Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are illustrated beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

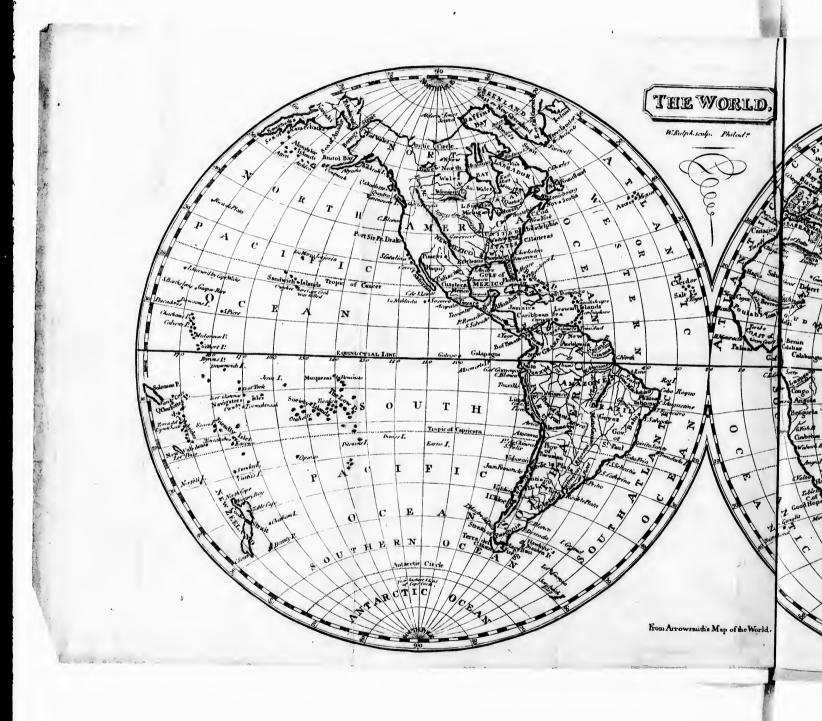

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ♥ signifie "FIN".

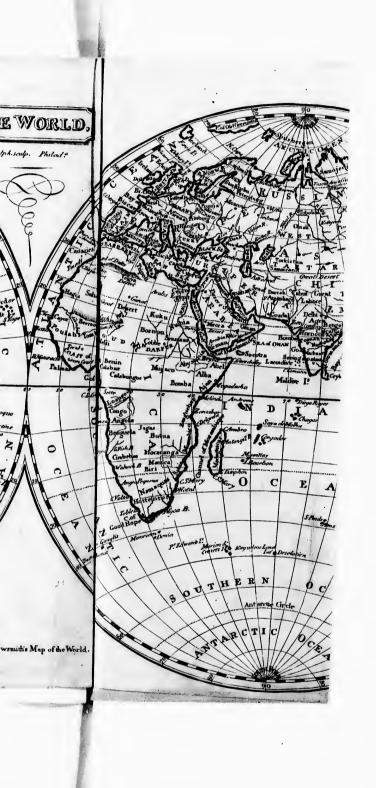

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE TWELFTH EDITION.

This edition has been carefully revised and corrected; and besides the considerable improvements which have been introduced in former editions of this Gazetteer, the publishers have availed themselves of all the latest and most approved publications, which could be of any utility in the compilation of this work. Park's Travels into Africa have been consulted, and the alterations introduced by that traveller into the geography of Africa have been particularly attended to; the late Embassy to Ava, and Journey to Thibet, have been carefully perused. and several alterations in the Geography of these countries have been introduced, besides the names of several towns and other topographical corrections. No pains have been spared to render this edition as correct as possible, and every publication has been consulted by the publishers, from which new geographical information could be obtained. The very material changes which have been introduced in the state of the different kingdoms of Europe within these few years, by the vicissitudes of war, or the still more uncertain operations i internal tumult, have been particularly noticed, and the historical events have been all brought down to 1801, except such as happened while the work was at press; and the distances, longitudes, and latitudes have been given with all possible accuracy.

In addition to the improvements detailed in the foregoing advertisement, the present edition being the first of this well known Gazetteer, that has issued from the American press, contains a description of at least 700 principal towns, &c. in the United States; which, doubtless, will render it the most valuable edition of the work that has yet appeared.

AN INTRODUCTION

TO ASTRONOMY AND GEOGRAPHY.

A STRONOMY, is the science of the celestial bodies; and GEOGRA-PHY, is a description of the Earth. As these two sciences have, in many respects, a necessary connection, we shall take a cursory view of each.

OF ASTRONOMY.

ARTRONOMY is a science, which has been the study and admiration of the most remote ages. The true system of the universe appears to have been known in the earliest times. Pythagoras, in particular, who flourished near 500 years before Christ, was undoubtedly acquainted with the present doutrine of the planetary motions, which he is supposed to have learned during his residence with some more enlightened nations in the East. Hence this doctrine, for many ages was called the Pythagorean System. This system supposes the Earth at rest in the centre of the universe, and that the heavens revolve round it from east to west, carrying all the celestial bodies along with them, in twenty-four hours. Being consonant to appearances, it was adhered to for many ages, till happily in the year 1530, the true system was revived by Nicolaus Copernicus, a native of Thorn, in Western Prussia.

OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

As by the universe is to be understood the whole frame of nature, to the utmost extent of the creation, by the solar system is meant that portion only of the universe which comprehends the Sun, planets, satellites, and comets. Of this system the Sun is the centre; and there are seven planets which revolve round him, each in its path or orbit. The names of these planets, in the order of their distance from the Sun, are Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Georgian. The first two, because they move within the orbit of the Earth, are called inferior planets; and the last four, on account of their moving without that orbit, are called superior planets.

THE SUN.

The Sun, the centre of our system, the parent of the seasons, and "great delegated source of light and life," is in the form of a spheroid, higher under the equator than about the poles. His diameter is 763,000 miles, his solid bulk a million of times larger than the Earth's; and his distance from the Earth is 95,173,000 miles. This distance is so prodictions, that a cannon-ball, which moves at the rate of about eight miles in a minute, would be something more than twenty-two years and a half in going from the Earth to the Sun. A number of maculæ, or dark spots, by means of a telescope, may be seen on different parts of his surface. These spots are supposed to be immense excavations in the body of the Sun. They have a motion from east to west; and as they are observed to move quicker when they are near the central regions, it follows that the Sun must be a spherical hody, and revolve on his axis. The time in which he performs this revolution is twenty-five days and sixhours.

THE PLANETS.

The planets are all opaque spherical bodies, and have no light of their own, but shine by means of that borrowed light which they receive from the Sun. From the regular appearance and disappearance of several remarkable dark spots, which, by means of a telescope, are constantly to be seen on their bodies, it may be demonstrated, that each has a motion round its axis, and from their seeming sometimes to be stationary, and at other times retrograde, it is equally certain, they must have a progressive motion round the Sun. As the Earth, moreover, is similar to the other six planets, it may reasonably be concluded, by analogy, that they must be designed for the same purposes, although, from their different proportions of heat and cold, it is not credible that beings of our make and temperament could live upon all of them. We now proceed to the consideration of each planet in particular.

1. MERCURY, the nearest planet to the sun, revolves round that luminary in about eighty-seven days and twenty-three hours, or little less than three of our months, which is the length of his year. Being seldom seen, however, on account of his proximity to the Sun, and no spots appearing on his disk, the time of his rotation on his axis, or the length of his days and nights is unknown. His distance from the Sun is 36,841,000 miles; his diamater 3,100, and in his annual revolution round the Sun, he moves at the rate of 105,000 miles an hour. These calculations, as well as those of the other planets which follow, are founded on astronomical observations made on the transit of Venus over the Sun, in the year 1761. Mercury seems, when viewed in different positiors with a good telescope, to have all the phases or appearances of the Moon, except that he can, at no time, be seen entirely round, co quite full; because his enlightened side is never turned directly toward us, but when he is so near the Sun as to be hid in his beams.

2. VENUS, which is the brightest and in appearance the largest, of all the planets, is the next beyond Mercury. She is 68,891,000 miles from the Sun, and, by moving at the rate of 76,000 miles an hour, completes her annual revolution in 224 days and seventeen hours, or about seven months and a half. Her diameter is 7,360 miles, and her diurnal rotation on her axis is performed in twenty-four days and eight hours. When this planet appears to the west of the Sun, she rises before him in the morning, and is called the morning star; and when she appears to the east of that luminary, she shines to the evening, and is called the evening star. She is in each situation, alternately, for about 290 days; and during the whole of her revolution; appears, through a telescope, to have the various phases of the Moon.

3. The EARTH, the next planet beyond Venus, is 05,173,000 miles distant from the Sun, and by travelling at the rate of 58,000 miles an minutes, which is the space of our year. This motion, although 120 times swifter than that of a cannon ball, is little more than half the velocity of Mercury in his orbit. The diameter of the Earth is 7,970 miles; and as it turns round its axis every twenty-four hours. from west to east, it occasions an apparent motion of all the heavenly bodies from east to west, in the same time. The line which it describes in its annual motion is called the ecliptic, and in this line it proceeds from west to east, according to the order of the signs of the zodiac. This motion is the cause of the different seasons of spring, summer, autumn, and winter, and consequently of the different length of day and night in these seasons. The rotation of the Earth on its axis in twenty-four hours, makes it day in those parts which are turned toward the Sun, and night in the parts which are turned from him. It is now received as an incontrovered le truth, that the Earth is of a spherical figure, nearly resembling that of a globe. This is evident from the voyages of several celebrated circumnavigators, who, by steering continually wes: ward, arrived, at length, at the place whence they departed; which could never have happened, had the Earth been of any other than a spherical figure. This form is also evident from the circular appearance of the sea itself, and the circumstances which attend large objects when seen at a distance on its surface; for, when a ship is sailing from the shore, we first lose sight of the hull, afterward of the rigging, and, at last, discern the top of the mast only. This is evidently occasioned by the convexity of the water between the eye and the object; for, otherwise, the largest and most conspicuous part would be visible the longest. Another proof of the globular form of the Earth is taken from the circular form of its shadow on the face of the Moon, in the time of an eclipse. The unevennesses on the surface of the Earth, which are caused by mountains and vallies, do not afford an objection to its being considered as a circular body: for the most lofty mountains bear less proportion to the vast magnitude of the Earth, than the small risings on the coat of an orange do to the orange itself, or a grain of sand to an artificial globe of a foot in diameter. Accordingly, we find, that these triffing protuberances occasion no irregularities in the shadow of the earth, during the time of a lunar eclipse. It has been demonstrated, however, that the Ear h is not a perfect globe. Sir Isaac Newton found, by mathematical calculations of the action of gravity on a revolving sphere, that the Earth must be flatted toward the poles; which hypothesis was fully confirmed by the mensuration of a degree in Lapland and France, from which it appeared, that the polar diameter of . the Earth is to' the equatorial as 229 is to 230; or, that the regions of the equator are elevated about thirty five miles more than those of the poles; and that the true figure of the Earth, consequently, was that of an oblate sphere id, or a body nearly resembling an orange.

