my conclusions are the same as those stated by the Acting Prime Minister. The progress in the case, the actions of the police at the various levels, the system of justice under which we operate and under which several individuals are now to undergo trial, and the fact that no allegations have been made by the opposition nor by anyone else, are of a nature to show we should not depart from the normal process of criminal justice which exists in Canada and resort to what I have referred to before as an inquisitorial system of justice where you go on fishing expeditions against people who are the subject of no accusation. As a Liberal Government—and I believe this is also the mood of the people and corresponds to the system of justice in our country today—we do not inquire into people unless there is real cause to believe the normal process of ordinary justice is being subverted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition on a final supplementary.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, although I agree with the Prime Minister about—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —preserving the presumption of innocence and the safeguarding of our traditional criminal procedures in respect of presumption of innocence, will the Prime Minister not agree, in respect of an alleged fraud of this scope which concerns institutions as much as people, that he should be concerned rather about all the people of Canada and that, in the course of the public inquiry, our institutions are functioning properly, and, quite apart from the guilt or innocence of particular persons—and I am not going on a fishing expedition with regard to particular persons—does the Prime Minister not recognize and agree that it is unlikely that a fraud of this scale could happen if the institution concerned is functioning properly and in proper relation with the country as a whole, including business.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is not clear to me to what institution the Leader of the Opposition is referring in his last sentence—

Mr. Stanfield: The Government of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: —as not functioning properly.

Mr. Hees: It is the Government of Canada.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO REASON NO ACTION TAKEN ON AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMPLAINTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow with a supplementary which I believe is to the point. Complaints about dredging contracts have been raised by the Auditor General for eleven years and the incidents that have led to charges go back to 1969. Is the Prime Minister considering some sort of inquiry, independent or otherwise, to find out why no action was taken and how these incidents that have led to charges of massive misuse of public funds were allowed to happen. In other words, is the Prime Minister prepared to look into this matter in light of the fact that the Auditor General indicated for some time that there was fault in respect of the dredging contracts.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no allegation of wrong doing made by the Auditor General. Insofar as the present incidents are concerned, the Solicitor General, in his statement tonight, will make clear before a committee of the House that from the very first, when information concerning possible wrong doing was brought to our attention, all the various ministers involved including the Solicitor General, the Minister of Transport and the RCMP have acted with great diligence, and I would say with the greatest success, which would seem to indicate that the institution to which the Leader of the Opposition just referred is functioning rather well.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—KNOWLEDGE OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT OF POSSIBILITY OF FRAUD

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Since the Prime Minister feels that an independent inquiry is not necessary, is he prepared to say that he is confident that no one in the government or in any agency or department of the government had any idea that possibly a massive fraud was going on until the fall of 1972?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for everyone at every level of the government, but I am prepared to say that certainly no one in the cabinet knew and, by virtue of my confidence in the public service of Canada, I would venture to say that no one in the public service knew either. That is why I think we must commend the RCMP for having done such a spendid job in bringing these facts to light.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DREDGING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY RATHER THAN CHARGES UNDER CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In raising the question I want also to assure the Prime Minister that we in our party want to avoid an inquisitorial approach to this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It is for that reason that I wish to put the following question to the Prime Minister. In view of the broadness of scope of the Inquiries Act, which is on the statute books of Canada, and the narrowness of scope of the Criminal Code, and in view of the broadness of the connections of the men who have been charged, not only with other companies which have contracts with other government departments but have contracts at senior levels with the governing party in Canada, is it the Prime Minister's view that public confidence in the institution of democratic politics and, more particularly, in the institution of this parliament, can be maintained through an inquiry that will take place exclusively within the framework of the Criminal Code of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The short answer to that is yes, Mr. Speaker. It is true that that confidence must be maintained, and the answer is yes, full stop. I was going on to say that it is true that the Inquiries Act does have a much broader scope and this government has not hesitated to use that scope, for instance, in setting up boards to investigate prices and the Berger commission. That type of action is very much in line with the government's approach when it is useful to shed full light on objective facts. But when we get into the area of possible misbehaviour, and areas which relate to the integrity of individual Canadians, our approach is quite the opposite. I think that the law makers of this country, and indeed of Great Britain, who set the pattern for the criminal justice which we practice, were very conscious of the fact that they were making the scope of the Criminal Code narrow because they wanted the burden of proof not to lie with the defendant but with the state, and that is our approach.

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF COMPANIES CONNECTED WITH DREDGING COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. In his answer in the House on Friday to a question put by me, the minister indicated that he did not know at that time if the other companies with which the 14 individuals who have been charged in the recent dredging scandal have been involved, and which are not connected directly with the dredging business but which have other business with the government, were being investigated. He undertook to find out if the other dealings of these companies were being investigated and report back to the House. Is he in a position to do that?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have checked on that and I must give the answer that I gave before to questions of this nature, namely, that we do not reveal publicly who is being investigated or where the investigation is taking place. That is all I can say.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not know whether, in light of the minister's answer, I can make my question any more precise. Is the minister saying that he will not be able to inform the House of the activities of these 14 individuals who have been charged with other companies which have had contracts and other business dealings with the government in the past? Can he tell us, now that information is out in the open, whether the activities of these other companies doing business with the government have been investigated?

Mr. Allmand: That is right. Twelve companies were charged the other day and 14 individuals. The hon. member has asked me whether other companies, with which these individuals might be associated, are being subject to investigation as well. I am telling him that we do not reveal publicly what individuals or companies are being investigated until charges are laid. It would not be respecting the civil rights of these individuals or companies to reveal in advance when they are subject to investigation because those investigations might bring negative results. On the other hand, if we are really investigating them, we do not want to let them know publicly that we are investigating them.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF DREDGING CONTRACTS BACK TO 1963

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question on a related matter. Another question asked of the Solicitor General by me last Friday referred to the Auditor General's reports in the 1960's in which it was documented that there were overruns of many millions of dollars in dredging contracts. I asked the minister if those specific contracts and payments which have been undertaken and made in the past were being investigated. Can the minister tell us now what is the answer to that question?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, I did refer that to the RCMP and they told me that they have no reason to believe at this point that criminal offences were committed in connection with the contracts mentioned. However, they intend to look at the Auditor General's reports once more and report to me in due course.

SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND ORGANIZATIONS ON MEASURES TO FIGHT INFLATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister whom I welcome to Parliament upon his return from a trip to Europe.

During his stay in Europe, while he was visiting five or six countries of the European Economic Community to find markets for Canadian trade, the economic situation here did not improve, unemployment and prices continued to rise. Does the Prime Minister intend to meet, in the near future, representatives of Canadian organizations to find a solution, not in Europe, but in Canada, to strengthen our national economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to thank the hon. member for his kind words of welcome. May I point out to him that I chose to come back on St. Patrick's Day and that it took an Irishman like to him to welcome me back upon my return.

As to his question, may I reassure the hon. member by telling him that the type of contacts he suggests have already been made in many ways. The Minister of Finance and other ministers have had the opportunity of meeting several representatives of various organizations. The cabinet as such was also given the advice and suggestions of the Chamber of Commerce quite recently; we are to meet the Canada Labour Council very soon.

On a higher level, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the federal government has invited the provincial governments to a federal-provincial conference on the economy to be held right after Easter.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

As a result of his trip in Europe which we have closely followed, does the government leader feel that the European situation is such that the Canadian people must necessarily be punished on the pretext that this is an international issue and that our country is almost helpless? Does the Prime Minister not think that, without being prejudicial to other countries, Canada can surely manage to act according to its own decisions, irrespective of what is going on in European countries?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The government feels that we can and should act to improve our conditions irrespective of what is happening in European countries. This is perhaps why, according to the OECD statistics, the economic performance of Canada in 1974 was the best of all industrialized countries. The countries which I visited did not fail to congratulate us for it.

POSSIBILITY OF OBTAINING CONTRACTUAL STATUS WITH EEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister obviously did not seem to believe that his trip to Europe—lasting two and a half weeks and including visits to a number of countries—or the results obtained were of sufficient importance to report to the House, which surprised me greatly, I would ask him whether, having visited these countries, he has any reason for believing that Canada will be awarded contractual status with the EEC in the reasonably near future. If he does, what are the reasons for so believing, and when does he expect to be in a position to make such an announcement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the hon. member is correct in indicating a lack of success on our part. Perhaps an indication would be better drawn from the fact that we are forty five minutes into the question period, and this question, along with that of the hon. member for Témiscamingue, is the first which has been asked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In regard to the contractual link, Mr. Speaker, I would report that the countries which I visited all indicated that they supported the Canadian objective of establishing a contractual link with the Common Market. They gave support to the negotiations which are going on and the exchanges which are going on between the Community and Canada, one meeting already having taken place about a month ago in Ottawa and two more being scheduled before the report is made to the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister did not give any reasons for having confidence or for believing that we would be awarded a contractual link, and as he did not give any indication when he expected that such a link could be announced, could he at least explain to us—he seems to have had difficulty explaining to the countries he visited—just how such a contractual link would work in practice? Very briefly could he tell the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even if the Prime Minister were willing to make that explanation, surely this period is not the time to make it.

Mr. Hees: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that after a trip lasting 17 or 18 days visiting six countries the Prime Minister gives us no information whatsoever regarding his talks with these countries about the possibility of obtaining this contractual link, could the Prime Minister at least take the country into his confidence and tell us how the skiing was?

STRIKES AT VANCOUVER—DATE OF RESUMPTION OF GRAIN SHIPMENTS—DEADLINE FOR NEGOTIATIONS BEFORE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the apparent success achieved by the mediator, Mr. Kelly, in reaching accord in negotiations with employers and longshoremen in B.C.—

Mr. Trudeau: Would you start again?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman has not been able to hear. In view of the apparent success achieved by the mediator, Mr. Kelly, in reaching accord in negotiations with employers and longshoremen in B.C., and in view of cautious optimism being expressed today with respect to the public service dispute, can the Prime Minister advise the House when the government expects grain movements to be resumed, and has the government put any deadline on the length of the continued negotiations before taking action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

DATE OF MINISTER'S RETURN TO DUTY—POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING FULL TIME MINISTER

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister advise when the House and the country can expect the government to ensure that we have the services of a full time labour minister and whether and how soon the present Minister of Labour will be resuming his responsibilities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have an Acting Minister of Labour who has done the job very well, just as we have had an Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it may not make any difference, but surely the national interest and the principles of responsible government demand an end to this game of hide and seek. If the present minister cannot return, will the Prime Minister assure the country that a full time minister will be appointed, and when?

Mr. Trudeau: The question in its form is hypothetical, Mr. Speaker, but the answer would be yes.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona followed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RESTRUCTURE RELATIONS WITH DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. What steps is the Prime Minister taking to relate his speech in London last week on the need for restructuring relations with the developing nations with his instructions to the interdepartmental committee on economic relations with developing countries so that a program of action by Canada is obtained?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to indicate his knowledge of that interdepartmental committee. This is precisely the subject it is working at: adding to the many initiatives this government has taken, including the stance of the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the Commonwealth Food Conference in London last week, to ensure that greater justice is brought to the developing nations.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a further question. In order for members of parliament to assist in the development of the Canadian position at the special session on development at the United Nations General Assembly next September, would the Prime Minister provide a reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence so that a subcommittee on international development could be set up to deal with these matters which are vital to the security and stability of the world?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am told that that can be done now on the authority which the House has. I certainly would welcome any contribution to this very vital area by members of all parties, and if the hon. member or members of his party have concrete suggestions to make, I would very sincerely welcome them. I think this is an area where Canada must take action.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE AT VANCOUVER—DATE OF END OF FORMAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the question regarding the longshoremen's strike on the west coast which ended this morning. It is addressed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Will the minister inform the House when the formal contract between the foremen's union and their employers ends, so that we may know at what time to expect the next strike.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the minister was prepared to answer.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to say that I think it would be unfortunate to comment along those lines in regard to negotiations going on at the present time.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HANGAR AT HAMILTON AIRPORT—POSSIBILITY OF RENTAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR CANADIAN WARPLANE HERITAGE ASSOCIATION

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. I wish to make an inquiry on behalf of the Canadian Warplane Heritage Association. This organization has done an outstanding job in the restoration of Canadian warplanes.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to make that kind of inquiry, he ought to do it directly rather than make an expose on the association.

Mr. Alexander: Ask the question.

Mr. MacFarlane: Is there any reason why they would have to purchase the hangar which they operate at the Hamilton airport? Are there other arrangements whereby they could rent that hangar, or must they vacate it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Department of Public Works is to make available for community purposes real estate property which is no longer required by the government service. In this case, while we would not wish to alienate the land, I think arrangements for its use by the community can be made.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RELIEVE POVERTY IN CANADA AS WELL AS OTHER PARTS OF THE WORLD

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Prime Minister and follows upon the question of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The Prime Minister, if I may say so, spoke eloquently in London about the need for a comprehensive restructuring program of fiscal and monetary trade policies in order to help relieve the problems of poverty in the developing world. Has the Prime Minister also noticed a report of the National Council of Welfare on the welfare of children in Canada to the effect that 1.66 million children under 16 years old in Canada live under the stigma of poverty. I ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement in this House setting out, perhaps not in detail but in a general way, what the government proposes to do to relieve poverty in the world at large and poverty in this country in particular.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government made its over-all approach to the problem of welfare known to the country in the paper published by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, two years ago. The hon. member knows that this approach is being discussed with every provincial government, that progress has already been made and steps of a legislative nature taken. Quite frankly, the hon. member surprises me if he is suggesting that, because we are concerned about the problem of poverty in the world, there is some reason for me, in a sense, to detract from that problem by making a statement here on another question. The hon. member seems to be trying—

An hon. Member: Practice what you preach.

Mr. Trudeau: We practice what we preach, Mr. Speaker. I, personally, believe that the approach illustrated by the interest of the Conservative party to these problems of the world concern is more progressive than that indicated by the hon. member.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has put entirely false words in my mouth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: I have never suggested for a single moment that we should not be concerned about the problems of poverty throughout the world, and the Prime Minister knows it. His jibe at me is unworthy of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: If the Prime Minister says that the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Stick in there, Andy!

ALLEGED REQUEST OF PROVINCES FOR ACTION ON GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister, if I may be permitted to ask it, is this: if the government is so concerned about the poverty of people in Canada, particularly children, how is it that the request of the provincial welfare ministers to progress with the guaranteed income policy, which would affect and relieve poverty, apparently has been laid aside by this government.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may comment on the hon. member's comment, the preamble to his question was indeed unworthy of the interest he has shown in the past in this and other questions, as he prefaced the question on poverty in Canada with a question on poverty in the world.

TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES POULTRY AUTHORIZED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On March 3, 1975, I asked the following question:

Since the Americans export into Canada, live chickens ready to be slaughtered, can the minister tell the House whether Canadian importers must apply for permits from his department to import that live poultry?

The minister answered then:

... I will be pleased to make inquiries and let the hon. member know the answer.

Could he please us today and give us this answer, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think there have been discussions between representatives of the two governments involved, and I believe this matter is close to solution. I cannot tell the hon. member whether it will be necessary to obtain import permits at the present time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO COMBAT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's many comments that he is now evaluating many domestic and international economic factors, has the minister set any date beyond which he will not go in his review without making a statement to the House on the state of the economy and, in particular, a statement on whether he is satisfied that the November 18 budgetary provisions are all that are needed to deal with our high unemployment and inflation rates. I ask this, Mr. Speaker, as there are now only 12 parliamentary days left before the Minister of Finance plans a trip abroad.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no. We had a very thorough discussion of the economy on Thursday, thanks to the motion put forward by the NDP.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the minister's answer, and as he is reviewing all of these economic factors, can he tell the House if the government has any budgetary contingency plan available which could be produced quickly if economic trends do not improve.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing matters on a daily basis.

ALLEGED ARAB BOYCOTT OF CERTAIN CANADIAN COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): May I address a final supplementary question to the Minister of Finance in connection with his anticipated trip to the Middle East. Is the minister aware that an Arab boycott list contains the names of some 150 Canadian companies with which Arab nations may not deal? If so, does he intend to take up this matter with certain Arab countries which he will visit, in order to secure agreement for the lifting of the boycott?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt fully with that question in response to a query put forward by the hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. As the minister announced outside the House on January 17 that he was setting up an Air Command Headquarters, could the minister inform the House if a study similar to the Land Force Use Study was done before this major decision was announced.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no, there was no study equivalent to the Land Force study, but the announcement was made following the recommendation of the Chief of Staff.

ALLEGED TAX EVASION BY CERTAIN DREDGING COMPANIES—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In light of the widespread nature of alleged tax evasion charges against persons and corporations involved in the Hamilton Harbour dredging scandal, will the minister inform the House whether he has caused his department to become active in investigating this aspect of the matter. If so, how is it being done, and for how long has it been going on.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is an active special investigation branch in the Department of National Revenue. Because of the confidentiality sections of the Income Tax Act, it is not appropriate to reveal who is to be investigated. There is no better way to tip off those being investigated than to reveal the nature of an investigation. As the hon. member knows, two charges have been laid against individuals and six companies relating to tax evasion in this matter. If other charges are to be laid, they will be laid in due course.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his answer. I gather that the minister's department is conducting an investigation. In its investigations, how far back in time will the department delve in looking into this particular aspect?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the investigation has been carried out with the co-operation of the RCMP on any information which we have which warrants an investigation under the Income Tax Act.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT BY YORK ADVERTISING OF OTTAWA

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before addressing my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may I extend to you, and, indeed, to all members of the House, both to those who enjoy an Irish heritage and those who wish they did, a happy St. Patrick's Day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I hope to have some Irish luck with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On February 19 I asked the minister to table a report submitted by York Advertising Limited of Ottawa which had cost the Canadian taxpayer $3,500. The report concerned the Unemployment Insurance Commission and alleged that the UIC has been considered as a dumping ground for incompetents. The minister noted my representation. In view of widespread concern, has the minister decided to table this report?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not fully examined that matter. I think I have had some reports on it, but I will take another look at it.

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH OF DC3 AT RIMOUSKI—REPORT ALLEGING NON-COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with regard to an aircraft accident involving a DC3 aircraft which took place at Rimouski, Quebec in May, 1973. The report has just been released. In this report, it states, and I quote:

> The carrier did not comply with the Ministry of Transport standards in pilot training, dispatch, flight watch,—

It further states the Ministry of Transport had been aware of the carrier's non-compliance for some time but had not effectively enforced their rules and regulations. One of the main problems seemed to be that the technical documents aboard this aircraft were all in French and the crew could only speak English. Will the minister inform the House what he has done to improve inspection procedures since this air fatality?

[Mr. Basford.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is one case we are looking at in depth in order to determine what deficiency there was in the inquiry. What happened in Rimouski is surely not acceptable to the government. I agree with the hon. member on this.

HAMILTON DREDGING CONTRACTS—RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DATE OF DISCUSSION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF TRANSPORT AND REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to an earlier question. The Prime Minister indicated he had talked with the Minister of Transport to see how the investigation with regard to dredging problems was proceeding. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether it was shortly after his talk with the Minister of Transport that the minister wrote and asked for an investigation by the RCMP?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I could not say exactly, Mr. Speaker. Certainly the first time the Minister of Transport talked to me about his concerns regarding the harbour situation in Hamilton goes back to the period after the 1972 election, probably in December, January or thereabouts.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR PROJECT TO GROW PEANUTS ON UNUSED LAND OF TOBACCO FARMS

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the jointly-funded project of the Canadian Department of Agriculture, industry, and the University of Guelph to grow peanuts on the unused lands of tobacco farms in southwestern Ontario is in imminent jeopardy of collapse because of Ontario's squeeze on university funding, will the minister increase the federal contribution from the new crop development board to this project and thereby help those farmers who are experiencing decreased incomes from tobacco?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that we received the submission from the University of Guelph. I made a submission on what I think should be done about it because I feel this crop has tremendous potential in certain parts of Canada where its crop can be produced. This product is highly nutritional and contains protein, so, I think it has some potential in Canada.

FISHERIES

TUNA—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF REGULATIONS FOR GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Is the minister yet in the position to announce tuna fishing regulations for the coming season in the Gulf of St. Lawrence? As the minister knows, this is becoming very urgent for those who charter fishing vessels for this kind of sports fishing. They need to know immediately what the decision will be.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the hon. member that this very morning I approved the regulations, with one exception. That is the problem of supervision of one area. We are trying to introduce flexibility in the regulations in answer to the representations of the fishermen and charter boat operators. I think this will be very satisfactory.

The Prime Minister is reported to have assured German industrialists they should not be concerned about the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act when investing in this country. Did the Prime Minister give that assurance to the industrialists and, if so, why?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave them the assurance that the law and the policy of the government would be applied. The general principle, as the hon. member knows, is that foreign investments are indeed encouraged in Canada, providing they can be to the demonstrable benefit of Canada. That is our general approach to foreign investment in Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Will the Prime Minister advise when the government will be proclaiming Part II of the act, the part dealing with new investment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the question is addressed to me. I have no such correspondence.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the Solicitor General be prepared to now table that correspondence?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, not now. The letter from Mr. Campbell was a confidential letter to the former Solicitor General. I will deal with all that this evening. We will put all the facts on record.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

MOTION TO APPROVE PROGRAM OF GUIDELINE DATES FOR METRIC CONVERSION

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved:

That the ..... House of Commons approve the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion;

And that a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving a program of guideline dates for metric conversion, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking today on a matter that is fundamental to the long-term health and prosperity of the Canadian economy—the metric system of weights and measures. It is my pleasure to introduce to parliament today a joint resolution for a program of guideline dates for metric conversion in Canada. Some members may recall that I mentioned on March 11 last year that the government intended to introduce such a resolution.

In taking this step, the government wants to emphasize the importance of reaching a national consensus on the objective of a metric Canada by the decade of the 1980s. When my predecessor tabled in this House the white paper on metric conversion in January of 1970, a little over five years ago, it received the support of all party leaders. The federal government then launched the national metric conversion program through establishment by order in council in June of 1971 of the Metric Commission. Much has been accomplished and is being accomplished by this commission. Commission members have consulted and collaborated with national industry associations, consumer groups, unions, professional bodies and provincial and federal government departments.

They have begun a process of continuing investigation, planning, scheduling and implementation. Some 200 organizations in all parts of Canada are taking part in this metric conversion program which stems from the first meeting of the Metric Commission in January of 1972. The 18 metric commissioners appointed by the cabinet have enlisted nearly 1,000 persons from all sectors of the Canadian economy. These people have volunteered to serve on steering and sector committees which report to the Metric Commission. They are contributing their expert knowledge and professional skills to this important program. Their work in the investigation phase is now leading to integrated plans to transform their sectors from a measurement system which has now been abandoned by all but a very few nations of the world to one which is universally recognized, the International System of Units, SI.

The program of guideline dates which I will describe has the unanimous support of this nationwide committee structure and of the governments of all the provinces. Canada is joining the other members of the English-speaking world now converting and other major trading nations which are already metric in the use of this common and convenient measuring system.

Our most important trading partner, the United States, is also moving in this direction. Although in the last Congress metric legislation in the House of Representatives was set aside on a procedural question, Congress did authorize expenditure of $10 million a year for four years for metric education in schools. In this session Congress specifically recognized the increasing use of metric measures in the United States and the fact that these measures would inevitably become the dominant system of weights and measures in that country.

In the present Congress bills to implement the recommendation of the U.S. metric report have already been submitted. A bill sponsored by the administration and designed to appease objections raised by labour and small business is ready to be put forward. There is reasonable confidence that such a bill can be passed before adjournment in August of the present session of Congress. In the meantime, many major companies in the United States have embarked on programs for metric conversion. These programs are going forward without reference to action, or lack of action, in Congress.

To co-ordinate this development in industry, the United States has established the American National Metric Council. This council has more than 1,300 subscribers drawn from industries, association and individuals and expects to double its membership this year. A widespread committee structure has been established and there is frequent communication at all levels between the Metric Commission organization here in Canada and the American National Metric Council. Discussions have also been held with executive departments and agencies of the U.S. federal government. They are anxious to know of the Canadian plans in their areas of responsibility. Every effort will be made to co-ordinate work between the two countries so as to obtain the greatest benefits for the Canadian program.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

To develop an economy in which the use of the International System of Units is normal procedure, the Metric Commission has recommended, and the government has approved, a four phase program. These phases are: first, investigation—to determine what needs to be done; second, planning—to identify the sequence of activities and the relationships among things to be accomplished; third, scheduling—to assign specific target dates to planned events and to co-ordinate these between and among sectors; fourth, implementation—during which the actions to be performed are carried out as planned and according to schedule.

The following guideline dates for metric conversion in Canada which I propose for the approval of the House today correspond to the four major phases I have just mentioned. The investigation phase is now essentially completed. The remaining program dates are therefore proposed as follows: the planning phase, which began in 1973, is to extend through this year; the scheduling phase is to be completed in 1976; the implementation phase, which we expect to become significant this year, will reach a peak of activity by the years 1977 and 1978—it should be substantially completed by the end of 1980, at which time metric measures will be used by all Canadians for all normal commercial and legal purposes.

We shall be organizing three pilot projects in retail store conversion. The cities of Sherbrooke, Quebec, Peterborough, Ontario, and Kamloops, British Columbia, will pioneer metric, probably in 1978. All retail store scales will be changed to metric in those cities at that time. Meanwhile, many products will appear on the shelves to be sold in metric quantities. I repeat that the guideline dates which I have just mentioned are the result of nationwide consultation with governments, industry, consumers and labour. With the approval of hon. members, they will constitute the basic framework for a national metric conversion program.

Many letters urging the adoption of this program have been received from national associations. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, for instance, writes:

> The association believes that the publication of these guidelines will be a useful encouragement to business to proceed with the planning and preparation needed for the proper integration of the conversion process.

From the Canadian Chamber of Commerce we hear:

> The objective of completing substantially the conversion program by 1980 is a worth-while goal, considering the already wide international usage of the metric system and the pace of development of conversion in the United States.

The Canadian Federation of Retail Grocers writes:

> We believe the commission's approach is a reasonable one and deserves all the support we can give it.

Both the Canadian Nurses' Association and the Association of Nurses of the province of Quebec have given their unqualified support to the guideline dates program, and the Canadian Office Products Association "finds the dates as outlined acceptable to all aspects of our industry." The Canada Grains Council has made public its scheme for the grains trade, and this conforms fully with the guideline dates I am proposing. The interests of the Canadian consumer are being well represented by the Consumers Association of Canada which is taking an active interest in conversion plans. The association's influence has already resulted in some products now appearing in metric-size packaging.

We expect that consumers will gradually become accustomed to metric measures as products and services are increasingly made available in metric units. Already, weather reports on radio give temperatures in degrees Celsius, and from April of this year temperatures will be given in Celsius only. Rainfall in millimetres and snow in centimetres will follow, hopefully in another season.

The views I have quoted represent only a small sample of the support the metric system has received and is receiving. There is every indication that the vast majority of organizations in Canadian society are committed to the eventual use of the metric system and support the proposed program of guideline dates. Many Canadian firms have already begun investigating and planning for metric conversion. They are now awaiting parliamentary approval of these dates before synchronizing their schedules with others. In the public sector, federal government department and all provincial governments have created interdepartmental committees to co-ordinate metric conversion.

It is of the utmost importance that all Canadians move in concert to maintain the momentum of the four-phase program. To this end, an information program is now under way to explain the changes contemplated and the manner in which they will affect each one of us. During the coming year, increasing numbers of packaged goods will carry declarations of content in millilitres and litres, in grams and kilograms. By March, 1976, all pre-packaged goods will carry metric markings and many will be packed in metric sizes. Hon. members have already seen some road signs giving distances in kilometres. By September of 1977 it is expected that all across Canada we shall see road signs with distances in kilometers and permitted speeds in kilometres per hour. Already this year the speedometers on many automobiles are marked in kilometers per hour as well as the familiar miles per hour.

Canadians in the labour force will also be made aware of changes initiated in industry, commerce and public services. Suitable training programs are helping them to appreciate the simplicity and convenience of the metric system. In many schools the metric system is being taught at the elementary level as the basic system of measurement. Thus, young Canadians now at elementary schools will, on graduation from their secondary or university studies, be living and working with all other Canadians in a metric world.

Hon. members may be aware that a number of companies have already converted or are well along in the conversion process. For example, the Price Pulp and Paper Company of Newfoundland has moved to the production of newsprint on a metric basis. This mill produces exclusively for offshore markets and it has switched its whole operation, including billing and order forms, to metric. They experienced no significant problem in mill conversion.

The Steel Company of Canada has gone metric, too, in its new pipe mill at Welland, Ontario. The machinery of this mill is entirely metric and produces welded pipe to both inch-pound and metric specifications. The new steelmaking facilities being developed on the shores of Lake Erie at Nanticoke are being designed exclusively in metric terms and will be an entirely metric operation. At Varennes, Quebec, ASEA Limited, the big Swedish producer of heavy electrical equipment, had been producing entirely metric products, using local labour, for the past year. The working force was trained by the company and they have had no difficulty in maintaining efficient operation and production.

Metric conversion is not unique to Canada; it is nothing new. Canada will be drawing on the experience of Great Britain, South Africa and Australia in the conversion process. In Great Britain, for example, many large industries have converted. Experience has been generally favourable. As a matter of fact, in nearly all cases costs of conversion were very susbtantially lower than original estimates and difficulties in training the work force were minimal. Many British industries have achieved very substantial economies in production by using the opportunity of metric conversion to effect a rationalization and simplication of their operations. Some difficulties are currently being experienced in Britain due to delays in carrying through the program at the level of the ultimate consumer. This has resulted in a need to operate for an extended period in both systems.

The lack of a clear commitment in consumer related aspects of the U.K. program has probably been the major inhibiting factor. But these difficulties have been recognized by responsible officials in the United Kingdom and they are directing attention to ensuring that enabling legislation is passed in the consumer goods sector and that there is a broad-based commitment to the national program in both the private and public sectors.

In South Africa, the experience has been good. After a seven-year program of conversion, no significant difficulties have been experienced. Industries report that drawing office staffs, once they had worked in metric for a few weeks, would not go back to working in Imperial units. This is because of the greater simplicity of working in metric units and the relative freedom from error.

Australia is about two years ahead of Canada in conversion. Implementation is now in full swing. Much of agriculture has already been converted without any adverse reaction. All transport tariffs and customs and excise tariffs were placed on a metric basis last year. Some 50 per cent of grocery products on the shelves of Australian stores are now in metric-size packages. This has proved entirely acceptable to the consuming public. Speed limits and road distance signs were converted to metric units in May of 1973. The conversion was accomplished without a hitch.

Here in Canada, to draw attention to metric conversion the Metric Commission had developed a distinctive logo. It is promoting the use of this logo to identify Canadian products in metric size or design as well as texts or announcements making correct use of metric units and advertisements of Canadian metric products. During the past year the commission has approved a growing number of applications from interests wishing to use this logo to identify their metric products. The commission expects use of the logo will become widespread and hopes to promote in the general public an immediate recognition of it as an indicator of metric conversion in Canada.

Undoubtedly metric conversion will involve costs. However, these costs will be spread over a period of time as industries proceed to implementation of their plans. As I have said, implementation is not expected to reach its peak until 1977-78 and will be spread over a period of years. Concern has also been expressed that the cost of conversion might impose an undue hardship on some small businesses. In view of this concern, the cabinet has approved a program of loans and loan guarantees to be available to small businesses, to be called the small business metric conversion assistance program. These loans would cover specific eligible costs of metric conversion by small businesses. In this context, small business will include farming and fishing enterprises. Such loan assistance would be available to businesses facing special financing difficulties resulting from metric conversion when such businesses were unable to obtain financing from commercial lending institutions. I expect the federal Business Development Bank to play the main role in this assistance plan for small enterprises.

My department, working in co-operation with the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance, is developing detailed criteria and administrative procedures for this program. However, we must keep in mind that costs of conversion are one-time costs while the benefits of conversion are continuing. They will be apparent in increased trade opportunities and in efficiencies which will result from standardization and rationalization. I cannot say too strongly that any delay in the program of metric conversion will only postpone realization of benefits and increase costs. Every instrument or device now being designed to Imperial units is a further liability for eventual cost of conversion.

What about information on this program, Mr. Speaker? Where can the ordinary Canadian find out what is going to happen? The information is being and will continue to be disseminated through the ten regional offices of my department and through the regional offices of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Furthermore, metric information will be disseminated by the federal Business Development Bank when it starts operation. We are also receiving excellent co-operation from the provinces and each province will have a metric co-ordinator.

I have been assured that these offices can cope with present and anticipated inquiries concerning metric conversion. The commission has produced many booklets and films. To help tell the metric story, there is also a speaker's bureau and more than 50 seminars have already been held in cities and centres across Canada. A series of seminars called "Metric and You" is currently being conducted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Metric Commission in co-operation with local chambers of commerce and provincial chambers. Hon. members will recall that when the white paper on metric conversion was tabled in this House in January of 1970 there was unanimous support for the principle that metric conversion is not only inevitable but in the national interest.

The legal basis for using the metric or decimal system was first introduced in the Weights and Measures Act of 1873. This was reaffirmed and brought up to date with the incorporation of SI—the simplest and most modern version of the metric system—in the Weights and Measures Act passed by this House in April of 1971, 98 years later.

Against this background, I ask all hon. members for their approval of the guideline dates which I have outlined. This will ensure that Canada keeps pace with an already largely metric world. This program is the subject of the resolution that I now place before the House. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table, in both official languages, a statement entitled "Program of guideline dates for metric conversion".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. So far as I can see, what the minister has in his hand is a very short document. I wonder whether it should not be printed as an appendix to Hansard so it will be there for people to see.

• (1530)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Is it agreed that the document referred to be made an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For above-mentioned document, see appendix]

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lead off this debate for the official opposition and put forth our position in the clearest possible terms on metric conversion in Canada. The motion presented on the order paper in the name of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) simply states that the House of Commons approves the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion, and there follows the usual reference to the other place. The minister has set forth the schedule and has asked us to concur.

I think I should say at the outset that we supported metric conversion when it was introduced by order in council and the white paper, and that is our position today: we still support it, but we have reservations and I hope to place them on the record during this debate. I hope the minister will take note of them and see that something specific is done about them.

Since order in council PC-1971-1145 of June 10, 1971, was passed we have been approving sums of money in the estimates for the metric conversion fund and by the end of this fiscal year the commission will have spent over $7 million. We must ask ourselves what value we have received for the $7 million that will be spent by the end of this fiscal year.

Let me say again that we in the official opposition support the principle of metric conversion. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) stated our position which appears in Hansard of July 16, 1970, at page 2470. He gave our support to the principle of metric conversion. The hon. member for Peace River also mentioned the fact that the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) had in 1970 put forward a private member's bill calling for a metric system inquiry commission. He also stated that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was prime minister, had his ministers undertake studies in this field.

I have taken this opportunity to record again the fact that the official opposition has had a keen interest in the metric system for a number of years. We supported the principle in 1970 and we support the principle of metric conversion today. Having said that, we do not intend to let the matter pass without recording in this House our dissatisfaction with the progress made by the Metric Commission. We want to bring into perspective the position of the Metric Commission today, in 1975, and let the minister know in the strongest possible terms that we are appalled at the lack of progress being made.

I stated that by the end of this fiscal year the Metric Commission will have spent over $7 million. Since 1970 it has produced one annual report and has promised a second report by late 1975. That is atrocious when we consider the amount of money the commission is spending. The commission has not appeared before a standing committee of this House; it has not justified its program, its progress or its expenditures. I know that some members opposite will say we have an opportunity during the consideration of estimates to examine the work of the Metric Commission, but that is a lot of nonsense. We all know how the standing committees are structured and that we have little time under the rules of the House to examine in depth the Metric Commission's program.

The first time I met anyone from the Metric Commission was at a dinner party in the parliamentary dining-room, I think in 1973. Members of the commission brought along a few slides and a projector to put forward a public relations package. One of the slides they put on the screen was a map of Canada which showed that the capital of Manitoba was Edmonton and the capital of Alberta was Winnipeg. Can you imagine anyone coming before a group of parliamentarians and showing a map of Canada that contained such errors? It was incredible, but I think it is also typical of the way the commission operates.

Because of our close ties with the United States, we feel we must phase in our metric conversion with theirs. The minister has said there is a measure of co-operation in respect of our metric commission and that of the United States, but I do not think this co-operation is as strong as it might be. From our investigations, United States industry is progressing much faster than Canadian industry in spite of the fact that no legislation is in place at this moment in the United States.

There are problems in respect of road signs and odometers in automobiles to be worked out, to which the minister made reference in his remarks. There is little co-ordination between the provinces and the federal government, in spite of what the minister had to say. Another problem which we have can be related to the considerable amount of across the border travel that takes place. It is imperative, in our view, that we work closely with the United States government and individual state authorities, many of which have metric programs under way, in order to ensure the least possible confusion in the conversion of road signs.

I now want to say a few words about the Metric Commission and its operation. We have spoken to numerous people involved with the Metric Commission, and the general impression we get is that the commission is engaged, basically, in a public relations job. Apparently there is much indecision, lack of leadership and, generally speaking, poor morale. We note that the commission has had considerable staff turnover at all levels. It is our belief that the commission has serious internal problems which stem generally from lack of direction and indecision.

Let us consider the question of conversion, in respect of weather reporting, from Fahrenheit to Celsius. I understand this program was ready to go last summer and a booklet was supposed to have been prepared that should have found its way into the school system last September in order to take advantage of the splash-over effect from students to parents. The date of April 1 was set for the changeover, but on January 13 nothing had really been done: the program was still sitting on the director's desk and the opportunity of using the school system was lost. We understand there was then an attempt to put off the April 1 conversion date and to substitute a later date.

As I say, this is an example of the indecision and lack of direction that permeates the Metric Commission. Many of the commissioners appointed were political appointments, and the director of the Metric Commission suffers from a political appointment without political support. When was the last time hon. members heard any minister of the Crown mention anything about metric conversion? Have we heard any minister mention anything about it? Have we read any ministers' speeches which have contained anything about metric conversion? To my knowledge, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has never made any mention of metric conversion in any of his speeches. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) had two opportunities recently, when he spoke to the Consumers Association of Canada and to the Canadian Construction Association, to mention metric conversion; but not a word was said.

The Consumers Association of Canada, which the minister says is co-operating with the commission, has registered some very serious concerns about metric conversion, but as I understand it the association has received no assurance that its views will be heeded. Let me read a few comments from a letter sent by the association to the minister on January 7, 1975. The association writes:

> Participants from our association advise me that at the present time there is a substantial degree of dissatisfaction, and poor morale, within all the sectors of the commission's work in which programs are supposed to be developed for the information and assistance of such final users. It would appear, accordingly, that an early decision on your part to request a comprehensive review of procedures and programs in these areas would be advisable, and would certainly be well received by our own participants, and would, as I am advised, also be well received and receive the co-operation of other participants in these areas.

The letter goes on to state that the Consumers Association of Canada would be prepared to meet with the minister or his officials at any time to discuss these issues and to provide specific examples of policies and procedures which concern them at the moment. This letter, in essence, is saying that the Consumers Association in fact would just as soon pull out of the program, but does not suggest doing that and wishes to make a contribution to it. This is a very interesting letter. So far as I am aware, this association has had no reply from the minister about its concerns.

We have been told that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will monitor the packaging industry and retail stores to ensure that the consumer is not the loser. We have had the experience of the British metric conversion where there was evidence that the packaging and retail trades took the opportunity during the conversion to adjust prices upward while at the same time reducing, in some instances, the quantity.

We are not convinced that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be in any way effective in this matter. We have received no reports in this House, so far as I am aware, that there has been any monitoring in respect of other government programs. On several occasions members have put questions to the ministers, the reply has been that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will monitor the programs; however, we have not heard anything about this monitoring. I wonder whether it is a dodge used by the government to assure consumers that Big Brother is looking after their best interests.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the official opposition will very carefully watch this monitoring. We want to be sure that the experience of Britain is not duplicated in this country. We should not be proceeding by order in council or by resolution; we should be proceeding by means of a bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: We should have a bill which sets out all the details of the program. The guidelines and the program should be laid down so that we may proceed in an orderly fashion. Instead, we have a loosely worded order in council which allows the Metric Commission to proceed as it sees fit. I believe it would have been better to have a bill, to have a full debate and then to have the Metric Commission appear before a committee and reappear each year to justify its program and expenditures. We see in this commission another government body removed from the scrutiny of parliament. We see it as a group that is a law unto itself and which proceeds as it sees fit.

I talked to officials of the commission about the terms of reference in the order in council. I was appalled by their reply. I noted that in paragraph 7 it states that the commission shall advise the minister on the need for legislation or any other action that may be required to facilitate conversion to the metric system. I asked whether they intended to advise the minister that legislation is necessary, and how they intended to proceed. The reply was that they intended to follow the wording which says "or any other action". In other words, they do not want a bill or guidelines; they want to be a law unto themselves so they make their own rules and proceed as they see fit. I have the feeling that we should have the Auditor General review their spending and have them appear before the public accounts committee to justify their spending.

[Mr. Kempling.]

Numerous groups have registered their dissatisfaction with the progress of the commission. The proposition of "let the costs fall where they may" is surely the height of folly. As things stand at the moment, lack of leadership at the federal level has led to confusion on the part of the public. Industry is waiting and watching for someone else to make the move.

In respect of what the minister said about the provinces having programs, I checked with every province and find that none has a cabinet policy or a stable program concerning metric conversion. They are all waiting for direction from the minister. It may seem to many that the idea of letting the costs fall where they may is the cheapest way to do it, but the sector committees have no authority; they are neither paid nor reimbursed for their expenses. As a consequence, there is a high turnover. If this matter were not so vital to industry perhaps it would be all right to let the costs fall where they may.

I have the impression that the Metric Commission believes that by a snap of the finger we will be metric by 1980. Nothing could be further from the truth. There is good and bad news in these remarks, so having said what I have, may I say that I welcome the minister's statement to the effect that he will introduce a program under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to assist small business. I commend him for that. I think assistance in metric conversion will be well received by small business. I think the offer of assistance by the federal Business Development Bank to help them in their financing is fine, but we want the minister to go a little further.

If we can finance export development trade at 7 per cent interest and give loans to Cuba at 3 per cent, why can we not have a special rate, say a prime rate, that would be used specifically in respect of metric conversion? As the minister has said, this is a far reaching program which will affect every industry in the country. If we can finance programs outside the country at rates of 3 per cent and 7 per cent, surely to goodness we can do something inside the country at a special rate. I hope the minister will take a serious look at this matter.

The beverage industry in Canada has a particular problem. From my discussions with that industry it would seem that it is making pretty good progress in its conversion, although there is a particular problem. The industry has $40 million worth of re-usable bottles which have an average life of ten years. The industry is awaiting clearance of double labelling by volume so it can use the $40 million worth of bottles. I am told that it would take six to seven years to carry out the complete conversion. We are five years down the road now, so there is no way this conversion will be completed by 1978 or 1980.

Automobile mechanics have a problem in securing new tools. Some modification must be made concerning the tool allowance under the Income Tax Act. I hope the minister will speak to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), and suggest that in the next budget provision be made to increase the $150 tool allowance for automobile mechanics. The industry which stands to make the greatest gain from metric conversion is the construction industry. It stands to gain by way of cost reduction under metric conversion. Standardization of building components should be encouraged, yet the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) has taken no initiative in respect of metric conversion with respect to public buildings. Nothing has been said in any of his speeches about metric conversion. The same thing applies to the remainder of the cabinet; they have all been quiet on the subject.

Mr. Hees: How about dredging?

Mr. Kempling: I do not know whether dredging will be done under the metric system, but this is an area which might be worth looking into. The provinces and the municipalities are waiting for initiative on the part of the Minister of Public Works. When will we see it? If you look at the total of the buildings which the Department of Public Works erects in the course of a year, and add to it provincial and municipal undertakings, you will find that it represents a large portion of the construction in this country. Surely the department should show some initiative and give some leadership to the provinces and municipalities which await government action in this area because they are aware of the advantages of metric conversion.

● (1550)

I should like to sum up what I have said. We support the Metric Commission. We want to see it act in co-operation with our neighbour to the south. However, we are very concerned about the operation of the Metric Commission. We believe that it needs a good shake-up, that it needs firm direction and that it needs support from the minister and from other members of the cabinet. We believe that the structure of the sector committees must be given careful consideration. If they are not functioning properly, they should be reconstituted. The committee must have some authority; and we are not sure that the use of volunteer help is the best way to proceed. As I understand it, sector committees sit about four times a year. Committee members come to Ottawa at their own expense. I think some provision is made to cover travel costs if they travel beyond Winnipeg, in which case I believe they get 25 per cent of the fare but no per diem. While this may be economical, I do not think the best results can be obtained from employing volunteer help, because they have no authority.

Metric conversion in Canada will put us in step with the rest of the world. As I read recently in a magazine, the People's Republic of Yemen, Burma, Canada and the United States are the only countries in the world not on the metric system. Metric conversion must go forward and for this we must have leadership and direction, both of which we lack at present. We look to the minister to give the commission a good swift boot to get them in line and get this program under way.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate this afternoon but I am sorry to hear that we are not more advanced in converting to the metric system, as is apparent from the timetable outlined by the minister. In looking in my file I find that in 1968 I introduced a bill regarding metric conversion. The bill is designed to provide a technique of study for the applicability to Canada of the metric system. The appointment of a commission of senior public servants is intended, first to avoid the costs and delays inherent in the appointment of a royal commission, and second to ensure the completion of studies and reports within a reasonable period of time. I have been wondering, since I looked this up, why I have become so interested in the whole matter of metric conversion since I do not know very much about the subject. However, I am very interested in the history of the metric system as it was outlined by the previous speaker.

I understand that the Conservative government under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had undertaken a study within the government. Since nothing resulted from that study, it might seem that I should be given credit for what the government did, because on reading the bill one finds that the government followed my recommendations; so it seems as if I had written the program. This does not always happen. It is interesting to look back to the correspondence and see what one of the groups which wrote to me said at that time. I am referring to a letter which I received from the Canadian Teachers' Federation in which they said the federation had taken note of the bill respecting conversion to the metric system, and they put forward the following resolution:

> The Canadian Teachers' Federation has taken note of Bill C-85 (an act respecting the metric system) which you had originally introduced in the House. We thought you might be interested in knowing that the Canadian Teachers' Federation has passed the following resolution:
> "That the CTF encourage conversion to the metric system".

In 1970 I received a letter from the Canadian Institute of Quantity Surveyors after I introduced another bill in 1969. They wrote:

> This letter is prompted by Bill C-42, designed to provide a technique of study for the applicability to Canada of the metric system, which you introduced to the House of Commons on October 30th last.

They went on to say they were of the following opinion:

> (a) Canadian conversion to the metric system must arise from economic necessity.
> (b) The desire to convert must be voluntarily generated by industry, and not by government.
> (c) Most importantly, to be effective the conversion must have the support of all levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, and must permeate the entire national economy.

I also received a letter at that time from a gentleman who was very interested in the subject. He wrote:

> If your bill is adopted, it could reasonably be expected that the commission would report in favour of the metric system. The presentation of the subject to the House of Commons, following the introduction of the report of the commission, would require a more comprehensive study of the wider implications of the question, nationally and internationally. I hope that a complete acceptance of units of the metric system for all uses in government, industry, commerce and merchandising would be possible, at the one time.

He went on to state some other advantages of the metric system. This was appreciated because, as I said, I am not an expert on the subject. When I introduced that bill I was familiar with a couple of problems that had developed and had been dealt with in parliament shortly before that time. While I certainly do not have the advantage of the knowledge possessed by the minister on this subject, I am particularly interested in an inquiry we undertook on the subject of conversion to the metric system of certain machinery and tools. At that time a great number of systems were being used in Canada for the measurement of simple things like nuts and bolts and machine threads. There were right-hand threads, left-hand threads, and some bastardized sizes that did not fit anywhere.

Mr. Foster: It is always members of the NDP who make such statements.

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member is referring to the word I used, there is a type of thread that goes by that name; but a member of parliament from the medical profession would probably not be familiar with that. His relationship with that word would be in another context.

It was obvious at that time that great advantage was to be gained from conversion to the metric system even in such a small area as the manufacture of nuts and bolts, so that a farmer would not have to choose from such a large selection of nuts and bolts for every farm implement. The other advantage would be derived from the fact that since tools for farm machinery come in all sizes, if we could adopt one universal system of measurement many units would become interchangeable and this would prove to be economical.

Whether or not these advantages are sufficiently great to warrant plunging the country into the cost and effort of metric conversion, with all it entails, is not clear. Since that time I have received a letter from the Teachers' Federation which points out that they have reconsidered the problem and are now prepared to act upon it. There again, they are having extreme difficulties because if they are going to act on it they will have to do so in a very heavy-handed way. They are of the opinion that they should go into the metric system fully and be prepared to teach it, not in comparison to the old system but as a new system and teach that and that only.

There are tables and other paraphernalia to allow for conversion factors. It is quite possible that the old system of feet, inches, chains and rods, pounds and all the other things common to the English measuring system should probably be taught in history now, because it is a very interesting subject and it would be interesting for young people to find out how we, in a very archaic way, have developed our systems of measurement.

I agree that if we are going to convert, it has to be done fairly suddenly. I drove down Highway 11 in Ontario a few months ago and saw a sign which read 350 or 370 kilometres to Toronto. I wondered how far it was from North Bay to Toronto. I went down the road about half a mile and saw a sign which said it was 217 miles to Toronto. I do not think the 217 miles should be translated into kilometres. The process of translating brings about many difficulties.

I would have liked the minister to explain a number of difficulties, which he did not mention, in the flow of this conversion to what is called the International System of Units. The International System of Units, as I understand it, is really what we call the metric system. It is a subject that was studied very carefully; this may account for the spending of some of the $7 million that we have heard about. I knew one of the senior officials—I met him socially quite regularly—and he was either going to, or coming from, Europe all the time.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He must have been the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Peters: I did not discuss it at any great length, but I understand they were discussing in a number of countries how they would make this conversion—even in countries which we thought were on the metric system previously, such as France and Italy. These countries are also having a great deal of difficulty in converting.

We would expect, when we listen to the weather announcements, to hear that it is two degrees centigrade or minus two degrees centigrade, but that is not what we hear: it is referred to as two degrees Celsius. I ask, what the hell is Celsius?

Of course, there are a number of temperature systems. There is a system with the absolute—that is a scientific scale—there is the Fahrenheit scale and there is the centigrade scale. There are at least one or two more temperature scales. I assume that instead of using the centigrade scale we would go to one of these outlandish scales which have been developed. I understand that Celsius was a scientist who played around with units of temperature and was responsible for the development of the centigrade scale. We call the other one Fahrenheit: I do not know whether he was the person who developed it.

Instead of going to centigrade, we went to the Celsius scale. I think the minister should have explained how that fits into the SI units of metric conversion, because I think this causes concern to people thinking in terms of centigrade and we find it is not being called that at all. I wonder if the people who announce the weather are having fun. Sometimes they are; they throw the chalk into the air and quite often they miss and put the highs where the lows should be.

Other countries are having difficulty with the SI system as well. The Metric Monitor contains some very good information. It also contains much propaganda. I do not understand what Premier Robert Bourassa's kilometer zero monument was established for, or why it is on the front page, but it does say that Mr. Boire, the executive director of the commission, when travelling around found that in England they are experiencing slow progress and lack of a positive attitude toward the adoption of the SI metric system. The Metric Monitor also says:

> The British Metrication Board feels that the delay in carrying through the program was piling up unnecessary costs in industry due to the continuing requirements for production and inventory maintenance in both systems.

This was pointed out by the previous speaker, and it reflects surveys by independent businessmen in the small business community. They are very concerned at having to carry double inventories in many of their commodities. The Metric Monitor goes on to say:

> The failure to communicate with the consumer and the extension of the changeover period has increased confusion and consumer reaction against the change.
> France: Metric units and SI symbols are generally being properly applied to signs and packages. In industry, there is general reluctance to give up old metric pressure units such as the kilogram per square centimetre and the bar, plus considerable opposition to using the newton rather than the kilogram force. Temperature is generally referred to as degree centigrade rather than degree Celsius. SI is exlcusively taught at all educational levels, but new metric units are generally frowned upon at the industrial operating level.

It goes on to talk about Italy and other countries and what they have done. I think it is to Canada's credit that this has been done. The government cannot take much credit for it, because credit must go to the civil servants who have become very involved with a number of private businessmen who have co-operated with the advisory commission to develop a scheme across the world that will upgrade the metric system in countries which have been on the system for a long time.

When this conversion takes places, it should be truly representative of weights and measures. I do not know how to translate volume and other measurements, but the whole system must progress so that we do not find ourselves using a metric system in this country which is not in use in other countries. If they continue to use centigrade degrees and we use degrees Celsius, and if they use kilograms and we use something else, we will be no better off than we were in the first place. Other countries have spent on metric conversion the sums of money which our commission has spent on it. The idea of converting is to use a standard of measurement which will be universally accepted and adopted.

Some funny things can happen when you convert. Let me tell the House a little story. A man went to a lumber dealer and asked to purchase six feet of two by four pine, dressed four sides. "I'm sorry," said the salesman, "but we no longer sell lumber by the foot-pound system; everything is sold by metric measurement." "Very well", said the customer, "give me two metres of two by four pine, dressed four sides." The salesman said, "I must disappoint you again, sir; our two by four pine is available only in lengths of 1.83 and 2.44 metres." The customer was a bit confused at these odd sizes and asked; "Why do you stock only odd-numbered lengths?" The salesman replied, "It's because it is all rounded off to the nearest foot."

That story shows what could happen and how hard it may be for some people to figure out measurements under the metric system. The mathematical calculations are beyond the ability of many Canadians and, frankly, I do not want to learn how to operate a small computer when doing my conversions. Let me refer hon. members to an article in the Toronto Star, by Ellen Roseman, entitled "Consumers must switch—and maybe fight." It reads:

Metric Conversion

A woman went to her florist recently to buy a dozen roses. The florist charged her for a dozen roses but only gave her ten.

"We're using the metric system now and this is a metric dozen," he explained.

Stories like this make government officials livid with rage. There's no such thing as a metric dozen, they say, but try telling that to an unscrupulous merchant who sees metric conversion as a profit-making bonanza.

As overseer of the switch, the Metric Commission in Ottawa is urging producers not to smuggle in price changes along with metric size changes.

It is also asking producers to make the new metric sizes larger, rather than holding the price steady and shrinking the package.

There are no penalties in law for merchants who make extra profit out of conversion. The Metric Commission is relying on moral suasion to keep them in line. It's using the 110,000 members of the Consumers Asssociation of Canada as watchdogs.

Still, "there are some consumers who feel that merchants are salivating for the time when Canada goes metric and they can gouge away," says George Mailhot, a sector manager with the Metric Commission.

"This hasn't been the experience of Australia and Great Britain when they converted. Sure there were isolated cases, but no excess rip-off."

As I suggested in 1968 converting to the metric system, I am happy to note that the government did not delay too long in following my advice. I must sound a warning which the government would do well to heed. If the conversion is to be successful, the government must introduce a bill which will stipulate standards of measurement. We all know that present measurements of length and volume must meet certain federal standards. Penalties are provided in cases where standards are not met. The government should stipulate standard metric measurements which people in business in this country and in other occupations must meet. As well, the suggested date, 1980, for the implementation of metric measurement is unrealistic. I do not think it can be done much before 1985, and I suspect the minister will be satisfied if the new standards are wholly adopted by the year 2000.

We must guard against abuse and provide penalties for gouging which may result directly from conversion. Without safeguards, Canadians will not know if they are being cheated. I have often seen women in grocery stores trying to figure out whether a can or package labelled in metric units is smaller or larger than an apparently similar sized can or package labelled in today's standard units of measurement. The new units of measurement may puzzle consumers and we must provide safeguards against abuse. The old slogan in the marketplace, "Let the buyer beware," still holds good. We have all heard of the butcher who puts his thumb on the scales to make the package seem heavier. We must make sure that rip-off artists do not keep their thumbs on the scale. To prevent abuse, legislation will be necessary.

Small businesses may need help with conversion, help which could be provided under a bill. If the conversion is to be completed in the stipulated period, help will be necessary. I suggest that the small entrepreneur, the small, independent businessman who can only convert at considerable cost in terms of increased overhead will need help. Assistance will have to be provided. Against that, however, there is considerable advantage which will accrue to the larger companies: they will receive greater benefit from the conversion. It will be an opportunity for them to upgrade their operations. If they are given some assistance, they will be able to upgrade and modernize their facilities. This will obviously result in the production of a larger number of goods. Where we are now limited to countries which have the same measuring system as ours, with the metric system we will be able to compete in world markets.

I would like to know how the minister intends to assist the communities of this nation. Somebody mentioned fire hydrants. How will a small community change over its fire hydrants?

Mr. Gillespie: Why would they?

Mr. Peters: That is a very bright question for the minister to ask. Obviously, the hoses wear out. The replacement couplings will not fit the hydrants. If by law the manufacturing facilities must be converted by 1980, the replacement hoses will not fit the present hydrants.

Mr. Gillespie: They can adapt the couplings.

Mr. Peters: I know something about firefighting equipment, including couplings. Anyone who has served with a volunteer fire department knows something about this. Couplings are a very special commodity. Adjustments will likely have to be made to the hydrants, not to the hoses. However, both the hydrants and the hoses may have to be converted—an expensive proposition. This will also apply to such things as automobile tires. It will be an added cost to municipalities. I agree that you can use adapters, but they are very expensive. An hon. member is smiling. As he comes from the Ottawa region, he should be familiar with the fact that the Ontario government set up a regional government for the Ottawa area. Without knowing the facts, I can safely say—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: —that there is the law of averages and there are about 15 or 18 different sizes. It is quite safe to say that four or five municipalities within greater Ottawa have systems that are not interchangeable. I would be surprised if even their radio equipment were interchangeable, and it is a very small matter when it comes to changing crystals. However, someone has to buy and change them.

Conversion to the metric system will cost money. Changes will have to be made in the whole social field. The minister knows very well the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will gain by this conversion. His department could make the transition a lot easier by providing grants in order to make the conversion. I would like to suggest that his department provide a factory to manufacture some of this equipment, but that might not be acceptable to this government.

Another weakness in the conversion is the lack of response we have had from many of the provincial governments. I have always been interested in the province of Quebec in terms of international measurements, signs, and so on. In Ontario, there are huge, bilingual signs to show there is a bump in the road. Quebec has always followed the international system of just having a picture. In that province it is not a matter of the language you speak; their signs can be understood by all. I am quite sure there will be much greater acceptance of the metric system in the province of Quebec than in many other provinces. Some provinces will have difficulty meeting the responsibility which will fall on their shoulders. If there has been a weakness in the committees established to study metric conversion, it has been the provincial governments. If the minister is at all serious about his deadlines, he will have to get the co-operation of the provinces. This will involve a lot more discussion with the provinces.

I have often said the federal government has a responsibility toward education. I sincerely believe it has a very large responsibility at the junior levels of education with regard to conversational French. If it has that responsibility, it should pay for it. This government has been extremely lax in providing equality of opportunity to learn a second language. If that is true, it is equally true with regard to providing educational facilities for training young people in the metric system. It will be necessary for our educational institutions to have some assistance in replacing their equipment at as early a date as possible if our young people are to learn the metric system. Added to the other expenses the school boards and educational facilities have to meet this year, it will not be possible to meet this commitment without help from this government. The Canadian Teachers' Federation are anxious to meet this commitment.

The minister introduced this motion in a lackadaisical manner. He referred to it as a joint Senate and House of Commons motion to do something that has not been spelled out. He did not even attach to the motion the timetable which he later tabled. If we do not meet some of the problems I have referred to, it will not be possible for Canada to be on the metric system by 1980. In five years we have developed a lot of fancy documents. This booklet is a good example, and it has been duplicated by the dozen. More material is being turned out than one can imagine. On every page there is listed a different date by which the government expects conversion to take place. For example, it states:

> Most provinces in Canada will be teaching metric as of September, 1974. Many provinces have run metric workshops for their teachers.

If they have not done so by now, they are not going to do it. It is now 1975 and we should know whether all schools are now teaching this system. As I stated, on each page of this booklet there is a different date for conversion. Under the heading "Shopping" it is said the conversion with regard to toothpaste would take place in 1973. Each page covers a different item and has a different date. For instance, talking about textiles they say:

● (1630)

> Textiles will be dual-labelled for a time and then labelled in widths measured in centimetres and sold by the metre, probably by March, 1977.

Each page gives a different date by which these things are expected to take effect. Mr. Speaker, we cannot hope for much from a Liberal government. They never move very fast or very firmly. I give them full credit for having got this far. It surprises the hell out of me to find them accepting an idea which I thought was a very progressive one. They accepted it at least in the form of a white paper in less than 2½ years. They have studied the matter, and the study is now complete. I wonder whether it has proved possible to get the other nations of the world to accept the SI units of measurement of which the minister spoke and whether acceptance of this international unit will have the force of a convention binding on all countries.

I do not begrudge the $7 million which has been spent on this concept, because I believe it is a system which should last for a long time. Children will be able to add in tens—about the only accomplishment I was able to master in the course of my own career in mathematics; you can ask my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, and they will tell you my arithmetic is very bad beyond that point. The metric system does permit a degree of exactness which nothing else will allow.

It is important that the public accept the timetable which the minister has put forward. It is also important that use is not made of devices which the public will not accept or which the public will accept only with reluctance. Unless care is taken, a backlash of resentment will develop against the use of the metric system, especially if the two systems are allowed to be used side by side for a lengthy period of time. I hope a bill will be introduced shortly, expressed in firm language and providing penalties for failure to use the official measurements where established, so that these arrangements will be binding on all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to speak about the motion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), which reads as follows:

That the ... House of Commons approve the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion;

And that a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving a program of guideline dates ...

Mr. Speaker, since the tabling in the House of the green paper in 1970, I sincerely believe that this question has progressed very slowly. I still recall the statements of the minister of that time who, when tabling the green paper, stated why the government wanted to introduce the metric system. At that time, he said that it was the British who had maintained for so long the impossible imperial system. They were helped by the United States, a country that used to belong to the British empire and which kept not only the language, but also the archaic measurements of the British government.

Today, Mr. Speaker, more than 110 countries use the system, but I think that the Canadian people might not be ready to accept it. In my opinion, we should urgently prepare Canadians for the introduction of the metric system.

In the United States, the people are doing more or less what we are doing; they are studying and they are wondering how much it will cost. In reading the statements of the minister, I was surprised to learn a few things. He said and I quote:

Let us note that the use of the metric system is legal in Canada since 1873 but that our legislators at that time made the mistake, as their colleagues in the United States ...

... and all governments since ...

... not to declare imperial units illegal. Their lack of foresight is now costing us much hardship and money.

At that time, the Metric Commission was created. When he tabled his green paper, the same minister described as follows the advantages of the metric system:

The basic unit of the metric system is the meter which was created in France in 1793 and based on one ten-millionth part (10^{-7}) of a quarter of the earth meridian.

With as well defined a unit which is divided by tens instead of inches, lines and half-lines I feel the metric system is excellent. I see that in the House 90 per cent of all hon. members recognize today the necessity of the metric system. There will always be a small percentage of them, 10 to 15 per cent, who will not want it. Even last week I heard someone say the metric system was impossible. Many things were said to be impossible 20, 30 or 40 years ago which have become possible today. To my mind, there is nothing impossible about adopting the metric system. When 90 per cent of the world population have adopted it, it is high time for the other 10 per cent to follow suit. The minister also indicated there would be difficulties, that some already existed. And he said:

It is often impossible to express precise measures in British units and that is why we often use ordinary fractions.

In the metric system, the smallest unit visible to the naked eye is the millimeter, while in the British system, it is the inch which is twenty-five times greater than the millimeter. The ounce is twenty-eight times greater that the gram.

Minute dimensions in which modern science now deals are impossible to express in our traditional system, but are rather simple in the metric system.

I shall not repeat all those information. They aimed first of all at reassuring the people that the federal Parliament was not embarking on an adventure, but was fulfilling an obligation. The minister said the process was rational and that the population had to go along with it.

Parliament established a commission for metrication. I feel that commission did not put enough emphasis on education. In my view, the commission stressed one main point, judging from what we received from it. I do not know if other members received other reports. I have in hand one six-page report. Considering it cost us $7 million, I feel this is somewhat expensive per page. We should have obtained more information on that commission's work. We read in the report that the commission's main effort was to contact industries. But at the consumer level, it apparently did not make any real effort. I think the first priority should have been consumer education, especially in the school system.

I wonder now how much the commission invested in our schools to help teach the metric system across the country. I am convinced 75 per cent of older people, and by that I do not mean 90- or 95-year olds, but middle-aged people who were educated in the foot-pound system, will be trained by their children. They will teach them how to think in terms of metres. Those who never heard of it will tend, when they try to understand the system, to make comparisons. It takes time, as every French Canadian trying to learn English did experience; at first, he tries to translate the words before speaking. Pretty soon, we will have to think in terms of something else, this time in terms of metres. That will be difficult for those who were trained otherwise. I believe the commission should have emphasized the work to be done in schools. If children are taught to think metric, it will be much easier for industries and even governments to implement that system someday.

The minister was saying this afternoon that he was organizing three pilot projects. Fine! A pilot project is all fine, but it should not last for two or three years, until 1978. While those pilot projects will be carried out in three areas, all the rest of Canada will be waiting. I think that experiment should be carried out throughout Canada, and to begin with children should be taught that system. They would thus be ready for the metric system, and all the rest would follow naturally. That would mean lesser expenses for the government.

The first three pages of the report deal with an academic course to define the metric system. Page four briefly describes the activities of the commission and deals with the approximate cost—

The cost of that broad and ambitious conversion program cannot be estimated with any degree of precision.

I agree with them, for if their progress is going to be so slow, it's also going to be very expensive.

Relationships with the United States are mentioned at the end of the report, which says that metrication is a must for North America. I think that system will be implemented throughout Canada by 1980, and the United States will have to follow suit. However, we should not force that system upon the United States, since Canada always abides by what the United States decide. I am not saying that we should copy from anyone, to see if they will go metric if we don't. Let us get in step with the world because in a couple of years the metric system will be a worldwide phenomenon. We will then have made the step toward progress.

Earlier I heard a representative of the Progressive Conservative Party say, "We will certainly have suggestions to make, we will be inclined to accept the government proposals." Of course I recognize those fears, and Progressive Conservatives are a bit like us when they ask what has the commission done in the past four years. Its work will have to be examined to see if it is serious, if the money was well managed. In those discussions the commission will certainly have to provide more explanations so we can know where we are going. It is all fine to set up guidelines, but we must know in every detail what they can produce.

So we are waiting for all those details so we can know in the next two years what all that might cost at the federal, provincial, municipal, school, industrial, private, public, and parapublic levels. People must know what metric conversion will cost them.

Pilot projects were mentioned. I was somewhat surprised to learn that the minister did not make any federal proposal. It would have been interesting to know his views, and that would have set an example for provincial governments to follow. Unless a few imaginative projects are initiated with respect to the metric system, industries will be increasingly inclined to drag on, and provincial governments will wonder what Ottawa is doing in all that.

I do not know what the views of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce are, but at least today a step was made. We expected something with a little more detail because a lot was expected from that commission. When that commission was set up I thought every year we would be informed, step by step, about what was being done toward metric conversion.

Mr. Speaker, there will be more discussions in committee or in the House. For our part, we are interested in the matter. I heard a while ago the spokesman for the New Democratic Party say that it will be easy in Quebec where there will be much more progess. I admit that it will be probably so. Quebec will go faster in its conversion to the metric system, because in the first place, I think that it heard about it sooner than other provinces, except perhaps Ontario. It is not surprising. Quebec reacts faster when there is a new development in any field whatever. As for contraception, Quebec has beaten all records. We rank first among provinces for our low birth rate. For high birth rate, we have again beaten the record. We can beat all the records, outmatch all the others and establish the metric system much faster than elsewhere.

I hope that Quebec will show its leadership, since it is now an urgent matter, and establish the metric system to be in harmony with people throughout the world.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this very important subject I cannot help but echo the words of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) and others who have stated we need a proper bill in respect of metric conversion. This is a very important and costly subject in Canada, but to date there has been very little public acceptance. The business community is certainly concerned about metric conversion and to date the glossy brochures full of cartoons are not allaying the fears of businessmen or consumers in this country. It would appear that the $7 million which will be spent by the end of 1975 has not done the selling job for the government and that is why it is important that a proper bill be brought in.

I should like to make some comments in respect of how the metric system is advancing in the United States. They are making some headway, but they are also bringing in some subsidies to help small businesses. I will comment on that in a few minutes. Leading the shift in the United States are large businesses such as General Motors, the nation's largest manufacturer. GM is swinging to a policy of designing all new parts in metrics. This giant firm wants to harmonize production in all GM plants throughout the world. In the U.S. this will affect about 40,000 of GM's suppliers. In addition, Pintos and Mustangs are being equipped with 2.3 litre engines and powered by motors designed entirely in metrics. An estimated 30 per cent to 40 per cent of Ford's production is in foreign markets where metrics are the standard, and a shift in the United States will make parts interchangeable.

In addition, an international panel has agreed on a new standard size for widely used office paper, being 210 by 280 millimetres, which may eventually replace the 8½ by 11 inch paper found in most U.S. offices. Many adults will be in for some trying times in computing the new figures but youngsters in many parts of the country are already getting their first taste of the new standards in school. At least 14 states of the United States are in the early stages of preparing class work in metrics and six have enacted laws calling for the metric system to be taught.

In California all elementary school texts must include metrics by 1976, and Maryland has a six-year program of instruction to shift to the new system. Many federal agencies are getting on the metric bandwagon as well, and the U.S. Patent Office is encouraging inventors to include both types of measurements in their patent applications. It would appear that the United States is doing a better selling job and making better preparations, especially in the educational system, in their country than we are. I will be going into more detail as to the fears in respect of costs of metric conversion on the part of Canadian school boards.

In the United States, however, most experts agree that if the entire nation is to go metric, it must have full federal backing, an idea that has been kicking around since Thomas Jefferson urged the adoption of a decimal system some 150 years ago. I referred to subsidies earlier and I should point out that in the United States they intend to sponsor a bill that would help mechanics pay for the cost of new tools. As an example, an official there argued that a typical machinist who buys his own tools might spend as much as $4,000 for a new set of metric-measured tools. Many small businesses say much the same, that replacing expensive equipment could prove prohibitive. One industrial official in the United States has stated:

> There's bound to be a lot of hauling and tugging over the final version of the bill, but if everybody gives a little I think we can finally get the switch to metrication under way.

Some who are in support of the legislation in the United States estimate that the switch could add from $500 million to $700 million in exports per year, and foreign firms could increase their sales to the extent of $300 million to $500 million in the United States.

There have been many meetings across the country, including full-day seminars, to discuss the metric system. I should like to put some of their comments on the record. Mr. J. Kenneth Clark, assistant vice-president of Simpsons-Sears Limited in Toronto, when speaking to a one-day metric seminar in Toronto sponsored by the Conference Board of Canada stated that no matter to what extent government sponsored commissions, committees and subcommittees indulge in sharing education, in the final analysis it will be the retailer who will bear the burden of educating the reluctant consumer and be the recipient of consumer reaction.

May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—External Affairs—Niger—Allegation people starving in spite of availability of Canadian grain—Measures to control aid program; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Consumer Affairs—Bilingual labelling—Request for consultation with businessmen—Government action.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

WESTERN NEWFOUNDLAND—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY AND PLANNING BOARD TO ENSURE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take immediate steps to consult with the province of Newfoundland with the objective of appointing an advisory and planning board for western Newfoundland; to ensure the steady and orderly progress of existing economic development of that part of Canada and, particularly, to ensure support for infrastructural, economic, industrial and social and environmental needs, and that the Board consist of elements of the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Manpower and Immigration, National Health and Welfare, Transport, Public Works, Environment, Energy, Mines and Resources and the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, although my motion may be considered parochial in nature, I feel its contents, the proposal and its objectives can be relevant on a national basis. It simply asks that the government should appoint, in consultation with the province, a planning and advisory board for western Newfoundland to ensure the steady and orderly progress of the present unprecedented economic development taking place in that part of Canada, and particularly to ensure support for infrastructural, economic, industrial and social and environmental needs, with suggestions for representation on that board.

The west coast of Newfoundland stretches along a coastline of some 500 miles from Port aux Basques in the south to the tip of the northwest coast. I do not intend to trespass on that part of the coast which lies within the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), and for the purposes of my exercise will refer only to that greater part of the coast which lies within my own district. Neither is it my intention to cross over into the district of my other colleague the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), who represents very well the land mass of Labrador almost adjoining; but since there is a very close interrelationship, it is necessary to mention Labrador because the development of the vast energy resources in that part of Canada affects and charges us both with certain responsibilities and emphasizes the need for the special attention and planning which I am requesting through my motion.

In this regard I refer to the provincial government's plans to proceed with the development of the hydro potential of the lower Churchill as follows: the development of the full hydroelectric resources of the Gull Island site, together with a transmission facility for delivery of the power to the island of Newfoundland and an inter-tie with power development on the upper Churchill and the additional island facilities which will be necessary to integrate the existing system. The project, when carried out, will deliver 11 billion kilowatt hours of energy to the island and Labrador, which is equivalent to approximately 18 million barrels of fuel oil annually and would evidently make Newfoundland self-sufficient in her energy needs. Conclusions reached by the consultants indicate that if total financing could be realized of the projected amount of $1.6 billion, then the benefits could be achieved and the output could be absorbed by 1985 to 1988. It is not necessary to point out the importance for Newfoundland, too—because of her isolation—to become self-sufficient in her energy needs. Along with the Come-by-Chance oil refinery and the gas finds off Labrador, this could be realized to ensure not only self-sufficiency but indeed to provide surplus energy to other parts of Canada.

Another important factor in the procurement of energy in our province is to induce mineral exploration and the resulting industrial potential. It is worth while mentioning that I commend the federal government's agreeing to lend the province 50 per cent of the cost of transmission facilities up to $343 million and it now appears that financing will be forthcoming. But coincidental with the resource development is the need to transmit the power to the island via the Strait of Belle Isle in my district at the narrowest point between the two land masses by a cable tunnel 60,000 feet long, 14 feet wide and 17 feet high under the strait to a depth of some 700 feet. As an aside, I am proud to say to the doubters of my private member's bill for the creation of a tunnel to connect the two land masses, which I first introduced in 1968, that the idea was not too far-fetched after all.

I can only hope when the government accepts my motion at the end of this debate that the planning and advisory board which will be created will take as one of its first tasks the ongoing study required to expand the crossing to include the provision of vehicular access, or at least preparation of the design for future additions. But to indicate the magnitude of the project, Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that a labour force of some 600 men would be required in the initial stages, reaching 2,600 men at the peak period.

The figures I mention came out of a study made by consultants which gives in pretty elaborate detail the requirements for the construction of the sophisticated facilities and engineering, but brushes over very lightly the infrastructural support required, such as the need for roads, harbour facilities, third level air service, housing developments, townsites, construction camps and other basic services. This supports my motion in one respect for proper planning to ensure orderly development.

Vast amounts of equipment will have to be transported to the presently isolated location, emphasizing the need for road building, the provision of harbour facilities and the creation of third level airports. It is obvious that there is a need at this very moment to plan that these facilities are provided coincidental with the development of the site. The present road system along the great northern peninsula is entirely inadequate, and while I must give credit again to the minister for his co-operation with the province of Newfoundland in the roads programs which started last year to support the establishment of the zinc mine in central Newfoundland and the Gros Morne national park, much more needs to be done on an emergency basis.

Further, shipments of goods and services will have to be made from the ports of Port aux Basques and Corner Brook. As well, lines of transport communications will be required to support the Labrador linerboard mill in Stephenville for the movement of the raw resources required between Labrador and the island. Again, Mr. Speaker, even with the financial support over the years to these ports by the federal government, they are congested to the point where expansion is vitally necessary.

So does this, then, not indicate the need for a planning group with elements of MOT and Public Works to become involved right now to ensure orderly progress? And if, as is projected, some 2,600 men will be required, does not this point out the need right now for the Department of Manpower and Immigration to become involved to provide training programs for the jobs required; and since, certainly, there will be a need to bring people in with families from other parts of the province and area and, indeed, the technical skills required from other parts of Canada, is not there a need for orderly housing development for the construction of townsites, to provide water and sewer facilities and to help local school boards to project the needs for expansion of educational facilities?

I ask all members who may participate in this debate, are those people with these specialized skills to move to isolated areas without proper telephone service, without adequate television service and without adequate medical services, which are certainly not adequate in northern Newfoundland? Does this, then, not point out the need for involvement of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) with their provincial counterparts to ensure representation and achieving orderly planning?

What about the effects on the environment and on the quality of life of the proud citizens of those isolated areas who have been oriented primarily to the fast depleting fishing industry? Mr. Speaker, does this not point out the need for involvement by the minister of the environment and fisheries (Mrs. Sauvé) with her provincial counterpart? Even in this area of concern I realize that there has just been completed an environmental overview of the lower Churchill power development under the auspices of the provincial government, suggesting measures to minimize principal environmental effects. But these studies tend to get cast aside and it is therefore important that a responsible group be charged with the responsibility to ensure that the recommendations are carried out to the benefit of those Canadians affected.

I might mention, too, the many volumes that make up the trans-Newfoundland corridor transportation study, which does not refer to any inter-tie that is now vitally required in all forms of transportation to the north and again projects the immediate need for further studies to collaborate with the corridor. At this very moment the TransCanada Highway has deteriorated to the point where in order to support this mode of transportation there is the requirement for a strengthening program and expansion of the TransCanada Highway in Newfoundland to bring it up to a reasonable standard. It is my contention that the TransCanada Highway never, ever, met acceptable standards and if one wanted to look at that highway, or that portion which exists in my district, it would be embarrassing.

But even the industrial progress which can accrue as a result of the energy development cannot be taken in isolation, because along with this development in northern Newfoundland there is ongoing industrial expansion southward along the coastline that I mentioned. I refer to two worth-while projects in the central and southern parts of the Great Northern Peninsula, the establishment of a zinc mine in Daniel's Harbour and the ongoing development of the Gros Morne national park. Already the developers are faced with housing problems, the need for expanded harbour facilities, new road extensions, public services and other needs required to support the movement of people from other adjacent areas to take advantage of the employment offered.

Moving southward again, mention should be made of the ongoing development of the 750 square miles of Gros Morne national park. Under the general development agreement, the federal government is providing 90 per cent of some $15 million for development programs, for community infrastructure and for road construction not only for communities within the park but also for those that are in close proximity and which can benefit economically and socially. This is in addition to some $20 million provided in the current estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as well as the many millions of dollars that have already been spent in past years. The total sum amounts to $35 million to $40 million. I mention this to reaffirm the need for ongoing planning and orderly progress which would tie in with the development of the northern part of the province.

I am very excited about the industrial progress that is taking place and will continue to take place in the next few years in the most isolated and remote areas of my province. I am optimistic that not only will the benefits accrue to the citizens in that part of Canada but, more important, it will finally allow Newfoundland to compete with other resource-rich provinces and thus enable us to contribute instead of drawing from the wealth of our nation.

However, the development of this vast area of Canada to which I referred cannot be treated in isolation, without consideration being given to the need to solidify the transport base in the southwestern and southern part of our province. I refer to a rectangle formed by the areas of Port aux Basques, Corner Brook, Stephenville and Deer Lake, the more urban areas in western Newfoundland. These areas must be assisted particularly because of their importance as an entry point and point of dispersal to the northern and central parts of Newfoundland.

I repeat that my friend the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is quite capable of looking after the area he represents in Port aux Basques without my help, but I am sure that he will agree with me that that port plays a vital role in the ongoing development of Newfoundland. My main concern is to remind the government that if we are to get full value for the dollars allocated for this purpose, then the transportation base to which I referred must be supported not only with dollars but with common sense planning to ensure the development and progress of the western part of the province.

Taking into consideration the main port of Corner Brook and the allocation of funds in the estimates amounting to $3.5 million, the representation made by the interested parties from that area to expand the present facilities in that natural port must be treated with the utmost urgency. I was most pleased to hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion say in committee recently that that expansion proposals would be studied by officials in his department in collaboration with officials in the Department of Transport and the provincial and municipal governments involved.

In addition, we must look at the over-all development of the three areas in the rectangular base before considering each corner of the rectangle. I should like to impress upon members of parliament the importance of this urban centre an the activity which is taking place thereby pointing out that at present a $10 million regional college is under construction. It will be an important urban centre which will need infrastructural support because of the fact that some 500 students will converge there as well as 150 teachers. As a result, there will be the need for a housing development in the area as well as other public services. The main requirement is for the development of an extension for what is known as the Corner Brook-Curling waterfront and the development of the vast potential which exists in western Newfoundland.

Before leaving the subject of the port of Corner Brook, let me refer to the economic heart of the region, the main industry of western Newfoundland, namely, the great Bowater pulp and paper mills which, as well as gypsum and cement plants, have been the mainstay of the economy of the western part of our province and the economic support of the forest resource potential in western Newfoundland. This focuses attention on the need to collaborate with the international enterprise in Newfoundland's forestry policy and in transportation.

I should like to move now to another part of the rectangle and mention another urban centre known as Stephenville, an area which became a prominent and important centre of industry in western Newfoundland. I will not take the time of the House to relate the results of the economic development of that area, but let me say only that now it holds a very important place in the future of Newfoundland because a $200 million linerboard mill is located there, a successful industrial complex. It is part of the urban development of western Newfoundland.

To lend importance to its place in the future development of the province, the mill and the industrial park which form the basis of the economy will receive from the province over $24 million to cover general expenses. It will also obtain the benefits of a subsidiary agreement with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion amounting to $20 million over a four-year period to be used for the construction of access roads and to cover the cost of equipment.

The only remaining part of the rectangle is the town of Deer Lake which serves as the jumping-off point to the Great Northern Peninsula which must also be taken into consideration in the over-all planning of western Newfoundland because of its strategic location as the hub of the north. It must be obvious by now that as a result of the over-all development we must co-ordinate planning, which is the basis of my motion.

I should like to comment on one vital point, namely, the importance of our agricultural potential. I hope that the minister will realize that many parts of western Newfoundland can produce in sufficient quantities to satisfy the agricultural requirements of most of the province. Notwithstanding our mixed industrial potential in the province, any planning that takes place must take fisheries into account. I am sure that members from Newfoundland will agree that any industrial development that exists must take into account the protection of our fishing industry, and I am sure that those who will take part in this debate will support this principle.

Finally, I should like to say that my motion is presented not to criticize but to help. I have described a mixture of almost every type of development in one region of Canada. Newfoundland is as yet comparatively pollution-free, and I feel very strongly that if the government wished to create a model for future planning in Canada, then here is an opportunity which they will never have again. It is in this context that I propose the establishment of a planning and advisory board with representation from departments and agencies at both levels of government to plan and advise for the orderly progress in western Newfoundland which could be used as an example in the future development of our nation. I hope that my motion will be accepted.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in the debate on the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). Our areas are contiguous and we have problems in common.

I agree with the essential principle of the motion but I do have some concerns which were reflected in the statement made by the hon. member, and that is that the motion is parochial. That is my only concern and I will comment on it more fully. I have no complaint against the general principle of the motion and I support it. I would not like the motion to be limited to the west coast of the province because that would mean that planning would proceed in that area and might not apply to other parts of the province.

The precedent has been set, I might say, in Goose Bay where the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) over two years ago set up the Goose Bay project group. This project group consists of provincial and federal civil servants, and it was set up to do comprehensive, short-term and long-term planning and implementation of a variety of federal and provincial programs. It is possible that this precedent has been applied elsewhere as well.

It is essential that in the administration of programs in particular areas, people, not only politicians but at the civil service level, get together. As a result of the establishment of the project group, a number of developments are taking place in the Goose Bay area, an area which at present is very vulnerable economically, but I hope solutions can be found to those problems. There has been co-operative planning between the federal and provincial governments in the whole DREE program in the province. So up to this point the principle has been established.

The hon. member referred to the northern peninsula highway. I was glad to see that last year work started from both ends toward the middle of the highway, which has been in terrible condition until now. The highway is vital for the economic development of the north as well as for the development of the quality of life on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland.

Both of our ridings and the whole province will benefit as a result of the forestry agreement which has been signed with the province. As a result of this, access roads and various other facilities for the lumbering industry and the forest industry in general will be built. I would refer also to the great projects in the field of fisheries: for example, the barge on the Labrador coast last year was largely financed out of federal funds. There will be various marine service centres going in this year, not only in my riding but in that of the hon. member, and I am sure he will agree with me when I say that the program of the federal government for small craft harbours has been of great benefit both for my riding and his. We were able to increase the expenditure to something like $30 million last year in small craft harbours and that program has been of great benefit to many small fishing communities in Newfoundland and in all the Atlantic provinces.

The hon. member referred to the Gros Morne national park, and I congratulate him on having in his area one of the beauty spots of the province. I was glad to hear him give due credit to the federal government for its efforts to improve and to beautify that particular area. There is a smaller version in my riding, Lance aux Meadows, where the first Canadians lived in the year 1000—the Viking site in North America. In the next three years we will be spending a total of $9,000,000 on improvement of that national historic park.

If we are to have co-operation, it must be a two-way street: it must not only be federal, but provincial. I have felt—I do not know how the hon. member feels about this—up until now that we might have had a little more emphasis from the provincial government with regard to the development of northern Newfoundland and Labrador. As far as I can see, most of the funds which have been spent on many of these projects and in many of these areas have been federal funds. I hope we will see a firm commitment in the future on the part of the provincial government to the development of that area of the province.

Co-operation is a two-way street, and if there is going to be an advisory board composed of both levels, there must not only be provincial people on the board but it must be the policy of the provincial government to make a contribution to the further development of those areas. I have not been assured to this time that that firm commitment exists. For example, I notice that a great portion of the provincial budget is put aside for roads, and I cannot see any of that money going into the Labrador area. Roads are essentially a provincial responsibility. We have spent federal money on roads, but surely the provincial government also has a responsibility along those lines.

If the province is to have a massive road building program this summer with provincial funds, I think it is about time it started spending some money in those areas where it has been noticeably lacking until now. I do not think we can be accused of being political in the allocation of our resources, and I think the hon. member in his comments has agreed with me that the spending of our money has been to try to develop the whole province and not just those sections we might serve. Much more needs to be done. The building of the road up the northern peninsula would certainly open up the area for tourism and encourage people to visit places like the park at Lance aux Meadows.

More needs to be done with regard to the fishery. Much more needs to be done with regard to the lumbering industry. There is a great future for those resources on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland. In central Newfoundland there is already a great deal of economic expansion simply as a result of the base which was there in the beginning, but a great deal still needs to be done. I am referring to water and sewer systems and more roads.

My colleague referred to developments of oil and gas off the Labrador coast, some of the greatest finds in the world. We do not know specifically what the potential is—at least, not from the companies. We are able to guess at it; we certainly know there is a large potential there. We have to be careful when the oil, the gas and, indeed, the hydro are being developed that we make sure, first, that we preserve the environment to protect our fishermen and, second, that we preserve the social structure of the communities. I was very glad to know that recently a team from the provincial government had travelled along that coast and talked with people in various Labrador communities about the possible social implications of oil and gas discoveries and oil and gas development off that coast. The same is true of hydro. The federal government has now funded the native people of Newfoundland in carrying out a study as to their rights with regard to this development. The government is very concerned that in all of this development they will not be shunted aside or neglected in so far as their rights are concerned, and I think we should pay attention to that aspect before we go ahead with this development.

My colleague mentioned that we offered to the province of Newfoundland a loan of $343 million at low interest rates for the building of the transmission line. I agree that that should go ahead and that it is essential. I agree that proper planning should be carried out, but I want to be sure that if and when that hydro development goes ahead, the power is brought across Labrador and used for the whole province and not just a particular section of it. Until now I have not received that firm commitment. The people of Labrador are very concerned that this power will be once more exported and not necessarily used for their own development. We must have a commitment from the developers of the power. It is essential to the whole province but it must also be developed for the people in the area where the power source is, and we must have that commitment before the development goes ahead.

I agree in principle with this motion. If we are to implement the principle, then let us do it not only for the west coast but also for other areas in the province. Let us have an advisory board not simply for Goose Bay but also for Labrador. Let us have an advisory board for central Newfoundland and southern Newfoundland and other areas. The principle, though, is well taken. In fact, it is essential. In terms of manpower becoming involved, we have already established a precedent with the community employment strategy. A team from Canada Manpower has been working for some months with officials of the department of social services, I believe, of the province of Newfoundland, and possibly other departments, in trying to structure the community employment strategy. Comprehensive, joint planning between federal and provincial civil servants is going on in the province at this point so far as Canada Manpower is concerned.

The principle is a good one. It should be applied to the west coast, certainly. It should be applied to the northern peninsula, to Labrador, throughout the province, and in other provinces as well. I certainly support in principle the feeling which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has expressed, and I wish him well in his commendable and successful efforts in the development of his riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the proposal of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) reminds me, and should remind the House, that he is a Glace Bay boy and a Cape Breton boy and the socialist seems to be coming out in him. He seems to be a socialist in disguise looking for a planning board, so I am happy for him in that regard. I am not sure that the gas finds he and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Rompkey) referred to off Labrador will be as beneficial as he expects for the province, but we can hope, with them, for success in this respect.

I just want to make a few comments about planning, since it is part of the message the hon. member has sought to apply to a particular area of Newfoundland and which his colleague on the other side of the House agreed in principle was needed. When the Atlantic Development Board was set up, it was supposed to come up with a plan for the development of the Atlantic region. This notion seems to have been dropped by the government, for DREE is not really a planning agency, in my opinion, although it should be.

DREE and the Department of Transport are major departments of the federal government which should form the core of a planning board for the Atlantic region. Other federal departments, such as the Department of Public Works and the Department of Fisheries, should attach personnel with at least the status of deputy minister to the proposed planning board. As well, departments of development of all the Atlantic provinces should be included in such a proposed Atlantic regional planning board.

Within this planning framework specialized development boards such as the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which is a specialized socio-economic experiment for a depressed area, could serve in Western Newfoundland to fill the role of the sort of planning board proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

The proposed Atlantic region planning board would make greater sense if the government gave a commitment to more planning at a national level. Recently Henry Ford III issued a strong warning. North America is undergoing a serious recession and Henry Ford III said that no government today can do without some type of planning mechanism. He was repeating what socialists had long said, that private decision making by corporations often leads to the boom and bust psychology of capitalism. especially corporate capitalism. This leads, on the one hand, to human suffering and severe waste of resources, known as unemployment, and on the other hand, to unstable, inflated prices which are no longer controlled to the same extent as in the past by the private market mechanism. Hence we need to plan how to use our monetary, fiscal and exchange policies to stabilize our economy. There must be planning in some meaningful, national sense.

I believe that economic leadership must be exercised in a new way through a national economic planning board of the sort espoused by the Japanese. This board must be in a position to determine our country's economic and social needs now and for many years to come and provide the public with alternative plans of action. These should not only enable us to avert hardship and disaster, but to guide the economy in a direction consistent with our national values and goals.

I suggest that we are not unfamiliar with the idea of planning. Every individual and business plans for the years ahead. The United States space program is a good example of planning in its most sophisticated and successful form, and illustrates the size of effort which must go into national economic planning. The principles, nevertheless, are simple. First, a set of feasible alternatives was studied, then a realizable goal was set. That goal was the building of a space vehicle to carry a man to the moon and bring him back to earth. To fulfil this mission a long-range program was established. All necessary information had to be gathered in a consistent and useful form; then step by step, the program had to be carried out—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Make sure you don't send a man to heaven.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It's all right going to heaven. We don't want him going to the other place.

Mr. Hogan: As it is St. Patrick's Day, hon. members' comments may be apt. Allow me to continue. As I said, the space program had to be carried out in the required sequence, the results had to be monitored, and corrections had to be made whenever necessary.

Just as it would have been impossible for a man to go to the moon and back by accident, so it is impossible for us in Canada to achieve our economic objectives by accident. The most striking fact about the way we organize our economic life is that we leave so much to chance. We give little thought to the direction in which we want to go, and make no consistent effort to balance the needs of different parts of the economy. We do not attempt to ensure that resources are allocated to meet our most urgent national needs. Actually, we know they are not so allocated, as the present state of the economy clearly shows.

We do not try systematically to forecast the needs of the nation in the years ahead. Instead, we use dozens of separate unco-ordinated agencies which make policy in this area and that, without thinking how it all fits together. We have many federal and provincial agencies collecting economic data. In most instances it is insufficiently detailed; frequently, it is obsolete, and often contradictory and incompatible. No single office or agency is responsible for setting appropriate standards and correlating data so that we can pursue coherent national objectives. We make economic policy from quarter to quarter, or year to year, without perspective as to where the economy is going or where we want it to go.

The idea behind planning is simple. On the basis of information, we act. Most of the action in the Canadian economy takes place in the private sector. Democratic planning is not a substitute for a decentralized economy, nor does it replace the millions of private decisions made in the market every day. Instead, democratic planning is needed if we are to reach democratically chosen objectives. It should influence decisions which must be taken in the field of economics. Economic techniques consistent with the attainment of chosen objectives must be used. We already know how these decisions are influenced.

For example, tax incentive or disincentive measures and traditional monetary and fiscal policies directly influence individual actions. Selective credit controls, measures governing basic capital flows, and other measures involving limits to the use of air, water and land, and mandatory resource allocation affect individual actions directly. All such measures have been used at one time or another by the federal government in a haphazard fashion, except in World War II, with no consideration of their over-all effect. The purpose of planning is to take over-all effect into account.

It should be clear that the proposed planning office would not set specific goals for General Motors of Canada, General Electric, or any other individual firm. The office would determine the number of cars, generators, and so on, and the amount of frozen food we might need, say, in five years, and try to induce relevant industries to act accordingly. In such a way the plan would supplement and reinforce the market and have it serve the public interest. This is not happening now.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the hon. member on his motion. The suggestion for appointing an advisory and planning board is, I believe, a constructive one which the government must consider seriously.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Allow the motion to pass, then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member is another socialist.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Other members will want to speak on this motion because the suggestion contained in it could be applied in many other regions of Canada, especially rural areas. Many small towns and villages simply do not have the resources to establish individually the kind of advisory board I think the hon. member has in mind. So there is no doubt in my mind that the two senior levels of government must be prepared to play a greater and more direct role in ensuring good and orderly development of the more depressed regions of Canada.

I know from researching this proposal that western Newfoundland, containing 18 per cent of the population of the province, faces special circumstances. Some sections of the economic base need considerable improvement. The unemployment levels of the area have been higher than those of the province as a whole, and in the manufacturing sector growth has been only marginal.

Successive federal and provincial governments have attempted in various ways to improve this situation, but not until the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established in 1969 did the federal government begin a concerted, fully organized effort to attack regional disparity. Since then there has been a proliferation of joint federal provincial undertakings involving not only DREE but other federal authorities such as Manpower, CMHC and Fisheries.

During this period DREE introduced various programs and signed a number of important agreements which have been of economic benefit to western Newfoundland. For the record, I would like to refer to some of them. Under the special areas agreement, as amended, three regions in western Newfoundland were designated: Corner Brook, Hawkes Bay-Port au Choix and Stephenville. The estimated cost of the agreement was $39.9 million. Of this amount DREE will provide $19 million in contributions and $20.9 million in loan funds. These projects included the construction of schools, highways, water and sewer systems. Another program, the special highways agreement, provided for eight projects in the western region of the province at an estimated cost of $11.6 million. This was funded totally by the federal government.

Under ARDA III, the Port aux Basques industrial water supply program provided for the installation of a water supply system to service fish plants in Port aux Basques. The total estimated cost of this project is $810,000 and the DREE share is $405,000. Under the ARDA III agricultural program there are plans for a western agricultural centre, a western swine breeding station, and a western veterinary clinic and soil and feed testing laboratory with an estimated total cost of more than $515,000.

The department's regional development incentives program has had a measure of success as well. Federal incentives amounting to $3.5 million have been granted to industrial projects in the region.

I believe the hon. member will agree with me that the federal government has been more than fair in allocating funds and resources to western Newfoundland. I am sure he will agree that more is required. I can say that a lot more is contemplated, because over the past 12 months the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) has been visiting all provinces in an effort to ensure the fullest possible use and co-ordination of manpower and resources to fight regional development problems. He has signed general development agreements with all provinces, and Newfoundland is a front-runner in terms of the signing of subsidiary agreements under this important new policy. On this point the hon. member's motion for the production of papers relating to these subsidiary agreements was accepted earlier by the government. I want to let the hon. member know that translation is almost complete and the requested documents will be forwarded shortly to the appropriate officers of the House. In the meantime I can certainly provide copies in English, if that is helpful.

Mr. Marshall: I have them already.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I know you have them, but I want to place it on the record because too often if you do not say it, you get a backlash in two or three weeks time saying we did not offer them and you did not receive them. I am pleased to hear the hon. member say he has them in his hands and is quite happy with them.

The new federal-provincial approach calls for joint co-operation and planning by both senior levels of government. Subdividing each province into economic units with separate planning bodies has not been proposed as an effective means of solving local disparities. Instead the emphasis has been laid on co-operation in seeking to identify development opportunities wherever they may be, and employing all the available resources of both governments to ensure their successful development.

Western Newfoundland has already benefited from this new approach with the signing of five subsidiary agreements. They cover forestry, highways, the Gros Morne Park, fisheries marine service centres and special fish plant water supply systems. Additional subsidiary agreements are being negotiated and will be announced when they are completed.

The subsidiary agreement covering forestry will also benefit western Newfoundland. Over $30 million, 90 per cent of which will be funded by the federal government, will be spent in the province. The agreement covers the construction of access roads, acquisition of forest land, forest improvement and inventory, and research and development of harvesting and utilization techniques.

The highway subsidiary provides for several highway construction and paving projects on the Great Northern Peninsula at an estimated cost of $6.7 million. DREE's share of this cost will be $6 million. The road to Daniel's Harbour will service a new zinc mine expected to come on stream in 1975.

The Gros Morne Park area development subsidiary agreement provides for tourism planning studies, community infrastructure and road construction projects to help the residents of the areas near Gros Morne Park benefit from the development of a major national park by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The total estimated cost of agreement is $15.1 million, and DREE's share is $13.6 million.

The fisheries marine service centre program subsidiary agreement provices for the construction of marine service centres at a total estimated cost of $2.4 million. The DREE share is $2.2 million.

The special fish plant water supply system subsidiary agreement provides for the installation of water supply systems to service fish plants at Port aux Basques and Burnt Islands at a total estimated cost of $1.6 million. The DREE share is $1.4 million.

Many provinces feel the same as the hon. member. However, with the present implementing of decentralization of DREE, the MDM in the area can in fact make decisions. He ought to be given that chance. I think all members will agree this is the best system.

This is one of the first areas in which the federal government has instituted decentralization. It should now be given a chance to see how it works out. I believe the present staff of DREE will work in the manner the hon. member would like to see. I am sure this will be the case.