4. Mars, the next planet beyond the orbit of the Earth, is distant from the Sun 145.014.000 miles. He moves at the rate of 55,000 miles an hour, and completes his revolution roone the Sun in little less than two of our years. His diameter is 5,150 miles, and his diurnal rotation on his axis is performed in twenty-four hours and thirty-nine minutes. He sometimes appears gibbous, but never horned, like the Moon; which evidently demonstrates, that his orbit includes that of the Earth, and that he shines not by any native light. This plant is diversified with spots like the Moon; and from his ruddy and obscure appearance, as well as from other circumstances, it is concluded, that his atmosphere is nearly of the same density, with that of the Earth.

5. Jupiter, the largest of all the planets, is the next in the system beyond Mars. His distance from the Sun is 494,990,000 miles. He travels at the rate of 29,000 miles an hour, and completes his annual revolution in something less than twelve of our years. His diameter is 94,100 miles; and, by a prodigious rapid motion on his axis, he performs his diurnal rotation in nine hours and fifty-six minutes. The telescopic appearance of his planet affords a vast field for the curious inquirer. It is surrounded by several faint substances, resembling belts or bands, which are parallel to the plane of its orbit. They are not regular or constant in their appearance; for sometimes one only is to be seen, and sometimes five; and, in the latter case, two of them have been known to disappear during the time of observation. This planet is also diversified with a number of large spots, which are on the brightest parts of the surface; but, like the belts, they are subject to various mutations, both in their figure and periods. His moons, or satellites, which are four in number, were discovered by Galileo, in 1610, soon after the invention of the telescope; but the belts were not discovered till near twenty years after.

6. SATURN, the next planet beyond Jupiter, is 907,956,000 miles from the Sun; and, by travelling at the rate of 22,000 miles an hour, performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-performed in the hours and sixteen miner is. Saturn is observed to be attended by even satellites. Of these, fix were discovered in the last century; and the other two were first observed by Dr. Herschell, in 1788. A magnificent luminous ring encompasses this planet, at such a distance, that several of the stars may frequently be seen between the inward surface of the ring and the body of the planet; its distance from which is equal to its breadth, which is about 21,000 miles. This ring was discovered by Huygens, about the year 1655.

7. The Georgian, the most remote planet in our system, had escaped the observation of every astronomer (at least as a planet) till the 13th of March 1781, when it was seen by Dr. Herschell, who gave it the name of Georgian Sidus, as a mark of respect to his present majesty, and to convey an idea to posterity of the time and place of the discovery. Its distance from the Sun is 1,816,455,000 miles, which is nineteen times greater than that of the Earth. Its diameter is 35,220 miles; and it revolves round the Sun at the rate of 7,000 miles an hour, in about 82 years. It shines with a faint steady light, somewhat paler and fainter than Jupiter; but its apparent diameter being only about four seconds, it can seldom be seen plainly by the naked eye, but may be easily discovered in a clear night, when above the horizon, by a good telescope. Six satellites, attending upon it have since been discovered.

Besides the primary planets, there are eighteen others, called secondary planets, satellites, or moons, which regard their primaries as the centres of their motions, and revolve round them in the same manner as those primaries do round the Sun; namely, the Moon, which attends our Earth; the four satellites of Jupiter; the seven that belong to Saturn; and the six that attend the Georgian. From the continual change of their phases or appearances, it is evident that these also are opaque bodies, and shine only by the reflection of the light which they receive from the Sun.

The Moon, which is the constant attendant of our globe, is the most conspicuous of these satellites. She accompanies the Earth in its annual progress through the heavens, and revolves round it continually by a different motion, in the space of a month. The diameter of the Moon is 2,180 miles; her distance from the Earth 240,000 miles; and, in bulk, she is sixty times less than the Earth. The rotation of the Moon on her axis is performed exactly in the same time that she moves once round the Earth, as is evident from her always presenting the same face to us during the whole of her monthly revolution. On viewing the moon through a telescope, the hypothesis of planetary worlds receives additional confirmation. Vast cavities and asperities are observed upon various parts of her surface, exactly resembling vallies and mountains's and every other appearance seems to indicate, that she is a body of the same nature with the Earth. Dr Herschell, the superiority of whose telescopes is well known, has stated, in the Philosophical Transactions for 1787, his observations on three different volcanoes in the Moon. Sevel ral astronomera have given exact maps of the Moon, with the figure of every sport as it appears through the best telescopes, distinguishing each of them by a proper name. One of the most remarkable circumstances attending the Moon, is the continual change of figure to which she is subject. While that half of her which is toward the Sun is illumined. the other half is dark and invisible. Hence, she disappears when she comes between the Earth and the Sun, because her dark side is then towards us. When she is gone somewhat forward we see a little of her enlightened side, which still increases to our view as she advances, until she comes to be opposite the Sun, when her entire enlightened side is toward the Earth, and she appears with a full illumined orb, which we call the Full Moon; her dark side being then turned away from the Earth. From the full she decreases gradually as she proceeds through the other half of her course; showing us less and less of her bright side, every day till her next change or conjunction with the Sun, and then she disappears as before.

THE COMETS. (a) - N . CER. 3. D

COMETS, are solid opaque bodies, of different magnitudes, like the planets. Their number is nuknown; but they have been found to move round the Sun, and to cross the orbits of the planets in all manner of directions. The orbits, in which these vast hodies move, are exceedingly long ovals, or very eccentric ellipses, of such amazing circumferences, that in some parts of their circuit through the heavens, they approach so near the Sun as to be almost vitrified by his heat; and then go off again into the regions of infinite space, to such immense distances, as to be totally deep rived of the light and heat which the rest of the planets receive from that luminary. The paths which they describe; and the laws to which they are subject, have been discovered by Newton. Their revolutions are governed throughout by the same law, of describing equal areas in equal times, which is known to regulate the motions of all the other bodies in the system.

OF THE FIXED STARS. .2 1000 /19102 33081

What a magnificent idea of the Creator and his works is presented in this account of the solar system! In the centre is placed the Sup, a stip pendous body of fire, around whose orb, the planets, satellites, and country, perform their revolutions with an exactness and regularity: which must fill the mind with the most sublime conceptions of their divines origin. Who can contemplate the magnitudes and distances of those vast bodies, and not be struck with the wonders of Omnipotence? But to form some idea, however imperfect, of the extent of the universe, and the more glorious works of creation, we must extend our views to those numerous and splendid orbs, which are dispersed far beyond, the bounds of our sow lar system.

The fixed stars are distinguished from the planets by being more luminous, and by continually exhibiting that appearance which we call the twinking of the stars. But a more remarkable property of the fixed stars (and from which they obtain their name) is their never changing their situation with regard to each other, as the planets do; for although the rotation of the Earth, on its axis, occasions an apparent during inotion of the whole frame of the heavens, in a contrary direction, yet any two fixed stars being observed, at distant intervals of time, will always be found to preserve the same relative position, during the whole of this revolution.

The stars which are the nearest to us seem the largest, and are therefore called stars of the first magnitude, and so on as far as the sixth, which includes all the stars that are visible without a telescope; and since the invention of that instrument, their number is considered as immense. But the immensity of their number is not alone worthy of admiration; their immense distance from us, and from each other, must equally exalt our ideas of the wonders of Omnipotence, and the inconceivable extent of the creation. The nearest star to us, or that supposed to be such from being the largest in appearance, is Sirius, or the dog-star; its distance from the Sun'is computed to be above 32 millions of milles, which is further than a cannon ball would fly in seven millions of years.

The stars being at such immense distances from the Sun, cannot receive from him so strong a light as they seem to possess, nor even a degree of brightness sufficient to make them visible to us. They, there-

The vulgar and uninformed imagine, that all the stars were made only to filve a faint glimmering light to the inhabitants of this globe, although many of these stars are so far from benefiting us that they cannot be seen without a telescope; and there are inhumerable others which the eyes even by the aid of that instrument can never reach. It cannot be imagined therefore, that the binnipotent Creator, who acts with infinite wisdom, and never acts in vain, should have created so many glorious sains fitted for so many important purposes, and placed at such distances from each other without suitable objects sufficiently near them to he benefited by their influence. On the contrary, it is reasonable to concludes that they were created for the same purposes with our Sun; to bestow light, heat, and regetation; on a certain number of planets revolving round them! And, from analogy we may infer, that all these innumerable systems are with equal wisdom contrived for the accommodation of rational inhabitants; perhaps of still higher orders of intelligent beings, all capable, in the different scales of existence, of a perpetual progression if knowledge and virtue, in perfection and felicitys

DESCRIPTION OF THE ARTIFICIAL SPHERE.

N the convex part of the terrestrial globe, which is an artificial spherical body, is truly represented the whole world, as it consists of land and water. The circumference of the globe is divided into 360 degrees, every degree containing 60 geographic miles; consequently the globe is 21,600 such miles round: but as 60 geographic miles are about 69 miles English measure, the circuit of the globe is therefore 24,840 English miles. The circles represented on the globe are, 1. The Equator, and the circles parallel to it. 2. The Meridian, and the rest of the meridinal lines. 3. The Horlaon. 4. The Ecliptic. 3. The two Tropics; and 6. The two Polar Circles.

The Equators, or Equinocrial, is a great circle, ninety degrees the fact from the poles of the world, and so pamed, because it divided

The EQUATOR, of EQUINOCITAL, is a great circle, ninety degrees distant from the poles of the world, and so named, because it divided the world into two equal parts: that in which the arctic pole is found, is called the northern half; and that in which the antarctic pole is placed; is the southern half. It is divided into 350 degrees, or 180 degrees east, and the same west, from the first meridian, which on English globes passes through London; and its principal use is to show the longitude of any place, east or west, from such first meridian. When the Sun is in this circle, there is an equality of days and nights all over the world: hence these points are called the equinoxes.

The MERIDIAN is a great circle supposed to pass through the poles of the world and those of the horizon, cutting the sphere into two equal parts, the one oriental, and the other occidental. It also passes through the zenith and the nadir in every place, and cuts the horizon at right angles. It is called the Meridian, because it marks half the space of time during which the Sun and stars appear above the horizon. As there is an infenite number of zeniths and horizons, the number of Meridians is also infinite; for the Meridian is changed, as well as the zenith and horizon every step we take toward the east on west; but if we pass, in a right line northward or southward, we still continue under the same Meridian, though we constantly change the zenith and horizon. However, geographers only reckon 360 Meridians, which are supposed to pass through every degree of the equinoctial. It has been customary for geographers to establish a first Meridian; though this, is, altogether arbitrary: Ptolemy placed it at the island of Ferro, which is the most western of the Canaries; but the common method, at present, is, for every ecographer to make the Meridian of the capital of his country the First Meridian; and, accordingly, the longitudes in this Dictionary are reckoned east or west from the Meridian of London. The use of the brass Meridian of a globe is to show when it is noon or midnight at the place to which it is applied; and also to find the latitude of places, north or south from the equator.

The ECLIPTIC is a great circle that cuts the equator obliquely, and represents that path in the heavens, which the sun seems to describe by the Earth's annual course round it. It is divided into 12 parts, called signs, and each of those into 30 more, called degrees, corresponding to the 12 months and the days of the month.

The Horizon is a great circle, which divides the world into two equal parts or hemispheres, of which one is superior and visible, and the other inferior and invisible. When the Sun is above this circle it is then day, and when it is sunk 18 degrees beneath it, night then commences. This circle is of wood, and the brass meridian is inclosed therein with all the rest of the sphere: it is also immoveable, and on it are marked the degrees of the 12 signs of the ecliptic, and the days of the 12 months of the year.

The Tropics are two small circles parallel to the equinoctial, described by the first points of the first degrees of the signs termed Cancer and Capricorn, that is, where they touch the ecliptic. They are distant from the equinoctial very near 23 degrees and a half. The Sun describes these Tropics about the 20th of June, and the 21st day of December. When he touches the Tropic of Cancer, he makes the longest day for the inhabitants between the equator and the north pole; and when he comes to the beginning of Capricorn, he makes the longest day for the prople between the equator and the south pole. On the contrary, the shortest day to the firmer will be when the Sun touches the Tropic of Capricorn, and to the latter when he comes to the Tropic of Cancer. For this reason, those points are called the winter and the summer Tropics, or the southern and northern; and they are as it were the two barriers, beyond which the Sun never passes.

The Polan Cincles are distinguished by the names of the arctic and antarctic, or the north and the south, and are circles parallel to the equinoctial. They are termed Polan, because they are near the poles of the world, being only 23 degrees and a half from each pole.

world, being only 23 degrees a d a half from each pole.

The Map of the World, at the neginning of this book represents the globe, taken out of its horizon, cut through, turned up and squeezed flat. The circles bounding the projection, represent the brass meridian; and the curve lines running across at every 10 degrees, show the lati-

The Zonks are five broad spaces encompassing the globe, and are distinguished chiefly by the temperature of the air. The torrid Zone contains all the space between the two tropics, and is so called from its excessive heat, the Sun being vertical twice every year to all that inhabit it. This circle is about 47 degrees broad. The two temperate Zones are so called from their lying between the two extreme degrees of heat and cold, viz. between the torrid Zone and the frigid Zones, the one being called the Northern temperate Zone, and the other the Southern temperate Zone. These are both 43 degrees broad, Of the two frigid Zones, the one encompasses the arctic or north pole, and extends to the distance of 23 degrees and a half from it; and the other, the antarctic or south pole, to the same distance. the part of the latter try; on the Fin the tria OF THE CLIMATES.

A CLIMATE is a space of the Earth comprehended between two parallels, at the end of which the length of the longest days are increased half an hour in the summer season. The better to understand this we must observe, that under the equator the longest day is no more than twelve hours, and that in proportion as we advance toward the polar sircle, the days of each climate increase half an hour, till we arrive at the polar sircles ; for then the longest days consist of 24 hours. Thus there are 24 Climates in all, on each side of the equator. It is easy to know in what Climate a city is, by observing the longest day; as for instance, at London, where the days are 16 hours long we need only subtract 12 from the number, and there will remain four; then multiply this by two, and you will have eight, which is the Climate of London. The same may be done on any other Climate. An Labor .

OF THE POINTS OF THE COMPASS.

The Earth may be considered, with regard to the four cardinal Points which are the north, south, east, and west ; and all the points included between them may have respect to a particular, place. By this means we know the situation of the different countries of the world, with regard to each other; for some are oriental or toward the east, with reard to those that are occidental, or lie westerly of them, Thus Ireland is to the west of England, Poland is to the east of Germany, and Africa is to the south of Europe. We may easily distinguish the points that lie, between those that are cardinal ; thus, though Spain is to the.

south of France, yet it likewise lies to the westward thereof: but as they do not lie exactly south or west of each other, Spaining be said to lie southwest of France; and for the same reason, on the contrary, France will be northeast with regard to Spain. The like may be said of any two other countries.

OF THE TERMS USED IN GEOGRAPHY. 1. betternilely

The word Geography comes from the Greek, and signifies a description of the Earth. By the Earth is meant the terraqueous globe composed of land and water, and it is commonly called the terrestrial globe. Chargeraphy is the description of a country, province, or county; as, for instance, Dorsetshire. Topography is the description of a particular place, as a town and the like. Hydrography is a description of the water, such as occass, seas, and lakes.

As the Earth may be represented either in the whole, or in part, it forms the difference between geographical charts or maps, which, however, may be reduced to two kinds; namely, general and particulars. Among the former is the map of the world, or planisphere, which shows the two surfaces of the whole terrestrial globe, cut in two by the meridian passing through the equinoxes; as also the maps which describe some principal part of the globe; such as Europe, Asia, or Africa: and even kingdoms; as Sweden, Spain, or Great Britain. However, those maps may be called particular, which represent any particular country; but they are more properly such as give an account only of a part, as Naples in Italy, Normandy in France, and Staffordshire in England.

After all, nothing can give a better or more general idea of the Earth than a globe, because it is of the same shape and figure; but as it is impossible to make one large enough to shew every part of the land and sea distinctly, there is a necessity of having recourse to general and particular maps.

Geography, as well as other arts and sciences, has terms proper to itself; some of which have relation to the land, and others to the water.

A Continent is a large part of land that comprehends several countries not separated by any sea: thus Europe is a continent.

Au Island, or Isle, is a portion of land entirely surrounded by water.

An Island, or Isle, is a portion of land entirely surrounded by water.

A Peninsula, or Chersonesus, is a quantity of land which is joined to a continent only by a neck of the same, it being every whore else on-compassed with water; as the peninsula of the Crimea.

An Isthmus, or neck of land, is that part by which a peninsula is joined to the land; as the isthmus of Succession

A Promontory is a high part of land, which projects into the sea, and is commonly called a Cape, when it appears like a mountain; but when the advanced part has little elevation, it is termed a Point. Thus the Cape of Good Hepe is a mountainous promontory.

An Ocean is a large collection of waters surrounding a considerable part of the continent; such as the Atlantic and Northern Oceanse 518.4

A Sea: is a smaller collection of waters, when understood in a strict sense, as the Irish Sea; but, in general, every part of the ocean may be called the sea; and it is still more general, when the terraqueous globe is said to consist of land and sea.

A Channel is a narrow sea, confined between an island and a continent, ar between two islands; as the English Channel, and St. George's Channel.

A Guy is a part of the sea surrounded by land, except in the part, where it communicates with the ocean; as the Gulf of Bengal, the Gulf of Florida; and yet these are more properly seas than the Mediterrane, an, the Baltic, and the Black Seas, which properly speaking, are gulfs, as well as the Gulf of Venico.

A. Ray is aid to differ from a gulf only in being less, and more narrow at the tentrance than within a but this is far from being true; for a bay has a wider entrance in proportion than a gulf, and it may be also larger than some gulfs; an for instance, the Bay of Biscay; though it must be acknowledged that bays in general are much smallers.

A Great is a small inject, and is always much less than a day.

A Road is a place upon any coast where there is a good anchorage, and where westel, in some sease, are sheltered from the winds as chair.

A Street is a narrow passage which joins two seas, two gulfs, or a sea and a gulf a such as the Sound, near the Baltic; and the Straits of Gibraltar, between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Scales of

A Links is a collection of standing water turinunded by land, having no visible communication with the sec. Thus the Easpian Sea is truly and properly a lake. Smaller lakes are those of Lagoda, Gapeva, and several others.

DESCRIPTION OF A MAP.

The top of most modern Maps is considered as the north, the bottom as the south, the right hand as the east, and the left hand as the west. In old Maps, where this rule is not always strictly followed, a flower de luce is generally placed on some part of it, pointing toward the north, by which the other points are easily known.

On the top of the Map, between the marginal lines, are placed the several figures, which show the number of degrees of eastern or western longitude of every place that is directly under those figures. At the bottom of most Maps are placed the same figures as those at the top; but in Maps of the best sort, instead thereof are placed the number of hours or minutes every place in it lies distant, east or west, from its chief town or first meridian. For instance, every place which is situate one degree east of another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time before it; and any one place, fituate one degree west of another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time after it. Again, a place situate fifteen degrees east of us, as Naples, will appear to have the Sun one complete hour before us at London; and any place situate fifteen degrees west of us, as the island of Madeira, will appear to have the Sun one hour after us at London.

On the right and left hand of every Map, between the marginal lines, are placed figures that shew the number of degrees, either north or south latitude which every place parallel with them is distant from the equator. Thus London is situate 51 degrees 30 minutes of north latitude; that is, it is so many degrees and minutes north from the equator. Over most Maps are drawn lines from the top to the bottom, and from the right hand to the left; those which run from the top to the bottom, are lines of longitude, and those which cross them; lines of latitude ; but these are sometimes omitted, when a Map is too full to admit of them.

Kingdoms or Provinces are divided from each other by a row of single pointr, and they are often stained with different colours. Gitles or great towns are made like little houses, with a small circle in the middle of them; but smaller towns or villages are marked only with little circles. Mountains are imitated in the form of little rising hillocks ; and forests are represented by a collection of little trees. The names of villages are written in a running hand, those of cities in a Roman character, and those of provinces in large capitals. "The sea is generally left as an empty space on the Map, except where there are rocks, sands, or shelves, currents of water or wind. Rocks are sometimes made in Maps like little pointed things sticking up sharp in the sea. "Sands or shelves are denoted by a great heap of little points placed in the shape of these sands, as they have been found to lie in the ocean, by sounding the depths. Currents of water are described by several long parallel crooked atrokes, imitating a current. The course of winds is represented by the heads of arrows pointing to the coast toward which the wind blows!