● (1750)

I have tried to provide the House with as much information as possible on the new efforts by DREE in Newfoundland, and specifically in Western Newfoundland. Similar intensive activity is taking place in other provinces. There are many areas in my own province of Manitoba, for example, which require this kind of assistance and I know a lot of work is being done there by government officials under the general development agreement to ensure that the regions which are hardest pressed get priority attention. Western Newfoundland certainly qualifies for this special attention.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question! Everybody is for it, why not pass it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought for a few moments that you could not see me; it is reassuring to know that my diet is taking effect. I want to assure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) that I really believe in his intentions. I believe he has very good intentions and that he always represents his constituency well. But I disagree completely with his motion. I fail to see the advantage of dividing ourselves along regional lines as he would have us do.

In my opinion it is unwise to get into the habit of naming advisory committees. Hon. members of this House should do a great deal of this work. They should certainly seek advice from committees in their ridings. But advisory committees tend, ultimately, to seek executive roles and faced with this situation we, as members, may be tempted to abdicate authority which is ours.

Then again, where would the process of division end? In Ontario there would probably be a demand for a separate advisory committee to represent the northern part of that province; the process of regional division would begin all over again.

[Translation]

As to "La belle Province", I feel that in the City of Montreal, they would try to set up committees in Verdun, La Salle, NDG and Westmount.

[English]

I grew up in Verdun, Mr. Speaker, and I know that Montreal is really a suburb of Verdun. We did not receive the kind of attention we should have received, and if we had been appointed to an advisory committee we would never have settled for giving advice. It is an easy way out to give a committee an advisory role, deny it an executive role it would like to assert, and then ignore its advice. I should like to see members such as the hon. member and people like myself go back to our areas, form committees to advise us and then assure that this advice reaches the place where authority really rests, and that is the ministers' offices. I agree it is perhaps not possible in this day and age for ministers to look after all the tasks allotted to them in this fashion.

We might consider what is done in other parliaments, realizing that parliamentary secretaries, such as my hon. friend who has just spoken, are quite able, quite distinguished, and have a good deal of ability. Members such as these might be given greater authority in the administration of certain portfolios, taking on a role much like that of an under-minister in the British parliament. It might be a good thing if five or six members, presently parliamentary secretaries, were given authoritative roles to play within their departments. I sometimes feel very disturbed when I am denied assistance from the hon. member for Winnipeg over there because I feel he has so much to contribute. It might be that ministers, instead of forming caucuses only within their own party could bring other members of parliament into active roles together with those parliamentary secretaries, thus constituting a committee along the lines of an advisory committee which was capable of exerting pressure on executive authority.

An hon. Member: You were referring to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. MacFarlane: You wanted me to say that. Actually I always forget which part of Winnipeg the hon. member comes from since we saw Jesus Christ Superstar together, because we were both convinced after we left England that only he and the man in the play could walk on water.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are on the wrong diet.

Mr. MacFarlane: Lest anyone misunderstand that remark I intend not to let anything cross my lips except water until I visit Mr. Speaker's office for Irish coffee.

I am serious, though, when I say that if greater emphasis is to be placed on recognition of regional needs, this task should be performed by members themselves. Those of us on the back benches over here want very much to play a part in it and we invite backbenchers on the other side to join us, realizing that there will be many occasions on which we should stand together in affirming what is good for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I must regretfully advise the House that once again—tough luck!—I was given only a couple of minutes to prepare. I shall probably be accused of wanting to kill the motion introduced by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), a man I hold in high esteem and whose courage I admire. But rising after such eloquent speakers as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and my distinguished colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), there is in fact very little I can add on the subject of this motion, except this: as a number of hon. members in the House, I feel that the mover certainly deserves the praise of his colleagues in the House. What really attracted my attention, however, is the fact that, when a while ago the hon. member who spoke before me and whom I always call the socialist member from ... six o'clock already? I have unfortunately not had the time to prepare myself!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the hour for private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

MOTION TO APPROVE PROGRAM OF GUIDELINE DATES FOR METRIC CONVERSION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie:

That the .... House of Commons approve the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion;

And that a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving a program of guideline dates for metric conversion, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and".

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, to continue my remarks in regard to metric conversion, at five o'clock I was quoting some comments reportedly made by Mr. J. Kenneth Clark, who is the assistant to the vice-president of Simpsons-Sears of Toronto. The article continues:

He noted that the retailing industry is progressively becoming more self-serve, "forcing the customer to become more self-reliant," and thereby reducing the role of the sales person.

The cost of conversion to metric units for pre-packaged, non-food products after August 31, 1975, will be considerable, Mr. Clark said, but the change will probably not register with most consumers.

"If it is noticed at all it will probably be thought of as information placed there for the convenience of new Canadians who have recently come to Canada from Europe."

But when hard conversion (changing containers to even metric sizes) takes place, Mr. Clark speculated that "there may be a boom in the sale of conversion texts, slide rules and rulers."

But for retailers, the problem with hard conversion will be a proliferation of sizes. "I understand that the men's dress shirt industry in the United Kingdom will now grade collar sizes in one centimetre intervals in place of the historical one-half inch.

"This will increase the number of collar sizes offered from eight to 11. This increase may cause little concern to the merchants in Britain because they do not offer a choice of sleeve lengths. If we were to follow suit, our stockkeeping units would increase from 24 to 33 per colour or pattern.

"However, it is possible that by grading in two centimetre intervals from 35 to 45 centimetres we could reduce the number of collar sizes offered from eight to six and our stockkeeping units from 24 to 18 and still provide an acceptable fit for our customers."

One of the more serious problems faced by retailers will be in maintaining inventory of parts manufactured using both metric and avoirdupois units.

"When the appliance industry converts to metric, the retailer or his supplier will have to maintain a long term inventory of parts manufactured to both standards. The same is true of plumbing fixtures and systems".

Those are a few of the comments made by Mr. Clark in regard to the problems facing business in Canada and why it is important that a proper bill be brought in to deal with the metric conversion program.

I should like to refer to some further comments made to the Conference Board in Canada recently. It was claimed that the federal government's information program to educate consumers on the metric system is inadequate. Elizabeth Bond, chairman of a sector committee of the Metric Commission in Canada, told a one-day seminar on the metric system in Toronto that there was little hope for improvement in the near future. She noted that the greatest obstacle to conversion to a metric system lies in the groundless fears of consumers. Her committee has attempted to come to grips with the over-riding need for consumer education by creating a public information subcommittee. However, the committee remains unconvinced that it has had any major impact upon the commission's program or lack thereof. Sadly, this means that much of the information burden must remain with the private sector.

This is why we are questioning this $7 million expenditure. The government seems to have done a very poor selling job; it has not got the message across to the Canadian people or manufacturers.

In addition, fears expressed by small businessmen have been pointed out by Mr. John Bulloch, the federation president for Canada's 650,000 small business proprietors. He claims that these businessmen cannot mind their stores and pay for Canada's conversion to the metric system at the same time, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has so advised Ottawa. Mr. Bulloch, the federation president, has called for financial and technical aid to help small and medium sized business absorb the impact of conversion. As I pointed out earlier today, Mr. Speaker, the United States is bringing in a system of subsidies to help, for example, mechanics, and this is something that will have to be done in Canada.

Metric Conversion

Mr. Bulloch told the Conference Board in Canada that a milligram of prevention is worth a kilogram of cure. He was referring to the federal policy of allowing the costs of conversion to fall where they may. His remarks were made in a speech to the board's Toronto conference on the impact of metric conversion on North America. Mr. Bulloch went on to say:

We recommend a program of grants and low-interest loans to assist in the financing of metric conversion.

Mention was made earlier today that we should have a system of low cost loans, and I hope that the minister will give this serious consideration. Mr. Bulloch continued:

Large companies have technical, financial and managerial resources for planning their own metric changeover and dealing with it over the long haul. Small businesses do not. It is the responsibility of government to ensure that small businessmen, including self-employed craftsmen, are properly informed and their interests adequately understood and represented.

Mr. Bulloch criticized the use of the federal Metric Commission to "implement a program for the entire nation before the policy decisions have been fully approved at the parliamentary level."

Small business is concerned that decisions are being made by administrators before legislators have done their homework.

"The work of the commission should receive parliamentary examination and approval immediately. It is difficult to expect provincial governments and business to be in metric changeover planning so long as there has been no bill or joint resolution before parliament.

● (2010)

Also Mr. Speaker, Mr. J. H. Kluge, President of Ascolectric Ltd. of Brantford told a seminar on the metric conversion program:

Some companies or industries will be hard hit by foreign imports once the Canadian market is open to products now being sold in the metric world, but which could not sell here because our market was too small for them to make special designs in imperial dimensions.

He further stated:

Government and industry will have to co-operate to a degree as never before to avoid a loss of employment in the secondary manufacturing industry.

Mr. Kluge said that timing was critical and:

We must avoid opening the market to foreign imports before the domestic manufacturers are ready to compete on even terms.

Conversely, there are many opportunities that will be presented to Canadian businesses. Mr. Kluge stated:

If a company is not prepared for this change it may become a traumatic and costly experience later on.

The article continues:

He noted that the impact of metric conversion on Canada's foreign trade cannot be generalized. "About $1.5 billion or 8 per cent by value of our 1973 export may be affected sharply. This amount of export must and will increase as new opportunities are realized."

He further stated:

Industrial management has been urged to invite union participation in planning for conversion to the metric system to avoid disputes arising from fear of change.

The article then continues as follows:

A. S. Tirrell, Canadian Labour Congress representative to the Metric Commission, told the Conference Board in Canada that relatively few union members would be directly affected by the conversion at their places of work but "there will be substantial segments of the work force where the effects will be impressive and critical.

"It is within such segments that Canada can ill afford any serious dislocation of the work force, with its resultant unrest and turmoil."

[Mr. McKenzie.]

He said labour considers metric conversion inevitable and desirable but the willingness of workers, through understanding and fair dealing, to accept the conversion is vital.

"All unions will take actions to ensure that their members are not adversely affected, regardless of the degree to which their jobs are measurement sensitive. They will attempt to protect their members against loss of income, employment security, promotional opportunity, job mobility, and against the burden of any costs additional to those which may be already borne by them.

"Managements would be wise to take the unions into their confidence and afford them participation in the planning process."

I have received representations from many businessmen in my riding, and I should just like to read part of the comments of one of them. He said:

We fabricate and supply reinforcing steel for reinforced concrete construction. Our products are used entirely within two prairie provinces and we do not engage in overseas trade. Changing to the metric system will greatly increase our costs due to a complete change of our measuring system. We believe that the change to the metric system will greatly increase costs in Canada and will not accomplish anything except for a few firms engaged in overseas trade. These firms should gear up for the dual system of metric and English standards and bear the cost in order to engage in their particular market.

This gentleman studied the situation and could see no benefits for his particular firm. He suggested that all this was going to do was add to the cost of manufacturing his product, and of course this will be passed on to the consumer, contributing to higher inflation.

Even as late as last week there were comments in the news media in respect of the metric conversion program. I should just like to read a few comments made by Mr. Gerald Hodge, the Director of the School of Urban and Regional Planning at Queen's University. He states:

In the sixties you were given to understand that when you passed 30 you were over the hill. In this metrication decade, the cataclysmic year has reached right down to the pre-adolescents.

One Montreal educator thinks that anyone beyond Grade 5 (10 years old) will never fully adjust to the metric system.

You're probably not much awed by this prospect. This may mean that the Canadian Metric Commission has already got you to think metric. Or it may indicate a certain resignation to the thrust of events; the Metric Commission seems to have convinced a lot of businessmen, newspapers, labour unions, etc., to say "it's inevitable".

Or it could be simple, old apathy and, in that case, maybe there is still some hope that this momentous step won't be taken in such a sheeplike way by Canadians.

Have you ever wondered, as I have, why this country is involved in such a specious exercise? Who benefits from metrication? Who pays? Are the advantages as substantial as the claims for the metric system suggest?

There are three general areas in which we are being led to expect extensive payoffs by converting Canada to the metric system of measurement. These are (1) manufactured goods sold in world export markets, (2) the learning capabilities of people, and (3) simplicity and convenience in packaging, purchasing and quality-control. Let's examine each of these areas and test the validity of the claims.

(1) World export markets will be thrown wide open to our manufacturers if we become a metric country. "It has been estimated," the reports always seem to say, "that Canada loses between $100 million and $200 million in foreign trade a year" because it has not yet converted. The Metric Commission confidently reports that exports should increase up to 10 per cent.

This is mere pie-in-the-sky. Consider two aspects of this matter.

First, world markets are not just sitting there waiting for us to exploit them by making sure our screws fit and our sizes are the same. A lot of pretty efficient firms in other countries know these sources of wealth, too.

Second, world trade is a two-way business. Once the Canadian scene is metricated it will be an easy matter for foreign firms producing for the metric world to expand production and export to us. That old imperial system of feet, inches, gallons and quarts, it seems, acts somewhat as a "tariff barrier" in favour of our firms.

Look around you at all the products made in metricated countries such as Japan, Italy, Sweden and Czechoslovakia. They may be made to metric scale such as your toaster, your Toyota, or your transistor and you never really gave it a thought, or had to. When was the last time you had a problem getting a French bicycle, an Italian auto, or a Japanese hairdryer fixed because it was a metricated unit?

You may have had troubles for lots of other reasons, but not likely for the measurement scale it was designed in. And much the same applies to the Spaniard driving a British car or the Swede using a U.S. computer.

It was mentioned earlier in the debate today that the school boards are concerned about metric conversion. I have some correspondence here from the Manitoba Association of School Trustees. They state in part:

Last spring, MAST took a very quick look at the cost implications of conversion to the metric system. That study indicated that costs of conversion for the academic stream would be about $4 per pupil and about $50 per pupil in the vocational area.

Who is to pay these increased costs? Will they be paid by increases in municipal taxes or will the provinces come up with the money? This is a very costly item and that is why a proper bill should be brought in on metric conversion so it is properly debated in the House and in committee rather than being put through as a resolution. The association went on to say:

Please keep in mind that the above figures were developed from a very superficial and quick study—your cost determinations might be substantially different.

Metric conversion is a federal policy and will be a fact by 1980. Because it is a federal policy our position has been that the implementation of such federal policy should be at the cost of the federal government.

● (2020)

Here is another statement made by Mr. Donald Eyles, President of Metricanada Consultants, a company formed to advise private and government organizations on metric conversion. Mr. Eyles stated:

Metric conversion in Canada is rapidly becoming a mess. Contrary to the unctuous platitudes coming out of Ottawa the Canadian metric conversion program is characterized by political expediency, indecisiveness and, above all, lack of leadership.

Understanding our predicament requires some background information. The basic question—'Why are we going metric anyway?'—has a simple (and perhaps unpalatable) answer:

The critical factor in the matter of North American adoption of metric measurement has been the emergence, since World War II, of the U.S. international corporations that now largely dominate U.S. foreign and domestic policy.

These multinationals have, between them, about 3,000 overseas manufacturing plants with an annual production valued at $225 billion—half the parent companies' total production. These 'global' companies want standardization in their operations, particularly in design, which leads to interchangeability of parts.

The domestic effect on the U.S. of the independent adoption of metrics by the multinationals is already immense. Two years ago a few major companies, including GM, recognizing the increasing impact of their direct suppliers alone (the top few multinationals are believed to have between 200,000 and 250,000 suppliers) required their metric programs to be co-ordinated. They formed the American National Metric Council to provide the necessary co-ordination and in two years the council has attracted well over 1,000 members whose names read like a Who's Who of American industry.

Various U.S. (and Canadian) government agencies are members, as well as a few Canadian private companies (Metricanada included).

A U.S. bill that would have set up a federal co-ordinating body failed to pass last May for procedural reasons. Indications are that a new bill will be presented to the Congress in a short while with good chances of passage.

However, our own federal government considers it politically expedient to await the U.S. legislation so that all blame for what undoubtedly will antagonize a few voters can 'officially' be directed at Washington.

Canada still lacks any private company or industry group, free of U.S. control, that could assume the initiative for metric conversion taken years ago by the U.S. multinationals.

As just one example, take the construction industry, with its many components. There are owners, developers, subcontractors, tradesmen from sheet-metal workers to bricklayers, various professional bodies, component manufacturers and government regulatory bodies.

Some people in construction have been pressing for a deadline in 1977 after which all construction components would be standardized in metric terms: agreed dimensions for bricks, concrete blocks, steel joists, door frames, plywood sheets—and on and on.

The problem is that buildings that'll go up in 1977 are being designed right now. The designers need to know what component sizes to use. The component manufacturers don't want to change their present specifications until they know whether there's a demand for new ones.

The complexity of the industry isn't really the problem; it's the lack of leadership. In this particular industry the federal government could exercise dominant leadership through its Department of Public Works.

When the federal government published a White Paper on Metric Conversion in January, 1970, it obviously did not foresee the political hot potato it would later become. The guidelines for conversion established at that time were essentially that conversion should be voluntary but co-ordinated and that there would be no subsidies for any costs incurred.

So one can see the concern there is in the country. Many businesses will have serious problems in dealing with metric conversion. Mr. Eyles closes by saying:

I do know, from unsolicited testimony, that many people involved with metric conversion committees, some at Metric Commission level, are beginning to feel that their time and expense is wasted. Meaningful decisions are not being made. The Weary Willies and Tired Tims exploit the timidity and indecisiveness fostered by a leadership vacuum—leadership we properly expect from our national government.

I cannot help but emphasize that we need a separate and individual bill rather than this resolution in dealing with metric conversion. This matter is far from being made clear to the public and the business community all over Canada, and should be still further considered by a standing committee.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, a sound and accurate system of measurement has been fundamental for civilization from earliest times. One way this is shown is by the many references in both the Old and New Testaments to weights, measures and balances. The Old Testament in Leviticus commands that "ye shall do not unrighteousness in weight or in measure". The prophet, Micah, complains of "the scant measure that is abominable".

The motion before the House involves a decision that is one of the most significant that members of parliament can be called on to make, although this may not seem to be so at first glance. Our system of weights and measures is not only important to our ability to exchange goods and services within this country and with the world, it is also part of the essential fabric of our daily existence in an organized society.

When it decides on this resolution the House will be taking a formal position for the first time on the idea that this country should change from its traditional inch-pound system of measurement to the metric system. However, the House is being asked by the government to say not simply whether a change to the metric system is desirable in principle, but instead that it approves the government program of guideline dates for metric conversion.

One would have thought therefore that these dates would be spelled out fully in the resolution. Curiously enough, the government has not done this. I wonder how the government can expect the House to make a decision with such far-reaching implications for every Canadian without even putting before it formally the basic information required to give the resolution any meaning.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) may give such information in his speech in support of the resolution, but this is not the same as stating it formally in the resolution itself. The failure to do this gives no opportunity to members of parliament to consider and do research on the suitability of the guideline dates prior to the beginning of the debate on the resolution. It means that this consideration can be given only during the debate itself which, unless it is lengthy or is adjourned, or unless the resolution is referred to a committee, does not provide an adequate opportunity, in my view, to examine basic and fundamental aspects of the matter.

One can also ask why the government is asking the House to deal with this important matter by resolution. A resolution does not have the legal force of an act of parliament. It is not binding on anyone in the sense that not following it would bring any criminal or civil sanction.

Using a resolution in a matter such as this has at least one major flaw from the point of view of parliamentary consideration of the question at issue. The flaw is that when the House considers a resolution, our rules do not provide any automatic provision for committee study of the resolution or its subject matter, as is the case with most bills. This means that we have no opportunity to question the minister or his officials directly and in detail on the practical effect of metric conversion on our daily lives and our commercial activity, both domestic and foreign, nor can we question them on the costs of this conversion and how they will be assumed.

We are unable to hear the views on these matters of witnesses from business, labour and consumer groups, as well as concerned citizens who are not formally members of any of these kinds of organizations. We cannot question the minister, officials, and people outside the government on whether the dates proposed for metric conversion, whatever they may be, are in fact the best for any particular industry sector in the light of the circumstances most relevant to that sector.

As I have said, the resolution does not in fact set out any guideline dates at all. However, a body called the Metric Commission has developed its own ideas as to what they should be. According to a document published by the Metric Commission entitled "Canada Prepares for Metric Conversion":

> In September of 1973 the Canadian Metric Commission outlined a list of target dates for the project. They proposed that the four phases—investigation, planning, scheduling and implementation—be completed by the end of 1980 when the normal day to day transactions in the economy would be entirely in metric units.

The publication goes on to say:

> The investigation phase is now under way and should reach its peak in 1974. The planning and scheduling phases will extend through 1974 and 1975 with a view to being substantially completed in 1976. According to the proposed targets, implementation should start in 1975 and reach its peak in 1977-1978, although some industries would no doubt continue operating with the imperial units for a longer period.

The commission in effect calls for one single implementation date of 1980 for the entire economy, with no indication as to why it considered that date suitable for all sectors in it. The minister in his speech today has endorsed that date and the others developed by the Metric Commission. Even in the absence of an opportunity for committee study of the resolution, I think the House can insist that the government prove its case that the guideline dates that it is proposing are the best ones for the country or, for that matter, any guideline dates are appropriate and needed.

In January of 1970 the government tabled in the House a white paper on metric conversion in Canada. In that white paper the government took the position that:

> The eventual adoption and Canadian usage of a single coherent measurement system based on metric units should be acknowledged as inevitable and in the national interest.

However, I should say that nowhere in the white paper did the government say it would be proposing a system of guideline dates. Instead it pointed out with regard to the implementation of metric conversion "there will be wide variation from sector to sector" and that "wide flexibility in timing would appear to be necessary". In other words, the Metric Commission beginning in 1963 has developed a set of guideline dates, including one for implementation, which would be the same for the entire economy. However, the government's original white paper called for a high degree of flexibility on this with, what I would take to be, dates varying by sector rather than one final date for all sectors, a date now only a few years away.

According to the white paper the government appeared to be taking this position because of the differing circumstances and the resulting cost considerations in many sectors of the Canadian industry. The white paper stressed that this was particularly important because "change would likely be closely related to progress in the United States toward conversion, reflecting the complex interlocking of industrial technology in North America." The white paper went on to say:

> At present, it is the United States market which absorbs a major and increasing share of Canada's exports of manufactured goods. Some major sectors of Canadian industry are closely involved corporately and in respect of technology with the United States. This linking of industry in the two countries extends to markets both in North America and beyond. In these cases, it may prove wise to allow the timing and process of conversion to be closely related to the development of United States practice.

Yet the government has provided little information as to whether the guidelines it is proposing are in fact consistent with the pace of metric conversion in the United States. It is my understanding that, in point of fact, we are ahead of the United States. The United States Congress last year refused to pass a law committing that country to metric conversion by certain specific and fairly early dates.

While we are concerned about the degree to which our best customer continues to be the United States, this is one of the facts of our current existence. Any effort to build up a new trading link with Europe and other parts of the world to lessen our dependence on the United States market, although welcome, will take some time to develop. One can also wonder to what extent this option will be able to replace in fact our links with the United States market which is still the largest and most wealthy one in the world today.

One can also question the appropriateness of a government body, the Metric Commission, developing as early as in 1963 a set of target dates to implement metric conversion, and going on to work with business and industry to reach these goals without any parliamentary approval. One can question the appropriateness of the government coming along to ask for such approval only when the commission itself is well along in the final implementation phase.

In fact the commission appears to have been given by the government a role far beyond what the government said in its policy white paper the commission would have. This document said only that there would be "a full-time preparatory commission . . . appointed to advise upon and co-ordinate overall planning of the conversion process".

One can ask how the commission came to have the task of actually overseeing the implementation of the conversion process, rather than being limited to co-ordinating its planning.

I have asked whether a resolution is the best parliamentary means to examine adequately the suitability of the government's program of guideline dates. We are dealing with a very serious issue. The suitability of these dates has a lot to do with the ability of our economy effectively to carry on both domestic and foreign business, its ability to meet import competition and, above all, it has a lot to do with what the actual costs may be for business and industry, and therefore ultimately for the public, of converting to the metric system.

If this is a matter of serious concern for any sector of Canadian industry, in my view it is crucial for a sector such as the auto industry which is highly integrated with its counterpart in the United States. The Canadian auto industry does not simply export much of its final production to the United States. Canadian manufactured parts are exported to the United States to be incorporated, along with American manufactured parts, in cars assembled in that country. These cars are then sold in both Canada and the United States. American manufactured parts are imported into Canada to be incorporated, along with Canadian manufactured parts, in cars assembled here which are sold in both the United States and Canada.

How can an implementation date of 1980 be practical for the Canadian auto industry unless this is the firm date for the American auto industry as well? What assurance can the minister and the government give us that there will be identical and parallel guideline dates for both of these industries?

There is at present concern about the future of the Canadian auto industry and employment in it because of the decline of the American economy. We have to be certain, therefore, that the government's pace of moving to the metric system in Canada will not be such as to give the American parent companies an excuse not to carry out further investment in new plants and equipment in Canada, or to transfer production to the United States to serve the needs of that market.

I have made reference to the cost of metric conversion. The white paper and the Metric Commission's own publications keep saying that benefits will outweigh costs, although they never give us any detailed cost benefit analysis to back this up, Mr. Speaker. I am, however, inclined to think that over a period of time the benefits of metric conversion, properly handled, will in fact outweigh the costs, but this will not necessarily be the case in the short or medium term for every industry or every Canadian. Until today the government has not shown any interest in special programs to help those Canadian businesses which will be forced to bear a greater share of the burden of moving to metric conversion than others in the economy. The program announced today does nothing about dealing with the additional cost to workers who have to buy their own tools.

The government has until today always taken the position that since all Canadians will ultimately benefit, the costs should lie where they fall. However, this overlooks the fact, as I have said, that metric conversion will likely carry a greater burden for some Canadians than for others, and some are better able to deal with these cost burdens than others.

It is likely that large businesses with a high degree of economic power will be better able to absorb the costs, or what is more likely, to pass them on to the public in the form of higher prices. This is something which cannot be done by the small businessman or the independent skilled tradesmen or the worker. It will be harder for many small businesses than for larger ones to absorb additional costs of metric conversion arising out of maintaining dual inventories of goods or replacement parts, as well as the cost of converting or replacing machinery and weighing devices. Again, as I have said, the government's program announced today, while helpful, contains a serious omission. It will not be available to help workers.

Many workers who are not self employed have to provide their own tools. For example, it can cost an auto mechanic up to $2,000 for a full set of mechanic's tools. The $150 income tax deduction for employment expenses is obviously no help to a worker in dealing with these kinds of unusual costs.

There is already a precedent for the government taking special measures in the interests of an entire economy when it causes the restructuring of an industry. These special measures are used to help those businesses and workers on whom it is found the burden of the cost of this restructuring falls in greater measure than on the rest of the population. One example of this is what the government did to create special programs to help both firms and workers in the auto industry to adjust to the extra cost and dislocation caused by the change in that industry created by the auto pact.

I believe that in the course of this debate the government should give a commitment that it will help not only Canadian small businessmen but also Canadian workers to bear any additional special burden caused by conversion to the metric system. Carrying out this commitment could require programs of special grants, or low interest loans, or special tax exemptions not only for business and also for workers who have high one-time costs for replacing tools and equipment which they must supply out of their own pockets.

It has not been proven that metric conversion will benefit all Canadians equally, certainly not in the short and medium term. This is unlikely to be the case for a host of small businesses serving the domestic market, especially in the retail and service field. This is not so for the skilled tradesmen and repairmen who also serve the local market. Therefore the government must make the kind of commitment to which I have referred for additional measures of assistance in these kinds of cases, not only for business but also for workers.

There is another area of concern which the government appears to have overlooked. I refer to the possibility that some unscrupulous elements in the business world will use the changeover to the metric system to increase profits unjustly at the expense of consumers. They would in effect use the opportunity to increase their profit margins by maintaining the same price even when they shift to supplying their product in a metric size, which in fact is somewhat smaller than the size previously used. For example, the consumer might have the general idea that the metric measure for volume closest to the quart is the litre, and that the metric measure closest to a three pound package in weight is the kilogram. However, the litre is equal to only some 88 per cent of the volume of a quart. A kilogram is equal to only 2.205 pounds. Obviously if an unscrupulous businessman charges the same for a litre of his product as he does for a quart, this will mean a substantial price increase for the consumer and a substantial increase in profits for the businessman.

The government has not said that it will have any special program to prevent the consumer from being ripped off in the way I have outlined. It has said nothing about creating any mechanism to prevent this rip off from occurring, to impose sanctions on anyone attempting to take advantage of the consumer in this way, and to get redress for the consumer where, in spite of the sanctions, this is found to have occurred.

A businessman might say that metric conversion means added costs which he had to recover through increased prices, but these increased costs would not go on forever. They would be recovered over a certain limited number of sales in the future. The government has proposed no mechanism, as I have said, whereby these claims could be checked out and the businessman subjected to appropriate sanctions unless he was found to have passed on only the actual true additional cost of conversion.

Our laws on misleading advertising, and packaging and labelling have not been set up to deal with the precise kind of situation I have outlined today. The unscrupulous businessman, would probably not actually be advertising that he is providing the same quantity for the same price as before metric conversion. He will be improving his profit margins by taking advantage of the unfamiliarity of the consumer with the new system in comparison with the existing inch-pound system, as well as of the difficulty the average consumer would have in making the calculations necessary to find out the facts.

The government's request that the House approve guidelines for metric conversion is another argument for the speedy presentation by the government and the implementation of the anti profiteering bill. However, such a bill, whether it is called "anti profiteering" or "price justification", would be only a partial answer to the problem. It would likely be designed to apply primarily to broad categories of goods and services rather than to a large number of individual transactions in many areas of the economy.

The present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) told both the Financial Post and the Financial Times last fall that he considers such a bill to be "window dressing" and that he hopes he will never have to use it. In addition, the effect of such a bill in preventing the consumer from being taken advantage of by unscrupulous businessmen during metric conversion is hypothetical since such a bill has not yet been presented to the House by the government, and there is no firm indication when it will do so. In any event, I think there is need for a special government measure in addition to an anti profiteering bill to deal with the special problem metric conversion can cause to consumers.

There is also a great need for a better information program to educate consumers about the metric system and metric conversion. According to the Globe and Mail on Wednesday, December 18, Elizabeth Bond, who, I think, is a consumer representative and chair person of a Metric Commission sector committee on consumer aspects of conversion, told a conference board seminar that the federal government's information program to educate consumers in the metric system was inadequate. The article said that her committee has attempted to come to grips with the overriding need for consumer education by creating a public information subcommittee. However, the committee, according to the article, remains unconvinced, and I quote:

> . . . that we have had any major impact on the commission's program or lack thereof.

● (2050)

I think the points I have outlined demonstrate why more than what may turn out to be a relatively brief general debate in this House is required in order for members of parliament to make a wise decision as to whether they approve the government's program for metric conversion. Detailed answers to the kinds of questions I have raised today in a positive and constructive sense are required. But these can come only from the kind of study of the resolution that can best be provided by a parliamentary committee. I hope it will be possible to refer the resolution to a committee for this purpose.

The government, before a final decision is taken on this resolution, should also give commitments that it will provide help for both small businessmen and workers on whom the cost burden of conversion will fall more heavily than on others in the economy. It must also give consumers a commitment that it will firmly and actively protect them against the kind of rip-off I have described that is possible during the course of metric conversion.

I want to recognize the useful work of the Metric Commission and, in particular, the work of the volunteer members from many industry and community groups on its sector committees. But many small businessmen and workers, as well as many individual Canadians, do not belong to any of the organizations represented on the sector committees. It is not the Metric Commission and those committees which will be held accountable by the Canadian public for the effects and costs on them of metric conversion. Instead, the public will look to its elected members of parliament.

Therefore the ultimate responsibility to the people of Canada as a whole for this kind of decision is that of the members of parliament. Therefore members have a responsibility to have the government carry out metric conversion in ways that effectively deal with the problems I have outlined. In doing so the government will be carrying out the general commitment expected of it on this by Canadians, a commitment which, if I may conclude as I began, can be expressed in the words of the Old Testament, in Deuteronomy, as that of providing "a perfect and just weight—a perfect and just measure" or, in the words of the New Testament, in Luke, as "good measure pressed down and running over."

Ensuring that the government carries out this commitment should be the objective of all in this House as they consider and decide on this important resolution on metric conversion.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak after the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Let me say amen to many of the things he said. I listened with interest to what many participating in this debate said, and will not repeat their ideas. Let me make this point, however. I am not alone in being concerned about metric conversion. Many of our people are worried by it. Many senior citizens worry about metric conversion. A lady who came to my office this past week end wanted to know about metric conversion, and wanted to submit a petition to the minister which would express the concern of the group she represents. I told her that unless the petition was presented by Sunday it would be too late, as this measure would be before the House early this week. Metric conversion in Canada would be as certain as death and taxes. I think we know how certain death and taxes are.

After a certain date, temperatures will be announced on the radio and television in degrees celsius. Many people will not know how to convert degrees celsius into degrees Fahrenheit, at least not for a while. Therefore I think that the temperature should be announced in degrees celsius and Fahrenheit until people get used to the metric scale. I talked with my honoured and knowledgeable colleague in the medical profession and said, "I know my normal temperature in degrees Fahrenheit is 98.3; what is it in degrees celsius?" He stopped to think, then said he thought it was 38.3. I ask my colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), am I right?

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member is pretty close.

Mr. Darling: When I was a student many years ago arithmetic was probably my worst subject. I see my leader smiling at me. Perhaps he thinks I was bad in many more subjects. Be that as it may, I am told that sums in the metric system will be much easier to do, so there is some consolation for those who are poor at arithmetic. I am told that anybody under the age of ten will not have trouble with the metric system. My six-year-old grandson is already learning in the metric system and having more fun than I ever had.

Small businessmen in Canada worry about how much conversion will cost in dollars and cents. The whole question boils down to this: are they to make a little money from their operation, or are they to pour money into a conversion process which they may not be able to recoup? The previous speaker and others mentioned mechanics tools. Mechanics will be allowed up to $150 for conversion. That is not enough. I hope the minister will consider introducing a training program and pay mechanics for time they must take off work in order to learn the new system.

As other speakers have mentioned, it will cost merchants a great deal to convert scales to metric measurement. Recently I had lunch with a man who owns a fair-sized I.G.A. store in Ottawa. He said he had bought a pair of scales for $9,000. He said that it would cost at least $4,000 to convert them. I thought he would still be ahead by $5,000, but he said no, he would have to scrap those scales and buy a new set. I am told that it will cost 28,000 odd retailers around $50 million to convert, and that is a conservative estimate. We know that much of the conversion cost will be tax deductible. Nevertheless, many small corner store businessmen are not making enough to pay taxes, let alone enough to pay for conversion. Perhaps the minister would consider giving such people a grant, to enable them to convert when the time comes.

We are told that the United States is embarked on a conversion program but that it is proceeding more slowly than we are. In my view both countries should convert at the same pace. It is well known that over 69 per cent of our trade is with the United States. Therefore we should not move more quickly than that country in converting to the metric system, or we may be the losers. An hon. member mentioned that conversion bills have come before Congress for the past three years, but none has passed so far. Certainly conversion has been discussed in that country, and they know it is coming.

I am a real estate broker and metric conversion will open a can of worms for my profession. It will be extremely difficult to convert measurements on present land deeds to the metric system. I admit that the idea of inches, feet, chains and rods may be complicated. However, if we start now to convert all the deeds in Canada which are on the old basis, they probably will not all be converted for 500 years. Not too many of us will be around then. However, this is something which must be seriously considered.

I believe that 94 per cent of the population has now converted to the metric system. That figure was staggering to me. As I understand it, one half of the world trade in dollars is still on the English unit system. Granted, a tremendous amount of that trade is with the United States.

This brings me to another point. Previous speakers have mentioned the cost of conversion and the fact that a cost benefit for Canada has not been done. We do know that this will cost the Canadian taxpayer a great sum.

I understand the United States National Bureau of Standards did a cost benefit analysis. The net cost will be $45 million. That is a lot of money. There has been criticism of that figure. Even if they cut $10 million off the figure, it would still be a lot of money.

The case has not been proved in Canada as to the exact dollar benefits we will get. It has been pointed out that Canadian manufacturing firms which are now on the English unit have an advantage over our competitors in those countries on the metric system. When we eventually convert to the metric system Canadian manufacturers will lose that advantage. That is another point we must consider.

Metric conversion is not a substitute for Canadian ownership which is necessary to export our manufactured goods. I know there is a lot to be said for an against conversion to the metric system, and I know we have to face up to this.

I understand the American Metric Association will be meeting at nine o'clock tomorrow in Washington to try to come to grips with this. The consumer goods industries in the United States will not move until there is legislation. We should be looking to the United States to see what legislation is put forward. There must be a benefit to the Canadian consumer, and this must be demonstrated in dollar terms.

I hope, as previous speakers have suggested, that the government will give consideration to introducing more than just a resolution. As was mentioned earlier, a bill on the metric system should be introduced so that this whole matter can be discussed both in committee and in the House. When this is done we can then move forward.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to criticize the government for proceeding on this matter by way of resolution. This has been done by at least the two previous speakers, including a former cabinet minister, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). It seems that whenever the government gets into a potentially difficult political situation, it tends to proceed by way of resolution to get out of its political problems.

We are supposed to be approving the activities of the Metric Commission which was approved by order-in-council. Except for some remarks that were made in 1970 when a white paper proposing something along this line was tabled, this House of Commons has not had anything to say about the establishment of that commission. I suggest that what has grown out of that bears no resemblance to what one could reasonably have expected to be the policy of the government at that time. The order-in-council set up the Metric Commission to advise the government on how to proceed with the metrication of weights and measures in this country. I do not think that order-in-council would necessarily have led anyone to believe that legislation to protect the people of this country in the process of establishing metrication would never be produced.

We have before us a very brief resolution. It is to the effect that we approve the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion. If this resolution is approved, and if the other place goes along with it, I can well imagine this government saying that this parliament generally approves of everything it has done and will do over the next four, five or six years in the implementation of metrication in this country, without any further reference to this House or the other place.

It seems this government is acting as the lackey of multinational corporations. I am surprised my friends to the left did not notice that fact because they generally go after the government whenever it does anything that might be favourable to the multinational corporations. We seem to be proceeding under assumption that what is good for General Motors is good for Canada. Those pushing hardest for this program are the members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, which is bankrolled largely by General Motors and other manufacturing companies. I do not necessarily follow that philosophy. I generally agree with the policy of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, but not with regard to what they are proposing in the field of metrication.

We must remember that we are a part of a very large market, the North America continent. I believe it is of utmost importance to note what is happening in the United States. Attempts have been made in that country to pass legislation which would protect various elements of its economy. For one reason or another, they have not met with success. However, they are at least attempting to have legislation. Last year a bill which would have brought the process along faster was defeated in congress.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Gossage, the chairman of the Metric Commission, is not here today. It may be of interest to know where he is. I believe he is in Washington. I do not know whether he is getting orders or giving them. It appears that this government's action and proposals will be used as a lever to advance metrication in the United States because of our close ties, particularly in the automobile manufacturing industry.

I really do not feel amenable to being used as a tool to assist a process which is happening in the United States. In any event, even though that bill was defeated in the U.S. Congress, another effort is presently being made under the auspices of Senator Pell of Rhode Island. It does not seem to be making fast headway, but at least this legislation provides for reports to be made on the general progress which is going on in the area of conversion.

My hon. friend from Halton-Wentworth said the Commission has spent some $7 million. To be fair, I suppose it has not spent all that money yet, but it has probably spent in excess of $4 million. I should like to see some accounting of the manner in which these funds have been spent.

So far what we have seen looks like an ineffective promotion campaign. Canadians have certainly not been told what the effect of the program is going to be. The government is remiss in failing to ensure that the Commission should report to the House of Commons on its activities. It seems inconceivable that so large a sum could be spent when the only public result is the announcement that temperatures will be given in celsius instead of fahrenheit in two weeks time. I have certainly heard no explanation as to the way in which the money has been spent.

Another feature of Senator Pell's bill is that provision is made for a regular report on the results and benefits of metrication. The government has left a gaping hole in this area. We have been given no estimate of what the cost of metrication will be to the country. Here we are, in a period of double digit inflation, and nobody appears to give a damn about what the cost will be. I would say this applies to practically everybody in the House of Commons because there seems to be no dedicated will to prevent the government from proceeding in this way. I hope there will be some opposition from this side.

The minister says he will be giving assistance to small businessmen who need it, though he did not spell out the details. I am sure that had we gone ahead with the government's original proposal no such consideration would have been shown. I should like to see more active opposition to this system of government by regulation. I think the opposition has been remiss in this respect. I hope it will change its view and seek to convince the government of the wisdom of trying to govern the country by means of laws, not regulations. It is true the minister has given us certain assurances, but his words are not worth a tinker's damn when it comes to protecting the people when the account is finally presented in respect to this process.

The United States bill also proposes that the commission envisaged in that country should have power to recommend additional legislation which may be required from time to time to solve the problems arising over the imposition of metrication. This is not a simple procedure, Madam Speaker. After all this deals with concepts. We all know that in a country such as ours, where there are two official languages, many difficulties arise because words which express a certain notion in one language do not, on translation, express the same notion in the other. When one is dealing in concepts it takes a special understanding if one is to get the idea across. When one is dealing in weights and measures, one is dealing in concepts. I have been listening to these celsius temperatures on the radio for some months now—maybe I am a slow learner—I am learning French and possibly I am slow at that—but I am having the same difficulty in getting a true idea of what celsius figures really mean.

Yesterday morning I looked at the temperature on the cablevision station to find out how cold it was. I saw the figures O1 but I did not notice the "c" for celsius. I concluded it was going to be cool outside so I did not bother to put on my rubbers. On my way to church I met with a bunch of slush because it was above freezing point. This is the sort of thing that can happen.

In any event, there ought to have been an analysis of the economic impact of this proposal upon the country. Why give a blank cheque to the type of government we have over there? We do not know what the cost will be. It has been estimated that the cost to the United States will be between $40 and $45 billion before the process is completed there. If the normal relationship applies, and our costs are 10 per cent of theirs, Canada will be faced with a bill of between $4 billion and $4.5 billion.

We heard a lot of talk about an Arctic pipeline to bring gas from the north. This is regarded as a tremendous undertaking. The Berger Commission will be sitting in Yellowknife for God knows how long, hearing representations of one kind or another. The National Energy Board or it agents, or those interested in the undertaking will spend millions of dollars before a decision is made about what will happen up there. That pipeline, I remind hon. members, is estimated to cost around $5 billion if the Maple Leaf route is followed. But a decision to proceed is subject to all sorts of complex procedures.

Here we are dealing with a proposal which could exert an untold economic impact on the country, and the minister comes along asking parliament in effect to give him a blank cheque. "Just approve what we are doing," he says. I cannot understand a government wishing to proceed in this way, and I cannot understand an opposition allowing a government to get off so easily.

As I said, there is a bill being presented in the U.S. Congress having to do with this subject. There is also supposed to be an administration bill presented by the government of the United States. So evidently the U.S. government feels it should proceed by way of legislation. Yet no such bill has been introduced in Canada. Why are we in such a rush to get ahead of the Americans in this regard if we are not acting as a tool for someone else to push the Americans along? Again, I would ask, what is Mr. Gossage doing in Washington tonight and tomorrow? I would also question what is being done with all the money that this commission has spent and is proposing to spend during the next year, totalling some $7 million, other than promoting the interests of large, multinational, manufacturing corporations.

The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) said that no minister of the Crown had said anything about this matter, but again I would have to correct him to some extent. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who was here earlier this afternoon when the hon. member said that, did make a statement about metrication, and he said it was going to cost agriculture a lot of money. So there is evidence from that side. I wish the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) would pay a little more attention to the Minister of Agriculture when he makes representations about this matter, but apparently the Minister of Agriculture is being ignored by the rest of the cabinet.

The former minister, the hon. member for Windsor West, made reference to rip-offs and the fact that it would be easy for unscrupulous merchants to profiteer from metrication at the expense of the uninformed when the guidelines become effective. I think we must look at the experience of the United Kingdom in this regard, because in fact that is what happened there. Why is the government sponsoring a program that can make this possible, and why has it made no effort at all to examine the experience of other countries and find out what happened there? We need some protection in this country against unscrupulous people who have shown the capacity to use metrication to bilk the public.

The government should bring in a bill, which would then make the subject of metrication a wide open debate in parliament. It would attract publicity and would focus the attention of the public on the issue. I admit that metrication has got to come; we cannot just remain an island by ourselves. I think it is a good thing, and all educators agree that it will be easier to learn mathematics and the sciences through the use of the decimal system. I am an exponent of the adoption of this system, but I am certainly not an exponent of having it adopted at any price; as I say, the people of this country deserve some protection in this regard.

What is required is proper debate of the question. I suppose the minister is surprised that we are still talking about this subject, that we have spent one whole day discussing a program that could cost $4.5 billion before it is completed. This seems to me to be a funny attitude to take. Even though the minister might feel that we are wasting time, I think he should take a proper approach and welcome a full debate of the issue in the House of Commons. This would serve as an educational tool, because there is going to be a great deal of resistance to metrication by people across the country.

I suppose I should not be advising the minister on how to look at this politically, but I can see not too far down the road another election in about 1978, which will be the crunch year for implementing the guidelines on metrication. It is then that people will observe that something is happening, and they are not going to like it. Naturally, no one likes change, that is human nature, so some time should be spent on education. This is one of my criticisms of this ineffective commission that was appointed two or three years ago—it has not done any sort of job of educating. It has conducted a glossy type of promotional campaign but very little real education has been involved. This is why I should have thought that the minister would welcome the opportunity for a wide ranging debate to educate the people of this country.

This brings to my mind another factor that is generally overlooked by the members sitting opposite. They seem to think that this country revolves absolutely around the cities of Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, that there is nothing further east or further west of the golden triangle. To them, one day's debate in the House of Commons is a pretty big thing, and they have no conception of the fact that it takes time to get a message across to the people of Canada. I am just amazed that they adopt this attitude in regard to what essentially is a very fundamental and important matter to the economy of this country.

Secondly, a bill would provide the opportunity to examine the process of metric conversion in the House, and also perhaps in a committee of the other place. This would mean that witnesses could be questioned and might be able to offer something constructive to the process. Instead, we have appointed this very small commission which I guess has had a lot of volunteer help in its sector committees. Generally speaking it has not taken the public into its confidence at all, but has just concentrated upon interested people in various trades and fields of manufacturing endeavour.

Thirdly, if instead of proceeding by resolution we took the legislative route to which we are accustomed here, it would provide a forum for interested parties with legitimate complaints, parties that I feel under our system should be given the opportunity to be heard.

Fourthly, as I have already said, this resolution does not bind the government in any way, shape or form. The minuscule assurances that the minister offered in his remarks this afternoon bind no one in the future. In addition, there is no way in which this resolution can be amended in any meaningful form. We are presented with a resolution which we can either vote for or vote against. I spent some time this afternoon discussing with others the possibility of framing an amendment that would attempt to focus on the need for legislation, but I found that there is practically no amendment that is in order that could be proposed. In other words, we are stuck with a proposal of the government, and with no room for amendment.

If the government had put a bill before the House there would be all sorts of opportunities to change and improve it. I have heard it said by many Liberals that this is one of the reasons why they are over there and we are where we are. They say we always take so much time examining the shortcomings of government legislation and proposing very constructive amendments to it that, by the time the legislation gets through, it is in such good shape that the Liberals get the credit for it, and so they stay where they are. They think we would be much better off if we did not criticize so much but took the legislation as initially offered. The fact is that for the proper orderliness of the House, and to get the best out of the House of Commons, proposals should be put before us which can be improved, and improvements can only be made by amendment. The silly resolution before us is just a blank cheque that is not subject to amendment.

As I said earlier, Madam Speaker, it is very important that we stay reasonably close to what is happening in the United States in regard to metrication. After all, almost 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States which, at least at the official level, is lagging behind this country in the introduction of metrication.

● (2130)

As far as the other 30 per cent of our exports are concerned, as said earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), only 8 per cent are subject to this business of metrication. So instead of making it easier for a large portion of our exports to enter into foreign markets what is going to happen is that we will wipe out this non-tariff barrier we now enjoy, and make it much easier for foreign countries which have had metrication for a long time and are advanced in that area to compete with our own industries.

This is why I believe General Motors and the large multi-national manufacturing companies want metrication imposed here as soon as possible, so they can then go abroad and obtain their components at much more competitive prices than they can here in Canada. All we would be doing by metrication without proper ground rules would be subjecting our small manufacturers to much tougher competition from abroad. There should be legislation to protect our small business firms.

Foreign owned companies can increase their markets at the expense of Canadian owned small businesses through the metrication process. For example, Canada already imports more than half its machinery and equipment. We do not want metrication just to create a larger market for machinery imports from other parts of the world such as Sweden and the European Common Market. Conversion could increase the cost of production and supply in Canada, placing Canadian produced products at an even greater disadvantage on the Canadian market.

One objective of legislation would be to get Canadian owned small businesses through the metric process without financial hardship, so that Canadians will not only import less machinery and products but in fact will be increasingly world competitive and export oriented.

During the process of metrication there will be a period of overlap during which small manufacturing businesses will have to stock two inventories, one in metric measurement and one in the present measurement. That additional inventory will not be bringing in additional business. This will involve a non-productive expense, and bankers are not generally agreeable to lending money on things that are not turned over quickly. Whatever money is loaned will carry an interest rate that can only increase the cost of doing business.

It should be set out clearly what responsibility the government is willing to accept. The minister suggested that the Industrial Development Bank would help people get over this process. This again involves loans, and someone will have to bear the expense involved. There should be a system of grants to assist businesses in this conversion process.

There are innumerable other small headaches that will occur as a result of conversion. What will happen to existing equipment? How long are inventories for repairs going to be maintained, and who is going to pay the cost? Who is to guarantee that materials will even be available? Speaking as a lawyer who has been engaged in a fair amount of land conveyancing, it strikes me as being a big job to convert all our legal descriptions in the various land titles and registry offices into whatever acres are to become under metrication. It is probably fairly simple to convert a quarter section or a section of land, but what about the small parcels? I can think of untold things that will cause inconvenience and expense, and we do not know whether these things have been considered by the government.

I cannot state strongly enough that the government is proceeding in the wrong way with this conversion. This should not be done by resolution, which is just a blank cheque, but rather by legislation so we can see the actual results for the people we represent. I cannot support the government in its aim to have metrication take place by executive action without legislation. I would ask members of the House to slow the government down in its apparent haste to achieve its present objective.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, a great deal of interesting and important information has been placed before the House in the course of this debate. I do not propose that I am of a calibre to enlarge on the scientific era in which we exist, or the scientific evidence which has been placed before us, both for and against the metric system, by those who would discuss it. But there are a few things I do know about it, and I am acquainted with a few of its hardships.

There are three men I should like to see in this House at this moment as I think two of them would understand what I want to say, and the third might then understand better. They are the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), who was a farmer, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who I think has very little knowledge or understanding of the hardships that uncontrolled metrication will bring about at the farming level.

There are certain areas where one can define with great accuracy the cost of conversion of a particular plant in order to make a new product in metric dimensions. That expense can be calculated. However, for the individual who uses a piece of machinery for decades—who has given that man consideration? There is a man who sits in this House who discussed with me the use of a tractor which is now some 30 years old. I would ask where that man is going to obtain parts for that tractor, made with English measurements some 30 years before metrication? What guarantee have we that these things will be available?

For years to come it will be absolutely essential that any farmer must have in his possession two sets of tools, and two sets of all the nuts and bolts he might ever require. He will have to carry them around in the field with him every day, because if he makes any effort to use metric tools on the nuts and bolts made by English measurement he will spoil both the nuts and bolts and the tools. There is too much play, and therefore they destroy one another.

Now if we go to the fishing industry, the lumber industry or the sawmill industry we find ourselves in virtually the same situation. It will mean that if they cannot get bolts for their equipment they will have to buy new equipment or take the old equipment to the machine shop and have it either filled in, bored out, or re-threaded to take the new bolts, or it may have to be drilled out in order that the bolts will fit. In machinery there is no tolerance for a misfit. There is no way one can say that a bolt can be within a millimetre of the required measurement because it will leave play in the machinery which will wear and destroy the whole structure of the machine.

The Prime Minister should remember that this is not simply a matter of changing the weigh structure of a scale. It is not simply a matter of changing die castings in a single factory. This can be done at a minimum of cost only if there is legislation to protect those against whom the long-range effects will cost hundreds of millions of dollars in this country. The amount has never yet been calculated by the three wise men from the east who act as the committee for the guidance of the metric system conversion under this government as it is being introduced in this country.

I plead with the government to have mercy on those who cannot convert today or tomorrow. I plead that there be economic mercy in respect of these people because they need it. I plead that the fact be considered that it is not at all impossible in a seeding operation that there might be two machines in tandem, one made by the metric system and the other made by the English system, towed by a tractor made by the metric system. One definitely would need two sets of tools.

One farmer who is extremely well equipped with tools estimated that the minimum expense in his operation alone for the purchase of two sets of tools which he will need in the next five years will be not less than $1,500. There is a multitude of farmers in this country who will each spend $1,500 or more to re-equip their machine shops and tool cases. This expense has never been mentioned. There is a possibility of a reasonable evolution, but unless we co-ordinate this step by step, and move by move with the greatest trading partner we have, the United States, we will cost ourselves a great deal more money than has been mentioned by any speaker in this House today, or in any forecast by any government.

The cabinet and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) should not think just of shifting the beam of the scale. That is a small and final job. They should think of the guy who will live with change and inconvenience for decades. They should consider that he will have some equipment which is highly utilitarian around him which he cannot afford to replace for decades to come. I say: give us legislation and a plan; do not ask us to sign a blank cheque. I appeal to the government for once to please move on behalf of the little guy, not the big guy, the little guy in the woods and in the shop.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, this evening we have heard a number of my colleagues discuss this proposal of the government. Not one objected to the metric system as such, or expressed doubt that we should have the metric system here in Canada. They have quarrelled, however, with the method by which we are going about this from the government's point of view. They do not criticize the work of the Metric Commission which is going on at the present time.

I must say I agree with my colleagues, the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and many others who have spoken today, when they say that conversion to the metric system has such far-sweeping consequences that it must be done by legislation. There are many people who will have to be educated in respect of the practicality of the idea. Since man inherently hates change there will be resistance to change. We can imagine what will happen after April 1 when people will hear what the temperature is on their radios and TV sets only in metric or celsius degrees.

Let me say in all fairness that there are ways of doing these things. I have just returned from Australia where they have chosen the castor oil method, as I would call it. There was a straight implementation; bang, there it was. They have had it for a little over a year. I did not hear one complaint about it. Instead of having a five furlong horse race they have a race of 12 metres. I am sure more people understand what 12 metres are than what five furlongs are, because outside of the racing fraternity you could ask anyone what a furlong is and he would ask, "What is that?" So, there we are. I do not think there will be any difficulty about this in due course.

However, in addition to what my colleagues have said about the necessity of legislation—and I will insist upon that and before I close my remarks I will introduce an amendment to that effect—we approve the guideline dates but subject to the introduction of legislation to govern the conversion to the metric system. There is no way in which we can rely upon statements of ministers in the House. Are decisions to be based upon some supplementary estimates somewhere? What integrity is there in that? Madam Speaker, if you want a reference to statements by ministers and the ability to rely upon them, I invite you to read the High Court of Justice decision in Ontario in the case of the Roman Corporation Limited and others versus Hudson-Bay Oil and Gas Company and others, including the Prime Minister and the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The minister, or someone on his behalf, said that there would be some sort of small business assistance program with regard to metric conversion, and that there might be loans from IDB or some other body. That statement of the minister's is not worth a tinker's damn. I am not suggesting that that is not a bona fide statement, but there is nothing at all that commits the government to that statement, except perhaps for a political and moral commitment, but under the law it is just as if it were written in sand before a thunderstorm; it would disappear.

Certainly in the United States conversion is going forward, and I do not have quite the same fears as does my colleague, the hon. member for Palliser. I was in Washington a couple of months ago and I read in their papers that in certain schools they have already started to teach the metric system only in the pre-school grade and in the first year of school. In the other grades they teach both systems. They are phasing out the imperial unit system over a period of time. I have seen the metric system signs on their highways.

I invite government members who have not been in the House earlier this evening to read the speech of the former cabinet member, the hon. member for Windsor West, in Hansard in which he calls precisely for what we are calling, namely, legislation which will serve to assist small business concerns in making their conversion, either by loans or by grants, whatever it may be, and in defining certain guidelines of conduct. As the hon. member for Windsor West pointed out, the conversion from a quart to a litre, but at the same price, means an increase of 12 per cent to 14 per cent in actual profit.

There must be a wide ranging debate of the educational aspect, and agreement reached with the provinces with regard to the registration of land. At the moment—and I think the minister would quite candidly admit it—there is not one iota of agreement with any province with regard to land registry systems in any of the provinces and on the measurements whereby land shall be described legally.

How about that area in the west under the Torrens system, the compulsory land registration system based on the rectangular one mile by two miles, divided by roadways that are 66 feet apart? True enough, they happen to be 20 metres apart. Road allowances in western Canada fortunately will be 20 metres apart, but who will compel province A or B to convert to these guidelines within a timetable unless there is pre-arranged and pre-negotiated legislation? That is the point.

As a lawyer from western Canada I am appalled at the government going forward with this form of resolution and the House approving the guidelines without any legislation being put before us. How will the government bind, for instance, the government of the province of Alberta with regard to the conversion of the land registry system—by force of persuasion? Will it convert the province of Saskatchewan in the same way?

No one out there will oppose the idea of converting to the metric system. I know it is coming, and personally I welcome it. I think it is a much sounder system than the system under which we measure a length of cloth from the end of the hand of some long deceased monarch to the tip of his ear, or measure the height of a horse in hands, being the measure across a man's four knuckles. All of these things do not make sense. Of course it does not make sense to be out of step with the rest of the world. But the way the government is going about converting to the metric system could not be a more scatterbrained, ineffective or unlawful way of proceeding. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the motion be amended by adding thereto, next after the word "conversion", the following:

"but subject to legislative enactment of such a program by parliament".

I have copies of the amendment in both English and French.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Without any prejudice to the decision, the Chair will reserve judgment on the acceptability of this amendment from a procedural point of view, and render judgment at a later time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the government House leader could confirm that tomorrow we will be dealing with the Petro-Canada legislation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government intends to proceed at the opening of government orders tomorrow with Bill C-8 dealing with Petro-Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NIGER—ALLEGATION PEOPLE STARVING IN SPITE OF AVAILABILITY OF CANADIAN GRAIN—MEASURES TO CONTROL AID PROGRAM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, on February 20 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) if he had investigated a situation in the African country of Niger where bands of nomads are dying of starvation in a camp located ten feet away from the barbed wire compound containing a warehouse jammed with Canadian grain which is only available to local people with money to pay for it. The minister said that he had not conducted any such investigation but that he would look into this particular case and would be happy to follow it up.

I regret that it is now almost a month since the minister made that undertaking, but I will not use up seven valuable minutes raising hell over the fact that the question had not been given more prompt attention. Instead I will only indicate to you, Madam Speaker, my regret that this is but one illustration of the questions that arise concerning the entire CIDA program that need to be answered in order that the people of Canada can be reassured that their money is being well spent. I assure the minister that my information is very reliable concerning the particular incident that I cited. I would be pleased to discuss it with the minister privately if I could be of assistance, but he has not even asked.

I wish to return in a couple of moments to the question of bipartisan work in this chamber with respect to foreign aid and the development of Canada's international assistance program. The people of Canada today hear a good deal about food not getting through to the proper recipients in Bangladesh and certain African countries, and I think that we need to reassure them that proper steps are being taken to block off profiteering and black marketing which inevitably occur in recipient countries. Moreover, the Canadian people need to be reassured that food is not going to be used to prop up political regimes in recipient countries, and there have been instances where that has been the case.

That is really why the question I raised over this incident is an extremely important one. It is concerned not only with the distribution of Canada's food assistance abroad, important as that is, but it brings us to a consideration of all kinds of Canadian international assistance.

We have been hearing from the Secretary of State for External Affairs of the new phase Canada is going to enter with respect to its international assitance program. He brought in a report which he presented to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence last week in which he gave some detail about what I consider an important shift in policy by the Canadian government, in which the minister has indicated that he is moving the foreign policy of Canada into a new phase where, it is frankly stated, Canada must consider ways and means to expand our economic relations with the third world beyond aid. The new phrase we must put into the minds of the Canadian people for an understanding of this situation is "beyond aid".

The interlocking set of global problems, the monetary instability, inflation, high food prices, and sharply increasing energy costs are at the root of the growing disparity between the majority of the world's people who are poor, and the minority who are rich.

Therefore the government has set up an interdepartmental committee headed by Mr. Robinson, who is the under Secretary of State for External Affairs, to bring together the various facets of Canada's international assistance program which include CIDA and food aid but which will go on to consider questions of trade and monetary reform as called for by the United Nations.

There will be the seventh special session of the U.N. General Assembly in September, at which I hope Canada will play a significant part. The very distinguished Canadian, Mr. Maurice Strong, who heads the United Nations environmental program, and who was a former head of CIDA, only yesterday came before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence where he spoke movingly about his hopes for Canada's participation in the special session next September. He put in a nutshell the expectations and the goal which we as Canadians and, indeed, all the people of the developed countries should set as a minimum for the seventh special session. That goal is that there would be enough for every human being on earth in terms of food, shelter and clothing. That is a minimum need to protect human decency and dignity. With Mr. Strong, Madam Speaker, I say that anything less that that minimum goal is declaring bankruptcy in our civilization.

I have said that I believe this to be so important that we ought to go beyond politics in this House for a truly bipartisan effort to help Canada improve its over-all international development picture, which is why I have suggested that a subcommittee of the external affairs committee be set up to deal with a comprehensive policy for international development, and that perhaps it might work with the interdepartmental committee of officials who are working on this very matter. Indeed the Secretary of State for External Affairs said at the committee last week that he would not oppose the setting up of a subcommittee. When I raised a question in the House today, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that he sincerely welcomed any input by all members of this House into the improvement of the international development program of Canada.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, that we must be concerned about the sort of incident in Niger to which I alluded. We must reassure the Canadian people that these kinds of malpractices are being corrected, in order that the Canadian people will go on supporting CIDA, and its substantial budget for this year, and consider with open minds how we can enlarge our international development program. I say sincerely—and my remark is directed ultimately to the Prime Minister, and to the hon. member who will speak on behalf of the government—that we should work together on this program for the good of Canada and for the sake of human decency in the world.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I reassure the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) that I and other members on my side of the House share his concern for developing countries of the third world. We think our efforts should include direct and multilateral aid, and that Canada has a part to play in making contributions to international and global organizations, and should, within those organizations, strive for a restructuring of trade, monetary aid, and other aspects of economics in order to provide a better break for the third world.

[Mr. Roche.]

With respect to the question the hon. member raised tonight, I can assure him that, to the best of our knowledge, the nomads gathered in the refugee camps in Niger following the terrible drought in the past several years are not dying of hunger. They are, on the contrary, being taken care of by the Niger government, which is trying either to integrate them into a more sedentary way of life or, where possible, to enable them to resume their traditional way of life.

As for the second part of the hon. member's question, it is true that food depots are sometimes found close to certain refugee camps, for logistical reasons that are easy to understand.

Finally, the agreement between Canada and Niger is similar to bilateral agreements concerning food aid with other countries, in that the recipient country can either give or sell to local populations the products which we sent it. If the country decides to sell our food aid for reasons having to do with local market conditions or other considerations, it is authorized to do so on the condition that the revenues thus made be spent on development projects. Nothing leads us to believe that Niger is not respecting this agreement; the CIDA representative in Niamey reiterated the terms of this agreement last January to the Minister of External Affairs of Niger.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—BILINGUAL LABELLING—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH BUSINESSMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, when I first raised in this House a couple of weeks ago the question of Canada's new bilingual labelling laws, the minister said he would be making some changes. Although I, personally, did not receive notification of exactly what the minister was to do, I learned of his position from a newspaper report.

An article appearing in last Saturday's Winnipeg Tribune carries the headline, "Ouellet softens stand on new labelling laws." According to the article:

> A new federal law regulating the labels on all merchandise sold in Canada, has been deemed too restrictive by André Ouellet, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.
> Bill C-180, scheduled to become effective Sept. 1, 1975, requires that all products sold in Canada display the common name of the item in both English and French, and that any measurements be given in metric units.
> After hearing complaints from small manufacturing firms and importers of goods made outside the country, Mr. Ouellet agreed that strict enforcement of the new law would create significant problems, resulting in undue hardship for some businesses.

I want to be on record as being concerned about this question. I hope the minister fully understands the many problems many small manufacturers across Canada will face if the program is implemented, and fully understands just how inflationary the labelling laws will be if they are enforced.

The Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce presented a good case to the minister. The news report to which I just referred alludes to the brief presented by the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, of which the minister is aware. May I draw attention to an item which appears in that brief. The brief says in part:

● (2210)

As we understand it, it is possible that the Quebec Bill 22 may be tested before the courts and this whole subject resolved, but we are concerned that if in good faith our members design packaging to comply with the federal act and Bill 22 is upheld in the courts, particularly as it pertains to packaging legislation, we could be faced with another expensive redesign. In the circumstances, because of this uncertainty, we feel it would be prudent of the federal government to delay the implementation of Bill C-180 until this whole question of provincial rights in the area of consumer packaging has been clarified. We feel it is only fair that the federal government recognize that it would be impossible for our members to face the possibility of provincial legislation requiring different packaging requirements than does the federal act.

I now wish to quote from Canada's audio and home entertainment industry publication, "The Audio Retailer," as follows:

The application of Quebec's controversial new official language act could seriously affect the supply of audio goods in this province. Unless audio hardware is excluded from the provision of the act, most suppliers will withdraw from the Quebec market, according to a telephone survey of several Canadian distributors recently conducted by The Audio Retailer.

Products sold in Quebec "must be labelled in French, except within certain limits provided by regulation," states Section 34 of Bill 22. The audio industry must persuade the government to include hardware within these limits. Otherwise, in the opinion of Eric Blais, director of the Ministry of Education's French Language Office in Montreal, the act will be read to mean that front panels and control knobs, as well as warranties and instruction books, must be predominantly in French . . .

"It's hard enough to get foreign manufacturers to meet CSA specifications, let alone make special panels," said Graham Bousfield of ReVox, and Hank Westerlaken of Panasonic guessed that the cost per unit of labelling a top-end line of receivers in French could be as high as $200.

Bill 22 is the most divisive piece of legislation that has ever appeared on a federal or provincial statute book. It makes a mockery of the Official Languages Act. It will seriously harm Quebec's economy with its ridiculous bilingual regulations, and make it most difficult for other countries and other parts of Canada to export merchandise to Quebec. The labelling and other aspects make it imperative that the federal government refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada to challenge its legality.

I have received many letters on this subject. I would like to point out how it is affecting small businesses in Canada. One of my constituents went to an embroidery shop to get some embroidery liquid. She wrote:

—the shop told me it is no longer available because it is not worthwhile for the American producer to go into bilingual labels for his Canadian trade. The shopkeeper was so irate he took me on a tour of his shop pointing out all sorts of other items no longer available for the same reason.

I received a copy of a letter from a New York manufacturer to a Winnipeg importer. It states:

We would love to continue selling Canada, but there is no way possible that we could unless your government relaxes their regulations as our government has. We do comply with all government regulations in the United States. We therefore regret—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that the act passed by the Canadian government on packaging and labelling was first discussed in 1970. When it was passed by Parliament in 1971, it was supported by all parties in the House, including that of the hon. member. In other words, it was passed unanimously by the House of Commons.

To mix Bill 22 with that federal act is a great detour taken by the hon. member. I failed to see why the hon. member first wanted to protect the Quebec economy, finally I thought I saw in his remarks that he is against Bill 22. Let us not shuffle the cards: there is no connection between Bill 22 and that act which, in fact, gave ample notice to the parties concerned. The companies which produce goods other than food stuffs have had 18 months to take what steps are required to meet the requirements of the law. The food processing companies have until March 1976 to comply with the legislation, so they will have had a 24-month notice. I think that it is advisable to remind to the hon. member that the legislation will not apply in certain cases where a local manufacturer in a predominantly unilingual area makes a product exclusively used in that area.

I have recognized that some difficulties were encountered in the application of the legislation for imported products and I have explained at length in a press release issued on March 13 last—which can be appended to Hansard if hon. members want—the amendments which we are ready to introduce to facilitate the application of the legislation for some companies. More particularly, if the importers of those products are ready to relabel them according to the legislation before selling or despatching them to distributors or retailers, they would be allowed to do so when the products have reached Canada. It will thus be easier to comply with the requirements of the law. This is what I wanted to say, Madam Speaker. If I could obtain the unanimous consent of the House, those few paragraphs could be added to my statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It does not seem possible at this time of the day.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

APPENDIX

Program of Guideline dates for metric conversion

The Metric Commission has consulted with representative organizations in all sectors of the Canadian economy in respect to the manner in which conversion to the International System of metric units should proceed and as a result proposes the following four phase program and guideline dates for metric conversion:

An investigation phase, which should reach a peak during 1974, to determine what needs to be done in respect to metric conversion;

A planning phase, which will extend during 1974 and 1975, to identify the sequence in which actions will be performed;

A scheduling phase, during which the timing of these actions will be determined and coordinated and which is to be completed in 1976;

An implementation phase, to commence in some volume in 1975, reach a peak of activity in the period 1977-78 and be substantially completed by 1980 when metric measures will be used by Canadians for all normal commercial and legal purposes.

CANADA PENSION PLAN INDEXING PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO PROTECT THE INDEXING OF PAYMENTS UNDER THE PLAN

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-383, to protect the indexing of payments made under the Canada Pension Plan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since January, 1974, when the Canada Pension Plan became fully indexed, a number of anomalies have appeared in various aspects of the plan with the result that the full effect of indexation has often not been passed on to those who are supposed to receive it. This bill is aimed at ensuring that the pensioner, not the insurance company, should benefit from the indexing of payments under the Canada Pension Plan.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FARMERS CREDITORS ARRANGEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND BENEFITS TO FARMERS IN ALL PROVINCES

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-384, to amend the Farmers Creditors Arrangements Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is simply to give to farmers in other provinces of Canada the benefits which the present bill gives to western farmers.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON OBJECTIVE IN SEEKING CONSENSUS AND PROGRESS THEREON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister on the subject of the consensus among the principal elements of the economy about which the government has been talking since last September. Now that the Prime Minister has devoted some 16 days to seeking the missing link in the European Economic Community, is he prepared to devote even eight days between now and the Easter recess to trying to find a consensus in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the concern that the Minister of Finance has been expressing with regard to increasing Canadian costs and settlements and the danger that these hold for Canada—hence the importance he attaches to the consensus—would the right hon. gentleman make a statement in the House or get one of his ministers to make a comprehensive statement in the House before the Easter recess as to what the government is seeking a consensus about and what the progress is?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the question of a possible statement and the timing thereof with the Minister of Finance and let the Leader of the Opposition know.

Mr. Stanfield: One final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Having read the letter in the Globe and Mail this morning written by the Minister of Agriculture on this subject, and allowing for the fact that any minister of agriculture who works seven days a week will lay an egg from time to time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —I should like the right hon. gentleman to indicate whether he would be prepared to establish a public inquiry so that his ministers, at least, will know what the consensus is all about.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF POSSIBILITY OF LABOUR AND MANAGEMENT REACHING CONSENSUS ON GUIDELINES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Now that the meetings between labour, management and the government have been going on for several months in an attempt to reach this consensus, has the Prime Minister any reason for believing that labour and management are any more likely today to reach a consensus on guidelines to control inflation than they were five years ago when the government made the attempt and it fell apart? If the Prime Minister does feel there is reason for such confidence, would he please outline to the House why he so feels?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are cautiously optimistic about the possibility of bringing the inflationary spiral under control.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister has once again refused to answer a straightforward question, as he did on the results of his European trip yesterday, is the Prime Minister engaged in trying to wrestle this consensus into some form that can be used effectively, as he has been on inflation, and does he feel that he is going to be a little more successful in this wrestling match?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a contradiction in terms here in regard to wrestling and consensus. It strikes me—

Mr. Hees: You are getting involved now; you had better stick to the simple stuff.

Mr. Trudeau: If it is true that the Minister of Agriculture has laid an egg, it seems to me that some of it is on the face of the hon. member.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—REASON FOR FAILURE TO REAPPOINT JOSEPH LANZA AND DELBERT HICKEY AND INFORMATION ON WHICH DECISION BASED

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On February 27 the minister told the House of Commons that Joseph Lanza and Delbert Hickey were not reappointed to the Hamilton Harbour Commission because the government was suspicious of their ethical standards. Was the minister's decision based on information provided by the RCMP and, if so, when did he receive that information and when did he act upon it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of confusion about the Hamilton port matter, not amongst hon. members, because they followed it fairly closely, but because the problem was two-fold. There was first the problem of what seemed to be internal corruption, since two persons have been condemned, and then the problem of collusion between the companies which attempted, let us say, to defraud the government. The matter is now before the courts; I therefore can pass no judgment. Mr. Speaker, we delayed appointments because we did not know whether Messrs. Lanza and Hickey were mixed up in the first phase of the internal corruption which allegedly existed at the port of Hamilton.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that on February 27 these two men were not reappointed—I did not say appointed, but reappointed—because the government was suspicious about the ethical standards of these men. Was that the reason they were not reappointed and, if so, was this decision based on information received from the RCMP, when did the minister receive the information and when did he act on it? It was the minister who did not reappoint them.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, let me go back to what I was saying. The first steps in the case of the port of Hamilton were taken by the board itself and by the city which withdrew its representative, Mr. Elliot. At that time, because the situation was rather confusing, we ourselves had no evidence against Messrs. Lanza or Hickey. However, because of the circumstances, we decided, instead of suspending them, to appoint them for only six months, to find out exactly what was going on.

[English]

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION—PERSON RECOMMENDING JOSEPH LANZA AND DELBERT HICKEY FOR INITIAL APPOINTMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that Joseph Lanza and Delbert Hickey were federal appointees to the Hamilton Harbour Commission, were they appointed in the first instance on the recommendation of the Minister of Labour?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, federal appointments to harbour commissions are the responsibility of the Minister of Transport. These people had not been recommended by me, but they were regularly appointed on the recommendation of the Department of Transport.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

NUMBER OF JOURNALISTS ACCOMPANYING PRIME MINISTER ON EUROPEAN TRIP—RESPONSIBILITY FOR EXPENSES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, from 11 to 11.30 p.m., I watched the televised account of his recent visit to five European countries. The leader of the government was answering questions from reporters who followed him wherever he went. Does the Prime Minister know exactly how many reporters accompanied him during this trip to Europe?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know the exact number, Mr. Speaker, but there must have been something like three dozen travelling with me on board the Canadian Armed Forces jet which flew me to Europe. I think, however, that it is customary to charge them the commercial rates to allow them to travel on board this plane. There must certainly have been something like three dozen when we met on board.

● (1420)

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister has just said that they pay the regular fare of commercial flights on armed forces planes. Is the government paying part of those reporters' expenses either for their fare or their accommodation in Europe?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to check, but as far as I know, the answer is no. I think that reporters not only pay their plane tickets, but also their expenses for hotels, meals and entertainment if any. Mr. Speaker, it is possible, however, that some telegraph services cost something to the government, even if they are paid by the press company involved, but I would have to check. I know that the press gallery has been concerned about the problem and discussed it, I believe, at its last annual meeting.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a final supplementary question.

I understand that the employers probably pay the travelling expenses of their reporters, As regards the CBC, which is a Crown corporation, do reporters pay their own expenses or does the CBC itself pay them? I would ask the Prime Minister to say whether this would be considered as a bribe or a tip for CBC reporters.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must say to the Social Credit leader, that as far as I am concerned, I never had the opportunity to give a bribe or a tip to reporters for the good reports they wrote about me.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUPS—POSSIBLE LIMITATION ON DURATION OF STRIKE AND DESIGNATION OF GRAIN WEIGHMEN AS ESSENTIAL

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, first of all, through you I should like to welcome back to the House the Minister of Labour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: —and ask him if he has any magic answers to the difficulties we are facing in his area of responsibility. Could he advise us whether any progress has been made in PSA negotiations and whether since yesterday the government has indicated to the parties any limitation on how long the government is prepared to postpone any action to effect the resumption of grain shipments?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I thank the hon. member very much for his good wishes. May I indicate to him that the public service falls under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, who is prepared to answer the question.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether, under the circumstances, the government has indicated any limitation, as I asked the Minister of Labour, and may I at the same time put another question and ask the minister whether any consideration has been given to the designation as essential of the work of the grain weighmen so that even if the PSA dispute continues, shipments of grain will be resumed. Is the government prepared to take such action?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I must reply that it would not be advisable at this moment to reveal what is being discussed at the negotiation table. As regards the second part of the question, I take good note of the hon. member's suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: I am, of course, not asking that the discussions be revealed to the House, but the country is asking whether there is any limitation in the foreseeable future as to how the government is prepared to postpone taking action to get the grain shipments moving from western Canada to our overseas customers.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said previously and I will repeat that those employees have the right to strike, and we respect that right to strike. The House has not indicated to me that we should withdraw the right to strike.

Mr. Fraser: Can we infer from the minister's answer that the government has no intention of taking any action, no matter how long this dispute drags on? Is that the answer the President of the Treasury Board is giving to this House on behalf of the government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, my position is that I believe in collective bargaining.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED PRIORITY FOR SHIPMENT TO BANGLADESH—RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact it has been reported that the largest shipment of grain ever to leave a port is waiting to be loaded at the port of Vancouver, and it is bound for Bangladesh, I wonder if the minister can tell the House whether this boatload of grain will receive any priority, and while it is waiting to be loaded who will be paying the demurrage charges, will it be the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian people?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check into the second part of the question with regard to a particular vessel. The Wheat Board, the railway companies and elevator companies are all prepared to give top priority to the loading of vessels as soon as the movement of grain begins again, and of course those vessels already loading are usually the first ones back, and this is one in that category.

EFFECT OF STRIKES AT VANCOUVER ON CANADA'S CREDIBILITY AS SUPPLIER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): In view of the fact that Canada is losing its credibility as a supplier of grain, and also in view of the fact that the port of Seattle is stealing much of the business from the port of Vancouver, will the government undertake any new initiatives to resolve these labour problems so that we will not continue to run into these difficulties, thereby not only losing sales but also our credibility?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government, of course, is concerned about this issue and the exact initiatives being taken to attempt to lessen labour unrest in this country are more properly discussed by my colleague, the Minister of Labour. But I should say to the hon. member that while this strike is indeed unfortunate and a great deal is made of it in terms of our reputation abroad, it should be pointed out that the United States ports have certainly not been free from strikes. I think in comparative periods they have suffered every bit as much. While I understand that there are those who would damage our reputation abroad by emphasizing our vulnerability, I hope the hon. member will at least recognize that other countries, like the United States and Australia, have been equally vulnerable.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSAL TO IMPROVE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING CAPABILITY OF GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the commitment to the process of collective bargaining, which I think is shared generally in the country, and in view of the tremendous difficulty the government seems to be having with respect to collective bargaining with the Canadian public service, would the President of the Treasury Board assure us that the 35 per cent increase in consultants' fees, at least to a large extent, will go to improving the collective bargaining capability of the government, which in the present circumstances seems to be wanting.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is mixing these subjects because I think the latter is completely different from the problem of collective bargaining with which I am faced. In regard to the other parts of the question, I will look into them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I might say that the minister is having the same problem. He is mixing answers as well.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—KNOWLEDGE OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT OF POSSIBLE FRAUD BY MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday he was asked whether the government know about a possible massive fraud prior to the fall of 1972, and the answer was, and I quote: "I am prepared to say that certainly no one in the cabinet knew."

In trying to clarify this matter I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he is confident that no minister of the government was aware of possible wrongdoing, of allegations or suspicions of fraud or irregularities regarding Marine Industries contracts prior to the complaints in the fall of 1972?

An hon. Member: Put your seat on the line.

Mr. Nowlan: You put your tongue on the line and I will chop it off. Page 4150 of Hansard for yesterday, the second column.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING BY POST OFFICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the current disputes which may disrupt the Canadian Post Office, as they have disrupted the Canadian postal service entirely in the past, and in view of the fact that the Post Office Department is currently running a television ad promoting the use of the Post Office for quick and efficient service and also the fact that we have only one television station in the Churchill riding, is the minister prepared to either have the ad withdrawn or charge the Post Office Department with false advertising?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to discuss this matter with the Postmaster General. I can assure the hon. member that I think the premise of his question is not well founded.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt, but I thought the Prime Minister was about ready to answer the question I posed. He has been in consultation with the Minister of Transport and I would not want to interfere in this line of questioning. My point of order is this; is the Prime Minister not prepared to answer a simple straightforward question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Dauphin.

FINANCE

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS DEFICIT—INQUIRY AS TO CREDIBILITY OF ESTIMATE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ACHIEVE BALANCE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. As the projected balance of payments deficit has been put at $4 billion, has the minister any indications as this quarter is almost over, if this estimate is still credible and likely to be reached?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the first part of the question. I am sorry.

Mr. Ritchie: As the projected balance of payments deficit has been put at $4 billion and as this quarter is almost over, does the minister still feel that this estimate is credible and likely to be reached?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the current account deficit is somewhere between $4 billion and $5 billion for the year 1975.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister made any plans to meet the problems of this deficit or does he expect capital inflows to take care of the situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the dollar, of course, still reflects market forces but at the moment we are hopeful that a reasonable balance would be achieved between trade deficit and capital inflow.

ENERGY

OIL—SWITCHING IMPORTS FROM VENEZUELA TO MIDDLE EAST—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the growing evidence that some oil companies are switching their oil imports from Venezuela crude to Middle East crude thereby gaining an additional $1.30 per barrel in compensation payments. What steps is the government taking to plug this loophole which according to the present reports of his own officials, is increasing?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the provisions of Bill C-32, which is before parliament, give the government the authority to make additional regulations which would have enabled us to have changed the rather rigid system that we have, in effect, based on the estimates. At the moment, while we are taking a look at the possibility of making changes, I think I would be correct in saying that under the Appropriations Act we do not have the opportunity of passing regulations to deal with this, although we are giving it close examination.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that some 145 million barrels of Middle East oil were imported into Canada in 1974 and this represents a very serious rip-off—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): — when the oil companies switched from Venezuelan crude to Middle East crude, thereby increasing the compensation payments they receive from the government by $1.30 a barrel, I want to ask the minister if he has approached the House leaders of the various parties to see if speedy passage could be obtained to an amendment to the legislation to plug this loophole which is costing the taxpayers of Canada millions of dollars.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could correct the hon. gentleman. We are, of course, paying only compensation for the taxes charged by the foreign governments to the particular oil companies. While it is true that our obligation on payments for Middle Eastern crude is higher than our obligation on payments for Venezuelan crude, this does not accrue to the benefit of the individual company. With regard to Bill C-32, I appreciate the suggestion. If we could overcome the pronounced delay that has occurred with regard to that particular bill and put it through, this would enable us to deal with this situation at an early date.

OIL—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST OF SWITCHING IMPORTS FROM VENEZUELA TO MIDDLE EAST

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the cost to the oil companies for imported oil for compensation payments on Venezuelan crude is $7.10, whereas Middle Eastern oil is $6.15 which represents a considerable increase in the return to the oil companies, may I ask the minister if the Energy Supplies Allocations Board has reported this matter to him? If so, when, and has he made any estimate of what the additional cost to the compensation fund has been as a result of this practice of switching from Venezuelan oil to Middle Eastern oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman will have noted from the press reports, this has been a matter of discussion between my officials and officials of the board. The primary difficulty is in the legislation, or absence of it, which would have enabled the government to have moved to block this particular situation.

TRANSPORT

HAMILTON DREDGING CONTRACTS—INQUIRY WHETHER FORMER MINISTER OF TRANSPORT RECEIVED LETTER FROM MR. CAMPBELL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and, if I may, I have a brief preface. In a statement made last evening the Solicitor General said that following Mr. Campbell's visit on September 11, 1972 to the former solicitor general's office, Mr. Cameron called the RCMP and the Department of Transport—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Woolliams: —about Mr. Campbell's letter and was told to deliver that letter to your office. Did you receive that letter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated that he had a brief preface to the question. In fact the preface is brief and I think the question ought to be put.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask the minister now if he received that letter and the documentation of Mr. Campbell from Mr. Cameron?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this matter has obviously been discussed in committee and it would appear, if I were to abide by your ruling of the other day, that I might appear to be withholding the answer, the answer to the question of the hon. gentleman is that it was directed to a special assistant of mine. I did not see the letter myself nor did I see Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a further question? Has the minister seen the letter since or when did he first see it and the documentation, if he has seen it?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I said I had not seen the letter. I suppose I should put it in the present tense—I have not seen the letter.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE BOYCOTT OF POSTAL CODE—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO COUNTERACT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TO UNION GRIEVANCES WILL BE SETTLED

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In asking the question perhaps I may be permitted to welcome him back to the House and congratulate him on the eloquence and elegance he displayed in the Irish walk last Sunday and his encounter with the Blarney stone last Friday. In view of the boycott of the postal code called for Thursday of this week by the CUPW leaders, and the severe penalties provided for delaying the mail, will the Postmaster General tell the House what steps he has taken to dissuade the union leaders from this illegal action?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there has been no illegal action as yet of which I am aware.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. In view of the Postmaster General's success in Montreal last Friday with the letter carriers' union, would he now meet with representatives of the postal union to give them his direct assurance that long standing grievances are going to be dealt with in the contract negotiation now getting under way?

● (1440)

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, they received that assurance from the Postmaster General and the representative of the Treasury Board when that representative appeared before the special committee. The problem of technological change, and the effects of technological change on the inside workers in the post office, were dealt with very adequately by Mr. Taylor between last April and December. If the same co-operation can exist in the future, there is no reason these men should have anything to fear.

LEGALITY OF CHARGING DEMURRAGE TO FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Inasmuch as I know of no business where two parties can incur an expense and charge it to an innocent third party, has there been any investigation by the Ministry of Justice as to the legality of charging demurrage to farmers or will there be any investigation as to the farmers right to sue in relation to demurrage charges?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure those against whom demurrage charges are sought are fully aware of their rights with regard to civil liability and will defend accordingly.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DAMAGES TO INNOCENT PARTIES AS RESULT OF STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF SETTING LIMIT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour whom I welcome back to the House. Has the government entered into any discussions as to the limit of damages that innocent third parties should incur as a result of the right to strike by other parties, or is the government about to establish any limit on the damages that should be incurred by innocent third parties?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I indicate at the beginning that I do not agree with the premise of the hon. member's question. It is not always the workers who are responsible for losses that may be sustained by third parties. It may be the employers. This is a dispute situation. In a dispute situation such as this, we could not get into the question of assessing liability on innocent third parties. That is an inevitable result when you have the right to strike.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with a representative of the Canadian Livestock Association on Friday of last week. He assured me there is an ample supply of feedstocks for Eastern Canada and will be for some time to come. Our stocks in the Great Lakes area are larger than normal. They are sufficient to take care of our needs for some time.

REQUEST FOR NEW FORMULA FOR PENSION PLANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that Treasury Board sets the pattern for the escalation of pensions of retired public servants, retired RCMP personnel, retired armed forces personnel and others, and in view of the fact that under the present formula these pension recipients are always falling behind, will the Treasury Board undertake to study this matter with a view to bringing in a new formula to be applied to all of these various pension plans?

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF EFFECT ON PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the answers given this afternoon by the Minister of Labour, the President of the Treasury Board and the sarcastic reply by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, will the Prime Minister advise the House whether the government has yet determined if the strike that is going on, which is affecting grain movement and shipping out of Vancouver, is affecting the public interest at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is very concerned about the degree of harm that can occur, particularly to the grain trade. We have considered this question. The answer really lies at which point the public interest becomes overwhelming and should overwhelm the basic democratic right to strike which has been given by parliament to the workers of this nation. That is the judgment this government has to make. It is the judgment that members opposite have had to make in previous circumstances when the government has brought in legislation to end a strike. It had the support of members opposite. The House knows this is the balance of justice which must be reached. As the ministers have indicated previously, we have not yet reached a conclusion that legislation be imposed in order to take away a basic democratic right.

TRADE

REQUEST MINISTER ENDEAVOUR TO INCREASE CANADIAN EXPORTS DURING TOUR OF SOUTH AMERICA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I understand the minister will be visiting Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela and Cuba from March 19, tomorrow, to March 27. I believe he will be the first Canadian cabinet minister to visit Cuba since the beginning of the Castro revolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: In light of the fact that our exports are looking far from healthy, will the minister's export effort be confined to metals and minerals or will he throughout his tour endeavour to raise Canada's share in South American markets of high technology products by assisting Canadian business in establishing agents in these countries?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it will be concerned with all those areas; metals, minerals, high technology products and fishery products. I would also like to add agricultural products.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REASON FOR CONTINUED HIGH RATE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the ongoing assessment the minister and his colleagues are making of the Canadian economy, what, in their opinion, is the major factor that is leading to a continuation of the high rates of inflation in the economy at the present time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that rather fully in the debate last Thursday on the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. This is certainly not the type of question I can answer fully in the question period. I would ask the hon. member to look at Hansard for that date.

Mr. Gillies: The reason I asked the question was that I read the minister's speech very carefully and could not find an answer to that question. Does the minister feel that in the economy of Canada the cost-push factor rather than the demand-pull factor is causing the inflation we are faced with today?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Since, last Thursday, a Montreal daily paper referred to a very embarrassing climate at the Saint-Jean Royal Military College, where a suicide was reported to have been committed two weeks ago and where scuffles and drug traffic have taken place, has the minister been made aware of that problem at the Saint-Jean Royal Military College and, if so, could he make a statement in the House to restore to that military college the excellent reputation it always had.

He said at that time it was his intention to introduce a white paper in March. Can the hon. gentleman inform the House as to the progress of this piece of reform?

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF SHORTFALL ON EXPORT COMMITMENTS—SUGGESTION SOME CUSTOMERS HAVE REQUESTED SHIPMENT THROUGH EASTERN PORTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): My question is for the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Can the minister advise us what the shortfall is to date with respect to Canadian export commitments for the supply of grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker; I could scarcely give the hon. member a precise figure since normal exports are based on the timing of the arrival of vessels. I could give him an estimate of the ordinary capacity of the west coast ports on a weekly basis, but that would not relate to specific export contracts.

Mr. Neil: Apart from the decision of the government of China to insist on deliveries of 40 per cent of its recent contract through the eastern ports, have other customers recently required that a portion of their grain shipments be sent through the eastern ports?

Mr. Lang: The story about China having required delivery of 40 per cent of its supplies through eastern ports was inaccurate.

At the consensus meetings held by the Minister of Finance and others, have price and wage control levels been discussed or mentioned at all?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As to the general policy of the government, it is fair to say that the government is not considering at this time any general statutory form of price and wage controls. I do not know whether the hon. member is making a representation or just asking a question.

Mr. Andre: What about non-statutory controls?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, what is your problem?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT VIEW ON METHODS TO REDUCE EFFECT OF STRIKES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Justice suggested a few minutes ago that the Minister of Labour might be able to give the House some information with regard to discussions he had been holding on the subject of methods by which disputes and strikes, interruptions of essential services, might be reduced. Is the minister really prepared to give us any more information about these discussions on this subject than is the Minister of Justice? Is the Minister of Labour prepared to make a statement in the House in the near future about the general drift of his efforts?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I can certainly indicate to the Leader of the Official Opposition the general drift of the discussions in which I took part, although I did not attend the latest ones. We discussed with representatives of labour how they see the economic future, what they believe to be the main problems, and we endeavour to isolate areas upon which labour, the business community and the government agreed. An effort is then made to develop some type of agreement as to measures to be taken. I think those meetings have been relatively successful.

Mr. Stanfield: Would it be correct to assume that the discussions in which the Minister of Labour took part did not relate to a consensus as to the way in which the gross national product should be divided, but rather to procedures and methods by which agreements could be reached?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am sorry. The first question asked by the hon. gentleman obviously had to do with better means of dealing with work stoppages and strikes; I thought he was referring to the meetings held with reference to the economic situation generally. I might say that officials have been meeting with representatives of labour and business with respect to the particular issue the hon. gentleman mentioned in his question earlier; they have been informal discussions at the official level.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the Minister of Labour to make a statement to the House on this subject as the Minister of Justice has suggested he might do? Is it his intention to give the House any information as to any plans the government might have in this area or must we try to pull teeth as we have been trying to pull the Prime Minister's teeth for several months on the subject of consensus generally.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I do not like the exercise of pulling teeth any more than does the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: We need denticare around here.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I have advised the Leader of the Official Opposition that informal discussions along the lines he has in mind have taken place with various labour leaders and leaders in the business community at the official level. That has been the extent to which this matter has been taken; nothing has gone on from there. In the circumstances, I think it would be premature to make a statement to the House at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: Nothing has happened.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue arising out of a question I put to the Minister of Public Works a couple of days ago. Since that question has not been answered to my satisfaction, and in view of information I was given in Vancouver over the past weekend, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue what plans his department has made to move the premises of the Department of National Revenue in Vancouver? If no plans have been made, what are the deadline dates for making such plans or making this move?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): My department has made recommendations to the Department of Public Works. I inquired this morning whether those recommendations have been accepted or not but so far I have not received an answer.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES—POSSIBLE HOLDBACK OF PAYMENTS TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to dredging irregularities and to questions raised in the House before—

Some hon. Members: Where were you last night?

Mr. Lawrence: Glad you missed me, anyway. My questions relate to matters raised in the House last week. For instance, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce left an implication that he was taking as notice a question relating to certain subsidies granted to Marine Industries Limited and the possibility of withholding those subsidies pending legal clarification of the government's position. Now that he has received clarification of the legal question, would the minister be good enough to inform the House whether there is a holdback involving ship-building subsidies to Marine Industries Limited and what the amount is?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have not yet received an opinion from the law officers of the Crown; it is a complicated matter. But on a contingency basis we are withholding our payment until we have received that opinion.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the question I was asked by the hon. member recently, I have made an investigation and I can say a consultant has been dismissed, not a civil servant—

[English]

Pardon me, there was a consultant appointed in the case of the Irving Whale which sank in the St. Lawrence. In this particular case La Compagnie de Richelieu de dragage was involved; it was not accused at all or suspected, but the consultant was, and he was dismissed. That is the only case of which I know.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did try to catch Your Honour's eye, although I appreciate there were many members trying to catch it. I wanted to wait until the end of the question period so I could legitimately come in under a supplementary. I asked an important question of the Prime Minister concerning his prior knowledge as to wrongdoings, irregularities or misconduct regarding contracts with Marine Industries Limited, a subject that has been rather topical and most relevant in the question period. I thought the Prime Minister was referring to Hansard to see exactly what was said yesterday, so that he could give an answer and not leave this rather important question unanswered.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As the hon. member knows, the right hon. Prime Minister or any other minister to whom a question is put has the option to answer or not to answer, as he chooses. It was evident, at least to me, that the right hon. Prime Minister chose not to answer this question, and accordingly I recognized other questioners.

Mr. Nowlan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that is not a point of order. He is talking about the disposition of a question that is now behind us. There is no way he can ask the House to revert to the question period at this time. In addition, the hon. member raised the matter of a non-reply by way of a point of order, and a few minutes after that put a question which also did not provoke any answer or discussion. Under the circumstances, that seems to me to close the matter.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, coming from Atlantic Canada, I suppose I might be accused of being parochial if I were to try to present some of the problems that exist in that area of Canada, yet I think it is absolutely necessary that for a few moments we do discuss this particular matter. When one looks at Atlantic Canada from the point of view of energy supply, one cannot help but be reminded of Bill C-8 and the total neglect and utter lack of planning on the part of the federal government of this country ever since oil became an integral part of our energy structure.

One cannot help but remember that when efforts were being made to construct oil refineries in eastern Canada, roadblocks were established, for real and artificial reasons, without any real substantiation by the Government of Canada, the result being that these refineries never were built on the sea coasts of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia to the extent they should have been.

Therefore, we in Atlantic Canada find ourselves in the position of being at the mercy of foreign oil suppliers, as well as at the mercy and whim of government if it does not see fit to pay attention to requests made of it by Atlantic Canada. It would have meant a very important industry in the area of Saint John had the government, through its Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, chosen to cut the red tape and allow construction by a very reputable company of a large refinery there. There would have followed a number of vital side industries and it would have guaranteed oil supply to the eastern half of Canada. But this was not to be the fact.

This, of course, is the point from which we start. We hear of discussions concerning a pipeline to be built from Sarnia to Montreal, but we hear nothing of discussions regarding energy supply and security of supply for Atlantic Canada. I think this indicates that the present government does not have the concern of the whole nation at heart as it plans its oil policy.

As one considers Bill C-8 it is rather interesting to examine some of the information published in Canada in the last three to five years regarding expansion of gas sales for all purposes. This information would indicate that while we had a limited supply of gas, we could never, under any circumstance, relax our efforts to search for and develop additional gas supplies in view of the limited period of time that we could supply gas for existing use. Today, no real effort is being made to take cognizance of the statistics that have been presented year after year.

In view of the limitations of supply which are statistical knowledge to the man on the street, during the past five years we have had a chaotic government creating an economic atmosphere in which the oil industry has been unable to see the end of the trail. The industry did not choose to continue on the same vigorous note that had been characteristic of the oil industry since the find at Leduc.

What we find after reading one publication after another is that there is a decline in the amount of expenditure on search for and development of this most vital ingredient of our society. For instance, one graph which was recently published showed that from 1973 until 1975 oil rig activity in this country declined by just about one-half. That, Mr. Speaker, is over a two-year period. With regard to offshore drilling, we find there has not been the same impetus as there was before chaotic government created a chaotic financial situation in which the oil companies, be they native or foreign, refused to risk the investment of their money.

Another publication reveals that the number of wells being drilled in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and the Arctic has been on the decline. Again we have only to go back three years in order to establish this very significant trend.

The financial pages, the budget, speeches that have been made by cabinet ministers, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in particular, disclose the economic reason for the absence of this activity. On the other hand, if we examine such activity abroad we find a complete contrast in those countries which have recognized that they must have oil; they have taken competitive economic steps to attract money. Canada was considered one of the most stable economic opportunities in the world. It no longer has that reputation, nor will it ever regain it if we do not come up with plans which point in a specific direction indicating that Canada does, in fact, want to develop.

We do not have to look very far in various publications to find that in the last five years, let us say, the graph which indicates the consumption of oil in Canada has been rapidly gaining on the graph which indicates oil production in this country, and that we will no longer be self-sufficient as at the end of 1975. These were predictable and projectable items of fact which should have influenced the policy of the Government of Canada to secure our supply and to permit development and research.

We do not have to look far to see what the side effects of this situation will be. Prior to the time that Canada approached self-sufficiency of supply we found ourselves in economic imbalance as a result of trade deficits, which had a very considerable impact upon our economy. Yet while the handwriting was on the wall indicating that the same economic imbalance would be created by any decline in the production of oil or by any expansion of the importation of oil, no action was taken by the government which would have encouraged further search for and development of new sources of oil and other forms of energy. We have, instead, quibbled with our neighbour to the south as to how we would get the energy assets out of the Arctic. We have, instead, dilly-dallied, fiddle-faddled in every way possible to delay those operations which very well might have put us in a different position.