Small rivers are described by a single crooked waving line, and large rivers by such double and treble lines made strong and black Bridges are distinguished by a double line across the rivers. · itio leisve

It is about 900 miles long and 800 broad. The rainy feafon continues from April to Sep-tember, which is fucceeded, without intenner, which is fucceeded, without in-terval, by a cloudlefs fky, and a vertical fun. Cold nights as immediately follow thefe feorching days. The earth, not-withflanding thefe days, is perpetually fo cold, as to feel difagreeable to the foles of the feet; partly owing to the fix months rain, when no fun appears, and partly to perpetual equality of nights and days. There is no country in the world that produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame; but there are no tigers. The hyenas, however, are very numerous, and dreadful in their ravages. Beside many species of eagles, vultures, &c. there is a species of glede, called haddayan, which is very frequent in Egypt, and comes punctually into Abyffinia, at the return of the fun, after the tropical rains; and florks cover the plains in May, when the rains become constant: there are few owls; but thefe are of an immense fize and beauty. The most remarkable infect is the Ttsaltsal or fly, which is fo fatal to cattle, that in fome particular countries, great emigrations are the rainy feason, to prevent all their flock of cattle from being destroyed. Even the camel must yield to this infect, for when once attacked, his body, head, and legs, break out into large bours, which fwell, break, and putrefy, to the certain destruc-tion of the animal. According to Mr. Bruce, the celebrated river Nile has its fource in this country, near the village of Geesh, in lon. 36 55 E, and lat. 10 59 N. Gondar is the metropolis. There is a re-markable coincidence between the customs in the court of ancient Persia and those of Abyfinia. The religion of the country is a mixture of Judaifm and of the Christianity of the Greek church; and the language is Ethiopic, which bears a great af-finity to the Arabic.

It is an open town, in the centre of which is the king's palace, a rude piece of archi-tecture, defigned to refift the force of an enemy, and furrounded for that purpose by a wide and deep moat, and ftrong walls The houfes are built of bamboos and rough timbers, and are railed fome feet from the ground, on account of the place being overflowed in the rainy feason. A large manufacture of a thick species of cotton cloth, and of stuff for the short drawers worn by the Malays and Achenese, is established here. Payments are commonly made in gold dust, which is carried about in bladders. The Achenese are expert and bold navigators. 'The laws of the Achenefe are very fevere, but the poor fuffer chiefly by their feverity. Petty theft is punished by suspending the offender from a tree, that a gun, or heavy weight, tied to his feet; or by cutting off a finger, hand, or leg, according to the nature of the theft. of these mutilated people are to be feen daily in the ftreets. Africa, one of the four principal parts of the world; bounded on the N by the Mediterranean; on the W by the Atlantic; on the E by the isthmus of Suez, the Sea, and the Indian Ocean; and on the S by the Southern Ocean. It is a peninfula of prodigious extent, being joined to Afia by the ishmus of Suez, which is 60 miles over. In its greatest length, from the most northern part to the Cape of Good Hope, it is 4600 miles; and in the broadest part from Cape Verd to Cape Guardafui, it is 3500. The greatest part of it is within the torrid Zone, which renders the heat almost insupportable in many places. However, the coasts in general are very fruitful, the fruits excellent, and the plants extraordinary. There are more wild beafts in Africa, than in any other part of the world: there are also some animals peculiar to this country; as the hippopotamus, or river horse; the rhinoceros, with two horns on its nofe; and the beautiful striped zebra. Beside these they have crocodiles, offriches, camels, and many other animals not to be met with in Europe. There are feveral deferts, particularly one of a large extent, called Zahara, which is almost without water; but these are not quite without inhabitants. There are many large rivers; but the chief are the Nile, Niger, Senegal and Gambia, the two last having been falsely supposed branches of the Niger. The most considerable mountains are the Atlas, the Mountains of the Moon, and the Sierra Leone, or the Mountains of the Lions. The inhabitants confift of Pagans, Mahometans, and Chriftians. The first, which possess and Christians. The first, which possess are greatest part of the country, from the Tropic of Cancer to the Cape of Good Hope, are the most numerous, and are generally black. The Mahometans, who are tawny, possess Egypt and the coast of Barhary. The people of Abyssinia are denominated Christians, but retain many Pagan and Jewish rites. In the N of Africa are some Jews, who manage all the little trade of that part of the country. The principal divisions of Africa are Barbary, Egypt, Biledulgerid, Zahara, Negroland, Guinea, Bornou, Cassan, Negroland, Guinea, Bornou, Cassan, Negroland, Guinea, Honomotapa, Monomugi, Sosola, Cassan, Alussian, Abyssinia, Abex, Soango, Congo, Angola, Bengucla, Mataman, Zanguebar, Monomotapa, Monomugi, Sosola, Cassan, and the country of the Hottentots. In 1788, an association was formed for the purpose of exploring the interior regions of Africa; and Mr. Ledyard and Mr. Lucas were felected as their mission aries. Mr. Ledyard died on his journey. Mr. Lucas was prevented from pursuing the plan sketched out for him, and was obliged to content himself with soch imperfect information as his guides could give him. In 1795, the African association despatched Mr. Park to explore this immense continent. His journey has brought to our knowledge more important sacks respecting the geography of Africa than the accounts of any former traveller. He has pointed out to us the sources of the great rivers, the Senegal, Gambia, and Niger; the course of this last he has determined to be from W to E, and thus set this much disputed point for ever at rest.

Aleppo, the capital of Syria, inhabited by Turks, and four forts of Christians, who have each a bishop and a church, and the free exercise of their religion. The city and fuburbs contain 235,000 persons. Next to Constantinople and Cairo, it is the most considerable city in the Turkish empire. It is fituated in the vast plain, which extends from the Oroutes to the Euphrates, and which towards the fouth terminates in the highest of which the castle is erected, and of falt, in some places half an inch thick; is supposed to be the castle of Berza. The houses are large and commodious, having this salt, which is sufficient to supply all terraces on their tops, and generally sky-this part of the country. Aleppo is scated into the rooms, which from their loftines, the gilding on the window-inutters, cupboards, &c. have at first entrance a very agreeable effect. The streets are carefully paved; have gutters and a foot pavement on each fide; and the middle of the fireet is laid with brick, the fmall end upwards, for the convenience of horfes. There is alfo a cleauliness observed here, unknown to the other cities of Turkey, there being as drivers who go about the city and take up the rubbish and dust, which each inhahitant is obliged to fweep together. The mosques are numerous and some of them magnificent. Before each of them is an area, with a fountain in the middle, designed for ablutions before prayers. The bazars or market-places are long covered narrow streets, on each side of which are a great number of fmall shops, just sufficient to hold the tradesman and his goods, the buyer being obliged to fland without. The fituation of Aleppo, befides the advantage of a rich and fruitful foil, possesses also that of a stream of fresh water, which never becomes dry. Near Aleppo, its banks are covered with a fertile earth, and laid out in gardens, or rather orchards, which in a hot country, and especially in Turkey, cannot but be delightful. The city is itself one of the most agreeable in Syra. On whatever fide it is approached, its numerous minarets and domes prefent an agrecable profpect to the eye, fatigued with the continued fameness of the brown and parched plains. Aleppo is the emporium of Armenia and the Diarbekar; fends caravans to Bagdad and into Persia; and communicates with the Perfian gulf and India, by Baffora, with Egypt and Mecca by Danialcus, and with Europe by Alexandretta and Latakia. Their chief commodities are raw or fpun cottons, clumfy linens fabricated in the villages, filk stuffs manufactured in the city, copper, coarfe cloths, goats-hair, the gall nuts of the Kourdestan, the merchandise of India, such as shawls and muslins. Eighteen miles S E of Aleppo, is a large plain, called the Valley of Salt, bounded by low rocky hills, which form a kind of natural basin, that retains the rain descending from the rocks, together with the water rifing from a few fprings, and cause the whole to be overflowed in winter. Alexandretta, or Scanderoon, a town of Syria, in Afia, at the extremity of the Mediterranean fea, and the scaport of Aleppo, from which it is distant 28 or 30 leagues. It is now properly fpeaking nothing elfe but a village without walls, in which the tombs are more numerous then the houses, and which entirely owes its existence to the road which it commands. This is the only road of all Syria, where vessels anchor on a folid bottom, without their cables being liable to chafe: but in other respects it has many inconveniencies. lt is infested, during winter, by a peculiar wind, which rushing from the snowy summits, frequently forces fhips to diag their anchors feveral leagues. But the worst circumstance is the extreme unwholesome-ness of the sir. It may be affirmed that this every year carries off one third of the crews of the vessels which remain here during the fummer, nay, ships frequently lose all their men in two months. To this baneful epidemic, Alexandretta from its fituation feems to be irremediably condemned; for the plain on which the town is built is fo low and flat, that the rivulets finding no declivity can never reach the fea. On this account, while the heats are excessive, the principal inhabitants retire to the neighbouring villages, among the mountains, where there is excellent water and delicious fruits. Alexandria, or Scanderia, an ancient and once rich and famous town of Egypt, now much decayed, though there are still some remains of its ancient splendour. This city was built by Alexander the Great, about 333 years before Christ, and was a league and a half long, by one-third in breadth, which made the circumference of its walls about four leagues. Lake Mareotis bathed its walls on the fouth, and the Mediterraneau on the north. It was inter-fected lengthwife by straight parallel streets. This direction left a free paffage to the northerly wind. which alone conveys coolness and falubrity into Egypt. A street of 2000 feet wide began at the gate of the fea, and terminated at the gate of Canopus. This freet, the handfomeit in the univerle, was interfected by another of the fame breadth, which formed a fquare at their junction of half a league in circumference.

At present the city of Alexandria is reckoned to have about 14,000 or 15,000 inba-bitants; a firange colluvies of different nations, as well as from various parts of the Turkish empire. The present condi-tion of Alexandria is very despicable, being now so far ruined, that the rubbish in many places overtops the houses. The famous tower of Pharos has long since been deno-listed, and a castle, called Farillon, built in its place. Some parts of the old walls of the city are yet standing, and present us with a master piece of ancient masonry. But what most engages the attention of tra-vellers is the Pillar of Pompey, as it is commonly called, fituated at a quarter of a league from the fouthern gate. It is com-

Algiers, one of the states of Barbary, bounded on the E by Tunis, on the N by the Mediterranean, on the S by Mount Atlas, and on the W by Morocco. It ex-tends 600 miles from E to W. The air s very temperate, and the land toward the N fertile in corn. The valleys are full of fruit; hut a great part is dry, mountainous, and barren. Algiers, a large and strong town of Africa, in Barbary, the capital of the kingdom of Algiers. It is built on the declivity of a mountain, and is in the form of an amphitheatre next the harbour; insomuch, that the houses appearing one above another, make a very fine appearance from the sea. The tops of the houses are all flat, for which reason they walk upon them in the evening to take the air; hesides, they are covered with earth, and serve for a sort of gardens. The streets are nar-row, and serve to keep off the extreme heat of the sun. The mole of the harbour is 500 paces in length, extending from the continent to a small island, where there is a castle and a large battery of guns. The number of inhabitants is said to be 100,000 Mahometans, 15,000 Jews, and 4000 Christian slaves. Their chief subsistence is derived from their piracies, for they make prizes of all Christian ships that are not at peace with them. The country about Algiers what them. Algiers the it has, for ages, braved the resentment of the most powerful states in Christendom, it is said, could make but a feint defence sgainst a regular siege. The emperor Charles V. in 1541, lost a fine fleet and army, in an expedition against it. The English burnt their vessels in the harbour in 1635 and 1670. It was bombarded by the French in 1688. In 1775, the Spaniards made a descent near the city with a formidable army, but were de-feated with great slaughter. In 1784, they sent a powerful fleet to attack the forts that defend the harbour; but they forts that defend the harbour; but they were repelled by the Algerines, although they made eight auccessive attacks with great spiri and bravery. Allegany, or Appalachian Mountains, a long range of inountains in N America, between the Atlantic, the Mississippi, and the lakes; extending nearparallel with the seacoast, 900 miles in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth. The different ridges which compose this immense range have different names in the different states. vancing from the Atlantic, the first ridge of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and North Carolina, is the Blue Ridge, or South Mountain, from 130 to 200 miles from the sen, and about 4000 feet high from its base. Between this and the North Mountain, spreads a large fertile vale. Next lies the Allegany, which is the principal ridge, and has been descriptively called the back-bone of the United States. Beyond this is the long oridge called the Laurel Mountains, in a spur of which, in lat. 36 is a spring of water, 50 feet deep, very cold, and as blue as indigo. From these several ridges proceed innumerable nameless branches or spyrs. The Kittatiny, or Blue Mountains, run through the northern parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These mountains are not confusedly scattered and broken, rising here aid there into high peaks overtopping each other, but stretch along in uniform ridges, scarcely half a mile high. They spread as they proceed S, and some of them terminate in high perpendicular bluffs. Others gradually subside into a level country, giving rise to the rivers which run southerly into the gulf of Mexico. In the back parts of Pennsylvania, scarcely one acre in ten of this range is capable of culture: but this is not the case in all parts; for numerous tracts of fine ara-ble and pasture land intervene between the ridges, having generally a rich black soil. Indeed, some of the moun-tains will admit of cultivation almost to their teps.

Many are the conjectures about the peopling of this vast continent, and almost as various as their authors. America is so long, that it takes in not only all the Torrid, but also the Temperate and part of the Frigid Zones. It is hard to say how many different languages there specin America, a vast number being spoken by the different people in different parts; and as to their religion, of it in general, though some of the most civilized among them seem to have worshipped the sun. The principal motive of the Spaniards in sending so many colonies here, was the thirst of gold and indeed they and the Portuguese are possessed of all those parts where it is found in greatest pienty. This immense continent is divided into N and S America, which are joined by the isthmus of Darien. It has the loftiest mountains in the world, such as those that form the immense chain called the Andes; and the largest rivers, such as the Amazon, Plata, Oronoka, Missis-sippi, Illinois, Misaures, Ohio, St. Lawrence, Hudson, Delaware, Susquehannah, Potomac, &c. Beside the Indians who inhabit the interior parts, and the United States of America, who possess most of the territory that formerly belonged to Great Britain, the different European powers have rich and flourishing colonies here. The United States possess, New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Kentucky, and all the coun-try to the N of the Ohio, extending from Pennsylvania on the E, the lakes on the N, and the Mississippi on the W. The countries possessed by Great Britain, are, Labrador or New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. In N America, Spain possesses East and West Florida, Louisiana, New Mexico, California, and old Mexico or New Spain: in S America, they have Terra Firma, Peru, Chili, and Paragua. Here also are kept the silver keys of the city; which, for form's sake, are delivered to the king, if he should visit the place, or to a victorious enemy, in token of submission. In this place, likewise, is to be seen the monstrous axe which, in 1646, took off the heads of Sir Robert Spotswood and other distinguished loyalists. St. Andrew's is now greatly reduced in the number of its inhabitants; at present scarcely exceeding 2000. It is impossible to ascertain the sum when it was the seat of the primate: all that can be known is, that during the period of its splender, there were tween 60 and 70 bakers; but now 9 or 10 are sufficient for the place. It is a mile in circuit, and contains three principal streets. On entering the west port, a well-built street, straight, and of a vast length and breadth, appears, but so grass-grown, and presenting such a dreary solitude, that it forms the perfect idea of having been laid waste by the pestilence. The univerwaste by the pestilence. The university, which was founded by bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, consists of three colleges. The cathedral, the chapel of St. Regulus, the church of St. Salvator, and the priory, have been noble Gothic structures. Angers, an ancient town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire, and the late province of Anjou. It is seated no ar the confluence of the Sarte and Leit, and is divided by the Maine into two parts; the western extending into the plain, and the eastern which rises on the acclivity of a hill. Its environs present a pleasing view of numerous country houses, upwards of a hundred windmills, well-cultivated kitchen-gardens, and eminences that produce good white wine. The cathedral is an elegant structure: the ex-quisite neatness of the wainscot of the choir, the width of the nave, and the principal gate, surrounded by three steeples (of which the centre one has no support but the bases of the other two) are particularly admired. In this cathedral is the tomb of Rene, king of Sicily, and several bishops, in white marble; and here is shown an urn, which is pretended to have been used at the wedding of Cana. Before the late dissolution of convents, monks of every order were to be seen at Angers; and out of four abbeys that belonged to the Benedictines, three were particularly beautiful. Here is an academy of belles lettres, established in 1685. The inhabitants are computed at 30,000; and here is a considerable manufacture of handkerchiefs and sailcloth. The produce of the slate quar-ries, at the extremity of the suburb of Bressigny, forms likewise an import-ant article of commerce: this slate is in the suburbs is covered with it; on which account Angers has been called the Black City. Antiparos, the ancient Olearos, an island of the Archipelago, two miles W of Paros. It is only a rock, 16 miles in circuit; yet in some parts it is well cultivated, and produces as much barley as serves a small village. It has a grotto, which is one of the greatest curiosities in nature; it appears to be about 80 yards high and 100 broad; and bout 80 yards high and 100 broad; and the roof forms a pretty good arch, which entertains the eye with a wast variety of figures, of white transparent chrystal-line substance. It was first discovered by an Italian traveller, who gives a very entertaining account of it. "Our candles being all lighted up, (says he) and the whole place completely illumi-nated, never could the eye be present-ed with a more glittering or more magnificent scene. Antwerp, a city of Brabant, capital of the marquisate of the same name, with a bishop's see. It lies in a low, marshy ground on the Scheldt, 24 miles N of Brussels. It is the third city in Brabant, large and well built, containing 22 squares, and above 200 streets, all straight and broad. Most of the houses are of free stone, and have an air of antiquity, being high, with courts before, and gardens behind. The cathedral is a fine structure, and contained an assem-blage of paintings by the greatest mas-ters of the Flemish school, particularly Rubens and Quintin Matsys. But of these it has probably been plundered by the French, who in their progress into Holland took this city. The stadthouse and the exchange are magnifi-cent structures: the latter is the first building of that kind in Europe, and on its model the exchanges of London and Amsterdam are built. Its pillars are all of blue marble, and carved, but all in a different manner. Antwerp to-wards the end of the 15th century was was one of the most celebrated towns in the world. The Scheld, on which it stands, minated with an immense profusion of lights. Lon. 25 44 E, lat. 37 8 N.

Antivari, a town of Turkish Dalmatia, with a Greek archbishop's sec, 10 when the United Provinces formed thenselves into a free state, they got the entire command of the navigation of the Scheld, which ruined the trade of the Scheld, which ruined the trade of Antwerp, and transferred it to Amsterdam. Among the cloisters, the most remarkable are, the noble and rich abbey of St. Michael, on the banks of the Scheld, the apartments of which are truly royal. As to the fortifications of the city, it is environed with a fine wall, planted with rows of trees on each side, with walks between, broad enough for two coaches to go abreast, being also defended by a very strong, large, regular citadel, in form of a pentagon, erected by the duke of Alva, in 1568, which commands the town and the adjacent country. Antwerp was taken by the prince of Parma in 1585, after a long and memorable siege. It has been since taken by the French in 1700, by the allies in 1706, and by the French in 1746. It has been twice ta-ken by the French, since the beginning es; and before the Irish Union, sent 10 members to the Irish parliament.

Arabia, a country of Asia, bounded on the W by the Red Sea and the isthmus of Suez; on the NE by the Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbe-kar, the ancient Mesopotamia; on the E by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus; and on the S by the Indian Ocean. It is divided into three parts, Arabia Petrea, Deserta, and Felix. Arabia Petrea is the smallest of the three, and toward the N, is full of mountains, with few inhabitants, on account of its barenness. It had its name from the town Petrea, its ancient capital, now destroyed. It differs little from Arabia Deserta, so called from the nature of the soil, which is generally a barren sand; but there great flocks of sheep, and herds of cattle near the Euphrates, where the land is good. In the desert are great numbers of ostriches, and there is a fine breed of camels in several places. Ara-Felix is so called, on account of its fertility with regard to the rest. The Arabs in the desert live wandering lives, removing from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans, which they often rob, as they travel over part of this desert from Bassora to Aleppo, and from Egypt to Mecca, in order to visit Mahomet's tomb. Arabia Felix produces frankincense, myrrh, balin of Gilatter they export prodigious quantities.

In his palace, which is very large, are contained seven golden idols, two inches thick, each of a man's height, and covered with diaments, white monds, rubies, and other precious stones. They have only two seasons, the rainy season, which continues from April to October, and the fair season, which includes all the rest of the year. and is called the summer. The inhabitants are idolaters, and the women tolerably fair; but the longest ears are reckoned the most beautiful, and in these they wear many rings. There are such numbers of elephants, buffaloes, and tigers, that but few places are inhabited, on account of the ravages made by these animals. The commodities are timber, lead, tin, and elephants teeth; and sometimes the traders meet with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones.

Athens, now called Setines, once a celebrated city, the capital of Ancient Attica, but now of Livadia, in European Turkey. After many revolutions, the Turks finally wrested it from the Venetians; and it has now not more than 10,000 inhabitants, of whom three fourths are Christians of the Greek ourns are Christians of the Greek church; the remainder Turks. It is the see of an archbishop; and is defended by a citadel on the summit of a lofty rock. The town stands beneath the citadel; not encompassing the rock as formerly, but spreading into the plain to the W and N W. Some masses of brick work, standing separate without the town, belonged perhaps to the ancient wall, of which other traces also appear. The houses are mostly mean and straggling. In the lanes, the high walls on each side, which are commonly white washed, reflect strongly the light of the sun. The streets were very irregular; and anciently were neither uniform nor handsome. There are many magnificent ruins, which testify its former grandeur. It is situate on the gulf of Engia, 100 miles N E of Lacedemon, and 320 S by W of Constantinople. Lon. 23 57

Baia, an inconsiderable town of Naples, in Terra di Lavora; it was famous, in the time of the Romans, for its hot baths and elegant palaces. Its splendor may be inferred from its innumerable ruins, heaps of marble, moisacs, stucco, and other precious frag-ments of taste. It flourished in full glory down to the days of Theodoric the Goth | but the destruction of these enchanted palaces followed quickly upon the irruption of the northern conaucrors. Loss of fortune left not the Romans the means of supporting such expensive establishments. No sooner had opulence withdrawn its hand than the unbridled sea rushed back upon the ground from whence it had been forced back by Roman luxury a moles and buttresses were torn asunder and washed away; whole promontories with the proud towers that once crowned their brows, were undermined and tumbled headlong into the deep, where many feet below the surface, pavements of streets, foundations of houses, and masses of walls may still be seen yet Baia in its ruined state, and stripped of all its ornaments, still presents many beautiful and striking objects for the pencil. Banff, a scaport, and the county-town of Banfishire, pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, at the mouth of the Deveron, over which is a hand-some bridge of seven arches, erected by government. It has several streets, of which that with the town house in it, adorned with a new spire, is very handsome. The harbour is very had, as the entrance at the mouth of the Deveron is very uncertain, being often stopped by the shifting of sands, which are continually changing in great storms; the pier which is defended by a battery, is therefore placed on the outside. Here is a manufacture of thread, and another of stockings; and the children attend the factory and school alternately; so that education and industry are united. In the middle of the town is Banff castle, belonging to the Findlater family; and near it is a most magnificent seat lately built by the earl of Fife. It lies in a Sumatra, where the Dutch have a beautiful plain washed by the Bewesttlement. It is 130 miles W of Macca. Lon. 100 7 E, lat. 1 15 N.