The government should have followed a few of the charts which were put out by the dailies, the weeklies, the Financial Post and by practically every source of news dissemination that exists in this country. It could, for instance, have looked at the chart which indicated to Canadians that as royalties went up, companies both national and international lost interest in the development and search for new sources of oil. The government could, for instance, have taken a different tax approach, but it did not. It could, for instance, have told the Canadian public that the royalties which are paid in this country today exceed $1,498 million, while the royalties paid five years ago were only $235.2 million.

One could go on and read a great many figures and bore hon. members and anybody else who might wish to look at this report and the statistics, but let us not do that. Let us simply say that every indicator of consumption, of anticipated demand, of movement of exploration, seismic and drilling equipment, operations both offshore and onshore, in the past three years should have shown the government that if we were not to find ourselves in two positions of almost equal catastrophe—one being energy shortage and the other the imbalance of international payments—it should have done something to make us self-sufficient long ago, or promised self-sufficiency in the not too distant future. That did not happen.

While all these things were going on, the Government of Canada sought out scapegoats: it sought out the international consortium, it sought out anybody who made a profit, it sought out the consumer, and it sought out the distributor. It attacked everybody from the little guy who puts gas in your tank to the big guy who takes it out of the ground. Everybody except the government was wrong; everybody else was to blame.

I submit that this has been rape by the government, by design and by the change of philosophy of the Government of Canada under the Liberal Party. It has been application of the philosophy that no one but the government is capable of doing the things Canadians need. I do not believe the voting public of Canada recognized this very slow and subtle philosophical change in the Liberal Party. It has had a reputation in the past of being reasonably alert to the needs of the Canadian people, but at this moment in time it is serving the political philosophies of those in cabinet and ignoring the actual needs of Canadians.

I do not buy all the objections that have been raised by various parties in this House in respect of the big corporations, because the Government of Canada has been able to control the ways and means of making sure it knows where every cent of profit in every company in this country has gone. The government has the ways and means to inflict government regulation or taxation upon those companies if they do not conduct themselves in a fashion which could be termed in the best interests of Canada. So all the taxes imposed on the companies do not get you anywhere except out of oil production.

I am just wondering, as I look at Bill C-8, how this policy is going to be structured and how we are going to get the various people in place. How are we going to gather up the expertise? The companies which have developed over the years have tried and proven employees, people who have shown the capacity to recognize formations where these resources exist. They would not be in the employ of these companies if they did not have that capacity. Where are we going to get the people who are needed with the proper expertise?

We do not have to look very far to see the progress of various business operations as they have taken place to know that expertise is something that is developed over a period of years; it is not something you can legislate or create as a business operation. Surely existing Crown corporations have proven this. Surely the method of appointment to positions of responsibility within these Crown corporations has proven beyond question that there is little hope for the success of Petro-Can if it is to be staffed by the same method. Surely it has been proven that the Government of Canada has never had the capacity to select people of this kind to conduct business in the private sector.

What is even worse about this situation is that the Goliath of government may very well, by its presence in legislation, further inhibit and deter the wish of companies presently in business to take the required action to fill the gap that will necessarily be here until such time as Petro-Can becomes the company which the government foresees. I am as concerned about the socialistic nature of the bill as I am about the lag in time when there will be no motivation for anybody else to develop and no capacity for the government to develop in the next ten years. This is a very serious factor which must be taken into consideration.

[Mr. McCain.]

Had the government chosen to outline to the people of Canada the fact that there are certain aspects of the industry that need help, if the Government of Canada had said in sincerity that it would like to see these aspects owned and developed by Canadians, and if the Government of Canada had followed such a statement by making funds available to presently owned Canadian companies to go forward with this development, even though there might be risk to the taxpayer, there might be some justification for the government's move. If this had been the ways and means adopted to combat these scapegoats on whom the government has been putting the blame for the last five years, then perhaps there would be that justification. The fact is that small though some of these Canadian companies are, they do have the expertise which the Canadian government cannot get overnight and which it needs if this bill is to do what it says it will do. This would have been a reasonable substitute for what we have now.

● (1520)

The government has used a very poor policy in respect of the ownership of our resources because after years of knowledge of the ownership no clear formula has been established by which any private entrepreneur, national or international, would be well advised to invest his capital because he would have no idea of precisely where he would stand. Even if it were on paper, in the present economic climate nobody would know what the government would do next year. There would be no way of knowing whether or not the government would decide to impose a further tax.

Certainly, when the government imposed an income tax on business structures in this country which reduced their profit to nil, or in some cases to less than nil, they were not putting forward policies which would encourage the development of our petroleum-based industries. They may wish to blame it on provinces, they may wish to blame it on luck or anything they like, but their own behaviour has been detrimental to the development of the supply of this vital product—and Bill C-8 will not correct this situation overnight.

As I said earlier, I am concerned about the method and the means of financing this organization. I recall very well the debates that took place in respect of the financing bill for Air Canada and CNR in the last parliament. There was no way in which the minister and the officials responsible were going to place before the committee of the House of Commons the necessary facts and figures to determine whether there was any business justification for some of the moves for which money was being borrowed. In spite of this, money was borrowed.

Will it be the same for Petro-Can? Will we find ourselves, as taxpayers, in an identical position? I wonder about this and I am concerned about it. Will the government, for instance, through its right to buy shares, be able to pour money through the back door of the company to the detriment of the private enterprise which might be left, and then put it in a competitive position in which it will be the sole operator? Is it the intention to nationalize the entire oil structure? I sometimes wonder if that is not precisely what it is, hidden though it may be. The sincerity of the government must be challenged, and it is high time they levelled with us. It is my feeling that there has been blatant exploitation of the minds of millions of Canadians who have no way of knowing what is best for them except what they are told by their leaders.

I submit that the justification for the bill before us is a group of misleading statements intended to create a climate of political feeling which might make it possible for the government to pass Bill C-8 and thus socialize a large section of our economy. When we do that, we may very well find ourselves not only lacking money for the development of the company but lacking money to buy the oil we will need.

In the name of democracy, this is another step in the paralytic, socialistic program of the Trudeau administration. As usual, leadership, management and ingenuity, characteristic of our own development as a nation, are utterly lacking in the present government. I sincerely hope that some rules and regulations will be laid down and they will become a part of this act, so that we are not writing another blank cheque for a political party to appoint its defeated candidates to find oil for Canada for generations to come.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have before us Bill C-8 to establish a national petroleum company. I find it very interesting that no Liberal speakers other than the minister have risen to defend this bill. I think they are rather embarrassed by it. Also, of course, the Conservatives are criticizing it most vociferously, as is indicated by their "head in the sand" approach to the whole energy crisis in this country!

An hon. Member: It is not the head that is in the sand, but the oil.

Mr. Symes: If you dig a little deeper you might find oil, fellows, but I do not think so. The point is that this bill has some potential, but knowing the Liberal cabinet and traditional Liberal governments, I am afraid it appears to be mere tokenism in solving the vast energy problems of this country. I was rather intrigued by the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) when he opened the debate on this bill and I would like to read what he said as reported in Hansard:

> This bill is a most important element in the government's long-term planning to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs. It is firmly rooted in the basic objectives of our energy and resource policies which are to ensure for Canadians adequate and reliable supplies at reasonable prices, as well as a direct share in the wealth which development of our resources generates.

Isn't that interesting? There, in a nutshell, is supposed to be the national energy policy; that is to say, adequate and reliable supplies, reasonable prices, and a direct share in the wealth of our resources. I would like to analyse that statement of the minister, look at the so-called aims of the government and see whether they have been fulfilled at all or whether it is possible, under this government, to fulfil those three objectives.

The first thing the minister wants in a national energy policy is adequate and reliable supplies of oil. The first question is, adequate and reliable supplies for whom? I ask this question because if we look at the development of the oil industry in this country we see that because it is over 90 per cent owned by multinational, foreign oil companies, someone must benefit other than Canadians. The past history of the development of our resources of oil is that we have exported over half our supplies to the United States because the oil industry in this country is American-controlled. As a result, today we have a crisis in supply.

If the minister is serious about the importance of having adequate and reliable supplies, a long time ago this government would have told the National Energy Board to do some independent analyses to determine the extent of our oil reserves, instead of taking the figures of the oil companies verbatim; because if the oil companies wanted to export oil, being foreign-owned it was to their advantage to keep telling this government and the National Energy Board that our oil supplies would last for tens and tens of years into the future, to the end of the decade and beyond. But we have found out very recently, through a new National Energy Board report with respect to which some independent analysis work was done, that Canada is facing an energy shortage with regard to oil: within two years we will begin to see problems of indigenous supply and by 1982 we will become a net importer of oil.

If there had been any seriousness about having an adequate and reliable supply, it seems to me a government such as the previous Liberal government or its Conservative predecessor would have asked the National Energy Board to undertake an independent analysis. It was not done and as a result we are now paying for that lack of foresight.

The New Democratic Party, in the twenty-ninth parliament, argued vigorously for something to be done to control the exports to the United States, and because we were in a minority parliament and had some power in terms of votes we were able to convince the government, although it wanted to continue these exports, to impose some export controls. I would remind the House that in 1972 we were exporting 1.1 million barrels a day and by 1973 we had increased the figure to 1.3 million barrels a day. At that time we were exhausting our chief, known conventional oil reserves in Alberta at a rate which was detrimental to this country, and we were able to pressure the government into cutting back on oil exports. This is now a belated and accepted policy to serve Canadian interests.

Because we are now running short of oil, we have to look for oil in more expensive areas, that is, from the Athabasca oil sands, the High Arctic or bringing in expensive synthetic oil. When we consider the past development of our oil supply system, we see that it has been primarily of advantage to the multinationals and their markets in the United States because they have been able to tap our cheap, known oil reserves. Now that we are running short we have to pay higher prices for our own oil because we have to get it from more expensive sources.

The interesting thing is that when we look at the multinational oil companies and their plans for future development of sources of oil in this country, they are still using the argument that to make the development of the oil sands, or the Arctic oil, profitable not only must they have a higher price but they must have the right to export that oil. They argue that to bring it from the Arctic, large volumes are needed to obtain economies of scale; the market in western Canada is not large enough to absorb it, so the oil will have to be exported. Unless we reverse that kind of thinking we will be perpetuating the mistakes that we made back in the 1950s and 1960s by continuing to export a precious resource and not really thinking about the future needs of Canada. As long as the oil industry is 90 per cent foreign-controlled we will be up against this problem and we will not be able to ensure adequate and reliable supplies of oil.

On the first ground, the government has failed in its energy policy to ensure reliable supplies for Canada, and it will be touch and go in the years ahead to ensure an adequate supply. As I have maintained, if we do not regain some control over our oil industry we will still have to succumb to those arguments which put us into this predicament in the first place. The second part of the minister's national energy policy is said to give Canadians oil at reasonable prices. That is very interesting. Let me go back just briefly. In 1972, oil sold in this country at $2.80 a barrel. The price of oil imported into eastern Canada from Venezuela and the Middle East was about $2.50 a barrel. By 1973, as the world oil crisis began to develop, the companies in Canada were able to pressure the price of oil up from $2.80 to $3.80 a barrel. A year later, in 1974, it went up to $6.50 a barrel. In a month or so there will be another first ministers' energy conference and I predict that our oil, which is now priced at $6.50 a barrel, will soon be $8.50.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in many statements keep referring to moving the Canadian price up to the world price which now ranges anywhere between $11 and $13 a barrel. Indeed, the commitment to the Syncrude project in the Athabasca oil sands already guarantees the world price for oil coming from Alberta. Studies show that this price will continue to escalate from about $13 a barrel at the time the plant comes into operation at the end of this decade up to an incredible figure of $35 a barrel in the year 2003.

Will we have reasonable prices under the energy policy of this government? I say no, because the interesting thing about the pricing which I have described for conventional crude is that the cost of production has not increased; indeed, for the conventional crude supplies coming out of the ground now in Alberta, the cost of production in some cases has declined. Companies were quite content with $2.80 a barrel in 1972; today they are receiving $6.50 and because of that consumers have to pay more. Every time one fills a home heating oil tank or drives up to a gas pump, the difference can be seen.

We often think of energy just in terms of heating a home or running a car. We must also remember that when energy prices increase, so do prices in all other areas of our economy. Farmers, who are consumers of the largest amounts of fuel, have to pay more to operate their combines and tractors, which means that food prices increase. If a manufacturing plant has to pay more for its energy supply, that extra cost is reflected in the cost of the manufactured product.

A policy of reasonable prices, as a goal of this government in terms of energy, has failed. I refer again to the previous parliament, when in the winter months of 1973 we were able to maintain a voluntary freeze on the price of oil products in this country. The government would have been quite willing to take it off that January, but we said we would defeat them on the issue and go to the people and they backed down. We also pressed for an export tax so that the windfall gains resulting from the lower Canadian price would not go automatically to the oil companies when our oil was exported to the United States and Americans bought it at the world price. In that sense we gained a bit of an advantage, but now in this majority situation the government has full sway and they are allowing prices to increase.

As long as we have the situation where one half of the country is dependent on western oil, and the area east of the Ottawa Valley is dependent on oil from Venezuela and the Middle East—because we have no all-Canadian pipeline—we will be in a dilemma as to how to achieve a Canadian price at a level lower than the world price, a level related to cost or a level which, by consensus between government and industry, is to the advantage of Canada.

If we could have a two-price system for oil, and if we could keep the price of our oil below the exaggerated and artificial world level, it would be of advantage to our manufacturing industry wherein jobs are created and it would give industry some stimulus and advantage in world trade. But we cannot do that unless as part of this government's energy policy we have a pipeline to eastern Canada in order to get western Canadian oil to the east or, vice versa, offshore oil to the west.

The Sarnia to Montreal pipeline proposal is really laughable. The pipeline is not big enough to carry the volume of oil that is needed in the east or, if it is reversible, in the west. Another point is interesting, too, and I shall come back to it later. The oil industry is asking the government to subsidize operating costs. We are now at the point, because of lack of foresight and lack of policy, of allowing the oil industry in this country to be foreign-owned, where we are faced with paying higher and higher prices for oil. I say the government has failed on that point and I do not see anything in this bill or in the intentions of the government to stop this artificial escalation in oil prices.

● (1540)

The third part of the minister's energy policy which intrigues me is his aim to have the people of Canada own a direct share in the wealth of our energy resources. I assume that would come about through our tax policies and a fair economic rent on the oil that is in the country, and therefore it should benefit Canadians. Looking at the past policies of the government, I do not see how anyone in his right mind could say that we have had a direct and fair share in our resources. In 1969, 79 per cent of the mining industry and the owners of the oil and gas wells in this country paid no federal income tax whatsoever. To take it from the general to the particular, in the period 1965 to 1971 Imperial Oil, the Canadian subsidiary of the multinational Exxon, paid income tax at the rate of 19 per cent on net earnings of over $1.5 billion.

The Minister of Finance likes to bring forth the fact that corporations are taxed at a rate of around 50 per cent, but look at Imperial's rate of 19 per cent for those years: that was the tax rate, in that period, for a married man with a wife and two children who earned only $11,000 a year. This is the government's idea of a fair share of the wealth of the oil industry. Another example in the years 1964 to 1969 is Shell Oil Company, also a subsidiary of an American parent. It had net earnings of over $516 million, and did not pay one penny in federal income tax. Not one cent of economic gain through taxes came to this government.

I have given examples of the tax policy of the middle 1960s and early 1970s. Since oil prices have escalated so dramatically in this country, we have a situation where oil companies are receiving record profits. One should read the financial pages to see the figures for the past two years. In the third quarter of 1974 the profits earned by Western Oils increased 103 per cent over the same period of 1973. Gulf Oil had an after-tax profit for 1969 of $45.5 million. In 1973 their profit jumped to $101.7 million, and in 1974 it increased to $161 million, a 60 per cent increase in one year. Nor can Imperial Oil cry poverty. In 1969 its after-tax profits were $96 million; by 1973 they were $228 million and, while we do not have the complete figures for 1974, in the first nine months of that year their profits were $252 million.

What kind of share of those revenues is the government getting through its tax system? I say, very little, in light of the tax concessions given to those companies. Prior to the 1974 budget an automatic depreciation allowance was given to the oil companies. They could deduct one-third of their production profits according to a depletion formula. That has now been changed to an earned depletion with a maximum of 25 per cent—a minor improvement, and rather negligible when you look at today's profit figures. Not only did they have a depreciation allowance in the past, but there was also a 100 per cent write-off of exploration and development costs. This has now been reduced to 30 per cent. It always amuses me to see the advertisements on television in which the oil companies tell the Canadian public how expensive it is to find oil. They do not tell the other side of the story, that all that expense, up to the last budget, could be written off for tax purposes.

The share of the profits from the oil that belongs to the people of Canada has not been accruing to the people, through the tax policy of this government, nor is it likely to do so in the years ahead. Through concessions, Canada has given all kinds of capital to oil companies and in return we have been paying higher and higher prices for oil. The minister says we should be getting a share of the earnings of these multinationals—Gulf, Shell, Imperial, Texaco, etc.—but if he and the government had been serious we would have seen a change in the budget. The concessions in the budget are still there to a large degree.

The other point that we must always come back to is this: because over 90 per cent of the oil industry is foreign-owned, the money this government does not tax does not necessarily stay in the country to benefit Canadians. We find that the outflow of dividends from the subsidiaries in Canada to American multinational oil companies amounts to over 18 per cent. We are often told that the advantage of multinationals is that in return they can provide capital for Canadian subsidiaries to develop resources.

During the 1960s, the amount of capital inflow to the oil companies was only 17 per cent. They are sending out 18 per cent, or more than they are getting through capital inflow. When you analyse the tax concessions in percentage terms for the past decade or so, you find we are paying out about 38 per cent of the capital of the oil companies. Not only do we give them money through tax concessions, but they come to the government for direct grants. Imperial Oil is in the process of building a fertilizer plant at Redwater, Alberta, which was designed by a California company. The plant is not being built by Canadians but by engineers from the California construction company. To boot, by building a fence down the middle of the site of the fertilizer plant, Imperial Oil was able to get two DREE grants from this government amounting to some $10 million. Not only do these poor oil companies which are making so little money get tax concessions, but they get direct government grants as well. However, the minister still says we are benefiting from the economic grant of our resources.

Syncrude is another example of the kind of bad deal this government has perpetrated. However, I have dealt with this matter in other speeches and I will let it go for now. If we really want a national oil company to fulfil the aims of the minister, namely, to have an adequate supply at a reasonable price for Canadians and a reasonable share of the wealth of our oil industry, then in light of past exploitation through allowing the industry to be in the hands of another country, and the present energy crisis in terms of supply and price, the logical step is to have public ownership and control of the oil industry in Canada.

If we follow the pattern of the fifties and the sixties, what arguments can my friends in the Conservative Party, or anyone else, put forward to say that that kind of mistake will not be repeated in years to come? The pattern is there. The crisis is here, now, because of that pattern. However, we still hear arguments that we must leave the industry entirely in the control of the multinational oil companies. If that is the problem, we must find a solution, and the solution is public ownership and control. We should look at oil as we look at electricity. The oil industry should be a public utility, run by the people of Canada through a publicly-owned corporation, for the benefit of Canadians.

I now come to the bill. The Liberal government has belatedly put before the House this bill to establish a national petroleum company. A crisis had to develop before they recognized the necessity of the Canadian people, through their government, having some control over the industry. When you look at the bill in print, you see it has sweeping terms of reference and wide powers. In my short experience in this House I have learned not to trust what is down in black and white but to examine the philosophy and intent of the government of the day. When I see the Minister of Finance listen to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and then start qualifying the degree of involvement that this national petroleum company will have in the whole oil industry, I conclude it will be totally inadequate: it will be mere tokenism as long as we have a Liberal government trying to administer it. In my opinion, this is an attempt belatedly to recognize the fact that we need some public control. However, there is fear on the part of the government to seize the bull by the horns and take direct and positive action; this is the problem.

What are the plans of the Liberal government for this national petroleum company? I do not want to sound as though I am predicting. I hope I am wrong when I say that the same thing will happen as has happened with the transportation industry in this country; this government will end up subsidizing the oil companies in unprofitable areas. Just as our existing Crown corporations run by Liberals tend to subsidize the private sector by taking over and operating the inefficient areas, the multinationals will require the national petroleum company to do the same. The national petroleum company will be given the task of exploring in less promising areas. It will only have minority involvement or control in some of the major energy developments in this country. I therefore conclude it will not fulfil its real purpose. It will be mere window-dressing by only being involved in some insignificant joint ventures, leaving the multinational oil companies firmly in control of policy related to supply and price.

A more positive step by this government would be to use the national petroleum company to take over the largest company in this country, Imperial Oil, and use that company as a pace-setter or model for the rest of the country. In other words, through Imperial Oil we would be able to set prices, exploration policy and energy development generally. With that kind of action the national petroleum company would really mean something. However, I very much doubt that the government will move in that direction. It would be a splendid opportunity for Canada and future Canadians to regain control of our resources; we would be able to set prices, control supplies and hire Canadians to develop those resources.

We have the ability in this country; we have modern support industries which could build the components for any energy development; we have engineers and technologists who have graduated from our universities, and we have the financing available. The only people left with any great inferiority complex are the members of the Liberal and Conservative parties who always say we cannot do this by ourselves, we need the multinationals to do it for us. Surely we can learn from our mistakes of the past, namely, allowing the multinationals to exploit our national resources.

I appeal to the silent Liberal backbenchers to stand up and argue before the minister and the House that we need a national petroleum company with some power and not mere tokenism. To fail to move in the direction of public ownership of our resource industries will perpetuate the sell-out of our national resources. To fail to act meaningfully, positively and vigorously by means of public ownership at this time will result in future generations cursing us for our short-sightedness. This is not the time for half-measures; it is the time for full public control and ownership of our energy resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to say a few words on this bill which establishes Petro-Canada. I have noted the rather grudging support of the NDP for a national petroleum corporation. I am somewhat disappointed at the calibre of the opposition offered by the Conservative Party with regard to Bill C-8 which proposes to establish a national petroleum corporation. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) submitted this bill for second reading last Tuesday and articulated the rationale for a national petroleum corporation, we honestly expected opposition to this matter to be based on substance or the approach of the bill, rather than the time-worn and outmoded argument that private enterprise is being undermined. This is what the PCs seem to be promoting. I think the stage has been reached at which members of the Conservative Party should accept the fact that private enterprise, for all its dynamism and strategic role in Canada's economy, cannot meet all the demands imposed on it.

● (1600)

Bill C-8 represents a bold and constructive effort by this government to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our long-term national needs. As spelled out by the minister last week, the basic objectives of our energy and resource policies are designed to ensure adequate and reliable supplies at reasonable prices and to acquire a direct share in the wealth which development of our resources generates. We cannot allow ourselves to become embedded in an ideological quagmire that will ultimately sink us into economic disaster. Instead, we must recognize that the role of government is going to increase steadily in areas where the private sector is unable to satisfactorily meet all requirements.

The government has always recognized the vital role of private enterprise in the growth and development of this country and it has no intention of curtailing its continued participation in Canada's future. But the complexities of international trade and the gigantic appetite for energy generated by sophisticated industrial societies dictate greater supervision and control of our economies than can be achieved by a laissez-faire approach.

The decision to propose legislation to establish a national petroleum company was taken only after an extensive and thorough examination of Canada's long-term energy needs. There is no point in trying to devise instant remedies for problems after they arise if we can avoid such pitfalls by taking sound and far sighted initiative which will ensure a steady supply of energy on a long-term basis. To be confident of adequate supplies we need to know as much as possible about the extent and mix of energy resources available in Canada. We have reason to believe that Canada is generously endowed with several energy products—oil, natural gas, uranium and coal. However, our present knowledge as to the extent of Canadian resources of these commodities is limited. In addition, the costs associated with finding and producing these resources cannot be known until they have been located. Some will be in the remote locations of the Canadian north or in underwater locations; others, such as the oil sands of Alberta or the heavy oils of Saskatchewan and Alberta, require the development of new technology to permit extraction of the larger potentials of these resources.

Success in finding large amounts of oil, gas and uranium will permit Canadians to have confidence in the security of their energy supplies and permit the holding of a level of resources adequate to ensure long-term Canadian needs. The government has taken numerous steps over the years to encourage exploration for these reasons. The investment climate in the industry was supported by our national oil policy ensuring the opportunity to sell Canadian output in Canadian markets. Tax or royalty policies have been framed with the objective of balancing investment incentives and a sharing of the profits of the sale of these resources.

The government has, in recent years, prohibited increased export commitments in natural gas and has limited the export of oil and petroleum products to ensure adequate supplies for Canadian needs. The government has recently indicated its intention to see to the building of a pipeline to Montreal to carry Canadian crude oil to this market which currently depends virtually entirely on imported petroleum.

The federal government has also made numerous investments in energy industries. Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. has explored for uranium; Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. has developed a successful technology for nuclear electricity generation; Panarctic Oils Ltd. has explored for oil and gas in the Arctic Islands in a joint venture between the Government of Canada and several private firms. These, along with the recently announced Syncrude project, are the most prominent examples of federal investments to develop energy capacity for Canadians.

A large amount of money is needed to carry out further exploration. This work must be done over the coming few tears to locate additional reserves to be made available to the market as the presently known reserves begin to fall short of Canadian needs. The territory which is regarded as promising is vast. The task is a large one. Canadian petroleum resources are known to include a vast potential in the oil sands and heavy oils. There remain, however, significant technological advances to be achieved if the largest portion of these resources is to be extracted.

The government is anxious to ensure that exploration and research activities are undertaken in the expectation that they will yield quantities of oil and gas which are comfortably sufficient for projected Canadian needs over the short and long term. If the resource base proves to be large, it would be our aim to develop as much of these assets as is compatible with our goals for industrial development, employment and high income levels as well as those of security of supply, regional development and environmental protection.

The present prospects for substantial reserves being found are high. The results of drillings to date in the north and of other geological and geophysical work are promising, particularly with respect to natural gas. Similarly, eastern offshore exploratory work has located some gas but not yet in commercially viable quantities. The exploratory work is dependent on the investment decisions of private firms in the industry. These firms quite properly look to the immediate production of resources they discover in order to realize returns on their investment. The holding of significant reserves which would provide a longer period of protection for projected Canadian needs is more properly a public responsibility.

Petro-Canada

The national petroleum company will be empowered to undertake some exploration in Canadian frontier regions and to participate in the funding of research into oil sands and heavy oil production. This company will also be available to stimulate further exploration in the frontier regions. The large job of satisfactorily exploring these areas can be accelerated by the participation of this agency of government. The fuller information on Canadian energy resources and their costs which this should provide will make easier the task of formulating public policy in energy. With this information we will be able to decide more confidently on the acceptable rate of production. The government will be able to avoid an unreasonable increase in prices dictated by a few producing countries prepared to make political use of their oil production. In addition, to its own activities and success, this company will receive for the Canadian public a share of the wealth created by these resources.

In its exploration activities, the corporation will seek to stimulate activity by entering into joint ventures with private firms or by entering into other relationships appropriate to this industry. In this way, smaller Canadian ventures which currently find it difficult to sustain the costly and lengthy exploration effort will be able to participate with others and with a national petroleum company in this work.

In view of the significance which new technological developments in oil sands and heavy oils would have for petroleum supply in Canada, the government is prepared to share the financial burden of this research and development. With respect to the oil sands, this research and development will be undertaken co-operatively with the province of Alberta and those companies in the private sector which have an interest in such work. Federal participation will be accomplished through the national petroleum company so that it can participate in the making of new technology available with benefits for Canadians.

Research is also called for in the development of a capability to extract heavy oils from the deposits in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In addition, the government would want to encourage other promising research into fuels technology. The national petroleum company could stimulate, support and participate in such research.

● (1610)

The government looks to this corporation to help contribute to an increased Canadian presence in the petroleum exploration business. Foreign investment in this effort has not been and will not be refused where it is compatible with Canadian interests. Nevertheless, Canada has the financial and other resources to play a more significant role in the exploration for and development of its petroleum resources. This corporation could add to the Canadian presence by its operations and could seek to operate jointly with Canadian and foreign firms undertaking exploratory activity in Canada.

The exploration and research roles of the national petroleum company would, therefore, have several objectives: first, to advance the definition of the Canadian energy resource base; second, to hold reserves adequate to ensure Canadian security of supply; third, to stimulate the private sector to further exploration and research work by means of joint ventures; fourth, to permit energy policies to be formulated with fuller knowledge of the volume and cost of Canadian energy resources; fifth, to achieve a greater Canadian presence and acquire a share of the wealth accruing to investors in the petroleum industry; and sixth, to help stimulate improved technology in the production and use of energy from whatever sources are most appropriate.

I should make clear that commitments of this sort are not free from risk. We do, however, have confidence in the Canadian resource potential, and Petro-Canada will be an important instrument in its development. I should also point out that results cannot be expected overnight. This marks the beginning of what will inevitably be a long road marked by successes and disappointments, but contributing in the end to both Canadian income and security of supply.

In this general task of exploration and research for the identification of Canadian energy reserves there is considerable opportunity for all those interested to play a part. The area is vast, the demand for petroleum is large and increasing, and Canadian policy supports balanced development under appropriate safeguards of Canadian interests. The national petroleum company will contribute, along with the present and future investors, to these developments.

Turning now from the development of Canadian resources, an important role may develop for the national petroleum company in the importing of foreign petroleum. While steps are being taken to move Canadian crude to Montreal to supply some of this market, we will continue to look to foreign production to fill a portion of our national petroleum needs. It is, therefore, of considerable importance that all possible steps be taken to achieve the greatest possible security of those imported supplies.

The government may be able to play an important role in purchasing petroleum and petroleum products from foreign markets. The international petroleum markets have been changing and foreign supplies are increasingly in the hands of the governments of producing countries. It is the government's intention to equip itself to deal with these and other suppliers where they are able to provide secure supplies for Canadian needs. The national petroleum company will, if the need arises, operate in international markets as a purchaser of petroleum.

The federal government has long been active in energy industries. The government currently owns an uranium exploration company, Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., an uranium holding company, Uranium Canada Ltd., a 45 per cent interest in a company engaged in exploration in the Arctic Islands, Panarctic Oils Ltd., and a coal deposit in British Columbia, namely, Dominion Coal block which accounts for something like 10 per cent of Canada's entire reserves of coal. These ventures all involve raw materials which are used to produce energy.

Energy sources are interchangeable in many uses. Homes can be heated, for example, by energy in the form of electricity, oil, gas or coal. Electricity can be generated from water power or from oil, gas or coal-fueled turbines. Nuclear reactors using uranium in the Canadian developed CANDU process have proven highly successful in the generation of electricity. This interchangeability will be effected over time by new technological developments and by the costs involved in using one or other of these energy sources in different applications.

Whether under public or private direction, a significant part of Canadian economic activity is located in energy-producing activities. The largest part of this production is vital to other Canadian industrial activities and to the support of the Canadian lifestyle. With its rigorous climate, vast geography and traditionally high living standards, Canada takes a special economic interest in its energy sector. The government has always recognized the special status of this industry. The creation of the national petroleum company will add to the instruments available to the Government of Canada to advance Canadian interests in secure and adequate energy supplies and in the sharing of the wealth which Canadian resource endowments make possible.

I am certainly pleased that this bill has been endorsed by some members of the opposition. I think it is reasonable to expect that the rest of the opposition will recognize the need for this kind of legislation so that the government can better promote long-term energy supplies for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the primary objective of Bill C-8 is to establish a Crown-owned petroleum company within the petroleum industry. In this bill, Petro-Canada is given the authority to explore, develop and exploit hydrocarbon deposits within and without Canada; to carry out research and development projects related to hydrocarbons in other fields; to engage in exploration, production, distribution, refining and marketing of fuel; and, finally, to negotiate for and acquire petroleum products from abroad.

In other words, this bill will give this Crown corporation authority to do everything and anything related to the petroleum industry, from filling gas tanks, changing tires, to running seismic surveys in the South China Sea. No government agency should be given this kind of authority to waste the taxpayers' money; we would be shirking our responsibility if we permitted them to do so. We in this party are opposed to this concept. We are opposed to the establishment of Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation with authority granted to it by this bill. We are opposed for a great number of reasons, but five of the major ones are: first, and probably most important, it simply is not needed; second it is going to be very costly to the taxpayers of Canada, and Lord knows, when filling out income tax returns at this time of year all taxpayers become aware that they are already overtaxed. We need less calls upon our money, not more, and this particular call will be virtually a money sump in terms of expenditure of taxpayers' dollars.

The third reason is that it could, and likely will, be harmful to the existing industry, and rather than aiding our supply situation will in fact exacerbate it, resulting in diminished security of supply for Canadians instead of enhanced security of supply. The fourth reason is that it will deflect public and official attention away from what is the major and significant problem in energy supply in this country, namely, the total lack of a national energy policy. The government's remedy of creating a Crown corporation so that it will not have to bother addressing itself to this problem or to finding solutions is totally unsatisfactory.

The fifth reason is simply that there are better ways of accomplishing all of the intended goals of Petro-Canada, and indeed of lot of other goals that are not set out as intended goals for Petro-Canada but which should be the intended goals of a rational, national energy policy.

● (1620)

As to the question of whether a national petroleum company is needed, one really need look no further than the government's own document to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) referred last Wednesday when speaking on second reading of this bill. He claimed it was published by himself, and I suppose it was, in July, 1973. It contains an extensive discussion of the pros and cons of a national petroleum company in pages 186 to 191 inclusive.

In his comments on this document last Wednesday during the discussion on a national petroleum company, the minister indicated that the arguments pro and con roughly balanced out. That is hogwash. They balance out numerically only in that there are ten reasons for, and nine against. If one looks at the document, examines it and reads the arguments with the least bit of objectivity, he cannot help but reach the conclusion that a national petroleum company is not needed nor is it desirable.

The minister indicated in his remarks that although this report did not in fact come out in favour of a national petroleum company, events subsequent to its publication have caused him to change his mind. I would ask, how much subsequent to that does he mean? In a speech on October 25, 1973, about four months after this document was published, the minister more or less indicated to the House that he had decided in favour of a national petroleum company. One cannot help but reach the conclusion that the minister decided for his own reasons, philosophical or whatever, that a national petroleum company was to be created. He decided he was going to build this empire as one of his accomplishments, perhaps with which to launch his leadership bid upon the retirement of the present leader of the Liberal Party. Who knows why he wanted to create this empire? The fact is that his own document, which I commend to him for reading, states that there is no reason for a national petroleum company because it is not needed.

An hon. Member: He wants to be another Pickersgill.

Mr. Andre: I did commend officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources when they initially published this document. On many occasions since I have commended this document to members opposite and I would suggest that they and the minister should read it. A lot of time and money has gone into its preparation and it contains a lot of good advice. It has come out under the minister's signature, so will hon. members please read the darn thing and follow its advice, instead of floundering around wasting the taxpayers' money and putting our future security in jeopardy?

What are the reasons or arguments pro and con given in this document? As I said, they come out roughly equal numerically, but anyone who looks at them objectively will find that the reasons pro are very thin indeed. For example, it states as argument number one that probably the greatest advantage of a national petroleum company is the social benefit to Canadians in pride, satisfaction and confidence in owning part of the petroleum industry operating in Canada. I suggest we can have that same sense of pride in Petro-Can that we now all have in the Post Office and those other great examples of efficient and smooth-operating government operations. What a lot of poppycock! Ask any Canadian which railway company fills him with pride, the CNR or the CPR.

An hon. Member: The CNR.

Mr. Andre: You had better read Pierre Berton's book. Does Air Canada fill us full of pride? Every experienced traveller that I know of tries to fly CP. Let us consider that successful Crown corporation, Polymer. The most successful part of its operations are international, with headquarters in Belgium. This Crown corporation has its international headquarters in Belgium because it finds the tax and fiscal régime in Canada oppressive. Compare Polymer with CIL an other Canadian company of roughly the same size in terms of capitalization, to see which one out-performs the other.

The Canada Development Corporation is another great Crown corporation that will fill us all full of pride. It recently moved its headquarters to The Netherlands because it could not operate under Canada's tax and fiscal régime. This would be almost laughable if it were not so sad and did not cost Canadian taxpayers so much in terms of money and pride. Anybody who looks at it must feel a little sick to realize that a Crown corporation like the Canada Development Corporation must move to The Netherlands to find a tax régime which will allow it to operate at a profit. This is incredible.

The second reason given in this document for establishing a national petroleum company is that there is a need to increase the level of knowledge of all phases of the operation of the petroleum industry. Whose level of knowledge does that speak of? Clearly, it is the government's. I cannot argue with the suggestion that the government's level of knowledge is insufficient, because that has been amply demonstrated to us. What this amounts to is an admission of incompetence.

With the many hundreds, even thousands of advisers in this huge pyramid behind the minister, they come out with the admission that they really do not have any knowledge of the oil industry. Is this the only way they can gain knowledge, by going into the oil business? As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said at one time in the House, and I paraphrase him, he had never laid an egg but he did not have to be a hen to know how to make an omelette. He said that in reply to the challenge that he had no knowledge about a subject, and his reply is precisely applicable in this situation.

If the government lacks knowledge, then, for goodness sake, it should fire the individuals who are currently responsible for gathering that knowledge, because there is no reason for them to lack knowledge about any aspect of the oil industry. It is one of the most regulated industries in the world. Companies cannot get permits without applications to the National Energy Board. That board is constantly holding hearings on one subject or another. The industry is regulated in terms of exports. It is not allowed to drill without provincial permits. There is virtually no aspect of the industry that companies are allowed to engage in without getting a permit of one kind or another. Surely this provides the government with all the knowledge it needs.

If there is any truth in the suggestion that the government can get the necessary knowledge by going into the oil industry, then I would point out that the government has been running the Post Office for a good many years so why in the heck does it not have the knowledge to run it properly? Senator Manning, in a speech in Calgary last Wednesday, stated that any group of oil men in Calgary forgot more between supper and breakfast about the industry than any equivalent number of bureaucrats here in Ottawa would ever learn.

The third reason given in this document is that a national petroleum company could play a role in determining the criteria on which the government might base its policy regarding economic rent collection. Here, again, we have an admission of incompetence. This is an admission that in fact the finance department, in coming up with its scheme for taxation of the resource industry, did not know what it was doing: that is what this document says. They do not know how to collect an economic rent; that is patently obvious. We do not need this statement to know that; we need only look at what has happened to the oil and gas industry, the decrease in the amount of exploration and development that has taken place, and the decreasing supplies in proven, recoverable reserves to realize what serious damage has occurred as a result of the government's tax policies.

However, another aspect which worries me more than ignorance on the part of the government is that this is tantamount to stating that the government has adopted what amounts to a socialist philosophy. I hesitate to use that phrase because it sounds so noisy, so extreme. However, I have always been taught in school, and I still believe it, that the role of government is to fulfil certain expectations and certain obligations through its regulatory functions, its function of redistribution of income, and through a variety of activities which it is called upon to perform. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) called this civilization; I say it is the role of government.

The purpose of taxation is to provide funds to enable the government to fulfil these functions. That is why I and other Canadians pay taxes. We are contributing our bit to maintaining the government in the fulfilment of its roles and obligations. However, what this statement indicates is that in fact the government feels that the total income from the economy belongs to the central government, and that its role is simply to split up the income and then see how much will be left in the private sector. The government wishes to leave enough in the private sector and then find ways of spending what is left. This is a reversal of everything I have believed, have accepted, or have been taught.

[Mr. Andre.]

I think we have reached a very sad state if in fact the philosophy of our government is that they own all the income and have first call on everything that an individual might earn or might gain as a result of his investment, and that we should be grateful for what is left in our hands. I cannot accept that philosophy.

The fourth argument is that a national petroleum company, if it controls sufficiently large volumes of petroleum reserves, will be able to exert an influence on the setting of crude oil and petroleum products' prices. That is a specious argument. The government has prices totally under control. What in the blazes is a national petroleum company going to do? Is it going to fight with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about what the level should be? How can this sort of argument be put forward at the same time as a measure such as Bill C-32 is brought forward?

The fifth argument in the list of arguments in favour of the establishment of a national petroleum company is that such a company would encourage the upgrading and sale of refined products rather than crude oil. We have recently been told by the National Energy Board that very soon Canada will not have oil to sell in any form, crude or refined; indeed, we may not have enough oil with which to heat our homes. So that certainly is an invalid argument.

The sixth argument is that the major integrated oil companies carry out the bulk of their research in the country of their parent corporation, and that a national petroleum company would carry out its research in Canada. That is the first argument that makes some sense. But I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does not need reminding that we have the National Research Council, we have a research group in his department which used to be called the mines branch, we have a new energy institute funded by federal moneys in Alberta, we have the Alberta Research Council and the Saskatchewan Research Council, and we have the Petroleum Recovery Research Institute in Alberta. I have named just a few of the research institutes in Canada.

That there should be more money available for research in energy is self-evident, or should be to anybody who has paid attention to the recently published Science Council report. That cannot be argued. But that we need a national petroleum company to funnel the moneys into this research effort is an argument that does not stand up.

The seventh argument is that all aspects of the operations of a national petroleum company would be located in Canada and that we would derive certain benefits therefrom because other petroleum companies have branches of their operations in foreign companies. I do not know how the minister can ensure that the management of this company will have sufficient freedom to operate independently and still guarantee that they will stay in Canada. We have had the recent example, to which reference was made earlier, of another Crown corporation, the Canadian Development Corporation, which moved its headquarters to The Netherlands because it found that it was not profitable to operate in Canada. Is that not an indictment of this government's policies?

The eighth argument is that a national petroleum company would purchase more Canadian-produced goods than other petroleum companies. Again, if it is a commercial enterprise it will purchase its supplies and goods on a normal commercial basis. If, in fact, the industrial situation, the tax situation and the fiscal situation in Canada are such that most companies go outside our borders to find their supplies, the solution lies in a change in the policies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford), and possibly of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), to stimulate demand.

The ninth argument is a beauty. It is that a national petroleum company would act to stimulate regional development in specific areas of the country. Can you see it doing so? Will our national petroleum company drill for oil somewhere where we need economic activity, instead of where geologists and geophysicists tell us it is to be found? The definition of the drilling program will be to look for oil where there is a weak Liberal candidate running and to drill a well in his constituency. It is patently absurd to suggest that any oil company will establish a drilling program on the basis of regional development. However, this is not the first absurd notion we have had from this government.

The tenth argument is that a national petroleum company could play an active role in government relations with other state-owned oil companies from which we import oil. Granted, this could be a role played by the corporation, but we already have a whole spate of Crown corporations which could play that commercial role. Now that the Minister of Supply and Services has some experience in buying oil, perhaps we can go to him.

These are the ten arguments on why we should establish a national petroleum company. Two of them hold a little water, eight are patently absurd and two or three are downright laughable. On the other side, eight arguments are put forward on why the establishment of a national petroleum company at this time is not a good idea. What are the eight arguments? The first argument is that it will cost a lot of money. Darn right it will cost a lot of money! This document estimates that $3 billion to $6 billion will be needed to develop the corporation to a state where it is a significant unit within the oil industry. That is a very conservative estimate. A reasonable estimate of how much of the taxpayers' money will be used before this Crown corporation can reach the stage where it can become a significant factor in the oil industry would be closer to $50 billion.

It is downright irresponsible for any member of this House to give a government agency the authority to spend that amount of our money in an activity about which it knows very little, has demonstrated considerable incompetence, and in an activity for which it is not necessary to have government directly involved.

The second item in this document points out quite clearly that this would be a bad investment and that we will likely get little or nothing back on our money when it is spent. The third item admits that it will be very difficult for a Crown corporation to compete with the private companies. That is a fact. The Crown corporation, without special privileges which will cost us money, cannot compete with the private sector in this high-risk industry. The fourth item acknowledges the point I raised earlier, that in fact a national petroleum company could be detrimental to the existing oil and gas industry, thereby jeopardizing Canada's security of supply and thereby putting our future and our children's future in danger.

The fifth item is an acknowledgement of what I have just repeated. There is no way a Crown corporation can be as efficient as existing companies. Why should a Crown corporation engage in an activity in which it will be less efficient than companies currently operating? The sixth item is again an acknowledgement that the private sector in Canada is doing a very good job. The minister admits that. If the private sector is doing a good job, why try to drive it out of business? If the private sector is doing a good job why come in with some government colossus which will make it more difficult for the private sector to operate, and which will take large amounts of our money? Unless the government is philosophically committed, as are my colleagues to the left, to the state running everything, why do it? There cannot be any reason.

If the government is philosophically committed to socialism, that is fine, but we are looking for rational reasons. I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is philosophically committed to the state running resource industries, and any members on the benches behind the minister who are deluding themselves with the feeling that they are members of a party which has confidence in the people of Canada, and confidence in the private sector, are in for a fall. If they repeat that nonsense to their constituents, they are also deluding their constituents.

The seventh item points out that we already have a number of regulatory bodies in connection with the energy industries, and that there is bound to be a conflict of interest at some time between the National Energy Board and the national petroleum company. This clearly cannot be in the best interests of Canada.

The eighth item is an admission that this question of chauvinistic pride or xenophobia, which will make us get behind it and really drive this national petroleum company to the front, does not exist because Canadians are just not chauvinistic, they are just not xenophobic, and they will not respond to that kind of rallying cry.

An hon. Member: You want to bet?

Mr. Andre: They are nationalistic, and there is a difference. They are patriotic. They want to see Canadians and Canada developed to the full potential. That is the reason why I am here, but that does not mean I want to turn over all my freedoms, or the freedoms of my fellow Canadians, to some huge colossus operating here in Ottawa.

The government's own documents show very clearly that a national petroleum company is not needed and will be downright harmful. Any objective reading of this analysis cannot help but cause a person to reach that conclusion. For the seventh, eighth or tenth time I commend this document to hon. members of the party opposite. I wish, for goodness sake, that they would read it.

Mr. Paproski: Is that "One Hundred Ways to Conserve"?

Mr. Andre: No, not this document. We are still waiting for that one.

It is going to be an extremely expensive venture costing the Canadian public, by the government's own estimate, $3 billion to $6 billion minimum. It will probably cost the Canadian public at least $50 billion, and in the process of spending that $50 billion we will have very little in the way of increased proven reserves for security of supply. We will have very little in the way of jobs and opportunity for Canadians. We will have very little significant benefit.

It does not require much imagination to come up with a list of about 293 better ways of spending $50 billion than wasting it in this great big money sump. It will be harmful to existing industry. To compete against existing industry this Crown corporation will have to be granted special privileges, special opportunities and special advantages over other companies.

There are limits to the acreage available in petrolific areas. If the Crown corporation will be drilling for oil anywhere with no concern about whether there might be oil underneath the ground, I suppose there are no limits, but if it is looking in petrolific areas, there are limits to that, and most of that land is now leased by existing companies, so the government will either have to buy those leases or break them.

There are limits to the amount of drilling equipment, seismic equipment and so on; the corporation will be competing with other industries, so whatever it uses will not be available to them. How is there any improvement in toto if the Crown corporation robs other sectors of the industry of their equipment?

There are personnel limitations. If the national petroleum company hires expert personnel currently working for the other companies, then those people are no longer available to those companies. In toto how is the country benefitting?

There are capital limitations. What percentage of our gross national product will be allocated to the search for oil and gas? Whatever is taken by the national petroleum company will not be available to the private sector. Things will not be improved one iota, unless the government takes the taxes which it might spend on things like old age pensions and invests them in the oil and gas industry. If the government feels it is more important to build this huge colossus than to try to help Canadians, there is not much we can do but try to convince it otherwise.

It is difficult to reach any conclusion other than that a national petroleum company is going to diminish the amount of oil and gas available for Canadians, is going to diminish our security of supply, is going to diminish our ability to export, is going to increase our dependency on the Middle East and Venezuela, is going to make us more susceptible to pressures from overseas and will damage the economy rather than help it.

The fourth point, Mr. Speaker, and the main reason why we in this party oppose this move, is that it is going to deflect government, public, and private attention away from the need for a national petroleum policy. Such a policy was promised at least five years ago but has never been produced. There has been an excellent analysis of the situation which has the makings of a policy if the government would only produce it. Instead it is trying to deflect attention from the lack of policy by creating this agency.

We must have a policy in order to encourage exploration and development, a policy that will enable companies and investors to construct and operate more tar sands plants. We need a policy that will encourage the upgrading of hydrocarbons to higher grades of fuel, plastics and fertilizers so that we can export a high value product rather than a low value product.

We need a national energy policy that will encourage research and development to find alternate forms of energy. The recently published report of the Science Council of Canada covered that subject fairly well. Regardless of how successful we are in exploiting hydrocarbon reserves, however, the fact of the matter is that they are finite. Eventually we will run out of hydrocarbons, gas and oil, so we have to find alternate sources. The research must begin now and we need a policy to encourage it. It is not good enough to say that we are going to create a Crown corporation to look after the problem. We need a policy that will encourage Canadian ownership of this important industry—not state ownership but Canadian ownership.

The government has no confidence in the people of Canada and does not think that they have enough faith in the country to invest in it. It believes that the little discretionary income we have to invest we would spend frivolously, and therefore it is not going to leave us that discretionary income but will tax it away. That is typical of the government. Virtually every problem in public policy has exactly the same solution, a new agency, a new Crown corporation, a new board—the Food Prices Review Board, the Foreign Take-over Review Board, the national petroleum company—every problem has the same solution. A computer could be programmed to develop that sort of policy, hire a new bunch of people, whatever the problem, create a new agency, give them the problem and then not worry about it any more. The phone book is full of these agencies.

I recently read an article that said there are 60,000 agencies in Italy. One day a man approached one of them in the afternoon looking for somebody. There was only one person there so he asked, "Doesn't anybody work here?" The reply was "In the morning they don't work; in the afternoon they don't come." We are approaching that situation in Canada—no matter what the problem, the solution is to create another agency. Mr. Speaker, even the Liberal Party is going to run out of defeated candidates to staff these agencies.

There is a complete lack of faith in Canadians and their willingness to participate in the growth of this country, or to get together and use their resources to invest in the country and help it reach the levels of which it is capable.

The fifth point is that there is a better alternative. Consider the question of Canadian ownership. On several occasions I have talked about the principal business test in the Income Tax Act which, more than any other aspect of legislation in this country, is responsible for our industries being as foreign-controlled as they are. That one aspect of the Income Tax Act means that it is cheaper for a foreigner to drill a well in Canada than it is for a Canadian. That just boggles the mind, Mr. Speaker. I cannot understand how we in Canada can tolerate a situation where a foreigner can invest in this country more cheaply than a Canadian can. Of course that is why the industry is foreign-owned.

It is easier to set up headquarters in the Netherlands and operate from there, but some of us want to stay in Canada and invest here in order that the country may grow. Mr. Speaker, we demand that the government give us this opportunity and stop creating these new agencies and Crown corporations that continually oppress us. Just give us the opportunity. On that happy note, Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I thank the hon. member for calling it five o'clock. I was just about to inform him that his time had expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to give my support to this bill to establish a national petroleum company. The federal government is in a unique situation when compared with private concerns for setting up large scale operations of this nature. The time span between the period of initiation and the full-scale production stage can be appreciably reduced when a venture is backed by the resources of the government.

I very much wish to see the development in Canada of world-scale sized plants producing highly refined petroleum derivatives for international consumption. It is essential that these plants be owned or controlled by Canadians, and it is in this area that the federal government can and should become involved. I am not promoting public ownership of our major industries. I have always been a strong supporter of private enterprise, and I believe that this system makes for greater efficiency. We are presently, however, in a situation where venture capital is not easily obtainable for the purpose of setting up large scale undertakings in the field of energy resources. The development of potential sources of energy is of benefit to all Canadians, and the federal government is fully justified in becoming involved in this area.

I would like at some time in the future to see the gradual movement of Petro-Canada from the public to the private sector of our economy, perhaps through a vehicle such as the Canada Development Corporation. However, until the company becomes firmly established it is necessary that it be operated as a Crown corporation.

This formula has worked successfully in the past. I would draw the attention of the House in particular to Polysar, a company established by the government in 1942 as Polymer Corporation Limited. What began as an emergency wartime operation has grown to become a major competitor in the international synthetic rubber market. Over the years Polysar has developed diversified interests throughout the world.

Since its take-over by the Canada Development Corporation in 1972. Polysar has continued to expand its range of activities, including the attainment of a 60 per cent interest in Petrosar, a world-scale petro-chemical plant currently being constructed near Sarnia, Ontario. This plant, which will produce one billion pounds of ethylene per year, as well as other related products, will be able to compete successfully with similar companies particularly in the United States, because of the economies of scale inherent in the operation. For the first time in Canada, ethylene will be available to us at a price as cheap as, or cheaper than, that available in the Gulf area of the United States. The success enjoyed by Polysar is an excellent indication of the possibilities which exist for similar success for Petro-Canada as a government-supported company.

An assured supply of energy is vital to Canada. There must exist an organization that is willing to gamble in order to make certain that our long and short term energy requirements are met. Petro-Canada will be in a position to take calculated risks with that end in mind. Participation in such projects as Syncrude and Panarctic Oils exemplifies this type of activity. The potential in these areas is enormous but the uncertainties involved make them unpopular areas of investment for private industry.

The terms of reference under which the company will operate are sufficiently broad to allow it to engage in operations involving all other forms of energy. Petro-Canada will therefore be able to act quickly to take advantage of opportunities as they present themselves.

As conventional fuel supplies are depleted, resource development will become increasingly more costly. A nationally owned petroleum company would be able to undertake research and development programs involving risks and expenditures which would be prohibitive for private industry. I feel this is one of the greatest advantages to be gained by the establishment of Petro-Canada. The refining and marketing of oil and natural gas supplies will be a secondary and less urgent aspect of the company's operations. Before nuclear fusion capability is developed—hopefully by the end of this century—our dwindling petroleum supplies will be called upon to provide the bulk of our short and medium term energy. No time must be wasted in finding and developing new reserves of conventional fuels.

Energy self-sufficiency is a goal toward which we must strive. We cannot rely on private industry, with over 90 per cent of that involved in energy development presently foreign-owned or controlled, to attach more than a secondary importance to this goal. International oil supplies are subject to the whims of foreign governments which may not always have Canada's best interests in mind.

● (2010)

Even while economical and easily recoverable fuel supplies remain, it is essential that the technology be developed now to ensure a continuing supply of energy from Canadian sources. The funding available to Petro-Canada will allow extensive research programs to be carried on. The success of Petro-Canada as a profit making company should be of secondary importance to the object of guaranteeing a continuous supply of energy for Canadians.

One of the most serious implications for Canada of the operation of foreign controlled oil companies in this country is the resultant lack of Canadian control over research and development in this industry. Canada has proportionately little industrial research and development activity, and this is the result of the involvement of foreign companies in Canadian industry. While it is true that Imperial Oil Limited, Gulf Oil Canada Limited and Shell Canada Limited all maintain substantial research and development operations, this activity is directed largely from the head offices of the foreign parent companies. There is no reason for a company such as Imperial Oil, the third largest industrial firm in Canada, with annual sales of approximately $2.5 billion, to be unable to establish a completely independent research and development facility.

Petro-Canada will enable us to achieve this significant goal of establishing Canadian control over a major research and development establishment within the petroleum industry.

While there are presently several options in the energy field which merit consideration, such as geothermal, tidal, wind and solar power, it is necessary that there be a commercial organization capable of translating these possibilities into practice. This is another area of which industrial research and development is an essential component. Over the long term, research should be undertaken into alternate energy forms to enable us to consider using our petroleum supplies solely for the production of plastics. Should the day arrive when we completely run out of hydrocarbons, a company such as Petro-Canada would not become obsolete, as it could modify its operations to enable it to produce the building blocks necessary for the production of plastics. All that would be required would be changing from hydrocarbons for the raw materials used, to carbon dioxide, one of the products of the combustion of hydrocarbons, which can be converted back to organic chemicals through the methanol synthesis process, as has been successfully done in the past. The only problem is one of economics, not technology.

Some hon. members may not be aware of the importance of the plastics industry in this country. We currently consume a greater volume of plastic each year than we do steel, and this industry can only continue to grow in importance.

It is also possible that Petro-Canada, as an able competitor in the petroleum industry, will be a leader in developing an attitude of responsible corporate citizenship among the oil companies. Either by example or through the realities demanded by competitive business practices, Petro-Canada may make the petroleum industry more responsive to the needs of the Canadian people.

That, essentially, is what Petro-Canada is all about—making the oil and natural gas industries responsible to the Canadian people. What is needed is the development of long term goals and priorities in order to guarantee the development of an energy industry within Canada which will be immune to the uncertainties of the world situation.

A central element of the problem of short-term supply with relation to oil is the fact that we will, for some years to come, remain dependent on foreign suppliers for a percentage of our crude oil. Therefore it is important that we maintain a favourable position for negotiating with, in particular, the OPEC countries. There has been a growing reluctance on the part of these nations to deal with large, multinational oil companies, and a preference for dealing with nationally owned companies from various countries. As one of Petro-Canada's primary functions will be to obtain supplies of crude oil, international negotiations will, of necessity, be carried on by the company.

I am certain that the act to establish Petro-Canada will long be regarded as a landmark piece of legislation, one of which all Canadians should be proud. Energy production is of an importance second only to food production in this country, and it is heartening that the present intolerable situation which involves the foreign ownership of such a large percentage of our energy resources is at long last being, in some measure, rectified.

The question of foreign ownership has long been of concern to me, and I welcome this action as a positive example of government involvement in Canadian industry. I sincerely hope that this will be only a beginning and provide an impetus to projects designed to establish world scale sized plants in Canada for the production of high technology content commodities from our vast natural resources. Through action of this nature the government can give Canadian industry the push it needs to break further away from its role as a supplier of raw materials towards a position of being a major exporter of manufactured products.

In reply to those who feel that a nationally owned oil company could not compete successfully with private industry, I would draw their attention to the fact that, besides the United States, Canada is the only industrialized nation that does not have a national petroleum company. As an example of a successful company of this type one may consider the British Petroleum Company. Approximately 68 per cent of this company is owned by the British government. It has long been a highly successful competitor on the international scene, with diversified interests in many areas related to its primary object of developing and marketing petroleum supplies. It is involved in producing many high technology petroleum products, including several families of plastics.

It is too easy to criticize this bill on the grounds that it involves risks being taken with public money. We cannot afford to let this type of short-sighted caution obscure the real nature of the situation in which we presently find ourselves. Few great advancements have ever been made which did not involve risks and the possibility of failure. In this case, however, the chance of being unsuccessful is remote, and the potential for great benefits of no doubt.

Petro-Canada

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on Petro-Can and to register my objection to the bill, which I will oppose as vigorously as possible.

Not so long ago an English philosopher said that "it is the business of the future to be dangerous". Our dwindling oil and gas supplies, and the failure of governments to do much to remedy the situation, provide sufficient grounds to justify that statement. According to the National Energy Board, by 1985 Canada will be too short of domestic oil to meet our demands in the west, much less take care of Ottawa, Montreal and eastern markets. This estimate is based on projections of new finds and the development of 500,000 barrels a day from oil sands.

Recent events showed how little government has guided us around this maze of problems; measures seem to be more cosmetic than substantive. The national energy conservation program revolving around voluntary co-operation to reduce gasoline consumption by cutting speed will not be very effective. Voluntary guidelines for lowering indoor temperatures, or consideration of improvements in mass transit or building insulation are, at best, of minor significance. Just a year ago the Canadian government boasted that we have exported $200 million worth of oil. Yet in 1975 Canada will be a net importer of oil. Obviously, we must curtail our exports if we are going to be in any way self-sufficient in oil.

Just what is the point of having a national petroleum company? In this highly controlled industry of oil and gas, controlled rigidly at the provincial level which dictates where drilling shall occur, regulates how much of the natural products may be taken from the well, and what the price should be at the wellhead, regulated once again by the federal government once the product leaves the province of origin, with the ability to restrict and prohibit export sales, the addition of a Crown corporation to involve itself in exploration, drilling, refining and marketing seems to be a waste of time, unless the government intends to socialize for the sake of socializing, and to control for the sake of controlling as a philosophy.

The record of this government in dealing with the oil and gas industry must appear to the outside world as ludicrous. The action of the federal government has been to slow down and eliminate private drilling and production in this country, at a time when the National Energy Board has warned of growing dependence on imported oil, when it is questioning exports at its current hearings on natural gas supplies, and is sounding the knell of supply shortfalls for the latter part of this decade, which may already be too late to remedy.

Surely in our present situation in the world there are much more important things to be done than starting a Petro-Can government corporation that will take years to get under way, and its best use in the short run will be to provide a large number of jobs at the taxpayers' expense.

In the activity of drilling, for instance, which is certainly the beginning of the development of an oil and gas field, in 1974 activity in Canada was down a good deal. This year industry sources are looking for a 25 per cent drop in activity as exploration budgets are slashed. The exodus of drilling rigs and the people who go with them surely is cause for some alarm, particularly so because many of these rigs that have gone are of so-called deep-hole capacity. The number of active drilling rigs in Canada has fallen to the lowest level since 1966, according to the best industrial estimates, and in every part of Canada drilling activity is down. Whether this bill is supposed to stop the flight of drilling rigs from western Canada and to provide additional employment is not at all clear.

The obvious problem facing the oil and gas industry in Canada, and the reason for its decline, is the confrontation between the federal and provincial governments. With the price of oil at the wellhead at $6.50 a barrel, 20 per cent of that goes to the federal government, 50 per cent goes to the provincial government, and 30 per cent goes to the industry. In other words, of the basic price of crude oil, approximately 20 cents per gallon, the provincial and federal governments get 14 cents. Furthermore, in the process of refining, manufacturing and distributing, the federal and provincial governments reap additional tax benefits—for instance, the federal excise tax plus corporation taxes, as well as various other local and provincial taxes. I give these figures because I wish to make some comparison with another form of energy, that is, electricity generated by hydro power.

We are assured by scientists and economists that the world is probably entering the end of the gas and oil era, and that likely in the future we will depend on electricity developed from some other form of energy. In my hometown of Dauphin, Manitoba Hydro offers quite a good rate for the heating of homes, something like 1¼ cents per kilowatt. Reportedly this is going to go up shortly, something like a 15 per cent to 25 per cent increase. The cost of heating a house with fuel oil at the present rate, and the cost of heating a house with electricity are approximately the same, with some variation depending on the efficiency of the heating unit employed.

Manitoba is blessed with a large amount of hydro electric power, with a substantial amount still to be developed. Does Manitoba Hydro pay any corporation tax? Of course it does not, and it could not afford to, Mr. Speaker. Does it pay any royalties to the province of Manitoba? Of course it does not, and it does not pay any dividends to shareholders. It does not help to contribute directly to the provincial tax coffers in any form. It does not pay a federal excise tax, and it is fortunate to generate enough capital to expand its operations in order to carry on the business of providing new sources of power.

Even the bonds it must float every year, and usually this is in New York, to develop its plants, are guaranteed by the province of Manitoba, and to this extent they are a charge on the tax base of the people of Manitoba. In addition the federal government has involved itself in providing assistance to develop lines to carry high voltage electricity, to the tune of about a couple of hundred million dollars.

I have no reason to believe that Manitoba Hydro is not a well run organization, but I do think this points up the fact that, in respect of the final cost to the consumer who uses gas and oil, by far the greatest cost is in the form of the tax levied by federal and provincial governments. Provincial hydro electric companies are not able to contribute to the tax base and are even net drawers on the taxpayer's purse under certain circumstances. This also points up the fact that the basic cost of gas and oil is much lower than the cost of a unit of hydro electric power could ever hope to be. Furthermore, nuclear power, as far as I am aware, is an expensive source of electricity, much more expensive than hydro electric power is ever likely to be.

It seems obvious that private industry is much more likely and capable of generating the activity needed to provide this country with a sure supply of oil and gas if it is given half a chance. The main stumbling block is the high level of taxation imposed on the industry by the two levels of government. If investment returns were adequate would we find the present exodus of drilling rigs to the south? Of course our neighbours to the south are not that much better off than we, and they are no more adept at promoting a suitable supply. Both nations seem to be involved in attempting to curtail any increase in the price of the producers for old oil, but they are both willing to pay nations across the water almost any amount they ask for oil, and are seemingly happy to do so.

If the price of oil and gas were raised, the companies would be paying enormous income taxes. If the normal taxation structure allowed too much money to remain in the hands of the oil companies then an excess profits tax could be levied. With the excess revenue the government could well institute a much more effective conservation plan, with alleviation of human suffering, particularly in respect of home heating oil. Surely this would have given a better basis to long-term planning and development of the energy resources required in the future. It makes no sense to scrap deliberately a system that has functioned reasonably well and has provided Canadians with a modest lead time in respect of national interests.

The minister has stated:

> This does not mean that the government finds that Canada has not been well served by private enterprise in the petroleum industry. Private companies, whether Canadian or foreign-owned, have generally worked vigorously to develop our oil and gas resources, to create transportation systems for them and to efficiently refine and distribute oil products. The privately-owned Canadian oil industry has a good record of technical and managerial innovation.

This, coming from the minister, would certainly seem to belie the necessity of establishing this government company at the present time.

● (2030)

The minister also states that the bill contains authority to explore for, develop, and exploit hydrocarbon deposits within and without Canada, to carry out research and development projects related to hydrocarbons and other fuel, to engage in exploration, production, distribution and marketing of fuels and, finally, to negotiate and acquire petroleum products abroad.

This idea that a national oil company will buy better than a private company will need some explanation. For instance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) went to Venezuela about a year ago. After he left, the Venezuelan government raised the price and reduced production. When he went to Venezuela a few weeks ago the Venezuelan government again raised the price and reduced production. If he makes many more trips like this Venezuela will be out of business. Perhaps he will be able to trade the Orinoco tar sands for the Athabasca tar sands.

There is not much evidence that a government company in the long run will be in a position to negotiate much better than a private company. Provision is made for authorized capital but little detail is given. Many questions must be answered. Does the federal government intend to acquire and lease provincial lands and set up its own rules, regulations and so on? Is this a means by which the right of ownership of provinces will be negated? Is this the intention of the government? Certainly Petro-Can, leasing and drilling within the provinces, and backed by the federal government, will want to be top dog over any provincial authority. Will it even want to adhere to any provincial regulations particularly if ordered not to do so by its federal boss? All these questions must be answered.

Now I should like to speak for a few moments about the problem of our balance of payments and how this relates to the oil situation at this time. A year ago we had a balance of approximately $200 million in oil trade in our favour, and yet this year we are faced with a deficit of approximately $500 million or $700 million. This amount could even be greater, and it is apparent that this situation could continue.

Today in the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) stated that we would have a balance of payments deficit of $4 billion to $5 billion. Surely this is an enormous sum. Are we to import money? He mentioned he hoped this would be solved by the balance of payments inflows, and presumably by investment money. Where will this money be obtained and where will it be invested? What about the government's plan to control foreign investment and the board which has been set up to phase out foreign investment which is not, so-called, for the good of Canada? Certainly this is a great problem.

The government has phased out all the oil drilling companies and the oil and gas wells it might have used to provide some much needed foreign exchange. Almost certainly we will be faced with the fact that we will have to develop Canadian trade dollars before many months or years have gone by. This balance of payments problem is a very large one which will affect all of us. It will reduce our level of activity. It will reduce the standard of living for our people, or at least prevent a rise in our standard of living.

By this bill the government has served notice that it has no confidence in private industry developing oil and gas reserves. By its taxation policies and by its failure to reach agreement with the producing provinces on taxation, it has shown little thought for the long-range viewpoint of the industry. I think Petro-Can can be considered as a forerunner for the complete takeover of the oil and gas industry by the government. It certainly will not in any way contribute to investment by private or mutual pension funds, the funds on which we rely for investment in this industry. So, Mr. Speaker, this is not a good bill, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) spoke on second reading of Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company. The weak and misleading arguments he put forward in his speech on the bill indicate either a complete lack of understanding of how to achieve his stated energy objectives, or that the national petroleum company is part of a deliberate grand design to stifle and strangle a viable petroleum industry so that Petro-Can, with the Canadian taxpayers' dollars, can attempt a move into the void created when the private sector is forced to vacate.

The minister's opening words set the stage for his fallacious arguments. He stated that "the national interests now require a significant degree of federal public enterprise in the oil and natural gas area." He also said that the bill is a "most important element in the government's long term planning to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs . . . at reasonable prices as well as a direct share in the wealth which development of our resources generates."

The minister has implied that the national oil company is the answer to adequate and reliable supplies of energy at reasonable prices for Canadians. On the basis of this phony argument, he and the government are deceiving the Canadian people in the hope that Canadians will buy this, and thus support the principle and the need for a national oil company. Most important, however, is the signal and warning throughout the minister's speech that fundamental changes in the free enterprise system are about to take place. The oil industry has in a few short years—and I hope the NDP member and the minister are listening—brought this country from a position of complete dependency on imported oil and gas to its place today where it is the only developed country in the world which can claim self-sufficiency in energy.

Mr. Benjamin: How come we are not?

Mr. Bawden: We are slipping away, and the British Columbia and Saskatchewan NDP governments are making a contribution to the pending shortfall.

Under a guise of nationalism and security of future energy supplies, this government is about to change, perhaps dramatically, a formula which succeeded at least until the government began to tamper with the marketplace and resource taxation policy. Of considerable concern, Mr. Speaker, is the effect that entry of a national oil company will have upon investment by the private sector.

There is real and legitimate concern by those in industry that, by reason of operating under different rules and special advantages relating to taxation, land acquisition and access to the collective confidential geological information of the whole industry, the Crown company will in a meaningful way further erode the ultimate achievement possible by private resource companies. This simply adds to the long list of uncertainties which face the oil and gas industry. There can be but one result—further uncertainty, further erosion of confidence and thus, further cutbacks in industry budgets. The greater the reduction in budgets by industry, the greater the apparent need for government investment of taxpayers' dollars.

These concerns are much greater as a result of the horrible track record of the government in the past two years. The simple fact is that the government is not trusted. Since future energy reserves available to Canadians will be in direct proportion to the dollars invested, any cut back will reduce our reserves and thus our ability to produce in future years.

In summary then, Mr. Speaker, it is critical that the government spell out in full detail the answers to concerns expressed by the oil industry, for the crisis of future supply would be magnified many times if a further reduction took place in the activity of the private sector. What may have appeared to be a simple step taken by the government could seriously and adversely affect our already frightening energy prospects.

One of the realities of the 1970's is the increasing role that politics is playing in the energy policy-making of virtually every country in the world. In this unfortunate development, however, Canada is near the top of the list. The minister's remarks make it very clear that Petro-Canada will not be an oil company which will simply serve to search for reserves and increase Canadian presence. It is clearly going to be a tool of government which will be motivated by political expediency.

This is obvious from the minister's statement that the company's criterion may be modified in the terms of job opportunities or the development of particular parts of Canada, as he said. It is hard to believe that a national petroleum company would have any significant impact on increased employment benefits relative to existing oil companies unless the minister has in mind additional opportunities at large salaries for future defeated Liberal candidates.

An hon. Member: That is what the Tories do.

Mr. Bawden: Hon. members opposite may be very glad of these opportunities in the future if this bill should pass.

The suggestion that a national petroleum company could act to stimulate regional development in specific areas of the country opens the door for political abuse in the extreme, and suggests that many money disposal wells will be drilled. The white paper of June, 1973 stated "there are many areas in Canada with a petroleum potential which, for a variety of reasons, are not attractive to the private corporation". The cost of finding, developing and transporting oil to market from the most attractive areas of Canada is already exceedingly high. It appears that the government, for the sake of regional development or local politics, intends to look for oil and gas at any cost with public funds where chances of finding reserves may be remote.

It is a further programmed and planned folly by this government and this minister to direct the expenditure of funds of the national petroleum company in areas that are known to be less attractive areas for petroleum potential. A national oil company that is motivated by regional considerations would almost certainly be expending its dollars where the votes could be bought, and we all know in this House that this is not likely to be in western Canada.

The minister outlined in the House the factors which, in his words, "tipped the balance decisively in favour of federal entrepreneurship in the oil and energy industries". He pointed out that the government's energy white paper produced in the spring of 1973 followed a long period of tranquillity and stability in domestic as well as international energy affairs. He went on to say that since that time changes have been radical. What the minister should have said, if he was speaking frankly, was that on the domestic scene in Canada it was during the long period of tranquility and stability that great accomplishments were realized by the oil and gas industries that brought our country to its enviable place of self-sufficiency. He should have said that during this period massive programs utilizing new technology, spending large sums of money and undertaken at great risk, were well under way in the Canadian Arctic and in off-shore areas of the east coast.

The minister's reference to "radical changes" which have taken place could only have been a reference to the actions of the federal government which, in turn, triggered so many protective reactions and moves by the provinces. It was these radical changes which were handed to the country by this Liberal government that have reduced the level of confidence in the oil and gas industries to its present very low level. The low level of confidence of energy investors today is the principal reason that our country's economic future is so seriously threatened.

As I have said in the House before, in a few short years Canada will be importing over 20 per cent of its oil needs, rising to over 50 per cent by 1985, unless drastic changes are made. I have pointed out to this House as well that the balance of payments problems in the years ahead are going to affect seriously the economic status of every Canadian.

The minister in his remarks on Bill C-8 had made a number of references to the concern of the government about the supply of oil and gas in the future. In fact, eight times in his short presentation he stressed the need for adequate supplies, secure supplies, expanding our supply potential, assuring long term future supply, assurance of supply continuity, and the pressing need for the development of resources. There is something very strange and sinister in the statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has laid extreme emphasis on future energy supply, but his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), has all but killed a healthy industry with his tax measures.

Somebody is lying about the objectives of the government. On one hand we are being told that the government believes that the national interest now requires a significant degree of public enterprise to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs. On the other hand we were told on March 5, in the standing committee of the House, by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he sees in Canada at present a healthy and vigorous oil industry progressing toward higher and higher levels of activity. The fact is that the reduction in expenditure by the industry in this year alone, due to the policies or lack of policies of this government, will amount to more than the entire capital of Petro-Can, which I understand is to try to make its funds last for some years. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that just the reduction in exploration expenditures by the private sector this year will be greater than the total capital proposed for the national oil company.

The minister as usual made a number of additional wild political claims which indicate how out of touch he is with the realities of the business world. I might say that I have seen very few ministers of the present government who do not fall significantly into that same category.

The minister's comments regarding joint ventures with smaller Canadian controlled firms seem to suggest that the purpose of the joint venture thrust in the bill is to assist the smaller Canadian controlled firms in providing funds for exploration in the frontier areas. Surely the objective of financing exploration in frontier areas could be achieved in far more efficient ways than by forming a national oil company. If the federal government is really concerned about the ability of the small Canadian controlled companies that finance exploration programs, I would suggest that the government could achieve its objective of encouraging these small companies by providing adequate incentives for frontier area exploration. If these adequate incentives are provided, smaller Canadian controlled companies will be better able to raise the necessary funds and continue their programs.

On the subject of frontier exploration, the minister and his government have been promising for at least five years that regulations for the Northwest Territories and federal government lands off-shore would be clarified in the near future. The minister has told me that in the House on several occasions. The land order which dealt with a certain key portion of the rules under federal lands was revoked on April 15, 1970. Thus just one month from now it will be five years. During this time the industry has continued to spend thousands of millions of dollars without any knowledge as to how the corridor lands and frontiers will be treated.

Mr. Benjamin: What about Indonesia, and the British in the North Sea?

Mr. Bawden: The hon. member to my left speaks about Indonesia and the North Sea. If the government of this country were to adopt the practical attitude and the stable rules of the government of Indonesia—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, let me say that I have had some personal experience in Indonesia, and there is hardly a company in the world which would not say that the rules and the government of Indonesia have proved to be far more stable than the government of Canada.

For the benefit of the hon. member to my left in the NDP let me say that the socialist government of Great Britain has taken a progressive and effective step to ensure that exploration and development of their reserves will continue. If this government were to go even half as far as the socialist government of Great Britain, many of our problems in this country would be eliminated.

Mr. Benjamin: Pay attention, Don.

Mr. Bawden: In Alberta, corridor lands in the past have been sold back to the oil and gas industry on a competitive basis. The federal government in 1970 declared a moratorium on the issuance of any new permits or leases on old permits, and there has not been a federal land sale since 1969. This is just another example of the 180 degree effort this government is making in comparison with every other government in the world.

Surely the minister should provide immediately to the people of Canada an answer to this vital question of oil regulations. The absence of such regulations, however, is just a further reason why exploration activity is falling off. In case the minister does not know this, Panarctic has just sent to its shareholders material relating to budgets for 1976. These shareholders must by April 14, less than a month from now, respond regarding their willingness to be committed to the next round of financing. It is obvious that supplies to be utilized during the first half of next year must be ready almost immediately so that shipment can be made this summer because of the shipping conditions and ice conditions in the Canadian Arctic. Is that minister aware that absence of action by him could result in substantial cutbacks and setbacks in this company, an important exhibit in the government?

Undoubtedly the most farcical contradiction of all in the statements made by members of the government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is their unwillingness to recognize that since the oil industry began in Canada no meaningful incentives have been provided to Canadian citizens to invest in this important industry. Thus, in the absence of Canadian dollars, exploring companies, both foreign and Canadian, were forced to seek funds and partners in the United States and elsewhere. The high percentage of foreign ownership of our oil and gas industry is by design of the Liberal government. It has virtually assured the continuing foreign ownership which the government pretends to attack at every opportunity.

Considerable emphasis has been placed by the minister in his speech on the creation of a national oil company by the government for, in his words, it will bring to the petroleum sector the social benefits to Canadians of the pride, satisfaction and confidence of owning a portion of this important Canadian industry. I see the minister is leaving. He cannot bear hearing the truth. He cannot face up to this.

Again the minister conveniently overlooks the fact that 150 or more independent oil companies are operating in Canada. A large percentage of these are Canadian owned or controlled. I am sorry to say that many of these Canadian companies are forced to spend a percentage of their budgets outside Canada, and many are being forced to move away. Immediate steps must be taken by the government to encourage the corporate growth and strength of this group of companies in Canada for our own good.

The policies of the government, however, in the last two years have penalized our own Canadian oil companies which form a significant part of the industry. It should be borne in mind that these companies in recent years have done some 80 per cent of the exploratory drilling in the western provinces. But equally as important, they make up the Canadian segment of the industry which is such an important part of the policy which is claimed by the minister to be important to the government.

The best solution for all would be the emergence of independent and strong investor owned Canadian oil companies numbering as many as possible. It is necessary, however, to create favourable tax policies, otherwise this important sector in the industry will be the first to die and the first to disappear.

Our present Canadian owned and directed corporations are examples of just how little pride, satisfaction and confidence have been inspired in Canadians by their presence. Canadians now own, subject to outstanding loans of $4 billion, a railroad, the CNR; a postal service; an airline, Air Canada; the St. Lawrence Seaway; a heavy water plant at Glace Bay; a communications network in the CBC, and a Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which is looking after our native people. Have any of these government undertakings generated pride, satisfaction and confidence in Canadians? How can one believe that government entry into the exceedingly complex petroleum industry will be any more successful or profitable than the government's history of action to date?

Social satisfaction will not provide the capital, technology and long term positive energy policy required to meet Canada's energy requirements. Who knows, the national oil company might be as successful as the Post Office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bawden: Surely Canadians have had a bellyful as a result of the problems created by the government's inability to handle its own labour relations. Any significant move into areas proposed by the bill, such as pipelines or oil transportation, could leave the country with a problem far exceeding the current mess on the labour scene in Canada. Imagine the consequences of a small number of employees shutting down an important energy artery while bargaining with the bottomless pit of dollars available to the government, which the same employees know is clearly not available from a corporation with limited resources.

The minister gives as a further reason for a state owned oil company that most of the oil exporting countries have their own state oil companies. He goes on to say that the obvious interest to be served, the Canadian interest, is that of importing at lower cost than private companies are able to do.

I defy the minister to find a country in the world which will sell oil to this country at any bargain price, even if the minister's own sweet personality were present on the scene to assist in the bargaining. The minister also stated that such a company would offer greater assurance of supply continuity. Most of the state oil companies of exporting countries have stepped in by way of take-overs of existing reserves which are often projected to have a life of 25 years or 50 years or more. Thus further successful exploration is not particularly critical. Much the converse is true in Canada where the national petroleum company would be commencing operations with no oil and no people, just a government. In addition, Canada has approximately ten years of oil supply left from current fields.

● (2100)

Mr. Benjamin: Where have you guys been in the last few years? Why have you not been drilling?

Mr. Bawden: What about Saskatchewan? There are two rigs drilling in Saskatchewan. I am surprised that the hon. member from the NDP is not afraid to speak up on this.

Mr. Benjamin: Not a bit!

Mr. Bawden: Canada has approximately ten years of oil supply left from current fields, and due principally to political actions and interference by this government our country is now working on its very modest inventory against that date projected by the National Energy Board in the near future when Canadians will be forced to go short.

A state company, for the very reason that it is a state company, must bear the nation's nationality, its immigration policy, its trade policy, its defence commitments, and so on. For that reason it is exceedingly difficult for a national petroleum company to play an effective role with petroleum companies of other countries. The petroleum companies, as they are multi-national, are far more likely to be efficient, flexible and businesslike in finding, developing, moving and selling oil. In any event, other departments of government could perform this function, were it ever required. This, Mr. Speaker, was demonstrated during the Arab oil embargo last year. There were many countries, such as Holland, that would not have received their required supply or in many cases any supply of oil. It was only possible due to the flexibility of those large companies that were trading oil, in many cases on the high seas, where swaps and switches were made to keep the fires burning and the industries of the world moving.

How then, Mr. Speaker, should the government achieve its objective of collecting for Canadians their share of the wealth from the oil and gas industry? If a review is made of dollar receipts from oil production since 1947, considerable insight is provided into who got the wealth.

Between 1947 and the end of 1974 the Alberta government received by way of Crown sales, rentals and royalties just over $6 billion. To the end of 1973, approximately the same period of time, the petroleum industry spent approximately $21 billion and received back by way of income, before tax, $21.3 billion. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it has taken the industry as a group almost 30 years to recover its investment and show a slight favourable balance.

Of course there are successful companies and there are unsuccessful companies, and members of the NDP constantly point to those that have been successful. They have not had much to say about those that have not been successful, although perhaps their first candidate may be Saskoil and other associations sponsored by the Socialist government of Saskatchewan. The oil and gas industry is continuing to re-invest and it is likely that this net favourable return to industry will not climb in the near future to a significantly greater positive balance.

It seems very clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that the way to succeed financially in the oil business is to lease out, farm out, and utilize every other measure at hand to entice others to spend money on your land, while at the same time collecting a reasonable level of royalty. Something over 25 per cent of the total funds realized by the province of Alberta were as a result of Crown sales of lands which were returned to the government subsequent to discoveries. These lands were offered for sale by competitive bid to all comers. There was no risk to the province of Alberta. Its return of some $6 billion over this period, since 1947, compares to the one-third billion or one-half billion dollars to the oil and gas industry cumulatively. Even to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and hon. members opposite it should be clear how governments, or anybody who holds control of the ultimate land leases, should deal if they have any interest in participating in the wealth.

It is interesting to note that the United States government has taken in something in the order of $5 billion in land sales off Louisiana during the past three years. Some of these individual sales brought in cash bids totalling well over a billion dollars, some close to a billion and a half. In a recent one the total was $1,400 million. It seems to me that receiving this kind of cash on the front end prior to any determination of whether oil and gas reserves exist, while at the same time collecting a royalty and income tax on the ultimate profit, could hardly be bettered in finding a way for Canadians to participate in the wealth, and without risk of taxpayers' dollars.

I read recently about a purchase which was made by a group of large companies in the Gulf of Mexico off the state of Florida for over $300 million. I later learned that some four dry holes have been drilled on the structure underlying the lease, and in all probability after total expenditures of close to $400 million the exercise will be a complete write-off. That, Mr. Speaker, is the way that the federal government should be involving Canadians in the oil and gas industry, by collecting the bonus bid and farming out the leases, but not by taking the risk. This practice has been followed in Alberta, not only under a Conservative government but also for many years under a Social Credit government.

A last but important area that needs to be considered by this House and by the standing committee is the list of powers to be accorded to this national petroleum corporation. Since I have mentioned the costs of exploring in the Gulf of Mexico—and I might say that many areas of the world require substantial advance cash bonuses—I note with considerable interest that the national petroleum Canada company is to have powers to go abroad and operate outside Canada. I ask why? Could it be that the national petroleum company has also foreseen and is beginning to understand that the climate in this country is not attractive to investors with petroleum dollars? I hope that later in this debate the minister will tell us what percentage of the company's funds will be invested in foreign countries.

The national oil company may, according to the minister, participate in the transportation of petroleum products. The minister says transportation is a natural extension to the company's efforts "by assuring that the energy resources it helped to find and develop are brought to the Canadian consumer without undue delay and at least cost". Mr. Speaker, I doubt if anyone in Canada who examined this statement would accept it as either fact or truth. We have only to look today at the significant role the government is already playing in transportation, and to check the record for deliveries. Western farmers have lost many millions of dollars due to the fall in the price of grain during the lengthy period of time when other excuses have been given for non-delivery. This has greatly harmed our international reputation. For the minister to say that the government might move oil or gas without delay and at the least cost is just another exaggeration being presented to the Canadian people.

I read recently a comparison which I thought interesting. In 1956 the oil industry moved by pipeline a 300 pound barrel of oil from Edmonton to Sarnia for 64 cents. By 1973 this transportation cost had been reduced by 25 per cent, to 48 cents per barrel. During this same period the federal postal service cost to transport a post card increased 100 per cent from four cents to eight cents, and the delivery period, as everyone knows, for the Post Office is completely uncertain. Surely this track record suggests that any transportation task anywhere should be kept as far away from this government, or in fact any government, as possible.

The minister was reported last year in the press to have stated that the new corporation may nationalize existing oil companies. This must be clarified in detail, with explanations as to what basis the national petroleum company would be permitted, if it wished, to acquire other firms. How would the price be set, and would an unwilling seller be committed into a forced sale?

If, in fact, it is the basic purpose of the government to increase exploration and development, how can this be accomplished by the national oil company if its funds are utilized for acquisitions rather than for new exploration activity?

A great deal of emphasis is placed in the bill on the powers which the company will have to lend money to persons dealing with a corporation, and to those proposing to do business with the corporation. In addition it will be permitted to endorse promissory notes, to guarantee loans for others, and will have many other such powers. This is even extended to guarantee money for charitable or benevolent objects. This certainly needs explanation for, by some stretch of the imagination, these terms of reference could include the Liberal party campaign funds.

The company will also be permitted to carry on any business capable of "benefitting the corporation or that the national petroleum company can conveniently carry on." This suggests that such a company might in fact go into the cattle business.

I am reminded of the story of the man from Calgary who visited his friend in the cattle business. The friend had a very high priced bull and the city visitor had gone out to see it. When he arrived at his friend's ranch he noticed that the bull was hitched up to and pulling a plough. He was very surprised. He asked his rancher friend why this very high priced prize bull was hitched up to a plough. The rancher replied, "I just want him to learn that the cattle business ain't all romance." I say to the minister that the government of this country will learn in a very short time that the oil business "ain't all romance".

The company will also be empowered to invest in ventures related to exploration, which I presume could mean seismograph contracting, drilling contracting, or presumably the banking business, as the powers mentioned do not seem to preclude the making of production loans to companies which might consider doing business with the national petroleum company. Those who vote for this bill are giving the minister and the government a blank cheque, a cheque which will be drawn on the account of the taxpayers of Canada.

The extremely broad powers of the corporation provide no limits as to where an over-zealous minister or government could lead the country by way of this unbelievably constituted entity.

It is time for the minister to stand up and prove the need for the government to perpetrate this bill, this corporation, and these activities on the people of Canada. This country has been well served by the oil and gas industry. I suggest there is no place for the government of Canada to invest taxpayer's money in this high risk industry when appropriate and more favourable alternate ways to achieve fully our objectives are open to us.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in a debate on a different subject from last evening. However, it is similar in at least one respect. This was pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden). We are now being asked to write another blank cheque for those who sit on the treasury benches. I am no more disposed to signing my name now than I was last night.

This is a rather unusual situation. As has been pointed out, we have had extensive labour problems over the past year. We still suffer from double digit inflation, and we are witnessing an ever-increasing rate of unemployment. What does the government have to propose to solve these problems? Nothing that bears materially on them. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) admits that the forecasts on which he based his November budget were all wrong. However, he does not propose any changes in government policy.

We are faced with a series of pieces of legislation that may have some effect on the economy of this country in the distant future, but nothing to meet the requirements of today. The bill before us is a gross example of that. The minister admitted it will take 15 or 20 years for this child of his to reach maturity. I do not know if it will ever get there. In fact I hope it is stillborn. It will do absolutely no good for this country. It can only do harm.

As the hon. member for Calgary South and others have pointed out, among the nations of the world we have been very fortunate in being self-sufficient in petroleum products. That self-sufficiency did not come over night. For the first 70 or 80 years of our national existence we were dependent on others for our supply of petroleum products. Fortunately, governments in the late forties, the fifties and most of the sixties had policies which gave some incentive to the private sector to develop the resources we have been blessed with, and we became self-sufficient.

What is the situation now? The Trudeau government is forcing us into self-imposed shortages. For no good reason we will be short in petroleum products before the end of this decade. The federal government is solely to blame for this. This bill is but another step along that road.

In introducing this bill the minister said this is one of the most important methods by which the government is going to ensure an adequate supply of petroleum products in this country. I scoured the rest of his remarks to find out how this will be achieved. I am certainly not satisfied with the minister's bald statement that this bill will put oil in the ground. If it did, I am not satisfied that members opposite would have the wit to get it out even if they put it there themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schumacher: Something else concerns me. I would like a commitment from the minister at a fairly early stage in this legislative process. Who is going to run this great and glorious organization that is being set up? The bill seems to indicate that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) will be the great Czar over this organization. I suppose for the time being it will be him. We have had other examples where ministers have piloted legislation through this House so they could later get a job at public expense. One need only recall the case of John Whitney Pickersgill who created the Canadian Transport Commission solely for his own self-aggrandizement and the benefit of his bank account.

I was interested to note last fall, when this abomination was first introduced, an article by Richard Gwynn. Mr. Gwynn is generally well-informed about what is going on over there, having served the government in an executive position at one stage in his career. He suggested that perhaps the minister himself would like to be the chairman of this organization. I would welcome some assurance from the hon. gentleman now that he would never accept an appointment as chairman or president of this organization.

An hon. Member: Are you kidding?

Mr. Schumacher: I suppose it is too much to expect that such an assurance will ever be forthcoming. But if it is not we are left with the thought that possibly the minister might not be unwilling to see himself as chairman or president of this corporation at some future date. If it is not the hon. gentleman, then it will probably be that great mining promoter from British Columbia who is now labouring in the Privy Council Office, or is it the Office of the Prime Minister, the man who has a great record in mining in this country, Jack Austin. Well, I would not have any more confidence in him than I would in the minister. I should like to have some assurance that there will be competent people running this corporation if it is ever established.

The minister said in his opening remarks that an attempt would be made through this legislation to increase the supply of petroleum. Again, how will this be done? The minister also said nothing would be done about prices. He did not tell us how he intended to deal with inflation and the growing expense of finding this offshore and frontier oil. He seems to be looking for the most expensive oil to be found, yet at the same time he is promising Canadians the lowest prices. All in all, this second reading speech of the minister's is really beyond belief. He goes on to say that the—> —economic, technical and environmental problems of developing energy resources in our geographical and technical frontiers have, if anything, been magnified by the passage of time.

That is an interesting statement. I suppose what he is really saying is that the costs of coping with these circumstances have been subject to inflation, like everything else. But he implies that somehow Petro-Canada will overcome the effects of inflation. Again, I ask how Petro-Canada will do so. Further on in his speech the minister says:

> The government does not feel assured that the private sector can be relied upon to mobilize the enormous amounts of capital which will be required to secure energy development consonant with Canadian needs over the longer term.

It is obvious that as long as the type of government we have in this country remains in office—

Mr. Basford: Good government.

Mr. Schumacher: What is so good about it? If it is so good, why have we gone from a period of surplus to a period of shortage?

Mr. Benjamin: Because of free enterprise.

Mr. Schumacher: I am glad the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) is satisfied with this government. At any rate the minister of energy is not satisfied, that the private sector can be relied upon to provide the capital needed. I wonder why he is not satisfied. I wonder whether it could have anything to do with the fact that his government is presently taking over half of the proceeds of the sale of the oil now being produced, leaving 48 per cent to the others and at the same time, I believe, encouraging the provincial governments to step beyond their bounds? I am referring to royalties higher than are justified within provincial jurisdiction. Anyone can see that the companies have not brought this situation upon themselves; they have been forced into it by the action of the federal governments, in concert with provincial governments, making it impossible for them to set aside adequate pools of capital.

The attitude taken by the government is a ridiculous one. It says the companies cannot provide sufficient capital yet it ignores the fact that it is the governments concerned which have created the problem. The problem having been created, we are asked to approve the setting up of yet another bureaucracy in an attempt to solve it. No doubt this will be of great benefit to the taxpayers of the country—I say that ironically because I cannot imagine any situation more likely to cause shortages or oblige them to pay higher prices for petroleum. That is the role upon which the government has embarked.

Later in his speech the minister tells us that another reason this capital might not be available is that the companies are faced with "attractive investment opportunities and geological possibilities abroad." But why should they be offered more attractive investment possibilities abroad? What is wrong with the investment possibilities in this country? Why doesn't the government create a climate which can compete with the climate anywhere else?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: There is no incentive at all to be successful in Canada any more.

Mr. Basford: The climate here is a good one.

Mr. Schumacher: The Minister of National Revenue is really an amazing person. He shows abysmal ignorance of the whole subject. He talks as though the hon. member for Calgary South has any control over his own rigs in that respect. My hon. friend does not drill on his own property. He responds to requests from customers, and if they do not want to drill in Canada I suppose the hon. gentleman would like him to leave his iron to rust here, go out of business, throw people out of work, and pay no more taxes to the federal government. He hasn't taken anything away on his own account. He may have responded to the exigencies of the business community, but I will allow my hon. friend to clarify that point himself if he wishes.

Mr. Bawden: If I may, I would just like to clarify the situation for the benefit of many members opposite who have taken various opportunities to make uninformed remarks. The company in which I was involved, and in which I still have an interest, is one of the few drilling contracting firms in Canada which has not moved a rig out of this country in the last two years since the government messed things up.

Mr. Schumacher: I thank my hon. friend for clarifying the situation. I wonder how long it can last though, because the level of drilling has now fallen to the level of 1966, nine years ago. In the last year or year and a half there has been a phenomenal drop in activity, and it is probably going to get worse.

● (2130)

I was talking about the investment climate, Madam Speaker. Canada has not been made the best place in which to invest, and this reminds me of another problem created by the activities of the government and its predecessors. I refer to the situation where the government said it needed a Foreign Investment Review Board because so much Canadian industry was owned by foreigners and we had to bring a halt to this.

The petroleum industry is held up as an example. The government says that because it is 90 per cent foreign controlled, this is bad. If it is bad, why did it allow the situation to develop? The government has had a tax regime in this country that has made it impossible for Canadians to own or develop their own resources. Then when development does take place by so-called foreigners, the government sets up a Foreign Investment Review Board to control it. This is another example of creating a problem and then setting up some silly, one might say stupid, government body to solve the problem.

The minister also uses the excuse that there are uncertainties about the importation of oil and that it will be necessary for the government to deal with foreign owned oil companies in order to acquire sufficient supplies for Canadians. It does not display much confidence in the activities of Petro-Can when the minister says in one breath that it will solve our supply and price problem, and in the next breath says it is needed because we must deal with foreign owned oil companies in order to assure supply. I wish the minister would get on track and tell us exactly what he is going to do with this bill.

Why do we need a new organization to import oil? We already have the Canada Commercial Corporation which is 100 per cent state owned. I might say its record is not too good so far as its attempts to solve our supply problem last year is concerned. Hon. members will recall that it bought some Roumanian, Hungarian or Bulgarian oil, or oil from one of the Balkan states, which is so full of sulphur that it cannot be used, and we ended up losing $14 million to $15 million on the deal. Is this the kind of government action that is going to assure our supplies of oil at the lowest possible price? First of all you cannot use it; secondly, it cost two or three times the price of oil that could be obtained somewhere else.

The government has shown no capacity to supply energy at a proper price to Canadians. At the same time companies have supplied surplus oil—oil which was coming out of their ears—and natural gas which they did not know what to do with at the lowest possible price. If I were to criticize those companies in any way I would say that they kept prices too low for too long. This has not been good for the conservation of a depleting resource but the record of the industry on the whole has been too good.

Then the minister goes on to say that it would give Canadians a great deal of pride to have Petro-Can. The hon. member for Calgary South also referred to other Crown corporations. If the government were sponsoring a corporation the shares of which are available to Canadians, and Canadians had a good prospect of receiving a dividend, then they might have some sort of pride in the organization. But that is not what is being proposed in this mess that is before us. This corporation will issue 100 shares which will be owned exclusively by the government and which are non-transferrable. So how can anyone have any sort of connection with an abortion like that?

I can cite Air Canada as an example. How many people are proud of that organization? Certainly I do not talk to many who are. That is a corporation that pays no taxes yet runs up deficits. At the same time other organizations operating in the same field pay taxes, their shareholders pay tax on the corporations' dividends, and they provide better service to boot.

The minister says that he will have an honest company which will be subject to the disciplines of the profit and loss statement. The most charitable word I can think of to describe that is baloney. I do not care how thin you slice it, it is still baloney.

Mr. Alexander: Garbage is a better word.

Mr. Schumacher: I can think of better words too, but I will be getting into unparliamentary language. This bill is not worth a pinch of the proverbial. On top of saying that we will have all these wonderful low prices and assured supplies, the minister is going to use this corporation as a vehicle for regional development. I ask you, Madam Speaker, does this mean that Petro-Can is going to drill oil wells where there is no oil just to make work and build up the economy in an area? You drill oil wells where you expect to find oil, not where you are trying to build up the local economy. If this company is being formed for the purpose of artificially stimulating the local economies of various regions in this country, then it may as well be called—

Mr. McKinnon: An OFY grant.

Mr. Schumacher: —a super duper OFY grant, as suggested by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). Or else it is going to be the ultimate in pork barrelling. I can imagine during the next election campaign Liberal candidates saying, "If you elect me I will make sure that Petro-Can drills an oil well in this constituency". The whole thing is just beyond belief.

Then the minister goes on to say that this corporation is going to have a great social conscience and is going to train the native people of this country.

An hon. Member: Perhaps it is going into the dredging business.

Mr. Schumacher: I do not know whether we are dealing here with a vocational school or an oil company. Either you have an efficiently run oil company that is designed to get oil out of the ground at the cheapest possible price in as large a quantity as possible, or you have a vocational school. I do not think an oil company should be used as a vehicle for training the labour force. Certainly we should have training and retraining programs for our native people, and for all others in this country who require them. But let us not do this through the use of a Crown corporation that is supposed to provide oil and gas in abundant supplies at low prices.