Basil, or Basie, the capital of the canton of Basil, in Swisserland, with a bishop's see, and a famous university. It is divided into two parts by the Rhine; the larger of which is on the side of Swisserland, and the least on that of Germany; but they are joined by a handsome bridge. The largest has five gates, six suburbs, 200 streets, six large squares, and 46 fountains, and is partly seated on a hill. The other atands on a plain, and has but two gates with several streets and foun-the gulf of Calochina. It was called tains. The cathedral is an elegant Eurotes by the ancients.

county, Massachusetts, where there is Gothic building, but disfigured by a a post office. It is situated on a bay daubing of rose coloured paint, spread over the whole edifice. The great Erasınus is interred here under a marble to mb. The town-liouse, and fine paintings in fresco, particularly an ex-quisite peace of the sufferings of Christ by Holbein, are much admired. The library contains a prodigious number of books and manuscripts; and there is a rich collection of medals, among which are several exceedingly scarce. The clocks always go an hour too fast, according to some for the quick dispatch of business; others say it was owing to an assault, or according to some a conspiracy to murder the magistrates being prevented by that means. This is surrounded by thick walls, flanked by towers and bastions. The art of making paper is said to have been invented here. They have several ma-nufactures, particularly of ribands and cottons, and carry on an extensive trade. The bishops of Basle once possessed the sovereignty over the city and can-ton; but, in 1501, when the canton joined the Helvetic confederacy, they fixed their residence at Porentru; still retaining the dignity of princes of the empire. The sumptuary laws are very empire. The sumptuary laws are very strict at Basil; and no person is allow-ed to have a servant behind his carriage. Three treaties of peace were concluded here in one year, 1795, with the French republic; by the king of Prussia April 5, the king of Spain July 22, and the landgrave of Hesse Cassel August 28. Basic is the largest, and seems to have been once one of the most populous towns in Swisserland. It is capable of containing 100,000 inhabitants; but their number is scarcely more than 14,000. Basle has now lost its independence, and has together with all Swisserland been obliged to bow to the tyrannical yoke of France, who without even the pretence of a provocation invaded and laid waste this tranquil country, and reduced it to slavery. It is 174 miles N by E of Geneva, and 250 E by S of Paris. Lon. 729 E, lat. 47 35 N.

Bass, a great insulated rock in the German Ocean, one mile from the coast of Haddingtonshire, at a small distance from the town of North Berwick. It is inaccessible on all sides, except the S W, and there it is with great difficulty that a man can climb up by the help of a rope or halder. In summer this remarkable rock, which overhangs the sea in a tremendous manner, rising in the form of a cone, is quite covered with the nests, eggs, and young birds of the gannets, or solan geese; so that it is scarce possible to walk without treading on them: and the flocks of birds, in flight, are so prodigious, as to darken the air, like clouds; and their noise is such, that people close by each other hear what is spoken with difficulty. These birds come hither to breed. The rock is one mile in cir-These birds come hither to cumference, and supplied with water by a spring at the top. A ruinous cas-tle, once the state prison of Scotland, stands at the edge of the precipice. The garrison in 1694, surrendered to king William, and the fortifications were demolished. Benares, a district of Hindoostan Proper, between Bahar and Oude; containing the circars of Benares, Jionpour, Chunar, and Gazypour. It was ceded to the English in 1775, and produces a clear annual revenue of 380,000/.

Benares, a populous city, capital of the district of the same name, in Hindoostan. It is more celebrated as the ancient seat of Braminical learning, than on any other account; and is built on the N side of the Ganges, which is here very broad, and the banks which is here very broad, and the banks very high. Several Hindoo temples embellish the banks of the river; and many other public and private buildings are magnificent. The streets are narrow; the houses high, and some of them five stories each, inhabited by different families. The more wealthy Hindoos, however, live in detached houses with an open court, surrounded by a wall. Nearly in the centre of the city is a considerable Mahometan mosque, built by the emperor Aurungzebe, who destroyed a magnificent Hindoc temple, to make room for it; and round the city are many ruins of of buildings, the effects of Mahome-tan intolerance. Notwithstanding this, the same manners and customs the most remote period that can be traced in history; and in no instance of religious or civil life have they admitted any innovations from foreign-ers. Bengal, a country of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W by Orassa, and per, bounded on the W by Orassa, and Bahar, on the N by Bootan, on the E by Assam and Meckley, and on the S by the bay of Bengal. Its greatest extent from W to E is about 720 miles, and from N to S above 300. The country consists of one vast plain, of the most fertile soil, which, in common with other parts of Hindoostan, annually renders two, and, in some parts, even three crops. It is sometimes subject to such extremes of heat as render it fatal to Europeans. The great cause of the unhealthiness of Bengal, however, is owing to the inundations of the Ganges and Burrampooter, by which such quantities of putrescible matters are brought down as infect the air with the most malignant vapours when the waters retire. By the latter end of July, all the lower parts of Bengal, contiguous to the Ganges and Burrampooter, are overflowed, and present a surface of water more than 100 miles wide. This vast collection of fluid, however, is owing in a great measure to the rains which fall on the low country itself; for the lands in the neighbourhood are overflowed some time before the bed of the river is filled. As some of the lands in Bengal would receive damage from such a copious inundation, they must for this reason be guarded by strong dykes to resist the waters, and admit only a certain quantity. One particular branch of the Ganges is conducted for 70 miles between dykes: and when full, the passengers look down upon the adjacent country as from an eminence. Its principal products are sugar, silk, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac and civit. It is compared to Egypt for fer-tility; the Ganges dividing here into several streams, and, like the Nile, annually overflowing the country. Bengal has been subject, ever since 1765, to the English East India Company. Its annual revenue, including that of Benares is near £1,290000, and its population is 11,000,000. Calcutta is the capital.

Benguela, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Angola, on the S by Mataman, on the E by the river Rimba, and on the W by the Atlantic. Its coast begins at Cape Ledo on the N, and extends to cape Negro on the S, that is, from lat. 9 20 to 1630 S. The climate is very pernicious to Europe ans. The men wear skins about their waists, and beads round their necks; and are armed with darts headed with iron, and with bows and arrows. The women wear a heavy collar of copper round their neck, a kind of cloth made of the bark of a tree, round their waist, and copper rings on their legs.

Benin, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the W by Dahomy and the Atlan-tic, on the N by Biafara, on the E by parts unknown, and on the S by Loango. It begins in 1°S lat, and extends to about 9°N lat. The country exhibits many beautiful landscapes: but is very low and marshy; this renders it very unhealthy; there are here a great number of wild beasts, such as elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, &c. The dress of the natives is neat. The rich wear white callico or cotton petticoats, but the upper part of the body is commonly naked. The people are skilful in making various sorts of dyes; and they manufacture and export cot-ton cloths. With respect to food, they prefer the flesh of dogs and cats to that of any other animal. Polygamy is allowed among them, and the number of their wives is limited by the state of their circumstances only. Though jealous of each other, they are not so of the Europeans, and they think it impossible that the taste of the women can be so depraved as to grant any liberties to a white man. Their religion is paganism.

Benin, the capital of a kingdom of the same name in Africa, formerly a very closely built and populous city. In the streets, which are long and broad, are many shops filled with European merchandise, as well as with the com-modities of the country. The women keep the streets clean. The king's palace makes great part of the town; and its great extent excepted, there is nothing worth taking notice of, being only a confused heap of buildings, made with boards or clay, without regularity or neatness. The houses are large, with clay walls, and at a distance from each other. They are covered with reeds, straw, and leaves. Benin is situate on the river Benin or Formosa. Lon. 54 E, lat. 7 30 N.