Then the minister makes a comment about being subject to the disciplines of an operational statement and the balance sheet. As my hon. friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) characterizes that, it is just garbage.

● (2140)

Mr. Alexander: Right on.

Mr. Basford: Are you going to speak too?

Mr. Alexander: I will if you want me to.

Mr. Schumacher: Toward the end of his remarks he says that there may be areas of exploration not undertaken by private sectors because commercial returns are not easily defined by the corporations involved or because they are deemed to be too far distant. We have had a situation for the last four or five years during which there have been absolutely no ground rules on which the number of companies operating in the Arctic could rely.

Mr. McKinley: They change them every second day.

Mr. Schumacher: They did not change them because they did not have any. They abolished the land use regulations that were established in 1961, and have not replaced them with anything, so in actual fact the hundreds of millions of dollars spent there by the private sector in the past four or five years have been spent totally on speculation because companies do not know to what rules they will be subject. I do not think there is any evidence that the private sector in this country is anything but cautious about how it spends its exploration money. I think these companies are to be commended for spending the money they have in spite of the lack of any ground rules set down by the government. In any event the minister does not think they will continue, and I suppose this is a normal thought. I am sure he would not operate on the basis of the faith displayed by this government over the past number of years.

The minister also said there might also be areas of exploration which are not being pursued by the private sector because of the financial burdens involved, and these are cases where the national company would carry out exploration activities on its own. I do not think the private companies have shown any evidence of behaving in that way. I suggest that it is not a function of this proposed company to explore in the most costly and least likely areas to produce oil and natural gas, but that seems to be the implication of what the minister is saying he wants it to do. Again I say I cannot go for that type of policy. The minister has shown no practical sense at all in the drafting of this bill, or in his ideas put forward in respect of this proposed company and what it is supposed to do.

The minister has also suggested that it is bad that the petroleum industry is 90 per cent foreign owned. I suggest it is better to have an industry that is 90 per cent foreign owned than to have no industry at all, and that would have been the case if they had not come into Canada. There certainly never were any policies of this government or its predecessor to give Canadians any break at all in respect of the development of their own resources. There is still no indication that the government wants to give any incentive to Canadians to develop their own resources, except through the direct route of socialism.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schumacher: The only way Canadians can rightfully develop their own resources is through direct ownership and development by the federal government.

An hon. Member: That's a pretty good idea.

Mr. Schumacher: I hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggesting that this would be a good idea on the part of the federal government. If it is such a good idea for the federal government I wonder why that philosophy has not succeeded in the form of greater development of oil and natural gas in his own province.

An hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Schumacher: It is, is it? I find it rather strange that this creature called Sask Oil, which has now established rather elaborate offices in the city of Calgary, is so active in Alberta buying gas from that province at the price Alberta wants to charge, when it will not make the same arrangements with producers of natural gas in the province of Saskatchewan. I find it a rather strange and unusual attitude that the people of Saskatchewan will go to Alberta and pay what the market there demands, but will not give the same deal to the producers who are finding and producing in the province of Saskatchewan. That does not seem to make sense.

The final solution of the government appears to be nationalization of the industry for the benefit of Canadians, even though we have numerous examples that nationalization does not work.

One of the most objectionable parts of the minister's statement is his reference to how the Canadian oil companies, which he says are largely foreign owned, treat their employees. He states, and I quote:

People are a company's most important resource and the Canadian petroleum industry has developed over the years a highly competent group of professionals who have become experts in all phases of industry operations including its management. The majority of these are employed by foreign-owned companies. The corporation will offer opportunities which are commensurate in challenge and scope, and as its role may ultimately be just as diverse as those of some large international companies, it will provide a good training ground for Canadians wishing to link their careers with the oil industry in the service of Canada.

I should think that all employees of existing oil companies are quite proud of the job they have done in serving Canada, making this a surplus area with low cost fuel. I resent greatly the implication that these existing companies are in fact grinding the faces of the poor in their relations with their employees, and that it now is a fortunate thing the government of Canada has come along with a vehicle to save them from the clutches of foreign owned corporations. That is unworthy of the minister, and it is at total variance with the facts. It has been my personal experience that these so-called foreign controlled oil companies have had exceptionally good personnel policies and relations.

So we are left with a proposal that is contradictory in its terms, and with no evidence that this will solve our problems. It is part of government policy to ensure future energy requirements. It is interesting to note that this is probably the only country in the world that is still subsidizing the use of gasoline by its citizens. That is a rather peculiar way to approach a situation in which we can see a shortfall in this depleting resource in the future. Nevertheless the government's policy is completely contradictory, with nothing going in one direction. I think it is a shame that this is the only industrialized area in the world not experiencing an upturn in exploration activity for oil and natural gas at the present time. In fact the converse is true. Our exploration activity has fallen to the 1966 level. The government should be doing something to create the proper atmosphere so that we can return to the conditions that created our former favourable position.

We have seen an admission of defeat by the government in the recent announcement that it will have to cut off oil exports very shortly. This will create problems in respect of balance of payments, and other difficulty in respect of our economy. I see nothing in the statement of the minister to show that the government has any idea about how to get back on the right track. This idea certainly is not the answer.

Many people have said that how much good or damage this proposed vehicle could cause will depend on how it is used. I suggest there is no guarantee concerning how it will be used. I would hate to see this vehicle established because then it would be available for my New Democratic friends, and their type of inspiration, if they ever got hold of the levers of government. I can well imagine what they would do if this type of organization were in existence. So in conclusion I say, as I said at the beginning, that I hope this little baby of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be stillborn.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am particularly pleased to speak this evening, and probably also tomorrow afternoon, on this bill because I believe it is one of the more important bills to come before this parliament. I realize that the flunkies on the other side of this House who blindly support the government are impatient to get home tonight, but I suggest that their impatience with the taxpayers' money of this country will be their undoing. This is the sixtieth Crown corporation to be created, if it is created.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I hope the record clearly shows that the applause came from the Liberal government benches, because I think it is time the people of Canada understood that the official opposition is the only party in the House which is standing up to oppose more public intervention in the private sector.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in introducing this bill said one thing with which I agree. Let me repeat it. This appears at page 4036 of Hansard. At that time the minister stated:

We harbour no illusions that establishment of a national petroleum company is likely to lead to early and spectacular results in terms of massive energy development or financial success. I want the House to know that we are going into this venture in full realization of the fact that the hazards of exploration risk, technical and commercial uncertainty await this venture.

I say it is important not only that the House be told what the minister has stated but that the people of Canada be told what he has stated.

I referred to this as being the sixtieth Crown corporation to be inflicted on this nation. Let us take a look at the record of some of these Crown corporations that the government members have applauded so wholeheartedly. Let us start alphabetically with Air Canada. I would recommend that members on the government side pick up the new issue of "The National Finances" for 1974-75, which is published by the Canadian Tax Foundation. They should read it because it has a complete record concerning the Crown corporations about which they are overjoyed. I shall begin with Air Canada. The net profit of Air Canada for 1973 amounted to $6.1 million, down from the 1972 profit of $8.6 million. Federal loans to Air Canada totalled $253.8 million at March 31, 1974.

Next we have Canadian Arsenals Limited, a real beauty. It is shown here that financial statements for the corporation's year ending March 31, 1974, reflect a loss of $1.8 million on sales of $4.6 million. At March 31, 1974, loans to and investments in Canadian Arsenals Limited stood at $3.5 million.

Here is another real beauty, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Prior to 1953 the CBC deprived part of its revenue from a radio receiving fee. The report goes on to describe how that fee was abolished and substituted by direct appropriation from the treasury. On March 31, 1974, the equity account stood at $1.8 million. Advances to the corporation for capital expenditures at the same date totalled $197.9 million, and working capital $9.6 million. In short we have a description of the almost unbelievable loss position the CBC has incurred over the years. I would recommend that these hon. members who so blindly support the government compare the record of the CBC with the record of any of the similar private, networks in the United States or Canada to see whether they should be proud of the financial results of the CBC.

Let me touch on the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Here we have a corporation which had gross expenditures of $7.7 million in 1973-74 and gross revenues of $2.1 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: May I call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been adopted.

HEALTH—EFFECT OF POVERTY ON CHILDREN—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON ADOPTION OF FOOD PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I chose tonight to follow up on my question of March 10 to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) because I am really bothered by the result of the study on "Poor Kids" by the National Council on Welfare. It is impossible for me to understand why 1.6 million Canadian children are living in poverty when we take into account the wealth of our nation and the percentages related in the report. For example the highest proportion was in my province of Newfoundland where over 45 per cent of our children are in families with incomes below the poverty line.

● (2200)

Similar figures relate to other provinces, such as 42 per cent in the Northwest Territories, 37.3 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 38.4 per cent in Saskatchewan, and so the list goes on. One finds it sickening to read about some of the actual cases and the conditions under which they exist. I can say only that I can support these facts from my personal experience.

But the question we have to resolve is how to correct this embarrassing situation. The minister had indicated, and rightly so, that from a constitutional point of view the responsibility lies with the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan. I realize, as he indicated in his answer, that social services are now under study. He also said recently that he hopes that we will see a guaranteed annual income by 1976.

We already have a pretty good family allowance program which nationally amounts to $22.08 per child per month, and two provinces go beyond that amount to $41.68 in Quebec and $33.60 in Alberta.

Social assistance payments have increased over the years, and evidently our social security benefits compare favourably with the rest of the world.

Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, in spite of all our generous programs something must be drastically wrong with the direction of effort of many provinces and of the federal government when we see these startling and sickening figures. We must stop brushing off the problem with the stock answer that it is the responsibility of the provinces, and we must take the lead in correcting this disease of poverty.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in a motion he introduced recently recommended that the report should be required reading for all members of parliament. I agree with him, but I think it might be worthwhile to list a few of the pertinent points contained in the report.

The report states that, first, poor children are more likely to miss school due to illness, to be victims of home accidents, and to exhibit hearing and speech impairment.

Second, disadvantaged children are more apt to contact rheumatic fever, hepatitis, meningitis or tuberculosis.

Third, undernourished children are retarded in their height and weight development, suffer from physical and mental retardation, and a greater percentage of them has a history of diabetes. This happens in spite of the vast medical insurance plans which have been in existence for years.

The study refers to the lack of medical research in the search for solutions to the effects of poverty among children. I do not have the time to list some of the more pertinent points which they make with regard to medical research.

All this is happening in our wealthy country at the same time as medical costs reach uncontrollable proportions. We now have another report, to go along with all the others such as the Senate poverty report, namely, the nutrition survey, to indicate the alarming situation which exists with regard to our youth.

I do not say that the answers are simple, but it is obvious that we are trying to correct the problems experienced by our youth after the fact rather than at the right time.

The report makes a very valid point concerning how the physical and mental development of the fetus can be affected by the inadequacy of the mother's diet during pregnancy because she is poor and cannot afford nutritious food, with the result that the child pays the price of that poverty in stunted health even before it is born.

I recommend to the minister, first, that this matter hold high priority in his further meetings with provincial ministers of health. Second, I recommend that our priorities change with regard to our physical fitness programs so that greater attention is paid to physical development rather than to the achievement of excellence in a few children's sports with restricted participation. I am a strong advocate of our physical fitness program, but we must change our priorities because it is the weaker person who needs most leadership, guidance and coaching so that he will grow up to be a more healthy citizen. If we can provide many programs such as the OFY, or student exchange programs, if we can ask our youth to participate with initiative in many other citizen oriented programs, why in the world can we not provide a program whereby organizations in conjunction with school boards can supply nutritious food supplements in schools?

I feel very embarrassed when I receive letters such as this one from a school board. It reads:

> Thank you for your efforts on our behalf. Believe me they are deeply appreciated even though the results of your efforts have come to nought. The supplementary diet program for the schools under our board in Corner Brook area is functioning on a restrictive basis with funds supplied by two local parishes, and two local organizations.
> I might point out that it is very difficult to secure funds for any ongoing project because people think that government should furnish funds.

He goes on in his frustration and finishes by saying that maybe he should tell them that the hungry children are "doing dope":

> ... then we could get funds to help "solve the problem". Maybe we could get some of the surplus eggs and chickens for a lunch program but that would no doubt upset the market price or some damn fool thing.

This is the frustration school boards and teachers are facing.

Finally, Madam Speaker, if such a large percentage of our population is composed of children, as indicated in the report, when we face these alarming problems which should be in the mind of every member of parliament, I think it is time and it is vital that the government appoint a full time minister of youth so that we can direct the efforts required to develop the more important segment of our society—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would like to refer the hon. member to the answer given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on March 10, 1975. The answer is as follows:

> ... this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction. All social services are now under study with the provinces within the context of the social welfare review.

I would also like to add some supplementary remarks to the answer given to the hon. member.

First, it should be understood that there is no lack of nutritious food in this country. Recently the department moved to strengthen an already strong situation by proposing that the restoration of certain nutrients to staple foods and substitutes for staple foods be made mandatory. I refer specifically to the addition of vitamin D to all milk, vitamin A to all skimmed and partly skimmed milk, vitamin C to fruit drinks, and B vitamins and iron to flour.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Second, the nutrition Canada survey, which examined more than 4,000 school age children in the provinces, found little or no evidence of nutrient deficiency, certainly none which would be expected to prevent participation in school activities.

There is great interest throughout the country in school lunch programs and the quality of food available in schools. While I am pleased to note this interest, I would stress that there is a need to evaluate both present and proposed programs. The health protection branch of the department is currently collaborating with the government of Alberta in just such an evaluation of a new school lunch program in northern Alberta. They have offered similar assistance to the evaluation of programs in Manitoba and British Columbia. Only by such evaluation can we be sure that dollars spent on school lunch programs are not misspent.

Finally, the federal-provincial nutrition committee has undertaken the preparation of guidelines for the development of school lunch programs which will be available to all school and health officials. I will send the hon. member a copy if he so wishes.

SPORTS—HOCKEY—SUGGESTION AMATEUR ASSOCIATIONS NOT SIGN CHILDREN TO CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, last Thursday I raised a question in this House, and it was directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I asked the following question:

> In view of the fact that the minister was approached last year with respect to the case of 16 year old Michael Laffrade of Toronto who was prevented from playing hockey because he had signed a contract with an amateur team, and in view of the fact that the minister had expressed outrage and incredulity at the effects of that contract, and in view of the fact that the minister on the program "Ombudsman" had promised to speak to the CAHA about this situation, would he inform the House if he has contacted the CAHA and instructed it and its affiliated bodies to cease and desist from forcing children to sign contracts or forms which restrict their opportunities for playing hockey?

I further asked:

> In view of the fact that many more cases similar to that of Michael Laffrade have surfaced this winter, will the minister inform the House as to what steps he is prepared to take to ensure that children do not become embroiled in legal disputes in the pursuit of voluntarily playing amateur sports in this country?

The minister preferred to duck the issue by repeating that he had contacted the CAHA, and he said nothing else.

The CAHA is the governing body for amateur hockey in this country. Participating players must sign CAHA registration forms to be able to play hockey in Canada. Because of its monopoly on amateur hockey, if you do not play for one of the CAHA teams you do not play hockey at all.

It is this registration card which has created a very inhuman and most undesirable form of slavery. In fine print above the signature of the child are the following words: "I hereby agree to abide by all the rules, regulations and decisions of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association."

What about the rules? One would think that these rules are pretty easy to come by. They are as scarce to obtain as gold these days. They are not easily available to the players, and indeed most of the children do not know what they are signing, and neither do their parents.

● (2210)

For your information, Madam Speaker, there are 174 pages of rules, 36 pages for the CAHA, 100 pages for the OHA and 38 pages for the MTHL—the young Metro-Toronto Hockey League. Among other things one rule forbids any team from signing or even trying out a player who was with another club the previous season, as long as that club has a team in the player's age division. It runs a minimum of two years, the year he plays and the following year. Thus he is indentured to the team.

Another rule establishes boundaries for teams, and players who live within those boundaries must play for the team within that boundary or get a release. Another rule gives the league the authority to specify which team a child will play for outside his boundary. Some children and their parents have tried to defy this slave trade and have sought recourse through the courts. But here again the CAHA has a rule, rule 145, which states that anyone doing so is liable to an automatic indefinite suspension unless the court finds that the CAHA acted contrary to the rules of what the CAHA terms "natural justice".

The comments of Mr. Gordon Juckes, executive director of CAHA, are rather eye-opening. He says:

> Where you have a voluntary organization whose members belong only because they want to, it seems only sensible that people abide by the decisions of their fellow members. You shouldn't take an internal fight to the courts. It would be the same if you were a member of a golf club. The sport should be allowed to settle its own problems.

It is fairly obvious then that the CAHA is an association of teams rather than players, and players are owned by teams, and the rules are those which the team management adopts. The CAHA is all heart, and Mr. Juckes is filled with understanding when he says:

> In my 20 years with the CAHA, I've never seen the rule against people going to the courts used. Last year, one boy wanted a transfer from Ontario to British Columbia, which both the branch and the CAHA refused to give. He went to court and got an injunction. We didn't suspend him. He went and played in Victoria just as he wanted.

It is quite clear that amateur sport is highly organized and professionally administered with only one aim in mind—prepare players for the professional leagues. There is much talk of playing for enjoyment, physical exercise, and personal development. Indeed the federal government has recognized this in legislation entitled the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act.

Section 3 of this act states:

> The objects of this act are to encourage, promote and develop fitness and amateur sport in Canada . . .

This section also permits the minister in his pursuance of the objects of this act to "assist, co-operate with and enlist the aid of any group interested in furthering the objects of this act".

Several questions arise over this matter, Madam Speaker, which I find very difficult to understand, and I hope whoever answers can clarify them for me. First, when a child signs those registration cards, is that a legal binding document, especially in view of the fact that these players are minors? Second, if a minor's signature on a contract is worthless, why is the CAHA allowed to use it to cow children and their parents into submission? Third, why does the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for amateur sport in Canada, not intervene and instruct the CAHA to cease and desist? After all, the minister certainly did not hesitate to intervene in keeping out an American league football team from Toronto.

Why do children have to sign any contracts at all? If the philosophy is "participaction" at this level, and it should jolly well be, then that becomes the reason for the team to exist.

What percentage of the children who start at the squirt level of hockey in Canada are still playing hockey at the midget level? I suspect that the percentage is very low indeed.

Some provinces have undertaken studies into hockey and have come up with recommendations for the creation of provincial hockey councils, or ombudsmen, to oversee amateur hockey. Probably these are worth-while suggestions, but I think the most immediate step is to eliminate this particular practice of contract signing by minors. Perhaps it may just motivate us to make participation much more of an enjoyable experience for our children.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, during the past year the minister has communicated with officials of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association on several occasions on this matter, and most particularly in the case of Michael Laffrade. His case is as follows: Michael Laffrade wrote to the North York Rangers Hockey Club asking for a release. His request was not acceptable to the team. As a result, the player and his legal counsel asked the Metro Toronto Hockey League for a special hearing, which was given to him.

After hearing his appeal, the MTHL executive committee denied the application for a release. I have been advised that during the hearing no satisfactory reasons were advanced as to why this player wished to leave his present team, nor did he indicate with what team he wished to become associated.

From this time it would appear that neither Mr. Laffrade nor his lawyer took any further steps to resolve this matter. Although appeals to the MTHL board and the Ontario Hockey Association were additional avenues open to them, no such appeals were lodged. Alternatively, neither did they follow up on the other method of redress which is open to all Canadian citizens, the courts. Nevertheless, a place was still available within the organized MTHL body for this player to participate.

I understand that staff from the program "Ombudsman" went directly to the MTHL and on January 17, 1974, at the invitation of the MTHL, attended their board meeting at which time it was assumed they had ample opportunity to clear this matter to their satisfaction.

After reviewing this matter, the following facts are relevant. Mr. Laffrade signed a current card last summer voluntarily. The team with which he signed made every effort to assist him in becoming a regular and active member of the team. When this did not satisfy him, he evidently obtained legal assistance, but there was no pursuit of the matter through the normal hockey channels to final conclusion, nor did he resort to the method of going to the courts. Finally, the North York management went out of their way and put extra effort into assisting this player, not only in his "domestic problems", but also in resolving his hockey problem of transportation.

It is not the intention of the federal government to force a consequential change in the CAHA's team membership structure. This structure is intended to protect the teams, one from the other, and not to restrict the individual player's rights. In my opinion these rights are fully protected if the normal procedures are followed.

I wish to assure the hon. member that the minister has made many representations to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, and the government has exerted its influence in this regard while respecting the autonomy of this national sport governing body. As far as the federal government is concerned, the matter has been settled. Under the circumstances that I have outlined I can only suggest that if a person wishes to effect any changes, he or she should continue to work within the present system. The hon. member also referred to Bill C-2. I remind him that this bill is presently before a committee of this House. If the hon. member so wishes, he has ample opportunity to oppose any suggested amendments or to propose amendments of his own.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REFUSAL OF CORPORATION TO SUPPLY TRANSCRIPT OF PROGRAM "TEN LOST YEARS"

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I never thought I would have to rise in my place and demand that the government order the publicly-owned Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to stop broadcasting pornography and smut.

On February 3 I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), the minister responsible to the House for the CBC, if he would see that any future programs scheduled on CBC would be cancelled if they were no less insulting and of no higher quality than the show billed as "The Ten Lost Years".

The minister said simply that he would make my representation known to the corporation. The minister must have known that that would not answer my question, nor would it settle the issue that I raised. I did not ask the minister if he would make my representation known to the CBC. I could have done that myself. What I asked the minister to do was to take some action to ensure that CBC programming would be made more acceptable to the people whose tax money is used to run the corporation.

On February 13 the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) asked the Secretary of State similar questions concerning CBC programming, and the minister replied that it is the policy of the government not to instruct the corporation. I think that we all have a right to ask who does instruct the CBC in the name of the Canadian people if it is not their government.

[Miss Campbell.]

● (2220)

I do not know of any government agency or Crown corporation which is not instructed and monitored by the government. I had always been under the impression, Madam Speaker, that this was one of the roles of ministers of the Crown. If there are any government corporations which are not monitored and instructed by the appropriate ministers, then it is time to find out which ones they are and to bring them under the control of parliament without further delay.

The Secretary of State, Madam Speaker, is well aware that it has never been accepted policy to turn a publicly-funded agency or corporation loose and allow it to function as it pleases. The mere fact that public money is involved not only makes such a policy unacceptable, it makes it illegal, and I should not have to make that point to the minister.

The point I am making now, and will continue to make until I get some action, is that no broadcasting facilities in Canada can be allowed to operate without some degree of continuing scrutiny and instruction by the appropriate government minister. The broadcasting medium in any country has a tremendous influence on public attitudes and views, and it has the power to mould public and private morality. This power must be used with restraint, and it must be used in the best interests of the majority of the people.

John Hirsh, the head of CBC television drama, told the Commons broadcasting committee this week that CBC has a responsibility to give the viewer "not only what they think they want, but what the artists know they will want once they try it and once they get to like it".

I have received hundreds of letters from viewers expressing disgust with the type of drama being presented in prime viewing time on CBC, and almost as many telephone calls. All but four of them support my position in this matter. Other members, perhaps all members of this House, have also received letters from constituents, and I believe the CBC has been deluged with complaints.

Some people have sent me copies of a form letter sent out by CBC and headed "Dear Viewer". This indicates to me that the corporation does not take these complaints seriously. Why should it, Madam Speaker, when its own minister states publicly that he does not intend to instruct the network? The form letter tells the recipient that the author of the book "Ten Lost Years" was satisfied with the television adaptation.

I have to agree with a letter I received from the president of a local Council of Women in which she asks the question: whose rights are we supposed to protect, those of the parents and the decent citizens, or those of the smut peddlers? I have received many letters from people who lived through the depression years and every one of them states that the program was not a true presentation of that era; they say that the filth and pornography portrayed in the program only degraded the people and undermined their fine efforts to get through a serious depression.

It has been suggested that anyone who does not want to hear vulgar language or see pornography on television can turn the dial or turn off the set. What an irresponsible thing to suggest. There are people in parts of this country who only have access to two channels on television. and there are some places where there is only one channel. Why should people who pay to support the CBC be told that if they do not like to watch filth and garbage on their screens they can turn it off?

The CBC must be told immediately to clean up broadcasting in this country. This year the corporation is asking for $352 million in public money. That is a lot of money. It belongs to the Canadian people, and someone in the cabinet has to accept responsibility for the way in which it is spent. This is not a request. It is a basic necessity.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, further to what the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) has just told us, and more specifically to the question he put to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) on February 12 last, I wish to assure the House that when an hon. member asks the CBC for a tape recording of a program heard over the waves reserved for its broadcasts, usually the CBC accedes to his request. Almost invariably, the tapes requested deal with information, documentaries or current affairs programs; the CBC supplies this type of tapes every year to a great many hon. members.

However, with regard to plays televised by the CBC, they fall into a somewhat different category. The CBC feels that they form a whole, where sound and image cannot be dissociated, if the whole is to keep its artistic value. Thus sound and picture must go together if a fair and honest assessment is to be made.

For the above reason, Madam Speaker, it has been the established practice of the corporation to organize for members a screening of a program which they would like to see again. Quite recently, for example, some members attended, at their request, a screening of the drama entitled "Heads, Guts and Sound Bone Dance" which was shown by the CBC last year.

The CBC has already let it known, Madam Speaker, that it is still prepared to show to the members concerned the telecast "Ten Lost Years" to which the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton referred in the House on February 12. You can be sure that as soon as the transcription is available, an official of the CBC will communicate with the members who have indicated that they would like to see that program again.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTION EMPLOYEES RECEIVE PAY CHEQUES BY MAIL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter which on the surface may not appear to be of urgent and pressing necessity but which recognizes that we are fast approaching the end of the month when pension cheques will be going out. The House is well aware of the firm belief of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) in incentives within the work force as well as his commitment for increasing the efficiency of the Post Office. Since a great many businesses across Canada suffer from an interruption in the postal service, and since the lives of many Canadians, especially those depending on pension incomes, are frustrated by a disruption in the postal service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the Postmaster General be instructed by this House to institute a policy whereby all postal employees will receive their pay cheques through the regular mail service using the postal code.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE OF NEW MILK POLICY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

Owing to the very serious situation of eastern producers as a result of the new dairy policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That an emergency debate be held in this House as soon as possible on the forthcoming new dairy policy, about which producers have not been consulted, taking into consideration this strike which more especially deprives eastern producers of the feed grain essential to their production.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE—PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF PRICING PRACTICES AND AMOUNTS PAID PARENT CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the B.C. Telephone Company is now requesting a rate increase of some 20 per cent before the Canadian Transport Commission and received an increase just last month, in view of the fact that the minister of communications of British Columbia has requested that an inquiry be made into the pricing policies of B.C. Telephone Company and its related companies, and in view of the fact that some $83.7 million was sent to its parent company in New York in 1973, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House direct the Minister of Communications to forthwith intervene with the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to the pending application for an increase by B. C. Telephone to stop such consideration until a proper economic assessment is completed by the ministry into pricing practices of the B.C. Telephone with regard to related or associated companies and also an investigation be made into the amounts that have been paid by this corporation to its U.S. parent corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

AIR POLLUTION BY ASBESTOS FIBRES—SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF STANDARDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss a most urgent and important matter.

Because of the serious problems caused by asbestos fibre air pollution in the Thetford Mines area where, as early as 1949, at the time of the first strike in that sector, request was made to improve the situation but to no avail, and because of the serious problems created by data supplied by the CNTU and New York's Mount Sinai School of Medicine specialists, and all the more so because Thetford workers now on strike want their security guaranteed in this regard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the House of Commons be allowed to discuss now this whole problem of asbestos fibre pollution, so that immediate steps can be taken in this regard, and that the federal Department of Environment assume as soon as possible its responsibility for setting up national standards by setting up a work schedule and the mechanism required to speed up the work of the research group in charge in the department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

*RELEASE OF EPILEPTICS FROM EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,271—Mr. Herbert:

1. Are the Ministers of National Health and Welfare and Manpower and Immigration aware that employees are being fired in Canada in 1975 when their employers learn of a past history of epilepsy, even though this illness has been fully controlled?

2. Is any action contemplated?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part one from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is no. The answer to the second part is that questions of labour practices do not fall under the minister's jurisdiction.

The answer to part one from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is that the minister is aware that this situation exists. The answer to part two is that the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in operation of its Canada Manpower Centres, endeavours to find employment for all clients and eliminate causes of discrimination where possible.

Order Paper Questions

SUMMER STUDENT PROGRAM, 1975

Question No. 1,297—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the total cost to the taxpayer of the "Hire-a-Student" and "Have a Young Summer" buttons and the associated advertising campaign by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

2. Is the amount of money allotted to the 1975 Opportunities for Youth Programme higher or lower than that for the 1974 Programme and, in either case, by how much?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The total cost of "Hire-a-Student" and "Have a Young Summer" buttons for distribution to employers is $3,886. The total cost of the "Hire-a-Student" advertising campaign is $275,000.

2. The amount of money allotted to the 1975 Opportunities for Young Programme is lower than that for the 1974 programme. A total of $29.5 million was allotted to the 1974 programme, compared to an allotment of $27.5 million to the 1975 OFY programme, thus constituting an amount $2 million lower than the 1974 programme budget. This reduction has been made in order to enable new programmes to be included in The Summer Student Employment and Activities Programme, thus offering a wider range of employment opportunities and summer activities to students.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,308—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. (a) Full-time employees as of January 1, 1974, 2,460; (b) Full-time employees as of January 1, 1975, 2,635*.

Salary Band	January 1, 1974	January 1, 1975*
(a) Under $10,000	1,055	844
(b) $10,000—$20,000	715	884
(c) $20,000—$30,000	625	684
(d) over $30,000	65	223

*These figures include a total of 127 employees of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REGIONAL WAGE POLICIES

Question No. 1,461—Mr. Howie:

Are there any plans to examine regional wage policies to ensure equality for all Public Service employees?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Because the government's compensation policy is based on comparability with outside labour markets, it is felt that regional wage rates are appropriate for those occupations for which regional rates prevail in the outside markets and for which there is not a mobility requirement.

PUBLIC SERVICE—DECLARATION OF SALARIES OR FEES

Question No. 1,587—Mr. Herbert:

Is a full-time public servant with a salary in excess of $20,000 required to declare to his or her superior any income, such as salary or fees, received for services rendered in (a) the private sector (b) another branch or department of the Public Service while that person continues to receive full salary?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Any public servant appointed under the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act and employed in a department or agency for whom the Treasury Board represents the employer has no restrictions on other employment or outside activities except those specifically prohibited by legislation, such as certain types of political activity, provided that it would not (a) interfere with the employee's ability to satisfactorily discharge the duties for which he/she was employed, and (b) result in a potential or actual conflict of interest situation, and (c) result in bringing discredit to the public service. The onus is on the public servant to notify their deputy head or superior of their intention to pursue such gainful activities. In certain exceptional cases, the Deputy Head may agree to an employee assuming additional activities either in the public or private sector for which additional remuneration may be forthcoming, provided such activities are of benefit to the Department or the Public Service.

PACIFIC REGION MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—CLUSTER MANAGEMENT CONCEPT

Question No. 1,755—Mr. Whittaker:

1. How many new or additional positions will be required if the cluster management system is implemented by Pacific Region Manpower and Immigration in the following categories (a) SX 2 (b) SX 1 (c) PM 7 (d) PM 6 (e) PM 5 (f) PM 4 (g) PM 3?

2. What is the estimated additional (a) salary (b) administrative (c) premises cost consequent upon implementation of the cluster management system in Pacific Region Manpower and Immigration?

3. If new or additional positions are created in Pacific Region Manpower and Immigration as a result of implementation of the cluster management system, how will these positions be filled?

4. Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration assured employees by means of a video tape presentation, that there will be no forced moves or "red circling" as a consequence of reorganization within his Department and, if so, how does the Department propose to deal with employees who might find themselves without employment as a consequence of the re-location of present Area Offices in some areas of Pacific Region where those locations do not coincide with present Area Offices?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. No additional positions are expected to result from the implementation of the cluster management concept by Pacific Region. The managers of the six CMCs designated as 'cluster headquarters' will be responsible for general supervision of the managers of those CMCs comprising their respective clusters. Whereas the five existing area managers are classified as PM-5, it is expected that cluster managers will be PM-6 when classification action is completed and the managerial level of area manager is removed.

2. In balance, it is expected that the increase in salary paid to (PM-6) cluster managers over that presently paid to the managers of those CMCs concerned, plus the salary of the district director, Yukon and the increase from PM-6 to SX-1 of the Vancouver metro manager (both of which are other aspects of Pacific Region's reorganization) will be more than compensated for by the elimination of the salaries of area managers. Costs of premises should also reduce with the deactivation of area offices.

3. To ensure application of the best available talent and expertise, the new cluster manager positions will be filled by competition. Incumbent area managers will be eligible to compete, as will the managers of the applicable CMCs.

4. Yes, these assurances were contained in the audio-visual presentation of the Minister and Deputy Minister, as distributed to all staff during the period February-March, 1974. They were re-iterated in messages from the Minister of December 6, 1973 and April 11, 1974 to all staff. There are many factors which could influence the ultimate disposition of those cases where an incumbent area manager may not be the successful candidate for the cluster manager position in his present location. For example, he may succeed in obtaining the position of CMC manager in that or another location as our current general efforts to increase the base and broaden the range of CMC managers' classifications progress to fruition. Or he may win a competition for district director in another Region. Or some other factor of attrition, such as promotion or retirement of other staff members, may present a solution. In any event, the Minister's assurances shall continue to apply as the Department's reorganization and renewal program proceeds.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NUMBER OF PERSONNEL WORKING IN CONTINENTAL REGIONS

Question No. 1,761—Mr. Herbert:

In the Department of National Defence for the month of April 1975, what is the budgeted number of public servants (not including members of the Armed Forces) to work in the continental regions of (a) North America excluding Canada (b) South America (c) Europe (d) Asia (e) Australasia?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The budgeted number of public servants for employment in continental regions described is as follows: (a) 7; (b) Nil; (c) 18; (d) 2; (e) Nil.

*APPLICATIONS UNDER FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

Question No. 1,799—Mr. Reid:

1. Since the proclamation of Part 1 of the Foreign Investment Review Act, how many applications have been received by the Foreign Investment Review Agency and how many have come to a decision by the Agency?

2. How many applications were withdrawn before such applications came to a decision?

3. From the date of applications being received (and in order) what was the average number of days passed before a decision was rendered by the Agency and reported to the Minister?

4. From the time the Agency made a decision and forwarded it to the Minister, what was the average number of days passed before Cabinet rendered a decision?

5. How many times has the Agency found it necessary to deal with an application over and above the 60 days mentioned in the Act, and has this provision acted to shorten the time usually taken by the Agency to make decisions?

6. Has the Agency refused to provide reasons for its decisions in some cases while providing reasons in others and, if so (a) for what reason (b) in how many cases were reasons (i) given (ii) not given?

7. What is the working definition used by the Agency of the phrase "significant benefit to Canada" in determining whether or not a particular transaction can be approved or not and what are the practical concessions or changes which the Agency seeks to obtain from participants whose transactions the Agency must approve?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the reply to this question is quite lengthy, I would like to ask the House to take it as read?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The above mentioned reply reads as follows:]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. From 9 April 1974, when the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act that relate to acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises were proclaimed, until 7 March 1975, the Foreign Investment Review Agency issued certificates of receipt for 126 applications. The Agency has no authority to make decisions on applications under the Act. The Governor in Council allowed 52 applications, refused to allow 11 applications, and was deemed to have allowed 3 applications.

2. From 9 April 1974 to 7 March 1975, 16 certified applications were withdrawn by the applicant.

3 and 4. During the period under reference, an average of 100 days passed between the issue of a certificate of receipt for an application and the decision by the Governor in Council. This average covers both decisions to allow and decisions to refuse to allow. The Act provides that, before any decision can be made to refuse to allow, parties to the proposed transaction in question must be given the opportunity to make whatever further representations they wish. There is no statutory time limit on the period within which they may make those further representations.

5. Applicants were advised of their right to make representations or further representations, under subsection 11(1), in relation to 83 applications between 9 April 1974 and 7 March 1975.

6. As noted, the Agency makes no decisions itself on whether applications should be allowed or disallowed. Those decisions are made by the Governor in Council. Reasons for those decisions are given, by myself on behalf of the Government, whenever this can be done. See reply dated 26 February 1975 (Hansard page 3582). To date reasons for decisions to allow have been published in 32 cases out of a total of 52 allowed. From the outset the Government has recognized the need to avoid the disclosure of any information which could possibly jeopardize the legitimate interests of firms and individuals concerned. This is still the guiding principle, but experience has shown that it is possible to move towards wider disclosure than was the earlier practice without causing damage of that kind.

7. The "working definition" used by the Government in determining whether there is significant benefit to Canada in any given proposal, and therefore whether it should be allowed or not, is that specified in the Foreign Investment Review Act. Whether there is significant benefit to Canada in any given case is determined by reference to the particular circumstances of the case and the relationship of those circumstances to the factors listed in subsection 2(2). The application of those factors necessarily varies from case to case.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—DIRECTOR SECURITY, COLONEL DABROS

2. What type of military equipment and munitions have been sold?

3. To what countries has Canada sold military equipment?

2. (a) By department or agency, what is the nature of information supplied and what conditions are placed by the government on its use (b) what provision is made for informing affected citizens that a transfer of information has taken place and what provisions are made for affected citizens to have access to transferred information and to correct false information?

4. In each case, what is the approximate number of individuals about whom information was made available by the government in 1973?

NAMES OF MINISTERS, ACTING MINISTERS AND SECOND ACTING MINISTERS OF DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 2,075—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

What are the names of the Ministers, Acting Ministers and Second Acting Ministers of each department or ministry of the government?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I should like again to draw attention to questions Nos. 636 and 637 which have been on this and the previous parliament's order paper for now over a year and are still not answered. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the last time I raised this point the parliamentary secretary stated that it was really the ministers who were at fault. I ask him to explain why these questions are still not answered and to name the ministers who are involved, because I believe five ministers might be involved in answering my questions.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP ON GRAIN DELIVERIES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a motion pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter. I present this motion cognizant of the fact that tomorrow is an opposition day held by a party other than mine, the Creditistes Party. My submission to you, Mr. Speaker, is that this is an important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the present work stoppages which have ended all grain shipments from Canada affecting grain deliveries to all foreign countries, creating increasing unemployment, the loss of orders of grain and the grave potential for the loss of foreign grain customers generally.

I therefore move that this House do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 26 the hon. member has given the Chair notice of his intention to propose the motion for adjournment pursuant to that standing order and has supplied in support of that proposal some material in extension to that which he has put forward at this moment. In accordance with a directive to do so at least by the Chair the hon. member has been brief to the point of perfection in bringing forward his argument in support of this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Beatty.]

Mr. Speaker: The fact of the matter is that the subject of Canada's position vis-à-vis commitments for grain shipments abroad has been raised on several occasions over the past few days. The serious concern of course comes not only from the point of view of employment but of our business internationally and this has been discussed in questions and answers. The work stoppages involved obviously represent a very difficult situation. It is difficult for the Chair, in reviewing the rules under Standing Order 26, to see how one could possibly look for a more serious matter and one which would be more qualified for debate under the provisions of that rule.

● (1420)

The only point of concern to the Chair is that the latter provisions of the Standing Order require that the Chair direct its attention to the possibility of the subject matter being discussed in some other reasonable way, and in that respect, since tomorrow is an allotted day under our Standing Orders, the hon. member, if he is in a position to ask the House to sit overtime, for a special debate, should be able to persuade his colleagues that the subject matter of his motion would be important enough to deserve priority with regard to the use of tomorrow's opposition day. However, that possibility of dealing with the matter has been removed as a result of the information given by the hon. member that he and his colleagues are not in a position of authority or control over that subject matter because of internal arrangements among the parties that are well known to all members of the House.

Accordingly, I see no reason why I should not accept the motion put forward by the hon. member, which conforms with the provisions of Standing Order 26. Therefore, I put the following questions to the House: has the hon. member leave to move the motion for the purpose of discussing the matter stated by him?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should indicate for the greater clarification of members that if leave is refused, some 20 hon. members rising in their place, as required under the order, would allow the motion to go forward at the incentive of such members. In any case, in conformity with the practice which has developed under this rule, it is my intention to dispose of the matter by setting the time for debate of this matter at eight o'clock this evening.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 32 is acceptable to the government.

I ask that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion 32—Mr. Ellis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all Department of Public Works "Call for Public Tenders" from January 1, 1975 to date.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to which I think there is an easy resolution. Two days ago I placed on the order paper a question in which I asked for the names of all the ministers, acting ministers and second acting ministers of the various departments and ministeries of the government. In view of questions that have been asked in the House recently, I felt that this would be useful information for all of us to have. That question has been answered today, it is question No. 2,075, but it has been answered by an order for return. I have it, but what about the other 263 members? I realize that the House has already ordered it as a return that is simply tabled and that order cannot be changed, but the answer to my question No. 2,075 could be made an appendix to today's Hansard so that this information would be available to all members of the House.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might suggest that the first paragraph of the order in council plus, the list of the names incorporated be made an appendix to Hansard. It would save some printing.

Mr. Speaker: Is the suggestion put forward by the parliamentary secretary acceptable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Those other paragraphs are just words. It is the names we want.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the suggestion put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For text of answer referred to above see appendix "A"]

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to be somewhat delayed in raising this point of order, but I was in the other place for first reading of a very important bill.

I am advised that the two starred questions in my name which have been on the order paper for almost a month, namely, 1,738 and 1,739, have still not been answered. As the parliamentary secretary can attest, this member is not one who has abused the privileges or the usage of the order paper, and I would hope that he, together with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras)—in so far as these questions affect very serious matters regarding former members of his personal staff—will do everything possible to have these important starred questions answered just as soon as possible.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, there has been a motion on the order paper since October 9, 1974 to table correspondence from the Minister of Justice to the various attorneys general and ministers of health regarding the subject of abortion. My point is that there seems to be no reason whatsoever for this information to be withheld from the House, and I would urge the minister to table that correspondence.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REASON FOR LACK OF PROGRESS IN NEGOTIATIONS—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES TO NEGOTIATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of his oft repeated conviction about, and respect for, the importance of collective bargaining when it has been granted, and in view of the reliable information that the Public Service Alliance and the Treasury Board have been very close for the last five days, perhaps less than two percentage points apart in terms of wages, has the President of the Treasury Board any reason to give the House why no progress has been made and why this stalemate has lasted for five days, if he believes as much in collective bargaining as he has indicated.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that it was not appropriate to negotiate here in the House of Commons. I think that from the beginning of the dispute, we have made offers much higher than those we intended to make; we started with 18 per cent, and now we accept the conciliation report which is proposing a 25.8 per cent increase. We have made other propositions since then, but it is obvious that in the present situation it would not be in the interest of the country to accept every claim of the trade union.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: No one is talking about the government accepting every demand put before it, but I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether, in view of his repeated expressions of support for collective bargaining, and in view of this stalemate within very narrow limits—and without negotiating in the House—he can give the House the assurance that the negotiators on behalf of the Treasury Board really have authority to negotiate, or is the Treasury Board simply standing pat?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: No, the Treasury Board negotiator has as much flexibility as the union representative.

STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP—REQUEST FOR UP TO DATE INFORMATION FROM MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Since the Chair has granted the debate we have been asking for, the only question I have at this time is to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board if he has any more information to add, up to this point in time, before the debate begins in the House this evening.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having ordered the debate for this evening, I think it is proper that all subjects pertaining to that debate be discussed in the House at eight o'clock this evening.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ANALYSIS OF 1972 NUTRITIONAL SURVEY

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Nutrition Canada's survey on the nutritional status of Canadians was completed in 1972. It is now well into 1975. Can the minister tell us when we can expect an analysis of the survey data based on family income levels?

SOCIAL SECURITY

EFFECT OF POVERTY ON CHILDREN—REQUEST FOR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM TO OFFSET

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that "Poor Kids", the report by the National Council of Welfare on Children in Poverty released this month reads in part:

"The cruel barbs about those on welfare—that they are lazy spongers or worse—cut deep into the psyche of the child who grows up on welfare."

Will the Department of National Health and Welfare initiate an educational program to offset these bad effects?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think what is required is even more than an education program; we need a real social security program along the lines of what the government has been recommending for two years and which, I hope, will soon be implemented.

ALLEGATION CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS USED AS DUMPING GROUND FOR POOR CHILDREN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister. We hope this will come very soon because this party has been looking for it for a long time. Will the minister have his department conduct research into selective provinces to see if correctional institutions are being used as dumping grounds for poor children as the report alleges?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are studying the matter of juvenile offenders. Moreover, the matter of correctional institutions is now the subject of studies and reviews by my colleague, the Solicitor General and by my provincial counterparts.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR MORE ACCURATE LABELLING OF PRODUCTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Is his department closely surveying the labels on Canadian products so that Canadian people and consumers be fully aware of what they buy?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I put the question because last weekend I happened to discover a rather serious anomaly, in my opinion, in the area of dairy production. In the northwestern region, the butter we buy is labelled: Dallaire Butter, Palmarolle Butter, Nédelec Butter. However, I was informed last weekend that the butter comes from Granby, Saint-Hyacinthe, or Australia and that the moment it reaches Rouyn or Laverlochère, it is wrapped in paper with a Dallaire, Palmarolle or Nédelec label on it. Does the minister feel that the situation may be improved to the point that the prospective buyer may know that he is not buying a Dallaire butter, but a butter from Australia, Granby or Saint-Hyacinthe?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the regulations governing packaging and labelling were adopted in 1971, at a time when the hon. member was already in the House. He cast his vote on this legislation. He must certainly be aware of the limitations which restrict the authority of my department in this area. To refresh his memory I may send him a copy of these regulations. He will then realize that unfortunately my department lacks a lot of the power it would need to go as far as it would like to go.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Considering what the minister has just answered and what he said on Monday in a CBC open line program, namely that nothing could be done to stop the rise in the cost of living in Canada and considering the drought problems in the world and their consequences on the supply of food, can he tell this House, the hon. member for Témiscamingue and myself why, whereas we use butter from other countries, if the latter have drought problems, the government cannot control prices in Canada to protect the consumers?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was surely absentminded during this program. I do not know whether he lit a cigarette at a certain time, but I can assure him that he is considerably distorting my words by presenting them in this way to the House.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—KNOWLEDGE OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT OF POSSIBILITY OF FRAUD BY MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On March 17, the Prime Minister was asked if any member of the government was aware of any alleged massive fraud before the fall of 1972 and he replied:

> ... I am prepared to say that certainly no one in the cabinet knew ... I would venture to say that no one in the public service knew either.

In order to clarify this matter, can the Prime Minister tell the House if any minister of the government had any knowledge of contract irregularities, allegations of improper tendering and suspicions of fraud regarding the Marine Industries Limited contract prior to complaints in the fall of 1972?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to the question he will see that it is in the context and under the heading of "Dredging Contracts". If his question relates to Marine Industries Limited and dredging contracts, the answer still stands.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the context in which the answer is given. That is why my question was directed specifically to Marine Industries Limited contracts and allegations of improper tendering, suspicion of fraud and contract irregularities between Marine Industries Limited and the federal government prior to the fall of 1972. What would the Prime Minister answer to that?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the member is not referring, I understand, to massive fraud concerning dredging. If he is, my answer stands. If he is asking about other allegations of wrongdoing, particularly the one concerning a salvage operation, it is a new question and the answer would be different. If the hon. member wants to ask me a new question that is fine.

INDUSTRY

MARINE INDUSTRIES—ALLEGATIONS OF CONTRACT IRREGULARITIES, FRAUD AND IMPROPER TENDERING—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I know Your Honour would not allow me to ask various ministers supplementaries, so I will put the question to the Prime Minister but it involves three other ministers. Has the Prime Minister consulted with his colleagues in cabinet to ascertain if there were any allegations of contract irregularities, suspicion of fraud and improper tendering involving Marine Industries Limited and the Irving Whale case of 1971, the DDH280 program in the late 1960s involving overruns, and an internal report ordered by the Department of National Defence and submitted to the Department of Supply and Services recommending that action be taken and also, according to the Solicitor General in 1965, involving tendering on the Leighcliff Hall which went aground?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that detailed information such as that ought to be sought at a time other than the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question because the Prime Minister did invite me to ask specifically about other matters. In reference to these other matters, without getting into a lot of detail, I will ask the Prime Minister if he has consulted with his colleagues about three other matters involving Marine Industries Limited. I could ask if Your Honour would allow me to put supplementary questions to the individual ministers involved but I know you would not and I can understand that. I just wonder if the Prime Minister could give me an answer on the three incidents I mentioned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member is attempting to do by linking this question to the question the other day. It is obviously a completely different question. I repeat, my answer to the question the other day still stands. If he is now asking a question about a series of events going back to 1968, the answer is no.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask another supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed the hon. member two supplementaries and in fairness I think we should go to some other hon. members.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a brief question to the Minister of Justice. In his capacity both as minister and as Attorney General of Canada, has he been consulted in any respect regarding the Hamilton Harbour and dredging matters pursuant to sections 4 and 5 of the Department of Justice Act and if so, when was this done?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course where matters requiring legal advice are involved the Minister of Justice is consulted. That has been done and is continuing to be done.

● (1440)

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize the minister may not wish to give specific information, but can he say how long ago his advice was sought, in either one or both of his capacities.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, so far as I know, it was sought as soon as issues arose which required that advice.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—REASON FOR REFUSAL OF PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. As it is becoming more obvious every day that a public inquiry of all aspects of the dredging contracts mentioned is needed so that people will know what has been going on, is not the real reason for the Prime Minister's refusal to establish such an inquiry this: the Cliche commission in Quebec has demonstrated clearly that, from the government's point of view, it is impossible to know where such an inquiry might lead, and, before the government would know it, so to speak, the activities of the government and its hangers-on would be spread all over the front pages of our newspapers and people would know just what skulduggery has been going on.

An hon. Member: Answer yes or no.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can hardly allow a supplementary to a question which was not answered.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER TO ITALIAN AUTHORITIES—APPLICABILITY TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns an alleged statement he made to Italian authorities regarding Canada's immigration policy. The Prime Minister is reported as saying that no significant change is being considered in Canada's immigration policy which would result in a significant reduction of immigrants to Canada. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether this view is applicable to Italy only, or to members of the European economic community, or does it apply to a government policy relating to immigration on a global basis?

[Mr. MacKay.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot vouch for the quotation which has just been read or mentioned. I do not know who said that and where. Certainly, it does not correspond to what I said. What I said to the government authorities in Italy was that the position of this government is contained in the green paper, that we think immigration to Canada will continue, but that the questions of volume and trends are precisely matters which have been put before parliament and the people of Canada by way of the green paper, and that the policy which will issue from that green paper will be announced in due course.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On his recent travels in Europe, did the Prime Minister assure the authorities of any country that present levels of immigration will be maintained regardless of the debate that has been taking place on the green paper.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I indicated that it has been and will remain Liberal policy to maintain a non-discriminatory immigration policy, that in all likelihood immigration to Canada will continue, that I certainly would welcome that, but that questions involving trends, amounts, the rate of growth and the whole demographic policy are questions which are being discussed apropos the green paper.

OIL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE FRAUDULENT INCREASE IN IMPORT PRICES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Because of recent reports that authorities in the United States are investigating what may have been widespread actions by certain companies there to improperly and fraudulently increase the prices at which they imported oil into that country, will the minister cause investigations to be carried out here, to see whether there may have been similar improper schemes carried out in connection with the importation of oil into Canada.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the House and committee have already been advised, the books of the importing companies have been examined by departmental auditors, by a special outside auditing firm and by the Auditor General.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO FAILURE TO GIVE CONSUMERS BENEFIT OF REDUCTION IN BEEF PRICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the price of beef to the producer and the wholesale price has dropped drastically in the last few months, as some food chains are now paying 70 cents a pound for it, compared with $1.20 per pound, when the price was sky high, and as many restaurants have not reduced the price of hamburger and steak to the consumer, is the minister's department investigating why this has not been done. Will he instruct the Food Price Review Board to investigate why this drop in the price of beef has not been passed on to the consumer.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Plumptre Board will give particular attention to what the hon. member said. Incidentally, I would like to remind him that we recently appointed a commission whose task is precisely to review the whole question of beef and veal in Canada. I am convinced that the members of that commission will examine the differences between prices in the Canadian beef industry.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister instructed the Food Prices Review Board to investigate this matter or does he hope that it will investigate. Is the department constantly surveying the general question of reduced prices to the consumer? Is it monitoring what happens, because a number of prices to the producer have gone down and these reductions have not been passed on to the consumer.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer I just gave fully replies to the concern expressed by the hon. member. I do not have to give orders to the board. I think that last year it reacted rapidly enough and with much accuracy to the problems in food prices. I am fully confident that it will be able to react in the same way in the future.

ALLEGED FAILURE TO GIVE CONSUMERS BENEFIT OF PRICE REDUCTIONS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Since the unemployment rate has increased considerably in eastern Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec, and since 406 of the 446 employees of Belanger-Tappan Inc., operating in the town of Montmagny, have been laid off in the last 15 days, could the minister advise the House what are the real reasons for these layoffs and how the subsidies made to this company have been used to keep it in operation?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply in detail to the hon. member. If he agrees, I will take this question as notice, have an investigation carried out as to the circumstances of the matter and reply to him as early as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary. Given this serious situation, after all, 406 family heads are deprived of their income, could the minister reassure us by telling us that he will consult his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, so that employees who will not be rehired by the company will be able to find work elsewhere under other programs and thus earn their living as well as that of their family?

INVITATION TO SOUTH AFRICA TO ATTEND PRE-OLYMPIC COMPETITIONS—CO-ORDINATION BETWEEN COJO AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious misunderstanding and controversy which has been permitted to develop as a result of invitations forwarded to nations taking part in pre-Olympic competitions in Montreal in 1975 by the Quebec Track and Field Association and subsequently retracted by COJO as far as South Africa is concerned, could the Prime Minister advise the House what co-ordination, if any, exists between the government and COJO officials with respect to dealings between Canada and other nations, specifically when they involve invitations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I reply to this question as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs? I understand the hon. member is referring to the invitation extended to South Africa. I am informed that an essentially private letter of inquiry was sent to the South African Track and Field Federation but that no formal invitation has been extended inviting them to compete in the pre-Olympic competitions. The letter referred to was apparently sent by the Quebec Athletic Federation in the name of the Canadian Track and Field Association to all members of the International Amateur Athletic Federation. Neither the Canadian government nor COJO is directly involved in sending such invitations to these events preceding the Olympic Games. COJO's role in this case is one of a supporting nature.

Bearing in mind the large profits being reaped by COJO from the many commercial companies which are eager to pay for the right to display the Olympic logo as part of their advertising campaigns, would the minister assure the House that he will take the necessary steps to ensure that the Amateur Sports Federation which is now training amateur athletes for the Olympics will not once again be neglected but will receive a fair share of the profits now going to administer the Games—I am not talking about just stamps and coins.

POSSIBILITY OF DEVALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, but if we were we would not telegraph it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich I wonder whether I might call the attention of the House to the fact that there appears to be more than one meeting going on at the moment and that it is becoming extremely difficult to hear what is said.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you very much for your help, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the fact that within the last week two Canadian diplomats have died abroad, both at an early age, has the ministry examined the conditions of service abroad to ensure that members of our diplomatic service are not kept under continuous strain and stress as a result of which their lives are shortened?

Some hon. Members: What about Members of Parliament?

An hon. Member: What about ministers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. gentleman for his words of sympathy. The government, too, regrets very much the death of these two very able and rather young diplomats. I doubt very much, however, whether it was the conditions of service which led to their untimely deaths.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister assure the House, then, that more rigorous medical check-ups are carried out prior to posting to ensure that those who have a record of heart trouble are not sent on postings in circumstances where their lives would be shortened?

REDEMPTION OF PERPETUAL BONDS—PROPOSED PAYMENT OF PROGRESSIVELY INCREASED RATE TO DATE OF MATURITY

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, but first I wish to thank him for his response to my representation made in February regarding the 3 per cent perpetual bonds. I note that according to today's press these bonds are to be redeemed at par on September 15, 1996—I hope he and I will be around at that time. My question is this: since the holders are now being offered only $38 for these bonds, will the government undertake to pay a progressively increased rate on this issue from now until the date of maturity?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, as well as others in all quarters of the House, including the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the hon. member for Don Valley, the hon. member for Ottawa West—

Mr. Kempling: The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): At least a hundred members of the House of Commons—

Mr. Hees: Don't forget the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —have made representations about this matter. As the hon. member has said, we have set a terminal date for these bonds, namely, September 15, 1996. In terms of the usual mortality rates, the hon. gentleman and I ought to survive it—whether he does politically is another matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: He has a far better chance than you.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We redeemed these bonds because they were unique in character—they were limited to a $55 million issue—and they were causing hardship in a number of quarters; they were rarely being traded. I should say to the hon. member that trading is now taking place at about the $46 level as compared with $37.25 bid yesterday. By way of comparison the yield is now 8.52 per cent as against the 9.5 per cent government bonds due in 1994 trading at 8.70 per cent on a yield basis. So the yield has been restored at this point. I am grateful to the hon. member for having brought the matter to the attention of the House.

ENERGY

GASOLINE—POSSIBLE USE OF OPERATING COSTS OF SERVICE STATIONS TO JUSTIFY LIFTING OF PRICE FREEZE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): A question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. Did the oil companies, in arguing for a lifting of the voluntary price freeze on gasoline products, produce detailed figures for the government concerning the operating costs of service stations as part of their justification for a lifting of the price freeze?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would have to inquire about that detail. I will do so and give the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Symes: Will the minister be good enough to table that information for the benefit of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works so that the committee might be in a better position to ascertain whether or not the 20 per cent increase in charges to service station operators by the oil companies is justified in the light of the lifting of the price freeze which was supposed to be adequate compensation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In the absence of any statutory authority, such as we would have under the terms of Bill C-32, we have had to secure this information on a voluntary basis. It has been provided to us, but since it is proprietory information affecting competing companies I am sure we would quickly cut off the flow of information if we were to table it for the use of a committee.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

DATE OF DISTRIBUTION OF SHARES—POSSIBILITY OF USING PROCEEDS FROM SALE OF SHARES TO INVEST IN PETRO-CAN

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the comment made at the time of the incorporation of the Canada Development Corporation that it was anticipated that 90 per cent of the voting stock of the corporation would end up in the hands of individual Canadians and institutions, and in view of the statement in the 1973 annual report that it was anticipated that distribution would be made by May of last year, would the Minister of Finance inform the House whether such distribution of shares of the Canada Development Corporation is going to be made, and when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed, in proper market conditions.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the hankering of his colleague the minister of energy to incorporate still another Crown corporation, Petro-Can, has the minister given consideration to an early sale of part of the Canada Development Corporation's stock in order that he can use the proceeds to invest in Petro-Can, rather than have double investment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my colleague thinks that that might be worth considering.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's early reply regarding suitable market conditions, and in view of the fact that the market has been considerably better, would he indicate if market underwriters have in fact refused to place shares of the Canada Development Corporation to date?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Development Corporation, under statute granted by parliament, is left to its independent management in relation to the market. I doubt whether that advice would be useful to the House or to the eventual marketing of those shares.

[Mr. Darling.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROCEDURE OF DEPARTMENT TO EXPLAIN BENEFITS OF RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs. Would the minister explain to the House what procedure his department is taking to inform those who might benefit under the rural and native housing program of the existence of the program?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think this question would better be put to my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs under whose jurisdiction this program falls.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Whiteway: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Might I direct the question to the parliamentary secretary of the minister of housing?

Some hon. Members: To anybody?

Mr. Hees: Is there anyone at home over there?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED PRACTICE OF SUPPLIERS GIVING KICKBACKS TO CHAIN STORES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of a question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. Has the minister any information, either from his own knowledge or from the organization headed by Mrs. Plumptre, with regard to an alleged practice of kickbacks known as "inside money" whereby large chain stores demand and receive from certain suppliers of food sums of money by way of kickbacks, thus substantially increasing the price of food to the consumer?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I read that in the newspapers and I read that in some reports from my department just as the hon. member did. That has been made public several times. An investigation was made into the matter but I have not received a final report as to whether or not there are grounds for that practice.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider giving instructions to the Food Prices Review Board to make a careful investigation into this alleged practice, especially into the existence of certain books kept by certain of the large chain stores which are supposed to provide firm evidence of this very bad practice?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if my memory serves me right, but I think that the board has already given consideration to this matter. I shall check and report to the hon. member. However, I think that it is one thing to raise a question in the House and another to try to find relevant proof. If the hon. member is aware of some elements which could enable us to find the whole truth on that, I will be pleased if he would let me know.

[English]

Mr. Whiteway: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. In an attempt to get an answer to my last question I did direct the question in a final effort to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he might undertake to answer.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, he did not direct his inquiry to anybody. It seemed to me that he put the question and was hoping for some response, but he never did put his question to a minister.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL TO VANCOUVER AND SEATTLE TO EXAMINE GRAIN HANDLING FACILITIES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the questionable harbour facilities at Vancouver for the efficient handling of grain, would the minister be prepared to agree to an order of the House giving permission to the transportation committee to travel to Vancouver and Seattle to check into better ways of handling our grain, so we might meet our world commitments and help the starving people of the world?

Mr. Speaker: I have already ruled that in light of the emergency debate set for eight o'clock tonight to discuss the general question of grain handling, we should defer all questions on grain handling until that time.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Minister of Transport and related to a specific order from the House. I wonder whether he would be willing to ask the House to permit the transportation committee of this House of Commons to travel west to check into grain handling facilities at Vancouver and Seattle so that the whole question could be aired more fully.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the hon. member's question, but it seems to me that this whole question will be aired very fully beginning at eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member put his question and I ruled that it be deferred until eight o'clock. Then the hon. member raised a point of order and I ruled on the point of order. It seems to me the matter should now be dropped.

Mr. Horner: Then I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not deny you the right to rule on a point of order, but I do suggest to you, sir, that while my question might be relevant to the debate tonight it is a simple question requiring a yes or no answer, whether the Minister of Transport would agree to the order which could then lend some degree of hope to an improvement in the grain handling facilities on the west coast.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member touches the essence of his question when he indicates it relates to the grain handling facilities on the west coast. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

OLYMPIC GAMES

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEEN INVITED TO ATTEND OPENING

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As rule 56 of the Olympic Games provides that the Games shall be opened officially in the presence of the head of state of the host country, can the Prime Minister advise whether he has extended that invitation to the Queen of Canada, and could he tell us whether this matter was discussed during his recent luncheon with Her Majesty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will verify. I do not think the invitation has yet been officially extended, but I have been discussing the matter with the authorities of Montreal and Quebec.

An hon. Member: How was the salad?

Mr. Trudeau: As far as the salad was concerned, it was very crispy.

● (1510)

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister did not hear the latter part of my question. Since the Canadian people and this House are more concerned, and I submit entitled, to hear the Prime Minister of our country discuss more pertinent matters than the crispness of the salad, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he discussed this invitation with Her Majesty during the luncheon, and can he now give us an indication as to Her Majesty's reply?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the reason for the second part of my answer is that obviously one of his own colleagues in the backbenches has a great interest in this and he asked me that question. I am sure the record of Hansard will show that. In so far as the question regarding discussions between Her Majesty and her first minister are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recognize that they are privileged.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to put my question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence and in view of the urgency of the situation I will direct it to the acting minister. Has an agreement yet been reached with the producing provinces in eastern Canada on a price support program for potatoes to offset the depressed market and prices, and is the minister now in a position to inform the House when we can expect some action along these lines?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question, I do know that meetings have been held by the Minister of Agriculture of Canada with the ministers of two of the eastern provinces. There was another meeting yesterday and I understand some progress is being made, but I am in no position to reveal what the minister has done in this connection at this time.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF ARDA AGREEMENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for regional economic expansion. In light of his continued difficulties in reaching an agreement with the province of British Columbia which would allow that province to participate in programs of regional economic expansion, and the difficulties experienced in central and northern British Columbia where they have a 15 per cent unemployment rate, and in view of the expiry of the ARDA agreement between the federal government and the province of British Columbia at the end of this month, will the minister tell the House whether he has discussed this matter with the province? Is the agreement going to be extended, or what is the situation at this point?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the question, it has two elements in so far as the extension of ARDA is concerned. Let me make a distinction between general ARDA and special ARDA which is for native people. In both cases it is my intention to recommend to my colleagues that they be extended beyond the end of March, and I have every expectation that this will be the case. On the larger question of negotiations with British Columbia, if present arrangements can be completed, and I expect that they can, I will be in Victoria on Monday of next week to discuss the speedup of negotiations, with an effort to get at least a couple of supplementary agreements in place in the very near future.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON OBJECTION IN SEEKING CONSENSUS AND PROGRESS THEREON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who will undoubtedly recall my consuming curiosity about the consensus, and my request yesterday that he make a statement before the Easter recess in respect of what the government is seeking a consensus on and what progress is being made. The Prime Minister said he would consult with his colleague, the Minister of Finance. Is he in a position to give the House this assurance today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, not today, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) has indicated, we are opposed to the passage of the bill now before us and the incorporation of Petro-Can. We believe there must be a halt to the continued growth of government in Canada. The weight of government grows—in fact to the point that it is now estimated that one in seven of our work force is employed by the government.

In March, 1925, when figures were first published, federal government employees numbered 39,000, compared with 121,000 in March, 1946, the beginning of the post-war period. There are now 443,192 people in the federal employ. It may be relevant to point out that in 1925 there was one federal government employee for every 238 Canadians. In 1946, the ratio was down to one in 102, and now the ratio is one in 50; that is, there is one federal government employee for every 50 men, women and children in this country. With today's automation, one naturally would have assumed that this ratio would have been somewhat reversed.

The cost of running governments, particularly the federal government, has risen at an alarming rate. In 1967, the end of our first 100 years, the federal budget was approximately $10 billion and today it is more than triple that amount. Expenditures must be covered by revenue, and total government revenue expressed as a percentage of gross national product has risen from 16.8 per cent in 1926 to 30.4 per cent in 1946, the last of the war years. In 1958, that figure had dropped to 25.5 per cent. Today, however, 38.2 per cent of the total gross national product accrues to the government in the form of revenue.

If this trend continues, it will, in my opinion, place an unbearable load on the productive sectors of this economy, bearing in mind that it is the private sector which is geared to efficiency. I think it can generally be said that within business it is widely felt that a dollar saved is a dollar earned. In government, however, we find the philosophy is a dollar not spent is a dollar lost from next year's estimates.

We in the official opposition believe that the public sector must be limited in its invasion into the private sector. It was rather startling to hear our Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) say today, in respect of the Canada Development Corporation which was incorporated on the strict understanding that 90 per cent of its stock would be turned over to individuals or institutions in Canada, that to date no arrangements have been made to sell even one share of that Crown corporation, and that in fact it is likely that the underwriters involved have refused to sell any of the corporation's stock.

Yesterday evening I was reviewing the record of some of our Crown corporations and I pointed out that if parliament is foolish enough to go ahead with the incorporation of Petro-Can, it will be the sixtieth Crown corporation to be owned by the federal government. I could also have pointed out that while there are 60 Crown corporations, there are in existence approximately 120 subsidiaries of those corporations. So approximately 180 legal entities are operating under the ownership of the federal government.

Before we plunge into the incorporation of this new entity for which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) is hankering, surely it would be only prudent for every member of this House to consider what has transpired to date in respect of federal government enterprises. In this regard I would refer hon. members to page 271 of The National Finances for 1974-75. There they will find that the total assets of federal government enterprises are listed at $17.3 billion for the year ended December 31, 1972. At that time, the net worth held in those corporations by the federal government on behalf of all Canadians was $3.4 billion. But here is the real grabber: when we look at the profit and loss picture of these corporations we find that over the last few years, in spite of the fact that the federal government has $3.4 billion invested, they have been run at an over-all loss. In one year, 1972, the year for which the most recent figures are available, they earned a total of only $25 million on a net worth investment of $3.4 billion—less than 1 per cent.

● (1520)

With that type of background, I ask the backbench members of the Liberal Party why they are so anxious to push this bill through the House. I would like them to show good faith with the Canadian public by offering to invest $1,000 each in Petro-Can and put their money where their vote and their mouth is. I think you would find a very different attitude if Liberal backbenchers were asked to contribute $1,000 each to a concept like Petro-Can. Then we would find the true facts. They must know that this will be a losing proposition, yet they totally ignore the trust that has been given to them to sit in this parliament and invest public moneys prudently.

I should like to review some of the other situations which pertain in respect of these Crown corporations. Last evening I referred to the CBC. I suggested that when one looks at the statements of the CBC it would be refreshing to consider similar statements of the private television networks in the United States and Canada and compare their expenditure ratios and the profit and loss picture. If we look at ABC, NBC and CBS in the United States, we find that those three companies, in relation to their broadcasting activities alone, make more money than the total loss of the CBC.

Let me put it another way: the CBC lost almost as much in the year 1973 as those three companies earned. Surely, as the senior parliament of this country, we must start asking why. Is it proper use of Canadian taxpayers' money when there is a loss, in the case of the CBC, of over $200 million in one year?

In the last decade there has been a change from public to more private initiative in many of the socialist nations of the world, while many of the western industrialized nations—including Canada under the Trudeau, Liberal government—have been following the reverse course. I would suggest that lately among academics and bureaucrats in the west there has been an almost unquestioned presumption in favour of public participation and something approaching hostility to private initiative.

Prior to the First World War western attitudes saw business in a different light. It was agreed that business was then the centre of the economic world and government tended to be incidental. Today, governments no longer operate in a business-centred environment; it is a social-centred environment with which they are concerned. This is where I believe confusion has arisen in the past 30 years between the people and the governments of the western nations, including Canada. In their anxiety to relieve social needs, governments have continually and needlessly infringed on the private sector; they have responded to current problems on an ad hoc basis with little reference to longer range considerations. This develops an uncertain economic climate within which it is difficult for businessmen to operate.

Since 1939, government expenditures in Canada have risen from a total of less than $1 billion, or 16 per cent of the gross national product, to $45 billion, or 38 per cent of the GNP in 1973. In the current year it is estimated that the government "take" will be about 40 per cent.

Governmental activity in Canada falls into three broad categories. The first is the traditional role of surveillance, protection and regulation on behalf of Canadian citizens. This would include, for example, the setting of monetary and fiscal policies and the application of regulations where there are natural monopolies in the country. A second field is the transfer of income by government from region to region or from person to person. A third activity is the direct participation in the production of our resources, the manufacture of goods, the providing of commercial services and the operation of business generally.

In today's social-centred environment it is important that both the private and public sectors distinguish these three categories of governmental functions and understand them. In my opinion, governmental activity should be confined mainly to the traditional role of surveillance, protection and regulation. They have a limited but desirable role to play in category two, the transfer of income, but they should avoid like the plague extended participation in the third field of commercial activity such as Petro-Can. In recent years, however, an overwhelming increase of government spending as a proportion of gross national product has been in government current expenditures on goods and services and in transfer payments to persons.

Prior to 1950, government current expenditure for goods and services was relatively static at approximately 10 per cent of our gross national product. By 1973, government current purchases of goods and services had risen to $22.8 billion, or 19.2 per cent of the gross national product—almost twice as much as its share of the gross national product in the year 1950. In 1929, transfer payments to persons represented 1.5 per cent of the gross national product. By 1973, such transfer payments to persons had risen to $11.2 billion, or about 9.5 per cent of the gross national product. The federal government has been the major innovator in this field of income maintenance and stabilization.

Recent growth in federal government operational activities is also reflected in the government's loans to and investments in Crown corporations to which I have referred. These corporations between 1968 and 1974 more than doubled in size. The government has advanced some $16 billion to these corporations, and at the present time 140,000 Canadians are employed by Crown corporations in this nation.

Sharply higher governmental expenditures for goods and services and transfer payments to persons to equalize incomes required government revenues also to jump from 21 per cent of the gross national product in 1938 to 38 per cent in 1973. About 12.5 per cent of this increase—that is, of the 17 per cent—was accounted for by a sharp rise in direct personal taxes including other transfers from persons. I believe that is what we often forget in this House.

● (1530)

The person who is actually paying for the recklessness of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and his colleagues is the individual taxpayer in Canada. It is not the fat cat, it is not the big something or other that they like to conjure up; it is the average person in this country who will have to pay for the minister's folly. That is why I would like to re-emphasize that if the Liberal members are confident that this will be a worth-while venture, let them each put $1,000 on the line; let them go to the minister and say they will put up $1,000 to invest in his fine idea, namely, Petro-Can. I bet there would not be 5 per cent of them making such an investment.

Direct personal taxes, including other tranfers from persons, now account for about 40 per cent of all revenues raised by governments, compared with 13 per cent in 1938. That is a jump of over 300 per cent in the total revenue ratio of the federal government from the personal sector alone. These shifts in the source of tax revenue lead to the conclusion that continued increases in government spending for goods and services and the expansion of transfer payments will, in my view, dull the personal initiatives of those Canadians who are required to pay these sharply increased taxes.

In September of 1969, the Economic Council of Canada issued a review which they entitled "Perspective 1975" in which they said at page 26:

> Governments will be absorbing or redistributing about 37 per cent of the nation's total income by 1975 compared with 33 per cent in 1967.

Then they added the following:

> One of the most important implications of our estimates is that major new government spending programs requiring large additional resources can only be accommodated through large cutbacks in existing programs.

This is an objective that they point out is in itself highly desirable. Then they add that if those alternatives are not chosen, the additional revenue must be raised—> —through tax increases leading to a larger shift of resources than we have indicated from the private—mainly the consumer—sector to the government sector of the economy.

With the government "take" already at 38 per cent of our gross national product two years before 1975, and with taxes at an all-time high, those concerned—namely, the Trudeau government—have obviously taken the third course and opted to increase taxes rather than cut back existing programs or increase efficiency as suggested by the Economic Council of Canada.

In my opinion, the Canadian government has not acted responsibly in the past decade in administering their trust on behalf of the Canadian people under category one, especially with respect to the fiscal and monetary increases of over 20 per cent per year which have been dictated, I suggest, by political expediency rather than sound economic reasoning. As a result, inflation has been three times higher in this country than the Economic Council of Canada predicted it would be as recently as 1969.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) "let it all hang out" a week ago today when he testified before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. In answer to the question, "Why have you allowed government spending to grow so quickly?" he said:

> In democracies today, there are no such things as economic cycles; there are political cycles, depending on the pressures of public policy and depending on the parliamentary or congressional process at the time. One may tend to see this operating now in the United States where you have a Republican President and a Democratic Congress. Certainly we were under political imperatives—

He was referring to the last parliament.

> —where the pressures were stronger in a minority rather than a majority parliament. Those happen to be facts of life.

At that point I interjected, "You wanted to be re-elected", and the minister replied, "Those happen to be facts of life". Unfortunately for the Canadian people, this government put their re-election ahead of handling our economy in a responsible way. If you look at the charts, you can see exactly when this government determined they would call the July 8 election last year. The money increase shows it very clearly. It was going up sharply at over 20 per cent per year until the spring of last year, and then it plateaud very dramatically to a negative growth which Dr. Raynauld, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, later described as excessively restrictive. In short, they blew up the economy in anticipation of the July 8 election, and then in order to counter the excess that they had deliberately put into the economy they contracted it unduly. That is one of the reasons we have 839,000 people out of work today.

The Minister of Finance apparently does not know now which way to turn to adjust his economic stance. With such an attitude adopted by our Minister of Finance, is it any wonder that we have today's mish-mash of economic inconsistencies, high inflation, high unemployment and current account trade deficits of an admitted $3 billion and, according to the Minister of Finance yesterday, they could be as high as $5 billion?

Let me put it another way. With the Post Office losing over $100 million a year and still not able to deliver the mail on time, with our airports losing still more and never being open for certain, and with our harbours—a subject which will be debated tonight—struck regularly by a public service that was given the right to strike by this government or its predecessor in 1967, is it rational for some, including government members, to suggest that Petro-Can should be incorporated to give the government still more operations to run?

Let there be no mistake; it is no accident that fully planned economies in the world are run by dictators. You cannot create or preserve prosperity in a fully planned economy through a democratic form of government; they do not mix. A marketplace economy which preserves private initiative will produce the greatest wealth for the greatest number of people. A competitive private enterprise system is not only an economically efficient institution but it also safeguards individual liberty.

Let me deal with these two facts separately. First, let us consider the economic efficiency of the private enterprise system. As a business person new to the political arena in Ottawa, I am astounded by the inefficient, disorganized, non-productive government activities I witness every day. Time and again, when one would hope the government would act in a businesslike manner in settling strikes or in extending assistance to commercial concerns one finds they are swayed by political considerations. Government does not have the discipline found in private business. To survive in business you must make a profit or at least break even. Not so in government. In private business a dollar saved is a dollar earned. Unfortunately, in public business a dollar not spent is a dollar lost from next year's estimates. The net effect of this is reflected in the Crown corporation statements to which I have referred: in short, a net worth investment on the part of the federal government of $3.4 billion, in 1972, and a return on that investment of $25 million, which is less than 1 per cent. Given the chance, who among the Liberal backbenchers or cabinet ministers would want to invest in that type of portfolio?

Let me be more specific. An interesting comparison can be drawn between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Canada and the Federal National Mortgage Association in the United States. Both companies were organized for similar functions; both were owned by their respective governments up to 1968. In that year, the Federal National Mortgage Association—known affectionately at Fannie Mae—was turned over, in a unique plan, to the private sector with the United States government retaining a supervisory role. The contrast between the two companies from that date is startling. In 1967, CMHC had assets of $3.6 billion, while Fannie Mae had assets of $5.4 billion. That year, CMHC earned $7.2 million, while Fannie Mae's net income was $15.4 million. By 1973, the assets of CMHC grew to $6.6 billion but its net income went down to $2.9 million. Fannie Mae, on the other hand, by 1973 had $24.3 billion in assets and its net income had risen to $125.7 million, after having contributed $106 million in federal taxes to the United States.

Mr. O'Connell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are hearing some very interesting financial statistics and the hon. member is comparing CMHC with an institution in the United States. Would the hon. member comment on whether in the United States more houses are actually being built for the people than in Canada, in proportion to population? Would he give us those figures? Houses are for people.

An hon. Member: He can't.

Mr. Stevens: If the hon. member means, has CMHC been responsible for the building of houses, I refer him to the CMHC annual reports. Each year he will see that the number of CMHC-financed houses, up to the most recent annual report, has been on the decline.

An hon. Member: What is the answer to the question?

Mr. Stevens: I would be very pleased to answer any questions in the hon. member's time after I have used my allotted time. Let me continue. I want to emphasize this because I know it gripes people who love Crown corporations. I want to emphasize that while they are looking for new empires it is the Canadian taxpayer who is paying the shot, and surely they should not continually come out with a lot of drivel when the fact is that in the figures I have given CMHC grew 83 per cent in assets and its net income fell 248 per cent. The privately-run Fannie Mae organization in the United States grew 450 per cent in assets and its net income jumped 816 per cent. With that startling difference would it not be prudent to at least have the government indicate that we should have an inquiry to look into it?

Why is CMHC earning virtually no money when the Americans, by working out a unique type of deal with the private sector, ended up making over $125 million within a few years of moving into the private sector? These questions have to be answered. I point out to the hon. member that one of the reasons we have such highly-priced houses in this country is the inaction of this federal government, be it through CMHC or directly.

An hon. Member: Get to the point.

Mr. Stevens: The point is that the government is incorporating another Crown corporation which will incur colossal losses and be a drain on the Canadian public purse. If hon. members are impatient for me to get to the point, I only hope they will not be impatient in answering the questions of the people of Canada in ensuing years when they ask why Petro-Canada has been another national disgrace. Partly in answer to these questions, it is interesting to note that the administrative expenses of CMHC of $39.6 million are more than twice as high as those of Fannie Mae, in spite of the fact that CMHC is only a quarter of the size of Fannie Mae. Those administrative expenses include $30.7 million in CMHC salaries in 1973. Those salaries, in the aggregate, have jumped 122 per cent since 1967. The hon. member has the nerve to stand up and ask about the housing industry in Canada, yet CMHC has increased its aggregate salaries by 122 per cent since 1967. I hope some houses are built, in view of that kind of increase.

I am satisfied that the government is not an efficient operator in business, and certainly a business run under the authority of the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be a colossal fiasco.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Tell us about the Bank of Western Canada. When do the investors get their money back?

Mr. Stevens: They got their money back much faster, and in its entirety, than the taxpayers of Canada will get theirs out of Petro-Canada. A competitive private enterprise system will out-perform publicly-run institutions, and rather than being a drain on the economy it will contribute substantial tax revenues to it. Let me deal with the second reason I believe a competitive private enterprise system is preferable to government intervention at the operational level. A competitive private enterprise system safeguards individual liberty. Milton Friedman stated in 1962:

> The kind of economic organization that provides economic freedom directly, namely, competitive capitalism, also promotes political freedom because it separates economic power from political power and in this way enables the one to offset the other.

Competitive markets, according to Friedman—

> —reduce greatly the range of issues that must be decided through political means, and thereby to minimize the extent to which government need participate directly in the game. The characteristic feature of action through political channels is that it tends to require or enforce substantial conformity. The great advantage of the market, on the other hand, is that it permits wide diversity.
> Yet this same competitive private enterprise system that extends economic freedom acts also to promote political freedom. For the fundamental threat to freedom is the power to coerce, be it in the hands of a monarch, a dictator, an oligarch, or a momentary majority.

I suggest a momentary majority such as we have under the Trudeau government. Mr. Friedman went on to say:

> The preservation of freedom requires the elimination of such concentration of power to the fullest possible extent and the dispersal and distribution of whatever power cannot be eliminated through a system of checks and balances. By removing the organization of economic activity from the central political authority, the market eliminates this source of coercive power. It enables economic strength to be a check to political power rather than a reinforcement.

● (1550)

If governments continue to enter category number three—that is, the operational business field—they will tend to lower efficiency through the making of political rather than businesslike decisions. As a nation becomes more frustrated with this inefficient approach and resulting strikes, there is a distinct possibility the voters will turn to a strong man be he of the right or the left: He need only promise some type of order and some type of security to win favour.

Let us not forget, when we are considering the extension of the public domain, Mr. Speaker, that history has shown that man treasures order and security even more than he does freedom. That is why I believe we must resist, with all the determination we can muster, the empire-building exploit that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is about to embark upon with Petro-Can. Petro-Can is not going to make the oil industry more competitive. Tommyrot! It is not going to find oil that would not have been found anyway. The fact is, it is going to be a tremendous drain on the taxpayer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No. Let's hear about the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I take it the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does not want me to continue.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Let's hear what somebody else has to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise to partake in this debate on Bill C-8 sensing that the minister and his colleagues are getting nervous about its passage. I hope that my colleagues and those who are concerned with the principles expressed in the bill will keep talking so the public may know what the government is proposing to do under the bill and so the defenders of those ideas can have their say. Much has been said by my colleagues—

An hon. Member: No, not much.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): —concerning the detrimental effects of this legislation on the petroleum industry in Canada. I do not want to repeat those things, but I do want to emphasize that this government creation is no more likely to find oil than the enterprises now searching for it. In fact, it will start off at a disadvantage because it will not have the expertise that is available to the private sector.

My friends in the New Democratic Party cry about oil company profits. Apparently it is easy for them to forget entirely the fate of Canadian investors in the petroleum industry. They also easily forget the size of the government's "take" at the moment from this overworked and overtaxed industry. When the price of Alberta crude oil produced for the Canadian market almost doubled from $3.80 to $6.50, my friends to the left complained about the high price but did not say anything about where that money goes. The oil industry's share dropped from 53 cents to 47 cents per barrel while oil was going up in price. The federal government's share more than quadrupled, and the provincial share—which is tax, no matter how you look at it—nearly tripled to almost $3 a barrel.

I should like to examine the effects of this legislation from a slightly different viewpoint, Mr. Speaker, although I am sure I will come to the same conclusion as my friends in the Conservative Party. I wonder whether a national oil company is necessary for Canada at this time or at any time. Some people may remind us of the crisis of last winter and point out that the government had to buy oil on the international market. Others might say that the shortages were a false alarm, that the industry would have provided our needs and that the government did not need to go into the market itself. Anyway, they might say, the government paid too much for what it purchased in that panic situation.

What would this new national oil company do for us other than provide some executive jobs in still another government bureaucracy? I should like to look for a moment at the stated purposes of the corporation as set out in clause 3 of the bill. I will not read the whole clause, but it reads in part:

—to establish within the energy industries in Canada . . . and to engage in exploration for, and the production, distribution, refining and marketing of, fuels.

The extent of the purposes set out in that small clause leaves no room to doubt what the government intends to do to the industry in this country. It sounds as though they will have adequate powers. Clause 6 sets out the details of the powers and duties of the corporation. We see that they are entitled to engage in exploration, research and development, to "import, produce, transport, distribute, refine and market," and to "produce, distribute, transport and market other fuels and energy". I emphasize the word "other", Mr. Speaker. Clause 6(e) empowers it——to engage or invest in ventures or enterprises related to the exploration, production, importation, distribution, refining and marketing of fuel, energy and related resources.

From those key words it is apparent that this government would like to give itself power to get involved in the whole fuel industry. I cannot think of a single aspect of the fuel industry that has been left out of the objects, powers and duties as set out in that clause. If there were any question about powers that were missing, they are described in clause 7 which, referring to powers alone, reads:

The corporation may do such things as it deems expedient for or conducive to the furtherance of the objects of the corporation, within and outside Canada, and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, the corporation may—

Then it lists 26 additional powers, which I shall not read. I am thankful that our alphabet only runs to 26 characters, Mr. Speaker, when I think of what they would have done if they had tried to go from beginning to end of some of the longer alphabets in the world. From the wording, which gives the corporation the authority to do all things which are incidental and conducive to the attainment of its objectives and powers, there is little doubt as to what the government has in mind. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said, this will truly be a glorious government conglomerate, but will it pay taxes even if it does put taxpaying enterprisers out of business? I should like to remind hon. members that the enterprise system pays taxes of all sorts, and in huge amounts, to all kinds and levels of government. Some of my friends have overlooked this fact and I like to remind them of these things.

● (1600)

I do not know why we should not doubt Petro-Can's ability to pay taxes. Let us consider the operations of the CNR to which the hon. member for York-Simcoe alluded. According to the annual report for 1973—the 1974 report is not yet available—the CNR, that large, government conglomerate, is involved with 41 separate companies which engage in many different businesses. But does the CNR pay taxes? No, it does not.

Rail transport is important for this country and some contend that private enterprisers might not provide adequate rail service. But what about the Canadian National hotel operation? Canadian National hotels compete with hotels run by private enterprisers which make profits. According to page 11 of the annual report, CN hotel operations had a net income of $4 million. That is only part of the story. If you want the full story you must turn to page 34 of the annual report, where you will find the consolidated income statement for the year ended December 31. The statement shows that after deducting all expenses except one, the CNR had a net income of $48 million.

The last item reveals the full story as it shows the total interest on debt. Any businessman can tell you that interest payments are a substantial factor in any business operation. Unless you consider how much interest you pay, you cannot determine your net income. On page 35 of the annual report, under "Source and application of funds for the year ended December 31," the CNR is forced to admit that it obtained its funds from the government, as the second line in the first item reads, "Government of Canada in respect of deficit for the year." The upshot is that the Canadian National ran a deficit on operations of over $21 million.

We cannot tell how much of this loss is directly attributable to hotels and how much is directly attributable to the railway operation or to the operation of any of the other 39 companies involved with CN. The government makes good these losses by taxing other hotel owners who operate their hotels profitably. This government practice led some thinker of the Pacific Trollers Association to define capital punishment in a new way. He said that capital punishment is when the government taxes you to get capital so that it can go into competition with you, and then taxes the profits on your business in order to pay its losses. What a sad commentary on what is going on!

Let us look at another government fiasco, Connaught Laboratories. Connaught Laboratories was a well respected operation of the University of Toronto. It provided high-quality products at reasonable prices. Then along came the CDC and acquired Connaught Laboratories. Since then what has happened to Connaught Laboratories? It has run up huge operating losses and produced products of questionable quality. This may result in damage awards against the company or, shall we say, against the government. We might as well say they will be awarded against the taxpayer, because he will pay in the end.

Let me list some other Crown corporations or some other fiascos which have resulted from the government's entering the sphere of private enterprise. There is the CBC, about which I will not go into detail, and Air Canada. The list is not endless as I understand that only 59 Crown corporations use—I do not say "consume"—some $16 billion of taxpayers' money. I have asked if Petro-Can is necessary. I ask, are many of our Crown corporations necessary? Certainly there are fields in which the government must be involved, but need it be involved in the broadcasting business?

The CBC has run up tremendous losses, as my friend from York-Simcoe suggested. There is no need for the government to be in the broadcasting business and run up these losses, which absorb I don't know how many hundreds of millions of dollars, because private enterprisers would be only too glad to take over the operation of the CBC. Air Canada, as a Crown corporation, may have been needed in the 1930s during the birth of the air travel explosion, but today many airlines are operated by private enterprisers and they do not need government help. Air Canada, as a Crown corporation, does a bad job and ends up by being a burden on the taxpayer instead of contributing to the economy of this country, which is what the airline would do if private enterprise were running it.

Some hon. members may say, "If you let private enterprise run the airline, you will not see proper service in the outlying areas of the country." To answer them I refer to the telephone industry. In my province of British Columbia private enterprise runs the telephone service, and the most remote community in British Columbia is served. The reason is simple: although it costs the telephone company money to service remote communities, it is told that such service is a condition of its licence. If it wants to provide telephone service in Vancouver, it must supply similar telephone service in far-out communities. That simple solution could be applied by the government to other areas.

Private enterprisers expect problems when dealing with the government. The new president of the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Commerce summed it up this way, as reported in the Globe and Mail of February 20, 1975:

> Dealing with the government has been a real education to some of us. And I think the basic reason is that most of us in mining are technically trained, we have training which deals with facts and logic, and we were going up against a government philosophy.
> And you soon find that facts and reason just don't apply against that. They don't make a dent. It took a while for us to appreciate that . . . But they must leave enough to provide an incentive to the industry and they're not doing that.

Other colleagues have expressed that sentiment. Unless the government provides the free enterprisers of the country with incentive, our system as we know it in Canada today will not survive.

Government expenses are continually rising, with the help of the 59 Crown corporations I mentioned and with the help of an ever increasing bureaucracy. Is our large bureaucracy really necessary? I think we should compare our situation with that of the state of California. The Governor of the state, on taking office some eight years ago, observed that nothing is more opposed to creativeness than bureaucracy. We should bear that in mind when debating this bill.

I hope hon. members will bear the following facts in mind: California entered 1975 with a constantly decreasing welfare population receiving constantly increasing benefits, with financially and technically sound energy and water supply systems—and we do not even have an energy policy in this country—and with enforced environmental standards that are both lowering air and water pollution and preserving an extraordinary range of recreational opportunities. The state of California has established a superb highway system that has become an orderly segment of an integrated transportation system. I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is not present to hear what can be done. I think the key to the situation in California is this: in 1975 the state employs no more people than it employed eight years ago, even though in eight years state spending has doubled and state services have multiplied. One cannot make similar claims for the operations of this government.

● (1610)

I should like to compare the California situation with a similar sample in my part of the country, the province of British Columbia, where of course we have an NDP government. Out there a nice backbencher by the name of Mr. Nunweiler came from the interior of British Columbia, Prince George, and for some reason or other it was decided that Mr. Nunweiler should be a minister. There was not a portfolio available for him, so he was made a minister without portfolio. That probably satisfied him and also his constituents, so instead of being a lowly backbencher at a mere $24,000 per annum salary, he is now a cabinet minister with a salary of $45,000. Of course, after that he had to have an executive assistant, a full-time secretary and two clerk-stenographers. This amounted to an additional expenditure of $50,000 for his office.

Mr. Symes: You get that in Tory Ontario.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Then he had to have an office in Prince George—after all, that is his home town—and the office in Prince George had to be staffed as well. So he employs an executive assistant, an economic planning consultant, a social policy co-ordinator, a public liaison officer, a resource planning consultant and an administrative assistant. When you add up all those salaries it comes to another $94,000.

In addition, of course, there are office expenses amounting to $25,000, travelling expenses of $40,000, and office furniture in the amount of $10,000. Then there is the cost of printing and publishing—necessary if anyone is to believe us—and printing and publication costs amount to $25,000, as well as advertising, just in case anybody forgets who that minister is, costing another $5,000. Then, taking a leaf out of the book of the government in Ottawa, there is a final item—consultant fees and expenses, $50,000 for the year. Mr. Speaker, when you add all that up, instead of having a nice backbencher at a cost of $24,000 we have a minister without portfolio with expenditures totalling $402,000 for the year.

It will be said that all the rules are clearly set out in Bill C-8 and that there is no danger of what I am suggesting taking place. Let us ask ourselves how Ottawa has been doing in this area, then, in its other legislation. Only a few cases involving the 1972 income tax reforms have yet come before the courts of this country, yet judges are already showing their frustration with the sloppy drafting of the legislation. They have been coming down hard on the side of the taxpayers even when this has gone against the apparent intent of the law. I emphasize here the words "apparent intent" because, as will be understood from my remarks, the judges do not even know what parliament intended to do. There was a recent series of cases which the courts feel may be just the start of a flood of litigation. The judges have indicated that the tax rules may be unenforceable if the wording is too vague, complex or obscure to understand. One judge had this to say:

> I cannot know for a fact what parliament in its wisdom meant by the inclusion of the word "active"—But I think I can assume that to the legislators it meant something, or the word would not have been inserted.

This judge said later, in giving judgment:

> I am also just as certain, if one can be certain of anything about this section . . . that it was never intended, in my view, to cover a company such as this.

He ruled in favour of the company and said that his decision was based solely on the way in which the section had been worded. What a testimony from one of the keepers of justice in this country, to make comments of that kind about legislation put forward by the government! I am afraid that with the government's record in connection with this type of legislation, Bill C-8 may turn out to be worse than even we think it might.

I would like to give one more piece of personal experience which tends to show the ineptness of the government when it comes to legislation. Just this month I received in Vancouver, addressed to my business office there, a letter mailed from Montreal on the letterhead of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs addressing me as a professional closely involved with corporation and suggesting that I would be concerned with the Canada Business Corporations Act. The following is a paragraph of that letter, Mr. Speaker:

> Consumer and Corporate Affairs is designing a comprehensive seminar on the Canada Business Corporations Act.

They know we will not be able to understand it the way it is written, so they want us to come out and be told how it is going to work. Then they cannot quite decide what they want to do, so the letter goes on:

> When do you want it? Where? What would you like to discuss?

Of course, the simple answer which the government to this day seems to ignore constantly is that all we want is to be able to understand the laws. As I said a moment ago, we have absolutely no assurance that Bill C-8 is going to be any better than the laws the government has been passing recently.

When a government department or corporation gets loose, it is time for us to look out. For example, I would like to refer to something being done by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: it will show how tight their policies are. In 1973, CMHC spent $12,500,000 to acquire an industrial estate known as Granville Island in Vancouver. Then in 1974 it had to spend $1 million on redevelopment, administration and operation of this industrial estate. Now we are getting into the 1975-76 estimates, and they include $7.75 million for this project. This may seem like a worth-while project and I am sure it will bring satisfaction to many Vancouver residents even though it is located under a high bridge and is unseen by all but a few.

I really think it is time, in this day of energy conservation and transportation difficulties, that the idea of relocating all industries which were on this industrial estate to the suburbs should be looked at as well. All the people who live in the centre part of town and who would have liked to work in this estate are now faced with commuting to the suburbs. It certainly seems a bit backward to me. But there is not the slightest intention of providing any housing on Granville Island and there certainly are no mortgages involved. So my question—one which I have asked the minister before now—is: what is Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation doing in this venture? The only explanation I can think of is that the government got caught up with the original falsehood of Granville Island itself, because Granville Island is not even an island.

Mr. Speaker, the former auditor general, Maxwell Henderson, summed it up last week when he said the erosion of parliament's control over government spending continues. In the past ten years, spending has increased fivefold and now the estimates are $28 billion. I have often accused the government of being the chief contributor to inflation in this country. Of course, there is imported inflation, but the present government ignores the total problem or, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says, they will wrestle it to the ground; and the government hopes for the best.

Finally, last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) admitted that cost increases from wage settlements were disturbing and that they could be dangerous to Canada. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that through the examples I have cited the House may realize that the good intention which undoubtedly the minister had when he sponsored Bill C-8 will be no match for the forces which will come into play after it is made law. We would be well advised to reconsider carefully the function of the government in the enterprise system before we get swallowed up in another monstrous, uncontrollable bureaucracy. Just as the sorcerer's apprentice became the slave of the broomsticks because after starting them up with the best of intentions he found he had lost control of the situation, Canada will have lost control of the situation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as I make a few comments on this matter I wonder whether it is a coincidence that since 1968 the Liberal government has created twice as many Crown corporations and, if we include the 1975-76 budget, has also doubled its spending. I suppose it would be reasonable to think that with this creation of Crown corporations and the government's embarking upon business ventures, there should be an easing of government spending. That is to say, by taking over some of the services Canadians demand which were previously carried on by private enterprise profitably, the government should be able to make a profit which could then be applied to the public purse to defray some of the expenses of government in carrying out these services.

Having been in private business, I always dreamt that some day I would be able to start and run a business where I had no worries about lack of working capital. I dreamt I would be able to walk into a bank and tell them what I wanted to do: I would say to them; "I think this is a great dream; there is no way it can fail". Every businessman starts out in business with this vision. The banker would say to me; "Now, don't worry about it, Frank; you go ahead. There is no bottom to the barrel, so don't worry about your working capital; away you go".

I also dreamt that some day I would run a business where I would not have to go to the bank at all; I would not have to pay any taxes; I would pay no interest on my working capital; I would pay no royalties if things got tough: indeed, I would pay none of the taxes or charges private businessmen have to pay today.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): What a dream!

Mr. Oberle: Yes, what a dream! I never realized that I would have to get elected to parliament before I could become a director, so to speak, in one huge corporation that has no problem with finding money, a corporation that dips into a barrel that has no bottom, that does not have to charge itself any taxes. In a pinch, it can write off royalties. What a way to run a business! We all know, Mr. Speaker, that many of the businesses this government runs show no profit even though they pay no interest on their borrowings and pay no royalties. They are bailed out repeatedly every year. All they have to do is to dip into the barrel and take out millions of dollars.

Some of the Crown corporations to which I refer are disgusting and disgraceful. Surely to goodness the government's purpose is to equalize wealth and opportunity in this country. I go further and say that government has the responsibility to provide essential public and social services such as hospitals, schools, law an order. I do not have to tell my colleagues what the original purpose of government was supposed to be, because they all know. But is it the purpose of government to involve itself in transportation, housing, communications—all the many headaches the government has that are also headaches to the taxpayer? The Canadian taxpayer is no longer a taxpayer; he is a shareholder in a huge non-profit corporation.

What is a non-profit corporation, particularly in a country like ours? Any corporation that does not make a profit at the end of the year does not, of course, have any resources or money left to expand. At a time when we realize the necessity for agriculture to increase its productive capacity, and there is a challenge to create secondary industry throughout Canada to protect us against the sell-out of our resources, the government is taking over more and more services and not making a profit. This means there will be no expansion, because the government has no money left at the end of the year to expand these services.

The bill we are discussing today is proposing to incorporate a company called Petro-Canada. The minister has told us that one of the reasons for Petro-Can is to enable the government to participate in Syncrude. I did not have an opportunity of talking about Syncrude previously, so let me illustrate what I think is happening to the shareholders, the taxpayers, in the Syncrude venture. I will have to take the minister's word for it when he says that the reason the federal government is getting into the Syncrude venture is to assure Canadians a steady supply of petroleum resources. This is all very laudable; but he is going to spend $300 million, first of all. He will have to go into partnership with corporations which have been identified in this House as irresponsible and as rip-off artists. Did the minister have to go into this venture with an investment of $300 million, which put him in a minority position, just to assure security of supply of petroleum resources for Canadians?

The fact is that 40 per cent of our fossil fuels in Canada are not in crude oil or natural gas, but in coal. It is also a fact that the United States has not only recognized the worth of coal but has also recognized it is much cheaper to develop the process of coal gasification and coal liquefaction, and to assure themselves of security of supply in that way, than it is to go into the Syncrude project.

As a practical businessman, I look at Syncrude in this way: it is a great project for the province of Alberta; it has created a lot of activity in the province and I congratulate the Premier of Alberta because he made a smart move, particularly since somebody else pays the bill. We all know the cost of a barrel of oil today, but the cost of a barrel of oil when this project is finally realized will be at least $12. We also know the margins that the OPEC countries enjoy so far as their export price of crude oil is concerned. In my opinion, there is no way that the OPEC countries will diminish their exports of crude oil once Syncrude comes on stream. They will continue to sell it as they always have and in order to do so they will simply lower the price by $3 or $4 a barrel. They could even lower the price by $6 in order to stay in a competitive position with Syncrude. That is one practical point that I want to bring out.

Another point I want to make is this. No one can tell me that people in Montreal and Toronto are voluntarily going to pay an artificially high price just to keep alive a brainwave that the Premier of Alberta might have had regarding investment in Canada. Therefore, all that Syncrude will do for Canada is to assure us of a continued flow of energy supply at a cost that we will not be able to afford, and we will continue to buy oil from Venezuela and the other OPEC countries.

For $300 million we are, as taxpayers, now partners or shareholders in a venture with large oil companies which will, when the facts are all known, pull out of this venture and write off their loses against other income, leaving us with the whole $2 billion project which will really never get off the ground.

In almost everything we do, we follow the United States, but this government is not following the leadership of that country in assuring us of a supply of energy for the future. If it were following that leadership it would embark upon some ambitious and intelligent research into new sources of energy such as hydrogen from seawater or other exotic sources about which we have heard.

I am not bothered so much about the fact that this government intends to embark upon a venture the purpose of which is to establish within the energy industries in Canada a Crown-owned company with authority to explore for hydrocarbon deposits. That does not worry me so much even though there is only one chance in 50, as demonstrated by private industry lately, of success in finding significant deposits of oil and natural gas in the areas that have been explored in the last five years. Can you imagine Canadian taxpayers being asked to take one chance in 50 in a business venture with their money? These are the same taxpayers who provide not 40 per cent, as my colleague said earlier, but closer to 50 per cent of total government revenue. These are the same taxpayers who have a very difficult time to provide the most essential public services and properly nutritious food for their children. These taxpayers are being asked to go into this kind of venture, but that is not what worries me most: what does worry me most is the last line of this paragraph which outlines the purpose of the proposed act as follows:

—to carry out research and development projects in relation to hydrocarbons and other fuels—

I am happy with that because, as I have said, that should take place. But it continues:

—and to engage in exploration for, and the production, distribution, refining and marketing of, fuels.

This is the crux of the matter. As far as energy, petroleum resources, fossil fuels and minerals are concerned, this government has gone all the way. Private enterprise has run its course, because the government can go out, run the corner service station and make the final contract with the customer, if we pass this bill.

In this country we are rushing toward socialism and communism faster than the communist countries are in competing to enter the enterprise and incentive systems. We are heading in a direction that is opposite to the most popular one in the world today. What worries me is that private enterprise is being made to pay taxes to provide various governments in this country with sufficient funds to be transferred to other provinces. These funds are being channelled into businesses which will compete with those which generated the funds in the first place. The transfer payments which are made from the western provinces, Ontario and others are channelled into these giant, non-profit organizations.

I had an experience the other day in the province of British Columbia which of course has been a socialist province for the last three years. I travel a lot and have to eat in restaurants and I worry a bit about reports I read regarding bad hamburger meat, and so on. As a precaution, I take a little medicine once in a while to offset this. The medicine I like is made by Seagram's. I walked into one of the people's stores in British Columbia, the government liquor store, and asked for a bottle of my favourite brand.

The clerk told me I could not have a bottle of that brand because it was hot. I am a little naive about these things, as I suppose all of us are, and I told him there was really nothing wrong with hot whisky as long as you had a twist of lemon and a little water with it. I told him I would buy a bottle anyway, whether it was hot or not. He explained to me that it was not the heat of the whisky that bothered him, but the fact that the people in the distillery were involved in a squabble over the equity of profit transfer in the company. Apparently the employees in the government liquor store had decided to take the side of the distillery employees and they would not sell any more of that distillery's products, so there would be no more profits and all the problems would be solved.

I cannot view this as anything but an intervention by government in a labour dispute. These employees have entered this dispute by deciding that the employees of the distillery were right and that the distillery was not treating its employees properly, and as a result will not sell any more of its products. I can see this happening in other areas where the government is involved in business. It will be much easier for the government to solve some of the labour disputes that may arise in the future. Let us consider how some of these Crown corporations are making out with their labour problems, particularly those corporations we expect to provide essential public services. Let us take the Post Office as an example. We do not have to point out the performance of the Post Office in the last few years or at this particular time.

Let us also consider transportation facilities and the grain handlers on the west coast. The last time we talked about settling a strike on the west coast, the government took sides. Socialist governments in particular always take the side of labour in settling these disputes. At that time the government imposed a settlement on the grain companies on the west coast with which they found it hard to live. It was found that many of the employees who were members of the Public Service Alliance, those at the port of Vancouver but more particularly at the port of Prince Rupert, were getting about 25 per cent less than people working for private companies.

At the time we all warned the minister that unless we found a solution to the problem that was facing government employees on the west coast, the settlement of the strike at that time would only be a partial solution. We were right, and we are experiencing another strike on the west coast. Incidentally, there are six more unions to commence labour negotiations within the next six months to a year. If we achieve a settlement of the strike by the grain handlers and the Public Service Alliance on the west coast, it will again only be a partial settlement. Other disputes will undoubtedly crop up. In Prince Rupert we have grain handlers who are doing the same kind of job that is being done by the people in Vancouver. We have grain inspectors at both ports, all of whom are earning much less than people employed by private enterprise.

Mr. O'Connell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The Chair is not in a position to recognize the hon. member because he is not rising from his own seat.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the hon. member if he will go to his own seat. I have no hesitation to enter a debate with him. I did not see any members across the aisle indicate a desire to enter the debate. Obviously, they are quite happy with the trend established by this government. This debate will continue for a long time and they will have an opportunity to speak. The after effects of this proposed company will be felt for an even longer time, so now is the time for them to enter the debate.

After I sit down I suppose the Speaker will gladly recognize any gentleman over there who wishes to make his views known. In the meantime, hon. gentlemen over there should listen to what people on this side of the House have to say, because they might learn something. In a few years from now the time will come when this mess will have to be cleaned up. Some day someone will have to face the situation, and I predict it will not be very long from now. Some day someone will have to solve the problem of this large corporation which will be exerting unfair pressure on the economy of our country.

A solution must be found to the problems of industrial and labour unrest in our country. The problems will be so severe in the next years that those fellows over there will have many opportunities to make their views known. The problem, of course, is not one-sided. The large corporations are exerting great pressure on the economy of our country. It is for that reason I believe parliament at the present time would be much better served if the government had brought before us, rather than the Petro-Can legislation, the combines legislation which would give us an opportunity to place some restrictions on the big combines, the large corporations which are exerting great pressure on many individuals and small businesses in our country.

Recently I became aware of one of these situations. An oil company in Canada has established a rental formula for its franchise holders. I suppose it is because of similar action that the government feels compelled to take over the activities of these companies and run them on behalf of the Canadian people. The fact is, of course, that the government's purpose is to take over private enterprise by regulation and to limit the powers that are being exerted by these pressure groups on the people of Canada. Of course, if that should happen and the government stayed out of everything else, the people of Canada would have the opportunity to limit the powers of the government. However, my fear and the fear of most of my colleagues is that by the time the government explores for petroleum resources, distributes petroleum resources and has complete control over all the energy in this country and everything else, the people of Canada will have lost control over the government and an election will be meaningless.

Every day there are indications of graft, price fixing and many kinds of charges. This is a serious situation. It is a direct result of government being involved in business and meddling in private enterprise. If this situation continues, the people of our country will lose control. The people to my left in the New Democratic Party always have been very outspoken about some of these large corporations. It should be interesting to them to know that there are in our party people who have also expressed reservations about some of the freedoms and actions these corporations have enjoyed.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner).]

Perhaps I might go back to the case involving the oil company which I mentioned earlier. It brought out a rental formula under which it will be charging rent to the service station operators throughout the country on the basis of 16 per cent of the gross profit. The gross profit is the margin between the cost of the sale and the purchase price of the merchandise. When it comes to the sale of labour, there is a gross margin and the oil company considers all labour at gross margin. I have taken up this matter with the oil company and have said it is no better than the federal government which charges a tax on the royalties they pay to the provinces. This, in fact, is the case because the company is charging its own franchise holders a tax and rent on money they do not even earn because it is paid out to people they hire.

I am attempting to illustrate that it is this government's responsibility to regulate the conduct of large corporations and large and small businesses. If the government did this, it would receive the support of the opposition party when it brings in its combines legislation containing regulatory measures to control the conduct of people who exert undue pressure on Canadians. I refer not only to the large businesses and corporations but also to the unions and other groups within our society.

Surely, however, it is not the role of the government to completely regulate and control private enterprise in these business matters, because governments are not geared to manage businesses. As I look around this House, I see that most of my colleagues are lawyers and some are doctors. I have dealt with professional people in private life, and whenever I have run into a poor businessman he has been a lawyer or a doctor. With all respect to my colleagues, I might say that when I become involved in difficulty in business I might hire a lawyer to bail me out, but I surely would not have him run my business. In fact, I even ask my accountants—who tell me all the mistakes I have made—if they are so smart, why are they not rich?

It is a fact that these people have grown up through the professions, but with all respect to them I say that when elected to parliament, if they would concentrate on the purpose for which government is set up this institution would be a better place. If the government enters business, these professional people do not have a clue. This is well demonstrated if we analyse the financial statements of Air Canada, the CNR, CMHC, the Post Office and the CBC. I could mention 120 more. They do not have a clue, and if it were not for that barrel without a bottom they would all be bankrupt.

● (1650)

As we do away with incentives, with responsible conduct and with the work ethic, as we shy away from the responsibility of balancing books at the end of the month, Canadian taxpayers will suffer. There will be the day when in front of a wicket on which it says "Pay" there will be no line-up, and in front of the wicket on which it says "Hand-outs" there will be a long line-up—except for the fact that the barrel will run dry some day. Signs of the difficulties which this government will be experiencing in carrying out its social contract are already evident throughout the country in the tightening up of unemployment insurance benefits and the reduction in hand-outs, because as we confiscate and take over private business we will be denying ourselves the benefits of the revenue from the taxes that businesses have traditionally paid.

I am disappointed and concerned about the fact that members of only one party in the House today have expressed their views on some of these matters. The incorporation of Petro-Can is an attack on the foundation of our system. It is a departure from everything on which this country has been built, and it is disappointing to me that so few people have expressed this fact today and shown their concern. What we are doing today will be with us for a long time to come; the effects will be felt for a long time, because once the damage is done it is very hard—in most cases impossible—to undo it.

Petro-Can will not be able to exploit our energy reserves without the help of private enterprise. It will not be able to distribute energy as efficiently as private enterprise, and it will most certainly not be able to market the products as well as private enterprise. Of course, Canadians will suffer because the climate that will be created with the incorporation of this company will motivate private enterprise to look to other areas of the world in which to carry on their activities. The loss will be felt by Canadian taxpayers in particular.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to take up the challenge of the previous speaker and to offer a few comments in support of this bill. I feel very strongly about it and I want to start out by saying that I congratulate the minister. This parliament is fortunate to have a minister of his capabilities and courage. This is probably one of the most difficult portfolios because of the changing world scene, and I think it is one that has been handled most capably by the minister for the past two years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milne: I want to personally endorse the establishment of Petro-Can. The minister knows I support it strongly. Shortly after the Christmas recess I held a number of town hall meetings in my riding and my constituents from Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe told me that the next time I come back to town hall meetings I should bring them the bill that establishes Petro-Can. I am glad to be contributing toward that objective.

Parliament must do everything in its power to make Canada as self-sufficient as possible in both energy and food. I am pleased that we are acting on the Farm Credit Act, on the agricultural stabilization bill and on other farm legislation in the area of food production. This government has a good record in the area of energy, as is evidenced in the establishment of a one-price oil system across Canada, the establishment of the export tax, the re-evaluation of our capability to export gas and oil, the acceleration of natural gas exploration and the way in which the Mackenzie Valley pipeline question is being handled.

Also, I am a very strong supporter of the Syncrude involvement, of Panarctic, and so on, particularly in the area of electrical energy through CANDU technology. But what we really need to do is add substantially to the entire energy picture in Canada at present through the establishment of Petro-Can or a government agency which could enter into a joint venture with industry and involve itself in the technology and the negotiating of energy contracts on behalf of Canadians.

To my knowledge, not many issues have come before parliament which have separated political philosophies as much as most of our energy debates, this one in particular. Members of the official opposition have been almost unanimous in saying that we should leave the energy industry entirely alone, give the companies every tax consideration and everything they ask for, and allow industry to operate virtually free of any guidelines. The NDP have argued the case for the nationalization of much of the industry. I think that the correct position is the one taken by the minister and this party, to issue strong guidelines and policies for the industry for the benefit of all Canadians, to establish a tax structure that is fair to the petroleum industry as well as to other industries that are taxed, and which is also fair to all Canadians and, now, with the help of Petro-Can, to enter into joint ventures with the petroleum industry.

I was interested to hear the speech of the critic of the official opposition. It is an interesting fact that since his speech he has not been in the House to hear the rest of the debate. That shows how interested he really is in this entire matter.

Mr. McKinley: That is not true.

Mr. Milne: The point of view expressed by him was that there was really no need for government involvement, and that the petroleum industry should be left free to operate in the way it wants; that energy should be left entirely to private enterprise. Surely his party must be aware of the majority of public opinion in this regard. Most people to whom we have talked say they want very close control over the development of our resources in the future and over our petroleum industry.

Back in June of last year I attended a meeting of the Committee for an Independent Canada at which a resolution was passed by a majority vote to nationalize one of the major multinational petroleum companies. This is an organization made up of people from all political parties, people who are really concerned about the future of this country and who feel strongly about it. I would not have supported that resolution, but I consider it to be a strong expression of opinion of a large segment of the Canadian population. I think we can really say that when the best interests of the multinational petroleum companies have coincided with Canada's best interests, they have done a good job. However, when they have not coincided I must ask whether it has been in Canada's best interests.

The basic objective of the whole equation is an adequate, secure supply of reasonably-priced energy for all Canadians. We want to be very careful in evaluating arguments put forth by members on the opposite side who say that private enterprise can do it completely on their own and do it better. I think it would make sense to multinational petroleum companies certainly to go where the best deal is, where they can make the best profit. I ask members of the House whether they really think that Canada should be involved in some kind of auction with other countries to see which country can give the best tax structure and the biggest incentives to oil companies, because if we enter into that situation all we will do is ensure artificially high returns to those companies and we will certainly not be acting in the best interests of the people whom we represent.

Also, if we are to accept the arguments put forward by the opposition, it could well be that in moving the Canadian price to the world price we would find that Canadians would be paying a higher price for their own resource than Americans, for the same energy. It would be paradoxical for us, as the exporter of oil to the United States, to be paying more for our domestic oil than would be the case with the people to whom we are exporting it.

The amounts we are talking about are not small, because when we were considering in committee the question of the involvement of the government in Syncrude—I think I am quoting the figures correctly—we were told that the expected world price of oil will probably be about $13.50 per barrel by 1978, around $15 by 1984, and perhaps as high as $30 by the year 2000. Therefore, if we are talking about leaving it entirely to the discretion of the industry and allowing oil to work its way up to the world price, that is the kind of impact there will be on Canadians and on the Canadian industrial base.

I was somewhat amazed by the point of view put forward earlier today by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) when he was making his critique of Crown corporations. If we followed his point of view we would have a wonderful country for those people surrounded by the golden horseshoe, where there is much prosperity. But I ask him, what about equal opportunity for all Canadians; and in expressing that point of view does he really care about those who do not have the opportunities of Canadians who live in areas of prosperity?

Canadians should be very proud of the role Crown corporations have played in the development of this country. The efficiency and profitability of a Crown corporation versus a private concern could be argued, but do not forget that the Crown corporation, essentially, is established in the majority of cases to benefit the whole of Canada and to operate in areas where it is not profitable for private companies to do so, or to do so at a rate which people in those areas can afford. I refer to the excellent job done by the CNR, Air Canada, and other Crown corporations.

If the point of view expressed earlier today had been followed in the past we would not now have the Atomic Energy Commission of Canada. In terms of the entire energy question which we are considering, I think we would have very real concern about the future if it were not for the excellent work of that commission. Outstanding people with leadership qualities have taken a strong stand on the whole question, and today under the commission's licence we have some of the best technology anywhere in the world with regard to energy. I hope this will be the role Petro-Canada will play.

I disagreed strongly with the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) who said the other evening that we should just re-fund Panarctic and let it fool around in a small area of the far north. The purpose of Petro-Canada is to be a major factor in the petroleum industry within Canada, and in doing so to be staffed with strong leadership people who will work for the benefit of all the people we are trying to help.

I would like to say a word about the position put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) in terms of our involvement in Syncrude. He said the government should have taken over total control of Syncrude and moved quickly to nationalize a large corporation such as Exxon. In reply to that, I think there is only so much money the government has at its disposal and it is a question of where to spend it in order to get the most leverage. If those two projects were undertaken on the basis put forward by the New Democratic Party, then what financial strength would we have in the future to meet the next energy situation which comes along? I think we want to participate one way or another in a large number of projects on a joint venture basis, rather than invest totally in one or two and then be unable to participate in the rest.

As I visualize Petro-Can, I take issue with much of the viewpoint put forward on the opposite side whereby Petro-Can is being painted as an organization which will muscle out the present industry; that it will be the biggest competitor, and so on. Surely the basic role of Petro-Can will be in the area of joint venture, where it is deemed in the public interest that certain developments should take place and at a certain rate. That would be where Petro-Can would be involved, and presumably on most occasions involved on a joint venture basis rather than as a basic competitor of any of the individual companies.

I think there are some pretty strong precedents set by governments not only in this country but other countries—certainly by provincial governments—for government having a strong role in this area. After all, when the United States was experiencing real difficulty under President Roosevelt, the way out of that difficulty was to establish the Tennessee Valley Authority, which I think most members of this House would agree is a very strong economic development tool.

Nearly all the provincial governments, regardless of their political faith, have moved to set up provincial commissions for hydroelectric power. They have done so because they are concerned about equal opportunity for all the people within the province and they are concerned about having power at the lowest possible cost upon which to build an industrial base.

We are talking about the tremendously escalating cost of energy in the future; we are talking about oil which may cost $30 a barrel by the year 2000. Because of this, if ever there was a time for the government to move for protection against that eventuality, to establish a strong Canadian base in the petroleum industry and to have some influence in that area, the time is certainly now.

I would think that one of the very strong points—and hon. members should realize this—for Petro-Can is in terms of holding the licence for technology. Whoever controls technology really controls the game, and if Petro-Can has enough technology under its licence it may very well be possible to join people not even associated with the petroleum industry in some development aspects because Petro-Can can contribute the technology and the other concerns can perhaps contribute the majority of the financing.

I would think that through Petro-Can the government would want to participate where and when necessary, and by having a large amount of technology under its licence it would be possible for Petro-Can to get a great deal of leverage for a small amount of investment. I hope Petro-Can will move very quickly to assemble a group of highly qualified people. We are operating in a very difficult industry, one which requires extremely competent people, and I think it is not easy to have this expertise without being actively involved in the field. By having these people working for Petro-Can the government will have a much tighter grip on the petroleum industry and a better understanding of it.

I hope, also, that Petro-Can, along with the government, will be able to take a very broad look at the entire energy situation. I think one of the major problems here is that projects are going forward when they should, and perhaps there is the problem of too many projects going ahead at the same time. As the hon. member from Fort William has mentioned on a number of occasions, the real necessity if that these projects be staged. I think this would require, under Petro-Can, motivating some and perhaps not participating in others, so that we have a good input in terms of how the projects are coming on stream.

As the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) said in his speech last night, there is very grave concern about the absence of research under Canadian auspices carried out by the petroleum industry. That should be a major role for Petro-Can. If research is totally foreign-controlled, I do not think we will have the leverage we should.

● (1710)

I want to make a few comments in taking up the challenge of hon. members opposite that government members are not speaking in support of this bill. Of all the bills we will be introducing in the initial part of this thirtieth parliament, Madam Speaker, I think this is one of the most important. I should like to ask hon. members opposite where some of their own members from Ontario and the maritimes stand on this bill. I have not seen many of them stand up and oppose Petro-Can in the way that the official lobbyists from Calgary have been doing. I should like to see members from Ontario and the maritimes stand up and be counted so that their constituents can evaluate how they feel about Petro-Can.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) on a point of order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend asked if there are any members from Ontario who will stand up against this bill. I am one, and I expect to speak against it and vote against it if I have the opportunity.

Mr. Cullen: Let's vote.

Mr. Milne: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we are prepared to vote on this issue at any point. I conclude by saying that I think Petro-Can is vitally important. I think the relationship that the government will have with the petroleum industry through Petro-Can will be a healthy one and in the best interests of all Canadians.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) very closely because I wanted to know why he felt the bill was an important piece of legislation. He talked about the government having control over the oil industry and over energy. Certainly, the government has demonstrated its control over the oil industry and energy without having a national oil company. The hon. member talked about Petro-Can having to put together a team of technological experts who could entice money from the private sector. He said that he hoped Petro-Can would gather such people around it, and gave a long, rambling dissertation but failed to point out any need whatsoever for the bill. That is the only conclusion I can come to after listening to him.

The history of nationalized oil companies is of great interest. The British government established British Petroleum and took 50 per cent ownership to assure an oil supply for its navy. At that time it was not thought there was any oil in Great Britain and they wanted a company of their own to explore in the Middle East and off their shores. Aquatane was formed for similar reasons by the French government, to explore off their shores. Most national oil companies that have had any success have been formed to do the exploration outside the boundaries of their country. This government, however, is setting up a national oil company to do exploration and development with, I suppose, a chain of refineries and selling mechanisms throughout Canada, eventually. I suppose the exploration is to be done mainly within Canada, although that point has not been clarified.

An interesting argument has taken place, regarding oil and energy, in this House and across the country in the last couple of years. Canada has never had a huge amount of proven reserves in relation to total world supply. Many people think that Alberta is rich in oil and that Canada should have enough oil for years and years to come. Without taking the tar sands into consideration, the known reserves of conventional oil in Canada are very small indeed in relation to total world supply and world needs. What enticed international and Canadian companies to explore in Alberta in the last number of years was the stability of this country's government and the manner in which exploration units, Canadian or otherwise, could operate due to the stability of the economic climate. They felt their investment was safer here than in the Middle East, Indonesia, Mexico, South America or some other places where there was greater known potential.

In the last four years, however, the Liberal government has pretty well destroyed that stable economic climate for the oil industry. It is no wonder that we see consternation amongst Canadian and international oil companies and the international finance which has to support these companies in exploration. They are now somewhat reluctant to invest in exploration in Canada. Why, and how, did this come about, and what are our reserves?

A great argument developed in Canada in recent years about Alberta's known reserves and whether they belonged to Canada or to Alberta. In my opinion that question was needless: the reserves belong to Canada. The Fathers of Confederation stated quite clearly that our natural resources can best be looked after by the government closest to the resource. By "looked after" I mean that the government closest to the resource can best gauge the time for development and the quantity to be developed. For the services that the developing government must provide, it could and should be expected to take a royalty.

That was really what the Fathers of Confederation said, and I think it is the way most Canadians feel today. The resources belong to Canada and they are to be developed and managed by the government closest to the resource, whether it be coal in Cape Breton, coal in British Columbia or uranium in Ontario. It is a resource to be developed, the time for its development and the quantity to be developed is to be determined by the government closest to it, and a royalty charge for the facilities necessary for development is to be charged as an expense to the resource development company.

In his budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) changed all that and stated that the royalty charged by the province will no longer be allowed as an expense to the resource development company. That destroyed a little bit of the economic climate that used to exist in Canada. Prior to that the OPEC nations, acting as a cartel, forced up the world price of oil. What did the federal government do? It must have known that oil exploration is a costly business, that oil which is easiest to find is found first and that which is harder to develop comes on stream at a later stage of the process. It is logical to assume that oil is still to be found in this country but that its development will be a costly process. Responding to the move of the OPEC nations, the government put a ceiling on oil prices in this country. Prices went from $1.19 per barrel to $4, and then to $6.50. After the next first ministers' meeting which is to be on April 1, oil prices may or may not go up again.

If the minister had the best interests of Canada at heart, he ought to have said that in order to encourage stability in the oil industry Canadian oil sold domestically would sell for less than the international price, but that its price would be the equivalent of 50 per cent, 75 per cent, or what you will, of the international price. At least the oil industry in Canada should have known what to expect. Prices could have adjusted automatically. As it is, Canadian and foreign-owned oil companies are at the mercy of the government. Our vital resources should not be administered in such an erratic manner.

Perhaps the government could afford to pursue its present course if our oil supplies were ample; but they are not ample. We are not possessed of ample crude oil reserves—let me put it that way. We have destroyed the confidence of the industry and harmed our chances for being self-sufficient in oil. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said, according to an article in the Toronto Star of February 20, that we shall need to spend $100 billion to make Canada self-sufficient in oil by the year 2000. Yet he has done his best to chase exploration money from this country as quickly as possible. I am not talking about multinational oil companies; I am talking about Canadian oil companies which have taken their money out of this country: they are looking for oil and gas in the United States and in the North Sea.

The actions of the government, particularly of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, have encouraged Canadian money to leave this country; and one of those ministers had the gall to say that we shall need to spend $100 billion on energy if this country is to be self-sufficient in energy by the year 2000. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made several mistakes. In April, 1970, he disallowed royalties in connection with exploration north of the sixtieth parallel. All kinds of oil companies which have staked out leases in our northland do not know how much royalty the federal government will want if and when oil for which they are exploring comes on stream. Government policy deliberately forced many companies to abandon exploration holes they had drilled north of the sixtieth parallel. What is the result? By 1977 this country will not produce enough gas to supply Ontario, Montreal and parts of the United States. By 1978 we shall begin cutting down on oil exports as we shall not have enough oil to meet our own requirements. The National Energy Board said that by 1982 we shall become a net importer of oil.

There is no need for Canada to be in this position. The government is responsible. Our largest known reserves of oil are in the tar sands. What did the government and the minister do that was wrong in connection with the tar sands?

Mr. Lang: Nothing.

Mr. Horner: I am glad to note someone is listening.

Mr. Lang: Glad and surprised.

Mr. Horner: Let me list four ways in which the government was wrong. First, it said that the price of tar sands oil would be frozen or controlled. You cannot treat tar sands oil in the way you treat conventional oil. It is not the same; it needs costly machinery for extraction and the extraction process is work-intensive. Common sense should tell you that when you embark on a project which will take many man-hours to complete and which requires large quantities of expensive machinery, the end price, given the inflationary conditions of the past two years, will go up. That is exactly what happens. This holds true if you are developing a conventional oil well or tar sands oil. The government decided to freeze the price of conventional oil. That was a political decision. It should have said that tar sands oil will be sold at the world price. It did not say this even though it knew that we were living in inflationary times and that the project would need a great deal of expensive machinery. This omission was its first mistake.

Its second mistake was this: it did not say that the Syncrude ground rules would apply to every company seeking to develop the tar sands. The government had to include the Great Canadian Oil Sands company in the Syncrude-type guidelines; the company was already in operation and the government had no choice. The government made special royalty provisions for Syncrude, provisions which it did not extend to other parties which might seek to develop the tar sands.

The National Energy Board said that a new tar sands project should come on stream every two years. Home Oil, a Canadian oil company a majority shareholder of which is Consumers' Gas of Toronto, asked the government for concessions similar to those given to Syncrude. The government refused but said it would work out a deal with the company. You cannot expect companies to compete with one another but not work under the same ground rules. The government's mistake was in not laying down rules which would apply to every company seeking to develop the tar sands. The same rules should apply to royalties and tax limits. Rules applying in the same way to all the companies would greatly have enhanced the prospects for the future development of the tar sands.

● (1730)

The next mistake which was made in connection with the tar sands project applied particularly to Syncrude. The government should have said, "We shall allow a company which comes in to develop an oil extraction plant in the tar sands to export a percentage of that oil." Why? It was because we needed foreign money for the development of these tar sands in our own interest. The minister might have said to Atlantic Richfield, "For every two barrels you get out of the tar sands you will be able to export one." In those circumstances perhaps Atlantic Richfield might have been able to raise the necessary capital in the United States and elsewhere. Instead, the minister closed off export opportunities.

The Japanese for some time have been interested in the Canadian tar sands but we have effectively discouraged them from coming in and taking part in this venture. The Japanese are dependent on imports to meet all their energy needs; they take about 17 per cent of total OPEC exports so they are obviously very interested in access to a source of energy. The Japanese would gladly invest in the tar sands project provided some formula were reached which warranted the use of their money to benefit Canada and Canadians as well as their own particular interest. The government has only itself to blame when it finds Canada likely to run short of oil in the relatively near future.

One only has to look at any geological study of the region to see where the best potential for future oil discoveries lies. A while ago I mentioned the regulations which were discontinued on April 10 concerning future exploration north of the 60th parallel. Mr. Speaker, that area is very important because it is still solely under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Most geologists agree, on the basis of seismic studies, that the delta area of the Mackenzie River and the Beaufort Sea, where you find the tertiary land formation, are the areas in which most of the possibilities lie. I might point out that something like 70 per cent of the world supply is found in this type of land formation. The Venezuelan oil fields and the recent find in Mexico come to mind in this connection. The only Canadian region in which such a formation occurs is in the Arctic.

The Prudhoe Bay find most likely extends right out into the Beaufort Sea and includes the Mackenzie River delta. Yet we have discouraged exploration there. It is true that some companies are still exploring in the territory, but they are doing so only in order to hold on to their leases. Will Petro-Canada or another government-controlled company be able to do any better than Panarctic which is already operating in the Arctic? That is the question which the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe should really try to answer when he talks to his constituents, the Liberals he meets in the town halls.

As I say, our best potential is in the high Arctic, the delta of the Mackenzie River, and the Beaufort Sea. Panarctic is already up there and it is 45 per cent owned by the government of Canada. This 45 per cent gives the federal government control over the entire operation of Panarctic as well as the power to veto any proposed operation, or any change of the mix of shareholders. Thus, Canada's best potential lies in an area over which the federal government already has control, and in which a government controlled consortium is already operating. I fail to see why another petroleum corporation should be needed in these circumstances.

I do not believe any major oil company has the slightest fear of competing with a government owned oil company. I would certainly regard a private company as being poor operators if they feared competition from a government corporation. It is not fear of competition which arises here; it is fear of an unfair ball game. In the last four years, particularly in the last two years, we have seen continual changes in the regulations governing exploration for oil in Canada.

The government is now attempting to argue that the creation of a public petroleum corporation will instill greater confidence into the oil industry. It will do nothing of the kind. We shall not be able to entice oil companies to resume exploration in Canada on the previous scale, or induce them to increase the pace of exploration if we set up a Canadian exploration company to engage in operations of its own in this field. The atmosphere the government created, an atmosphere of distrust, will further encourage the companies to stay in the North Sea, or the United States, or somewhere else.

I note that the bill makes provision for a capital structure of around $500 million, which is a mere drop in the bucket when measured against the $100 billion the minister said it would cost to ensure that Canada is self-sufficient in energy supplies between now and the year 2,000. Rather than create uncertainty and concentration among the exploration companies we should now be moving to create a better economic climate to encourage exploration in Canada.

● (1740)

We are more knowledgeable than we were at the time the world oil crisis first started and the OPEC nations realized they had a monopoly and could set prices. The experts said that the OPEC nations would lower their price for oil to about half of what the price increased to eventually. The price quickly shot up to $12 or $14 a barrel, but the experts said that by the fall of 1974 the OPEC nations would back off and would sell oil at somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6 a barrel.

The OPEC nations held meeting after meeting, and then told the world that one of their key problems was their desire to protect their endowment over the long run against inflation and currency devaluation. They have said that they will hold the present world price of oil if the oil importing nations will give them some assurance that their currencies will not be further devalued. So we must realize that the OPEC nations have no intention of lowering the world price of oil, and we should adjust our economy accordingly.

Is this bill to set up Petro-Canada and to give it authority to enter the hydrocarbons industry really necessary? Under Polysar the petrochemical industry has been expanded, so this bill is not required from that aspect. There is no question that Canada will be in need of money to supply Canadians with their energy requirements. Right now in the Arctic, feasibility and environmental studies are taking place before the Berger commission which is inquiring into the possibility of building a Mackenzie valley gas pipe line. So far as the all Canadian route is concerned, commonly known as the maple leaf route, the Foothills Gas Company estimates the project will cost Canadians $4 billion.

An hon. Member: Terrible!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Horner: I hear hon. members saying terrible and shame, but I do not think they are taking this debate very seriously. It is their government that has contributed to this increased cost by allowing inflation to run rampant.

Is this the best way of spending $500 million to ensure that Canadians will have ample energy supplies in the years ahead? I do not think it is. I think it will create greater fears in regard to oil exploration. It will cause more private capital to leave Canada and not return, because investors will be afraid of the ground rules the government is laying down.

From time to time we see greater demand for revenues from the oil and gas industry. Off the east coast near Sable Island there is estimated to be about one trillion cubic feet of gas. The oil companies are not interested in extracting this gas because the small quantity, and the oil royalties demanded by the provinces make it uneconomic. Further possibilities of exploration for gas lie in the north off Labrador, and these are very good indeed. But here again the government has been negligent in working out agreements with the province of Newfoundland as to which government has authority off the coast of Labrador.

There is much the government can do to create a better climate for energy exploration, and this would go a long way toward bringing more money back from the private sector to the energy exploration area. This bill will only discourage such capital flow.

It is estimated that in the Mackenzie River delta there are eight to 12 trillion cubic feet of gas reserves at the present time. It is estimated that Panarctic has found about 12 trillion cubic feet of gas in what is commonly called the high Arctic. It is believed that if a gas pipe line could be built down the Mackenzie valley, then further exploration would take place and greater reserves would be revealed. In fact optimistic estimates of the possible reserves in the high Arctic are in the neighbourhood of 150 trillion cubic feet.

With all this gas, Madam Speaker, one wonders whether we will be deficient in the supply of gas by 1977 or 1978. But we have witnessed the short-sighted policies of this government, and this Petro-Can bill is just one more. It may satisfy the political aspirations of some of the minister's backbenchers, but it will not satisfy the need of all Canadians across Canada for sufficient supplies of energy to heat their homes, their factories, and to supply the furnaces in steel and other industries.

It is often said that there is a lot of natural gas in Alberta. We are using our natural gas at the rate of roughly 2.3 trillion cubic feet a year. Alberta has reserves in the neighbourhood of 70 trillion cubic feet, though these have yet to reach the marketable state. Some socialists believe that the known gas reserves in what might be called the Suffield area of southeastern Alberta will bail us out of any short term difficulties in which we find ourselves. There are about three trillion cubic feet of gas reserves in the Suffield area, less than one year's supply. So if anyone thinks that rapid drilling for this gas will immediately alleviate the shortfall that we see ahead of us in 1977 and 1978, they are just kidding themselves and nobody else.

In addition there is in this area what is commonly referred to as the British block. There is an experimental research area there of huge dimensions where, from time to time, the army explodes some dynamite, blows a hole in the ground, and determines how much dynamite is needed to penetrate the earth to a certain distance—it is about that simple. They test-fire a few rockets in that area as well, along with small arms artillery. I point this out because this testing takes place under contract with the British government. There are no publicly known negotiations taking place to end this sort of exploration in that area. You cannot go out and explore for natural gas with that kind of experimental testing of firearms, dynamite, and the like going on. Everyone knows the fire potential of a gas and oil exploration area.

● (1750)

Somewhere down the line we have to make a decision in respect of this $100 billion energy bill and how best it should be met so that we are not left with a deficiency of energy. Part of that money should go toward encouraging further development of our most potential areas such as the Mackenzie River delta and the Beaufort Sea. The fastest and easiest way to encourage more development there is to move forward in an orderly manner with the development of the Mackenzie River delta area.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I consider it a privilege to take part in this debate on such an important matter as Bill C-8 dealing with this country's energy economy.

Today's Montreal Gazette carries an article under the heading "As Oil Era Ends—What Lies Ahead?" It refers to the latest report of the Science Council of Canada. I suggest it is a very informative article. The council suggested some time ago that we must re-orient ourselves from a consumer society to a conserver society. The council implies that as we approach the end of the oil era we must put more effort into learning the techniques for using the energy of the sun, the tides, energy from hydrogen, from waste, and from biological and many other sources. The minister and the government are a bit late with Bill C-8, and they are 20 years too late with PetroCan.

It was very interesting to hear the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) ask a few minutes ago if there were any PC members in the opposition who were against this bill. I am one member who is against this bill because it will not increase our oil supplies one bit. In fact it may hamper discoveries and decrease our supplies and prospects. I am one member from Ontario who believes that, whatever our future, Ontario will be able to obtain its share of Canada's energy supplies, just as will other provinces, regions and territories. I suggest the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe is subverting the energy and economic interests of his riding to the Liberal party.

Several things have occurred recently outside this House that are a source of embarrassment not only to the government but to this whole body. This proposed oil company, Petro-Can, is just another government white elephant. It is another repository for Liberal patronage, defeated Liberal candidates very likely, and could even become—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I hear hon. members shouting across the way. I guess they cannot stand the truth. This could become the cause and the agent for more Liberal corruption, corruption which is so rampant and embarrassing lately, both here in Ottawa and in some of those provinces governed by Liberal governments.

The purpose of Bill C-8, if passed, is to establish a Crown owned corporation with the authority to engage in all phases of an integrated energy company operating in Canada as well as in foreign countries. The corporation can engage in all normal energy-related company activities in addition to activities which it may deem expedient for, or conducive to, the furtherance of the objects of the corporation.

Although not specifically stated in the proposed bill, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) will run the corporation. The chairman of the board, the president and directors, and replacements as they become necessary, will be appointed by the Governor in Council, and evidently the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Thus it is clear that the minister will run the whole show.

The corporation will receive initial authorized capital totalling $500 million in return for 100 common shares. The initial subscription will come from the consolidated revenue fund administered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in other words, right from the pockets of the taxpayers. The shares of the corporation are not transferrable, so no one will be allowed to buy any stock in this company. The shares are to be held by the Minister of Finance in trust for the government; thus the government is the sole owner.

As mentioned, the powers of the corporation are extremely wide and provide for a great variety of endeavours not necessarily dealing with hydrocarbons or energy. The corporation may obtain additional money from the Crown, or it can borrow and issue debentures on the open market, guaranteed, or not, by the Crown. For the purpose of the act the corporation will be an agent of the government, and consequently any property acquired by it will be the property of the government. The corporation will be bound by all laws and natural resource conservation regulations of any province in which it operates.

The corporation may purchase the federal government interest in the PanArctic Company, under certain conditions, and all dividends payable will be paid to the Crown. However, there is no mention in the bill that the corporation is to be run as a profitable venture. There are certain provisions in the Canada Corporations Act which this corporation does not need to obey, such as those in respect of selection of directors, bylaws, books of the company, notices, etc. May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers) that the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight, at which time, I would remind hon. members, the House will proceed to the question of work stoppages affecting grain shipments, pursuant to Standing Order 26.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF STRIKE OF GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP ON GRAIN DELIVERIES

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Treasury Board.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as you know tonight we have some problems. We have a debate scheduled in the House and a good hockey game on television. I did not want to disturb anyone's evening, so we settled the strike two minutes ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I did not want to make a joke—

Mr. Baldwin: Which one did you settle?

Mr. Chrétien: The PSAC strike has been settled. I did not want to say that before or play any games with anybody. This afternoon at two o'clock we were making good progress. I did not say anything because I did not want to disturb the chance of having a settlement. We have signed a contract for 26 months. A joint press conference is being held between the unions and the negotiator for the Treasury Board at the present time. The terms will be announced there. It is for 26 months, and I hope it is a good deal for both parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Now I do not know whether we are to have this debate or not.

Mr. Stanfield: Sure, we are going to have the debate.

Mr. Chrétien: I do not mind, but we could adjourn it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on a point of order.

Mr. Fraser: Not on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could I have the attention of the House in order to put the motion? The motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 26 is as follows: Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Stanfield, moves:

That this house do now adjourn.

The hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, there are two requests I should like to make of you. The first is that you read again the motion of the hon. member to indicate the reason for the motion. I believe it is a matter concerning the strike. Now that the minister has told us the strike has been settled I would suggest his motion is not in order.

Mr. Baldwin: Nonsense.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is essentially the same as that raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I realize that technically under the terms of Standing Order 26 Your Honour has been quite correct in simply reading the motion, namely, "that this House do now adjourn," but in view of the fact that this is based on a provision of Standing Order 26 I wonder whether it would not be appropriate for you to read the terms of the request made this afternoon so that we will know why we are debating a motion to adjourn the House. It just could be that the whole matter is now a nullity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Both hon. members will understand that a decision was made concerning the adjournment of the House tonight for the purpose of discussing a specific matter. Of course I was hoping that the House would express its wish and make a decision concerning whether or not we should pursue this debate.

In any case I think hon. members—and I want to warn hon. members about this—might find it difficult to follow the rule of relevance because the debate is on a specific matter, which is the stoppage of the movement of grain and the operations in the western harbours. If hon. members wish to carry on the debate there is no way I can prevent them doing so. However, I wish they would indicate to me a solution to the present situation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), in a very well thought out and well conceived manner, for the benefit of this House and the country brought forward a motion today dealing with a specific issue which still remains a problem in this country. It is because he did so, with the understanding of the Speaker who granted the motion, that we have seen the little tableau played out in front of us where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent out the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) with instructions to reach a settlement. He could have done that weeks ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest to Your Honour and to this House that the best thing that could happen is that the government should be subjected to the salutary discipline of listening to members of this House make speeches which will draw the problem to the attention of this House and the country. I think it is a great service that the hon. member for Vancouver South has performed for this country.

• (2010)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that I think it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested that there is only recent concern by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) in connection with this matter. To the contrary, he has been extremely cognizant of the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: He has been extremely conscious of the problem faced in particular by the grain industry, and he has been aware of the pressure. That, of course, always makes negotiations very difficult.

I think that there is a problem in connection with the debate tonight in addition to the problem of relevance and I would like hon. members to reflect upon it. It is the fact that this strike having been settled, there is about to be a vote in connection with another matter that may be said to relate pretty directly to the question, and it might be unfortunate if the question of ratification and negotiations in the other strike, which has effectively help up grain shipments through that period of time, were in any way influenced or prejudiced by the debate tonight.

Perhaps hon. members might consider the fact that there might be another appropriate occasion to debate at length what was originally going to be before the House. I know the feelings of hon. members opposite on this matter, and I would like to put forward two suggestions in the absence of a chance to discuss the matter among the parties. One is that we might adjourn briefly in order to have such a discussion and then return, and the other alternative is for us to have simply one round of speeches on the subject and then let the matter go. I think either of those suggestions would be in the real interest of making sure that labour matters are settled in the normal fashion without undue interference from here, and I put those two suggestions before hon. members opposite for their due consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I presume the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) spoke on the point of order, although he seemed to be debating the matter. His Honour, Mr. Speaker, made a ruling this afternoon, but hon. members opposite seem to be thrashing around a great deal to avoid a discussion on this matter. May I point out, with all due respect, that the House has taken a position, and despite all the obstruction on the other side this position should be maintained and the debate should proceed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on this facetious point of order that was raised by the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I think that what we are talking about here, Sir, if I have the right motion before me—I am just reading from the particulars that were submitted to your Honour this afternoon—

An hon. Member: Make the point.

Mr. Alexander: We listened to you, why don't you listen to us? What is the problem?

An hon. Member: Say something.

Mr. Alexander: Shut up for a minute and give me a chance.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Alexander: Give me a chance. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you know your duty and that you will bring to order hon. members who are ranting and raving before another hon. member has even had the opportunity to speak. The motion indicates that because of the present work stoppages—I know what those words mean—which have ended all grain shipments from Canada, this is an important matter requiring urgent consideration. In view of the intent of that motion we can not only consider the present but also look into the future.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I invite the hon. member to come to the point of order that has been raised. The question is whether or not this debate should be pursued, not the substance and the value of the motion that has been put, but its procedural acceptability. So far as the decision of the Chair is concerned, I have based my decision on Standing Order 26(13). I see no way other than the withdrawal of the motion, thus ending the debate, or to conclude the debate.

My interpretation of Standing Order 26(13) is very clear. Perhaps another hon. member can find another solution, but I do not think that there is any other way out of this situation unless it is done by unanimous consent. But there does not seem to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am glad you came to my rescue, Sir, because you took the words right out of my mouth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: This motion refers to the collection, movement, and loading of grain. You have made your ruling early this afternoon and I respectfully suggest that the ruling should be observed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on the question of relevance. This debate which we have requested is part of the request on the part of the official opposition to get at the facts regarding the continuous stoppages in the movement of grain to markets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Last week I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) whether he would name a date when the contract of the foremen's union ended, and he said that he did not want to discuss it in view of the discussions which were going on at that time. I maintain that this motion which was accepted today deals with all the work stoppages which have occurred, are occurring, and will occur at the end of this month. The motion therefore is entirely relevant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is debating the substance of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). A point of order was raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) regarding the procedure in this extraordinary situation in which we find ourselves. I would hope hon. members might limit their remarks to this. So far as the rule of relevance is concerned, the Chair will decide in due time. The hon. member must take into account that what we are discussing right now is whether or not this debate should proceed. There has been one point of order raised on top of another point of order, and we should hear those as quickly as possible, following which I will call on the hon. member for Vancouver South, unless someone proposes another solution.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I was the one to raise the point of order in the first place. Now I would like to say to you, Sir, that my point of order contained two questions, one of which you have not answered. I abide by your ruling with regard to Standing Order 26, but you have not answered my other question which concerns the reading to hon. members of the notice of motion before the House, because we do not have copies of it. I am not able to get a copy of it and therefore I would like to know what the motion is. I believe I am entitled to request that it be read.

● (2020)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. To answer the point raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), the only motion we have before us at this time is the one moved by the hon. member for Vancouver South and seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), "that this House do now adjourn." The substance which was used to obtain the adjournment of the House was the argument put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver South which has defined the subject matter, but the exact motion before the House at this time is the adjournment on that subject matter. With the consent of hon. members, I would agree to read the substance of the argument which was put by the hon. member, and upon which he did obtain the leave of the House and the decision of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that His Honour, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon granted this debate tonight, and he did so under the provisions of Standing Order 26, having been persuaded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) that there was a serious and critical situation which required the attention of the House. But I draw the attention of Your Honour to Standing Order 26, paragraph (16) which reads in part as follows:

> The right to move the adjournment of the House for the above purposes is subject to the following conditions:
> (a) The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit that this afternoon, when Mr. Speaker dealt with this matter, he recognized that there was a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. We are now informed that that emergency, which was the basis of this motion, namely, the strike of certain employees who come under federal government jurisdiction, has been settled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit that it is not to the point for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), for example, to say that what is involved is the whole question of strikes which may come at the end of the month. His Honour, Mr. Speaker, would not have allowed this motion this afternoon on the basis of strikes which might take place in the future. It seems to me that if my hon. friends to the right were really smart, they would be stating that their having called for this debate this afternoon was the action which induced the government to settle the strike. They should be happy to let this debate end, and I submit that, if Your Honour allows it to go ahead, in view of the changed conditions there will not only be troubles with relevancy but we will be debating a nullity. The Public Service Alliance strike has been settled.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We do not now have before us what we had this afternoon, a genuine emergency calling for an immediate and urgent consideration.

I will make one other point based on the rules, and it is to the effect that a subject like this can be dealt with only once in a session, and if we have this debate tonight and then, in a few days from now—

Mr. Horner: Oh, no, that is wrong.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just a minute. If we have this debate tonight, and in a few days the longshoremen's strike is not settled and my hon. friends try again to move an adjournment to discuss the same situation, the movement of grain on the west coast, they will be stymied by their own action tonight.

Mr. Woolliams: Where is your farm vote?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, several times this afternoon I have taken, on a personal basis, the liberty of saying to ministers of the Crown, "For heaven's sake, get the strike settled this afternoon; then we will not need the debate".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They have done it, and on the point of order I submit that the situation tonight is not the same as it was this afternoon, and this debate should not now proceed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The last remarks of the hon. gentleman were more to convince his colleagues than to convince the Chair. I invited hon. members to speak to the point of order on the procedural aspect of this problem, and nothing as yet has helped me to change my decision.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise to deal with the explicit point of order raised by Your Honour and other hon. members with regard to the question before us under Standing Order 26. Naturally I am joyful that some partial settlement has been reached, and I am pleased that we on this side of the House precipitated the government's reaching that decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: But there is one particular point I would like to deal with, which was partly acknowledged this afternoon. I am sure Your Honour was in the House on that occasion. I raised the question of the outdated grain handling facilities on the west coast of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Horner: I hear the cry, Mr. Speaker. Those hon. members were also in the House this afternoon, and they might have heard my remarks. I raised the question with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about whether the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications could go out and examine those outdated handling facilities on the west coast. At that time Mr. Speaker ruled that that question was relevant to the debate tonight and could be proceeded with tonight, and he disallowed my question this afternoon. The whole purport of His Honour's ruling under Standing Order 26 was to allow us to deal with an aggravation over the failure of the product of the prairies to meet the export demand in the world, and I say to Your Honour, on the very point of order raised, that two important points can be debated tonight which still have to do with this problem: the public service strike, which was a rotating strike—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think that we have to end this procedural debate and that a decision should be made. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did raise a point of order with reference to Standing Order 26 (16)(a), which reads as follows:

The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

I must bring to the attention of the hon. member the fact that this is defined as one of the conditions for obtaining permission to move the adjournment of the House. The House has already taken that step, and Mr. Speaker has made a decision. I invite the hon. member to look—but not to answer the Chair at this time—at paragraph (13) of Standing Order 26, and I invite him to try to find in it a way to stop the debate after it has started.

As far as the Chair is concerned, a debate has been allowed this afternoon by Mr. Speaker under the provisions of Standing Order 26. I do not see how I can prevent the debate except by unanimous consent of the House, or unless I am satisfied that the debate is completed because no hon. member wishes to speak, or unless the hon. member for Vancouver South withdraws his motion. I have not seen any of these three alternatives which could give me the opportunity to adjourn the debate at this time, so I call upon the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2030)

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise tonight to start this debate. In doing so I want to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for his endeavours in settling the strike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having played such a decisive part in bringing this happy event to fruition this evening. I do not share very much with the hon. member, but I might be forgiven some modesty, in view of the fact that people are lining up to take credit for the settlement, if I could come in somewhere toward the tail end of that line, somewhere behind the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Don't be too modest. You are first.

Mr. Fraser: I think, too, that considerable credit for settling the strike is due to people on both negotiating teams. I am sure all members of the House would join me in congratulating them, for they have striven mightily over the last several weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: The grain is not yet moving, however.

Mr. Woolliams: And Otto laughs.

Mr. Lang: Well, John is so sad.

Mr. Woolliams: He should be.

Mr. Fraser: The situation which is faced in the country is the fact—

Mr. Lang: It will be moving tomorrow.

Mr. Fraser: I wonder if the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) would just listen for a moment. I was going to relate to the House some of the events that led up to this evening, and I would hope they concern the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Better speak up pretty loudly; he is rather deaf.

Mr. Fraser: On February 26, my colleague the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) put a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The question, at page 3600 of Hansard, reads:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that there are approximately 14,000 boxcars locked in the prairies because of the current public service strike and, because there are about 28 ships now waiting in Vancouver harbour with escalating demurrage charges being calculated on a daily basis, would the minister indicate to the House whether he has formulated any contingency plan for the movement of this export grain in an effort to ensure that Canada's international reputation as a grain supplier is not subject to further humiliation?

Listen to the comforting answer of the minister:

Mr. Speaker, a number of plans are being looked at, both in connection with the immediate period and also in connection with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible when conditions return to normal.

It would seem to be appropriate tonight, Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Justice is in a more ebullient mood, for him to come before the House and tell us what plans he had in mind on February 26 when there were 28 ships in Vancouver harbour and 14,000 boxcars locked in the prairies. Perhaps the minister can tell us how many ships are in Vancouver harbour now. If he cannot, then there are a number of citizens in the city I come from who could inform him that there are approximately 40 ships waiting there. If there were 14,000 boxcars locked in the prairies on February 26, there are certainly more now.

It seems to me it is incumbent upon the government to tell us exactly what is going to be done to get this grain moving and to assure the House that in the future we are not going to have a repetition of the staggering number of days lost by work stoppages that have plagued this particular harbour to date. I should like to bring to the attention of the House a telegram sent to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today by the president of the Vancouver Grain Exporters Association, which reads:

Your office is quoted today worldwide for having stated yesterday "public interest has not yet been hurt enough to warrant government intervention". Having at heart the whole Canadian grain trade both east and west from Ottawa, we find such statement, if correctly quoted, bordering aberrance. During the crop year started August 1, 1974, grain exports ex Vancouver have been stopped by strikes during 68 work days out of 165, based on five day week less holidays, or during 41.2 per cent of straight time.

Those are facts, Mr. Speaker, and they have led to a situation where the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board is going to have to tell the House what the contingency plans are that he talked about on February 26. I want to say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not enough for him to take the view that because we have heard tonight that accord has been reached, problems have ended in Vancouver. The telegram to the Prime Minister from the Vancouver Grain Exporters Association continues:

Your letter of March 4 in answer to ours of February 20 arrived here on March 13.

I am sorry the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) is not in the House tonight so that we might get some answers as to when that particular problem is going to be solved. The telegram continues:

Yours is a standard type answer given over and over as years go by on each strike situation. It sadly proves a lack of leadership between contracts or from strike to strike to avoid such costly occurrences.

It is legitimate to ask tonight whether the government has any contingency plans to move the grain that has piled up, and also whether the government has any idea what it is going to do to break the pattern of strikes that have stopped grain shipments on the west coast. Let us look at the statistics. We have now reached a situation where there are over 40 vessels waiting to load grain; between August 1, 1974, and today approximately 70 shipping days have been lost; Canada is 900,000 tons behind on grain shipments due to China in 1974; China is presently negotiating to buy one million tons of grain from Canada in 1975 and a portion of this is in jeopardy because of Canada's poor delivery service. That jeopardy is not going to be relieved just because, by a lot of hard work on the part of some people, the present PSAC strike seems to have been settled. Our customers are going to look at the record and say—they cannot say anything else, on the basis of experience—that Canada is not a reliable supplier.

The Minister of Justice said an extraordinary thing yesterday. He said in the House that although the Japanese are now buying grain in the United States and Australia because they could not get supplies from Vancouver, United States ports have not been without strikes. Mr. Speaker, I might remind the minister that since 1972 there has not been a strike on the west coast of the United States that has stopped grain shipments. I think the minister must concede that their record has been considerably better than ours, and at the present time they are entering into negotiations which will last until 1978. In trying to evade the facts, and to some degree, I suggest, his responsibility by saying that other countries have strikes, the minister ought to be careful what country he is talking about. No shipments of grain have been stopped on the west coast of the United States since 1972.

● (2040)

I was talking to a Canadian grain exporter who had arrived back here a day or so ago from Tokyo. He said that he had never experienced a worse attitude among the grain importers, many of whom are threatening not even to bother tendering for new orders. Our record is so appalling that customers have no confidence in our future ability to deliver. It is incumbent on the government to tell the House and country what it intends to do. On March 26 the Minister of Justice told the House of his contingency plans. He said, as recorded at page 3600 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, a number of plans are being looked at—

I suppose one of them will not be needed because of what has happened this evening. I continue quoting:

—both in connection with the immediate period and also in connection with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible when conditions return to normal.

The minister should tell the House the extent of those plans and of what they consist. The House should not assume that because difficulties between the PSAC and Treasury Board have been partially resolved there are not serious problems at the port of Vancouver. The world's largest grain carrier is tied up waiting for a shipment of grain for Bangladesh. I assume all members know how badly that grain is needed in Bangladesh. That ship can carry 30,000 tons but only 10,000 tons have been loaded. The remainder of the cargo is tied up in boxcars and elevators. The ship has been docked for months. I was glad to hear that finally something is to be done. A Vancouver churchman said to me, "In the name of Christian decency, let us do something to get this ship loaded and on its way."

Members representing western constituencies say day after day that there are serious difficulties on the west coast and on the prairies and that our reputation in the world of commerce is suffering. Therefore, we have not been overstating the case. If any members doubt my word, let them telephone Vancouver and talk to people who have watched the harbour filling with ships and have been laid off because of this strike. The government should also tell us what it is doing with regard to its so-called consensus. What will it do in future? What is it doing in its search for consensus across this land?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I hear members opposite making noises.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Do they think that lack of government policy has nothing to do with strikes?

Mr. Fraser: I see the Minister of Justice is talking to some hon. members opposite. I do not know if he is trying to enlighten them or persuading them to make more noise. It is high time the government told this House about the consensus we hear so much about, as these strikes are taking place because of lack of consensus. Rising inflation rates have made increasing numbers of people at the lower end of the wage scale frightened, desperate and militant. They are prepared to strike because, basically they feel their security is threatened. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) have talked about consensus, but nowhere has the government indicated in which direction it wants to go and what its objectives are. So long as the government talks but does nothing to encourage restraint, consensus will not be achieved. I am afraid the Minister of Justice will need to talk about something else.

Basically, the government has asked the working people of this country to stick their necks out and, because inflation is rampant, to give up some of their bargaining power. But the government has abdicated its responsibilities. By not laying down adequate policies, the government has eroded confidence in the country. The Minister of Labour has talked about establishing a Canada labour council. I understand that the cabinet has discussed this proposal, but the government has not said what it will do about it. Surely this House is entitled to know the steps being taken to form the proposed Canada labour council. We ought to know who will be represented on it and what the objectives of the council are to be.

In summary let me say this. The government for weeks has refused to face its responsibilities and to consider that basically what we are dealing with affects the national interest. The government has not responded to the emergency. I remind hon. members that since 1972 the government has intervened four times in grain disputes and ordered, through legislative measures, grain shipments to be resumed. On August 31, 1972, the then minister of labour said, as recorded at page 3901 of Hansard for that date:

—there are occasions when parliament must deal with situations, when the full resort to economic warfare by strike or lockout so impairs the ability of others to carry on their activities that it can be said to be against the national interest for the work stoppage to continue. Parliament in this case was recalled as a last resort when it was evident that the ports on the west coast would not resume operations for some weeks if normal collective bargaining procedures were allowed to take their course.

He went on to say, as recorded at page 3902:

By far and away the hardest hit at this time is the grain economy on its external markets. This important sector of the economy is presently in the greatest jeopardy should the ports remain closed. British Columbia, too, has an export-oriented economy—

If it was in the national interest in 1972, just before the election, to pass special legislation for keeping the grain moving, why has it not been in the national interest in the last several weeks to take action which will keep grain moving? I ask all hon. members present, many of whom were also in the House in August, 1973, to remember the arguments put forward by the present Minister of Labour. He said at that time that conditions in the country were affecting the national interest and that we had to pass legislation. In 1974, during the election campaign, relevant sections of the Canada Labour Code had to be invoked to make sure that the grain handlers did not go on strike. That action was in the national interest. In October, 1974, parliament legislated the grain handlers back to work. It was said that that action was in the national interest as we could not afford to see grain movement stopped. In the present instance the government has for weeks refused to act even though the scales, to use the Prime Minister's phrase, had definitely tilted against the national interest. Apparently government supporters, including the Minister of Justice, suffered a lapse of memory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

● (2050)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the strike which prompted this debate having been settled there is no real purpose in sitting here any longer tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: That being the case I have no intention of speaking at any length. We in this party are, of course, happy the strike has been settled. However, I do not agree a great deal of credit is deserved by the minister or the government. The strike need not have taken place. It would not have taken place if the minister and the government had been as generous to those who have been on strike for the last couple of weeks as they had been to senior government employees over the past couple of years. I shall not illustrate this contention in detail now, but we shall find occasions to demonstrate clearly the vast difference between the attitude of the government toward senior public servants and its attitude toward tens of thousands of employees in the public service who are still working for very moderate wages. However, this is not the time to do so. The strike has been settled.

We are living in difficult times. We can be certain there will be other strikes in both the public and private sectors in the next few months. This does not surprise me. We have lived through three or four years of a booming economy during which time, encouraged by the government, corporations in Canada have made increasingly large profits. They never had it so good. This being the case it is not surprising that working people, in the light of those exorbitant profits and in the light of sharp increases in the cost of living, should demand their share of increased prosperity. The government asked for this kind of situation and now we have to live with it.

I know there will be opportunities in the coming weeks to discuss what lies ahead for the country, to consider the parlous state of labour-management relations, and we in this party intend to make proposals for what the government should do, and to point out what the government has failed to do to minimize differences and avoid possible strikes and work stoppages.

We hope the government has learned some lessons from the situation we have met tonight to consider and which it helped to create. We hope that in future it will move more expeditiously, more flexibly, and with greater humanity than I believe it showed in this dispute, so that we shall not have to deal in the next few weeks or months with another situation similar to that which we have been facing for some weeks now.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since a settlement has been reached on the strike which motivated an urgent and special debate, according to the provisions of Standing Order 26, I say our debate has come too late.

As it frequently happens with this political system, owing to our cumbersome democratic paraphernalia, debates take place in the House after the blows have been dealt.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see that Progressive Conservative members want to proceed with the debate on a problem which has already been settled. That may be a way for them to avoid tackling current issues which are still wanting a solution, especially agricultural problems in eastern Canada, which they do not understand. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, the problem we are considering has been settled. Our debate deals with the problem of feed grain supplies, the problem of the grain handlers strike which jeopardized agriculture in eastern Canada, since the supplies of Quebec were in danger of being cut off. In most cases, there were only 5 to 10 days' supplies left in several cooperative mills.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should take this opportunity tonight to convince our Progressive Conservative friends not to waste the time of the House, and to concentrate just as many efforts on the study of Quebec's dairy policy with which our producers are faced for instance, and to try just as hard to solve agricultural problems of western Canada, so that farmers not only get adequate supplies of feed grains, but also do not feel cheated by a national agricultural policy which all too often favoured western Canada and rarely eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture in Canada may be the most politicized subject in our country, whereas it should be the least so since it is just a matter of feeding thee people of Canada.

We could talk about exports.

● (2100)

It is strange not to hear anything in the House about the imports which flood our market and compete with our producers. Not one Progressive Conservative has talked about it! When we hear the requests of producers about the price per hundredweight of industrial milk, we hear promises on every side. The Liberals and Progressive Conservatives evade the issue and blame each other. They suggest holding emergency debates after the problems have been solved, maybe to save face, but all this harms the farm producer.

As the spokesmen for eastern Canada, we are happy that this labour conflict has been solved in conditions acceptable to both parties, the government and the handlers. We regret the fact that our collective bargaining system is so outmoded and old-fashioned that it is associated with politicians which play at farming policies instead of solving problems. Mr. Speaker, we deplore the fact that this conflict lasted so long to end in a solution that everyone could have accepted from the outset. This has harmed certain people. I for one have received several letters and telegrams from my riding asking to ensure the feed grain supply of farmers. We had to wait. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) did not want to compromise himself in this matter while others played at party politics. What is most ridiculous in this matter is that we have a debate tonight when everything has been solved.

I would not want to take more of your time on this matter, but I would like to say in conclusion that the price of milk, which is an essential and basic food, has increased six times in 14 months. Who pays for these increases? The consumer. The price of feed grain will also go up, it is official, as will the cost of production inputs. Who pays for this? It is still the consumer; and yet, producers in eastern Canada do not make enough for a decent living on the farm.

Mr. Speaker, I hope some day producers will find out who in the House is playing politics and who is really on their side. When Canadian farmers do find out, they will help us abolish this system where political parties are passing the buck. They will realize that if there were more members in the House like, say, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), and fewer Progressive Conservative members who enjoy playing politics, the solutions to these problems would be found very quickly.

By way of a conclusion, I hope the House will be mature enough to put an end to this debate. Here is a line which I am throwing Progressive Conservative Party members before they drown: Help us turn this debate in favour of eastern farming. At least we will have helped agriculture tonight in a positive fashion, and done the utmost to defend farmers from eastern Canada, something which would certainly be new for members of the Progressive Conservative Party!

[English]

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should like to say a few words in this debate tonight. It is indeed gratifying to all members of the House to learn the strike has been settled this afternoon, but it should be made abundantly clear that the motion that the opposition moved today was probably the log that broke the logjam as far as the strike was concerned, and forced the government to take action. So while we are debating some aspects of the grain situation it must be pointed out that in this respect the debate has been very successful, especially for the people involved in western Canada.

I should like to say a few words about the effect such a strike as this has had, and will have on farmers and on the agricultural industry in general in Canada, but first let me say that strikes of this kind of duration that have taken place, and possibly will be taking place in the future, are utter madness. The people of this country in all walks of life are becoming increasingly frustrated and dissatisfied at government inaction and at the over-all malaise that is apparent, which creates the atmosphere we have had in the past month so far as grain handling is concerned.

With regard to the effects the strike has had on the grain industry, on farmers and on the port of Vancouver, at the present time we are paying demurrage on 33 grain ships in the port. Six more grain vessels are due this week.

I understand that we will not know until the end of this week whether the longshoremen have ratified their agreement and returned to work. Some six or seven ships have left Vancouver because they could not get grain and were not prepared to wait around for a lengthy period of time.

The total amount of demurrage charges that the Canadian Wheat Board will have to pay, and consequently the farmers will have to pay, has been put at upwards of $4,000 per hour over the past number of weeks, that these grain vessels have been waiting in Vancouver harbour. This is money that will come directly out of the pockets of the farmers.

At the present time in western Canada roughly 22,000 boxcars are idle, which means approximately 50 million bushels of western grain are sitting completely tied up on the tracks. I contend that our transportation systems will be utter chaos until well on into the summer. Grain will be hauled in a criss-cross manner over the prairies, which means a great deal of inefficiency. For example, Alberta grain will have to be allocated to Thunder Bay so as to keep the stocks at Thunder Bay in proper position. Over the past three or four weeks almost all available rolling stock for grain has been filled to capacity, and one can well imagine the kind of chaos in which our whole grain transportation system will be.

According to figures provided by a very reliable source we have lost two months' movement of grain, or 50 million bushels. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board said that this grain has not really been lost, but if one talks to people in the grain trade, in effect this 50 million bushels has been lost. Grain sales are not being made at the present time, and none are being made into the future. Any sale that will be made will have to be deferred well into the next crop year.

This shows the magnitude of the problem we are discussing. Grain buyers are turning to the United States, Australia and Europe for supplies, and since the reputation of the port of Vancouver has been jeopardized I predict this kind of situation will continue. Canada's reputation as a reliable grain supplier has never been lower than at the present time, and this goes well back to the period when we were just starting to move grain in any kind of volume. Numerous contracts over the past three or four years have been switched from Canada to the United States, one being a contract for wheat with The Philippines, and another with Africa. The sad part is that both these contracts were with first time customers of Canada. One can imagine the problem we will have in regaining the confidence of these two customers specifically, and certainly there will be other cases. One of our major losses will be sales to Japan. Japan buys grain on a weekly tender basis. It has not been able to secure supplies from Canada, so consequently it will be buying from other countries.

Our farmers will be faced with these tremendous demurrage charges that have to be paid. Last year it was said we paid $17 million, and I predict that this will be about half the demurrage charges that we will be paying this coming year, taking into consideration all of the labour problems that we will be facing. Aside from that, in the past months we have seen world grain prices drop significantly. Farmers in western Canada who want to deliver grain have been completely isolated from the markets, and they have not been able to deliver it.

Another matter of great concern, certainly to the Canadian Wheat Board and other exporters, is the fact that there was a lot of grain for movement in what is considered the high price range, $5 per bushel. This grain has not been moved, and there is a chance that some of these contracts will have to be renegotiated. One of the reasons this debate is continuing tonight can be found in the fact that Canada has the second worst reputation in labour problems of any country in the world, right next to Italy. That is why we on this side of the House felt very strongly that the government had to act by settling the strike or bringing in emergency legislation.

Perhaps these areas that service such commodities as grain and others, which affect not only regional economies but the economy of Canada as a whole, should be considered with the idea of designating them as essential services. We must certainly come to realize that some of these services are essential, and situations such as the one we have seen take place on the west coast cannot be allowed to continue.

Up until the time the motion was moved today the government had done absolutely nothing. Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that this really was not of national importance. Let me say, in conclusion, that while in some respects it is gratifying to know that a part of the strike is over, and I remind hon. members that we are not sure that the longshoremen will go back, it is incumbent on members from those parts of the country that are affected to point out the disastrous situation which occurs when we experience prolonged strikes. It will be very interesting tonight to hear an NDP member from the prairies speak on this motion in favour of the farmers, while at the same time agreeing that grain must be moved in this country.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate tonight. I was willing to have it adjourned, but I felt sorry for the opposition as they would then have nothing to talk about. On reflection I thought it might be a good thing to have the debate because I felt that perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was making the speech of his career in launching his campaign for leadership.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker. It appears to me that the minister is imputing motives to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) which are certainly not true. I want to say on behalf of my colleague that he is a man of great sincerity and is very concerned—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: So concerned he has gone home.

Mr. Alexander: It was a result of that hon. member's sincerity and his concern that a motion was moved this afternoon and allowed by the Chair. We all have a great deal of respect for the minister, but I find that his remarks were ill-chosen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member realizes, I am sure, that this is a point of debate.

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I was speaking on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I was attempting to tell the minister, through you, that he has never been more wrong in his life in questioning the sincerity of the hon. member on this side who moved the motion this afternoon with all sincerity. I suspect that as a result of that motion there was some influence brought to bear on the settlement that has been reached tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I am sorry if my hon. friend is annoyed because I have a great deal of consideration for the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and probably it is because he is one of the best on that side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: That hon. member knows that if I had the opportunity I would seriously consider voting for him, because he could serve the interests of my party very well. I did not want to be impolite, and I thought when we were having a special debate like this we should bring a bit of life into our speeches.

Mr. Alexander: This is a serious matter.

Mr. Chrétien: I wanted to hear whether the hon. member had any very serious suggestions to make as to how we should settle these problems. It is very easy to say that we are the government and we should settle these strikes, but I am still waiting to hear any member on the other side tell me, or the House, that we should deprive these workers of the right to strike. I am not willing to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Parliament gave them that right, and I believe in collective bargaining. What has happened in respect of this strike is another example of the fact that if you are patient enough you can resolve problems. In addition to that, even if I had settled that strike last week, or at the beginning of this week, it would have done absolutely nothing to change the situation in respect of wheat movement out of the port of Vancouver, because the longshoremen were on strike and I have no responsibility for them.

In any event, the pressure was not yet that great. Had I waited for the pressure I might have waited until next week. There would certainly be more pressure next week if the longshoremen were no longer on strike. If they do not approve today of the settlement reached—

An hon. Member: They don't know that.

Mr. Chrétien: They don't know that and they don't want to know, Joe, and you know that well. I could have waited until next week and there would have been more pressure. I believe collective bargaining can work. Of course the union did not get all it wanted.

An hon. Member: And who pays for it?

Mr. Chrétien: It is because the people of Canada have to pay that I am not willing to give away the store.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: This settlement is a reasonable settlement between reasonable people. I think the union eventually recognized that it would have been very easy for us to have settled that strike. The federal government pays only 14 per cent of its total budget on salaries. So even if I exceed my budget by 10 per cent, this would create a burden of only 1.4 per cent of the federal budget. That would be easy for me. I think this easy way out would have created a precedent that would have forced everyone else to have the same thing. I said that the federal government must be a good employer, but we cannot be the pace-setter. We want to give our employees good rates of pay at levels comparable to the private sector. It is funny to see the opposition get up tonight and say, "Ha, ha; we have put the pressure on the government".

● (2120)

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: At eight o'clock when I announced the settlement, they had long faces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I was sorry to pull the rug from under their feet like that, because I am too much of a gentleman to handle people in that way. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) earlier tonight said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at two o'clock said to me, "We are in trouble; settle it". At the time when I sat with the Prime Minister I informed him that I had made the offer this morning and was waiting for the answer. I knew at 2.30 or a quarter to three that we had a settlement. However, as you know, the union has to talk to its members, and so on, and I could not reveal what was going on because that would be a situation which might destroy the agreement. That is the reason I was not keen to have a debate tonight. It could also have an effect on the voting of the longshoremen in British Columbia; I do not know. I hope not.

I think the timing of this motion was rather bad. The opposition complains that we are not settling, and then they complain because we have settled. I wonder what troubles we would have had if the Canadian people had not seen the light on July 8. I should like the hon. member to give us some suggestions. A committee is meeting on this subject: I refer to the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons in respect of the Finkelman report. That is the place to make suggestions concerning what we should do.

It is very easy to have simplistic answers. One simplistic answer would be to take away the right to strike. I think that since 1967 we have had settlements in more than 96 per cent of the cases in the public service, without strikes. I think this record is better than anywhere else. Of course, there are some problems and some aspects might be readjusted. I am not comfortable with the situation where we have one strike, for instance, in respect of the weighmen and samplers in Vancouver who can close the port. I am not easy with a situation where a week or two weeks later we could have a strike by the inspectors. I think the committee studying the Finkelman report could look at the situation to see if there might be another way to negotiate.

Mr. Benjamin: We told you that two years ago.

Mr. Chrétien: These things should be said before the committee. We must work to find a more reasonable way, because I understand it is a difficult situation for everyone. But it does not mean that because we have to make some readjustments we should take away altogether the right to strike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, as the Prime Minister said, we will not hesitate when national interests are endangered: we would not hesitate, in that event, to bring in a bill. However, this would be an act of last resort. We should not use it every week, because that would make no sense. If you do not want to give the right to strike, say so and we will vote on it. I am not content that we should withdraw the right to strike, but if the public service abuses it some day, then we will have to consider what to do; however, my judgment at the moment is that this is not the time.

I believe collective bargaining is working well. We have made some concessions. I know the unions wanted much more, but in this period we must show leadership. This is a settlement of 29¼ per cent for 26 months. It is about 1 per cent more than was recommended by the conciliation report, over a period of two years; but it is nothing to get excited about. I believe it is a good settlement. I hope the country will realize that sometimes it is necessary that we suffer from a little strike.

An hon. Member: Little?

Mr. Chrétien: I say it was a little strike because there were 19,000 people involved in it, respecting whom there were negotiations, and yesterday there were only 700 people involved.

An hon. Member: How much money for the producer?

Mr. Chrétien: The producer will not lose very much.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Grain Shipments

Mr. Chrétien: The producer will not lose very much because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Wait a minute. I am no expert; I do not know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: They have not lost their wheat. Perhaps the price will be better next summer and they will be grateful; I do not know. I just say that they are like anybody else. If you do not want a strike, stand up and vote against the right to strike. What I cannot understand is that the opposition members vote for the right to strike, and when we have a strike they say there should be no more strikes. I say hon. members opposite should make up their minds. I have to work within the law that was passed in 1967 by parliament.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would accept a question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) whether or not he agrees there is room for action on the part of the government when the national interest is affected? Would he agree that if we have a situation with a union which adversely affects our trade, then government action is called for?

Mr. Chrétien: I am glad the hon. member asked that question, because I said there is one point at which we must intervene. That point has not yet arrived. If we had settled the PSAC strike last week, because we were involved at the port of Vancouver in another strike, the movement of grain might have been prevented in any event.

I think there is a point where we must intervene, but it is a question of judgment. We were preoccupied with the movement of grain. It was not advisable for the government to say at any point that it intended to intervene, whether it had been tomorrow or another day, because in a situation like that the union would sit back and say, "Let the government force us". It is not advisable to show your hand in advance because the union would tend to sit back and not bargain. That could have happened tomorrow or on Friday, I do not know and I will not tell you, but it seems to be that it is not advisable to show your cards because the unions would tend to sit back and not sign an agreement. The hon. member for Hamilton West knows very well that if you show your cards to the union, they will not want to settle and they will be in a position to say that they were forced back to work.

● (2130)

Mr. Alexander: I disagree.

Mr. Chrétien: I am listening and waiting for the opposition to tell us if they have a better way of settling strikes. I want to repeat that this is another example which shows that collective bargaining is working. I admit that it took four weeks to settle the strike, and that is much too long. I can say that the offer made today was not much more than the offer made almost five weeks ago. But I stood firm.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I stood firm because it was in the national interest to do so. I could have easily agreed to their demands the first day and given them everything they wanted, but that would not have served the national interest well. I said during the strike to the people who were striking illegally that we would prosecute them. We would not have done so because we liked to but because it is the only way to act. I hope that people will understand now that we accept the right to strike by those who have the right to strike, but we do not accept the right of people to walk off their jobs illegally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: They say this is well understood. I think we have to go through that exercise to prove to the country that collective bargaining is still working. Of course I am sorry for the employees concerned who were out of work for four weeks and a few days, because many of them will perhaps take many months if not many years to recover from that, but that was their own choice and it is part of the gamble they took. If they had won the first day, they would have been very happy. Certainly I was not happy about a strike that lasted almost five weeks, nor were they happy, but eventually we found common ground which was acceptable to both parties.

I challenge the hon. member once more because we do not want to lose the whole evening. I was disappointed at the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver South did not come up with any precise suggestion. All he said was that the government should have acted. That is easy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are the ones to act.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member did not say that we should withdraw the right to strike. It is the other hon. member who said so. I wish the party opposite had one policy. We in this party have one policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South and that is why I was trying to help him in a possible endeavour on his part. However, it is sad but there is no opposition. We want to know where they stand on those issues. They say they are for the right to strike, but not when grain is involved. Other hon. members of the opposition say they are for the right to strike, but not when lumber is involved, and still other hon. members are for the right to strike but not when cattle is involved. It is always like that. The government cannot operate that way. People either have the right to strike or not.

I do think, Madam Speaker, that each one of us should be happy that the strike is over. I hope that we will not have too many strikes in the future.

Mr. Fraser: Will the minister accept a question?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I will.

Mr. Fraser: Before I ask the minister a question I want to say that in the event that hon. members did not realize it, or were not listening when I first rose to speak, let me remind them that I congratulated the minister for having worked very hard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: I am sure the minister did not really mean in any vindictive way the remarks he apparently made about me when I was out of the chamber for a moment. I can assure the minister that I realize the remarks were made in jest.

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Fraser: It is coming. The question that is facing this House, and that was facing the House over the last few weeks—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Say something.

Mr. Fraser: —was when does the right to strike, which is a right under our legislation, have to give way to the greater right of the national interest? I want to read to the minister the following statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on August 30, 1973:

Mr. Speaker, as members of this House, I am sure, are well aware—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: Just a minute, Madam Speaker. This is the point that the minister has to determine.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member wanted to put a question to the minister. Perhaps he could do so now.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You blew it again.

Mr. Fraser: The minister went on to say:

—the bill which is now before them concerns the government's legislative proposals respecting the resumption of rail services. The reasons for these proposals are, I believe, equally well known. The suspension of railway operations and subsidiary services which began regionally on July 26 and nationally on August 23—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: The minister has asked for a question and I am sure he wants to hear it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fraser: The minister went on to say:

—has resulted in widespread economic loss to the extent that the welfare of the nation has become imperilled. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated, it is essential to the interests of the people of Canada and the welfare of our nation that railway operations be resumed immediately.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Fraser: I have not come to my question yet, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Perhaps the hon. member could make it very brief because the time allotted to the minister has almost expired.

Mr. Fraser: My question is simply this. If it was against the national interest at that time to let the strike continue, why was it not against the national interest this time when we have had all these work stoppages and no grain has been moving on the west coast for 70 days? Can the minister, who is asking for some help and guidance, give us that magic answer?

Mr. Chrétien: I think that the answer is very simple. Today, yesterday and the day before I knew that a settlement was near and that it was not advisable to make any moves in parliament. I was advising my colleagues in the cabinet, and I know that at one point perhaps the government would have come to the decision to move. It is purely a question of judgment, and we felt that we had not reached that time yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We have been proven right because eventually we achieved a settlement. I am sure that the hon. member for Vancouver South, as well as other hon. members, are happy that we have reached that settlement as a result of negotiations rather than by way of legislation. That proves that the unions can be responsible. There are too many people who think that unions are irresponsible, but you have to look at the context. There are some people who want to catch up with others, and there are some emotional debates sometimes that need to be settled. So all these factors must be analysed. We are human beings. We can make that judgment, but it appears that we have shown the right judgment in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I hear hon. members opposite shouting "leader". Everyone on this side of the House seems to be a leader. We're all leaders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I listened very carefully to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) without heckling him. I hope that tonight the House will give me just a few minutes attention.

First of all, at the outset I would say that everyone on this side of the House is certainly very happy that the strike is over; indeed, everyone on all sides is happy. Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to know that the President of the Treasury Board took a part in the settlement of that strike. He is one man on the other side of the House for whom I have much respect, but I think at this time it is incumbent upon me to reply to some of the things he said before I make a few remarks in reference to what I think has happened during this strike, and other strikes, as far as the grain producers are concerned.

The President of the Treasury Board says that he feels sorry for the opposition. I do not feel sorry for the opposition. I do not feel sorry for the government. I feel sorry for the starving people in the world, when we in western Canada are the breadbasket of the world capable of producing much grain for those starving people. Those are the people I feel sorry for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: We have been waiting months for a ship to be loaded for Bangladesh. There has been one strike after another, and while these people lean farther to the left, I see politics in the eyes of many.

An hon. Member: You are looking in a mirror.

Mr. Woolliams: If I did look in a mirror I would see a better face than the hon. member would if he did.

I know that my hon. friends opposite say that through the President of the Treasury Board they have one policy. Their policy is to howl and shout during a debate. That is all they know, and I do not intend to engage myself in an argument. They are a flock of geese all sitting together.

The President of the Treasury Board said that we must be patient. I think I am a patient man. I think parliament is fairly patient, but we have in western Canada a $2 billion industry, one of the greatest industries in Canada, grain production, and I am confident that if an interruption of that kind took place in eastern Canada, in the province of Quebec or Ontario, where the government gets its votes, something would have been done about it. But the patience we must have is the patience to wait until the government does something for the west.

When we talk about a $2 billion industry, I say to those who holler and shout that they should read the financial reports of the banks. In a $2 billion industry every dollar in trade is worth $4 in the gross national product, and the gross national product determines whether we will have 4 per cent, 6 per cent or 7 per cent unemployment. Not only are the farmers of this nation concerned but the workers are also concerned, and that is why we are concerned, and why the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) moved his motion today, and I am very thankful that he did. If there was any help thereby given to the President of the Treasury Board to end this deadlock which has paralysed the industry in western Canada, then I am very happy, but I want to put a few facts before these howling wolves opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: The public interest of Canada is paramount to any other interest. Surely the international public interest of the world is paramount to any other interest. We have a $2 billion industry on the prairies. We have the ability, because we are the breadbasket of the world, to feed the starving people of the world, and yet the government sat paralysed, doing nothing, while people were hungry not only in other parts of the world but also right here in Canada.

I want to discuss something which to me is quite a joke. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to Europe ostensibly to try to build up some trade with the European Common Market bloc. While he was away trying to promote a little trade, what was happening to the greatest industry of Canada, the grain industry? Ships were tied up in the harbour in Vancouver. I made it my business today—and I do not rise in this House unless I have facts—to call Vancouver, and as of March 18—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if my hon. friend opposite could just contain himself for a moment. On March 18, 1975, there were 33 ships tied up in Vancouver. My hon. friends opposite say that that is nothing, but it has cost the western farmer $17 million, and I would suggest that when the bill gets to the Wheat Board—incidentally I should be interested in the comments of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board for whom I also have some respect the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang)—it will be closer to $30 million. That money is not paid, the President of the Treasury Board says, by the people of Canada. That money is gouged from the farmers of western Canada, the producers.

I feel that there was some liaison with the Prime Minister's group so that he was away while all this was happening, and he did not have to answer questions.

We have a lot of patience, and we waited while western Canada was gouged for at least $17 million, and it may eventually be closer to $40 million. While that happened, we lost the market in Japan. I believe that the minister will confirm that last year Japan took about 20 per cent of our wheat exports. Japan has now gone elsewhere because the credibility of Canada was gone.

Mr. Flynn: Where did they go?

Mr. Woolliams: They could not rely on us to make the deliveries. It is not only this strike, it is strike after strike. The government says that this has to be done and that has to be done, but while that is going on we are losing our markets abroad. I might point out to my hon. friends opposite that the farmers of western Canada, as the Minister of Justice knows, are faced with great costs. For a large wheat farm a combine costs $35,000.

Mr. Young: It costs the same in the east.

Mr. Woolliams: Other machines for seeding are comparably priced. Costs are going up every day. Those machines are not bought in western Canada. They are bought in Ontario, and when they are bought in Ontario that provides the standard of living and the jobs for people working in the steel factories of Hamilton and machine factories throughout Ontario. That provides labour with a tremendous standard of living, and provides Canada with the kind of gross national product which built this nation. I recall one of the slogans: they said, "The country is strong". Thank God it is strong, Madam Speaker. It could not withstand such a government if it were not strong. Maybe my friends will be a little kinder to me because I want—

● (2150)

An hon. Member: You know what the people of Canada said on July 8.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: —to speak for a few moments about the efforts of the New Democratic Party. We have here a number of members of the New Democratic Party which was formerly the CCF Party and were founded on an agrarian movement. I remember when it began: the Regina Manifesto did not originate in Regina but in the Palliser Hotel in Calgary. I have yet to hear a member of the New Democratic Party, when wheat producers are suffering in western Canada, stand in his place and complain about the deliveries of grain around the world because they are so obsessed with the idea that they must always help the labour movement.

Members from Saskatchewan should look at that province, under Premier Blakeney, where most of the constituencies are rural. They should look, too, at Manitoba, under Premier Schreyer, where many of the constituencies are rural. They should perhaps study what those two premiers are doing to keep the support of the western farmer. They should be honest enough to say to western farmers, "I have never supported your interests at any time when there has been a strike". Those are the facts and they should be put on the record, but they are always swept under the table when the NDP ask questions in the House about strikes. They are convicted by their silence. When there is a strike at Vancouver harbour, NDP members are always silent: they are silent because they are scared.

Wherever we see a monopoly in business, in a co-op, in the labour movement, it is bad for the national interest. The indictment against this government is that they let the national interest suffer for their own political advantage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That is what they have done. I always thought that when a government got a majority it could rise above politics, at least for the first few years in office, and measure up to the national interest. But the Liberal Party has always played politics on every issue.

An hon. Member: They have given us a majority since confederation.

Mr. Woolliams: My friend worries about a majority. I say to him I would rather stand on this side of the House and speak tonight for my principles than sit where he is without them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The first thing any government in Canada has to do is measure up to the national interest. That should always be put first. Whether you have to compromise with labour, management or business, the national interest comes first, and above all come the starving people of the world to whom we have an obligation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I want to hear what the New Democratic Party has to say about the starving people of the world. They have supported everything that has gone on in Vancouver, basically for political purposes. I want to hear what they say when they get up and plead and cry with big tears. I think they are playing the same game as my friends opposite. Only a short while ago they were together in the same bedroom: the divorce is only temporary until the next election.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a brief intervention in this debate to comment on a few of the matters that have been raised. I listened with interest to the previous speaker and his suggestion that we were serving a particular political interest in dealing with the labour situation before us, settlement of the dispute and return to work. He did not make clear the particular interest he thought we were serving, but it should have been plain to him that we are serving the system of settlement of disputes and the collective bargaining process as it exists in this country.

I want to assure you, Madam Speaker, that this government was completely aware of the consequences and significance of the work stoppage. After the presentation of the problem as viewed from the position of prairie persons interested in grain there could have been no doubt on the part of the government about the seriousness of the matter in terms of the delay and the problems associated with it. This leads to the question of how this matter ended as it did and why the government took the position it did.

I should like to refer to the statement of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) that we were involved in two strikes here rather than one, and they were overlaid one on top of the other. I should point out that during the course of negotiations in the longshoreman's strike there seemed to be a significant chance of settlement by bargaining, and even when the strike took place it looked as though settlement might be achieved at an early date through mediation. This turned out to be the case, through the skilful mediation of Mr. Kelly, Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour: a settlement was reached and will likely be ratified within the next couple of days.

The other strike that overlaid the situation and closed the whole of the port on the west coast, not just in regard to grain, meant that there was another situation in existence while the strike in the public service was continuing. It was a complicated question then as to how quickly we should intervene in a situation where the longshoremen and the management had attained a significant degree of understanding about the problem of work stoppage and particularly about the problem of grain.

As we started this debate tonight I mentioned the ratification of the settlement by the longshoremen. I hope it will be ratified and I have some confidence that it may be, because in other situations they have shown concern and understanding about the problems that the stoppage of grain inflicts upon this major industry in our country. That consciousness of the problems caused by strikes by those involved in them is an important development and growth that we need in this country. I do not think it is particularly helpful, instead of directing attention to the problems that strikes produce for society, for interested third persons to indulge in rhetoric about the need for settling strikes or the need for doing something else in the situation. That is evading the fundamental issue that exists in the labour field itself and the question of how to solve disputes.

An hon. member tonight said that strikes are madness. I have said that strikes, in their effect on innocent third parties, are barbaric. Sometimes their effects on innocent third persons are drastic. But I have also said that we should consider the history of the strike and why working men have so readily used it. They have resorted to the strike weapon when there is not some other fair way to resolve a dispute.

Many of this country have said that an alternative to the strike should be found, that some form of arbitration, some form of decision, should take the place of the strike. I believe that the steps toward resolving this problem will only be taken through discussion, education and understanding; they will not be taken through legislation or dictation. Above all, the solution will not be found if we adopt what some so readily talk about. When some talk about compulsory arbitration they really mean that they want a solution for low wages rather than fair wages. Far too often that is the solution some people want. I will have no part of any solution to take the place of a strike that is not fair, because I know that working men originally went on strike in protest against conditions which were unfair. The strike weapon was the weapon they chose, illegal though it was, in their search for fair dealing. We should bear these considerations in mind in any search for solutions.

In no jurisdiction of this country has the solution to this problem been found easy or simple. Given our present system of labour-management relations, there is not any province in this country which has not experienced difficulty in resolving labour disputes, in bringing about solutions. Men charged with the responsibility of government in this country earnestly try to find solutions to labour problems. On the other hand the opposition says, "Let us march in and settle a strike right away." It says that simply because it need not put forward alternative solutions, because it need not suggest how we will bring about, step by step, conditions which will lead to the labour peace, which is so essential to this country.

Mr. Benjamin: What has the government done?

Mr. Lang: Let me say to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), in case he thinks I have let him off too lightly, that he may have fun trying to explain the position of the provincial government of Saskatchewan, which has made statements the effect of which has been to arouse the opinion of the agricultural community against strikers. That government's attitude may almost be termed as anti-labour; I hope it is not. I think I can say to that government and to leaders of farm opinion in Saskatchewan that they should seriously consider the kinds of discussions which are needed if the difficulties of working men are to be resolved.

Of course the Premier of Saskatchewan did not waste much time before acting. The NDP in Saskatchewan tried to sound, in Saskatchewan, as if this government were at fault for not stepping in early and ending the strike. NDP members in the House have the attention of the entire country, and they adopt a different stance. That is one of the problems with that party.

Let me refer to the bright side. If the strike is now ended and the longshoremen's agreement ratified, there is the possibility that we will catch up in short order. This will involve the co-operation of many people. There will be extra shifts worked, fast unloading, and fast rail movement. All this has been discussed and is being organized. At present 20,000 grain cars are loaded with grain and it should be possible for us to catch up with our backlog in short order.

An hon. Member: We shall not need more ships.

Mr. Lang: Some hon. members opposite are cynical. I do not think they ought to be, because in so doing they are suggesting that this country is not a dependable supplier. Actually our record over the years has been extremely good. It is our competitors who like to put forward the contrary view. That does not mean we are over our difficulties in this area. I ask hon. members opposite if they are responsible to speak about alternatives to the kind of collective bargaining process we have in this country, or alternatives to the legitimate strike weapon. Neither the Conservative government of Ontario nor any other Conservative jurisdiction in this country has found an easy and facile solution to the problem. That is a fact. I ask leadership candidates opposite, or those who like to make late night speeches, to make suggestions in this area instead of sounding a note of alarm.

I found it amazing to note one or two of them taking the credit for the settlement of the dispute, although some were fair enough to give credit to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) who so richly deserves credit for the long hours he has spent working on this matter. Too often, when discussions are going on, the government has to remain silent and not interfere with negotiations, while the opposition comes forward with its interventions, talk and irrelevancies. That is behind us.

When the President of the Treasury Board rose to announce the settlement of the strike, I noticed the looks of sadness which came over the faces of some opposition members who were disappointed at the strike settlement for some short-sighted tactical reason. We must give credit to the President of the Treasury Board, and we must embark on discussions which will lead to positive suggestions on how to resolve difficult labour-management relations. We must bring about a legitimate form of settlement, one that does not impose poor conditions and low wages on the working men of this country.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, thank goodness we have the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Some hon. Members: Where is he?

Mr. Alexander: He had the interests of the Canadian people sincerely at heart when moving his motion.

Mr. Benjamin: Is this a nomination speech?

Mr. Alexander: Someone suggested that the hon. member's motion is one of the most pertinent so far to be placed before Mr. Speaker.

I listened to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board suggest that he and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) had settled this matter. I suggest he and the President of the Treasury Board were less than honest. They said that my party presents no alternatives. Let me remind this House that we have suggested the establishment of a public interest disputes commission. I don't mind the government playing games; but let it be more honest.

An hon. Member: Why didn't the minister mention the proposed commission?

Mr. Alexander: He didn't mention it because he knew I was going to.

The President of the Treasury Board said this was just a little strike. He said that it had gone on for four weeks, which was much too long. That is precisely our point. It was not a little strike, and it went on too long. That is why the hon. member for Vancouver South presented his motion earlier today. On the other hand, when we had that argument about the point of order the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) said it would not be right to speak because we might prejudice negotiations. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), said the same thing. And who was the first to get up to speak? It was the President of the Treasury Board, followed later by the Minister of Justice. Did you ever hear such hypocrisy?

Mr. Lang: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will check the record he will find that I suggested that in view of one particular strike situation it would be better to have no words exchanged. What I really did was appeal to the good sense of hon. members opposite and, of course, that appeal was misdirected.

Mr. Alexander: Before I was so rudely interrupted I was about to say that one of the prime functions of an opposition is to make the government behave. If possible, it should put forward constructive criticism as well. We are doing this, and we are doing it in the public interest. I am not standing here as any leadership contender, either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am standing here on behalf of the Canadian people who want leadership in times of industrial disruption. I recall my seatmate indicating he was concerned about the paramountcy of the public interest. Certainly we have appreciation for the collective bargaining process and the time-honoured right to strike and lock-out. But there must come a time when the public's interest is overriding and when the necessary steps to preserve it must be taken. That is why hon. members are sitting over there temporarily; it is to give leadership in that regard.

In the past several months Canada has been the victim of a succession of strikes affecting the movement of grain. This is what disturbs us. This is what, I am sure, disturbs members on the other side of the House. They know that as a result of these strikes Canada's international reputation is being ruined. They know Canada has suffered economically. Need I remind them again of the 222 grain inspectors? We hope the longshoremen will settle. Apparently the grain weighers and the samplers have settled.

What will be the consequences of these stoppages? Well, between 30 and 40 vessels are waiting in Vancouver. Some 90 shipping days have been lost. Canada is now 900,000 tons behind in grain deliveries to China from both coasts. China is now negotiating to buy one million tons of grain for 1975, and the delays I have mentioned have jeopardized this. Japan is replacing March, April and some May grain shipments by negotiating purchases from the United States and Australia. There are 22,000 boxcars sitting out on the prairies. Yet the minister says this is a little strike. This shows a callous disregard for the welfare of the Canadian people as well as for our international obligations.

What about demurrage? Members opposite play this down. The word simply means fees paid to ship owners to compensate for delays. These fees are paid ultimately by the farmers; the figure has already reached some $17 million and, as has been stated by my hon. friend from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), it could yet reach between $35 million and $40 million. Let me give you the facts, Mr. Speaker. We deal in facts on this side; we don't deal with hanky panky.

In 1971-72 demurrage fees amounted to $1,871,000. For 1972-73, the figure was $2,397,636. In 1973-74 it was $17 million. Yet the President of the Treasury Board has the gall to talk about a little strike. The effect of this strike has been damaging to the Canadian economy. Future grain markets have been jeopardized. It is time we began to take notice of where we are going. We have heard all about the collective bargaining process. We have heard all about voluntary arbitration and compulsory arbitration. All I know is that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) had better get going with his consultative process between labour, management and governments in an effort to come up with a solution.

Mr. Caccia: What is your solution?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I hear an interruption by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I should not have mentioned his constituency; I do not want to give him any credit. The member for Davenport was not in the House at the time or he would know I have already put forward our solution. You people never want to listen.

● (2220)

I stated at that time that what we need are long-term solutions to bring some stability and order to the collection, loading and movement of grain in this country. I also said there was a need to recognize the great concern of labour and management regarding increased productivity, greater efficiency and communications, all of which are related to the great grain industry.

We have a commission now, the Bayda commission, looking into these matters.

Mr. Woolliams: They would not know who you were talking about.

Mr. Alexander: They do not know too much about it at all. They defrauded the Canadian people by promising them $3 billion, and that is why they are sitting over on that side now. I just hope Mr. Justice Bayda can find some solutions to make the industry viable once again.

I also hope those of us who have the opportunity of sitting on the special joint Senate and House of Commons committee to consider the Finkelman report will be able to lend their expertise and wisdom, so that between Bayda and Finkelman we can produce some solutions to the impasse we have now reached in the collective bargaining process.