and the Simbani Wilderness; on the and the Simban Winderness; on the S W by Woolli; on the W by Foota Torra; and on the N by Kajaaga. The country, like that of Woolli, is very generally covered with woods, but the land is more elevated, and towards the Faleme river rises into considerable hills. In native fertility the soil is not surpassed, (according to Mr. Park,) by any part of Africa. From the central situation of Bondon, between the Gambia and Senegal rivers, it is become a place of great resort, both for the Slatees, who generally pass thro' it in going from the Coast to the inte-rior countries; and for occasional traders, who frequently come hither from the inland countries, to purchase salt. By means of the duties, which are very heavy, the king of Bondou is well sup-plied with arms and ammunition; a cirunistance which makes him formidable to the neighbouring states. The chief inhabitants are the Foulahs who are in general of a tawny complexion, with small features, and soft silky hair. They are naturally of a mild and gentle disposition, but the uncharita-ble maxims of the Koran have made them less hospitable to strangers, and more reserved in their behaviour than the Mandingoes. They evident-ly consider all the Negro natives as their inferiors; and when talking of different nations, slways -rank themsclves among the white people. Their 1 20 E, lat. 48 12 N. government differs from that of the Mandingoes chiefly in this, that they are more immediately under the influence of the Mahomedan laws; for all the chief men (the king excepted) and a large majority of the inhabitants of Bondou, are Mussulmen, and the au-thority and laws of the Prophet, are every where looked upon as sacred and decisive. In the exercise of their faith. however, they are not very intolcrant towards such of their countrymen as still retain their ancient superstitions. Religious persecution is not known among them, nor is it necessary: for the system of Mahomet is made to extend itself by means abundantly more efficacious. Borneo, an island in the Indian Ocean, discovered by the Portuguese in 1521, before the discovery of New Holland, thought to be the largest in the world, being 1800 miles in circum-ference. It is seated under the equator, that line cutting it almost thro middle. It is almost of a circular figure, abounds with gold, and the finest diamonds in the Indies are found in its rivers, being probably washed down from the hills by torrents. It produces likewise rice, pepper, fruits and bees-wax, which last is used instead of money. The beasts are oxen, buffaloes, deer, goats, elephants, tigers and mookeys. This island has fine rivers especially toward the W and S. The rainy season continues for eight months in the year, and, as during that time all the flat country is overflowed, the air is rendered very unhealthful, and the inhabitants are forced to build their houses on floats which they make fast to trees. The houses have but one floor with partitions made of cane. The people are very swarthy, and go almost naked. There are Mahometans on the sea-coast; but the rest are Gentoos. The East India Company had factories here; but differences arising between them and the natives, they were driv-en away or murdered. and rivers that tumble down with a dreadful noise from the mountains; rendering the country prolific in corn, grass, and fruits, and giving it a pleasing aspect. The eastern and western frontiers are divided into mountains and valleys, the latter being all covered with flocks of cattle, fields of rice and with mocks of cattle, neits of rice and millet, and many of the mountains with wood, fruit-trees, and cotton. The climate is said to be characterized by excessive, though not by uniform by excessive, though not by uniform heat. Two seasons, one commencing soon after the middle of April, the o-ther at the same period in October, di-vide the year. The first is introduced by violent winds, that bring with them, from the S E and S an intense heat, with a deluge of sultry rain, and such tempests of thunder and lightning as destroy multitudes of the cattle and many of the people. At the commence-ment of the second season, the ardent heat subsides; the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather perfectly screne. The complexion of the natives is black; but they are not of the Negro cast. The dress of the greater part consists of shirts of blue cotton manufactured the country, of a red cap imported from Tripoli, and a white muslin tur-ban from Cairo. Noserings of gold are worn by the principal people. But the only covering of the poorer sort, is sometimes a kind of girdle for the waist. They cultivate Indian corn, the horse-bean of Europe, the common kidney bean, cotton, hemp, and Indigo. They have figs, grapes, apricots, pomegranates, lemons, limes, and meions. Horses, asses, mules, dogs, horned cattle, goats, sheep, and cam-els (of the flesh of which they are vefond) are the common animals. Their bees are so numerous, that the wax is often thrown away as an article of no value. Their game consists of the partridge, wild duck, and ostrich, the flesh of which they prize above every other. Their other wild animals are the lion, leopard, civet eat, wolf, fox; the elephant, which is not common, and of which they make no use; the antelope, camelopardalis, crocodile, and hippopotamus. They are much infested with snakes, scorpions, centicedes, and toads. but all the rest is well watered by springs | metan. Their monarchy is elective. On the death of the sovereign, the privilege of choosing a successor from among his sons, is conferred on three persons, whose age, and character for wisdom, are denoted by the title of elders. These retire to a sequestered place, the avenues to which are guarded; and while their deliberations last, the princes are confined in separate chambers of the palace. The choice being made, they proceed to the apartment of the sovereign elect, and conduct him to the gloomy place where the corpse of his father, that cannot be interred till the conclusion of this awful ceremony, awaits his arrival. There the elders expatiate to him on the virtues and defects of his deceased parent; describ-ing with panegyric or censure, the measures that exulted or sunk the glory of his reign. The sultan is said to have 500 ladies in his seraglio, and that his stud like wise contains 500 horses. He has a vast army, which consists almost entirely of horse; the sabre, lance, pike, and bow, are their weapons of offence, and a shield of hides is their armour. In their manners the people are courteous and humane: they are passionately fond of play, the lower classes of draughts; and the higher excel in chess. The capital is of the same name.

Bornou, the capital of the empire of Bornou, situate in a flat country, on the banks of a small river. It consists of a multitude of bouses, neatly plastered, both within and without, with clay or mud; but they are so irregularly placed, that the spaces between them cannot be called streets. Their mosques are constructed of brick and earth; and they have schools, in which the Koran is taught, as in the principal towns of Barbary. The royal palace, forming a kind of citadel, is built in a corner of the town. Bornou is surrounded by a wall, and is 650 miles S E of Mourozok.

Bristol, a city and seaport in Glou-cestershire and Somersetshire; to which last county it was accounted to belong, before it formed a separate jurisdiction. In wealth, trade, and po-pulation, it has long been reckoned the second in this kingdom. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon with the Frome, ten miles from the influx of Frome, ten miles from the influx of the Avon into the Severn. Bristol has a prodigious trade; for it is reckoned that hence 2000 ships sail yearly. The tide rising to a great height in these narrow rivers, brings vessels of considerable burden to the quay. But the largest ships are discharged at Hungroad four miles below the city, and the goods are brought to the quay by lighters. For building, equipping and repairing ships, there are docks, yards, rope walks and ship-wrights. Brussels, the capital of Brabant. and scat of the governor of the Austrian Low Countries. It is a rich and handsome city, and has many magnificent public buildings, and walks. No city in Europe, except Naples and Genoa, makes a finer appearance at a distance; but like them it is all up and down hill. It is encompassed with a dou-ble brick wall, and has seven gates: but being seven miles in compass, is too large to hold out a long siege. In Brussels are seven fine squares or market places; that of the great market is one of the most beautiful in the market places; that of the great market is one of the most beautiful in the world. The town house takes up one quarter of it; and has a very high steeple, on the top of which is a brazen

The opera-house is built after the Italian manner, with rows of boxes, in which are chimneys. One is covered over with looking glass, so that they can sit by the fire, and see what is doing. There are 20 public fountains, adorned with statues at the corners of the most public streets; and in the middle of the town-house is one with Neptune, the Tritons, and the horses, spouting out water from their nostrils. The numery called the Beguinage is like a little town, being surrounded by a wall and ditch, and has little streets, where each nun has an apartment. This nunnery exists no longer, being abolished with several others, by the French, when they took Brussels, in 1794. It is when they took Brussets, in 1794. Their colour is a jet black, their teeth white as ivory, and their eyes large. The clothing of both sexes is the same, consisting entirely of the hides of oxen, which are as pliant as cloth. The men wear tails of different animals tied round their thighs; pieces of brass in their hair, and large ivory rings on their arms; they are adorned also with the hair of lions, and feathers fastened on their heads, with many other fantastical ornaments. They are extremely fond of dogs, and if one particularly pleases them, they will give two bullocks in exchange for it, their whole exercise is hunting, fighting, or dancing. They are expert in throwing their lances, and in time of war, use shields made of the hides of oxen. The women are employed in the cultivation of their gardens and corn. They cultivate several vegetables, which are not indigenous to the country, as tobacco, watermelons, kidh. Leans, and hemp. The men have great pride in their cattle; and cut their horns in such a way as to be able to turn them into any shape they please; when they wish their cattle to return, they go a little way from the house and blow a whistle, which is made of bone, and so constructed as to be heard at a great distance, and in this manner bring them all home with-out any difficulty. Their huts are high-er and more commodious than those of the Hottentots, and their lands more fertile; but their oxen and almost all their animals, are much smaller. . Cairo, or Grand Cairo, a large city, capital of Egypt, with a castle built on a rock. It is divided into the New and Old cities; Old Cairo is on the E side of the Nile, and almost uninhabited. New Cairo is a mile from the river Nile, and seven miles in circumference. The streets are so narrow and winding, that it is impossible to follow their direction amid the multitudes of houses which stand crowding on each other. The castle includes the palaces of the sultans of Egypt, now almost buried under their own ruins; domes overthrown, heaps of rubbish, gilding, and pictures, the colours of which have delied corroding time, sts ely marble columns still standing, but in general without capitals; such are the tokens of its former magnificence. Calcutta, or Fort William, the empo rium of Bengal, situate on the E side of the Hoogly, or western arm of the Ganges, 100 miles from the sea, in the hay of Bengal. It is a modern city having risen on the site of the village of Govinpour, about 90 years ago. It ex-tends from the western point of Fort William; along the banks of the river. almost to the village of Cossipoor, four miles and a half; the breadth, in many parts inconsiderable. Generally speaking, the description of one Indian city is a description of all; being all built on one plan, with very narrow and crooked streets; an incredible number of re rvoirs and ponds, and a great many gar-dens interspersed. A few of the streets are paved with brick. The houses are variously built: some of brick, others with mud, and a greater proportion with hamboos and mats: these different kinds of fabries, intermixed with each other, form a motley appearance. Those of the latter kinds are invariably of one story, and covered with thatch; those of brick aeldom exceed two floors, and have flat terraced roofs: the two former classes far outnumber the last, which are so thinly scattered, that firea. which often happen, do not, sometimes, meet with the obstruction of a brickhouse through a whole street. Altho' by much the greatest part of Calcutta is built upon this plan, yet the quarter in-habited by the English is an exception to this rule of building; being composed entirely of brick-buildings, many of which have more the appearance of palaces than of private houses. The palaces than of private houses. The latts into the Aire eight miles below wakefield. It is navigable the greater sides of the explanade of the fort is magnificent; and it adds greatly to the superb appearance, that the houses are detached from each other, and insulated in a great space. The buildings It was discovered by captain Cook, in

The general approach to the houses is by a flight of steps with great projecting porticoes, or surrounded by nades or areades, which give them the appearance of Grecian temples. But the remainder of the city, and by much the greater part, is built as before de-scribed. Within these 20 or 25 years, Calcutta has been wonderfully improved both in appearance and in the salubrity of the air, for the streets have been properly drained, and the ponds filled up. It is supposed to contain at least 500,000 inhabitants. The mixture of European and Asiatic manners that may be observed here, is curious: coaches, phætons, chaises, with the palanquins and hackeries of the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearances of the fakirs form a sight more extraordinary, perhaps, than any other city can present. The hackery here mentioned is a small covered carriage upon two wheels, drawn by bullocks, and used generally for the female part of the family. The Ganges is navigable up to the town for the lar-gest ships that visit India. Here is the seat of the governor-general and council of Benezi, who lave a control over the of Bengal, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Bencoolen. Here is likewise a supreme Bencoolen. Here is likewise a supreme court of judicature, in which justice is dispensed according to the laws of England, by a chief justice and three puisne judges. In 1756 Calcutta was taken by the soubah of Bengal, who forced the feeble garrison, to the amount of 146 persons, into a prison called the Black Hole, ccube of 13 feet, out of which only 23 came alive. It was retaken the next year; the victory of Plassey followed; and the inhuman soubah was deposed, and put to death by his success. deposed, and put to death by his successor. The inhabitants are stout, tall, the W coast of America, by the Verand in general well proportioned, their hair and beards black, and much frizzled, so as to be somewhat woolly in some individuals; they besmear their faces with black pigment; and their only covering is a wrapper made from the bark of a tree, or of leaves. They cultivate the soil with some art and industry, but subsist chiefly on roots and fish. Plantains and sugar-canes are not plen-tiful, bread-fruit is very scarce, and the cocoa-nut trees are but thinly planted; but their yams and taras are in great abundance. Their houses are circular like a bee hive, and full as close and warm. The framing is of small spars and reeds; and both sides and roof are thick, and close covered with thatch made of dried grass, and the floor laid with dry grass. They deposit their dead in the ground, and decorate the grave of their chiefs with spears, darts, paddles, &c. all stuck upright in the ground about it. They are of a pacific disposition, and their women are much chaster than those of the more eastern islands.