I make no bones about it; it seems to me that the party most concerned about strikes is the party which does not sit at the bargaining table. I refer to the vast majority of the Canadian people who do not belong to any big union. Something like 65 per cent of the people do not belong to a union. This is why we on this side are concerned.

I hear the hon. doctor opposite grunt, but what does he know about it? All he knows about is medicine, but he is such a nice fellow I will leave him alone.

When the government misbehaves it is up to the opposition to make it behave. This is why the hon. member for Vancouver South moved his motion today. He put the preamble showing the urgency of the matter and then moved that the House adjourn, and I am pleased to have had an opportunity to become involved in what is a very significant debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for his good work. He has proven himself.

[English]

Also he has been burned, he has been tied to the stake, he has been hanged in, all in effigy, and he has been carried around in a coffin. We have seen the hon. President of the Treasury Board suffer almost every indignity it is possible to suffer, but not once has he lost his respect for labour, which is more than I can say for some members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I feel there are many in this chamber who heartily wish there were some magic new solution, innovative and exciting, a magic, unique means by which the grievances of labour could be agreeably determined, and by which also the demands of management might be met. There are new mediation-arbitration techniques being pioneered in North America, but they are all in elementary stages of development at this time. Today in Canada at least we on this side of the House are prepared to give collective bargaining our support. The rights of labour in this country have been too painfully gained to be given away or overthrown without the very deepest of consideration by the elected officials of the government and all thoughtful Canadians.

The motion of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) is a motion of desperation. We all recognize the cause to which he has given voice. The mighty port of Vancouver is the heart of our province, and I agree it is ailing. But what should be a lifeline—

Mr. Nowlan: Where is your soul?

Mrs. Campagnolo: My soul is intact. Is yours? This lifeline of much needed grain to foreign ports has been halted. But the heart is not the only organ in the healthy body of this country. Let me tell hon. members about some other ports they have probably never heard of, in their lives. Have they ever heard of Port Alberni, Nanaimo, Powell River, Comox, Kitimat, Steward, Squamish, Masset, Burnaby, Queen Charlotte City and many more? Have they ever heard of Prince Rupert? If they were to take the time to talk to the longshoremen at those ports they would discover that while the major votes on acceptance or rejection of what we all hope is a settlement offer continue toward ratification at the end of this week, they have jumped the gun again. Even Prince Rupert will finally get the chance to vote this Saturday. We are not too unhappy about that; we are used to being left out. We are the last port to receive shipments of grain, even when Vancouver is plugged with waiting ships and facing daily mounting demurrage charges. It is still a rare ship that travels north to a harbour that is the world's third largest.

An hon. Member: Speak up, we cannot hear you.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I have lost my voice today, but I have been waiting to say this for so long that I intend to say it, whether you can hear me or not. Prince Rupert has been a port for 65 years, but became a national harbour in reality only on March 1 of this year, when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) jumped into an earth mover and turned the first sod on federal general cargo facilities in that port. It will not be too long before vessels finally learn that Prince Rupert is 500 miles closer to the Orient than Vancouver. This constitutes a saving to shipping of one day's sailing.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the north has grain to ship. But this country is not only grain, and I hope the members from the prairies in this chamber can hear me. Grain is not the only commodity we can talk about in this country. We have large resources of pulp and wood products, aluminium and copper concentrates, molybdenum, silver, jade, halibut and herring, fertilizer, and even the occasional manufactured goods manage to get shipped from our port. No, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not just grain, and neither is the west coast of B.C. Always, as in the motion before us tonight, it is grain of which the members of the House speak.

Through arbitration and mediation, through hard bargaining by labour and management as well as the government, we find at last an agreement. What do the people of B.C. say—the miners, fishermen, loggers and mill workers? They say, "What about us? What about our products? Don't we count just as much as the grain farmers? Isn't our contribution to the economy of this country just as important as theirs?"

● (2230)

The man who loads the primary products at northern British Columbia ports is just as much valued. He has to suffer a differential in his living that is practically unknown to those who live below the 53rd parallel in this country. He suffers a differential in amenities that other Canadians take for granted. His wage negotiations do not reflect the north-south division of this nation's wealth. His children have less access to education, they have fewer dentists, fewer doctors, fewer teachers and fewer professional people of all types.

The holidaying southern Canadian takes off from his home and goes 100 miles, gets in an airplane and flies away. We have to drive a thousand miles at times to get an airplane, which costs a good deal more as the distance is a good deal greater. Do you see compensation in their wage settlements for that? I suggest that you do not.

You often see southern dominated unions putting men on a northern differential or on a regional wage, but you find that often the special allowances are cancelled as a result of agreements by the unions as well as by management. Apparently these few northerners do not matter.

It is the same way when grain vessels are delayed by the process of negotiation. We then hear that all the products I have mentioned really do not matter. All the talk is then about grain. The suggestion is that we should settle the grain movement and everything will be all right. I admit that grain is very important to this country and this country would be nowhere without it, but I ask you to consider and remember that grain is not synonymous with Canada, just as Vancouver and the west coast are not synonymous with Canada.

The utilization of northern ports so much closer to Asian markets must be considered for all or a major part of new storage and handling facilities.

An hon. Member: You are losing your voice.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I don't care if I never speak here again, so just listen. Our preoccupation with grain must be transferred to equal concern for the people, east, west, north and south.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Are you talking to yourself or to me? This preoccupation with grain must be transferred to equal concern for people throughout the country. For the benefit of the workers and management we would like a better way to settle labour problems, but it is not just labour that must be held responsible. Has it ever occurred to any of my Conservative friends that once in a while the fault might be on the management side?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: We all know what would have happened if, God forbid, you were on this side. We know what would have been done to labour if the Conservatives had been in government. We know about self-interest and grain interest, and that is important, but it is not pre-eminent. Until we can devise a better way let us give this good news tonight a little endorsement. The system is imperfect, but it still works, and the right to strike is still a right in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I only wish there were more participants from the Liberal side like the hon. member who has just resumed her seat. Her speech will read well to the prairie farmers who have become angered and aggravated by the inactivity of the government. I think that when they read her speech, with a sprinkling of the others that have been made tonight, they will realize that members of parliament have a tough job here as Conservatives, particularly those from the prairies, when we have this type of attitude to buck.

The hon. lady spoke as though grain were the only thing we were concerned about. That is not the only thing we are concerned about, but it so happens that on this particular occasion there was a public service strike of blue collar workers. This was a rotating strike, but for some reason or other the only segment that did not rotate was the grain handlers' segment. It is significant for members of the opposition to point that fact out to the hon. lady and other Liberals who were not aware of the fact that the only segment that did not rotate was the grain handlers.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, tried to parley this thing into a great conflict. He tried to make the House think there were actually two strikes in Canada at this time, and that there had been two strikes all along. The grain weighers and samplers have been effectively on strike since February 7, whereas the longshoremen have only been on strike for the past week or so.

The Minister of Justice spoke about what one must consider as the national interest, and he suggested that solutions must be fair. He said that above all Canada must remain a dependable supplier. I would ask the hon. minister to take into consideration what is in the national interest. Back on August 31, 1972, the government brought in Bill C-231 in recognition of the fact that the national interest was being endangered by the longshoremen on the west coast who should be put back to work. That bill dealt with that strike. The then Minister of Labour, now the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), had this to say when introducing that bill:

> But there are occasions when parliament must deal with situations, when the full resort to economic warfare by strike or lockout so impairs the ability of others to carry on their activities that it can be said to be against the national interest—

The Liberals do recognize that, at times when economic warfare carried on by strike does impair the ability of others to carry out their activities, this affects national interest. That was on August 31, 1972, and is history. We have to determine now what is in the national interest.

We are concerned when Canada imports far more than it exports. We realize that our exports play an important part in allowing Canada to meet its balance of payments in order that we can continue to enjoy our standard of living. In a recent document by the Bank of Canada, namely, its annual report for 1974, we find this statement:

> A good deal will depend on what happens abroad, for Canada cannot be expected to regain its economic health and vigour without an upturn in economic activity in the United States and in other important markets for Canadian exports.

The entire report, particularly the first 10 pages, suggests that Canada's exports are of vital importance to our wellbeing. The striking grain weighers number 40 people. We had to bring about a settlement that is fair to them and in the national interest. Those 40 people have tied up the grain movement for better than four weeks. We have to weigh the rights of those 40 people against the harm they have done to the total economy.

There is an interesting point which has not been referred to tonight, and I should like the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) to listen and learn a little bit about grain. When grain is sold on long-term contracts it is priced at the time of delivery. We have been experiencing a falling market, and grain prices have dropped $1.50 since January 1. Some members of this House, even on the government side, have suggested that we have lost 50 million bushels in sales. We have lost well over $50 million on the sales we should have been making. Those 40 people tied up the movement of grain and cost the prairie farmers well over $200 million when you total up the loss of sales, the demurrage charges and the depreciating price of grain.

It is interesting to note the following which appeared in the Globe and Mail of February 25, 1975:

> Canada has the grain, said Mr. Lang. The question is: 'How easily can we get the farmers to deliver it'?

The whole article encourages farmers to deliver grain. Then we have these headlines which appeared in the Financial Post for March 15:

> Strikes force Wheat Board to Discourage Grain Planting.

I am reading merely the headline. Certainly some people thought the national interest was affected. What made them think that? How did they reach that conclusion? In the 33 weeks since the current crop year began, for 11 weeks grain shipments have been held up. There have been only two occasions since August of 1973 when there has not been a tie-up of ships at the Vancouver port. No one can suggest that that is a smooth handling system when one realizes there have been only two occasions when ships have not been tied up, and when there has not been a backlog at the port of Vancouver.

Mr. Harrold, chairman of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee and President of the Alberta Wheat Pool, said that the board may be forced to limit future sales through west coast ports to 20 million bushels a month or less. The average movement in the past few years has been 30 million bushels a month. Mr. Turner, the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, says that prairie grain movement is the worst in the past four years. One of the largest grain handling agencies on the prairies says that the grain movement is the worst it has been in the past four years.

Surely it should be apparent to almost everybody that it is in the national interest for us in this House of Commons to urge some kind of action on the part of the government, not only in settling the strike which apparently has been settled but, if necessary, not to hesitate for another four weeks to settle the strike which may or may not be voted on tomorrow. One could go on and on in this regard. We note from the Globe and Mail of March 18 that 82 vessels must wait a minimum of three more days because of the strike at Vancouver. Certainly that is the largest armada that has been gathered in any port since World War II.

Admittedly only 40 of those vessels may be engaged in carrying wheat or grain because the other 42 may be involved in carrying containers, lumber, and some of the other things mentioned by the hon. member for Skeena. Surely this must constitute some need for government action. One of the largest ships has been there for over a month waiting for grain to be loaded. This is grain destined for Bangladesh which is badly in need of food. In fact thousands of people are starving in that country. Surely it is in the national interest for the opposition to be concerned about this matter.

I notice the members of the other opposition parties have been pretty silent. There are no members of the New Democratic Party in the House. We are working overtime and perhaps they are not getting paid for overtime. Most of the time they profess to be the great saviours for the starving people throughout the world. Were they concerned about that vessel being held up? Apparently they were not. Not one of them has spoken in this debate tonight. They have all gone home. Is this an indication of how much interest they have in the welfare of the farmers or the plight of the starving people throughout the world? It is only a quarter to eleven. Quite often we work this late. I am shocked that they would leave so early and take no part in this debate. They are not concerned about the national interest. They are not concerned about the starving people of Bangladesh or the tie-up on the west coast. They are only interested in their political well-being, which has been severely shocked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, we are not of those who asked that this debate be held. To my mind, the ministers and the government assumed their responsibilities by settling the two-week old strike. I therefore fail to understand the hon. member when he says there is no minister in the House this evening—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hon. member knows this is not a question of privilege. He is entering a debate.

Mr. Horner: I did not mention that cabinet ministers have left, but it appears to me that the hon. member has a very thin skin and a very weak stomach, and he is feeling very put out because the cabinet ministers have left the House and he has to make an apology for them. I will forgive him for making the apology because I suppose I would feel as bad as he does if I were on that side of the House. Speaking of the negligence of members of the cabinet, there is no truer friend of the farmer than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Here is what he had to say in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan is a long way from Ottawa and that is the reason he must speak strongly to the farmers. I have before me an article which states:

> In Saskatchewan this week an angry grain farmer warned Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan that farmers will have to take action into their own hands if the government does not end the strike by federal blue-collar workers that has halted the shipment of grain (as well as mail and airline service) across the country.
> 'If you can't do it we will just have to take the grain from the elevators to the ships ourselves'" he said.

This is the Minister of Agriculture. He is great, even in Saskatchewan, but he is hardly visible here tonight.

An hon. Member: He had two standing ovations.

Mr. Horner: I see the little boy of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board speaking up from the back benches. We know him on this side of the House as the mini minister. Here is another headline which appeared in the Financial Post of March 15, 1975. It states:

> West Coast Ports Again Hit by Prevailing Labour Gales.

This affects all ports and all shipments of all goods all down the line. Here is another headline:

> Strikes Force Wheat Board to Discourage Grain Planting.

Again we find another:

> Strike Effects Go Very Deep.

This article states:

> While this is madness in a world beset by energy shortages and hunger, such strikes are exceedingly dangerous for Canadians. The closing of the ports for the fifth time in 10 years is very effectively scuppering Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier—

Then there is reference to page 12 where there is a lengthy argument on the subject. Certainly one could quote articles day in and day out on this subject. Now I should like to quote from the Free Press Weekly for March 15, 1975. It states:

> Forrest Hetland, commissioner with the Canadian Grain Commission, may have best expressed sentiments throughout the grains industry when he said, "I am the most depressed person in all Canada today".
> "Canada's reputation has gone down, down, down ... it's the worst it's ever been since I've been here.
>
> It's a God-awful situation".

● (2250)

I believe he was appointed six years ago. That is what a commissioner appointed by the minister said. He must have thought there was a national issue here. He must have thought the country was affected by it because he spoke out loud and clear, even though he was a civil servant handling and grading grain for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is in charge of the Wheat Board. I do not know what kind of justice the minister hands out and to whom he deals it out, but it was certainly not justice to the prairie farmers on this occasion.

The article then reads:

> Canadian Wheat Board offices were deluged with messages from countries that could no longer accept apologies from the central marketing agency—

The Canadian Wheat Board is the central marketing agency for farmers' grain and they have become a very respected agency throughout the world. But this is what they said on March 5, and I am reading from the March 15 issue of the Free Press Weekly:

> —grain orders and incoming ships were diverted from the paralysed port of Vancouver—

I cannot imagine why the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) has not expressed concern. I know she is a member representing the northern part of British Columbia, but surely the antagonism between the north and the south of British Columbia is not so great that she cannot share part of the responsibility and concern for the southern part of that province. The Wheat Board said, further:

—Japanese shipping firms attempted to pull their ships out of Vancouver but were blocked by picket lines, and spokesmen for large, international trading houses in New York called Canada's performance "just unbelievable".

I think, also, there are many prairie farmers who believe that this government's performance is just unbelievable. I am very pleased that we on this side of the House initiated this debate, and because of that we can take some credit for spurring on a settlement of a strike which has lasted five full weeks. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board asked what alternatives the opposition has. It seems to me that the Liberal bank of ideas has run dry. It is they who are in power; they are supposed to have all the facts. My friend here says they had lots of promises in July. Yes, they seemed to have; but we on this side of the House realize that those promises were hollow.

They even had a transportation policy. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board was going to do away with the Crowsnest pass rates, but now the government realizes that with an election coming up in Saskatchewan it should not try to eliminate them. So the minister shelved this proposal and told the Saskatchewan people that the Crowsnest pass rates are here to stay for all of 1975. This is the great reassurance which they give in the hope they will win another election.

The minister asks, what are the alternatives? I have already said that many people, many marketing agencies and government officials in charge of handling Canadian grain believe that the national interest has been, and is being, affected by the inactivity of this government. A settlement must be fair. In this case, 40 employees tied up the whole western economy for five weeks. This is hardly fair. The government should have acted long before it did. It is hardly fair that there can be a rotating strike of airport workers, a rotating strike of snow removal crews, but not a rotating strike of grain weighers. They wanted to affect the largest possible segment of the economy because they wanted action from somebody. They had to wait a long time to get action from this government.

I believe that an alternative would be to establish a labour settlement commission which would attempt to settle a strike prior to the expiry of a contract. We do not have to wait until everyone is on strike before we realize that somebody will be out of work if we do not get them back to work. Surely we are educated enough to be able to communicate with one another prior to the expiry date of a contract. The labour settlement commission could bring in a report and the matter could be settled in time. Parliament would know whether that settlement was satisfactory and whether there would be a legal or an illegal strike.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is usual or traditional in certain circumstances to begin one's remarks with a reference to being pleased to take part in a debate, or words of that kind. In fact, I have used those expressions myself on occasion. But I am not pleased at having to take part in this discussion this evening, and I doubt if many hon. members can really say they are pleased to be here discussing this particular subject. This is not because the subject is unimportant—it is vitally important—and it is not because we are unhappy with the settlement that, fortunately, was reached earlier today, because we are delighted with the success of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) in that respect, but we are not happy with the procedure this evening because, once again, we find ourselves dangerously close to a situation where parliament might be called upon to legislate the conclusion of an industrial dispute. That would be a most unhappy turn of events which I do not think any member of this House would welcome.

We have heard tonight, from other hon. members, some of the kinds of damage which these disputes involving the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the Treasury Board and the longshoremen on the west coast have caused—damage such as demurrage charges which farmers will have to bear, damage such as lost opportunities to make sales during the time of the shut-down, damage possibly to our reputation as a reliable grain supplier, the congestion which is now in our system and which may take some time to unclog, deferred contracts and the problem of a large carry-over at the end of the year. Those are real problems which are particularly acute for the western grain producers who, I am happy to say, are represented in great numbers in the constituency of Assiniboia which I have the honour to represent in this House.

Let me tell the House of a statement which was prepared this afternoon by the board of directors of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The preamble to that statement is most important because it expresses the attitude of concern in western Canada. The board of directors said:

Provincewide anger and frustration over strikes in Canada are growing in intensity as farmers see clearly the devastating effects labour disputes have on our whole economy. We have been holding numerous public meetings throughout the province and these have been attended by thousands of farmers and numerous non-farmers as well. At every single meeting deep concern has been expressed about Canada's labour situation particularly with the disputes that have virtually stopped the flow of grain out of the country. Lost sales means lost revenue to farmers and other sectors of the economy.

That is a portion of what the board of directors had to say this afternoon in reference to the particular problem which was, fortunately, settled earlier today. It is an important expression of opinion because in this country we have a tremendous problem. I hazard to suggest that the matter of labour-management negotiations and industrial dispute settlements is probably the biggest challenge facing all levels of government federal, provincial and municipal as well as the private sector for at least the next year and a half. We are not happy that this challenge is again before the nation and this parliament. We are fortunate to have tonight a final settlement of the Public Service Alliance dispute, and hopefully within 48 hours we will have a final settlement with the longshoremen.

I want to devote a few minutes to the topic I spoke about some time ago in this House and which I know caught the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who initiated the discussion this evening. I refer to a remark I made during my first speech in this House. That was last October, on the occasion when the House of Commons was considering the grain handlers' dispute in Vancouver. At that time I said, and I will repeat it tonight, that there must be a better answer and let us work to find that better way. The crucial issue is just that: what is the better way; what is the alternative?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is the better way?

Mr. Goodale: I welcome the interjection by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on that point. We are all striving to achieve a better way. We hear few real answers from hon. members opposite other than sloganeering and critical harangues. Others could be more helpful in putting forward positive ideas. That is what the efforts now under way to reach a reasonable, national consensus on this issue are all about. That is what the Finkleman report is all about. That is what the Bayda commission in Vancouver is all about, and that is what the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool was all about this afternoon when its board of directors made the statement I read earlier. I would like to read the concluding sentence from that statement:

> —we would welcome the calling of a general conference of government, labour and industry representatives to determine the means to improve the collective bargaining process in Canada.

I would like to associate myself with the sentiments expressed earlier this evening by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) when he called for the quest for an alternate system of dispute settlement which would not simply outlaw the right to strike by making it illegal or simply removing it. That is a rather simple solution which just will not work. Rather, we must develop what he referred to as a credible and effective mechanism which will render the strike weapon unnecessary. Simply rendering strikes illegal will not solve the problem; we must go to the root and render them unnecessary.

I would like to offer a specific proposal which I hope will commend itself to members of this House and to the government. I ask that we immediately seek out all parties which have any effect on or association with the grain handling industry—because it is a sensitive and very important industry—and seek from them a specific and concrete agreement and undertaking. Perhaps we can propose to the industry that grain handling be a special case or a test case. I think the expression of opinion this afternoon from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool might be an indication that the parties in the grain industry would be willing to go along with such a suggestion. In a concentrated effort we could, with good will on both sides, without sloganeering, politicking or haranguing, experiment with alternate forms of dispute settlement over a specific period of time.

We would have a genuine national experiment with other ways of dispute settlement so that we would not be confronted with work stoppages. We would achieve agreement on that matter at the outset and then work with alternate methods. We could offer our farmers and customers greater assurance that "the grain will in fact go through." Our experience with grain could lead the way to a new regime. This experiment could point the way to a new establishment which would be a credible and realistic alternative in which both sides to a dispute could have confidence, in which the public could have confidence and in which we could all place our faith and trust so that damaging work stoppages in the future would be seen to be unnecessary.

As I say, and as other hon. members on this side of the House have said this evening—I hope the sentiment is general, and I suspect that it is despite some of the superficial comments to the contrary—it is not good enough to write some fancy slogan or punitive law on the wall and say, "Thou shalt not strike," because strikes will occur and they will be that much more difficult to deal with because they will be illegal strikes. We have to find the consensus, the basic foundation of opinion so we can find a way to make strikes, not necessarily illegal but very definitely unnecessary in this country so that work stoppages which damage so many other innocent people will be unnecessary.

I hope this suggestion will commend itself to hon. members of this House and I hope we can make use of the very sensitive and important grain industry as a place to start that great experiment.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), I am not pleased to take part in this debate, but I do appreciate the opportunity of representing the many farmers and grain producers in my constituency on such a serious matter. I was a little bit disturbed when the House met this evening to hear an hon. member opposite rise and try to prevent us from having this debate. Referring to this debate, I read Standing Order 26(16)(a) which provides:

> The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration—

Certainly there is indication that the strike has been settled and that the grain will perhaps start moving, but there are many other problems in the immediate future which will create a delay in the movement of grain. I was very disappointed to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stand up and try to prevent us from proceeding with this debate. It is also disappointing to see that there is only one member of the New Democratic Party in the House tonight, and that there is present no cabinet minister.

Mr. Benjamin: It's an even fight; don't worry about it.

Mr. Neil: I have been here since 1972. The government is supposed to have the answers to all these problems, but every time it is backed into a corner it asks what the opposition would do.

Mr. Benjamin: You haven't told us yet.

Mr. Neil: The government has its mandate from the people. It made its representations to the people. It has done none of the things it said it would do. It continues to tell the opposition that it does not know what to do, and asks what we would do. If the government does not have the guts or the intelligence to make a decision, certainly it is time it resigned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: I am pleased, however, to see that two of the Liberal representatives from the province of Saskatchewan are interested enough in this debate and in the handling of grain to be in attendance tonight. This tie-up of grain is of great concern to all farmers in the west and to all businessmen. Indeed, it is an important matter as far as the whole economy of our country is concerned. I recall coming back last fall after the election and participating in the debate on Bill C-12 which legislated the grain handlers back to work. I re-read the speech which I gave at that time—

● (2310)

An hon. Member: I bet you enjoyed it.

Mr. Neil: I did enjoy it, but I felt sad. I found in the speech at page 218 of Hansard a quotation from the Globe and Mail Report on Business for Friday, October 4, 1974. This is what it said:

> Japan has been forced to buy spot cargoes of wheat at a premium from the United States because of the six-week old grain handlers' strike in Vancouver, according to the Canadian Wheat Board.
>
> The board said yesterday that the amounts of wheat Japan was forced to buy amounted to hundreds of thousands of tons.
> The grain handlers' strike would have caused even more damage to Canada's reputation as a reliable exporter but for the fact there is so little available grain in the world that importers have had to stick with this country.

If the Board were concerned about Canada's reputation as a grain exporter in October, 1974, what is its feeling today? Agriculture is one of Canada's most important industries. It is the lifeblood of every community in the prairie provinces, and it has a great effect on the balance of payments. There is a spinoff to every other industry in Canada, machinery manufacturing in the east, automobile manufacturing, truck manufacturing and many other things. It is an industry that is persistently plagued with strikes.

Since the beginning of the crop year, August 1, 1974, the port of Vancouver has been shut down 35 per cent of the time. We have defaulted on contracts and have been called upon to pay penalties to the importing countries. The amount of these penalties are not known and the producer may never know them.

On Tuesday, March 11, I put the following question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board which appears at page 3976 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. On March 3 I asked the minister whether delays in moving grain on the west coast had resulted in Canada being called upon to pay sums of money under the penalty clauses in contracts entered into for the sale of grain, and the minister said he would look into the matter on an up to date basis. Is he now in a position to give an up to date answer?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, needless to say, there are many contracts and the details are rather voluminous. The matter is also a very complex legal one. Perhaps it might be amenable to a discussion between the hon. member and myself, which I am prepared to have at this time.

I had a discussion with the minister two days later and he said that there were problems; that we had been called upon to pay penalties to some of the importing countries under our contract. He said it was a rather ticklish matter and a complex situation. He said that if he were to tell me and the House the amount of these penalties it would prejudice our position as a grain exporter. I appreciate that fact, Mr. Speaker, and I would not want to see our position prejudiced. But at some point, Mr. Speaker, the grain producer in Canada is entitled to know what this tie-up of grain by the strike has cost him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: We are entitled to know what the Canadian Wheat Board will be called upon to pay in penalties under contracts and demurrage. I am sure the figure will be staggering.

Mr. Woolliams: Forty million dollars.

Mr. Neil: At least $40 million. And what about lost sales? I am sure we will never know the extent of our lost sales in the last few months. I know the Americans are picking up sales as a result of our default. The report of the National Association of Wheat Growers dated March 7, 1975, in Washington has this to say:

> Canadian grain movement has been completely halted by grain handler strikes at government elevators and a walk-out by west coast longshoremen. Canada is already way behind in meeting scheduled export shipments, and the continuing labour disputes have caused a back up of 20,000 loaded grain cars at west coast ports and idled over 30 vessels at Vancouver, B.C.
> Shifts to U.S. wheat will be one significant result of the Canadian difficulties, and western wheat associates announced this week that Japan will purchase an additional six million bushels of U.S. wheat for shipment during March-April because of the tie-up.

There is another aspect of the tie-up, Mr. Speaker. There are indications that certain importing countries will be calling upon us to deliver grain through eastern Canadian ports. A recent newspaper report indicates that the most recent contract that China has with Canada calls for 40 per cent of that contract to be delivered through eastern Canadian ports. I tried to find out from the minister if other countries were requiring similar delivery arrangements, and I put the following question to him yesterday as recorded at page 4200 of Hansard:

> Apart from the decision of the government of China to insist on deliveries of 40 per cent of its recent contract through the eastern ports, have other customers recently required that a portion of their grain shipments be sent through the eastern ports?

The minister answered:

> The story about China having required delivery of 40 per cent of its supplies through eastern ports was inaccurate.

The minister did not answer my question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the figure of 40 per cent is not accurate, but what is the figure? What other countries are calling upon Canada to deliver grain through ports other than the port of Vancouver? The producer is entitled to know this.

I was interested in a report which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on February 26, 1975, headlined "The port of Vancouver will die . . ." The article quotes Mr. Fred Spoke, manager of the port of Vancouver, as saying:

> The port of Vancouver, biggest grain outlet in the world has "a grave obligation to a needy and hungry world . . . it should be allowed to live up to its stature."

He went on to say:

> Buyers are getting very apprehensive . . . and it's about time the public raised its voice. It's a horrendous situation, incredible. The United Kingdom used to be considered the worst country for labour relations—now we've apparently stolen the crown from them.

Then he said:

We have very, very good facilities to export commodities, the presence of the Amoco is proof of that, but we have never been able to live up to our capacity because of circumstances beyond our control.

The article contains another interesting statement made by Mr. Stanley Reid, president of the central division of the Canadian International Freight Forwarders Association, who said:

The port of Vancouver, I don't think there's any doubt, will die.

What happens if the port of Vancouver dies? What will it mean to grain producers? Mr. Speaker, it will mean higher transportation costs on the export of grain to the Pacific rim countries. It will mean lower prices and smaller incomes for producers. It will mean that our deliveries of export grain are limited to the period during which the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway system is open, and during the time the Churchill system is open.

The producers of grain are in a strange situation. They are paid the initial price and then wait a year for the final payment. The producer has no control over what the final payment will be. He does not control the movement of grain, its export price, or the handling and export costs. Those are factors beyond his control.

Strikes take place with great frequency in the grain handling business, but the producer cannot do anything about them. He takes no part in collective bargaining, yet pays the increased costs when collective bargaining has been finalized. He pays the cost of penalties resulting from breach of contract, and pays costs of demurrage. He is simply a pawn.

As I said, agriculture is the most important industry in Canada. If we are to have a viable industry and viable economy, it must remain one of the leading industries in Canada. Before entering the House this evening I read again the speeches of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and of the Minister of Labour, made in October last year when this House settled the grain handlers' strike. I found it interesting to note that the ministers in both those speeches simply recited the history of the strike, and not once did they mention that the strike was being settled because it was in the national interest. According to all indications, the settlement was politically expedient. The government had decided that the time had come to settle the strike, and it settled it on grounds of political expediency.

To me the national interest is all-important. While I believe in the inalienable right of workers to strike—

Mr. Benjamin: You want to take it away.

Mr. Neil: —I think the public interest is more important than the right to strike. We cannot let strikes upset our economy and create chaos.

Apparently the west coast strike has been settled, but I anticipate further problems in the immediate future. Certainly in this enlightened day and age we should resolve our labour disputes without resorting to strikes. We must invite the government, industry and labour to co-operate and arrive at a solution.

Ours is a great country. Canada is one of the finest countries in the world. We must solve the problem of strikes and labour unrest; otherwise we will destroy our country.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, having listened carefully to members on the government side and members of the official opposition, I could not help sympathizing with them. When they find the economic system they believe in and support collapsing around their ears, they immediately seek scapegoats.

If you are a Liberal or Conservative member from an urban centre, you blame those darned farmers; if you are a Liberal or Conservative member from the prairies, you blame those darned labourers. You know, this reminds me of the days of the kings, the dukes, the lords and the czars. Their motto was, divide and rule. If you keep different groups fighting each other you will rule them, you can win elections, or win enough seats to form the official opposition or be the government. You can speak out of both sides of your mouth, or speak with forked tongues. Such people speak with hot mouths but cold hearts. They have been doing this since 1867.

I admire the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) for saying what she said. I sympathize with her. The ailment with her voice, although I did not tell her, is an ailment common to people in our occupation. It is known as preacher's throat. The only known cure is keeping your mouth shut—but she and I have failed in this. If the hon. member for Skeena would address the remarks she made tonight, which I thought were excellent, to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and to the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan, I should be most grateful, as would be all the farmers and workers in Saskatchewan. If she would do that she would do a great service for industrial peace in western Canada, if nowhere else.

Members on the government side, members of the opposition, of my party and of the Créditiste party should look at what our society has done for decades, that is, at how we treat people with high incomes as opposed to how we treat people with low incomes. I ask the hon. member for Skeena, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) to consider why employees of the government of Canada, that is, of the people of Canada, who earn low incomes are acting as they are. Let them consider what causes strikes.

Who are the people who go on strike. Well, they are ordinary people. They have wives, children and mortgages up to their eyebrows. They see that the government allows deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and executive assistants, whose Ph.D. thesis was on the sex life of the date Palm, salary increases ranging from $6,000 to $10,000 a year. These were granted without bargaining. A union was not involved. Actually I don't know if the people concerned even asked for as much as they got. But the Treasury Board, the hon. member for Skeena, the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley acquiesced in those increases. Those people were given increases equivalent to what some of the people on strike in Canada earn in a whole year. If hon. members opposite wonder why government employees disobey the law, let them bear in mind the hypocrisy of the government which says that if your income is high, your salary shall be increased by $8,000 or $10,000 a year, and you will be paid even more for overtime. Executive assistants are to be paid money on top of their increases for overtime.

On the other hand the man who cleans the airport runway, or samples grain or weighs grain, is to get an increase that does not even allow him to catch up with the increased cost of living brought about by inflation. People like that are the first victims of this so-called free enterprise society you all advocate, and you wonder why they will not stand for it.

Mr. Woolliams: I remind the hon. member that many socialist countries do not allow strikes.

Mr. Benjamin: I now want to speak about what people do for their livelihood, whether they be farmers or labourers. I should like to encourage members to my right and across the way not to make speeches which continue the divide and rule principle which has been followed for so long by the old line parties.

● (2330)

Mr. Woolliams: You never do that in the NDP, of course.

Mr. Benjamin: It has not done very much to meet the situation which has existed for many years. I would remind the House that there are many members of the work force who are the sons and daughters of farmers. Farmers are fair people. They are not angry at workers. They are angry at a system which forces them into positions such as they have taken in recent weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: I always thought farmers were in favour of free enterprise.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member for Assiniboia, and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board want to know what we propose. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) is partly right when he says the official opposition need not propose anything because, after all, they have not been called upon to govern. That is a Conservative problem. I suspect it is difficult for them to find any proposals to make. May I suggest three or four things which, by the way, do not originate with me; they have been proposed by members of my party since the thirties.

Mr. Woolliams: The old Fabian philosophy.

Mr. Benjamin: To be specific, if you want genuine collective bargaining—

Mr. Woolliams: Wipe out free enterprise.

Mr. Benjamin: I know this is a bit like curling behind the glass because the dispute which encouraged this debate has now been settled, but for a future occasion the government might keep in mind that when the parties are bargaining and reach an impasse, it might be as well to exercise leadership and call for voluntary binding arbitration. This might have worked during the past week. For the future, in the case of the public service, of people who work in ports such as Vancouver, and who share a common interest, the government might suggest that the unions concerned should get together to see there was the same expiry date on contracts. This could avoid the problem of possible strikes every three weeks because a different union is involved.

Mr. Woolliams: Do you think they would agree to that?

Mr. Benjamin: Might I remind the House that this kind of leadership came first from the trade union movement. The longshoremen wanted this years ago but the government and employers did not move on it.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

Mr. Benjamin: The trade unions made that suggestion years ago, but it has never been taken up by the employers or by the government.

Mr. Woolliams: Or by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

Mr. Benjamin: Well, if you can continue to divide the population you can rule them. You can say one thing in Ontario to working people if you are a member of the Conservative party, and something else to farmers.

Mr. Woolliams: You mean the NDP.

Mr. Benjamin: I have made no bones as to how I feel on this issue. The farmers of Regina-Lake Centre know how I stand.

Mr. Woolliams: You mean, how you sided.

Mr. Benjamin: They disagree with me at times but I think at least they have some respect for my position. They know where I stand. But when a Conservative goes into Regina-Lake Centre he talks about the terrible union fellows; when the same Conservative hits Hamilton he tells the workers how farmers get dry benefits and wet benefits at their expense. Even the newspapers do that sort of thing in their editorials.

Mr. Darling: Oh, come off it, Les.

Mr. Woolliams: This is what they call political morality.

Mr. Benjamin: This debate provides an opportunity for all of us to examine better and different ways of resolving these disputes, something we have all been worrying about.

Mr. Woolliams: You are in favour of strikes.

Mr. Benjamin: I have suggested one way. There is another idea I should like to put forward. We are not out of the woods yet. There are the grain weighers and samplers in Thunder Bay. They happen to be included in the general trades group of the Public Service Alliance. I think they should be classified under the Canadian Grains Commission.

If the grain weighers and samplers have fallen behind the longshoremen and the grain handlers the government could give leadership to include those groups in discussions so that they could go to the government or the employers with a joint proposal. After all, these workers share a common interest. When a number of workers are doing substantially the same job and one group gets more than another, a problem is bound to arise, and this is an area where constructive proposals could be made by the people who sit on the Treasury Board.

Mr. Woolliams: What would you propose?

Mr. Benjamin: I am not particularly interested in what the hon. member for Calgary North wants to know about how I think or feel. I cannot care less about what he thinks or knows about what I feel, because I part company with him irrevocably about his 1890 attitudes and concepts. This is an opportunity, even if we go on until breakfast time, to come up with ideas and proposals which will substantially reduce the cost of strikes.

May I return to the point I made earlier and quote a world-famous historical figure.

An hon. Member: Is it Karl Marx?

● (2340)

Mr. Benjamin: In our thoughts about workers, employers, and fair pay for fair work, he was the gentleman who in 1853 said that labour is prior and superior to capital, and that without labour capital cannot function.

An hon. Member: Was that Abe Lincoln?

Mr. Benjamin: That is what he said the second time he ran for the Senate. I urge my hon. friend behind the curtain to read about Abraham Lincoln, who said that without labour capital cannot function.

If those of my hon. friends in this House really believe in the free enterprise system and want to make it function, they had better listen to someone like Abraham Lincoln. He was 100 years ahead of some of the members who sit in this House. Every time I listen to some of my friends in the Conservative and Liberal parties I feel they are trying to prove Karl Marx was right when he said capitalism will destroy itself. For 100 years in Canada both the Liberal and Conservative parties have been trying to prove that he was right. They still seem to think that the owners and proprietors of capital have the final and only say about how people shall earn their living. They do not even want to prevent a totalitarian system. Some of the remarks that I heard this evening could be attributed to Mussolini in the 1920's.

I know that some of my friends in the Conservative and Liberal parties in the House are as good or better democrats than I am, but let them be careful and think about what they say. Do not pay lip service to collective bargaining and the right to strike. Do not play upon the fears, worries and hardships of the farmers at the expense of the workers. This does not do any favour to any decent, civilized society.

Whether any of us win or lose elections is not the point. What counts is the contribution we make here to resolving our problems. At the rate we are going the difficulties we have had over the past few months are going to get worse, but we have an opportunity tonight and over the next two or three weeks to take some action.

The government does not need to ask the members of the opposition what ideas they have because we have given them to the government lots of times. I am not saying we are 100 per cent right, no one is 100 per cent right—or wrong for that matter. I remind the hon. member for Skeena that she should get in touch with the leader of the Liberal party of Saskatchewan and get him to keep his big mouth shut in order to make a good contribution to the settlement of industrial strife in this country. That would be very helpful. You cannot have Liberals in Saskatchewan saying one thing and Liberals in Ottawa saying something else.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The Liberals in British Columbia are doing all right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the late hour and so as not to give too heavy a load to the employees of the House of Commons, I shall cut short the comments that I had intended to make during this debate.

However, I am convinced that the chair acted wisely this afternoon in allowing tonight's debate. First of all, this gave us the opportunity to witness an excellent procedural debate which was, in my opinion, most interesting, and which can inspire us in the future in a similar situation.

Despite the announcement that the conflict is settled, the chair allowed this debate to be held. This is evidence of the great freedom which exists in this institution. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) is not in his seat, and I understand him, and still congratulate him for having settled the conflict. I hope that the settlement will not be temporary but lasting. I give him the credit he deserves because when the minister is not successful, he is charged with not having done his job. As he has been successful today, I believe that we should tell him to use the same formula to settle the other conflicts which exist in our country and greatly perturb our economy.

The official opposition, on the other hand, congratulates itself for having forced the government to act more quickly. I am convinced that the opposition is right because the role of members of Parliament is to be interested in all the problems and the whole administration of our country. In our institution, some members sit on the government side and others on the opposition side. I believe that every member, on whatever side he sits, if he does his job and is really interested in the affairs of his country, greatly helps the government administer the affairs of Canada.

I have always believed and I am ever more convinced, Mr. Speaker, that inflation is at the root of many ills in Canada, that it gives rise to work stoppages because the workers do not have a sufficient income to meet their commitments. So they ask for higher wages because prices have risen, and because prices have risen the workers again ask for better wages because the cost of living has gone up. I do not believe that this is a solution. If it were, we would have solved our problems long ago. But one senses that the situation is worsening day by day. If one compares the figures provided by Statistics Canada on gross national product for the year 1974, in constant dollars, that represents $139 billion today, but in comparison with 1961 it is only $69 billion. That is a typical example of what inflation can do. That information comes from Statistics Canada.

● (2350)

Getting back directly to the motion, if the copy I have in my hand is correct, it reads: "The present work stoppages which have ended all grain shipments from Canada affecting grain deliveries to all foreign countries, creating increasing unemployment." I am convinced that is also true because all work stoppages check economic activity in several sectors. Industries feel the effects, layoffs increase, and automatically the whole economy of our country is affected. It goes on: "The loss of orders of grain and the grave potential for the loss of foreign grain customers generally."

I listened carefully earlier to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who spoke strongly about the merits of western grain producers and their problems. I congratulate him on that, and I agree with what he said. I too admit that western grain producers contribute for a large part to the gross national product of this country, the increase in the standard of living of Canadians, and also to helping those countries which lack food and whose populations are starving. Thanks to our very productive soil and western grain producers Canada can afford to help developing countries so they can survive and continue to develop. In Canada, there is another area known as the east. Parliament must deal with the problems of western Canada; it has the duty to do so, but it must also be concerned about those of eastern Canada. In the east, there is now a conflict that affects the movement of feed grains towards the east, and which is of great concern to the producers of that area. I brought this situation to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) yesterday. I have received many telegrams. Here is one, among others:

Feed grain situation precarious—Limited quantities in Quebec elevators—Certain shortage within ten days unless blue-collar strike settled—Request immediate settlement.

In other words, those producers are asking their member of parliament to point out the problems to this House. That is what I am doing and I hope the ministers will take this situation into account. I therefore urge the President of the Treasury Board to use the same recipe that solved the conflict in Vancouver, that Canada's eastern producers not suffer too much from the conflict.

If grains are not brought in sufficient quantities to the elevators of eastern Canada, people will fight to get grain at any price; production costs are going to increase, which may easily drive pork producers out of business, resulting in the same kind of bankruptcies as last year or two years ago.

Madam Speaker, if I insisted on informing the House and the government of the kind of situation which prevails in eastern Canada, it is because it is directly related to what happens now in western Canada. And if a settlement was reached, I think the same efforts should be made to find a solution to the work stoppage which paralyzes grain movements before it is too late. I heard moments ago members saying with reason that problems are left to aggravate, thus making it difficult to solve them. I am perfectly aware that governing no longer is a sinecure today. It is not easy either, with the current spirit among people, with all those invitations, on the right and on the left, to demonstrate, sometimes with reason, but sometimes also unreasonably. People seem to be willing to demonstrate for demonstrating is sake, therefore upsetting managers and leading them really sometimes to wonder whether people are acting seriously or not. That is why it has become increasingly difficult to manage. Therefore, the government and Parliament must be much more careful than ever. They must always be on the look out for possible conflicts to try and locate them right from the beginning in order to bring in solutions before the situation gets worse. I think that is the way Canadians immagine the Canadian Parliament, trying to find means of avoiding the worst and solving problems which they could not avoid. I think this is the working pattern we should consider in Parliament, whatever party we belong to. Moments ago I heard the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) wondering about the silence of members who sit in this part of the House, Social Credit members. I shall tell him this: We cannot all talk together, we have to wait until we get the floor. He can be sure that we from eastern Canada are deeply concerned by all the problems occurring in the west, because we are interdependent in Parliament. We have the same responsibilities toward the people of the west as those in the east. Such is my position, this is how I have always seen things and I will continue to see them. I want mutual respect to exist both east and west.

Owing to the serious conditions and the meetings which eastern members have held in recent days with milk producers, we note that they seem dissatisfied and justly so, because production costs are increasing. They feel compelled to ask again the government to adjust the price of manufacturing milk at the level of production costs.

In my opinion, to avoid another problem, we shall have to take necessary measures to meet their demands. I am not one of those who are scared by threats and I have never been taken in by them. But it did not take me long at those meetings to realize that producers have serious problems they are unable to solve. They need the help of the government and they need it badly to know the contents of the new government policy which will take effect next April 1.

Having analysed with them the production costs, I think their demands of $11.60 per hundred weight are totally justified. At the same time, I should like to make a very practical proposal to the government, so as not to overburden consumers, low income families and workers who in most cases already have too much to pay.

There was once in Canada a policy of butter subsidy. I had that experience and benefited from it like other people my age. Well, if this policy was good then, I wonder why it should not be good now. Yet, such formulas must be used, so that some part of the population is not penalized at the expense of another. Producers and consumers will have to learn to live together and stop fighting and accusing each other. They will have to get to understand one another better. Parliament will also have to assume its responsibilities and discover what is going on among the middlemen, in the big outfits, those we do not know but who are quite active, so as to find out how they can manage to fleece both the consumers and producers at the same time. Such is the function of government. I already talked about this and I say it again tonight: so long as we will not have the courage to go and see what is going on in that segment of our economy, we shall see problems getting worse, dissatisfied consumers, ill-paid producers, and a government embarrassed and uncertain about the course to take.

In my opinion, the government would be well advised to create a commission to examine what is going on in that sanctuary. Its members would not be appointed on a political basis, but would be qualified, honest, persons who would be able to go to the heart of problems and to report to the government. Members should then have enough courage to pass legislation to implement the reports produced.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

An hon. Member: You are the only one in your party who could rise on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I offer this with all the kindness I have in my heart. Would there be general agreement from here on that the speeches might be limited to 15 minutes?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There does not seem to be agreement. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I shall try to comply with the wishes of my hon. friend. I was particularly interested, as I always am in a debate of this kind, in the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). He spoke of the very lofty ideals he and all of us should have in a debate of this kind. I found his remarks a little interesting compared to the practices of the members of the New Democratic Party, both here and elsewhere. He was rather critical of both the official opposition and the government, and made charges that perhaps they have tried to divide the farmer and the labourer in the past. He made no mention of the fact that particularly in Saskatchewan they have attempted for many years to divide the east from the west, and to bring about any other divisiveness they could put their hands on. It was interesting to hear the hon. member skate around the facts and try to cover all the ground without really offending either side.

The hon. member did make one point when he said something to the effect that there is nothing new in the situation in which we find ourselves today. In that regard he is correct except that surely we, as parliamentarians and the people in this country, should have been able to learn something from the experiences of the various stoppages we have had to put up with through the years. I was very happy to hear of the settlement announced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) tonight. Apparently the strike has been settled.

An hon. Member: What about the next one?

Mr. McIsaac: The hon. member raises a very good point. The fact that we are here tonight debating a work stoppage in respect of the grain handling industry is not new. I believe there have been four or five such cases over the past few years. The hon. member who moved the motion said that there had been four cases in the past two or three years in which the Parliament of Canada had to intervene. There certainly have been four or five more occasions on which the Parliament of Canada might have intervened.

An hon. Member: Or should have intervened.

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, or should have. I should like to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board for the work he has done in bringing about this settlement. Collective bargaining is always a difficult process. Despite the fact that we have been involved in this for many years there is still much we have to learn about it. Collective bargaining is doubly difficult when the Government of Canada is the employer, particularly at a time when there is inflation in this country. Inflation certainly adds to the problems of both the workers and the employers, whether the employers be the government or other agencies.

As I have said, the President of the Treasury Board has obtained a settlement under the free collective bargaining process. I suppose the result of that process in this particular dispute might indicate to many people, both inside and outside this House, that the collective bargaining process is really working well. I say that would be an erroneous conclusion to draw in so far as at least these industrial disputes relate to the grain industry in this country. The collective bargaining process certainly has not served the Canadian grain industry well during the past few years.

There are about 160,000 to 170,000 farmers in western Canada, and many other people who are affected by the kind of disruption we have seen over the past six or eight months in the grain industry. These people have every respect for the right of the workers and employees to strike against their employers. They also appreciate the problems of the working man, whether he is working in the grain industry weighing grain in Vancouver or is loading boxcars on the prairies or anywhere else.

However, the question which must be asked sometime by the grain producer particularly, and by other Canadians whether or not they are directly involved in the production of grain, is when does the right of the worker come before the right of the producer to produce his product, put it on the market, obtain markets, and be assured of future markets for his product? The farmer has a dozen and one things to contend with from the time he plants his crop until he gets it to market and receives a payment the amount of which he does not know. When does the right of the prairie farmer transcend the right in this case of 20 to 40 weighmen who have the right to strike? The farmer does not question this right.

I think this is one classic example, if we need any more, of the fact that we must immediately explore some better ways and means of resolving these disputes and differences before they reach the strike stage. The strike weapon where it directly involves only the employer and employee is very legitimate, and I certainly will defend that. Who knows, as someone said earlier, when we may have to be back here again in a week or two to deal with a similar situation in one of the many other possible disputes that could occur in the grain industry? I think we need to examine, explore and study very seriously some alternative methods to resolve these disputes before they get to the strike stage. Perhaps some special voluntary arbitration procedures could be implemented on a trial basis, as an example to try to see if we might be able to show the way in other industrial disputes.

● (0010)

Last weekend, at the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities Convention, western farmers attending the meeting said to me that they are prepared to support a national policy on energy where the taxpayers of Saskatchewan and Alberta, as the oil producing provinces, are receiving less than they would be if they were getting world prices for their resources. They are saying today that surely the rest of Canada should show them some consideration in trying to find a better solution to the disputes that have been so disruptive to the grain industry.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the pipes going on strike, Cliff?

Mr. McIsaac: I wish to conclude my remarks by reiterating my hope that next time we debate a similar issue—and I hope it does not happen soon—we will give more serious consideration to definite alternatives to the kind of situation that has kept us here until after twelve o'clock.

I might say, in answer to one point that was raised earlier in the debate as to what will happen from now on when the men return to work, that a contingency plan has been worked out by the Department of Transport in conjunction with the Canadian Wheat Board, the CNR, the CPR and the grains group to try to move grain as rapidly as possible.

I think the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board mentioned that the Vancouver elevator operators will be asked to work extra shifts. The railroads are committed to supply cars as quickly as the elevators can unload the grain, and the railroads have committed over 3,000 cars per week.

Mr. Alexander: What is the incentive?

Mr. McIsaac: The incentive is that everybody associated with the grain industry is anxious to catch up, to get those ships loaded and to get the grain out. I think that is true whether they are grain handlers, grain weighers, railroaders or anybody else along the line. I think that we will see the co-operation that is required to bring about the maximum effort in that regard to catch up and to minimize the damage that has been done in the grain industry, which has actually paid most of the price for the disruption.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the port of Churchill provides Manitoba with the unique distinction among the prairie provinces—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I do not want to interrupt my colleague but I want the record to show that at this moment there are only three Liberal members in the House listening to this very important debate.

Mr. McIsaac: I rise on the same point of order. I would like to point out who the four Liberal members are. The fact is that there were considerably more Liberals in the House when this debate opened than there were members of the official opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is not a point of order but a point for debate.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I will start from the beginning again after that slight interruption. I would like to say that the port of Churchill provides Manitoba with a unique distinction among the prairie provinces because of its access to the sea. The port has a fine harbour protected from the open sea. There are 3,065 feet of wharf with five deep sea berths and one coastal berth. The deep sea berths and turning basin at present are a maximum of 30 feet deep, that is at low tide, with tides running 11 to 15 feet. The major product moved out of the port of Churchill to date has been grain.

Western grain has been shipped from the port of Churchill since 1931, but the full capacity of that port has never really been tested. Since 1931, which is 44 years, the port of Churchill has never been affected by a strike. I think that that is something of a milestone, for a port to operate for 44 years without a strike that would affect the handling of grain.

Although in areas adjacent to the port there are no farm producers, the farmers from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta certainly benefit from the port because it provides ready access to European markets. At present the port of Churchill has the facilities to handle some 5 million bushels of grain in storage. The actual potential for shipping out of Churchill is in the neighbourhood of 40 million bushels per shipping season. The shipping season in Churchill at present runs from about July 20 to October 20. We are concerned about getting grain out to the markets of the world, and it certainly seems that when we have such a port as Churchill which is only open for a limited time of the year, that is three months, we should be using this port to its full potential.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): At the end of the shipping season last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) stated that another record year has been set for grain shipments through the port of Churchill. The grain shipped from Churchill last year amounted to 22,737,422 bushels. That amount was shipped out of a port that has the potential to ship 40 million bushels. The facilities are there to ship that much grain. However, when I talk to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and make a few suggestions as to how to bring the shipments up to 40 million bushels, I get the answer that all these things have been tried. I would like to suggest some very positive moves which could make this port a very important grain handling facility as well as a facility for other commodities produced by International Nickel Company, Sherritt Gordon, and so on, because grain shipments are not the only commodity to be considered with respect to the port of Churchill.

One thing that would improve shipments out of Churchill and bring it up to the 40 million bushels it is capable of handling is to co-ordinate the shipments out with the deliveries of grain arriving in Churchill. This means that as the trains arrive in Churchill, instead of having to offload this grain, put it in storage and then load it on to ships, it could be loaded directly on to the ships because the grain is not cleaned in Churchill; it is cleaned in Saskatoon before it is shipped north.

Churchill has a very short shipping season of three months and there have been as many as ten days during the shipping season without a ship in sight: then it is the problem of the Wheat Board, and there will be as many as eight or ten ships sitting in the harbour waiting to be loaded and the facilities can only handle three of the large ocean-going ships at one time. Under the present system, delivery of grain is taken from July 20 to October 20. I suggested that when the Wheat Board negotiates a contract with another country, this period should be shortened, and that if we sell five million bushels of grain to a country the date of delivery should be shortened to possibly July 20 to August 20. This would facilitate getting the ships into the harbour at the same time as the train arrivals.

In order to move 40 million bushels of grain to this very important port in Manitoba, we have to consider transportation. Only a portion of the railway system which runs from The Pas up to Thompson has been upgraded. At the present time, much of that railway is in a state of poor repair. This is causing many train wrecks, which costs the shipping industry a great many dollars. It cannot get the grain delivered to Churchill with only one railway running to that port. I would like to see at least a passing track installed between Gillam and Churchill. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has said $20 million will be spent on the upgrading of the rail system to ensure that grain will be delivered. I just hate to think of a strike taking place at the port of Churchill.

Mr. Benjamin: It isn't open long enough to have a strike.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): If the hon. member knew where it was, he could speak about it; but he doesn't even know where it is. If a strike took place at the port of Churchill when ships were in the port, they could not move to another port and pick up another load. These ships would have to go back through the Hudson Bay and try to find somewhere else to load. I hate to think of the problem we would face in trying to encourage shipping companies to come to Churchill when in fact it was not known whether they could load. I propose that the storage facilities at Churchill be increased to meet the capacity of that port, which is 40 million bushels. This amount of grain should be stored at Churchill at all times. Then when we sold wheat to a country we could enter into a contract with a shipping company because we would know there were 40 million bushels stored there. It is a known fact that the storage facilities at Churchill are ideal because of the climatic conditions; there are no heat or humidity problems. Therefore, I propose that the capacity of the terminal be increased.

We read in the estimates for this year, and in the estimates of last year, that $12.5 million will be spent in Churchill over the next four years. That amount will cover nothing more than maintenance. This government is not interested in developing the port of Churchill.

Mr. Benjamin: Neither was the previous Conservative government.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): If the government was interested in developing the port of Churchill, it would be taking a much more positive approach to putting in facilities which would handle grain and other commodities to be shipped from the port.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I have heard my hon. colleague speak for many hours in the past about his interest in the port of Churchill. As I listen to this debate tonight, I look across the aisle at the vacant seats—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member knows that this is not a valid point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member for Churchill. He has referred several times to the government, the cabinet and the treasury benches—and at this moment, for the last half-hour there has not been a member present there, including my hon. friend opposite who has just taken his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to speak after the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith), the Chair will recognize him then.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Another thing which really concerns me about the port of Churchill, because of the short season, is that the season could be extended by at least another month if there were proper insurance coverage. Lloyd's of London will not extend insurance coverage after October 20. I believe that if the government were really interested in extending the shipping season in Churchill, it would provide some insurance coverage for the month following October 20 because this past year ships could still have left the port on November 9. With an extension of the ships that come into the port we could be looking at even more than 40 million bushels, but if we even met that target it would be a milestone in grain shipments out of the port of Churchill.

• (0030)

When I speak of the transportation and rail system, I refer to the rail system down in the Interlake part of the Churchill constituency. In an average year, the lines in the Arborg and Hodgson area carry somewhere in the area of five million bushels of grain. The Riverton and Gypsumville lines are protected from abandonment until the year 2000. The Arborg and Hodgson lines, however, are only protected until 1976, at which time the situation will be evaluated. This situation should be looked at closely because farmers in the area have no idea how they are going to get their grain to market after 1976 if the line is abandoned.

Some very active people at the port of Churchill and in the province of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, in 1973 formed the Port Churchill Development Board to stimulate and develop two-way trade to the port. Their objective is to reduce the port's dependence on grain. We cannot seem to get the government to understand, although we have been trying for 30 years, that in Churchill we have a seaport in the middle of Canada that has not been utilized to its full capacity. The Port Churchill Development Board has the objective of encouraging the growth of other exports thus making this a viable inland seaport that should be used to its fullest capacity.

Let us keep the record clean and keep strikes out, Mr. Speaker. A record of 44 strikes a year is going to be hard to beat for any seaport.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Madam Speaker, I would like to contribute very briefly but sincerely to this debate to move some suggestions in order that the government finally take the necessary measures to avoid such conflicts.

Madam Speaker, the government has finally recognized the importance, not to say the emergency, of an intervention on that problem of prime importance for all Canadians. But once again, it reveals its total incapacity to apply the necessary measures.

We all know, Madam Speaker, that such a conflict causes considerable losses in the Canadian economy. I do not think it is useful to enumerate them all, since as the debate goes on, I realize that several members have discussed them. In the interest of all Canadians and for the welfare of Canada, the operations that have just started again, are certainly likely to remedy many shortcomings. Surely no member here this evening questions the fact that the strike of the blue collars has given rise to various troubles in the community. At this very moment, it is not difficult to realize that the conflict has had disastrous results. Who will again pay for the damages? The Canadian people.

I do not intend, Madam Speaker, to blame the poor workers involved in this conflict. On the contrary, we only have to blame our present economic system. The workers are at its mercy and are once again the victims to the same extent as raw milk producers in eastern Canada. Like the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I want to be the spokesman of those producers facing production problems. I ask all eastern and western members to support the demands of those producers which seem to me quite justified under the circumstances.

Madam Speaker, it is not difficult to be convinced. I therefore urge all the members to consider honestly what is going on in our country. We will see strikes multiply at a frightening rate which, in the end, is not likely to alleviate dissension, strife and the causes of the inflation that is rampant across the country.

Madam Speaker, I think seriously that the government must take a stand to stop any dispute. They must also take valid means to avoid similar situations.

Furthermore, I agree that this is an extremely difficult problem and that it would be all the easier to accuse the government. But this will certainly not solve the problem because we have been the victims of an outdated system for many years.

The government must solve not only current strifes, but also put forward legislation to prevent similar occurrences. I will keep saying this.

We are moving in a vicious circle, where inflation forces workers to demand higher wages. If they don't get them, what do they do? Their only way out is to go on strike. We have a good example in current and menacing strikes.

I firmly believe the time has come for the government to take their responsibilities and endorse Social Credit policies. We are convinced that our solutions will promote closer cooperation between money capital and labour capital. It is truly important that we put a stop to the battles that have been going on between these two kinds of capital for a number of years. We feel they are getting more numerous and more serious all the time.

Before I conclude, I would offer this government two suggestions. The first one should foster better employer-employee relations. It is simply a policy or system under which workers would share in profits. This would ensure worker participation in Canadian business development. Surely, this solution will force its way through if we are to make full use of all our resources.

The second solution is the guaranteed income policy formulated by our party. This would be a tremendous step in the settlement of the problems we now face, because it would give workers higher income, without any cost push effect on prices.

I believe the time has come for the present government to listen to our party's suggestions and theories.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) for presenting his motion. The Canadian people are behind him on this issue. I find it strange that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) is not present this evening. He is always asking the opposition for advice, and when we want to give it to him he has gone home to bed.

An hon. Member: That's where you should be.

Mr. McKenzie: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested that members of the Conservative party speak with forked tongues and hot mouths. I assure him that we do not speak with forked tongues and hot mouths. The Conservative party is made up of farmers, small businessmen, railroad workers and people from all walks of life. I am a telephone man who belonged to unions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: My roommate was a railway worker who is concerned about unions. As I said, the Conservative party is concerned about people in all walks of life; it is not concerned about one special group only.

The record of the government following the July 8 election has been dismal. Clearly it has created a serious mess in west coast grain handling and there is every indication that the mess will remain, even though one strike was settled today. In 1973, when parliament was recalled to deal with the rail strike, I said that that dispute represented only the tip of the iceberg. The Perry report again confirmed that both present inflation and uncertainty about future inflation contributed to the breakdown in contract negotiations. The Trudeau government, which still lacks an effective policy to deal with inflation, has now fouled up prospects of a negotiated settlement on the west coast. Canadians who placed their trust in a majority Trudeau government are finding that trust betrayed in short order.

Strangely, neither the President of the Treasury Board nor the minister responsible for the Wheat Board talked about the reason for labour unrest in this country. The reason is double-digit inflation. They made it abundantly clear that they intend to do nothing to tackle the problem. So far they have done nothing. I ought to correct that; they have done a couple of things, one of them being the appointment of Beryl Plumptre to head a board which duplicates the work of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That department, with a budget of $48 million and staff of 2,400 people, should be doing her job. A couple of weeks ago the board looked at inflation, but it did it by staying in $300-a-day hotel rooms, eating lobster and steak, and talking with businessmen. If that is how it is delving into inflation, it will not wash. The Canadian people will not accept it.

According to a recent Gallup poll, almost three times as many people say their opinion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has gone down as say it has gone up in the past three months. Thirty-six per cent say their opinion has gone down, but only 13 per cent say it has gone up. That shows why we were right in demanding this debate. If any Liberals doubt my word, let them come to my office and I will show them the kind of mail we are bombarded with from members of the public who are fed up with this government.

Mr. Carl Beigie, executive director of the C.D. Howe Research Institute in Montreal, says the federal government has been too concerned with short-term stop-gap policies and has placed too much emphasis on convincing the public that Canada is uniquely placed to survive the current economic crisis with relatively little pain. This government reminds me of Johnston and Johnston, and we all know who they were—

[Mr. McKenzie.]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I remind the hon. member that the purpose of this debate is the discussion of a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the present work stoppages which have ended all grain shipments from Canada affecting grain deliveries to all foreign countries.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, as I was saying, the source of our troubles is double-digit inflation. Until we solve that problem, strikes will continue. Mr. William A. Dimma, Dean of York University's Faculty of Administrative Studies, said, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of February 17, 1975:

> The damage done by severe inflation and the expectation that it will continue is evident.
> If it is prolonged, and especially if the wrong or no prescriptions are applied, it harms almost everyone.

The sort of labour unrest evident since September 30, when parliament convened, will continue until the government resolves the problem of double-digit inflation. We are not interested in the government's excuses. It always blames somebody else. As Mr. Dimma says, we shall see an increased frequency and severity of strikes and lock-outs. There will be an enormous weakening of capital markets. He explained the reasons for Canada's problems. Canada, in the eyes of the world, is like the horse's end—I will not use the appropriate word, but hon. members know what I mean.

Over a quarter of our exports move through the port of Vancouver, yet exports are curtailed because of strikes. In the first 33 weeks of the current crop year, grain shipping was shut down for 11 weeks. There have been only two occasions since August, 1973, when vessels have not been waiting to load at Vancouver. Those two occasions amounted to only 18 working days. As of March 10, 30 vessels had been waiting and 15,000 boxcars have been bunched up in the west, trying to get into the port. As of March 18, 33 vessels were waiting.

Even though a strike has been settled today, it will take weeks to clear the pile-up of boxcars on the prairies. Bangladesh has suffered and Japan cancelled an order. Buyers will not look to this country for more orders, because we are always on strike. Strikes affect every farmer in the west, and cost us millions of dollars.

● (0050)

Mr. G. L. Harrold, Chairman of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee and President of the Alberta Wheat Pool, says the Board may be forced to limit future sales through West Coast ports to 20 million bushels a month or less. The average movement in the past three years has been 30 million bushels a month. We have given a lot of business to Seattle since these strikes began. We have revitalized United States ports which have been dead for years. San Francisco is now very active in handling grain because we are always on strike. Although the western farmer is suffering, and although the Canadian economy is suffering because of the strikes, the Prime Minister on March 18 said he did not see the possibility of parliament being called upon to end the strikes as there was no urgency involved.

Mr. Goodale: That is not true. That is not what he said.

Mr. McKenzie: The news headlines describing what is going on make a laughing stock out of us. I will read one or two: "West Coast Ports Hit Again", "Strike Effects Go Very Deep", "West Ports Hit By Prevailing Labour Gales". Here is another: "Strikes Force Wheat Board to Discourage Grain Planting".

Mr. Goodale: That is untrue. The Board never said that.

Mr. McKenzie: All right. I suggest you challenge the Wheat Board then.

Mr. Goodale: I checked today. What you have just said is untrue.

Mr. McKenzie: Well then you should bring in a correction.

Mr. Towers: How much wheat have you raised?

Mr. McKenzie: I will read the statement. The Financial Post reported on March 15 that the Canadian Wheat Board told farmers to ignore former promises that the Board can sell everything they plant in the current crop year. If that statement is incorrect, the government should put out a statement in correction of it.

We are always being told by members on the government side that the opposition has nothing concrete to offer. I should like to read the suggestions we put forward during the last election.

For several years Canadians, we said, have watched with growing concern and disappointment the emergence of four areas of colossal policy failure by the government with respect to the world of work. These failures have caused much unnecessary personal anxiety for thousands of working men and women, have generated widespread frustration and anger, and have stirred considerable social unrest. That is the understatement of the century.

Perhaps the most glaring failure has been the failure to provide adequate job opportunities for those who want and need employment. The inability of the economy to absorb as active members of the labour force the large numbers of young people graduating from our high schools, universities and technical schools is one example. Another is the inability of ordinary Canadians in most parts of the country to get jobs when they want them.

One glaring example of policy failure by the government relates to somewhat questionable approaches to collective bargaining nurtured over the last several years. The strike and lock-out remain by and large legitimate and necessary tools for the effective functioning of the collective bargaining process and for meaningful labour management relations, but there are numerous cases where both parties, as well as the public in general, have been the losers.

I do not have the time to cover all of these areas but I will outline the major ones. We would see that the rights of members of unions to receive audited financial statements are guaranteed by law. We would review the law relating to the abuse of positions of trust with a view to reinforcing the safeguards. The Progressive Conservative Party feels it is desirable, wherever possible, to promote more unity, co-operation and commonality of interest between labour and management. We advocate efforts to promote the diffusion of ownership among workers and salaried employees of Canadian companies. We do not believe in confrontation. We believe in constant consultation and this is what has been lacking.

The Progressive Conservative Party would consult with labour and management organizations to formulate a comprehensive strategy toward this end. Such strategy might include responsible tax incentives for profit-sharing schemes, worker participation in plant management, and employee stock ownership financing which would help spread ownership among most or all of the employees.

Also, the Conservative Party favours more regular review of federal labour legislation relating to minimum wages and hours of work. The object must be to ensure that these are at all times sufficiently in the interest of the working man or woman. A Progressive Conservative government would also establish an independent national human rights commission. The function of this commission would be to deal with the whole range of individual rights in every field under the jurisdiction of the federal government, including the federal public service. Also, we must consider safeguarding the public interest. Experience in recent years has shown that there are certain key industries and certain aspects of particular services where the use of a strike or lock-out has made the public a pawn in labour-management differences. This is what concerns the Canadian public.

Being critical of the Liberal government is the easiest thing, I find, since I came down here. I hope tonight I have shown that it is equally possible to put forward constructive suggestions, because the government has proved itself to be bankrupt of ideas. It does not know what to do and it is asking us to come forward with suggestions. I have offered a few and I hope they will be heeded.

Mr. Goodale: On a point of order, the hon. member made extensive reference to a newspaper report which allegedly said the Wheat Board had suggested that as a result of this dispute production was to be discouraged. If the hon. member would check the source, he would find—

Some hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): That is not a point of order. It is a point of debate.

● (0100)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, first I want to congratulate my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), for introducing this very important matter. The parameters of the problem to which we are addressing ourselves tonight were set forth in terms of the number of ships that were waiting to load grain, the number of shipping days that were lost, the back shipments that are overdue, as well as in terms of our credibility with our customers. These countries have purchased one million tons of grain, and they will think twice about further purchases of grain from this country.

I do not think there is really any doubt in the mind of any member of the House that what we are dealing with is truly in the national interest, not only in relation to grain but in terms of the continued operation and good faith of one of the most important commodity operations in this country and the world.

I think two of the strongest speeches made tonight about the failures of the government were made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac). Let me just repeat what the hon. member for Assiniboia said. He said that he thought there ought to be a national conference or gathering to bring together the people concerned in all aspects of the grain trade.

I think we can expand that far beyond the grain trade in terms of labour relations. We can expand it into other areas of commerce and industry that are important to this country, and upon which we depend. I congratulate him for saying that, because the government that he supports, which has been in office since 1963, and which goes to the opposition for alternatives without producing any itself, has had the opportunity to take the kind of action he suggests, but not once has it done so.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley also made a fine speech. He recognized the difficulty his own party has placed him in so far as his constituents and his province are concerned. In his eloquent way he made the same condemnation of lack of action by the government since it came to office in 1963.

In addition to speaking in the House of Commons for the record, I should also like these two members to go to caucus next Wednesday and speak to their colleagues in exactly the same terms. The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), I thought, made a very forceful speech, and perhaps put the situation best of all in terms of breadth when she talked about other industries. I should like her to go to the Liberal caucus next week and make the same speech. I should like her to make the absent members from the treasury benches tonight, and the 100 odd absent members of the government, listen to her. I assume that if they do not come to the House for important debates they must at least attend caucus, so I think those speeches should be made there as well.

I listened very carefully to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) who spoke tonight, and waited for some of the alternatives which they have asked of the opposition. But why do they not produce alternatives during the course of the debate? The people of Canada gave this government a mandate on July 8. I do not begrudge it the mandate, though I wish it were otherwise. But they did not give the government a mandate to ask the opposition what to do about the problems of this country; the people of Canada were looking to the government to lead and to offer alternatives; they looked to the government to heal the wounds, to give leadership and to inspire Canadians.

Unfortunately the government has a majority but is in relative shambles. If there is one place where we are going to witness lack of leadership in Canada in 1975 and 1976, it is in the very vexing field of employer-employee relations. I do not want to speak about the general labour market, but I do want to say something about the public service of this country. I respect the right to strike, though I hope it will always be used in a responsible way. But I also think we should look to the national interest from time to time and, as the President of the Treasury Board said, there is a time for judgment. He said that in his opinion the time for judgment with respect to the grain trade had not come.

I say to him that he was wrong, that he exercised that judgment improperly. That is not to say that the issue is not important. The farmers and the people who depend on the grain trade decided a long time ago that the matter was in the national interest.

The minister asked for alternatives, and I should like to tell him about what I would like to see in regard to public service bargaining. I should like to see a widening of bargaining rights in this country, of the fields in which public servants can bargain, and of the matters about which they can bargain. It is important to establish, or perhaps re-establish, good faith in the public service between employers and employees. That was the purpose of the Finkelman report, but I do not think that is in existence. If the government members of that commission were to move in that direction, then I think we would be opening the door to the beginning of industrial peace and trust in this country.

The second thing we ought to do is re-establish the pay research bureau. It was a very good thing and it could take an independent look at pay structures and the whole matter of comparability. All the evidence placed before that bureau ought to be laid on the table so that all parties, including the public, could see what the case is. This is not the case now. If anything came out of the Finkelman report, it is the fact that this has not been done but ought to be done.

I think we have to take a hard look at the whole concept of industrial democracy in the private sector so that trust can be built up and perhaps transcend itself—if that is the correct phrase—into the public sector. We ought to strive for that in the committee. Government members, particularly, ought not to limit the debate, limit the thrust of that committee or dampen down the areas we can discuss but should, rather, widen them so we can build into the public service side the real, consultative procedures which are not now there. The rudiments are there, but in terms of good, sound consultative procedures they are not there.

We ought to explore the whole question of a public interest disputes commission. Part of the problem in respect of labour relations in Canada, in the public or private sector, is that there is no machinery anywhere to examine a contract while it is in force or to deal with problems that arise from time to time while a contract is running and isolate the problems before the contract expires. In this way negotiation would be limited and the beds sores that come during a period of conflict would be eliminated. We need that kind of consultative procedure in this country. We also need bargaining procedures in both the public and private sectors. We need bargaining procedures that are swift and responsive so the frustrations that come in the course of time do not build up and attitudes do not harden. The minister asked for some suggestions, and those are a few I offer in the short time I have to deal with this matter.

I am a little concerned about what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has said. I thought one aspect of his speech set a very high tone in respect of what we look for in this country, but I thought another part of his speech was the most cynical thing I have heard since coming to this House in 1972. He said that opposition members in this House, and I presume he meant a number of them, had sad faces because this distressing dispute was over.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think that is dreadful.

An hon. Member: It is true; look around you.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is a shameful statement coming from a minister of the Crown whose government is charged with the basic responsibility for bringing some form of industrial peace to this country.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) said that we could set up all the machinery we wanted, have all the good faith we could get and build everything into the system that man could devise, but unless we are prepared in this country to tackle the problem that is causing some of our difficulties, namely, the fear in organized labour, public servants and people on fixed incomes that their incomes will just not keep up with the cost of living, there will never be any real industrial peace in this country.

Members of the government wanted an alternative, something different. They should look inward and ask themselves whether in this year, 1975, they are really tackling the problem of inflation which is eating the heart out of our economy and causing distress to many groups, setting one group of Canadians against another in a "dog eat dog" attitude. That is the problem we have to fight in this country: That is the problem the people of Canada charge this government to solve.

I will not have a sad face if this government solves the problem. I would be a very happy Canadian and a very happy member of parliament to serve in the opposition or otherwise if we had a government that produced a solution to this problem instead of vagueness, consensus and ministers running off in all directions. The Canadian people and this opposition ask more of this government. We charge the government with the responsibility of delivering solutions to our problems. So far, this government has failed to do that—and that is at the heart of our problem. I hope the members of the Liberal Party who have sat through this debate will take that message to their caucus.

An hon. Member: We don't need your advice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Please do not come to this House again asking the opposition what it would do. The Canadian people are asking this government what it will do. That is the question in the minds of members on all sides of the House. That is the question being asked by the men and women of this country—the homemakers, the people who are beginning employment, the people who want to own homes and the people who want industrial peace. That is the challenge to this government, and I will support—as will my party—any reasonable effort by this government to meet that challenge. Thus far, the government has not shown that it is equal to the job.

Mr. MacFarlane: I should just like to bring to the attention of the House that under our rules not more than one matter can be discussed under the same motion, and I think there is a definite objective on the part of hon. members opposite to broaden this debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, one of the most perplexing things to try to figure out in this House is how to understand a Liberal government. Their members get up in the House and suggest that members of the opposition complain but never come up with any suggestions. Just now, when the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) made a number of suggestions, hon. members said they were not interested in hearing them—and I think that describes the attitude of hon. members opposite tonight.

● (0120)

At this hour, 20 minutes after one o'clock in the morning, I think it is interesting to point out that the Liberals said this issue is not in the national interest. I think if we are to be positive and constructive in respect of the government we have to concede that it believes it is not in the national interest. It would seem that the government does believes this because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) never once showed up for this debate. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) came for his speech and then left. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) did not remain here except for a few minutes. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was never here once.

Tonight I will document some information to show that this is a very important issue in terms of the national interest. Throughout the debates in recent days we have heard that collective bargaining is a right. I will not deny that is so. However, we also must bear in mind that this society has no such a thing as rights in isolation. A right is a concept that is co-related and interwoven with responsibility.

When we look at the broad spectrum of our society we note that many aspects to which we claim rights also have clearly defined responsibilities. First, if we have the right to drive a car we have the responsibility to be licensed and the responsibility to drive on the correct side of the road. We have the right to breathe air; but have the responsibility not to pollute it. But let us look at what the Liberals have been telling us. They speak about the right to strike regardless of whether or not any responsibility is being shown. Let me give an example. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) the Prime Minister replied in part:

> The answer really lies at which point the public interest becomes overwhelming and should overwhelm the basic democratic right to strike which has been given by parliament to the workers of this nation.

Then on March 18, as recorded at page 4195 of Hansard, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver South, the President of the Treasury Board replied in part as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I said previously and I will repeat that those employees have the right to strike, and we respect that right to strike. The House has not indicated to me that we should withdraw the right to strike.

There is no mention of a parallel set of responsibilities. Then at page 4199 of Hansard for March 18, in reply to a question of mine, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said:

This is a dispute situation. In a dispute situation such as this, we could not get into the question of assessing liability on innocent third parties. That is an inevitable result when you have the right to strike.

One would gather from the Minister of Labour that damage irrespective of amount is simply a part of labour-management negotiations. When the leader of this party asked the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) a question on March 7, 1975, as recorded at page 3879 of Hansard, he replied:

It is the law of this country that people do have the right to strike.

As a thesis to my case I wish to point out that there are no rights in this country without parallel sets of responsibilities. We might refer to the Canadian Bill of Rights which lays down the basic rights for people. It talks about rights such as freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom of the press. We know in fact that none of those rights exist without responsibilities. In the second paragraph of the Canadian Bill of Rights we find this:

Affirming also that men and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law;

When we take a look at the question of spiritual and moral laws I challenge this government, when the largest ship ever to go to the port of Vancouver is stranded at that port waiting to take grain destined for Bangladesh, to show where its sense of moral and spiritual law is.

I challenge members of the government to come forward and say what their mores are when they say this is not in the national interest. They take this position despite the fact that 12,000 people a day are dying of starvation or malnutrition. One must ask where is the moral obligation of this government when only 40 people can hold up the grain industry. Yet they have the audacity to talk about the rights of labour and management. Have we once heard these members opposite talk about the result in respect of third parties? Who is looking after the farmers who, in every instance, end up paying at least part of the shot and who, by their very nature, are prevented from being able to strike in order to retain some of the benefits for themselves?

This evening we heard a speech by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. All I could conclude when the minister finished his speech was that I had never witnessed a greater example of an abortion created on the western farmers than by the Minister of Justice. The President of the Treasury Board referred to this debate tonight as a little strike. I dare him to go to the constituencies of western Canada and refer to this as a little strike.

I think the Liberal Party could be well known as an animal called the cheeta in respect of the western farm people because members of that party have shown their callousness in respect of this issue where it concerns the people who are in need of the production we can produce. I should like to document how serious the situation has been to the prairie farmer and how insensitive the present government has been. While I hear echoes from the other side I shall document how serious this is.

The government has cheated the farmer for the last couple of years in relation to the port of Vancouver. Let us deal first from the start of the crop year commencing with the week of July 28 to August 3, 1974. At that time we had the west coast grain handlers' strike which started on May 19, 1974. Let us go to the second week, the week of August 4 to August 10. The west coast grain handlers' strike continued and the Great Lakes lake operators strike started on August 8, 1974. In that same week there was a CNR derailment and the Albreda sub-line was closed on August 6.

Let us go to the week of August 11 to August 17. The west coast grain handlers' strike is on. The Great Lake operators strike continues, and there is another train derailment of the CNR at mile 25.1 at the Yale substation.

Let us move on to the fourth week of the crop year from August 18 to 24. The labour strike of the west coast grain handlers is continuing under work to rule. The Great Lake operators strike continues, and there is a derailment of trains on the CPR at mile 13.4, Mountain substation. The main line was closed on August 18. Let us move on to the fifth week of the crop year. The west coast grain handlers strike is still in effect. The Great Lake operators strike continues, and there are two more derailments, one on the CNR and one on the CPR.

Let us now consider the sixth week from September 1 to 7. Here again we have the west coast grain handlers strike, the Great Lake operators strike, and another derailment of CPR on mile 38.3 at Mountain substation on September 1, 1974. Let us go on to the seventh week of the crop year from September 8 to 14. We have the west coast grain handlers strike continuing, the Great Lakes operators strike continuing, and three train derailments, the CNR derailment at mile 120.5 at the Ashcroft substation, the CNR derailment at mile 64.6 at the Fraser substation, and the CNR derailment at mile 64.6 at the Fraser substation at Prince Rupert.

Now let us review the eighth week of the crop year from September 15 to 21. The west coast grain handlers strike continues, the Great Lakes operators strike continues. That takes us to the ninth week of the crop year from September 22 to 28 when the west coast grain handlers strike continues, and the Great Lakes operators strike continues. Let us move on to the tenth week from September 29 to October 5 when the west coast handlers strike continues, the Great Lakes operators strike continues and there are two derailments, the CNR derailment at mile 38.4 at the Skeena substation at Prince Rupert and the CPR derailment at mile 104.3 at Mountain substation.

In the eleventh week of the crop year the west coast grain handlers strike ended on October 10, 1974. Then we move on to the twelfth and thirteenth weeks and, whoopee poo, there are two whole weeks in which all the unions are working and, miraculously, not a single derailment takes place.

But lest the Grits become too happy, let us move on to the fourteenth week, from October 27 to November 2, when the west coast grain inspectors did not report to work, at Thunder Bay the government inspectors did not report to work either, and there was a derailment of the CNR at mile 81.1 at the Albreda substation. In the fifteenth week all unions were working.

In the sixteenth week again all unions were working and, lest the Grits become too happy let us remind them that a derailment of the CPR took place in that week. However, that is the end of the joy, and certainly the Liberals deserve no credit for it because on the seventeenth week from November 17 to 23 the west coast, Thunder Bay and government grain inspectors strike is in effect. Also, the British Columbia railroad shop craft strike is on, there is a CPR derailment at mile 68.9 at the Windermere substation, a CPR derailment at mile 105.6 at the Cascade substation, and a CPR derailment at the Rossland substation which was closed on November 25.

Let us move on to the eighteenth week of the crop year from November 24 to 30. The west coast and Thunder Bay government grain inspectors strike is on. The west coast and interior government grain inspectors returned to work at 12 noon on December 5, 1974, and the Thunder Bay government inspectors returned to work on December 5, 1974. We now have tremendous joy so far as the Liberals are concerned, despite the fact that they had nothing to do with it. There were three weeks in which all unions were working.

This is a terrible history of strikes and derailments all of which effect the farmer. Then, on the twenty-fourth week from January 5 to 11, the British Columbia railroad shop craft returned to work, but there is a derailment of the CPR at Revelstoke, B.C. We find that when we consider the thirty-six weeks, including the present week, that in almost none of that time was there any smooth delivery of grain in this country.

It is about time that we laid the record straight and began to understand what farming is. Farming is not a life style, it is not a way of life. Farming is the production of food, the most essential of industries, the most essential of all businesses. Yet, despite the fact that food is required to maintain life, the government has not done anything constructive to encourage the shipping of grain to market at a time when, if we could hypothetically distribute food around the world, we would not have enough protein to go around. The situation is extremely critical, and it is high time that we put all our efforts into attempting to get grain to market faster.

We heard the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) say tonight that farmers are not the only Canadians, and she challenged the prairie farmers' representatives here in parliament not to make such an issue about farm people. I also concede that farmers are not the only people, but I darn well claim that they are people and their rights are at least equal to those of other people. When we take a look at what has been happening in the grain movement, starting in May of last year, we find that in total there have only been eleven weeks of free movement of grain in this country. I say that there is not another industry in Canada which could operate year after year under the insensitive kind of policies which the government sets with regard to the agricultural industry.

It is important to set the record straight. The strikes that were taking place recently were supposedly rotating strikes. Yet, what did we witness on the west coast at the port of Vancouver? The only strikes that were continuous and not being rotated were those that were affecting the grain industry. Labour organizations were once again putting on the pressure where they knew it hurts. I think it is time we heard not just speeches from the government in which it talks about the right to strike but speeches about the rights of all Canadians, whether they be farmers, labour organizations or people in management. All rights go with responsibilities, and rights and responsibilities should not be separated. A right is something that is earned. Those who practice rights, irrespective of whether or not people die as a result, and irrespective of whether or not agriculture survives, should expect those rights to be challenged.

The question is whether or not we should be allowed to practice the right to strike when the national interest is at stake. What we hear from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Labour, and the President of the Treasury Board is that despite the fact that agriculture has been disrupted for almost two solid years, this is not a national issue.

I know of no hypocrisy greater than singling out within a nation a group of people, who are important both in terms of numbers and in what they produce, and then turn a blind eye to them and say that we do not care about their interests because we are protecting the interests of labour and management. It is high time that we lent full consideration to the damage inflicted upon innocent third parties.

I have made the following statement in this House before, and I will make it again tonight, that I believe there are legal grounds for farm organizations in this country to sue with regard to demurrage charges laid upon them due to strikes this past year at the port of Vancouver. I know of no business principle which allows two parties to negotiate and incur an expense and then charge that expense to a third party, yet that is what has happened at the port of Vancouver. We witnessed labour and management causing ships to be held up in port incurring an expense of at least $17 million—and there are estimates that it may be well over $50 million—and the full amount will be borne by the western Canadian farmer.

I think that that is such a shame that it should be tested in our courts because there are no precedents whereby two parties can incur an expense and charge that expense to a third party. I think that anyone who is closely observing the labour-management disputes is witnessing many kinds of illegal activity. It is on that basis that I think there is still a tremendous amount to be done in terms of setting up programs to alleviate these labour disputes which are so drastically affecting prairie farmers and subsequently our world markets.

There have been only two occasions since August of 1973 when vessels have not been waiting to load in Vancouver, and those two occasions amounted to only 18 working days. As of March 10 of this year, 30 vessels have been waiting and 15,000 boxcars from the west are bunched up at the port of Vancouver, and so we see, Mr. Speaker—

Grain Shipments

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him for this debate has now expired. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) could announce in the House tonight in a rather hilarious way that a settlement may have been reached in connection with the problems which have been plaguing the grain industry does not in any way change the relevance of this motion tonight. It does not preclude an emergency debate on a point of national interest now or at any future time in this House.

It has been my privilege to have been in a house of government for a little more than 20 years of my life, and as yet I have never seen the treasury benches abandoned in total as the Liberal government has abandoned its benches tonight.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McCain: I have never seen a group of people who cared so little for the public as the treasury benches of the Liberal government in 1975. They are a disgrace to the democratic system by any measurement which might be applied, and hon. members opposite, who sit there like a bunch of idle servants, should certainly tell them where they stand tomorrow. They have abused the very principles which are the responsibility of elected democratic representatives, particularly those who are willing to assume by appointment the responsibility for a cabinet position.

Let us consider the movement of grain in the Dominion of Canada in the last three years. Did hon. members opposite know that in the first quarter of 1972 we did not move as much grain as we did in the first quarter of 1971? Did they know that in the second quarter of 1972 we did not move as much grain as we did in the first quarter of 1971? Did they know that in the third quarter of 1972 we moved 15 million bushels less than in the third quarter of 1971? I could go on. In the fourth quarter of 1972 we did pretty well. There was good shipment. But let us go back again to 1973. The market was picking up, and there was a demand. We find that in the first quarter of 1973 we did not ship as much as we did in the first quarter of 1971. In the second quarter of 1973 we did not ship as much as we did in 1971. In the third quarter of 1973 we did not do as well as well as we did in 1971. The first three quarters of 1974 were the worst of all.

Any Liberal member who has been responsible enough to get himself elected to the House of Commons must share some of the responsibility, whether he sits on the backbenches or the frontbenches, for a deplorable state of transportation, labour problems, and disorganization which this government has perpetrated in the name of a majority or a minority government.

An hon. Member: What about the just society?

Mr. McCain: The just society has deteriorated to the disordered society. I submit that the government for over three years has been playing the game of economic brinkmanship, and playing it quite successfully while all of Canada suffers.

One speaker had the temerity today to say that there would be just a little area affected and just a few people. There is a Liberal member to the right of the Chair who represents part of an agricultural area, and I represent another part of the same area. There are roughly 60,000 people there. If agriculture were tied up in that little community in New Brunswick as western agriculture has been tied up in part or in full for three years, 80 per cent of those people would find themselves with a deteriorating standard of living. Directly or indirectly 80 per cent of those 60,000 people living in the potato belt of New Brunswick are dependent, in full or in part, upon the agricultural industry. That is how people are affected, and that is how the public interest and the national interest has been neglected.

I am surprised that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), who has spent so much time in New Brunswick, is so jovial. If he had any concern for people at all he would be less than happy about the fact that some 48,000 could have their lives driven downhill by the kind of irresponsible neglectful government which we have been witnessing.

We have been told that we are not dealing with very much money and that we are talking in terms of 1.4 per cent of the budget. Those were the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) tonight. Mr. Speaker, 1.4 per cent of the Treasury Board budget is $375 million to $390 million of the taxpayers' money. That was a big joke to the minister but it is not a joke to the taxpayer.

● (0150)

Let us see what this has done to the Atlantic area. People from the Atlantic provinces made representations before the Standing Committee on Agriculture and were assured that there would not be another grain emergency in the east; that grain would be stored there. Mr. Speaker, the amount that would have been stored in the east for emergency purposes might have lasted two weeks. The grain was stored in Halifax and then the rules were changed. This grain was supposed to be available to feeders in the Atlantic area at competitive prices; but in the present emergency, when we inquired about drawing from the storage in Halifax we found that we could only borrow from the Wheat Board. The grain has to be replaced with the same grade that has been withdrawn and the borrower has to pay the extra freight to get it to his farm. I submit that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and all those who are associated with the selling and moving of grain have acted in a traitorous way in respect of the promises made to that area in case of another crisis in grain.

As of today, the maritime express service is 45 cars behind in New Brunswick and hour by hour the number is increasing. Hon. members opposite may say this is of no consequence to Canada as a whole. Maybe the Atlantic area does not count, but I say to the hon. member who left the Atlantic area that we have been abandoned by the government which he now supports. We should be able to look for a little help to a man as familiar with the requirements of the Atlantic area as he should be.

I have not heard of any reply being sent to the wire from the chairman of the transportation committee of the Atlantic division of the Canadian Feed Manufacturers Association. It was sent to three members of the empty treasury benches but so far there has not been any alleviation of the problem. I submit that this is of national interest when it concerns people from Vancouver to Halifax.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member who introduced this motion. I see no reason why anyone should withdraw when grain movements have been deteriorating in four consecutive shipping seasons. For the second time in 18 months, the Atlantic area food industry is so short of supplies that it is using such materials as it can get, and this is clogging the handling equipment associated with the manufacture of food. The settlement today is in the best interests of Canada, but the pattern of the past bodes evil for the future. It is time that Liberals, and not just the rest of Canada, took this situation seriously.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, look at the government forces lined up for battle, shoulder to shoulder, obviously keen for the debate at hand. My hon. friend's tongue is flapping around more than a dozen fish with fins out of water. A few moments ago he made some reference to baby seals: we know what little baby seals grow up to be—Liberal backbenchers.

Mr. MacFarlane: I won't make any reference to your ancestors.

Mr. Whiteway: We know now why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is building a swimming pool—so that he can have a home-training program for backbenchers. I wish they were half as active on their feet as they are on their rumps. Earlier in the debate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) made reference to "that little strike". If it is a little strike in his opinion, that reflects his little understanding of what it has meant to the west.

In the last election campaign we heard a great deal about leadership, and earlier this evening the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), with a self-righteous attitude, talked about the challenge to hon. members on this side to be constructive. He also talked about the problems of strikes. One of my colleagues suggested to the government that they should adopt our long-standing policy for a public interest disputes board. To my knowledge, this government has never brought to this House or discussed the two-factor theory or the superposed economy. An hon. member asks, "What"? He has never heard of it. But there are new and innovative ways, Mr. Speaker, and we have talked about them in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) on a point of order.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member speaking on tomorrow's debate, or is he speaking on a point of order? What subject is he trying to deal with? He has not said anything in relation to the motion and that is true of several of the speakers opposite.

An hon. Member: That is for the Speaker to decide.

Mr. McIsaac: I am making that point.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Trying to control the Tories?

Mr. McIsaac: I am asking the Speaker if he has heard anything relevant to the motion?

Mr. Whiteway: You see, Mr. Speaker, the little fish bite before the hook is even baited. Hon. members opposite have waited during 12 years of Liberal administration to get a policy on strikes. If they will just hold on for just another 15 minutes, maybe they will get something from me. The Minister of Justice continually offers the solution of "identifying the problem". We do not need great expositions of identifying and explaining and expounding the problem: we want the government to provide what it promised in the election campaign—that is, some kind of leadership.

● (0200)

I now want to talk about the right of people in this world to live. One week from today 200,000 Canadians will participate in the World Vision program. They will contribute $1 million for grain, which is to be sent to Bangledesh, the Sahalian area, Ethiopia, Cambodia, and so on. Current labour disputes resulting in ships being tied up mean than the possibility of shipping food from the west coast is non-existent. One million pounds of food other than grain cannot be shipped because of labour disputes. There is a backlog in shipments.

The Minister of Justice asked the opposition to suggest alternatives and solutions. We are suggesting them, but he is not present to listen. Let me tell him that some farmers are persuaded it is their moral duty to grow cereal grains. They are interested not so much in economic gain as in feeding the hungry peoples of the world. Their work is impeded by programs like LIFT and lack of government leadership which results in labour disputes.

The Japanese cancelled an order and prefer to buy from the United States. Unless the government resolves labour disputes and allows for free, predictable, and easy grain movements, this country's economy will suffer and aid efforts will be fruitless.

The Minister of Justice asked the opposition to suggest alternatives. He should have remained in the chamber because, just possibly, he might have heard something worth while.

An hon. Member: He didn't miss anything.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should summarize tonight's speeches, so that cabinet ministers tomorrow morning can read a succinct account of what has taken place. I do not see too many of that breed of cat around.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is tomorrow morning now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am proud this debate has lasted until 2 a.m., or one o'clock Saskatoon time. I am proud to talk in a debate relating to western grain. Government supporters may not think it is of much importance, but we do. I am proud to be a member of my party and to be associated with the mover of the motion.

We are pleased that the strike has been settled, but we are not pleased at the number of strikes taking place in Canada. All members receive mail complaining about our great numbers of strikes. I agree that you cannot legislate workers back to work. We must consider the cause of our strikes.

The ministry asks for our suggestions, but there is not a single cabinet minister here to listen to us. The government argues that strikes must take their course. We say the people of the country are entitled to leadership in the resolution of strikes. This debate has had a therapeutic effect on negotiations on the west coast. On learning that parliament might act, the parties came to an agreement. Even government supporters agree that strikes are a futile exercise.

Mr. Benjamin: That's a lot of crap.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. member just used a euphemism describing members of the NDP.

According to the Saskatoon Star Phoenix of March 4, 1975, the Minister of Justice said that the strike is too costly a weapon for us to put up with, and he said strikes often produce serious economic loss that leaves everyone poorer. He referred to the current strike of some civil servants that had stopped certain prairie grain movements.

Mr. Benjamin: What about the role of management in strikes?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As the hon. member knows, management and labour are the two components in the situation. I am not blaming one side or the other. When I talk about management I mean the government. No management group has been more incompetent than the government has been.

● (0210)

I know the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, as well as other responsible spokesmen for agriculture in Western Canada, has been calling on the government to act to end the strike. In the time I have been here the government has acted once to legislate to halt a particular strike affecting the wheat delivery system. At that time the government appointed a commissioner to investigate management and labour problems in the grain handling operation in Vancouver. A distinguished jurist, Mr. Justice Bayda, was appointed. That appointment was made in October, six months ago. I have asked the Acting Minister of Labour to tell us the standing of this investigation. Over a week ago he undertook to determine precisely what was happening with respect to the work of this commissioner, but so far no answer to my inquiry has been forthcoming, no indication as to the progress of the study.

We are dealing here with a commission which has been asked to make recommendations with respect to the grain handling system. Has the commission not been given the necessary resources to fulfil its task? Are we allowing the commissioner to drift along and take his time? I know he would prefer to get the job done. He said, when appointed, that he expected his report to come down within six months. Yet we hear no word about what is taking place.

This is an area to which the government should be giving great attention instead of allowing the present system to carry on to the detriment of the western farmer. The government should be supporting these studies to the fullest possible extent and giving every assistance to the investigation of the problem in long range terms.

If Mr. Justice Bayda is investigating this matter it is germaine to our debate tonight. The minister responsible should tell us when we can expect his report and recommendations. I am disappointed that there has been no mention of this important investigation. I look forward to seeing the results of the work of this commissioner. I look forward to recommendations which will allow grain deliveries to continue while ensuring that those employed in the industry are getting a fair and reasonable remuneration for their services. I believe that is the wish of everyone in the House.

What has been said tonight about the serious effects of strikes on the grain industry is well founded. I do not think we on this side are interested in speaking about it in the sense that we want to encourage damage to the grain industry. We are all interested in promoting that industry and would be extremely happy if we had a vibrant and successful agricultural industry. We are conscious of our responsibility as agriculturalists. We are living in a starving world. We have the responsibility to ensure that we try to serve the needs of the people of the world.

I shall end my remarks with a request to the government that it make information available at the earliest date with respect to the study being carried on by Mr. Justice Bayda so that we may help supply a reasonable solution to this perplexing problem.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, although the hour is late—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): —I am pleased to see my favourite constituent in the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): And I am pleased to see another constituent from the neighbouring riding of Medicine Hat.

Mr. Benjamin: He is kind of a half-decent fellow.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I want to thank my hon. friend from Vancouver South for introducing this motion. I am taking part in this debate because of the great concern felt by the citizens of western Canada over this issue. I am not getting letters and calls about little things like not being able to deliver to a country elevator. People are concerned about what is happening to the country. They ask "Where are we going?" We are in a real mess now. Grain movement on the Pacific Coast has been at a standstill for 42 per cent of the time during this crop year, yet we hear the same old arguments from the government. It is hogwash as far as my people are concerned.

The questions before us now are questions of national interest. What is happening to Canada? As I said a few moments ago, the ports have been closed for 90 days during this crop year. The government told us it wanted to wait a little longer before acting; it seems to us that until the pinch is felt down east there is no real pressure. It is interesting to note that grain from Western Canada is still flowing normally to eastern Canada.

The NDP did not want this debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Who said that? Where did you get that from?

An hon. Member: Frank Hamilton said it.

Mr. Benjamin: That was a mean thing to say, Frank. It is not even true.

● (0220)

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Hon. members opposite have said that this is a motion of desperation. I agree that it is a motion of desperation on behalf of a great number of Canadians. Grain is not moving from the Pacific seaboard, and it will not do so. The problem is far from over.

Not one speaker on the government side has mentioned inflation, which surely is the root cause of all our problems. If the longshoremen settle, we still have to deal with the foremen of the longshoremen, who are a unionized group and who told me on the telephone today that as soon as the longshoremen settle they will come out and tie up 90 per cent of the Pacific seaboard.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) mentioned that the government had chided us for having sad faces. I think we have good reason to have sad faces when we receive letters, telegrams and telephone calls from the grain producers of western Canada and from our overseas customers. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has no real appreciation of the situation in human terms. The message that I receive in letters and from telephone calls is that the first step in solving this problem is to get rid of Otto Lang.

We can well ask, where is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) tonight? I should like to go back to some of the statements he made on October 7, 1974, in the grain debate. The Minister of Labour, as reported at page 165 of Hansard, had this to say:

> —the governor in council, having decided that any work stoppage would adversely affect the national interest, made an order pursuant to section 181 of the Canada Labour Code, Part V, Industrial Relations, to suspend any work stoppage until the election was over.

A little further on he said:

> First, I take issue with those parties who consider that, by endorsing the commissioner's recommendations, the government has not acted impartially and is, in effect, encouraging so-called "inflationary" settlements.

We all know now that they sought the wind and are reaping the whirlwind. The settlement made last fall was an effective rate of 54.2 per cent. Further on in his speech on October 7, 1974, the Minister of Labour said:

> To say this dispute is disturbing would be to understate the case. It marks yet another labour relations fiasco in an industry which for years has been characterized by confrontation and even hostility.

Surely that is an indication of the kind of problem the government is facing on the Pacific seaboard. It is obvious that the government does not hesitate to withdraw the right to strike when an election is in the offing. After the election it wants to govern, but it does not seem very interested in accepting the responsibility. As I have said, not one member opposite has mentioned inflation tonight, the root cause of labour unrest in Canada.

Hon. members opposite have claimed that the people of Canada spoke on July 8. If the people of Canada had known on July 8 what they know now, we would have a different government in this country. My colleague from Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) mentioned the government has absolute control over the grain industry. About the only freedom that the western farmers have left is how much to plant. Surely the government must accept some responsibility for the tremendous bills, demurrage and broken contracts that will ensue from the stoppage on the Pacific seaboard. Mention was made of $30 million; my guess is that it will be closer to $50 million in this crop year.

In the part of the country I am from, western Saskatchewan, we move all our grain to the Pacific seaboard. I should like to go back about nine months and tell the House what these producers have been up against. On May 1, 1974, the Vancouver grain handlers threatened to go out on strike. On May 27, 1974, the Minister of Labour evoked a section of the labour act to prevent lock-out or strike action at Vancouver until after the July 8 federal election. On July 12, 1974, 2,500 Alberta meat packing company employees, locked out since June 5, may return to work by July 17, it was reported.

In August, 1974, Canada's west coast labour dispute remained unsolved. On August 31, grain movements continued to be snarled by labour interruptions. Striking Canadian marine officers paralysed shipping on the Great Lakes. On September 25 the Minister of Labour closed the door to further negotiations between Vancouver grain handlers and terminal operators by announcing government approval of the Perry report. On September 26 the lock-out and strike of Vancouver grain handlers entered its second month. This dispute and the strike at Thunder Bay brought exports of grain to a virtual standstill.

Legislation to end the Vancouver dispute was introduced in the House of Commons on October 7 and received royal assent on October 10. On October 12 grain handlers reported to work at Vancouver for the first time since August 23. On October 15, Mr. Justice Bayda was appointed to investigate the complex issue on the west coast. On October 30 grain started to move again on the St. Lawrence, the first to be moved since August 7. On November 21 the entire system of the B.C. railway was shut down by striking shopcraft workers. On November 23 the grain inspectors went out on strike. On November 27 meat graders across Canada joined the grain inspectors in strike action. On December 5 the federal government and the grain inspectors ratified a new 15-month agreement. On January 6 of 1975 the B.C. railway and shopcraft unions ratified a new nine-month agreement. On January 23 wildcat strikes occurred on the CNR. On February 18 weighmen at Canada's terminals went out on strike. On February 20 contract negotiations between the B.C. longshoremen and the B.C. Maritime Employers Association reached an impasse and strike action was approved. From then on the Pacific seaboard was shut down tight. Is it any wonder that we want to debate this issue tonight?

During the ruckus last fall, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent a telegram to the president of the United Grain Growers and said that the present settlement should not be considered a precedent for wage settlements in other sectors of the economy because the men in that dispute were trying to catch up with the longshoremen. We now know that that was utter nonsense. As I said before, the government started the problem on the Pacific seaboard last year with an effective settlement of 54.2 per cent. The government's own employees are asking for much less.

Why could we not have settled long ago and got the workers back to work? Why cannot Treasury Board start negotiating contracts before they expire? It seems to me that the government is purposely screwing up the country. We must remember that the Japanese are shrewd buyers. They are in a falling market now and they are rubbing their hands. As I say, farmer after farmer has written to me suggesting that as a first step in a solution we should get rid of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

During the ruckus last fall the minister in charge of the Wheat Board said, "Let us get grain moving again". That was the big thrust. Last fall we were in a rising market and producers were able to recoup some of their losses. The present situation is much more serious and harmful. Grain prices are falling. There is high-seeded acreage in the United States. Rapeseed is down $2 a bushel, wheat is down from $1 to $1.50 a bushel, and do not be misled by the asking price of the Canadian Wheat Board. When you are not able to deliver anything it does not matter what your asking price is. When we start to deliver, the price is going to be down $1 or $1.50 a bushel.

Farm organizations in the United States are asking for production controls. That shows how optimistic they are. This will add up to millions of dollars in lost sales and millions more because of a falling market.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) mentioned a Saskatchewan Wheat Pool publication, and I should like to refer to it briefly. In the words of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, which is the largest grain handling company in the country, provincial wide anger and frustration are growing as farmers see the devastating effects on our whole Canadian economy. Well attended meetings without exception expressed concern, particularly regarding grain sales lost, and revenue lost to producers. They urged the federal government to invoke measures to send the workers back and have the negotiations continue.

The Saskatchewan pool wants an impartial board established to get the workers back first. It says we are seriously testing the loyalty of our overseas customers, and the organization would welcome the calling of a general conference of industry, labour and government to determine a means to improve collective bargaining in Canada. That is a good suggestion for the government. I do not think anyone should have the right to strike in essential services. As I said before, there should be a start to bargaining before agreements expire.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I appreciate the appropriate remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) about our friends in the gallery tonight, and I echo his sentiments. I want to assure the House tonight that I will be brief, but I intend to make a specific comment that is somewhat personal, relating to the fact that last week I had the privilege of attending three farm meetings, two of which were in my constituency of Medicine Hat. They were good rural meetings. One was held at Bow Island and one at Burdett, small towns west of Medicine Hat. The third meeting was in Swift Current, Saskatchewan, in the constituency of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

At these meetings I had many personal contacts with farmers, and almost the only topic they wished to hear about and discuss was the one we are debating tonight, namely, the complete tie-up of grain handling facilities in western Canada, and particularly those on the west coast. These farmers were annoyed, frustrated, and in fact completely infuriated at the complete lack of action by the government here in Ottawa. I am relating their reaction rather than my own feelings.

These farmers were well informed as to what these tie-ups have cost them in a personal way. They were well informed, for example, about the 15,000 boxcars full of grain scattered on sidings all the way from the shipping points on the prairies out to the west coast. They were well informed about the incredible demurrage charges that every prairie grain grower must help to pay, and they were informed about the dissatisfaction of foreign customers at late or non-deliveries. They are very much aware of these facts and of the shrinking reputation of Canada throughout the world as an on-schedule supplier of quality products.

These same farmers told me in no uncertain terms what they thought of the situation. Most of them went even further, and said forcefully what they thought of the increases that have been suggested. In their opinion these increases were not justified. Their message to me was very clear. They said to get the grain moving again immediately, and not allow any more exorbitant settlements such as the one that grew out of the Perry Report last fall. You must admit this is a tall order for any group to fill in the atmosphere that exists at this time.

Just a week ago a delegation of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association visited the various grain handling agencies and facilities on the west coast. They were told that as soon as the longshoremen go back to work the grain handlers are ready to go out on strike once again because management has not yet signed the contract that came from that Perry Report settlement last fall. Surely that is a rather frightening outlook.

The same delegation reported that these two groups, the longshoremen and the grain handlers, are about to amalgamate into one union to increase their bargaining power.

I seriously question if government members are truly aware of just how serious this grain situation is. Let us give these prairie farmers some credit for knowing their own business. They are concerned enough to send a delegation out to the coast to observe the situation at first hand.

The time is long overdue for a new Canadian Wheat Board farmers' advisory committee to become operative. I am sure members are aware of the vote that is to take place in respect of this long overdue advisory group. I feel certain that the subject of the debate tonight will be the first major policy item to come before that important group. I suggest that group cannot meet too soon after the election this coming spring in order to sort out this situation.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, some members might ask what I know about raising or merchandising grain, and therefore why I should want to speak on the motion moved by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). In the first place I am just as concerned as any other member of this House, and any citizen of our country, that a small handful of irresponsible people should be allowed periodically to shut off the flow of wheat and grain. This group of people is presently posing a threat to every single sector of the Canadian economy.

The power held by these grain handlers and other groups of workers in essential services has to be checked. I have said in the past, as the government is saying now, that the right to strike is one of the legitimate tools of labour-management negotiations, especially in cases where the workers simply cannot get management to negotiate in good faith. However, unlike the government, I feel we have learned that the right to strike has been badly abused in recent years, and is certainly being abused today.

It is obvious to all of us that too many groups of essential workers are using the right to strike to blackmail the government and also the Canadian people at large. We have seen cases in recent months where workers have walked off their jobs over some petty grievance without even taking the trouble to see whether the grievance could be settled by arbitration or negotiation. We are not living in the old days of the sweat shop with 12 or 14-hour days on fixed wages, although that might apply to members of parliament tonight. We are not living in a time when workers are victimized on every hand by management. When you consider our very advanced and comprehensive labour relations then you have to say that the unions have had an advantage over those who are not organized.

In fact, every time a union goes on strike, especially a prolonged strike, the non-union strikers take the brunt of the strike, not to mention the innocent citizens who have nothing to do with the issue in question. In this regard I think of those on fixed incomes and the working poor who are not unionized. The fact of the matter is that far too many unions today have found they can use the strike weapon to bludgeon management and blackmail the government into awarding unreasonable and excessive settlements just to get the country moving again. We have been blackmailed long enough.

A few years ago we had the example of elevator repairmen remaining on strike for several months. The government did not take any steps to end the strike, nor did it take any steps to ensure that innocent people were provided essential elevator service during the strike. There were cases of elderly people being trapped in high-rise buildings without access to food, drugs or medical care. In many cases volunteers walked up and down stairs in those buildings to render assistance to people trapped in the buildings. In some cases people actually died from heart seizures after walking upstairs, and others because they could not obtain medical assistance. I say that such an attitude on the part of a union or government is inexcusable. Anyone who would refuse to render assistance by refusing to cross a picket line is simply looking for a convenient excuse to exercise a terrible kind of behaviour.

At the present time, thousands of railway cars are tied up on railway sidings. These cars cannot be used for any purpose until they have been emptied. Dozens of ships are lying in anchor at Vancouver harbour waiting to be loaded. This is the second time in a few months this has happened. Thousands of workers across this country are idle because of this strike by a handful of workers in an essential category. During a crucial period in this strike we did not have a Minister of Labour to answer to this House or to take positive steps to get these people back to work.

I would say that in this case every Canadian is affected in some way and will continue to be affected for some time to come. There is no doubt in my mind that we will lose even more markets for grain because countries around the world to whom we have been selling have already decided Canada is not a dependable supplier. We accept orders from countries such as Japan and then keep them waiting for weeks or months while we watch grain handlers, railways workers or some other group of workers walk off the job over a grievance. I do not say that their grievances always are petty or frivolous, but this often is the case.

Even in cases where the grievance is legitimate there are legitimate and responsible means available for the settling of the dispute. We have reached the point where such disputes must be arbitrated whether or not the unions wish it. Settlements will have to be made while the workers are on the job. There are too many cases today in which unions announce in advance their intention to strike when their contracts come up for renegotiation. They do this sometimes months before the expiration of a legal contract. This certainly does not represent responsibility. The right to strike includes the responsibility to negotiate in good faith. There are laws under which it is illegal for certain essential workers to strike. Even in this case we see strike after strike, very often in places where the disputes were over issues in respect of which the workers were bound by contract.

I am still waiting to see whether the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) will in fact lay criminal charges against some workers and labour leaders who recently have gone on strike and who have refused to go back to work when told to do so. If charges should not be laid and followed up, we can expect other unions and their leaders to flaunt the laws and resort to further blackmail.

It might appear to some people that I am against labour and the right to strike in any circumstance. If people believe this, then they have not been listening. I am, and will continue to be, against allowing a group of people in essential services to tie up the country every few weeks or months in order to force their employers to award them unreasonable and excessive increases in pay and other benefits. The Canadian people have a right to be protected from such irresponsible actions. Who is to protect them if we do not?

I have heard that the Canadian Wheat Board has advised farmers in the western provinces not to grow too much wheat in the coming season because it does not appear that we will be able to deliver the wheat we sell. It would seem that even a government agency today is assuming that wheat shipments throughout the country and to our foreign buyers might not be met because of a probable strike of essential workers. If this is a fact, and I have reason to believe it is, this certainly represents a sorry state of affairs.

On the radio news last night—since it is now three o'clock in the morning—it was announced that a settlement had been reached between Treasury Board and the General Labour and Trades Group. Of course, I congratulate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for having been able to make such an announcement. Certainly this situation has continued for far too long. I happen to believe there could have been a settlement a good deal earlier.

It has already been mentioned that we have been unable to deliver grain to China under a contract signed last year. It now appears that we will not be able to deliver in respect of a more recent contract with China. It has been suggested that the United States and other wheat producing countries will benefit from our inability to keep our commitments. This lends some credence to the reports that our farmers have been advised to cut back on planned wheat and grain crops. When I consider that this state of affairs has been brought about by a small percentage of the workers in the grain handling category, and when I consider it has been allowed to happen by the federal government with apparent disregard for the rights and welfare for the majority of Canadian citizens, I have to ask what is happening to our country. I have to wonder whether anybody is in charge of the country and, if so, whether or not they know what they are doing.

Our country cannot continue to fumble around with these vital issues year after year. There must come a time when the right to strike should take second place to the interests of the country and our citizens. If the unions continue to abuse the right to strike, and blackmail and bludgeon the country at will, then we must consider the wisdom of taking away the right to strike. At least we will have to consider taking away the right to strike from those workers in essential services, people who in the past have used this weapon for their own purposes without regard to the interests of the majority of Canadians.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, there are a few comments I would like to place on the record with respect to the motion which is before us this early in the morning, specifically dealing with the grain handlers' strike. Since the time in 1967 when the present law was introduced and passed by this House certain conditions have changed which make it incumbent on all members of the House to examine seriously what is best for the country in respect of labour management. We have to consider whether or not the so called right to strike in essential services—which I will define more precisely later on—is beneficial to the country and more specifically whether it is of benefit to the individual worker who uses that weapon. I have serious doubts that it is to his advantage.

I think we are all familiar with the effect which this strike is having on the grain trade and on Canada's reputation. We heard today about the demurrage problem and that this money will have to be paid by the western Canadian farmer, a person who is facing tremendous increases in input costs as he is looking to the 1975 planting season, a person who has had to tolerate quietly, as the third party affected by the strike, the fact that whatever settlement will be made, whether a settlement legislated in the House or one agreed to by the two parties involved, its cost will be borne by him, and yet the input he had in that settlement was minimal.

We are also cognizant of the fact that as a result of the previous grain handlers' strike we will not recover until some time this summer from the effects of that strike so far as our commitments and our grain deliveries are concerned. That is not to include the present disruption that we hope has now been concluded with the tentative settlement that was to have been made today.

The Canadian people cannot simply state on the floor of the House of Commons, or in the editorial pages of our newspapers, that the right to strike is a basic right, irrespective of its cost. We must seriously consider whether or not there is a better way to resolve differences between labour and management. As Canadian farmers on the prairies are contemplating what to plant in the next few months, they are faced with the problem not only of grain deliveries but, as the frost will leave the ground, with road restrictions and with a reduced period of time for their grain deliveries so that those grain deliveries, which they thought they could make in the winter, will now have to be undertaken in the spring seeding time.

These are the practical problems that farmers have to face because of the strikes that have occurred. The public interest must be considered, and we say it must take precedence over union or management action. Our reputation as an international grain supplying country is at stake.

With regard to food aid, at the food conference in Rome the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) made a clear commitment to the third world that Canada stood behind its former commitments on food aid, and that we were willing to increase that food aid. We have not had the capacity, the capability or, for that matter, the moral courage to say that even though the strike continued, human need, human hunger and the spectre of death by starvation convince us that we must allow grain to move so that the hungry of the world can live. Surely that is a pretty high price to pay for the so called right to strike.

It is time that we looked at some of these issues outside of partisan debate and considered whether we do not dehumanize ourselves by retaining certain principles that we think are virtually inalienable. Surely the right to live is also an inalienable right of those who are looking for some help, and the help that we are giving at best will only give many people in the world a chance for a meager existence.

We must look at the moral implications. Have we in fact doomed certain people to death because we did not have the moral courage to say that there are more important things than X number of dollars in a wage package? I am sure all members of the House have received letters from farmers and, surprisingly, not only from farmers but from businessmen, housewives and people who are simply fed-up with the tie-up in the country, whether one is talking about airlines, the post office or, as we are debating specifically tonight, the strike at the port of Vancouver.

What is happening with productivity? When is the last time that in a labour contract we have seriously considered productivity? What we think about is "what did the other guy get" and, "I want that, plus a little bit more". We talk about catching up. So long as we have inflation, can we seriously look at productivity? How are we to retain our competitiveness as a world trader on which a large part of our standard of living depends if increases are to take place, whether in the price of goods or labour management settlements, and if we do not relate some of these increases to productivity?

I think that with increased productivity labour has a right to demand something in return. That is a dimension of labour management that the government should consider. I simply ask, why do we not give more credence, more emphasis to the whole concept of productivity as it affects labour negotiations in this country in which we pride ourselves on the strength of its economy, its high standard of living, and the generous social services that the people of Canada are making possible through their tax dollars?

How is it possible, with a population of 23 million people, that there is only one industrial country which had more man days lost through strikes than we did? Does that just mean that we are more greedy than anyone else, or does it show a fundamental problem in our society? With a population of 23 million, 9.2 million man days are lost, a 60 per cent increase over the year before. Is that a record of which the government is proud, and a record which its backbenchers want to talk about and support and defend? Surely that is a red flag to all members in this House that something is deeply wrong.

What about the right to strike? Most Canadians would argue that the right to strike is a basic human right whether it be in the private sector or the public sector. It is my opinion that it is time that the government, in consensus with the people of Canada, designate essential services. I believe that labour is not so blind and is not so tied up with its own labour packages that it could not participate in that process of deciding what are essential services. Once having decided that, the parties could come to an agreement that through a public disputes commission—or whatever label they want; I am not tied to labels—we would use a method whereby when negotiations at the table break down the matter would be submitted to arbitration, or to a public disputes commission which would bring about a final settlement.

Negotiation is compromise, and in a democratic society we must have a larger measure of compromise if it is to exist. Surely in the right to strike and in the pressures of society today we do not see enough of that compromise.

I am glad that the settlement has taken place today, but does it take place finally because everything else breaks down and we say: okay, fine, let's settle? That is not compromise.

A question I have been wrestling with for some time now is not simply whether people in essential services have the right to strike but whether people have what I like to call the right to work, whether in the private sector or the public sector. Does the Canadian worker who does not want to join a labour union have the right also, if his union withdraws services, to continue working? If I want to accept the right to strike for myself, do I have the right to say to another fellow that even though he does not want to strike he must do so? Does he not have the right to work? Does he not have the right to contribute, or has unionism become so powerful and so all embracing that it can tell a worker that he cannot work, or if he does certain things will be done to convince him that he had better strike?

In Manitoba specifically with respect to essential services this question has been asked of me, and it bothers me that governments feel that while a person may have the right not to join a union, he still must pay union dues and cannot withdraw himself totally from a union. For example, let us say that he has a personal conviction that he does not want to be a union member. There is then a closed shop policy whereby, if he does not become a union member he cannot work.

There have been cases where a person was willing to give the amount of the union dues expected of him to charity. I am talking about public servants. Governments did not allow him to opt out, and I wonder if we have not gone too far on the other side of the ledger on the right to strike and not given enough thought to the man who says that he wants to work regardless of what his union will do.

I personally am convinced that direct strike action is more damaging than healthy. I am convinced that many of the packages that are signed after a period of strike will not enable the workers to recover the losses they sustained during the length of the strike. Perhaps the strike action is outdated in many cases today. Years ago labour had a legitimate moral position which often forced them to withdraw their services—they were struggling for pensions, better working hours and conditions, but is that the position today? Is it not sometimes that, as they accuse management of doing, they are going to get every penny then can, irrespective of their responsibility to society? I think it is incumbent upon government and Canadian society to look at the strike question very closely in order to be certain that we find interim solutions to our present situation in respect of grain handling.

The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) pointed out to the House tonight that the facilities at the port of Churchill are not being used to capacity. To move grain from Scott, Saskatchewan, to Rotterdam via Churchill rather than the Pacific coast means a saving of 15 cents per bushel; via the east coast the saving is 32 cents per bushel; via the St. Lawrence ports there is an 18 cent per bushel saving, and via Thunder Bay and direct overseas the saving is 11 cents per bushel.

As a result of the strike has the government considered what is wrong in Vancouver and our other ports, and what interim and long term changes should be made? I want to say to the House again that the right to strike today is damaging, and the short term benefits achieved do not make up for the damage the workers sustain. For every right in democracy there is a corresponding and correlating responsibility. It is time that society look not only at rights but at responsibilities, and we seem to have moved away from that point. It is time that this government showed leadership and responsibility and, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Canadian public would recognize that responsibility and follow it.

● (0310)

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Madam Speaker, it is gratifying to see you occupying the chair at this late hour. In International Women's Year it is gratifying to demonstrate to the opposition that our women work as long and hard as their male counterparts.

Mr. Nowlan: That's a pretty good start for your maiden speech.

Mr. Maine: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has added his comment to the debate. He is a good example to bad drivers—putting his mouth in motion before putting his brain in gear. The Conservative motion, in referring to the strike which has been settled, flogs a dead horse. But that is not unusual. That party has been flogging dead horses for years. For the benefit of those who say they are concerned about strikes, I draw the attention of the House to notice of motion No. 48 on the order paper, standing in my name, which reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the appointment of a special committee of this House for the purpose of finding an alternative to the use of strikes for settling labour-management disputes and thereby protect innocent third parties whose lives are disrupted during strikes in both the private and public sectors of the economy which threaten to be more serious than in past years owing to the large number of contracts to be renewed in the current year.

I know the Finkelman report deals with strikes in the public service, but we must also be concerned about strikes in the private sector. If hon. members opposite are serious in what they say, they will convince their leaders to ask for my notice of motion to be debated as soon as possible, and passed, so that the serious problem with which it deals can be tackled.

Last evening at six o'clock I spoke to the chairman of my local agricultural committee. I asked, how is the strike situation affecting farmers in Ontario? He said, "It is not affecting farmers in Ontario or farmers in Wellington riding, but the people in Canada are concerned because strikes are hindering the delivery of food to deprived people in other countries." He, himself, was concerned about the effect the strike would have on prairie farmers and about the loss of money to their economy. Compared with the losses resulting from the present strike situation, the losses we suffered from eggs are small indeed. An egg farmer on my local agricultural committee hoped that grain would soon move again: most importantly, he mentioned the rising antagonism of Ontario farmers to unions. Such antagonism is potentially disastrous.

It is now 3.15 a.m. I have been here since 8 p.m. of the previous evening. Not until 12.35 a.m. did I hear a constructive comment from the opposition. It was made not by a Conservative member, but by a Créditiste member, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). He made the first positive suggestion that I heard from the opposition. He talked about profit-sharing and guaranteed annual income. Perhaps the Créditistes woke up the Conservatives because after that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) also mentioned profit sharing.

Mr. Whittaker: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Maine: Madam Speaker, I prefer to finish my speech first.

Mr. Nowlan: You are like Eugene Whelan, sitting and hearing nothing.

Mr. Maine: That is better than sitting and saying nothing, and I have been here all evening. The high points of the opposition's contribution were the suggestions made by the hon. member for Rimouski and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Then the debate sank to a low level when the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) gave a history lesson. He talked about the burden of demurrage charges on farmers as being something new and suggested farmers should be able to sue. But does not every strike, whether in the public or private sector, injure innocent third parties and cause inconvenience?

Whenever a strike occurs in industry, some innocent people are inconvenienced. Demurrage charges, placing a burden upon people who are not directly involved in strikes, are nothing new. This problem is not one which affects only the farmer. It is one which should be tackled in both the private and the public sector because the total number of people involved is so large. If western farmers opposite are really concerned for their industry they will persuade their leaders to agree to bringing my motion forward for immediate consideration so that we can come to grips with this issue in a manner which is fair to all concerned.

I ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to join this debate and show some of the members of the Conservative Party the error of their ways.

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the points which I would have raised in a full speech on this motion have already been fully and adequately voiced by my hon. friends on this side of the chamber. As this important debate draws near its end, I simply wish to express on behalf of the official opposition, which took the initiative in bringing about this debate, our very deep appreciation to all the House of Commons staff who have so willingly and with dedication stayed on the job.

An hon. Member: They did not go on strike.

Mr. O'Sullivan: They provide a shining example which might well be followed by hon. members who sit on the treasury benches. I think in particular of the Hansard staff, the protective staff, the officers at the Table, the sound system operators, the translators and those who operate the transportation system to the Confederation Building. We also wish to recognize that some especially diligent members of the press gallery have been on hand to report our proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't forget the cafeteria staff.

Mr. O'Sullivan: With the help of these people and any others I may have overlooked, including the staff of the cafeteria, an issue of great importance has been debated, the purpose of this chamber has been fulfilled and the people of Canada duly served by the House of Commons. On behalf of the official opposition and, I would hope, on behalf of all hon. members, I wish to acknowledge their invaluable assistance and thank them deeply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (0320)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether this is a late hour or an early hour, but I want to impress upon you how composed and dignified you look as you grace this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: At the same time I should like to impress upon this chamber, and the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) who has just spoken, that after several hours of debate he still does not comprehend what we are talking about. When he talks about demurrage charges he is talking about peanuts. Out in western Canada we are talking about millions of dollars.

The points have been well made by my colleagues on this side of the House. I do not intend to reiterate them, but I trust there is some member on the other side among the few who are left who will take this message to the cabinet ministers who have been absent from the chamber for several hours. If there is one thing of the utmost importance it is that it is the responsibility of the backbenchers on the government side to impress upon the cabinet that this is a very important issue. We trust they will not allow us to get into this position again where we have to ask for adjournment of the business of the House to protect the interests of the Canadian people in the House of Commons, the highest court in the land.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would most assuredly like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan). We certainly appreciate the services that we have received from all the members of the House of Commons staff. I associate myself with those portions of his remarks.

However, I would like to say something to those hon. members who have given us good advice by telling us what to tell our caucus, what to tell our cabinet ministers and the government. Let me assure them that what we will say is that we stood as Liberals, and we stood in favour of the right of the individual to strike. We stood as Liberals and as responsible people. We honoured the strikers, respected them, and indeed solved the strike jointly with them. We stood as Liberals who said equally and together, not differently, that we understood where our government stood. Not only did we defend our ministers but we respected them, and we hope they are prepared and ready for the work to come tomorrow, because they work very hard and long into the evenings.

We want hon. members opposite to know that we tolerated them and listened to them. But we did not agree with them for one moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): According to section (13) of Standing Order 26 I am satisfied that the debate has been concluded and I therefore declare the motion carried. The House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. this day, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 3.26 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTION COMMITTEE STUDY SALE TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the inability of the Canadian Post Office to solve its constant labour problems, decrease its huge annual deficit, or to even provide satisfactory service to the Canadian people, and in light of the fact that private parcel delivery services in both Canada and the United States show healthy profits while guaranteeing their service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House set up an all-party committee to study the feasibility of selling the entire post office equipment and operation to private business.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion, being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF CREDIT CARDS AND HIGH INTEREST RATES ON INFLATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the generalized use of credit cards has resulted in a substantial increase in the number of frauds, and since also in the final analysis, consumers have to foot the bill for this new type of fraud, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House instruct without debate the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to carry out an investigation in order to determine the extent to which this practice increases inflation, and also the extent to which the exorbitant interest rates of banks contribute to inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who objected to a motion a while ago by identifying himself. He said no, and rose in his place, as required by the Standing Orders. I hope that other hon. members will follow this practice in the future.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE ABORTION PROVISION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-385, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

He said: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that there are very deep and sincerely held differences of opinion on this matter, this bill would remove the subject of abortion from the Criminal Code thus making it a matter for those directly concerned and the medical profession and provincial health authorities. In addition, the bill gives effect to the principles outlined in recommendations 126 and 127 of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and is supportive of the views recently expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Motion agreed to, the bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DATE AND AGENDA OF ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF SPECIFIC PROPOSAL ON CONSENSUS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Prime Minister referred to a conference on the economy. I assume the Prime Minister was referring to the conference of first ministers to be held shortly after Easter. Could the Prime Minister give us the precise dates of that conference and indicate whether, generally, it will be a conference open to the public or generally a closed conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had answers to my letters from all the premiers on the subject of the dates, the agenda and the question of whether it should be an open or closed conference. Some answers are in the form of written letters and others were by telephone or telex. The general decision is to have the conference on the Wednesday and Thursday after Easter week. The dates are the ninth and tenth. The items will be, first, the oil and gas problem, pricing and so on, and the second will be the economy. The first day, by agreement of most of the first ministers concerned, likely will be an open conference. As to the second day it is likely to be closed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister requested that the subject of consensus which is being pursued by his government be on the agenda or is his government putting before the conference of first ministers a specific proposal incorporating a form of consensus to be considered by the conference of first ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the federal position will be made known at the time of the conference. It is a practice rather well respected that position papers generally are not made public in advance. If I remember the early practice, it was based on the desire not to try to encourage participants to harden their positions in advance on any one subject and to permit everyone to come to the conference with as open a mind as possible. In this sense we do not intend to publish any papers in advance, and the exact position taken by the federal government on these two items, of course, will be made known at the time.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sure the fact that the Prime Minister answered a slightly different question than I asked him was purely accidental, not intentional. I did not ask the Prime Minister whether he intended to publish the position of the government before the conference met. I asked him whether the government was placing before the conference a specific proposal incorporating a form of consensus to be considered by the conference.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question is the same and the answer would be the same. The Leader of the Opposition is asking me to say now what I will say at the conference.

Mr. Stanfield: No, I am not.

Mr. Trudeau: He is asking me whether I am going to put a certain position in front of the conference, and I ask him to wait and see.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES ON WAGE AND SALARY INCREASES—REASON FOR FAILURE TO ACT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the advice of the Governor of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance yesterday that the rates at which the money incomes of various groups in Canadian society are now increasing are extraordinary, and his further statement that nothing would do more to improve the prospects for the Canadian economy than a rapid slackening in the tempo of this race for higher money incomes, would the minister indicate if, based on this concrete advice that highlights the urgency of the matter, he intends to take any concrete steps to ensure a decline in this race for higher money incomes through the issuing of at least interim guidelines for income increases that would apply until the consensus chats are over, as they appear to drone on and on?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is this not the same abuse of the rules that we had once before when a supplementary question was asked which was not supplementary at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was watching carefully for a connection with the conference and noted that the hon. member was at least good enough to draw a tenuous connection in the last sentence of his question to the economic conference to which reference had been made. Had it not been for that, I would have made the same point that has just been raised by the hon. member.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Governor of the Bank of Canada of course recognizes the same problem we have recognized for some time. This is the purpose of the consensus process, to try to evolve an understanding whereby various claims against the economy from various sectors can be moderated along the lines suggested by the Governor.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the further statement from the Governor of the Bank of Canada that there is in fact an open race going on among these income groups for larger increases in money incomes, and the race is occurring in a period in which no increase in average real income per capita is being achieved and none of the participants can gain except at the expense of others, and in view of the minister's continual failure to issue guidelines or to intervene officially to ensure that there will be more restraint in income demands,—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stevens: —would the minister indicate if he has hesitated to act as he has been told by certain of these organized income groups to not interfere?

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have read that particular passage in the Governor's report.

PUBLIC WORKS

POSSIBILITY DREDGING WORK BEING DONE BY UNITED STATES OR PUBLICLY OWNED COMPANIES—NUMBER OF JOBS LOST

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him, in view of the statement last night by the minister that he is considering inviting bids from U.S. dredging companies as well as considering some form of public ownership, whether he can tell the House how far he has gone in his negotiations with U.S. firms and to what extent has the department examined the public ownership options?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there have been no negotiations with any U.S. firms, and the advisability of the public ownership of certain operations, the pros and cons, is under continual review, not only in the dredging field but also in many others.

● (1420)

Mr. Saltsman: I have a supplementary for the same minister. Has the minister calculated the loss in Canadian jobs if the dredging contract is let to United States firms as against keeping these jobs in Canada, under either a department of his ministry or under a Crown corporation?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is one of the few things which tempts us to try to work out arrangements with certain existing Canadian firms, in spite of the difficulties in which they now find themselves.

HOUSING

INABILITY OF MOBILE HOME OWNERS TO OBTAIN $500 GRANT BECAUSE OF LEASE PERIOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. My question deals with the new $500 grant to purchasers of new homes.

Is the minister aware that 90 per cent of buyers of mobile homes cannot obtain the grant because they do not have five-year leases on their lots? If so, does he intend to take the necessary steps to make new owners eligible for that grant?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation with reference to mobile home owners. The basic reason we have set a five year land lease is to make certain that it is a permanent residence. I want to look at the nature of those land leases and also those people who move on a fairly regular basis due to the mobility of their jobs. This came up before the parliamentary committee, and the president of CMHC and I will be looking into this.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I would like to ask the minister whether he intends to study the contract specifically, because he will see that 90 per cent of owners have only one-year leases.

[English]

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I understand that, and I will be looking at that contractual arrangement.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I should like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs whether he is concerned about the problems of farmers who leave their farms because they have become non-profitable for lack of income owing to our agricultural policy. Farmers who build a house for the first time are not entitled to the $500 grant because they were producers, they already had houses on their farms, and they own only one house now. Can the minister assure the House that he will look into the possibility of helping those farmers who leave their farms to settle in the cities and benefit from the $500 grant?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can look after these people in a very positive way through our Assisted Home Ownership Plan.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF GENERAL ALEXANDER M. HAIG JR., SUPREME ALLIED COMMANDER IN EUROPE, AND MISS KAREN MAGNUSSEN

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the second round of questioning, may I take a moment to draw to the attention of hon. members the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor. I refer to General Alexander M. Haig Jr. who has just recently assumed the position of Supreme Allied Commander in Europe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If it can be taken as a good omen that the presence of the General in the gallery happens to coincide with an unofficial distinguished ambassador of good will on behalf of Canada, so be it. I refer of course to the happy presence beside the general of Miss Karen Magnussen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DECLINE IN REAL DOMESTIC PRODUCT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTRODUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Here we go.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The rumbling among the rabble shows a very natural fear of my question.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. The real domestic product declined in Canada at an annual rate during January of 23 per cent—a truly shocking decline—following a steady decrease during the previous nine months. In view of these figures, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has come to the realization that new industrial incentives must be introduced without further delay to restore the economy to a satisfactory pace and, if so, when will they be announced?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In the usual way, at the usual time, Mr. Speaker, if they do happen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I always wait until the applause dies down but I have a supplementary question. Judging by the quality of the Prime Minister's non-answer, is it not obvious that in the business of laying eggs the Minister of Agriculture has a serious competitor in the Prime Minister?

IMMIGRATION

ACCEPTABILITY OF ALLEGED BEHAVIOUR OF TED PATRICK—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBLE CRIMINAL RECORD IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It concerns the case of Miss Debbie Dudgeon, a 21-year old Orangeville lady who claims to have been held against her will by Ted Patrick who is also known as "Black Lightning" and who she claims attempted to deprogram her from her belief in Roman Catholicism. In view of the fact that Mr. Patrick is an American who is alleged to have been involved in four similar cases in southern Ontario, has the minister investigated this and if so, is he satisfied that Mr. Patrick's behaviour is acceptable to the government of Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing this to my attention. I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question. While the minister is investigating this would he undertake to report back to the House whether Mr. Patrick has been convicted of any crimes relating to this sort of behaviour in the United States before coming to Canada, and secondly, whether he had secured a working permit from the Canadian government which would allow him to receive money for his activity in Canada prior to his involvement in this Orangeville case?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will take that as notice also.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PIPELINE AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that Canadian and United States energy officials are reported to have completed an agreement for the transportation of natural gas and oil through pipelines in each other's territories, can the minister elaborate for the House what main items have been agreed upon?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the hon. member's question is not quite correct. No agreement has been reached. There have been two sets of negotiating meetings between representatives of the two countries with respect to a general pipeline treaty of the kind the Prime Minister referred to in his December, 1973 statement. In effect, the purpose of the treaty would be to guarantee the passage of hydrocarbons across each other's territory, moving from one country to the other.

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In those discussions is consideration being given to a requirement that both countries comply to each other's standards with respect to ecology and environmental protection in these operations?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, each country which is to be host to a pipeline would, of course, have to determine its own environmental standards for that particular pipeline. In other words, if there is a further expansion of the Interprovincial Pipeline through the U.S. that will be governed by the standards in the relevant states of the United States and the U.S. federal government. In that sense, the treaty would not cover this. This is handled by domestic law. There is recognition, however, that the standards which might be imposed, whether by way of local taxation or other requirements, should on the whole, be mutual on either side. There should not be any exceptional charge disguised in any way for passage across the territory.

● (1430)

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if it is the intent of officials in both countries to include the proposed hook-ups to the Mackenzie pipeline in these agreements?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the treaty would be one, if there is to be one, of general application and would not apply to any specific pipeline system. In Canadian terms, it would obviously secure our position with regard to the Interprovincial line and Lakeland pipelines, and also with regard to the Portland pipeline. In American terms, if there is to be a Mackenzie Valley pipeline which, of course, has not yet been determined, it would be governed, but there would be no specific reference in a treaty of general application.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DISQUALIFICATION OF RURAL RESIDENTS FROM BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since increasing numbers of Canadians every day have to use the services of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, since many areas in Canada are considered as rural, areas in which employment opportunities are limited, and since the commission seems to have adopted a policy for disqualifying people living in such areas from benefits made available by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, is the minister aware of this problem; are his officials reviewing the policy; and is a degree of discretion applied in dealing with the people of the areas I mentioned.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the premise to the hon. member's question, wherein he implies that there is a policy to discriminate against people in rural areas, is wrong.

An hon. Member: He's right on.

Mr. Andras: If the hon. member or any other hon. member has a specific case to bring to my attention, I will be glad to explore it and consider all the implications for the administration in that area. Otherwise, I do not see that the review the hon. member is calling for is required.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have brought specific problems to the minister's attention. The question is, is his department reviewing this very serious situation and will changes be made to this act, because it discriminates against a large segment of our population.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there are intended changes to the act. After the hon. member has had the opportunity to review them, perhaps he can make his case. In the meantime, I suggest that he has brought forward a genuine and I am sure honest matter of disagreement.

HOUSING

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF SENIOR CITIZENS UNITS AS RESULT OF POLICY SHIFT—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Given the low priority accorded to housing by this government, as indicated by the capital spending budget of CMHC, and given this government's cut-back in funding to provincial governments for socially assisted housing programs, is the minister aware that this shift in federal housing policy is directly accountable for a shortfall of some 4,000 senior citizen units in Ontario alone and that this situation is duplicated in every province of Canada?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously cannot be serious about the low priority the federal government gives housing, as there has been an increase in the non-capital budget of 92 per cent. The budget for housing has been increased, so that housing obviously has a very high priority. In addition, with the help of hon. members, Bill C-46 could pass after short debate. This would release perhaps $1 billion for housing. I would welcome the same degree of flexibility on the part of the province of Ontario as I have tried to show that government. I would certainly welcome some degree of flexibility on the part of the province of Ontario. If they are really spending as much as they say, perhaps we can combine our priorities so that we can build as many houses as are needed for senior citizens, low income Canadians and other Canadians.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I point out that I have a statement by the minister which says that the CMHC capital spending budget is to be increased 12 per cent this year. Ontario is increasing its spending by 50 per cent in this area. In the face of this major shift in federal housing policy—as indeed there has been—away from socially assisted housing to assistance for those in middle income groups, will the minister undertake to refer to committee the capital spending budget of CMHC so that there can be parliamentary investigation of this major shift in housing policy.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the question. Making available $175 million in loans for public housing is hardly a downgrading of responsibility. Certainly, the question of capital budgets will be open for discussion when estimates will be before the committee shortly. If the hon. member's representations are being made on behalf of the province of Ontario, I can only say they have a strange way of getting co-operation.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF TAX ON HYMN BOOKS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the vast majority of churches across Canada are maintained by voluntary public subscriptions of private individuals, and as the 7 per cent import duty on hymn books is creating hardship on already strained church budgets, will the minister consider withdrawing this tax, in the best interests of Canadians.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will want to look at that question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFUSAL OF SNOWBIRDS TO ATTEND HAMILTON AIR SHOW—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Is it correct that the Snowbirds have refused an invitation to appear at the International Air Show at Hamilton. If so, can the Canadian Heritage Warplanes Association anticipate that since the forces of other countries, such as the United States, will be in attendance, that some Canadian Armed Froces participation is possible.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that the Snowbirds would add greatly to any event. I will have to check their schedule to see if they will be able to attend.

SHORTAGE OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS FOR PLANTING SEASON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As Canada Manpower will not allow farmers to hire foreign workers until after August 15, and as many farmers in southern Ontario are threatening to reduce or eliminate the production of several crops because they cannot get local help for the planting season, what new initiatives has the minister taken in order to alleviate this serious agricultural crisis?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the information conveyed to the hon. member is absolutely wrong. I have said many times that our priorities are to provide Canadians if Canadians are available and willing to take these jobs; that, failing that, and it sometimes happens, we have a formal program, which we introduced in the interest of farmers, with the West Indies and Mexico to bring in under contractual arrangements, formally arrived at, offshore seasonal workers in quantities which will not create any problems for them. Only after that are we prepared to open up individual arrangements with foreign workers. If the farmers will co-operate with manpower offices in their areas or other areas of the country, they need not fear not having available people to work and harvest their crops.

Mr. Blackburn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's answer, how possible is it for farmers in southern Ontario and other parts of Canada to import through Canada Manpower offshore workers during the short planting season—because that is what I am talking about. I am not talking about the harvest; I am talking about the two to four week planting season when farmers find it difficult to get local help. Even though local helpers may be registered with manpower offices, they will not work in the fields. Let me make a suggestion: why cannot such farmers bring in offshore help on a temporary basis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether it is proper now to pursue a philosophical discussion about the approach which should be taken on this question. Perhaps the matter might best be settled privately between the hon. member and the minister.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON AID PROGRAM FOR PRODUCERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has he any progress to report about his discussions with the ministers of agriculture of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick concerning support for potato markets, or any diversion program, or whatever it is that he discussed with them.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we met with them yesterday evening and made four suggestions, three of which I believe they want to consider with their producers today in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and let us know if they are acceptable.

• (1440)

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF MARKETING STUDIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continuing deterioriation in the market place of table stock potatoes from these two provinces, and in light of the minister's earlier remarks about marketing studies that have been done by his department, has he yet released these studies or made any recommendations to either of these two provinces with regard to this fundamental issue?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had general discussions with the ministers of agriculture from both Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Our findings have not been made public. We discussed the general content of what we should be doing about marketing. It appears they are both concerned about the way their product is being marketed and about whether they should be doing anything differently from the way they are at present. They are very determined to do something now with regard to having a different kind of selling system. It would appear to be impractical to try to have anything different in force for this year. However, they are determined to have something in force for the coming crop year.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY—RESULTS OF CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON FUTURE OF AGENCY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the Minister in a position to advise whether at the conference that took place yesterday and today with his provincial counterparts there has been any consensus, unanimous or otherwise, regarding the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency? Also, will the minister at an early date advise the House as to the results of these discussions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the general consensus was that the vast majority were determined to make sure that CEMA stays alive. They want the national egg marketing program to continue. A statement will be made later this day regarding the annual meeting of CEMA and the federal-provincial meeting of ministers concerning this and other problems.

HEALTH

ADMISSION OF FOREIGN STUDENTS TO MEDICAL SCHOOLS WHEN QUALIFIED CANADIANS DENIED ADMISSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the urgency of this case as students are now being chosen for this fall's classes in medicine and the rising wrath of Canadians because their sons and daughters are being refused admittance to medical schools when qualified, while at the University of Toronto 26 per cent of this year's freshman class are not Canadian citizens, the cost per student being around $75,000, which is paid by the Canadian taxpayer, of which the federal government pays 50 per cent, I would like to know what the minister proposes to do about this.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is certainly aware of the fact that universities are under provincial jurisdiction. If provincial governments disagree on that matter, it should be discussed, but as long as they consider that universities are under their jurisdiction, I do not intend to interfere in that field.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I would advise the minister that yesterday all three parties at Queen's Park agreed that something should be done about this, and the Ontario minister very definitely stated that if the federal government pays 50 per cent of the cost, it is their responsibility.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I would say this is a very nice way for the provincial government to wash its hands of the responsibility which is on its own doorstep.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: If it wants the federal government to intervene in this field and take over universities, they should do it in a formal way. We can then have discussions in the constitutional field.

Mr. Rynard: I would advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there is a medical manpower policy in this country and that the federal government controls it. I would further advise him that the federal government controls the taxing of the incomes of Canadians right across this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member, at least as far as the first part of his statement is concerned.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED DEBATE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that so far this year murders have increased by about 100 per cent over last year, and in view of the mass of public opinion in Canada, will the minister seriously consider bringing capital punishment back into this House for debate so that once and for all this House of Commons can decide whether or not there will be capital punishment in this country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have had no information as yet with regard to the statistics for this year. I have no way of verifying the statistics the hon. member has given to the House. However, I should point out to him that before the end of 1977 the House will have to deal with the capital punishment issue. The hon. member will hear from the government on this matter in due course.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I phoned the Solicitor General's office this morning to ask for these statistics. His department not only does not have the statistics for this year, but for last year as well. How can we learn what the problem is if the minister's own department does not have up-to-date statistics?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If the hon. member knew anything about the criminal justice system, he would know we have to get the statistics from the provinces, police forces and municipalities across this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS BECAUSE OF POSTAL STRIKE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Opportunities for Youth program. In light of the fact that many Opportunities for Youth area co-ordinators have encountered delays in receiving applications due to the postal strike, will the minister consider extending the deadline for regional approval of Opportunities for Youth projects in the affected areas?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will examine that question. I doubt very much if we could justify an extension of the deadline in view of the fact it would affect so many people. However, I will review the matter in light of the conditions about which the hon. member is concerned.

Mr. Scott: In some central Ontario regions, applications postmarked before February 21 are still reaching area co-ordinators. Will the minister make some adjustment to ensure that there is sufficient time for all applications to be given full consideration?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that if there is evidence of posting or some alternate way of sending in applications before the deadline date, they will not be prejudiced by late arrivals due to conditions over which the sponsors or applicants had no control.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR NEW NATIONAL STANDARDS TO FIGHT POLLUTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of the Environment.

In view of the fact that the legislation pertaining to industrial and commercial buildings does not apply to mining, and that those companies are not subject to the environmental protection legislation, can the Minister tell us whether he will assume his responsibilities immediately by instructing his department's task force which is considering the matter to look immediately into the Thetford Mines problem and report as early as possible, at a specified date, since workers of this sector demand a real answer this time, and this is one of the points in dispute in their general strike started Tuesday?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, a task force is presently examining the problem of emanations from asbestos mines. We are presently establishing national standards or national objectives, the application of which will fall under provincial jurisdiction. As far as the Thetford Mines problem is concerned, I have had discussions on that matter with the Quebec minister of natural resources on Monday last when I met him in Montreal. I have offered him my cooperation as for the possibility of making available to him the expertise we have in the department in order to help him set standards which would be tolerable. For his part, he has ensured me that he had increased the number of inspectors which would be able to tell him whether the company complies with the provincial regulations.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Has the hon. provincial minister expressed the desire to cooperate with the federal department officials, given the fact that this problem has been pending since May 1949, following the strike in Asbestos and Thetford Mines? The same promise had been made then and, for the Minister's information, nothing more has been done since.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I think that during the 1949 strike, questions of industrial health were involved. Today we are discussing effects which seem not to be tolerated by the environment and radiations which seem to have indirect effects on the health of individuals.

Both levels of government are aware of these new environmental problems, and that is why the federal government and the provinces have departments of the environment to deal with these matters.

We are now trying to use the existing legislation to grasp this problem and perhaps force the companies to change certain work conditions. However, I must say to hon. members that if the bill on substances that contaminate the environment was passed as soon as possible, some of the powers given to us by the act would help us deal with this problem more efficiently.

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE TO TEACH ENGLISH IN VANCOUVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for immigration. In view of the need for more financial assistance in helping Vancouver school teachers teach the English language to immigrant children in order that they may have an equal opportunity for a good education, will the minister undertake to look into this matter with the minister of education of British Columbia, notwithstanding the fact that this provincial official has primary responsibility for this matter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware that the number of children in primary and secondary schools whose first language is not English or French has increased as a result of immigration. My officials have met with a number of school boards, including that of Vancouver, to discuss the matter and explore ways and means of rectifying the situation. We work closely with and give financial assistance to, voluntary agencies, and this program is in the process of being enhanced and augmented. We are anxious to co-operate, but in the final analysis education is a provincial responsibility and that primary consideration has to prevail, although I will probably be meeting with the minister of British Columbia within the next two or three weeks.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO ADOPT STANDARDS FOR ASBESTOS FIBRES UNDER CLEAN AIR ACT—POSSIBLE PROTEST FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those concerning asbestos and is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Would the minister advise the House why she has not brought in regulations concerning asbestos under the Clean Air Act so we can have a national environmental standard to try to assist the problem at Thetford Mines?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will realize that the Clean Air Act does not give me the power to bring down a recommendation; this is the responsibility of the provinces. Under the Clean Air Act, I do not obtain the authority to tell a specific company to change its stack emissions. However, in co-operation with the different provinces we do consult and decide upon a certain order of priorities for looking at different sectors of industry where we think damage is greatest. We have done that consistently in about 10 or 12 cases. We are now looking into the asbestos question, and when we get together to regulate those standards the provinces, using their authority, will implement them.

Mr. Leggatt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister advise the House if she can confirm that the environmental protection agency of the United States has lodged a formal complaint with the government concerning ambient asbestos air that is blowing across the border into Maine, creating what appears to be a growing international incident? Secondly, if the minister would provide national standards under the Clean Air Act, we might have less of these kinds of protests from the United States.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the EPA has sent a protest to this country; however, it might be the case. Should the EPA send a protest, under our transboundary responsibilities I would indeed be able to intervene.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW FORMULA FOR GRANTING DREDGING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Considering that the few companies qualified for dredging operations are now quite busy with courts, considering also that essential works must be carried out each year and that tenders are absolutely necessary, I would like to ask the minister whether his department has decided to wait for completion of the investigation before asking those companies for new submissions or whether it has decided to use a new formula to perform those operations?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we have decided to halt all dredging operations in Canada till the investigation is over, because nobody knows how long it will last. One thing for sure, the department will undoubtedly be extremely careful before awarding a contract to one of the companies involved.

PROPOSED ERASURE OF PART OF DEBT OF CNR, AIR CANADA AND ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport involving an announcement of transport policy. It has been indicated that the government may erase $3.5 billion of debt not only of the CNR and Air Canada but also the St. Lawrence seaway, a matter I raised the other day. Can the minister advise whether the government is seriously considering cancelling these debts and when an announcement will be made in this regard?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the over-all policy that we are trying to outline, and which does not come fast enough, this is one of the points we are looking into.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the ramifications and importance of such a decision, is it the intention of the minister to introduce legislation in the event he does approve the erasure of that debt? Is it his intention to bring in legislation relating to Air Canada and the other companies in order that the matter can be seriously delved into?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Without being a magician, Mr. Speaker, if we decide in the case of the seaway, for example, to wipe out the debt I think we would have to amend the legislation.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister indicate when he intends to announce the new support price for industrial milk for the coming dairy year beginning on April 1?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED TANKER ROUTE FOR ALASKAN OIL—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and goes back to the series of questions asked by the hon. member for Don Valley regarding the negotiations, conversations or whatever they were concerning a pipeline for gas and oil. I am wondering whether discussions are taking place in the context of an either/or proposition, or whether we are still faced with tanker routes and pipelines.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are two sets of discussions underway, one set leading to the conclusion of a general pipeline treaty and a second set on general energy questions, including the matter that is of such great interest to the hon. gentleman and other residents of Victoria and Vancouver, namely finding some alternative means of moving Alaskan oil into the northwest United States market other than by heavy tanker through Puget Sound. This question is being discussed but at the moment there is nothing fresh to report.

INCREASE IN FERTILIZER PRICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs perhaps my question should more appropriately be directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of a recent article that appeared in the Globe and Mail on March 13 to the effect that the Canadian Fertilizer Institute will not issue a detailed report justifying the rapid increases in fertilizer prices, some of which have doubled in the past two years, what action, if any, does the minister intend to take in this regard?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some action has already been taken and has been underway for some time. Investigations are being conducted at the present time under the Combines Investigation Act in respect of fertilizer companies. We intend to table or make public the facts we have gathered through our programs concerning the state of fertilizer prices. Depending on the findings that result from our efforts concerning the prices of fertilizer we will consider what other action can be taken. If the legislation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs were passed we could take some really definite action in respect of holding and rolling back prices.

NATIONAL PARKS

JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASE IN FEES—INQUIRY WHETHER INCREASE APPLIES TO ALL PARKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in his capacity as the minister responsible for national parks. In light of the fact that national parks were created for the preservation of our natural environment and for the use of people today as well as future generations, what justification does the minister's department have for increasing the fees by 500 per cent? Does this increase apply only to western parks?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, to answer the questions in reverse order, the fee changes apply to parks throughout Canada, with the exception of Prince Edward Island where we have a complicated problem in that we are in the process of acquiring additional buffer land around the park which would mean relocating the park gates. With that exception the fee changes apply to all Canada. Secondly, this is the first fee change we have had in 40 years, and it represents a very minimal part of our total park costs.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PURPOSE IN ESTABLISHING ADVISORY COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the Wheat Board whether the basic principle in establishing the advisory committee that is to be elected in April is to give new thought and a firm voice to the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of going through an election process in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee is to allow permit holders to have on the advisory committee the persons of their choice.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the position the hon. minister in charge of the Wheat Board has taken, but I think there is real concern in so far as names like A.M. Runciman, President of the United Grain Growers and—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question he ought to put it forthwith.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of people being put forward for the election to be held in two or three weeks who are not farming people but who are spending a tremendous amount of money on the election, and I am wondering if there is any regulation to make sure that the minister's stated principle is accomplished?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we carefully considered the question of eligibility before adopting the election procedure and, indeed, had Mr. George Turner examine the question. We decided that we should not at this stage try to limit the choice of those to be elected or to put limits on campaign spending because of the difficulty in controlling this. Of course, it is completely open to the hon. member or anyone else to also take part in the campaign in order to make his point to the farmers of his district.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what interesting and useful proposals he has in respect of legislation for the House this week and next, in view of the fact that this party pushed the government into obtaining a settlement of the strike so that it will not have to legislate next week?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: What will we be doing next week?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that, as the government wished, it was not necessary for parliament to enact any legislation in view of the strike being settled by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. As for the business of the House, of course today is an allotted day. Tomorrow, it is the intention of the government to deal with a number of items that are at report stage or third reading, and I might list them.

The items include Bill C-13, the Northern Canada Power Commission bill; C-48, the amendments to the Railway Act; C-33, the export of cultural property bill, and there has also been discussion in respect of a couple of other items, particularly Bill C-25 dealing with environmental contaminants. This has been before the House on a number of occasions and I have had indications from members on the opposition side that they would like to see this approved because of the things that should be done under it immediately. Then, there is the report stage of Bill C-19 with an amendment that would have to be disposed of.

During what I would hope will be the remaining three days, depending on the progress we can make with our legislative package, I would put on the list the resumption of the debate on second reading of Bill C-8. We are hopeful that there will be a report on the housing legislation, and in view of the urgency of bringing that legislation into effect we would like to proceed to give third reading to that bill, provided by that time there has been a report. I understand that the Senate may also recommend some amendments to Bill C-29, and it may be possible that we can deal with that bill in order to bring that act before the Governor General for Royal Assent.

That is the account we would like to place before the House, and because it may be necessary to juggle the agenda a little bit in the remaining days I hope this will give some general guidance in respect of legislative items. It is also my intention on Monday to call for concurrence in the report of the Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of House business between now and Wednesday, would the government House leader say on what day the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be making his statement on veterans' housing, and if that statement involves legislation when will we be dealing with it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will consult with my colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Privy Council regarding the business of the House.

The Minister of Environment has stated earlier that she was waiting for the House to pass Bill C-25 relating to substances that contaminate the environment. Our party agrees that it be given priority. However, it is the government, not the opposition, which decides the order of business. To elucidate this, would the President of the Privy Council agree to suggest an understanding so that Bill C-25 be given priority as early as tomorrow and so that Parliament settle this matter and pass the bill to protect workers in the Eastern Townships who are now suffering from asbestosis?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. I believe it is the general desire that this bill de disposed of, and I hope it can at least be put through second reading before we break for Easter.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this summer the cadet services of Canada will again have to deny females qualification for pay and allowances, and Bill C-16 could correct this very easily, I wonder whether the minister would indicate when that bill is coming before the House again and can it be treated as an emergency, or at least given higher priority?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is International Women's Year and we do not lack zeal in promoting this particular bill, but we thought it was of such importance it should have plenty of time for discussion. It would be my intention after Easter to provide an ample opportunity for all members of the House to express their views.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INACTION IN FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain) moved:

That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem and blames the government for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating the unjustified increase in the cost of living; in particular the proposition according all Canadian consumers, a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party, I have the privilege to move a non confidence motion the importance and acuteness of which could not be more timely. The present situation has become so critical that it is high time we woke up if we want to prove equal to the Canadian people's aspirations. Therefore, it is most appropriate to ask the House to deplore—

—the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem and that this House—

—ought to blame—

—the government for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating the unjustified increase in the cost of living; in particular the proposition according all Canadian consumers a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

Mr. Speaker, why is this motion being moved? Merely because one has to be blind not to see that all Canadians, and more particularly the underprivileged, are suffering from the ill effects of what is shockingly called inflation. For the average Canadian, rising prices are disastrous. We never had it so bad since the great depression of the thirties. The dollar is worth less than half its value barely 20 years ago. Basic items like bread, butter, milk and clothing, not to speak of housing, reached unbelievable levels compared to what they cost a few years ago.

We are going through a critical period; we are on the verge of a depression that could reach catastrophic proportions and challenge the stability of our Canadian society. Faced with that imminent danger, the government does nothing. Every minister, even the Prime Minister himself, looks paralyzed. They do not know what to do. Worse still, they admit it. They do not or will not understand inflation's real causes, and apparently they are not overly worried by its unescapable consequences. Creditistes put forward specific solutions to offset the disastrous impact of skyrocketing prices. These solutions may be our only hope of avoiding a resounding bankruptcy of our society and economy. In the last few years, inflation has been the number one economic problem facing the developed countries of the world. Inflation has been the subject of endless discussions, but few, if any, positive steps were taken to control it.

Certainly inflation should be controlled. Historically, periods of rapidly increasing prices have always brought about a growing political instability, often resulting in violent revolutions and other social upheavals. Inflation undermines personal security. Whenever people come to the point where they have to live by the year, by the month, by the day and even by the hour, fantastic repercussions ensue in any society.

But the government believes and would have us believe that nothing can be done to control inflation. They say this is an integral part of our economic system. It may be true, but in that case, we feel it is even more urgent to reform that system if it is an integral part of it. It is indeed too easy to hide constantly behind the fallacious pretext that inflation is an international or a world-wide problem and that nothing can be done about it. The government has so convincingly put forward that pretext that even the man in the street explains all those problems by saying: "What do you want, nothing can be done, it is a world-wide phenomenon."

Already, Mr. Speaker, throughout the last electoral campaign, we heard the party now in power merely say: "Well, we are not to blame if all those things go wrong, it is a world-wide phenomenon."

Mr. Speaker, I will again repeat what I said on several occasions in this House: Nothing that goes on in the United States or elsewhere can prevent the cows from giving milk in Canada or the corrots and the trees from growing.

● (1520)

To avoid facing the real problems in this fashion, to mislead the people, to remain inactive in the face of the possibilities for finding real solutions, is totally unacceptable, and the House owes it to itself to prove it tonight when the vote is taken.

Mr. Speaker, we should go back to certain basic notions, which, while being elementary, constitute the very essence of a policy that could contain inflation and its disastrous effects.

Indeed, the government is sinking into scandal if not sacrilege when it tells the citizens that they must tighten their belts, do without essentials goods, pay outrageous prices for consumer goods, when we live in a country of abundance, where almost everything can be produced. I shall say it again: except for some tropical fruit, like oranges and bananas, what do we lack in Canada? We even have lemons sitting across the way from us! In order to obtain the products and all the consumer goods we need, we just have to ask ourselves the following question: have we got the potential and the physical ability to produce such and such a thing? If so, why not simply do it? This is the question. I say again, under which right can the United States, and the countries of Europe, Asia and Africa prevent our soil from producing all the food we need? Why, Mr. Speaker, do we see not Canadian consumers buy butter from Australia or from New Zealand? Under which right can all the other countries object to our developing our primary resources for the benefit of all Canadians? Why does the government hide behind fallacious pretexts? Once again, inflation is an international problem, it is a world problem.

Mr. Speaker, the longer the problem of inflation lasts, the more complex the underlying factors are becoming. What has been called the psychology of inflation is developing: the fatalist belief that the improvement of such a situation is beyond man's capacities and that the individual cannot do anything except learn to live with the ever increasing cost of living. Adjustments along that line, as we know them, such as interest rates, salaries and pensions indexing, are only contributing to fuel inflation. The very few measures taken by the government to deal with it have proved so inefficient that it is discouraging.

Mr. Speaker, this does not mean that any action is of no use, but it rather suggests that it is not tackling the core of the problem inflation is connected with prices and these represent a monetary measure. It therefore seems to me logical to say that to understand inflation, we must first of all understand the nature of prices and money. A great many people and the government entertain funny ideas about this; their conception of money is very vague. For instance, they often feel that money is automatically created by economic activity. This is far from being true. For example, the owner of a cattle herd is not in fact creating its financial value. We are convinced that a great many of them would be willing to testify in this connection. In fact, the production of goods and that of money are the results of two quite different processes.

Money is a banker's creation. In Canada, the Bank of Canada exerts total control over the money supply. It controls the reserves held in chartered banks. Because of these reserves, chartered banks can issue financial credits which are used by the people in the community. Considering that they put in circulation as financial credits something like 16 times the amount of money they hold in reserve, these institutions play a determinant part in deciding the conditions under which the community will obtain its purchasing power.

If the community can obtain financial credits, it is in part because it will eventually reimburse these credits with interests. Because they must reimburse both capital and interests, people end up paying for products a lot more than the original price. Just as a family may have to pay in interests as much as three times its purchasing price before it can call it its own, likewise governments generally pay for public works three or four times what they are worth, not to mention certain dredging of navigable waters.

So, high interest rates are a direct cause of high prices. If interest rates were reduced to reflect the administrative cost of a loan, it is evident that the current tendency towards higher prices would be considerably curtailed. Moreover, if the chartered banks refuse to issue credits at reasonable interest rates, nothing prevents the Bank of Canada from taking their place. Its main responsibility is to administer the money supply in the best interests of the Canadian population. Inflation is directly opposed to these interests. It can therefore be said that the Bank of Canada has the responsibility to remove this obvious cause of price increases.

We can therefore see, Mr. Speaker, how the present monetary system is responsible for inflation, at least as concerns interest rates. However, it is also responsible for inflation at a level which does not necessarily concern the question of interest rates. When we realize this, when we think about the real causes of the present economic situation, we are already on the way to finding a solution. In other words, we come back to the true logic, which is only common sense, of organizing an economic policy based on something which, even though it is elementary, as I said at the beginning of my speech, is still most logical. When Canadians are told that they cannot get such or such a product because of inflation, that they cannot buy even food products because the prices are too high, it is a scandal and a sacrilege in a country as large as ours, as wealthy and as full of all kinds of riches, to have to tighten our belts and put up with inflation. If the suggestions of the Social Credit party were accepted, this phenomenon simply could not exist since, if all our activities and the whole economic administration were concentrated on this common sense equation between production and consumption, prices would never be too high since all consumers would have sufficient purchasing power to buy the products. When these products become too expensive for one reason or another, you simply have to use—and this is one part of the motion that we are studying today—compensated prices so that the consumer may still obtain essential consumer goods.

When we analyze the costs of production which go into present prices, we see how the system is upside down and how it could be put right side up.

Let us suppose, for instance, that a company decides to build a new plant, what happens? To finance the project, it gets a bank loan to buy building materials and hire workers. When the workers start receiving wages, the loan money, which at first represented an increase in the money supply when it was given to the company by the bank, is now being transferred to the employees.

Now, let us suppose that there was a balance between the prices of available products and the money held by consumers before the plant was started. This balance is now being destroyed. The wages of the workers who are building the plant, wages which are generally spent on receipt, form a surplus of money in relation to the commodities and products available. In conformity with the principle of supply and demand, merchants realize that they can get more for their products and raise their prices to take advantage of the situation. Workers had more money in their hands, but they do not get any profit from it, since that money is immediately taken from them because of the higher prices of products they could have got anyway. This explains why inflation accompanies the expansion of industry and public works in the present economic system. This also shows the uselessness of government measures to fight inflation by increasing production.

Mr. Speaker, a choice must be made. The problem is not caused so much by excessive profits by employees or employers. In fact, that is only the present operation of the monetary system currently in use.

Consequently, the choice that must be made by such industrialized countries as Canada is the following: they can simply continue to use the present system going in turn from economic crisis, recessions, to overgrowth, while extreme situations become increasingly tragic with time, or they can change their monetary system to issue new credits that will go directly into the hands of consumers without also being registered in prices. This will also have the effect of avoiding those credits being prematurely snatched from the population at arbitrarily inflated prices.

It is indeed strange to see that no country has yet turned to the other alternative though it contains obvious and impressive advantages. Not only would it eliminate obvious defects in the monetary system and the price system currently in use but it would also have the effect of promoting increased independence and security for all members of society.

Why, Mr. Speaker, could Canada not be the one to show leadership in the world? It so happens there is another scandal in Canada. In a country whose resources have barely begun to be tapped, a rate of unemployment of 5, 10, 15, or 20 per cent is maintained in some areas. Is that not a scandal, Mr. Speaker?

Why tolerate such things when the solutions are there? If we have the raw materials, the technology, the manpower needed, what is stopping us from accomplishing anything? If it is only a financing matter, what is stopping us from issuing our own credits which would be required for the developments which would prove adequate?

Mr. Speaker, when the motion stipulates that we blame the government, I do not think that it can be said that we are doing petty politics, that we are once again putting forward the Social Credit remedies, that we are always putting forward the same solution, that is the Bank of Canada, the "money press". Mr. Speaker, we have collected evidence that this government, owing foremost to its stability secured by its recent majority, is playing politics.

Recently we had occasion to find out how our good friends opposite, specially those from Quebec, are inconsistent with themselves and how in their parliamentary work they only play politics. Mr. Speaker, I saw—

Quebec caucus convince Whelan to restore milk subsidy.

Here is the first paragraph:

The Quebec federal Liberal caucus decided yesterday to support the milk processors' demands that the Trudeau government increase the support price from $10.02 to $11.60 per hundredweight of milk delivered to the plant.

Mr. Speaker, last Monday in the House I moved the following motion under Standing Order 43, and I quote:

Considering the precarious situation of Quebec industrial milk producers and the absolute necessity of that industry, and in view of the decreasing number of producers and the present difficulty to have adequate relief, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House unanimously recommend to the Minister of Agriculture to seriously consider the request of Quebec milk producers to get a minimum price of $11.60 per hundredweight of industrial milk.

It is the same thing, Mr. Speaker. What happened? Of course, I was there, and I presented the motion. A great many "nos" were heard from Quebec Liberal members not to have the motion presented. The same day, those hon. members met a FPU delegation and told them they would ask the minister to apply that measure. Mr. Speaker, if that is not playing politics, it is childish indecency. I think it is time—

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Matte: I think it is time people realize that a majority government abuses its powers and makes fun of people. When you tell farmers that you are going to ask the minister to grant you this or that, and when in the House instead of saying yes when it is time you say no, you are just making fun of people. I think it is a totally illogical attitude.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Drummond on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member opposite blaming Quebec Liberal members for objecting last Monday to a motion put forward under Standing Order 43 about dairy producers and their claims.

I agree that his remarks respecting the needs of dairy producers are justified, but what I cannot accept is the unfair way in which he blames Quebec Liberal members, since that very day we were meeting with representatives of the APU. As far as I am concerned, I was having discussions with 400 dairy producers in my constituency, and in the evening I met with provincial representatives of the APU. Considering the circumstances, I think it is unfair to blame Quebec Liberal members for their lack of interest—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to remind the hon. member for Drummond that although the point he is making may be interesting, according to the proceedings of the House, he raised a question of debate, so he just should take part in the debate later and possibly controvert the arguments of the hon. member.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we have other examples. A few weeks ago, my colleague the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) put forward a motion to provide for a compensated discount, precisely with respect to milk. At that time, for some reason, probably through an oversight of our good friends opposite, the motion was allowed by Your Honour, and the vote was called for. Then at last we could see those who did not want a real discount to be passed on to the consumers.

Milk producers should be here in this house. They should have been here last Monday. I presented a motion and I heard again some "non". They were not "nos". Thus, the "non" were from Quebec members. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without wishing to make any political criticism, it seems obvious that members do not unfortunately take their responsibility seriously. How can one say "oui" outside the House and "non" inside? I hope the Minister of Agriculture will finally show some logic in this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the time allotted to me has almost expired. I should like to conclude by saying that the motion we presented is important and that it deserves the attention of the House. Our party may not be composed of many members but we do not have any reserved rights either on our solutions and we are ready to cooperate with this government to enable it to apply them. One wishes that one would not hear any more during election campaigns, as I heard in my constituency, the following words: "We take everything that is good in the Social Credit Party and apply it." We know that whenever we make proposals in this House, members seem to disregard them, make them look ridiculous and fail to realize that we are serious and want to contribute to the well-being of all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) would enter this debate on behalf of the government, but infortunately he had a prior engagement that he could not break so he asked me to make a contribution.

The motion put forward by the Social Credit Party seems to me to be a rather strange one. Let me elaborate on what I think are certain peculiar characteristics of the motion. The motion condemns the government for inaction in the fight against inflation. There may be some in the House who would take this point of view, and I am sure that from the other side of the House those particular sentiments will be echoed a number of times before the end of the day.

I should like to recall to the House that when the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) spoke in the debate on the motion of the New Democratic Party on March 13, he contended that the more the government fought against inflation, the worse it became. As reported at page 4077 of Hansard he said:

> I could almost ask the Minister of Finance to cease fighting, since the more he fights, the worse things turn out.

In today's motion the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) deplores what he considers to be the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation. That is one of the least peculiar aspects of the motion. It is far more notable for the manner in which it dismisses reality through its denial of inflation as an international problem. I would point out to the House the terms of the motion which reads:

> That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem—

Virtually every developing and developed country in the world is suffering from the effects of sharply increased costs and prices. Surely there would be general agreement on this fact even from my hon. friends in the Social Credit Party. As of January the average year-over-year increase in consumer prices in all 24 member countries of the OECD—which comprises the most developed countries of the world—amounted to 13½ per cent. For the OECD countries in Europe—that is, excluding Canada, the United States and Japan—the percentage average was 14.3 per cent. Over the same period the increase in Canada was 12.1 per cent. I think it should be admitted in any discussion of the problem of inflation that it has at least some international aspects.

The International Monetary Fund, which is a considerable authority in this field, declared in its 1974 report that in mid-1974 the world economy was in the throes of virulent and widespread inflation. In its Economic Outlook of December, 1974, the OECD pointed out that member countries were suffering from the after-effects of the excessive demand that they allowed to build up in 1973 and from the external shock of the sudden and sharp rise of oil prices. This is some external evidence that it is not a fallacious pretext by the government that inflation is an international problem.

Let me quote from the annual report for 1974 of the governor of the Bank of Canada which was tabled in the House only yesterday. This is the latest report of the Bank of Canada. The governor pointed out that common forces have been making their impact felt on the economies of all countries around the world. He said:

> The origin of these common forces was the recent worldwide inflationary boom, a boom generated by the highly expansionary monetary and fiscal policies followed in virtually all of the major industrial countries in an effort to restore high levels of output and employment following the economic slowdown in 1970.

So we have evidence that this is not a fallacious pretext; there is in fact an international inflationary situation. We can talk about the extent to which it has influenced events in Canada, but it exists as a fact and it is not fallacious. The governor pointed out that this upsurge in economic growth caused global demand to outrun the global supply of primary commodities. He said:

> At the same time it created all sorts of other shortages and extremely tight labour markets... In these circumstances price increases grew larger, more frequent and more general... The inflationary process was substantially reinforced by shortfalls in supplies of food grains and animal feeds, and later by a fourfold rise in the world price of oil.

These are facts, not fallacious arguments. This is not drawing particular facts out of the situation. What exists is a worldwide inflationary situation, and to dismiss it as a fallacious pretext is to deny the obvious. As one of the world's major trading nations and one of the important participants in world capital markets, there is simply no way that Canada could totally insulate itself from adverse developments abroad, certainly not from a worldwide inflationary movement. Our economy has in the past benefited substantially from these trade and financial ties with the rest of the world, but we have no other choice than to face the consequences that flow from these ties when the whole world is in trouble. To suggest that somehow we can at such times withdraw, untouched, behind the walls of a fortress Canada is absurd, even ludicrous.

It is true, as the Minister of Finance pointed out in a speech to the Canadian Club in Toronto on January 27, 1975, that the nature of the inflationary problem is changing in a fundamental way. I do not think anybody, particularly on this side of the House, would deny that the nature of the inflationary forces at work in Canada have changed, but it is one thing to say that and another to deny that international inflationary forces have had an effect upon Canada. The Minister of Finance said then, as I have also had the opportunity of saying from time to time, that initially the forces of inflation were set in motion internationally by the worldwide boom that caused demand for many commodities to outrun available supply, compounded by the quadrupling of world oil prices.

In his speech on January 27 the minister said that the major driving force is coming from the rapid escalation of wage and salary costs as those who work in every country press for increased incomes to at least keep pace with the rising cost of living. In its Economic Outlook for December, 1974, to which I referred earlier, the OECD came to a similar conclusion. The report states that earlier in the year the rise in oil and other commodity prices played the main part in generating inflation but now it is the rise in wages which is maintaining the inflation at much the same high rate.

The substantial increase in wage and salary costs in virtually every country is clearly a response to the sharp increase in the cost of living that began to develop because of international inflationary pressures. This development is neither surprising nor exceptional; we have seen it before and we are seeing it now. No one wants to see his standard of living eroded by inflation—not even members of parliament, let me add. It is fully to be expected that all Canadians, including members of parliament, will want to obtain a sufficient increase in income to at least keep pace with rising costs. As a government, we understand and support that ambition; we have done it with deeds, not just with words. We have done more than virtually any other country in the world in attempting to get to the root of the inflation problem while at the same time attempting to maintain reasonable economic growth and helping to offset the adverse effects of inflation on Canadians, particularly those on low and moderate incomes.

Let me give some examples. We have done this by adopting a deliberate policy of encouraging increases in productive capacity and output to combat inflation and expand employment; through tax cuts and other incentives to encourage expansion in business capital investment in manufacturing and processing; through measures to maintain and expand housing constructions, stabilize farm income and encourage expanded agricultural production.

We have tried to maintain a reasonably accommodating monetary policy that has tried to avoid the kind of credit crunch experienced in the United States. We have tried to avoid crippling wage and price controls, and in that had the support of the Canadian people. We adopted a strongly expansionary budget in November to offset economic drag caused by continuing stagnation abroad, by providing stimulus through tax cuts rather than through increased expenditures in order to avoid the adverse impact of inflation. We have adopted in the past few years more wide-ranging measures than virtually any other country to offset the adverse effect of inflation on Canadians, particularly those on low and moderate incomes.

We have adopted policies to maintain incomes, particularly the incomes of those hardest hit. We have indexed fully family allowances and old age pensions. We have indexed personal income tax and adopted policies to offset the erosion in the value of savings and measures to encourage additional savings. I cite as examples the $1,000 reduction for dividend and interest income as provided in the last budget, plus similar deductions for income from private pension plans and the $1,000 tax-free deduction for certain forms of contributions.

Let me repeat what I said earlier. I do not think any country in the world has been as effective as we have in introducing wide-ranging measures to deal with inflation in such a way as to minimize the effect on employment. This government was absolutely determined that it would not try to fight inflation by creating unemployment. We have taken whatever measures we can to assist employment. I think the test as to how much better we have handled these problems than our great neighbour to the south lies in this fact: whereas in former years we always reckoned that our rate of unemployment would be slightly higher than that of the United States, today it is substantially less in percentage terms.

Mr. Stanfield: You are not through it yet.

Mr. Sharp: As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says, we are not through it yet. That is why this government has never attempted to create false hopes: we have been realistic. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the other day when answering a question that he was cautiously optimistic. That is the right attitude in these circumstances. Our attitude should not be one of doom and gloom but one of cautious optimism, because I think there are grounds for optimism. But we do not want to give the impression there are no problems; there are serious problems.

Mr. Stanfield: Tell us about the consensus.

Mr. Sharp: I will. Before I finish my remarks I may have an opportunity to say something about it.

Mr. Hees: We will give you extra time if you want to talk about the consensus.

Mr. Sharp: Thank you. The measures I have outlined, which were reinforced in the November budget, not only help to offset the impact of inflation but provide a strong underpinning of the economy and help to offset the impact of slow growth abroad. That slow growth is a fact; it cannot be overlooked. There is a recession in the United States, and the rate of growth in Europe is practically nil; it has flattened. We cannot change that fact but must do everything we can to offset what is happening in our markets abroad.

The success of the measures I mentioned just now is reflected in the fact that real disposable income per capita, after direct taxes and discounting inflation, was up 3.3 per cent in Canada in 1974. That compares to a decline in the United States of 3.4 per cent. In other words, personal disposable income per capita in Canada, after discounting inflation, rose 3.3 per cent but in the United States it declined by 3.4 per cent. That is a measure of the success of what we have done in our far-ranging attack on inflation.

Mr. Hees: Don't break your wrist trying to pat yourself on the back.

Mr. Sharp: The government is concerned about the danger that arises from the possibility that some groups in our economy may attempt to do very much better than keep pace with the cost of living by pressing, by way of insurance, for increases in income from whatever source that go far beyond any reasonable expectation about prospective inflation rates.

Mr. Stanfield: You mean people like dredgers.

Mr. Sharp: We believe that if such efforts are made on a large scale and are successful, they will have the effect of a self-fulfilling prophecy. That is the nature of the problem with which we are trying to cope. The consultations which have taken place with various economic groups in the country were for the purpose of trying to avoid this very danger. We embarked on a series of discussions with various groups in our country in order to seek accord on national goals for steadily reducing the rate of inflation. We wanted to discuss with them practical and acceptable means for achieving these objectives. This particular effort, I believe, is going through the concluding phases of the first stage.

Mr. Stanfield: The twilight of the gods!

Mr. Sharp: I hope that in the near future there will be an announcement about the beginning of the second stage, which I think will do much to bring about the co-operation without which the problems I alluded to cannot be successfully attacked. Some, like the official opposition, think we should impose wage and price controls. Others take the view that somehow the government will come forward with a scheme of guidelines without the co-operation of unions or employees. This view has been discredited by the government and, fortunately, by the people as well.

Mr. Hees: Think of John Young.

Mr. Sharp: Let me turn, now, to another aspect of the motion. It calls on the House to blame the government—

● (1600)

—for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating the unjustified increase in the cost of living; in particular the proposition according all Canadians consumers a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

We on this side of the House will be waiting with considerable interest to learn—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but he will require an extension in order to complete his point. The problem is in the hands of hon. members. Is there consent to allow the minister to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We will give the minister any amount of time if he will tell us about the consensus.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have been endeavouring to explain a concept that the opposition finds impossible to comprehend, probably because they have a one-track mind. They say the only way to control inflation in this country is to proceed by way of wage and price controls, notwithstanding the fact that this was rejected in the last election. They do not understand any other approach. They believe this is the panacea. We reject it, and we do not intend to follow it. We are looking for much more constructive ways to deal with the problem. I am sure the result will be a continuation of the successful efforts that have been made in this country to deal with this problem. As I have said, it is a record that compares favourably with any other country, and it is certainly very much better than that of the United States, Europe or Japan.

I shall conclude these remarks by dealing with the second part of this motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is the end of the beginning.

Mr. Sharp: When we listen to the speech of the spokesman for the official opposition I hope we will learn whether the official opposition is going to support the proposition that there should be extensive subsidies to the consumer, at great public expense.

I listened to the spokesman for the official opposition when dealing with the question of inflation. At one time he talked about the necessity of restraining public expenditures, and another time about reducing taxes. On February 16, the Leader of the Opposition talked about these problems. He said that even talk about injecting further stimulus into the economy scares the life out of him. I wonder whether, when he said that, he was thinking about the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who talks about a big tax cut as a means of stimulating the economy. This is why I will be very interested in hearing the official opposition deal with these contradictions in their position.

As far as the government is concerned, we do not think that the direction proposed in the motion of the Social Credit Party, of paying massive consumer subsidies, is the way to deal with the problem. From time to time we have used subsidies and we may again in the future. However, in our view, to inject massive subsidies of this kind would simply stimulate inflation and would not be a protection against it.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, we agree with the words of the motion, "That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem . . ." I listened with interest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). I expected a little more elaboration from the government as to what, in fact, they intend to do to correct the two most severe problems in the country—inflation on the one hand and rising unemployment on the other.

The government has tended to give no guidance to the country to help individual Canadians respond properly in today's confused economic climate. They simply rely on a touch and feel type of approach to the economy. I can only gather that they themselves do not know what to do at the present time. The President of the Privy Council tended to take great credit for the past and indicated the government had taken constructive measures to relieve inflation and, presumably, create employment. He was non-committal as to what, if anything, the government feels should be done in the future in order to counteract the two problems to which I have referred.

It is time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) clarified, for the people of Canada, whether he believes his November 18 budget is all that is required to offset unemployment on one hand and relieve inflation on the other. So far we have had no indication from the Minister of Finance as to his final conclusion. He tells us he is looking at the international scene—the situation in the United States, Europe and Japan. He wants to see how his budget will react in Canada. In the meantime, he will not give any commitment as to where he believes the economy is going to turn and, generally speaking, whether any new measures are required on the part of the government to counteract the two problems to which I have referred.

This government have lost their way so badly that today they are unwilling to give any indication of what they anticipate will be the unemployment rate during 1975. They will not indicate what the real growth in the country is going to be, nor will they even forecast the inflation rate. We cannot get any type of evidence as to how many housing starts there will be. Why should they feel they can govern in such a vacuum when the governments of every other western industrialized country come clean with their people, tell them what they forecast for the economy in the ensuing year and what their fiscal and monetary stances are to ensure that those forecasts will be met? I point this out because it is particularly significant that the banks and other credible advisory services have predicted what will transpire in Canada. Because of this government's habit of keeping things secret—presumably because they do not want to disclose their ignorance—these economists are required to make their forecasts without the benefit of a federal government forecast as to what will transpire in this country.

I refer to the fact that Wood Gundy made a 1975 forecast. Canadian Pacific Limited, Du Pont of Canada, the Royal Bank of Canada, W. A. Beckett Associates, Burns Brothers and Denton, Royal Trust, Brault, Guy, O'Brien, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, MacMillan Bloedel, Richardson Securities of Canada, and McLeod, Young, Weir and Company all made forecasts as to what they anticipate will be the economic facts of life in 1975. But not our leaders, the federal government. The Conference Board of Canada made forecasts, as did a University of Toronto group headed by Messrs. Jump and Wilson. Could it be that the reason the federal government has not made forecasts is that they feel the forecasts they would make would be so alarming to the Canadian public that they would cause undue pessimism?

I ask that question because it is interesting to note that in the forecasts I have referred to, the best real growth increase forecast by anyone to date is 2.5 per cent in 1975. There are economists who predict a real growth rate this year of zero per cent. Those who have been willing to put their names on the line are forecasting that Canada's real growth rate in the current year will be between zero per cent and 2.5 per cent. Bear in mind that 2.5 per cent, with our population increase, means that on a per capita basis there is really zero growth in this country. If in fact we do have zero growth in aggregate terms, then with our population increase we will have negative real growth on a per capita basis.

Some economists predict that inflation this year will be no lower than 8.5 per cent and it could go as high as 10.5 per cent. These economists point out that the average unemployment rate in the country will be a minimum 6.6 per cent, though some predict it could go as high as 7.7 per cent. Surely the government owes it to the Canadian people to tell them what it sees in the current economic climate for Canada.

The University of Toronto Economic Outlook for 1975 to which I have referred makes a very interesting forecast both before the effects of the November 18 budget and after. For the President of the Privy Council to mislead the House in the way he has concerning the economic effect of the government's budget is unforgiveable. This forecast of the University of Toronto was supplied to the government. In fact, the forecast is run off on the very computer used by the Department of Finance.

The University of Toronto makes it clear that inflation, for example, is estimated to be 10.67 per cent in 1975, that the net change in the inflation rate from what it would have been without the November budget is 0.18 per cent. In other words, less than one-fifth of 1 per cent is the net effect on inflation of the government's current budget. This is why we support that part of the resolution of the Social Credit Party deploring the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem. The University of Toronto forecast shows that this government, through its budgetary measures to date, has done virtually nothing to lessen inflation in this country.

Yesterday the governor of the Bank of Canada made it clear that the suggestion that somehow or other international forces are causing inflation in Canada is not correct. At page 5 of the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance, for 1974, the following is stated:

> Up to the present the rapid pace of increase in the price level in Canada has continued largely unabated, although the forces propelling it have changed substantially. Prices in Canada are no longer subject to the influence of sharply rising international commodity prices nor, apart from a few exceptions, to the upward pull of excessive foreign and domestic demand on industries already producing to the limits of their capacity.

Unless the government wishes to disagree with the governor of the Bank of Canada, surely it should accept that this old, lame excuse that it can do nothing about inflation in Canada because it is an international phenomenon is not valid today. The truth is that some hard economic situations face us in the future. We have an unemployment rate that is unacceptable; we have an inflation rate that is unacceptable. We believe it is time the government stopped its consensus chats which seem to be droning on and on. It is encouraging to hear the President of the Privy Council say that he thinks the phase they are in now is going to stop and they will shift into a new phase. But judging from past experience we may find that the government is systematically using rhetoric instead of action to get itself through a difficult period.

I should like to put on the record certain other facts to be found in the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada. At page 7 the following appears:

> From early 1973 to the late summer of 1974 the monetary policy followed in Canada was directed at offering increasingly strong resistance to the excessively rapid growth of aggregate spending that was then occurring. Although the total quantity of goods and services that the Canadian economy is physically capable of producing cannot be expected to increase by much more than about 5 per cent annually, the rate of increase of national expenditure in money terms reached a peak of about 20 per cent a year as recently as late 1973 and early 1974. The longer such a high rate of growth of aggregate spending continued, the longer a high rate of inflation of the general price level would have been inevitable.

In plain, everyday language, Mr. Speaker, what the governor is pointing out is that the monetary and fiscal stance adopted in Canada to date has been excessive. He points out that this country cannot realistically grow in real terms by more than about 5 per cent per year. The simple fact is that if you expand the system through your fiscal and monetary policy to, say, 20 per cent a year, the excess over the 5 per cent level ends up as inflation. If the President of the Privy Council had been completely forthright today, he would have admitted that, for whatever reason the government saw fit—political expediency, I suggest—it simply overheated the economy in order to get re-elected on July 8, 1974, thus causing much of the inflation hangover we are now experiencing in 1975.

I note that the President of the Privy Council is shifting the blame, if you like, for the current inflationary pressures on the economy to those who are asking for higher income settlements. Surely this is a strange twist. The government does virtually nothing to counteract inflation, then when those who wish to re-establish their income levels to compensate for inflation take action, the government condemns them. We suggest, as we did today in a question to the Minister of Finance, that it would be in order for the government to bring some light into the arena by issuing some interim guidelines while these very long and dull consensus chats are taking place. This would allow all sectors of our economy to understand what the government feels are suitable income levels as far as increases are concerned in today's economic context. Surely the government owes that to those who are negotiating at the present time.

The governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated the urgency of this matter, the dire consequences that will occur and how self-defeating this process will be if it is allowed to continue. However, we get nothing from the government but double-talk in the form of suggestions that talks are going on at the consensus conferences and decisions will be made at the appropriate time. The appropriate time, Mr. Speaker, is today.

Rather than having the President of the Privy Council here, we should have the Minister of Finance using this day to present a new budget that would deal with the problems now facing this country. If the Minister of Finance is not available, then perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should have been here to explain exactly where he feels the economy is going and what measures he intends to take, through his Minister of Finance, to ensure that inflation in Canada will be brought down to an acceptable level, with the unemployment picture dramatically improved from its present and forecast levels.

In dealing with this particular subject I should also touch on the remainder of the motion put forward by the Social Credit Party. It states that they not only deplore the inaction of the government in respect of inflation, putting the blame in effect on the international problem, but they also blame the government for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating unjustified increases in the cost of living, and particularly the proposition of according all Canadian consumers a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

The Social Credit members, certainly those who moved and seconded this motion, owe it to members of the House to clarify what concrete proposals are referred to. They should also make it clear, before we vote on this motion at 9.45 this evening, what they have in mind when they refer to a proposition that would accord all Canadian consumers a compensated price on all Canadian food produce. Surely before we vote on this motion it would be in order to have a clear explanation as to what is Social Credit doctrine. Frankly, I do not know what it is and I hope between now and 9.45 we will have an in-depth explanation of what the mover and the seconder of the motion, and in fact the Social Credit party itself, have in mind in respect of the latter part of their motion. Is it what the President of the Privy Council indicates—some type of subsidization program for farmers or food producers?

Let me reiterate our belief that there is room for a tax cut at the present time in the Canadian fiscal position. We have made it clear that we believe there should be a tax cut of some $500 million. This would mean a cut of between $60 and $150 for most Canadian taxpayers. We also believe the sales tax that now exists on building products should be completely eliminated, and that the interest paid by homeowners above 8 per cent on their mortgages should be a chargeable item against income before taxes. We believe these would be worth-while measures that would tend to stimulate the economy while at the same time not being inflationary in their net effect.

I reiterate that this government has allowed expenditures to rise excessively. We are most disturbed when the Minister of Finance is so candid as to state at a committee hearing that he believes political expediency must dominate economic responsibility. The fact is that we are facing inflationary and unemployment problems today because this government has been irresponsible in its fiscal and monetary stance over the last few years.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, one of the joys I look forward to is the possibility of the Conservative Party forming the government in Canada and watching them bring in a budget that will simultaneously fight inflation and stimulate the economy. There are some able people in the Conservative Party but it seems to me, given the idea of a Conservative government, it would take something just short of a miracle to accomplish this. I am not suggesting that it cannot be done. The way to do this—I hope my hon. friends to the right will note this and perhaps do it if they form a government—is to have a massive redistribution of income from those at the top to those at the bottom. Then you could deal with unemployment, stimulate the economy and control inflation. What is called for is a sharply graduated income tax. As I say, that is a joy I look forward to some day—seeing how my friends to the right will work that out.

An hon. Member: Stick around.

Mr. Saltsman: I have at least three more years to stick around. It seems to me that on the subject of inflation there is a total absence of frankness by people who raise the issue. My original notes contained the word "ignorance", but I decided against using that word as I do not think the people who talk about inflation are ignorant. However, I do think they are being less than frank with the public when discussing the problem.

When listening to discussions on the subject of inflation one would think all people are suffering equally, when in fact we know that some people have benefited substantially from inflation while others have suffered very badly. What we are really looking at is a massive redistribution of income from one group of people to another group. Any government that seriously wants to deal with this problem must do one of two things: it either has to find a way of preventing these shifts in income from taking place in the first place, or compensate for the shifts in income to help those who are being disadvantaged by inflation.

In looking at the motion before us I find there is only one thing I can agree with, and then only partially; that is that inflation is not an international problem. There is a lot of truth to that claim, particularly as it relates to Canada. If we are talking about other parts of the world, I think inflation is almost totally an international problem and I think of countries like Britain and Japan. When we are talking about Canada, the international aspect is only a minor part of the cause of inflation here. I should like to discuss my particular reasons for saying that, but let me first deal with a couple of arguments that are inevitably put forward.

Some people like to describe inflation as the excessive printing of money. Many talk about inflation as though it is caused by having too much money in circulation and if we only stopped the printing presses inflation would go away. That is not so. What these people are doing is confusing the cause with the effect. When you have inflation, the people responsible for monetary policy are forced to issue more money in order to enable the normal transactions to take place.

If you have a 12 per cent rate of inflation, it is obvious that your money supply must increase by at least 12 per cent; that is, if you do not have any growth at all. You must have that kind of increase in the money supply. I see that in today's newspaper there is a statement by a very distinguished Canadian academic, Mr. John Crispo, who contends that the problem is runaway government and not runaway inflation; in other words, all the fault lies with the government. I think the government has to answer for much of this problem, but it really is not correct to be simplistic and say that it is all the fault of the government. I presume Mr. Crispo raises no objection when his salary at the university is increased. When he is compensated for the cost of inflation, he probably receives more than the old age pensioner receives over the period of a year. So it is quite easy for him to make that charge against the government.

It seems to me that the causes of inflation over the last number of years are quite clear. Half of the inflation with which we are dealing has been caused by increases in the price of food. I say this very bluntly because it seems everybody beats around the bush whenever they talk about the cause of inflation. Somehow or other one particular group—I refer to the farmers—is never involved in the cause of inflation. They want to ignore the facts. It is the price of food which always starts the spiral, and it always has been that way. We could go back to the corn law. Why did the enlightened British government of that day want cheap corn? It was so that wages could be lowered. When the price of corn went up, wages had to go up in order to compensate.

When the price of food goes up, everything else must go up with it. People say that is an international problem. Even with the fact that Canada is a major exporter of food, it is still an international problem because the price of food goes up internationally and we have to follow suit. So to that extent it is an international problem. But if in fact we had wanted—I am not suggesting we should have done this—to control the price of food, it could have been done. Some people might say, let us compensate for it; let us make payments to the consumers as a way of keeping the price of food down. What difference does it make whether it comes out in the price one pays at the store or in the form of taxes to pay the subsidy; the net effect is still inflationary.

There may be very good reasons why the price of food has increased. My own view is that the price of food over the years has been too low to provide a decent return to the farmer and in fact an adjustment was necessary. However, I am afraid it did not stop at that adjustment. We know the reason the price of food has gone up internationally: the world population is exploding; there are more mouths to feed and there is finite land on which to grow food to feed them. Also, there has been a drought. These are all understandable reasons, but let us state them. Let us be blunt and straightforward about what is causing inflation, because before we can deal with the problem we must make a complete analysis of it to understand what it is. So I suppose the government and the farmers might argue that this is an international phenomenon, that food prices went up internationally and this is why we are paying more for food. The fact is that prices did not have to go up in this country had we wanted it otherwise. They did not go up in this country as much as they did internationally, because of the two-price system on wheat.

Let us take another main cause of inflation, the price of energy. One could say that is an international phenomenon. The Arab countries formed a cartel and raised the price of oil 400 per cent. The cost of production did not go up in Canada, but the province of Alberta wanted the price to go up by 400 per cent. I do not see my friends to the right, who are so concerned about inflation, criticizing the province of Alberta for being such a major contributor to inflation. Admittedly, arrangements were made so that Alberta did not take the full price, and we are very grateful for that. I am not saying this to point the finger at Alberta or at the farmer; I am saying it merely to point out that everyone is guilty and everyone contributes to inflation.

Everybody takes a holier than thou attitude. Everybody pokes the finger at the other guy and says the worker is responsible for this situation, the farmer is responsible for it and Alberta is responsible for it, when in fact everybody is playing the same game. Until we all stop playing that game we must compensate those who are hurt because of the consequences of inflation. This is really the only point I am attempting to make. In fact, Canada has done better than other countries in the fight against inflation—for two main reasons. The first is that the farmers have been prepared to take lower than world prices for some commodities, and the oil producing provinces of Canada have agreed to take less than they could have received on the international market.

In fact, there has been more than a gesture from both those areas of our economy as a contribution in the fight against inflation. However, it is not the case that the farmer and Alberta wanted to do this voluntarily, because the minute the international price went up they said they wanted that price. But I am sure they would both disown their contribution to inflation.

There is another factor over which I do not think we have much control. I refer to the rising price of services generally, not government services alone but every kind of service being performed in our society. These are areas, essentially, in which productivity cannot be increased. These are areas in which the people look around and see vast increases in other sectors of the economy, and their efforts to catch up have an inflationary effect. This is something we will have to live with. Of course, the imports which come into Canada represent something else we must live with. But to say that inflation is caused internationally is only to say that because you have the power in the country, you want whatever you can get under whatever circumstances you can get it.

Now let us look at some of the winners and losers. It is true that some farmers have done well in the last number of years, but other have done very badly. Many beef producers are on the verge of bankruptcy. Why? Because the price of grain has risen and their other prices have gone up. Beef is still higher than it has been for a long time, but the price of grain is going up even higher. So even within one group, whether it is the farmers or a province, you have the winners and the losers and you have disproportionate benefits going to one as against the other. Alberta is a very fortunate province. It is still the only province in Canada that does not have a sales tax.

An hon. Member: It has a good government.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes, it has a very good government. It created its own oil: you know, it waved a magic wand over land which did not have oil, and all of a sudden there was oil. Maybe the Social Credit Party could do that, but I do not know whether the Conservative Party is capable of such miracles. A government can be very good if it is lucky. There are other Conservative governments that are not doing as well. The point I am trying to make is that Alberta is a fortunate province, and I am glad about that.

If you have a period in which the price of oil is rising very sharply and the price of natural gas is rising very sharply, while the province is siphoning off the bulk of the revenue for itself, the people in that province will benefit and the people in the other provinces will not benefit to quite the same extent. So you have a massive redistribution and shift of income just as you have a shift of income between the western world and the OPEC countries—a tremendous shift of income: the kind of moneys flowing into the OPEC countries are almost beyond counting. We have this kind of a transfer going on. Of course, the OPEC countries will say this is only just, and that it is long overdue because the western nations have been exploiting them and they are just getting back what they are really entitled to. I do not want to deal with that argument today, except to ask hon. members to recognize the kind of shifts that are taking place.

Right now labour is being pointed to as contributing to inflation. What we quickly forget is that over the last three or four years business profits have increased at a phenomenal rate at a time when labour has not been keeping up with its share of inflation. If labour now tries to recoup for the increase in the price of food, the increase in the price of energy and for the fact that the firms for which they work are more profitable, should it come as any great surprise? Some sectors of labour are guilty just as the other elements of our economy are guilty. Some sectors of labour which have strong bargaining power are also taking advantage of the situation. Therefore I will not exonerate any one group.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) suggested that we should incorporate in our tax system a provision for the deducting of interest payments on mortgages—this in a tax system that already favours home owners as against those who pay rent. This suggestion comes from an hon. member who is concerned about fairness. How fair is that? In many cities of Canada, 50 per cent of the population do not own homes; they pay rent. Is he going to provide that advantage to those fortunate enough to own a home, and will he compound the advantage they already have by giving them advantages under the tax system? I do not see how he is going to fight inflation in that way, as in many ways the person who owns property benefits during a period of inflation because the property is appreciating continuously. Why should further benefits from the tax system be added to that benefit?

Let us consider the people who are disadvantaged. These are the people who are living on government transfer payments. It is not enough simply to say we will give them an increment to compensate for increases in the cost of living. If the cost of living has gone up by 12 per cent, should we give an old age pensioner only 12 per cent? What are we talking about? It amounts to only about $150 or $160 a year: that is all a 12 per cent increase means. What does it mean to a member of parliament, at the existing salary? It amounts to over $2,000. So if you apply a 12 per cent cost of living increase across the board, the cost of living increase for a member of parliament is more than all the income a pensioner has with his pension and the increment. What kind of fairness is that?

I think what we should be doing is finding a more suitable index that we can use to assist those who are on fixed incomes or transfer payments from the government. There are two ways of doing that. One way is to make a determination of what increases accrue to the average family during a period of inflation; it might be $300 or $400 a year, in which case—if you are going to give a cost of living increase—it means a $300 or $400 demogrant for everyone, for those at the bottom and those at the top. That would be more just then a percentage increase.

Another way is to apply an industrial index because the real standard of living in the industrial sector is rising faster than the actual cost of living. If you are living in a society where that is happening, that society has an obligation to its old people and to those on transfer payments to ensure that at least they keep up with what is happening in other sectors of the economy. The third thing that we could do is increase taxes steeply beyond a certain point so that those who get substantial benefits from their bargaining power will at least pay some of it back to provide transfer payments for those who do not have the bargaining power.

Those are some of the things we can do. However, we can only do them if we face the situation realistically instead of pointing the finger and saying that the government is guilty or one or another sector of the population is guilty, when in fact the whole of society has become grossly unfair, particularly to those living on fixed incomes and transfer payments.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to second the motion proposed today in this House by my hon. friend and colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) and which reads as follows:

That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem and blames the government for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating the unjustified increase in the cost of living; in particular the proposition according all Canadian Consumers, a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

This is, Mr. Speaker, a motion that we have long been wishing to propose in this House.

I wish to thank particularly my colleague for having proposed this motion in this House. It was proposed mostly because Canada continues to suffer from a noticeably higher inflation rate and also because of the many inefficient measures that the government continues to introduce to check that terrible plague called inflation.

Mr. Speaker, I seriously think that, the situation requiring immediate action from the government, the only position possible for a member of parliament must be to look for solutions openly, without any spites or partisanship in the shortest time possible. And the problem we have to resolve is very important and not easy to deal with. The problem is now more acute as a result of the constant increase in the cost of living. This government does not offer any valid solution to fight price increases. The measures proposed by this government are absolutely inadequate if we consider the present state of our economy. Everybody knows that inflation consists of an economic situation where prices are rising and that the situation has never been so dramatic in Canada since the big economic crisis of the 30's. Besides, a look at statistics reveals that since 1933 the consumer price index decreased only twice, in 1939 and 1953. We learn that consumer prices have been climbing steadily for the last 20 years and that our dollar is now worth only half what it was merely 20 years ago. What is even more significant and disquieting, prices are increasing ever more rapidly, since the prices of the necessities of life have skyrocketed. Furthermore statistics show that in 1974 the price of bread increased by 28 cents, sugar increased by more than 123 per cent and finally the price of potatoes also went up. It is easily seen that necessities of life reached unbelievable levels, compared to what they cost a few years ago.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

It can be seen how much small-wage earners are burdened by inflation, because price increases are especially felt at the consumer level. Nobody escapes it, but unfortunately people in lower income groups are hardest hit. Most of their income is used for buying food, because they must eat every day as we do.

We all know that inflation has been the most urgent economic problem facing developed countries of the world during these last few years. Indeed, no nation escapes it. It is a well known fact that inflation has been the subject of endless talks. But in the final analysis, no real measure was taken to control it. Governments are looking for and trying all sorts of ways to cure their economies. But after a while, every measure proves less and less effective, and inflation is always there. Governments and government economists realize full well their efforts and their austerity measures will not abate it.

Canada is not the only country hit by inflation, but we feel the crunch nonetheless. Since 1972, the rate of inflation has been on the increase. Sales prices in the manufacturing industry rose nearly 35 per cent during the last two years, as compared to 27.4 per cent in the 11-year period from 1961 to 1972. Wholesale price statistics indicate the corresponding increases were 33 per cent and 49 per cent respectively. So inflation is not abating, far from that, it underwent rapid acceleration, considering that since World War II, the cost of living has never soared that fast during a 12-month period. As a matter of fact, the rise in the cost of living was the highest since 1948, namely 12 per cent. The aggregate index of the cost of living increased by 1.1 per cent last November, to a level 12 per cent higher than that of November 1973. If I am not mistaken, the last time the cost of living increased more rapidly was between October 1947 and October 1948. During this period, after the removal of price controls imposed during the war, a rise of 12.2 per cent had been recorded.

According to Statistics Canada, during the last 12 months, grocery bills have increased by 15.7 per cent and the price of meals in restaurants, by 18 per cent.

We are living through very difficult and critical times. We are even on the threshold of an economic depression which could reach catastrophic proportions and challenge the very stability of the society in which we live. In the face of that, what does the government do? Not a thing. The ministers are quite content with saying that the disease is an international phenomenon, that we must bear with it patiently. In truth, they do not know what to do, they do not understand the real causes of inflation and, in any event, they do not seem to be any more concerned about its inevitable consequences.

The inflation we are cursed with is, to a large extent, the result of past errors of Canadian monetary and fiscal authorities. Those errors will be repeated again if we do not put a stop to it all. The government will not be able to destroy the healthy virus of soaring prices until such time as it takes the trouble of pulling out of a financial system that does not truly correspond to the facts of production and consumption.

To meet increasing prices, the purchasing power must also be increased without, however, lowering prices. More money must first be distributed to the consumers.

Now, it is realized that the system only distributes money for participation in production, such as the payment of salaries to employees or dividends to shareholders. So all this money is included in prices.

The accounting of the current monetary system is actually wrong. Only an honest accounting would bring inflation under control without interfering with the legitimate interests of the people. Madam Speaker, an honest and realistic monetary accounting would allow the implementation of the financial theories which economics engineer C. H. Douglas put forward half a century ago and which are known today as Social Credit. If such accounting methods had been adopted, I am sure that the resulting reform would have spared the Canadian people quite a number of changes.

The very price increases show how faulty the present system is. In my opinion, Madam Speaker, if the financial system was truly realistic, there would be no inflationary trends, but on the contrary, prices would drop steadily, while technological advance and updated methods would both increase and facilitate production.

No doubt we all know that the essential function of a healthy economic system is above all to supply and deliver goods to meet the normal needs, either private or public, of its people.

May I call it five o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There is no private members' hour today.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): If the system fulfils this function, then, where does inflation enter the scene? Where is inflation when facts govern the financial situation? In fact, the objective of the Social Credit is precisely to create a financial system supple enough to adjust itself to reality, a system which could be geared to every development within the economy to any degree of mechanization or automation, a financial system of service rather than of hindrance or domination. The relations between inflation and unemployment have been for several years one of the most controversial issues of the financial analysis. Besides, we now have in Canada a rate of unemployment that is much too high as well as a shortage of consumer goods. In addition, we find that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was right when he predicted last fall that there would be a higher rate of unemployment in the coming months as well as a drop in production before the end of the year. As time goes by, it is realized that the more the government fights unemployment, poverty and inflation, the more serious those problems become. I really think it is time the government found other solutions and sought the causes of the excessive rate of unemployment, of the fast increasing rate of inflation and of all resulting problems. That situation has become unbearable, since with the current inflation rate, it has become almost impossible to save today, because inflation deprives us of any revenue that might accrue from our savings.

● (1700)

It is apparent that we are heading for disaster. It is time, Madam Speaker, for the federal government to take the necessary steps to provide every Canadian with the required purchasing power to honour Canadian production, which would result in increased demand. The present government have a simple and well known way of avoiding their responsibilities and duties, and forgetting present problems. Judging from the way they act, one realizes that they are unable to consider the present objectively, they just live in the past or a dream. Government members talk, discuss future problems without worrying about those which need to be solved now. Meanwhile, problems keep piling up and becoming worse, since those responsible for their solutions are more and more caught up in the machine of habit or conditioning. And yet, the present cannot be managed just as it used to be by our predecessors.

We, in the Social Credit Party of Canada, have been urging for years precise solutions to counteract the disastrous impact of inflation. We are convinced that those solutions are our only hope of avoiding a dramatic bankruptcy of our economy. In fact, one of those solutions would be the implementation of a minimum guaranteed income enabling every Canadian to live decently within the capacities of Canadian production. We from the Social Credit Party will gladly implement such measures, because families need proper revenues. In fact, we have had the answer for many years. We seriously believed that the government had understood on February 18 last, when the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) announced, in a press release read at the welfare ministers' federal-provincial conference, his plans to introduce a guaranteed income system, as well as employment incentive measures.

Finally, the main objective of this program is to offer to the workers higher incomes than those of the unemployed, with public support. This program, which applies only if people have no job, has really nothing in common with the Social Credit program which advocates paying a guaranteed annual income to everyone, whatever their employment and salary.

In the final analysis, this government's program makes a real mockery of what should be a guaranteed income paid to everyone without discrimination. This system, which is more complex than current social welfare programs, will be more expensive that the present system and will simply be adapted to the old social assistance and welfare programs. It is undeniable that inflation should be controlled. But when we see the positions taken by the federal political parties on this matter, we have to wonder if they do not want the opposite. Indeed, in my opinion, the position of the Progressive Conservatives, who simply request a freeze of prices and wages, is unacceptable. Because of all this, and because they were frightened by the results of the price and wage freeze in the United States, the New Democrats decided to change their policy—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Inflation

[English]

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on this important motion. I am sorry that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is not in the House, and I am particularly sorry that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) is not here. Members of the New Democratic Party are normally in the House, but I gather the exhaustion that was caused last night has laid them low and they are not able to last the day.

It is also evident that members of the Conservative Party, exhausted from their efforts in debating an emergency measure on an issue that was settled before they began, find their ranks depleted. They are apparently less interested in current matters than they were in a matter that had already been settled before they returned after supper last night and which they debated into the early hours of this morning.

Unfortunately, I arrived too late to hear the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe today, but they seem to have been a warmed-over version of the speech he delivered to this House the other day on the motion of the New Democratic Party. He was followed by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge who admonished him, I think properly, for a "head in the sand" attitude toward the problems of the economy. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is a very respected member of the House who has the benefit not only of being a socialist but an entrepreneur and a representative of free enterprise and can look at the economy, as he does, from both ends.

I once spoke to a highly-placed official of the Liberal Party who told me that only two things had not gone up in price since the war—shoe-laces and the membership fee of the Waterloo South Liberal Association. I am sure that the high value of membership in that association has caused the price to rise; I am not so sure about shoe-laces.

The remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe recall to my mind the kind of negative and wholly cynical speech he made the other day. I believe that is the sort of attitude that over the last few years has denied the Tory Party a mandate from the Canadian people. The kind of issues we face today were the subject of a policy put forward by the Tories during the last election campaign, and rightly or wrongly—we on this side believe it was rightly—that policy was not accepted by the Canadian people. This policy is now cynically put forward by the current financial critic of the opposition to advance his own particular notions on how the economy should be managed. By making such statements to this House he completely distorts the efforts of this government to deal with the very serious issues which affect the economy. As reported at page 4075 of Hansard for March 13, the hon. member said:

> We all know the speeches which the Minister of Finance has delivered to labour union leaders, in which he has chastised them and said, "Hold your wage demands down." Surely it would have been much more fair for the Minister of Finance to have gone to those labour leaders, laid his cards on the table and said, "Sorry, fellows. In order to keep power and win re-election we tampered with the economy. We overinflated money. We spent too much. We caused inflation and we hope you will understand."

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

● (1710)

Later in the speech the hon. member said, as recorded on page 4076 of Hansard:

> Perhaps the most important thing I could say is, why doesn't the government resign and let us get another government? It is time for the minister to act. We believe he should act by lowering the tax rate in Canada in three important areas, namely, a reduction in personal income tax, elimination of the sales tax on building materials, and the allowing of interest on mortgages over 8 per cent to be a deductible expense before paying income tax.

That tirade about government inadequacy represented the limits of the hon. member's formula for dealing with the problems we face today. Earlier the minister had told us what the government had done in the November 18 budget.

Mr. Gillies: We have the highest unemployment and inflation rates in the world.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member says we have the highest unemployment and inflation rates in the world. That statement—

Mr. Gillies: Is true.

Mr. Abbott: —like many other remarks, is perhaps half true.

Mr. Gillies: We have the highest inflation rate in Canada's history.

Mr. Abbott: The minister said, as recorded on page 4071 of Hansard:

> I want to point out to him and to our colleagues in the House that we have done a great deal in an effort to protect those who are least able to defend themselves against economic cycles, against the erosion of inflation. We raised the old age pension and adjusted it against cost of living. We adjusted the guaranteed income supplement and increased it. We tripled family allowances and adjusted those against the rise in the cost of living to protect those families with small children, particularly those below the poverty line. We came up with the largest tax reduction in Canadian history, and 70 per cent of those reductions affect people with incomes of $10,000 or less. We eliminated what the hon. gentleman considered to be a regressive sales tax for all clothing, all food and all drink except alcohol. We do represent, after all, the party which brought in medicare and hospitalization programs and we are committed to a guaranteed annual income.

I ask hon. members to contrast the remarks of the minister and the policies reflected in the November 18 budget—policies from which all Canadians benefit today—with the kind of policies brought forward at the end of the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe against the government for its alleged inadequacies. Even the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, thought a member of the opposition, saw fit to dress down the official opposition for its willingness to assume that all inflation problems in this country are domestic in nature and have been created here rather than being worldwide. Inflation is rampant throughout the world.

Mr. Gillies: You know better than that.

Mr. Abbott: The forces of inflation were set in motion around the globe by a worldwide economic boom that caused demand for many commodities to outrun the available supply.

Mr. Gillies: What about Germany? Has the hon. member considered conditions in that country?

Mr. Abbott: The problem was compounded by the quadrupling of oil prices—that fact is well known—and the government acted accordingly. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has frequently pointed out, now the major driving force of inflation is coming from the rapid escalation of wage and salary costs as those who work in every country press for increased incomes to at least keep pace with the rising cost of living.

Mr. Gillies: Wage settlements in Canada have been 100 per cent higher than similar settlements in the United States.

Mr. Abbott: This was not an attempt to place the blame for current inflationary pressures on wage and salary earners in Canada in an effort to impose on them the main burden for reducing the pace of inflation in Canada. It was nothing of the kind. It was simply a statement of fact. In its Economic Outlook for December, 1974, the OECD voiced the same conclusion by asserting that earlier in the year the rise in oil and other commodity prices played the main part in generating inflation, but that now it is the rise in wages which is maintaining inflation at much the same high rate.

Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, pointed out in an interview in the Financial Times not long ago that there is nothing very new about the fact that rising wages and salaries should provide the main source of inflationary pressure at this stage of the economic cycle; he said it is just the way the economy could be expected to act. No one wants to see his standard of living eroded by inflation, not even members of parliament. It is fully to be expected that all Canadians will want to obtain a sufficient increase in their incomes to at least keep pace with rising costs. The government understands and supports that ambition, not just with words but with deeds. Through a wide variety of measures—subsidization of some basic commodities, reduction and elimination of sales taxes, a degree of protection for savings, and much increased social assistance benefits such as family allowances and old age pensions—the government has made a concerted effort to help maintain the standard of living of Canadians.

This government strongly supports provisions for periodic adjustments, to ensure that wages and salaries keep pace with the rising cost of living under the inflationary circumstances we face today. The real danger arises from the possibility that some groups in our economy may attempt to do very much better than to keep pace with the cost of living by pressing, by way of insurance, for increases in income from whatever source that go far beyond any reasonable expectation about prospective inflation rates. Undertaken on any large scale, such efforts would have the effect of a self-fulfilling prophecy.

This view has been expressed by many members on this side of the House, including the Minister of Finance, and in other forums. The president of the Canadian Labour Congress, in a New Year's message, warned that in Canada individual groups may tend to look out for their own interests alone in order to protect themselves from the dangers of inflation; often they may be unconcerned or simply unaware that by doing so they are hurting other groups, thereby ultimately hurting themselves. It is for the very purpose of avoiding this danger that the federal government embarked on a series of discussions with various groups in the economy—

Mr. Stanfield: To achieve the so-called consensus.

Mr. Abbott: —discussions which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) derides, in order to seek accord on national goals for steadily reducing the rate of inflation and on practical and acceptable means of achieving those objectives.

Mr. Stanfield: What are they?

Mr. Abbott: The Conservative's financial critic has voiced his dogmas, yet it can be said that the government has taken positive steps.

Mr. Stanfield: What are they? What can we expect?

Mr. Abbott: Reaching such an accord will not be easy. It has never been easy. It was not easy settling the strike which ended last night; it took a great deal of patience. The speeches made last night by members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition did nothing to settle the strike. It was settled by this government through negotiation and consultation. This process of consultation and discussion which is derided by the Leader of the Opposition and his party supporters is the only process by which we can bring about accord and the kind of stability so badly needed in this country and in the world.

An hon. Member: You don't believe that.

Mr. Abbott: I believe that we should consider such a course. The fact is that circumstances are very different from those we have ever confronted in the past. The world economy faces a far more critical situation than it has at any time since the last war. The classical method of halting inflation, the drastic slowing of economic growth, has become increasingly less effective in achieving its purpose. Furthermore, its cost in terms of unemployment is particularly unacceptable in this country, given the fact that we have by far the fastest growing labour force in the world.

Mr. Gillies: What trash.

Mr. Abbott: I hear groans of disappointment from hon. members opposite, but facts are facts; we cannot ignore them. These unacceptable costs have become evident in other countries, particularly in the United States and Britain. Experience indicates that comprehensive wage and price controls do not offer a viable alternative either, because they tend to retard economic growth and over the longer term may serve only to aggravate inflation rather than reduce it.

Mr. Gillies: We have inflation and unemployment.

Mr. Abbott: This method of dealing with the economy has won the acceptance of the Leader of the Opposition and especially of his financial critic.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Abbott: We do not hear too much these days about wage and price controls.

An hon. Member: Who is the Conservative financial critic this week?

Mr. Abbott: I don't know; they come and go so quickly. The only alternative left is that being pursued by Britain and the United States, namely, a voluntary national effort to gear down the rate of inflation. In contrast to the big problem facing other countries, we have the potential to maintain and even improve our standard of living over the next two or three years. Whether we realize that potential depends on whether we can collectively muster the will to reach a mutual understanding among the various groups in our economy. I quote the following recent words of the Minister of Finance:

● (1720)

No one is being asked to accept a self-imposed hardship. What I am saying is that collectively we will be a lot better off, not worse off, if we co-operate together to moderate our demands on the economy.

Those sensible words were delivered in the city of Toronto not long ago. It is even more likely to be the case if a national accord contributes to moderating all industrial strife and enables us to grow out of the inflationary cycle. There is no simple or quick answer to the problem of inflation. It does no good to criticize the government for attempting to negotiate and discuss these issues with the various sectors of the economy. It does no good to heap scorn and abuse on the Minister of Finance for carrying out the responsible policies in his budget which were only later acknowledged by other countries. Inflation will only be eradicated for all time with persistence and efficiency. There is no way in which governments acting alone can overcome inflation. Everyone has to play a part. It is this consensus the government is seeking. I hope it commends itself to the opposition as our other policies have since the last election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Madam Speaker, that was a delightful speech. I can appreciate members opposite applauding it; however, it is too bad the author did not deliver it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ellis: I am delighted to join in this debate. I have no difficulty in supporting the first 14 words of the Social Credit motion, namely:

That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation—

I think that statement is probably accepted by most people in this country. In fact, I would go a step further. Not only is this government lacking in action in its fight against inflation, but it is becoming its architect and designer. One department that I watch every once in a while is the Department of Public Works which does the architectural and design work for the government. That department is one of the worst offenders. When going through the estimates recently I looked at the figures for some of the buildings the Department of Public Works is either building or planning to build. I am not sure, and I intend to find out, whether the government really believes we are going to accept the excuse that inflation caused these figures. Let me quote three or four examples.

A Government of Canada building on Sparks Street, Ottawa, close to this building, increased in cost by over $18 million, 37 per cent more than originally estimated. The cost of a Government of Canada building in Ottawa known only as No. 8 increased by $15 million, an increase of 57 per cent. The cost of a parking garage in Hull, Quebec, has increased by 71 per cent. Finally, Government of Canada building No. 3 has increased by $58.7 million, an increase of 147 per cent. We know that inflation is rampant, we know the cost of construction has increased considerably, but surely we cannot be asked to believe that inflation caused those excesses. Somewhere along the line this government has been pulling the wool over the eyes of the public.

The next ten words of this motion are not hard to live with, either. They have to do with the fallacious pretext that inflation is an international problem. Is it an international problem that the increase in the gross national product is as low as the figures related by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)? I do not think so. There is a definite need for increased production in this country. My party has been stressing this for some time. Some of my constituents would like to enlarge their businesses; they would like to increase production and try to stimulate the economy by hiring more people. When they go to the Industrial Development Bank they find they are still charging 13 per cent interest. They still charge that usurious rate even though the bank rate has been coming down. How a small business can be expected to grow when we have a 13 per cent bank rate, I will never know.

Is it the international pressures that are forcing this government passively to condone illegal strikes and actively to support inflationary increases? I do not think so. I do not want my friends to the left, who are conspicuous by their absence this afternoon, to think I am blaming labour for the increases in the Department of Public Works' budget. The total budget is up 23 per cent. The majority of the increases are due to the size of the bureaucracy and settlements for executive positions. The increase in the workingman's pay is not very great.

The government has cut a number of accommodation programs but it has still boosted the budget by twice the rate of inflation. In their forecast they speak of re-using some older buildings. Frankly, I am not prepared to accept the fact that this is a particularly good idea. As a matter of fact, I have been carefully watching one building in Ottawa. I have watched it since they began to gut the building and up to this point. The building, which is being prepared for the new urban affairs department, was not sound to begin with. So far it has cost $8.5 million to repair the building—70 per cent over what was originally estimated.

The Minister of Finance has asked us to show restraint in our personal spending. With costs the way they are today, we have to show restraint. I wonder whether anyone has told the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to restrain spending. In the estimates I notice that repairs to the East Block, where the Prime Minister's offices are located, cost $7,950,000. You can build a good office building from scratch for something like $8 million. I doubt whether these remodelled offices will cause the work done in them to be one bit more efficient or satisfactory than in the past.

● (1730)

I know a lot of accommodation is needed for the extra million dollars, staff and lackeys that we have found in this department recently, but surely that is an excessive amount. The tax cut which we had asked for during the debate on Bill C-49 would have helped cut the government's income considerably and perhaps cut off some of the major spending programs that are being put before us in the estimates today.

The House leader went on at some length to talk of the wide ranging measures that are being undertaken by the government. I think the worst example yet is the Post Office. The level of service of this department has never been worse, and no one really knows what the costs of the post office department are going to be. Let me quote some of the costs that I have been watching in the estimates, again of the public works department. The postal terminal in Saint John, New Brunswick, was originally estimated at $5 million; now it is up to $8.6 million, an increase of 72 per cent. Another one in St. John's, Newfoundland, has climbed from $3.7 million to $7.7 million, an increase of 110 per cent. The Halifax, Nova Scotia, mail processing plant cost has climbed by 186 per cent. The best example of all is that the Montreal map program cost has climbed by some 300 per cent.

The impact of these figures is absolutely phenomenal. How can anyone possibly claim that the department is seriously fighting inflation when costs are allowed in one year to escalate by 300 per cent? We have heard a lot of talk about consensus. We have had the promises in the Speech from the Throne. I suggest to the House that perhaps consensus is not necessary any more, that it is too late. Perhaps it is time for leadership and firm action.

I am absolutely opposed to the last part of the motion before the House today.

I should like to comment briefly for a moment on some food items, including one item that is of particular importance in my part of the country. I refer to milk and the industrial milk program. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) promised the farmers of this country an answer on the support price for milk well ahead of the April 1 deadline. I asked the minister this afternoon when he was going to bring out this new price level, and he very flippantly answered "soon". That just will not do.

There is only one week left for the minister to make an announcement. Surely someone in his department, in the dairy commission, or in treasury board has some idea what the farmers are going to receive for milk this coming year. If they have, why cannot we be told? If they have no idea—and this may be the case—it is some indication of the type of leadership we have been getting.

My guess is that we will probably find out what the support price for milk is during the recess, when the minister will be able to get away with not tabling the document in an open House but will be able to slip it in quietly with the press releases for which he is so famous, hoping that it will be forgotten before we return. Let me tell him that this is one member who will be watching very carefully for the announcement, and there are a lot of farmers in my riding who will also be looking forward to it.

We are all faced with shortages of food. The cost of food is very high, but no problem is as bad as the one the farmers will face if they cannot get a decent price for their food and, as a result, no food is put on the market. I am not preaching doom and gloom, as has been suggested, but in my riding there are still many young men and women who want to get into the business of farming and who are capable of becoming good farmers, and because of the high cost they require some assistance.

There is supposed to be a federal farm program to help young people who want to become farmers. The ARDA program is designed with that in mind, as well as the farm credit program. Yet this program is operating on the basis of land values that are ten years old. The program has never been updated, and there is no way it can ever help a young farmer in view of the cost levels that we have today. The Department of Agriculture refuses to upgrade the stipulated costs, and I have a very strong suspicion that this is the sort of measure it would like to hold off on until the Ontario government has held its election, simply because the government feels it can embarrass a few people in this way. The federal government is stonewalling young farmers who want to get into farming.

I would love to support the first half of my hon. friend's motion, Madam Speaker, but because of the incredulous nonsense in the last few lines I find I cannot support it, and tonight at 9.45 I, together with many of my colleagues, will have an opportunity of voting it down.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to participate in this debate this afternoon, and I congratulate the members of the Creditiste party for bringing the motion forward. I, too, agree with the remarks just made by my colleague. We are pleased to support the first half of the motion, but unfortunately do not agree with the last half and so therefore will vote against it.

It is very important that parliament concern itself with inflation on a continuing and constant basis because of what has happened in this country. I blame the government very much for the situation. The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) by his remarks shows that we have become a nation that is willing to rationalize about the problems we face. We are pretending that they are not here, that they are going away, and so we do not have to do anything about them.

The fact of the matter is that during the last two or three years major mistakes have been made in economic policymaking. The last three budgets in this country were supposed to solve inflation by increasing supply. It is impossible to increase supply and consumption at the same time, and yet this is what the government tried. The situation is analagous to the period when Lyndon Johnson of the United States said his country could have guns and butter at the same time. You cannot take more from the economy than the economy itself can produce in the short-run. If the country needs some steel, then you build a new steel mill; but while you are building the mill and waiting for the steel to be produced you have to give up something else. The government has not understood that, and the net result is that we now have continuing inflation and rising unemployment.

The failure of the policy is self-evident. By trying to fight inflation through conventional methods—high interest rates and so forth—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has actually stopped any increase in supply, something which the government really wanted. One of the major reasons for inflation is the rapid increase in the price of housing and the decline in construction starts. We now find ourselves, after three years of mismanagement confronted with the terrible problems of continuing high levels of inflation and rising unemployment. The way the government has attempted to fight inflation is in fact the cause of most of our problems.

There is a decline in the rate of growth in the GNP. Probably in the next quarter it will be down more than it is in this quarter, and this is a clearcut demonstration of the policy failure that we have seen over the last two or three years. However, I do not particularly want to deal with these failures this afternoon; rather I just want to mention a couple of other things that I think are really more important.

First, one consequence of the way in which the government is approaching inflation is that we are developing a sort of fatalism about economic policy making in Canada. There has never been a time in Canadian history when the Canadian people had so little confidence in the ability of the government to make economic policy work. As one goes around the country talking with people one finds more and more of them saying, "You cannot do anything about inflation." As a consequence they are not willing to support programs and policies that attempt to fight inflation. As long as the government continues to rationalize and pretend that nothing can be done at all, and tells people that nothing can be done, nothing will be done. The price we may have to pay for this attitude on the part of the government could be very high indeed.

The second thing that is always said, because people want some type of explanation for the situation, is that nothing can be done because inflation is really an international problem. It is true to say it is an international problem, but it is wrong to say that nothing can be done. It is amazing to find secretaries of the treasury and ministers of finance in other countries beginning to pick up the language of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in the sense that they too are saying that nothing can be done because it is an international problem. George Mitchell, a member of the board of governors of a U.S. federal research group, speaking in Iowa a few days ago, said that the United States could not do too much to stop inflation as it was an international problem.

The only place people have not been saying too much about it being an international problem is in West Germany where the inflation rate is half the rate of inflation in Canada and the United States. It is a tremendous disservice to the people of Canada to suggest that because inflation is an international problem there are no domestic actions that can be taken to deal with it.

The hon. member for Mississauga said that probably the major cause for inflation was the increase in oil prices. I would ask him to take a look at a chart of the rate of inflation around the world, without any dates on it, and pick out the point in time when the increases in oil prices took place. You just cannot tell. It was a modest item, but not an important one in contributing to the present high rate of inflation.

The point I want to emphasize is that it is not sufficient to say inflation is a world-wide problem, and hope therefore that you can dismiss the problem and not have to do anything about it. The fact is that while inflation is taking place in all countries, it is only when each country decides to do something about it that the problem will be solved. The fatalism and escapism the government is perpetrating on the Canadian people are serious things, in fact some of the most irresponsible things any Canadian government has ever done.

The other thing that is happening in relation to the inflation we have is that some of the traditional views about proper economic policy are being challenged. It is an interesting question as to whether there is still a trade-off between unemployment and inflation. The government has always said it will not fight inflation on the backs of the poor, but in fact that is precisely what it is trying to do by allowing an increase in unemployment. The government hopes that there will be enough unemployment so that the rate of inflation will slow down. This probably will not work out as expected. Aside from the immoral aspects of this approach, it is probably wrong economics.

What we are really going to find is that unemployment will continue to rise, inflation will not drop very much. The old trade-off the government has always counted on is not going to work for us. Similarly it seems possible now that increasing taxes, which used to be thought of as a positive way of fighting inflation, will not work. Taxes now are simply passed on in the economy in the form of higher prices.

It also seems probable that the move toward higher interest rates will not fight inflation. Again high interest rates have been looked at as a means of slowing down levels of investment, but as they rise they are simply passed on in terms of higher prices to the Canadian people. The net result is that the traditional policies we have counted on simply are not working any longer, and the government has given way, passed over, or decided not to use what have always been the traditional policies in relation to economic activity.

In the first report of the Economic Council of Canada it was stated that the goals of economic policy making in this country ought to be the maintenance of reasonably full employment, relative price stability, diminution of regional income disparity and income disparity among people. What has happened to these goals? We now have the Economic Council saying, and the government of Canada accepting the proposition, that the real goal of Canadian economic policy should be to have less inflation than other countries with which we trade. What a cop-out that is. If we adopt that position what we are really saying is that no matter how badly other countries, particularly the United States, manage their economies, as long as we manage ours slightly better that is all that counts. Surely that is not a satisfactory situation.

It seems to me of vital importance that we recognize that we cannot keep telling the Canadian people we can do nothing about inflation, that it is a world-wide problem, and that as long as there is inflation in other countries we are helpless. We cannot continue to do that sort of thing, because if we say that over and over again pretty soon people will begin to believe it. Once the Canadian people begin to believe such nonsense then they will not co-operate in any policy trying to solve the inflation problem.

I suggest that speeches such as the one made by the hon. member for Mississauga this afternoon do great harm because they reinforce the idea among Canadian people that we really cannot cope with the economic problems we are facing. I am sorry I did not hear the speech of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), but if he said the same thing as the hon. member for Mississauga I would suggest that he, too, is doing a great disservice to the Canadian people.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. member deny that there is international inflation?

Mr. Gillies: Not at all. No one ever suggested that there is not international inflation, but it is a great mistake to jump from that to the suggestion that no country can do anything about it. It is a great mistake on the part of this government to say, over and over again, that we cannot do anything about it because inflation exists all around the world.

The point is that the government will not take strong action if it perceives that the people of the country do not want it to take strong action, and the people will not want the government to take strong action as long as the government keeps telling them nothing can be done. In this way you get into a hopeless circle.

One wonders why people keep asking why the government does not take stronger action against inflation, but I think the answer is very simple. The government does not take stronger action because it does not believe at the moment that people want stronger action taken against inflation. I repeat that people do not want that stronger action taken because the government has told them over and over again that we cannot do anything about inflation. This is a very dangerous direction in which to move. What is going to be the upshot of this situation? People talk and worry about inflation and rising unemployment.

Let us consider the situation in the United States, which is deteriorating very rapidly. In that country the inflation rate may go down to 8 per cent by the fourth quarter. The government is talking about stimulating recovery through deficits that could range up to perhaps $52 billion. The important thing about it is that this recovery will start from an 8 per cent inflation rate. If we have anything like the same sort of inflationary forces during the next recovery period as we had in the last, this means that in a couple of years we could witness about a 30 per cent rate of inflation in that country. The same conditions apply in Canada.

The big question is whether our social system can survive this sort of an inflationary level. What this will really mean is that the recovery will be short, the recession will be longer, and we will be back in the inflationary cycle all over again. If we cannot get inflation under control, and cannot convince the people of Canada that the government can do something about it, then we will be in such a cycle. I think we have to take this message very seriously. Under such conditions it is really an open question as to whether our social system, as we know it, can survive.

There is enormous tension in our country today. Normally one does not expect to see the Post Office not operating, to see the airlines not operating, or to see children not in school. Also people do not expect that, if their house catches fire, the firemen will not arrive. It is the essence of our society that the government provide an infrastructure in which people can live with a feeling of security and confidence. To the extent that this infrastructure falls apart, the fabric of our society is weakened and tension is increased.

A few weeks ago in Montreal the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke about tension in society. He was absolutely right; there is tension and it is growing all the time. The fundamental reason for the tension in our society is the fact that we have had so much inflation. The fact is that people do not believe they can count on staying even, and work and retain their real standard of living. Now, when we find that with rapidly rising inflation we have an accompanying slowing of economic growth, there is an infinitely greater increase in tension because we are not dividing a larger pie put are arguing how the same size pie is to be split. As a result the function of government more and more will not be to manage growth but to manage conflict.

We must be prepared to take the first step in defusing these conditions. The first step is to get our present degree of inflation under control. The tension in our country today, the labour disputes in our country today and the problems around the world are caused because we have not been prepared to deal with inflation. To say we have no responsibility to do this because it is happening everywhere is outrageous. I might say I have great sympathy for some of the views expressed from time to time about the need for consensus and leadership.

I do not think in a democracy we can have leadership that is very far removed from the feelings of the people in society. Leadership cannot be too far in front, nor can it be too far behind. We need leadership to try to get groups together to solve these particular problems. The real test of leadership, however, is to pick the strategic moment when it is no longer possible to operate with consensus but rather to take positive, strong action which the people really want. At some time if democracy is to survive, political leadership must be strong enough to take the chance of seeing whether or not this can be done. I believe that time has now arrived.

The real question in the world as we go into the latter part of the 1970's is whether democracy will survive. This is a very good question. If we look at history we see that the capability of democracy to deal with impending crises is not very good. Churchill was wandering around England in the 1930's pointing out what was happening in Europe, while Stanley Baldwin was getting elected. I am convinced that Franklin Roosevelt could never have taken the United States into World War II without Pearl Harbour.

Anyone who believes that we do not have an impending crisis of enormous proportions in our society, or ignores the fact that we have not been able to find a way to deal with inflation, or the fact that we now have a combination of increasing inflation and declining growth is not reading history or the situation properly. I say to the government that we should get off this kick of saying inflation is a problem around the world and we cannot do anything about it. It must go to the Canadian people, and tell them the realities. I have great confidence they will face what must be done when they are asked to do so.

One must make one's own assumption about this, but surely the time has come when the Canadian people really do want inflation tackled, and really want leadership on the part of the government to deal with it. It seems to me—and this is the reason I congratulate the Creditiste party for bringing forward the motion today—that there is a great need on the part of the government to reverse the proposition it has been putting forward for such a long time that we cannot do anything about inflation. We must do something about inflation if we want our society to survive. We must take a strong line in dealing with these particular problems primarily to create the public support which is necessary to take the type of actions which I think must be taken.

I see that my time has expired, Madam Speaker. However, I wish to emphasize once again how critical is the very foundation of the institutions which we think are so significant. We really must face up to our problems. We have seen and see today the collapse of political systems. We have seen this in Portugal and Italy. It is comforting to say it cannot happen here, but when your infrastructure starts to collapse it is necessary for government to take action.

I strongly suggest that we should hear no more about our inability to do anything about inflation, and about it being a world-wide problem. Rather, we should have a government which says we have a terrible problem which will be solved only by all of us really understanding what it is and playing our part in an effort to solve it. If we do not do this, the costs we may pay are incalculable.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before I recognize the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne). I must hear the hon. member for Hull who is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Isabelle: No, Madam Speaker, I am only seeking unanimous consent to revert to motions so I may table a committee report.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INACTION IN FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Matte:

That this House deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem and blames the government for ignoring the concrete proposals of the Social Credit Party for eliminating the unjustified increase in the cost of living; in particular the proposition according all Canadian consumers, a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, our administrators, as we have noted today, are really suffering from the inflationary fever which they have contributed to induce and maintain without making any serious effort to improve the situation. Our experts or those who believe they are try to create the impression that they hope to find remedies to the ailments gnawing at society. The facts are so obvious that they cannot deny the existence of an economic discomfort. However, the results of their research prove that there are too many physicians attending the patient. Already a great number of them admit that they are unable to find solutions. They try to convince the people that it is an international malaise. It is easy to say so, but it is far from being a solution.

It will be easily recalled that we have known depression and regression periods, expressions already used by the representatives of the various governments either during or after the 1929-1939 economic crisis. At that time all kinds of goods were available in great quantity. What they lacked was money. The producing system works generally fairly well. The proof is that there are always a good number of unemployed who represent production that is not taking place, yet there is no shortage of goods to guarantee food, clothing and housing to Canadians. It is the distribution system which is not working or which is working in reverse.

● (2010)

To try to explain the cause of this bad situation, our politicians use inflation as a screen for their administrative blunders. We seem to be completely in the dark. Are wage hikes a cause or an effect of inflation? Are stiffer interest rates a consequence of inflation or not? I believe that the unions are justified in requesting salary adjustments because of the continuing increase in the cost of living, but we must admit that if we consider future prices, salary increases will bring about higher production costs and accelerate the inflationary process in the present system.

Higher interest rates have exactly the same effects. They breed price increases and contribute to inflation. The present financial system has left us obnoxious twins: inflation and unemployment.

When we speak of inflation in political econonics, there are two things which expand and build-up: first, prices, second, wages. This reduces the value of savings. Prices increase when products are rare and there is too much purchasing power.

However, when wages increase, prices also increase. This is a vicious circle which, under the present administration, approaches perpetual motion, and it is called inflation.

I believe that in general, Canadians do their duty, but unfortunately, those in control do not always do theirs. They must produce the purchasing power required to allow Canadians to buy what they produce.

The financial system should relate to the realities of production and needs. Money should originate in wealth and go where it is needed. This is clear enough. Finance should be submitted to production, and production should be submitted to man. I believe that we will find the answer to the problems of inflation if we take the trouble to look for them.

I know that this answer, or that which can be suggested, is not always in accordance with the theories of certain economists who recommend restrictions, while we recommend an increase in the purchasing power. Still, we believe our solution is more realistic.

Newspapers now talk about inflation. Most economists threaten us with inflation, financiers speak of inflation as if it were a contagious disease, it now haunts our economic life.

That is why the time has come for the people to head towards solutions. By observing its causes, we will find the remedy; instead of speaking incessantly of inflation, we should start getting used to speaking of distribution.

Let us have a look at what happens when the consumer sees prices go up by 10 per cent and sometimes more in a year. Concerned, he turns to his storekeeper who, shrugging his shoulders, turns to his supplier, who points to the producer, who shows empty warehouses which proclaim a shortage. All those agents having seemingly justified themselves, the consumer, in despair, turns to the one who is responsible for the commonweal, the regulating agent of all social mechanisms, the political authority.

Municipal authorities being already too absorbed in facilitating the inflationary activities of real estate speculators and developers to be concerned about the ravages of inflation, the consumer wastes no time and turns instead to his provincial government which throws up its arms in a gesture of helplessness but, still nods in the directing of the federal government which in turn claims to be unable to cure a disease it considers international in origin. 'Tis easy to say' but, as I said before, 'tis no solution'.

In the face of what he believes to be a natural cataclysm over which no one has any control, the consumer then decides it's every man for himself.

Let us see what happens. He urges his union to request wages to be geared to the increase in the cost of living. Then every businessman, supplier and producer, even those who have few employees or whose employees do not belong to a union and are constantly underpaid, will make a pretext of those salary claims to further boost the cost of their products and services, but at a rate which is often higher than salary claims.

This hard pressed consumer, feeling that any way his purchasing power just evaporates like maple water, frantically invests his depreciated dollar in consumer goods, thinking to himself that they will be out of the reach of inflation once he owns them.

And the circle becomes more and more vicious: the higher prices go, the more people buy. And since the more you get the more you want, those who derive excessive profits from inflation will put the finishing touch to its spiral by saying from time to time with a heartbroken face: "Food products, services, and real estate costs might increase in the next few months". Then the media, always anxious to serve the public, will widely spread the unfortunate news. And what at first had been nothing more than probability rapidly mushrooms into certainty in the minds of the people who will not say anything when the facts are accomplished a little later. The media therefore pave the way for inflation when they want to oppose and fight it.

This explanation may look simple, but it is worth a lot of others, since nobody can explain and solve the present crisis. They try to prove that inflation today is the most difficult economic phenomenon to master, because everyone in his own way contributes to fanning it, even those who claim they have got the solution.

All experts admit they are unable to find an efficient remedy. But in this darkness one thing at least is clear: in front of a handful of people who pull the strings and become excessively rich, and a majority which is being bled white, the helplessness of governments is less than reassuring.

Here is another remarkable thing: economic life is concentrated today within the hands of multinational monopolies which by their worldwide, concerted action create a situation whereby political institutions suddenly appear totally obsolete. Since politicians, through lack of vision, failed to organize the world beyond frontiers, economic forces are doing it in their way. And we know what the results are.

Prices are higher and higher each day, inflation terrorizes everyone, the dollar is losing its strength and the future of our economy no longer inspires the confidence it used to inspire.

The main factor of the spiralling inflation we know is the increase in taxes, direct or indirect, and at every step of the production of an article when it is offered to consumers. Today, not only the prices of tobacco and spirits are swollen mostly by taxes. We must open our eyes. Through taxes governments gradually confiscate an ever larger part of the returns of human work while at the same time subsidizing artificial employment projects and often non-indispensable social welfare. That destroys in individuals the sense of responsibility, initiative and interested enterprise, those very virtues on which is based any free and sound society. That is undoubtedly another factor which contributes to the sickness that is inflation.

Heavier debts and the cost to finance them both in the public and private sectors also play a vital role in the inflationary thrust. If our current policy regarding credit, interest and taxation is not changed in a near future it is not impossible that our system and economy will collapse, crushed by the debt and tax pyramid, undermined by the devaluation—not to say the debauchery—of our currency.

But some minds inclined to smug optimism, as others are to melancholy, contend that there is no reason to be alarmed, and that inflation will go away as it came. For that matter, they say, inflation is preferable to recession. One could go on and say that inflation generates less misery than the economic crisis in the 1930s, and that in spite of the oil crisis a private citizen is better heated than the sun king was. But with that kind of rationale we would still be trucking.

[Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska).]

Furthermore, inflation that has been lasting for over a decade with periods of fever and abatement will not disappear as it came because its causes are not momentary.

When one turns to economists to know the solution to that persistent inflation one is surprises to realize that their explanations—often contradictory—almost always leave the conclusion that it is impossible to eliminate that cancer from the economy. So if one is not fatalistic, one must look for a solution—perhaps not definitive but at least efficient—to that economic problem the social effects of which are increasingly costly strikes.

Political parties when they are in power have no solution to inflation. More precisely, they resort to such quackery formulas as credit restriction and interest rate increase. As experience has shown, not only do those measures fail to stop inflation but in addition they give rise to much more unemployment that costs taxpayers billions of dollars in benefits to the unemployed.

Before resuming my seat, I think fit to point out that in such a situation where all governments and ours especially cannot find solutions, it is about time we examined the remedies or at least the suggestions offered by those who have been observing the situation for quite a while, and made the effort of considering the Social Credit alternative. Perhaps there lies the answer that will be of considerable help in working out today's problems.

[English]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, any motion that deals with the problem of inflation is a serious one whatever the solution proposed, because the problem of inflation is a serious one—indeed most Canadians would consider it the most serious.

One constantly hears a plea when inflation is discussed and solutions are discussed that "there must be a better way". The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), for example, said that before the supper hour as often as one could in a 20 minutes period—there must be a better way. He did not say what it might be, however. He did not offer a price freeze solution because, whatever he thought before the last election, events and international experience since then have surely taught him that that is not the way, and that a freeze would have damaged Canada.

I want to take that plea, "There must be a better way", and deal with it in one narrow but critical hot spot of inflation, namely, the area of industrial relations. I have just returned from two days on the west coast. While I was there some irate Vancouverites drove me out to English Bay. I had the opportunity to look out over that bay and see more than 30 ships waiting for the strike to end. It was a long strike, and it crippled shipments. Not only that, it crippled the whole regional economy. Standing at English Bay it was easy to say, "There must be a better way".

I had a full sample of public opinion a few hours later in Vancouver on Pat Burns' hot line program. It is an excellent forum. A variety of feelings are expressed and, if I may make an observation about western feelings, they seem to be stronger even than those in my own constituency. Perhaps it is the depressing climate in Vancouver, Mr.

Speaker, compared to the ideal climate we enjoy in Toronto. But, my object is not to talk about the climate.

A number of themes came across from the public during the course of that program. Some people felt that all strikes should be illegal, that they were a throwback to feudal times, that they were wasteful, and that nobody benefited from them.

Another group felt that all public service strikes should be illegal. They argue that the treasury of Canada is a bottomless pit and there is no end to the payments the federal government can make in order to settle a dispute.

The third group felt that strikes in essential public services should be illegal—a narrower group than the total public service, but an important and sizeable one.

The fourth and final group felt that even if strikes are legal parliament should act at once, as soon as things begin to warm up, to end the strikes and send people back to work.

I want to talk tonight about the institution of collective bargaining. This is an institution to which the government and the Liberal party of Canada are very much attached and for which we have a great deal of respect, while many others in the country and in this House want to see it rejected. I will concede that collective bargaining is in trouble right now. Forgetting for the moment about the illegal strikes that are taking place to which collective bargaining does not fully apply, even when you look at legal strikes there are too many going on right now.

It is true that collective bargaining is in trouble, Mr. Speaker, but these days a lot of our economic institutions are in trouble. In fact, which ones are not? The stock market is in trouble, the International Monetary Fund is in trouble, the international private banking system is in trouble, and so are our foreign exchange markets. Why are all these things happening? Is the IMF in trouble, as the Social Credit Party wants to imply, because of the management of the Canadian economy—an economy which represents 6 per cent of the whole of the International Monetary Fund countries?

These institutions are in trouble not because they themselves are not working but because of unprecedented inflation which is undermining so many of our institutions. It is not the other way around. It is inflation that is the cause of these things.

When you listen to what the strikers have to say, Mr. Speaker, you can understand very well why they go on strike. Inflation is hard on wage earners. Men and women who have been on contracts for two or three years, and whose contracts are coming up for renewal, just want to make sure that they will not come out at the end of the next two or three year period with the short end of the stick. They want to be protected, and it is clear that inflation is the threat from which they want to be protected.

In this connection one of the new ideas that is compatible with collective bargaining and that I support is the cost of living adjustment. I think the government should be very receptive to the idea of accepting COLA in a contract. COLA may take wages up if the cost of living goes up, but it is the only way I know of that can also moderate wages if the cost of living tends to go down. Most experts seem to think that is going to happen, that inflation is going to recede.

I do not think there is anything wrong with collective bargaining as an institution, Mr. Speaker. It is just that, like all the others, it is suffering from inflation. I would assert that collective bargaining needs to be supported now by this House, by the public and opposition parties, instead of being undermined. This is not the time to tell the labour force, or any part of it, that this parliament wants to take away their right to strike, which is the main tool they have to protect themselves with when they feel their interests are at stake.

I have been speaking about legal strikes, Mr. Speaker, but there is another side to the coin. I mentioned before that there had been too many illegal strikes. Collective bargaining is undermined by illegal strikes as much as it is undermined by other forms of opposition. I want to deal with some examples.

There is a category of designated jobs in which employees of the public service are not allowed to strike. One example of such an essential service is shovelling the airport runways clear of snow. Those employees cannot legally go on strike. I have talked to men on those jobs and I know it it is very hard to go to work when your fellow employees are striking. It is difficult to cross a picket line to shovel a runway in a snow storm. They feel like scabs even though they are doing something the law compels them to do. But it is extremely important that unions recognize that essential service maintenance is a very important safeguard in the collective bargaining process.

While I was in Vancouver there was another example when air traffic controllers in the east threatened to call a nation-wide walkout because several members of their union had been laid off—wrongfully in the opinion of the union leadership. That was no ground for a strike. There is a grievance clause in the collective agreement which tells the union what its rights are in cases when it considers it has been wronged by management. If there is a grievance, the union can grieve and get the wrong examined. All kinds of rights are available to the union, but it cannot go on strike while the collective agreement is in force.

If we want to preserve the idea of the collective agreement it will be in everybody's best interests to make sure that the type of violation I just mentioned is not allowed to take place. When it does take place, management, in this case the Treasury Board, should exercise all rights available to it. These should be strong rights and the government should not be afraid to invoke them for the sake of any collective agreement. The government should not sit on those rights.

I now want to deal with parliament's involvement in strikes when strikes are in progress. It is easy for people to run to parliament and say, "We want you to settle the strike." I agree that parliament has a role to play in settling strikes, but parliament should not act while the collective agreement has a chance of working.

A small unit in the Toronto post office has made what many consider outrageous demands. It has demanded that the Post Office be turned into a Crown corporation before negotiations take place. That is a totally unrealistic kind of demand. If the major unions of the country, including the public service union, representing the great majority of workers were to make that kind of demand, I could understand people saying to parliament that, obviously, collective bargaining will not work and it is time for parliament to step in. While some people in Vancouver were arguing that parliament should send the Vancouver based public servants back to their jobs, in fact they were successfully bargaining.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having listened attentively to the hon. member's speech I say to him, with the greatest respect, that it is just a shade late. We debated the issue he is raising fully and frankly last evening.

An hon. Member: Until almost a quarter to four in the morning.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We are prepared to concede that the inflation gripping this country has made the collective bargaining process difficult, but I think the hon. member should relate his remarks to the motion advanced in good faith by a member of the Créditiste party. I look forward to hearing the hon. member's comments on inflation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Are you tired from staying up so late last night?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am as fresh as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then you are tired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hon. member's point of order relates to the relevancy of the speech of the hon. member who has the floor. That hon. member has said clearly that he is speaking about inflation. Therefore I think his remarks come well within the scope of the motion being debated.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, it has been obvious to the country for a long time that the Conservative party does not know what inflation is all about. The hon. member's intervention showed that he has no conception of the relationship between wages and inflation.

Mr. Dick: You are talking about strikes, not wages.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The hon. member was not talking; I think he was reading.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the role which parliament ought to take in dealing with strikes when other outrageous demands are included with outrageous wage demands. I think too many Canadians, too many members of this House, were calling on parliament to act when the collective bargaining process still had a good chance of working. In the end, within hours of hon. members expressing their frustration with the collective bargaining process, that process worked.

When parliament intervenes in the collective bargaining process the spirit of compromise is lost, that spirit which is the most important ingredient in the collective bargaining process. Why should any party to a dispute agree to a compromise if parliament is to resolve the dispute? Why should any party agree to reasonable demands if he can make all his demands by grandstanding before his constituents? In the case of the union, leaders grandstand before union membership, and in the case of the government the President of the Treasury (Mr. Chrétien) can grandstand before this House. Why should the parties not do that, if parliament is to be called to blow the whistle after some ritual period of fake negotiation?

True collective bargaining requires an honest effort by both parties, by the leaders of both parties, to achieve compromise. For that reason parliament should not intervene lightly. Many people have been losing confidence in the collective bargaining process. That is why I was pleased to see that the strike was settled, and that the collective bargaining process will work. If both parties approach each other in a spirit of compromise and good faith, it can work.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, under the Standing Orders of the House, the Social Credit Party of Canada introduced a motion on the problem of inflation in Canada as it relates to consumer problems. For some hon. members, that motion seems neither important nor a priority, because it deals with a problem which some claim has always existed or because it is insoluble. This afternoon, we heard the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) explain that inflation was a product imported from other countries, that Canada cannot rule its own economy. In fact, by using that argument this afternoon, the President of the Privy Council or the Liberals admit they are unable to administer Canada; they blame the effects of their own indolence on other countries, admitting they can do nothing about inflation since it does not depend on them. Yet, Mr. Speaker, these people have been elected, this parliament is democratic and supreme, and it is up to this parliament to determine the future of our economic system. It is not up to foreigners. If it were, why would there have to be a Canadian parliament? If we depend totally on foreigners in the vital areas of our economy, Mr. Speaker, there is no need for a President of the Privy Council or a parliament or a Prime Minister. Our work here is nonsense if parliament does not control the fate of the country and cannot orient it one way or another.

● (2040)

If the New Democratic Party were in power, its orientation of this country and its economy would probably consist in abolishing private enterprise, in attacking it straightforwardly and in treating everyone equally. This shows that if the New Democratic Party were in power, there would be radical change in the economy of this country. I do not share this view of the orientation of our economy. We believe in private enterprise. We believe in respecting individuals. We believe that each man, each human being must have equal opportunity in our country. Mr. Speaker, if the Social Credit party were given power tomorrow morning, by using either the Bank of Canada or compensated discount, not to control producers or consumers, but to control the economic life of our country, we would take action so that the production would reach the consumers. This is what compensated discount is all about. Mr. Speaker, with a Social Credit government, there would be an immediate change in the course of our economy since the money would serve the population.

Why is it that a change from blue to red does not change our economy? This is simply because the members of the old parties are financed by the same sources, and encourage and protect the same gimmicked combines with banks, if I may use that expression. This is why, after 100 years, we are no longer able to distinguish who is in control of what in our country.

Mr. Speaker, someone mentioned parasols a while ago. I shall try to speak about the heart of the problem. What is the cause of inflation? Producers say that it is the consumers. Consumers say that it is the producers. The financiers say: "It is because we buy too much." Others say that it is because we do not buy enough. Unions suggest it is because salaries are not high enough and that some are making too much profits. Still others claim that profits reach sky high and add that, due to inflation, extravagant salary raises are demanded. In such circumstances, those who should be members of a strong government fall in with those who are crushing the humble people and say to them through the soft and caressing voice of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner): "Tighten your belts, be reasonable in your demands". He said so a week ago.

Mr. Speaker, we are discussing today the food problem. Who is controlling food? This government, through its Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), stated Monday last on radio that the government could not directly intervene to alter prices or intervene indirectly to protect the consumer since the rise in prices was due on one hand to underproduction in Canada as a result of the weather and on the other to a world-wide drought. Anyone aware of the situation realizes that it is a matter of overproduction. But who influences and controls prices then? Who governs this country if the President of the Privy Council himself admits that he can do nothing because inflation comes from outside Canada? Yet, Mr. Speaker, I know that he does not suffer from inflation, because his salary is high enough. That is why he is trying to bring this bill before the House. The small taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, they know the problem of inflation. If it is not the government since he admits it, then who is it? Give some names!

First of all, Mr. Speaker, everybody knows all about Dominion Stores Ltd. and how they feed us so well. Let us go tonight to the heart of the matter. I am not trying to put the blame for inflation on anybody, I am seeking to find the roots of that problem, those who are responsible for our economy and who control this powerless government. That store chain, Dominion Stores Ltd., the most important in Canada, is controlled by Argus Corporation, whose Chairman of the Board is Mr. John A. MacDougall. This means that he has direct control over Dominion Stores Ltd., General Bakeries, the second largest bakery in Canada, Massey-Ferguson Industries, the leading manufacturers of farm machinery in the country, Hollinger Mines Ltd., which owns our iron mines, Iron Ore Ltd., in Schefferville, which sends our minerals to the United States for processing so that they can sell them back to us with a profit, companies which also control Domtar Ltd., the largest paper and building material company in Canada, and finally Standard Broadcasting, which controls CJAD in Montreal and CFRB in Toronto.

The same gentleman, although he may not be responsible for inflation, is one of those using inflation, with the help of this government, against and to the expense of small people. That gentleman is also senior director of AVCO Corporation, a 16-company conglomerate ranging all the way from a finance company to military contracts with the United States.

More important still, the same gentleman is a director and a member of the executive committee of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. To support him, three other Argus Corporation directors are also on the board of that bank, namely A. A. Thornbrough, financial adviser and A. L. Firley, junior chairman of Domtar's executive committee. It is amazing how those families gather together, and we always find one of our private, chartered banks behind that gimmick. Very amazing indeed.

If we are to believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), chartered banks are holy institutions, they are sanctuaries. Those sanctuaries control and overburden small-income people. They move producers against consumers, promoting struggles between these two groups. Owing to their actions, low-income people are affected by this inflationary situation, by the depreciation of money, as my colleague from Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) indicated, and those people go on profiting by inflation.

Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce vice-chairman John Leitch is chairman of the corporation controlling Maple Leaf Mills, of which he is also a director. And he is also a director of Massey-Ferguson. Those two large Canadian industries play a part in food production.

My fellow citizen working with Drummond or Utex earns $5,000 or $6,000 a year. In fact, according to Revenue Canada, the average annual income in my constituency is $6,700, or $129 a week. Workers follow the sales advertised by Dominion Stores and Steinberg's, to make both ends meet and give bread to their families.

These workers are victims of the financial system, controlled by the financial establishment that controls this government.

Another vice-chairman and director of the Canadian Industrial Bank of Commerce, Mr. W. F. McLean is also vice-chairman and director of Canada Packers, a company holding 500,000 equity shares of Dominion Stores Ltd., an investment worth around $9 million.

It is surprising, Mr. Speaker, to see how all those families keep together: the world of farm machinery, the world which controls production input, the world which controls banking, which controls the marketing for Dominion Stores Limited. All this belongs to the same group of financiers, as said my colleague, the hon. member for Kamouraska. Mr. Speaker, only a handful of men are running the country.

In short, Argus Corporation owns directly 23 per cent of the shares in Dominion Stores Limited, and an additional 6 per cent indirectly through Canada Packers.

Mr. Speaker, how can small producers, small farmers, small tradesmen in Canada face this tremendous increase in prices if their income is frozen?

● (2050)

Mr. Speaker, that does not make sense. Such is the situation with Dominion Stores Ltd. One could go much further, but I must be brief.

Let us now talk about Steinberg Ltd. Perhaps things are better on that side since "Steinberg is on your side" as they say in their ad. Steinberg interests that are now close to a billion dollars employ 23,000 workers and own the largest chain of grocery stores in Quebec, excluding Miracle Marts. Steinberg is 40 per cent controlled by Rockview Corporation which is 100 per cent controlled by Hernns Investments Ltd. Rockview and Hernns are two holding companies comparable to family trusts. Indeed, Rockview and Hernns have the same directors. Sam Steinberg has four daughters, including Rita Goldfarb. Let us see how interesting this is, Mr. Speaker. It is fortunate that this government speculates on people's ignorance. Mrs. Goldfarb died in 1970 but her husband replaces her. He now happens to be senior vice-president of TRIZEC Corporation which is one of the most powerful realtors in Canada with a turnover of about $800 million. Needless to say they manage among other things Place Ville-Marie, Place Bonaventure, 2020 University street, and about twenty shopping centres in Quebec.

Mr. Lazarus Philipps, a lawyer for the interests of Steinberg Limited—and that is where things become interesting—is both a director of TRIZEC Corporation and Steinberg Limited. Needless to add that TRIZEC is 66 per cent controlled by English Property Corporation Ltd. of England, probably the largest realtor in the world. However, English Property Corporation Ltd. is controlled by Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. of London and its president is—and that is the icing—Sir Brian Monurtain who is also a director of the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker, that is how ignorant and blind are the government members who protect those banks and say to the small consumer: "Tighten your belt." It is this same government financed by those same financial interests that controls and exploits Canadians.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, for the information of my colleagues, it is not the Bank of Nova Scotia, in spite of its interests and its relationship that finances them with Steinberg Limited, but rather the Royal Bank of Canada—and I will prove it—whose president is Mr. Earle McLaughlin and sits on the board of directors of about twenty big companies; he was one of the most determined opponents of Bill 22 in the English-speaking Quebec community. This Mr. McLaughlin is a director of Power Corporation which supports the Liberal government in Quebec that holds 10 per cent of the shares. Mr. McLaughlin is a director of the bank which finances Steinberg Ltd. and holds 10 per cent of the shares of Argus Corporation which controls Dominion Stores Ltd. These big corporations, Mr. Speaker, control Massey-Fergusson, Domtar, the Bank of Nova Scotia, shopping centres and other things.

If we dig deeper, since they are big financiers and they make profits, we realize that their profits are very small. What do they do with those profits? They reinvest them, build shopping centres and go on exploiting low-income people, against the interests of Canadians.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Speaker, I will spare the House the rest of the story. I have on hand fantastic data which actually show what is this conglomerate of banks. Mr. Speaker, those large companies that take an unfair advantage of the situation will lead us directly to socialism if we not take care.

The purpose of the motion under discussion is precisely to help the small business, the processor, and especially the consumer, the corner store to obtain fair marketing at a fair price consistent with the consumer's income.

Mr. Speaker, some of the members opposite find the compensated price a funny idea. Liberals were content with saying to the Conservatives during the last election: "It is not good to freeze prices and wages". But what did they have to propose? The Plumptre Commission whose chairman earns $40,000 a year, but nothing more. With this government we study studies without any results.

Mr. Speaker, is there overproduction or underconsumption in Canada? According to the Créditistes, there is underconsumption and not overproduction. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, our shelves are filled to capacity. Money is short and it is worthless. A worker today, after going on strike to fight for his legitimate and sacred rights, that is the right to earn a decent living for himself and his family, finds that with his wage increase he has less money to spend than he had five years ago, while his workload has increased. That does not make sense in a country such as ours.

Madam Speaker, we have seen in the past year in Canada, not in Japan or in Germany, mentioned by the president of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), potatoes destroyed in the fields, and today a New Brunswick company is importing ten million pounds of potatoes in Quebec and is putting them on the market to compete with our people. Who is controlling what? Go and see who is running this New Brunswick firm. Are we short of eggs in Canada? Have the Canadian hens stopped laying eggs? No, Madam Speaker. Have the workers stopped working in that industry? No, Madam Speaker. Yet, we destroy thousands of dozens of eggs. It is a scandal, the scandal of affluence in this country, Madam Speaker. Some may find that funny, but let us not repeat this shocking wastefulness in third world countries, because in 10, 15 or 20 years from now, the balance of power among the countries may have changed. Such wastefulness is sacrilegious. Do we have too much milk or too much butter in Canada? Madam Speaker, this government is lying, this government is exploiting the consumer in cahoots with the banks that control the marketing of our food stocks. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who is here now, directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture, which was answered on February 19, 1975, as reported on page 3359 of Hansard. The member asked whether the government had granted a subsidy or a discount on the price of a quart of fluid milk and, if so, how much?

Madam Speaker, those in the House who find the Social Credit motion silly and those who, like the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), say that it is nonsensical, should know that the government of which they are members granted last year milk subsidies amounting to $109 million as a discount on the price of a quart of milk. I am sure the hon. member for Compton does not understand what we are proposing here, that he merely toes the line.

When the Minister of Agriculture announced that subsidy, the hon. member for Compton applauded and did not understand. Tonight, the same thing is proposed with respect to the whole of food production in Canada and the same hon. Member who found that all right when it came from the Liberals finds it ridiculous when it comes from the Social Crediters.

Madam Speaker, people from that constituency were losers in that. A $109 million consumption subsidy was granted by the Liberals. It sounded fine; the government were said to be generous. But not to worry, Madam Speaker, this government are bright and intelligent. They went and fetched the money, it did not take them long. On February 24, 1975, we learned from a tabled document—let us refer to Question No. 519 on the order paper, raised again by my colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—that 24,949,700 pounds of butter were imported from various countries. That butter is for sale, the government buys it from other countries at an average cost of 54 cents a pound. But the same pound of butter imported by the Canadian government is sold for 94 cents to the consumer.

Madam Speaker, the government themselves act in the same way as Dominion Stores, Steinberg's, Argus or Power Corporation. They import butter from foreign countries, bring it onto the Canadian market, fiddle, as the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said, with the ticketing, launch the product on the market, buy it for 54 cents and sell it back for 95 cents, and again it is the consumer who pays for the subsidy he was to benefit from.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has now expired.

Some hon. members: Proceed!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House agreed for the hon. Member to proceed with his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: I thank my colleagues, Madam Speaker.

Let us note that this subsidy relating to the price of milk, this consumption subsidy was granted by the minority government. We then got a lot more with respect to the problem of Canadian consumption that we do now. We now have a strong government, and farmers in my constituency who are asking $11.60 per hundredweight today, Madam Speaker, are the victims of this situation because they do not manage to make both ends meet. This government makes promises to them, but does not consult them, and a little later they will play politics and say: We are the ones who did that.

Madam Speaker, are Canadians actually partners of this government with regard to the economy of this country or are they always to be considered as poor relations in our economy, as marginal people? That is the question.

The President of the Privy Council also said this afternoon that if a financial help to consumers creates inflation. So, in his great wisdom, the president of the Privy Council suggests that financial assistance to the consumer, the journeyman, the labourer, would create inflation. However, the president of the Privy Council, in the same government, is launching numerous programs to create employment, to increase production. On the one hand, they say that it is a lack of production and on the other, hand, they say: Restrain yourself, your income is too high.

Madam Speaker, there is something wrong in this Parliament. Do members visit their riding? Do they listen to the people to learn about their situation? When an unemployed comes to our office and has been waiting for two months for his first unemployment cheque, and that man has three children, Madam Speaker, here is a Canadian who deserves our attention. He deserves to be heard, to be welcomed, and to be helped. Then he goes back home and hears on television that night the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) say: "Old chap, if you don't mind tighten your belt". Then he switches to another station and hears, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) say: "If you want to save energy, tighten your belt, turn off the lights when not needed". Sometimes the ministry uses Mrs. Lise Payette for that kind of advertising, and I would be interested to know how much she gets for that.

An hon. Member: It must be "heavy".

Mr. Fortin: It really is "heavy", Madam Speaker.

We ask the working poor to make the sacrifices that the big shots cannot and do not want to make.

Madam Speaker, in my last remarks, I will simply say this: the Social Credit Party is not a socialist party. We believe in the free enterprise system, everybody knows it. We believe that the only aim of production is to meet consumption, because production as such makes no sense, and to build a tractor for the sake of it or to cut out a dress for the sake of it does not make any sense. When you cut out a dress, it is to meet a need. Now, Madam Speaker, money in a country is exactly no more than a means of exchange so that production meets needs, that is consumption. Now, over the years, governments have given chartered banks the power to issue our currency and our credit. They have given them the power to extend loans based on absolutely nothing. How can you reimburse $150, when you have been lent only $100?

Members on the other side may solve this mathematic quizz, but you cannot return $150 when you have received only $100. Even if you work, because of the depreciation of money and the lack of balance between total income in Canada and total production, it is mathematically impossible to buy this production.

Madam Speaker, this is the tragedy we are in. Money, which is already insufficient, is being depreciated by almost 50 per cent. Some will probably still refuse to accept that money is being depreciated.

An hon. Member: With the Social Credit, it cannot be devaluated!

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, with the Social Credit it cannot be devaluated since money is based on production. I see that the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) finds it funny. Madam Speaker, I would like to see the hon. member for St. Boniface explain inflation to labour and tell them: "Tighten your belts".

Madam Speaker, we have come to a point in this country when we must look for positive solutions.

In this House it should not be said that the Progressist Conservatives are no good because they are conservatives, the Liberals are no good because they are liberals or the social credit this does not make sense because it has never been implemented. Acting that way, Madam Speaker, would generate in this Parliament a partisan and political spirit rejecting solutions that would really solve the problem.

● (2100)

Madam Speaker, I might be convinced that Liberals are not financed by financial conglomerates such as banks, Dominion Stores Limited, Steinberg Limited, Argus Corporation and Power Corporation only if they were honest in their attitude and their search for solutions and if they accepted to listen and study the creditist proposals even to reject them later. But, Madam Speaker, when they reject it before discussions and explanations are started, it shows that those people have interests to protect. This is why I hope that the Progressive Conservatives will understand the meaning of our motion.

The object of our motion is not to implement the social credit theory as of tomorrow morning; it is rather to make this government understand that the only solution to our inflation problem is to help the human being workers, unemployed, farmers, deprived, and consumers alike. If the Liberals find it funny, it is their problem, they will be judged in due course, but tonight I ask my colleagues of the Opposition to explain and prove to this government that it is strong, it is really on the people's side on the side of the weak on the side of financial conglomerates such as banks, Dominion Stores Limited and Steinberg Limited. And then, Madam Speaker, the opposition will have raised an important debate thanks to the Social Credit Party of Canada. We shall have made a step forward by showing our solidarity on behalf of the Canadian people to this government which defends the wealthy corporations. We shall have shown the government that it is time to protect the average citizen, the builders of our country.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the Social Crediters for having proposed this motion on inflation. I cannot support their motion, but I appreciate their sincere concern about the inflationary threat and their determination to fight it effectively.

[English]

I am speaking tonight during this debate, although I took part in a debate a week or so ago on a similar motion put forward by the NDP, because I regard this subject of such great importance, and because I welcome the opportunity to speak particularly to those members of the government party who are present and to impress upon them, since they have the responsibility at this time, the grave importance of the menace that confronts us, and the importance of a real assault on the problems of inflation, consistent of course with methods that enable our economy to continue to grow, expand and provide employment.

[Mr. Fortin.]

We are in all probability three and a half years away from the next general election. Surely we can discuss this matter with a view to reaching some positive and constructive approaches. We are some months beyond the last election, and surely we do not have to refight it again in discussing these issues. Surely in most parts of this House there is an agreement now that there is no simplistic solution to this problem we are confronting.

I do not know whether the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is making an interjection or conducting a private conversation, but if he does not mind I will pay no attention to him tonight and just present the views I wish to present seriously to his colleagues who are prepared to sit and listen. I think he will listen too, knowing he is a man of—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If you say something that makes sense I will listen.

An hon. Member: You don't have sense enough to know what makes sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government is fond of saying that every party in the House has simplistic solutions to this problem. It keeps hurling at us, for example, that the only solution we have is prices and wages control, as they call it, or prices and incomes control. We never put that forward as a comprehensive solution to this problem. I want to say that, in advancing that appropriate fiscal and monetary policy, in all probability there would never have been a time in which such a policy would have had a better chance of succeeding than following the election on July 8, 1974.

I do not rise tonight to argue about the last election or the next. I rise tonight to try to persuade supporters of the government to face up to their responsibilities and present, to the House and the country, an attack against inflation.

I think what the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) had to say before the dinner hour was very appropriate and just. The pre-election policy of the government, concentrating on shortages, was surely too simplistic to be regarded as satisfactory. Inflation in Canada could not be solved by increasing supply in Canada if it were true, as the government said, that the problem really was international. This is obviously contradictory. When the hon. member for Don Valley said that the government had a tendency to give the impression—I want to be fair to the government House leader—to the country that these problems are really international and that there is not too much that we can do about them, I think he has a real point which he expressed eloquently.

The truth of the matter is that many Canadians today feel helpless in the face of inflation. They have been persuaded by various forces that there is really not very much that can be done within Canada, and that the government cannot do very much to deal with inflation. As the hon. member for Don Valley expressed it, this is an exceedingly serious state of affairs when the people of the country feel they really cannot tackle this problem. I hope the government House leader will not misunderstand me and I hope his friends behind him will not misunderstand me when, standing here as I do with no intention to contest the next general election, I say I am horrified by what strikes me as the enormous complacency of my hon. friends opposite in the fact of this problem which confronts us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want my friends opposite to get upset. I want them to listen to me and hear what I have to say on this subject. They give me the impression that they have an election behind them, that the next election is three and one half years away, and that they are prepared to wait out whatever difficulties there may be in the meantime with confidence that things will correct themselves before the next general election.

Mr. Allmand: That is not true.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope it is not true, but I say in all sincerity that that is the impression they give me, and I suspect it is the same impression they give many people in this country. I want to say to them that if there is one thing that would tempt me to continue in politics in this country in some minor role it would be to fight that complacency which seems to exist. The way in which these gentlemen discuss inflation and the effect it has on the country strikes me as really extraordinary.

The government House leader today spoke about the government having taken measures to offset the erosion of savings in this country. I know my hon. friend pretty well and I know he cannot possibly believe that. He must be well aware of what is happening to the savings of the ordinary person in this country. Actually the savings of the ordinary person in this country are being destroyed today.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) spoke about the effect of inflation upon the redistribution of income in this country. It is enormous. The hon. member for Don Valley was perfectly correct when he referred to these problems, the effect of inflation of 10 per cent or 12 per cent over a period of years and the effect of all this on the ordinary Canadian. I am not talking about the big shot who has a lot of expert advice and perhaps somehow can protect himself. I do not know what is going on over there, Madam Speaker, but I should like them to listen to me for a moment.

An hon. Member: How can you say we are complacent?

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say members of the government are complacent. I said that is the impression they give me, and give a lot of other people. When I consider the effect of inflation and what is going on in this country in respect of those who try to save and are unable to save, I find it impossible to accept or understand the lackadaisical approach of the government to this problem today. I find it difficult to understand how member after member on the government side of the House can be satisfied to stand up in this House and talk about this being an international problem, seem to be satisfied about this, and denounce and attack me and my party for having supported price and income controls.

Mr. Sharp: I was addressing myself to the motion before the House.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not referring only to my hon. friend. I do not want him to be too sensitive. I think my hon. friend has a fairly profound understanding of the problem. He is a pretty good servant of the government he serves, and puts forward the best case he can for the government when he speaks. I really am more concerned about some of his colleagues, and I say that very sincerely.

I am impressed by their complacency, and also by what I take to be the degree of common ground in the House about how inflation can be attacked in Canada today; the degree of common understanding and agreement that it really has to be attacked by dissuading Canadians as a whole from trying to demand too much from the economy. When I ask questions from day to day about the approach of the government it is not because I am attacking its policy but because I want to know what the government is seeking a consensus about, how earnest and serious it is about this approach, and what progress it is making.

What I am unable to accept, in view of the common recognition in the House about the importance of achieving consensus in this country of ours, whether in the form of compulsory short-term controls which we suggested during the campaign, or by some other approach the government has, is that the government is sincere when, having announced this program in the Speech from the Throne, now many, many months afterwards the leader of the government in the House rises today and says that he thinks we are getting near the first phase of the examination.

Mr. Sharp: The end of the first phase.

Mr. Stanfield: As I said before, I am fully prepared to support the consensus approach. But I do not think it is asking too much that I be given some indication, some tangible evidence, that the government is sincere, is pursuing some definite approach, and that it is making some progress in this regard. I have to say to my hon. friends opposite that on the basis of anything that has been said so far this appears to be a put-on. I hope this is not the case. Quite apart from what impression I may have I would like to think that at this stage at which we find ourselves, with an election behind us, with the government with a majority behind it, with another three years until the next election, that this House of Commons could work toward some real attack on the economic problems of this country, some attack that recognizes what inflation is doing to the ordinary Canadian, an attack also that recognizes the need for employment.

● (2120)

I thought that was really one of the main purposes of the consensus program, namely, to provide the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with a framework which would give him more room to manoeuvre in terms of expanding employment opportunities in the country. We in this party are prepared to co-operate with the government in supporting that kind of program. What we ask for is not gimmicks, not any expression of views that there is a simple solution to the problem of inflation, because even a program of consensus will not provide a complete solution. Are we asking too much in asking the government to give the leadership that was promised to the people of Canada, and to tell us what it means by consensus?

There seems to be agreement in the House generally about the need for restraint. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said that this was not only the government's fault, it was everybody's fault. I take it that this is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance, and the government House leader have in mind when they speak about such a program.

With such a wide area of agreement in the House on the general nature of the problem and the appropriate approach, why can the government not tell us and the people of Canada what its program is? Why can we not move forward with this program? Why do we find ourselves in the absurd position, many, many months after this program of consensus was announced, with the House leader rising in the House and saying we are getting near the end of the first stage of the program? I say to the government House leader that we agree that there is no simple solution to this problem, we agree about the importance of maintaining employment, we agree about the importance of restraint, including restraint on behalf of the government, and we agree about the importance of consensus of enabling the various elements in our economy to achieve a consensus.

What we ask for is leadership on the part of the government to indicate to the Canadian people what restraint really means for them, what is really asked for from the various people of this country in the way of restraint. We want some indication as to what is appropriate patriotic behaviour on the part of individual Canadians in their various walks of life in this situation. That is what we ask for, and that is what we are prepared to support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, before getting into the detail of my comments in this debate I would just like to say how honoured I have been two weeks in a row, on two opposition days, to have made my remarks immediately following the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I do not know what omen that portends, but I certainly find it to be a rare distinction for a new member of parliament.

Another comment I would like to make results from some private derogatory comments that did not find their way into Hansard but were directed my way by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) last week, during a similar debate. He might be pleased to note that tonight I am not reading my speech. For the first time I rely only on a few notes. Whether that proves to be an advantage for those who are in this chamber and who will be listening to me, or who will read my comments later in Hansard, remains to be seen.

Third, I would like to say, for the benefit of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that I intend to address my remarks directly to the motion that is before us tonight. I hope that that will keep him happy for the next few minutes.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I would like to speak on the motion in two parts, as I have divided it. In the first part the Creditiste party deplores the inaction of the government in its fight against inflation. In the second part it further deplores the fact that the government has failed to support the Creditiste party in its proposal to give all Canadian consumers some form of compensated price on food products they may require.

Speaking on the first part of the motion let me say that, in my mind, it is not unlike the motion that was put forward in the House last week by the NDP in which they were also deploring the inaction of the government in its fight against inflation, and were indeed proposing that a new budget be brought to the House immediately, this at a time when the budget had received royal assent just two hours earlier.

The arguments that I made that evening are equally applicable tonight in the sense that a major new budgetary direction is being proposed. I do not think there is much point in repeating the same old points. It takes considerable time for the budgetary process to work its way into the economy, and I think we are only beginning to see the effects of the November 18 budget as they start to make an impact on the Canadian economy.

It is far easier for a party in opposition to say to the government that there has been inaction on a particular matter than to say there has been lack of action or too much action in a particular direction. Personally I do not fault members of the opposition for disagreeing with the economic policies that may be put forward by the party which forms a government. Indeed, one could argue that that is part of their responsibility, and I think it is fair for them to say that there is too little here or too much there. But I think it is rather unfair—and I submit in this case completely unjustified—to say that there has been no action.

Indeed, actions have been taken. I refer once again to the red booklet which is a summary of the November 18 budget, and I refer to some of the titles within that budget booklet where reference is made to actions to stimulate housing construction, actions to sustain capital investment, actions to reduce substantially personal income taxes, and actions to protect savings. I suggest that if those are not collective actions that tend to work against the problems of inflation, then I am not clear in my own mind what actions might so work. It is quite clear that they are actions designed for that particular purpose. So the implication that no action has been taken by the government in connection with the inflation problem is simply incorrect.

The other point that I think is worth making is that the actions that have been taken by the government in a number of instances were taken before actions undertaken by other governments of some major countries in the western world. I think this was where we showed leadership. Again I say that the question is not one of action versus inaction, but I suppose one could argue whether one form of action is more appropriate than another. To date the kinds of alternatives given to us by the opposition have really not amounted to very much in the form of substantial action.

● (2130)

I would also like to speak about the first part of this motion pertaining to the inference that we are wrong in connecting our problem with the world problem, and I quote:

. . . deplores the inaction of the government in the fight against inflation on the fallacious pretext that it is an international problem . . .

I repeat what I said last week; whether we like it or not, this is an international problem. The price of oil quadrupling is not only a Canadian problem but it is an international problem. The price of sugar having increased as substantially as it has over the past year, and now receding somewhat, is not a Canadian problem but an international problem. The cost of fertilizer to the Canadian farmer is not a Canadian problem but an international problem. The cost of binder twine, a very basic commodity which farmers use in great quantities to bind bales of hay and which is an imported commodity—it is not a Canadian problem that the price has tripled over a short period, but an international problem.

I think we have to realize that there have been international shortages of key commodities. There has also been a desire, and a proper desire, in my view, on the part of people in some of the underdeveloped countries to improve somewhat their way of life. I find it difficult for us to criticize that particular feeling on their part, and this invariably will reflect itself in their costs and the end prices at which they will sell their products to us.

I repeat that the problem is an international one. There are other examples. In the United States of America it took 80 years, from 1860 to 1940, for basic prices to double. From 1940 to 1975 they quadrupled. The point is that we cannot sit back and expect prices in this country not to move substantially when it happens to our important neighbour to the south.

There is one area where we do have some vulnerability. I think we are all concerned about the problem in relation to our own labour costs. There is no question that these costs are growing substantially, and we read that we are perhaps even leading the pack in this area. Yet it is very difficult to convince a labourer doing the same kind of work in the city of Windsor that he should earn less money than his counterpart living across the river in Detroit. It is very difficult to convince a street cleaner in Toronto or Montreal that he should work for less money than his counterpart in a city of equal size in the United States.

We do have problems in terms of total population and what we can afford. We must come to grips with these problems, but they are not easy problems, and it will take a combined effort by government, business and labour. I suggest that it has to be undertaken by virtue of a consensus. I think that we are trying to reach that kind of consensus and, until we do, the problem will remain with us.

With regard to inflation in the future I would like to emphasize again that the budgetary measures taken by our government in November will work their way through the economy over the coming months. I would like also to suggest that there are already signs on the horizon that the inflation period may be coming to an end. We may indeed be moving to the point where the back of this particular problem will be broken.

Before we get too contented and happy about that situation we must realize that we could be facing a more serious problem, or a problem equally as serious but with different complexities, and I refer to the potential problems of recession. Certainly our economy is not growing, nor are the economies of the western world, at the percentage rate one had envisaged a year or so ago. I think that this is an important point because this could be one of the last occasions on which we in this House will debate the problem of inflation in isolation from some of these other complexities. In connection with that I would like to quote a comment made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States this past Monday morning, when he was appearing before the Senate budget committee in the United States. He said:

There has been an obvious softening, for instance, in the price structure. Consumer prices are now climbing much more slowly than they were, and wholesale prices have fallen for three months in a row—the first such decline in eight years.

I would like now to move to the second part of the motion before us tonight where there is again criticism levelled at the government for failing to support the idea of putting a compensated price on all Canadian food produce.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, ever since I have been sitting in the House, I have always had much respect for the views expressed by members from that side of the House and in my opinion they often deserve much consideration.

[English]

I say this because I am not prepared to say that this particular part of the motion in my view is wrong. I am simply saying that I see certain dangers in it which have not been addressed. For one thing, every time we accord a government outlay to support prices for a certain segment of the community, there is another segment of the community which must pay the bill. This means that we must look very carefully at any support we may give from time to time. I think that must be looked at in considerable depth, and analysed extremely carefully.

In this particular case we could be getting ourselves into something we are really unable to measure in terms of potential cost, potential involvement, how it would be handled, etc. I think, for this reason, that that suggestion would require very carefully measurement and consideration, particularly at a time when we are saying that it is probably unwise to aggravate the inflation disease. At this point, any massive government outlay of that kind would obviously have that kind of effect.

I think that the protection of the consumer is a very important matter at this time. It is a concept I am able to support. I think the manner in which we protect consumers and what kind of protection we are giving them, however, are things which must be carefully considered, not just for the sake of the person paying the bill but also for the person who is ostensibly receiving the benefit.

If we were to pump more tax money into any kind of support program to ensure reasonable food prices—whatever is deemed to be reasonable—we must carefully consider what we are getting ourselves involved with, Madam Speaker.

To summarize, I have all due respect for the motion put forward by the Créditiste party—for whom, as I mentioned earlier in my remarks, I do have the greatest respect—and for the ideas I have heard them express, but I find myself unable to agree that my government has done nothing about the inflation problem confronting Canadians. Rather, it has taken some very positive measures in this regard which have been acknowledged by members of the western world community. There is some evidence of this in that our own Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has been elected chairman of the interim committee of the World Monetary Fund. There is also such evidence in the provisions of the November 18 budget.

● (2140)

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, I want to suggest once again that, in my view, the inflationary ogre may well be moving to a lesser position on our list of economic priorities.

I am unable to support the tenuous suggestion that the government should further shore up the economy by artificially supporting high food prices at a time when we are really looking at means by which we can keep prices and costs as low as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), who just concluded his remarks, said that I had mentioned on previous occasions that he read his material. I should like to commend him tonight for not doing that. If the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) were to make the same contribution this would be a better place.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the same point of order. Here we had an example of a Liberal backbencher making a very constructive speech. If you were to compare that with the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) then I think the Leader of the Opposition should be complimenting this backbencher on a job well done.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(9), to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

[Mr. Martin.]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Matte) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that there are no schedules, A, B, C, D and E, to the estimates to which you have referred.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion which has just been put is in reference to the supply bill just passed and the schedules therein contained.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize one must not quarrel with a statement of the Chair but the supply bill we passed was for 1974-75 and these are interim estimates for 1975-76. There is an explanation, but it is a better one than this.

Mr. Speaker: Is the said motion adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-55, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1976, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-55, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1976, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

● (2220)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to know, without getting into debate, whether the minister will give the usual and traditional guarantee with regard to the moneys to be covered by the interim supply bill and if, in doing so, he will explain to us the provisions of clause 5.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will give the explanation when we are in committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—$4,603,596,900.59 granted for 1975-76.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the appropriations requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to June 30, 1975. In no instances is the total amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills. The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I would like to say that item 5 constitutes the not unprecedented power to borrow up to $4 billions. We can trace back in similar bills passed in previous years a borrowing power and if my information is right, this power to borrow $4 billions is completely in accordance with the Standing Orders.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. May I just point out that the schedules referred to in the resolution are the schedules that are attached to this bill.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is right.

Mr. Stanfield: Of course he is right, he is always right.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that the House should have a further explanation as to why the items covered in clause 2(b) are in fact being carried to the extent of eleven twelfths of the total estimate.

Mr. Chrétien: Which one does the hon. member refer to?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am referring to clause 2(b), the eight twelfths of the total of the amounts of the several items in the said estimates set forth in schedule A, $120 million. This is an additional eight twelfths on top of the three twelfths which are passed in clause 2(a), so with respect to the estimates set out in schedule A we are passing tonight, eleven twelfths of the total estimate. I think that is virtually replacing any meaningful committee review of these estimates, and a further explanation should be given.

Mr. Chrétien: I think that the hon. member referred to Clause 2(a) and (b), and I think he referred to eleven twelfths. That is really in reference to annex (a), and the first one is agriculture. For his information the program is production and marketing, loans to finance the construction of an exhibition building. This additional eight twelfths is requested to meet substantial progress payments for projects in western Canada and eastern Canada.

Mr. Baldwin: You've gone to the metric system.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I hope that we can keep to the point of order because it is my duty, according to the rules which we operate under at this stage of committee of the whole on this bill, to see that there is no debate. The hon. member can ask questions for procedural information, but I would not want to have a debate carried on from one side of the House to the other.

Mr. Chrétien: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, there are a few items like that. I cannot enumerate all of them. They are in the Schedule. They are advance payments which we need right away because on those few programs we have to advance the money right away. We need the authority of the House to make those payments. The payments will be in the fiscal year 1975-76, but the payments here will be made in the first quarter of the year. That is why we are asking for the authority to spend nearly all the money, not three twelfths but eleven twelfths of it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order—and I have raised this on other occasions—it would seem that tonight we are asked to approve things which have not been approved by the committee. We may be operating under the rules of the House, but I do not think half or three quarters of hon. members on all sides of the House really know what this bill is about. I would call it the biggest financial abortion ever to hit parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: An illegal abortion.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. If the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Fortin: I am rising on another point of order, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: In reply to the hon. member I must say that I hope he is not reflecting on the Chair. This is a procedure which has been established by hon. members in the House of Commons, and it has to be followed by the Chair in the Committee of the Whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has explained very briefly Section 5(1) which pertains to the power to borrow $4 billions for public works or general purposes. Does the Minister mean that he is empowered to borrow $4 billion at an interest rate he cannot divulge for works that have not been approved by the House?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is an authority to borrow in the usual ways of the government. I said in my preliminary remarks on this bill that each committee will have the opportunity to make a detailed examination of those supplies and that the passing of this bill not prejudice in any way the members' right to ask questions about those expenditures when the ministers appear before the committees.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, my point of order deals with clause 2(b). Could the President of the Treasury Board explain the urgency in having to pass eleven twelfths of this amount tonight, bearing in mind that there has been absolutely no committee review of this item whatsoever?

● (2230)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, under the guise of a point of order, is trying to ask questions of the minister. Surely our procedure is that when we proceed with the bill members can put their questions. It is the practice, under the Standing Orders, when the main estimates are before committee—

The Chairman: Order, please. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I have just one brief question for the President of the Treasury Board. On page 10 of the bill there appears item No. 10 under the Department of the Secretary of State, "Bilingualism Development—$106,845,000." May I ask if this sum is for expenditure in the public service only?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the rule is that these questions will be asked in committee.

Mr. Woolliams: After you have spent the money. How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am just following what has been the tradition of this House for years. I have guaranteed the right of the hon. member to ask those questions in committee. He just wants to put on a show tonight, and he wants to be president of the committee when—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. They can laugh and shout over there but they are spending $4 billion or $5 billion of Canadian—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: If they think I was elected to put a rubber stamp on that kind of procedure, they are wrong. If the President of the Treasury Board thinks I am going to endorse that nonsense he is wrong.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Woolliams: The members of the government know it is a farce.

The Chairman: Order, please. I think if hon. members would take their seats for a few seconds it might be worth while to read the Standing Order. We do not sit in committee of the whole on supply and interim supply very often so maybe hon. members should be reminded of Standing Order 58(10), which reads as follows:

> On the last allotted day in each period, but, in any case, not later than the last sitting day in each period, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary time of daily adjournment, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then in progress and, if those proceedings are not in relation to a no-confidence motion, he shall put forthwith successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply,—

I have no choice but to invite hon. members to abide by the rule and not raise questions in the guise of points of order. Hon. members may have disputes and may disagree with the way we have to operate, but I have no alternative than to apply the rules. If hon. members have good and valid points I am ready to accept them, but if points of order are raised to seek information and ask questions, I have to consider them out of order. The hon. member for Moncton.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I have something really serious that I want to bring up at this stage. It is a question of privilege and a point of order too. You have ruled, and I suggest we follow your ruling, but I do not belong to the committees and I do not have the right to vote in this committee.

An hon. Member: You are a member of this committee.

Mr. Jones: You will have an opportunity to speak when I am through. I do not have the right to speak in debate at this particular committee yet the President of the Treasury Board suggests I go to a committee on which I will not have an opportunity to vote. I do not think that is fair. If that is the procedure which has been adopted by this House, that procedure is incorrect and should be changed.

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member might have had a valid point of order if he had raised it when Mr. Speaker was in the chair. At present we are in the Committee of the Whole House. I am chairman of the committee. The hon. member's grievance is not related to the workings of this committee. The hon. member has always received the attention and help of the Chair and I am sure, if he were to raise his point of order when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, that he would receive the full co-operation of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, earlier I raised a point of order. I wanted the President of the Treasury Board to indicate the urgency for passing the eleven twelfths item to which I referred, bearing in mind that $150 million is at stake. I think the President of the Treasury Board was willing to answer.

The Chairman: Order, please. If I allow the question and allow the answer we shall be engaging in debate, which I do not have the authority to allow at this stage. It is my duty to put all questions necessary to the committee. The committee is to decide on them forthwith, so that the bill can be reported in the House.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I am rising, not on a point of order, but simply to ask the President of the Treasury Board a straight question. I ask, is that sum for the public service only?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the rules do not allow me to answer.

Mr. Woolliams: They are Liberal rules, forced on us by closure.

Mr. Breau: You accepted them in December, 1968.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not accept them.

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Bellechasse rising on a point of order?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Since most hon. members are dissatisfied with this procedure, and nevertheless—

An hon. Member: Come to the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Let me speak first, you can speak after me. My dear friend will speak after me. The Chair has just explained that according to the rules, no debate or amendment are to be allowed. But, we are certainly not a bunch of morons. We are being requested to vote estimates amounting to $4 billion. We are being told: "Vote now, and ask for explanations later". That is, in short, what it amounts to.

Therefore, since just about everybody seems to be satisfied with this procedure, could we not agree—

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): The hon. member should do like us and attend the sittings of the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Dear me, the members are so displeasing this evening. It is not because the government members have obtained the consent of the official opposition on a sensible motion which we introduced that they should be so displeasing, for God's sake.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): If you do not attend the sittings—

The Chairman: Order. I would invite the hon. member to complete his point of order as soon as possible. I also ask for the co-operation of the other members who want to help the Chair, but who are not doing anything to help us progress quickly. The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your assistance. My point of order was quite serious and still is. Nevertheless, the hon. member for Laurier is teasing us when he says: "Come to the committee, if you want to know what is going on."

Mr. Chairman, we are united and we know what is going on, but they want to make us believe that we do not. We know what goes on. In all seriousness, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) whether, with regard to Annex E, we might have some information concerning the Food Prices Review Board: does the amount provided cover operating expenditures of the board or does it also provide for the extended mandate it will be given?

The Chairman: Order. I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member. Still, the hon. member must understand that his inquiry to the President of the Treasury Board is not in order. He must address it to the committee of the whole. If he wants this information, and to break the rule imposed to the committee by the House itself, he will have to get the unanimous consent of the committee. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (2240)

The Chairman: The hon. member can see that there is no unanimous consent. I shall therefore proceed immediately with the vote.

On clause 5—Power to raise loan of $4,000,000,000 for public works and general purposes.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Can the President of the Treasury Board indicate what sums are now remaining unborrowed and negotiated in loans authorized by parliament?

The Chairman: Order, please. Again the rules do not permit debate. Asking questions is debate. If the hon. member wants to seek the unanimous consent of the committee, he should do so.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: From the answer I am getting from the other side, I would be surprised if the hon. member could get unanimous consent. The hon. member may have a procedural point of order concerning clause 5, but he cannot ask for information as far as the bill is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman I rise on a point of order about a very technical matter. I did not understand quite well when you stated the title and the number of this bill. Did you say Bill C-44 or Bill C-55?

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member will be pleased to know that this is Bill C-55, not Bill C-44.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. When was notice given with respect to this bill? Was it when it came before the House?

An hon. Member: Where were you?

Mr. Jones: I have been here. Where have you been?

The Chairman: I did not get the point raised by the hon. member. Is he asking when notice was given?

Mr. Jones: When was the motion made to concur in an item of this nature? When was the notice given in writing?

The Chairman: Notice was given in Tuesday's notice paper.

Bill reported.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened to my hon. friend from Calgary North raise his point of order, and I do not know how we got into this mess, but it seems to me very unrealistic that we have just spent $4 billion. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) said that I have the opportunity to question these estimates. I respectfully state that we must look into this matter because I think it is wrong that we spend $4 billion in this way. I do not know what has happened, and no one on that side seems to care.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I am on a point of order and until the Speaker tells me to sit down I am going to keep talking. I think this whole procedure has to be reviewed. It is a farce, a sham. It is just ridiculous that we spend $4 billion and no one can ask any questions. If this procedure does not call for review, then I do not know what is going on around here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and others have raised points of order. The fact of the matter is that under the procedures now used by the House the question of the supply of money to the government, which is the subject matter of both bills before the House tonight, is predicated upon a previous procedure of examination of the spending estimates. Under that procedure the estimates, whether they be main or supplementary estimates, such as is the case with respect to these two bills, are examined in the standing committees.

There have been discussions in the procedure committee which have resulted in the presentation of a report which, according to remarks made earlier this afternoon by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), would repatriate some of the examination of these estimates from standing committees to the floor of the House of Commons on supply or allotted days. This process of examination of the spending estimates which are in the schedules to the bills, and therefore the subject matter of the supply bills, is the continuing subject of discussion by that committee. The passage of these bills this evening must be predicated upon the previous opportunity of examining the spending estimates, which after all are the substance of debate either in standing committees or on the floor of the House.

Whether this is a satisfactory way of examining the spending estimates which lead into this supply process is a question that has been actively considered by the standing committee on procedure, and it is hoped that the experiment suggested in the report which will come before the House may be a satisfactory improvement. If it be not a wholly satisfactory improvement, other experiments may be attempted which, it may be hoped, will meet with the satisfaction of all members.

● (2250)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, having heard the wording of your ruling I would ask your comments on Item 5—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, Item 5 was not covered—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Stevens: Item No. 5 was not covered in the estimates which were referred, and I am wondering—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret very much having to rise at this particular time on the point of order I intend to raise. My point of order is explicit. A debate has taken place for a full day in the House of Commons. A vote has taken place. If hon. members of this House of Commons want to get up and plead ignorance, or ask for the deletion of a particular debate or a part of the vote in which they participated, that may or may not be their prerogative. The rules of the House of commons specifically state that there is no excuse to be made in respect of how a person shall vote or how he has voted. All that reasoning should have taken place during the debate on the particular issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: For you to entertain this discussion or this exercise in respect of what really has taken place today is completely out of order, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest that you rule it out of order and adjourn the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my friend, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), what has happened here tonight is unacceptable and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Just listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), if he is again raising the same point of order which he was discussing earlier, I suggest we have disposed of it. If he has a fresh point of order I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Chrétien moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

At 10.56 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