In general the air is very good, and though the country is full of moun-tains, there are fertile vallies. In some places there are rich mines, whence are got rubies, sapphizes, topazes, and other stones of less value. Here is abundance of wood for all sorts of uses, and some proper for all sorts of uses, and some proper for dying red. It is remarkable for abundance of cinnamon; and in the kingdom of Candy is plenty of very large cardamoms. The pepper here is so good, that it sells dearer than that of other places. One of the most remarkable trees in Ceylon is the tallipot, which grows straight and tall, and is as big as the mast of a ship: the leaves are so large as to cover 15 or 20 men; when dried, they are round, and fold up like a fan. The natives wear a piece of the leaf on their head when they travel to shade them from the sun, and they are so tough that they are not easily torn, though those that wear them make their way through the woods and bush. Zone, it never teem the extremities of heat, being rendered cool and agreeable by its vicinity to the Andes. The temperature of the air is so mild and equable, that the Spaniards give it the preference to that of the southern provinces in their native country. The ferti-lity of the soil corresponds with the benignity of the climate, and is wonderfully accommodated to European productions, which have all improved in that happy climate. The most valuable of these, corn, wine, and oil, abound in Chili, as if they had been native in the country. Here all the fruits imported from Europe attain to full muturity; and the animals not only multiply, but improve. The horned cattle are of a larger size than those of Spain; and its horses excel in beauty and spirit, the famous Andalusian race from which they sprung. Nature too has enriched Chili with valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, and lead. The numerous rivers are of great service for the in-land navigation of the country, and it is besides assisted by such numbers of canals as are not to be met with in any canals as are not to be met with in any country of the world. These are formed the remainders of the five the sound of the fivest Chinese porcelain was even nations: the principal below itself and the five the cable presultant to the country, China produces to carry vessels of any targetime and exto carry vessels of any barden set extending in some places to be a supprising construction. Astonishing as this may appear to Euro-Astonishing as this may appear to Euro-peans, Abbe Grosier is of opinion that this account is by no means exaggerated; and he himself not only states all the calculations of Amiot, but gives a variety of reasons, from circumstances variety of reasons, from circumstances almost peculiar to China, to account for this wonderful population in that remote corner of Asia. The climate and soil are various, as the different provinces are nearer to, or remote from, the S; severe cold being felt at Pekin, while the southern provinces are exposed to excessive heat. In several of the provinces, the land yields two crops a-year; yet, though the husbandman aultivates it with such care, as not to lose the smallest portion of ground, China has been often desolated by famine. Its numerous mountains (which are chiefly in the N and W parts of the are chiefly in the N and W parts of the empire) contain mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver; but those of gold and silver are not permitted to be opened; the emperors having for their little feet. The whole of the finest is reserved for the emperor, so that none of it ever comes into the hands of other persons, unless it happen to be cracked or otherwise damaged in such a manner as to be unworthy of being presented to the sovereign. The Chinese surpass us in the art of managing kitchen-gardens, and have a number of vegetables unknown to us. They cultivate even the bottom of their waters; the beds of their lakes, ponds and rivulets, producing crops unknown to us, particularly of the pitsi, or water chesnut, the fruit of which (found in a cover formed by its root) is exceedingly wholesome, and of a very delicate taste. The mountains and vast forests abound with wild animals of every speabound with wild animals of every species; but that valuable quadruped, the musk-deer is peculiar to it. The principal defence of the empire against a foreign enemy is the great wall which separates China from Tartary, extending more than 1500 miles in length, and of such thickness that six horsemen may easily ride abreast upon it. It is flanked with towers two howsh is distant from each other; and it is said that a third of the able-bodied men in the empire, were employed in constructing it. The work-men were ordered under pain of death to place the materials so closely, that not the least entrance might be afforded for any instrument of iron; and thus the work was constructed with such solidity, that it is still almost entire, solidity, that it is still almost entire, though 2000 years have elapsed since it was constructed. Cineguilla, a town of New Mexico in the province of Sonora. When the Spaniards attacked the natives in Cinalos and Sonora (see Ginaloa) they here entered a plain of 14 leagues in extent, in which, at the depth of only 16 in-clies, they found gold in great abundance, and in grains of great size and weight. The consequence was, that in 1771, ahove 2000 persons were settled in Cineguilla, under the government and inspection of proper magis-trates and eclesiastics. Lon. 96 23 W, lat. 35 5 N.

Cinque Ports, certain ports on the coast of Kent and Sussex, so called by way of eminence, on account of their superior importance, as having been thought by our kings to merit a particular regard for their preservation against invasion. They were five in number when their first charter was granted by William I. in 1077. These were Dover, Hastings, Hythe, Romney, and Sandwich; to which were afterward added Winchelses, Seaford, and Rye. That king appointed a constated between 45 and 50 degrees of E longitude. It is bounded by ble of Dover Castle (who is now called

Amongst others they were each of them to send two barons to represent them in parliament; they were to be exempted from subsidies and aids; their heirs were to be free from personal wardship notwithstanding any tenure; and they were to be impleaded in their own towns, not elsewhere. For these privileges, they were obliged to supply the government with 57 ships, at 40 days notice, and to pay their crews during 15 days. At that period, the opulent traders of London were styled barons: a privilege, which was enjoyed like-wise by the merchants of these ports, whose representatives, to this day, are styled Barons of the Cinque Ports.

Circars, Northern, five provinces on the W coast of the Day of Bengal. They were originally denominated They were originally denominated Northern from their position in respect to Madras, on which they depend. Of the five Northern circars, Cicacole, Rajamundry, Ellore and Condapilly are in the possession of the English, and Guntoor is in the hands of the Nizam. The first four extend from the N bank of the Kistna to Chilka Lake ; forming a narrow slip of country 350 miles long, and from 26 to 75 broad, bounded by mountains and extensive forests on the side opposite the sea. The English Circars had been coded to the Freuch, by the nizam of the Dec-can in 1753; but they were conquered by colonel Clive in 1759, and produce an annual revenue of 360,000. See

This country has long been celebrated for the extraordinary beauty of its women; and here it was that the practice of inoculating for the small pox first began. Terki, the principal city, is seated in a very spacious plain, very swampy, towards the sea side, in 43 deg. 23 min. N latitude: it is about three wersts in compass, well fortified with ramparts and bastions in the modern style, well stored with cannon, and has always a considerable garrison in it, under the command of a governor. The Circassian prince who resides here, is allowed of his own subjects are permitted to dwell within any part of the fortificathose parts to the obedience of Russia, they have put in all places of strength, not only Russian garrisons and governors, but magistrates, and priests for the exercise of the Christian religion; yet the Circassian Tartars are govern-ed by their own princes, lords, and judges; but these administer justice judges; but these administer justice in the name of the emperor, and in matters of importance, not without the presence of the Russian governors, being all obliged to take the oath of allegiance to his imperial majesty. The apparel of the men of Circassia, is much the sume with that of the New countries and the sume with that of the New countries are such that are such that are such that are such that we have the sume with that of the New countries are such that are such th is much the same with that of the Naas much the same with that of the ragayans; only their caps are something larger; and their cloaks being likewise of coarse cloth or sheep skins, are fastened only at the neck with a string, and as they are not large enough to cover the whole body, they turn them round according to the wind and weather. The men here are much better favoured than those of Nagaya, and the women extremely well shaped, with exceeding fine features, smooth clear complexions, and beautiful black eyes, which, with their black hair hanging in two tresses, one on each side the face, give them a most lovely appearance: they wear a black coif on their heads, covered with a fine white cloth tied under the chin. During the summer they all wear only a smock of divers colours, and that open so low before, that one may see below their navels : this, with their beautiful faces always uncovered (contrary to the custom of most of the other pro- not ignorant of the Russian : their re-

The bridegroom pays for his bride a marriage present, consisting of arms or a coat of mail, but he must not see her, or cohabit with her, without the greatest mystery; and this reserve continues during life. The father makes the bride a present on the wedding-day, but reserves the greater part of what he intends to give her till the birth of her first child. On this occasion she pays him a visit, receives from him the remainder of her portion, and is clothed by him in the dress of a matron, the principal distinction of which consists in a veil. Until this time, the dress of the women is much like that of the men, excepting that the cloak is longer, and frequently white, a colour never worn by men: the cap too is generally red or rose-coloured. Before marriage, the youth of both sexea see each other freely at the little rejoicings which take place on festivals. Before the ball, the young men show their activity and address in a variety of military exercises, and the most alert have the privilege of choosing the most beautiful partners. Their musical instruments are a long flute with only three stops, a long nute with only three stops, a species of mandoline, and a tambourin. The dances are in the Asiatic style, with little gaiety or expression; the steps difficult, but not graceful. The women participate in the general character of the nation: they take pride in the courage of their husbands, and reproach them severely when de-feated. They polish and take care of the armour of the men. Their lan-guage they have in common with the other neighbouring Tartars, although the chief people among them are also

Their laney have in common with the phbouring Tartars, although people among them are also int of the Russian: their re-

ing they use circumcision among them, they have neither priest, alcoran, or mosque, like other Mahometans. Every body here offers his own sacrifice at pleasure; for which, however, they have certain days, established rather by custom than any positive command; their most solemn sacrifice is offered at the death of their nearest friends; upon which occasion both men and women meet in the field to be present at men meet in the neut to be present at the offering, which is an he-goat; and having killed, they flay it, and stretch the skin with the head and horns on, upon a cross at the top of a long pole, placed commonly in a quickset hedge (to keep the cattle from it); and near the place the sacrifice is offered by boiling and roasting the flesh, which they afterwards eat. When the feast is over, the men rise, and having paid their adoration to the skin, and muttered over some certain prayers, the women withdraw, and the mer conclude the ceremony with drinking a great quantity of aquavitæ; and this generally ends in a quarrel before they part. The face of the country is plea-santly diversified with mountains, valleys, woods lakes, and rivers; and, though not much cultivated, is far from being unfruitful. In summer the inhabitants quit the towns, and en-camp in the fields like the neighbouring Tartars; occasionally shifting their stations along with their flocks and herds. Besides game, in which the country greatly abounds, the Circassians eat beef and mutton; but that which they prefer to all others is the flesh of a young horse. Their bread consists of thin cakes of barley meal, baked upon the hearth, which they al ways eat new; and their usual drink is water or mare's milk; from the lat-ter of which they distil a spirit, as most of the Tartar nations. They allot no fixed hours for the refreshments of the table or sleep, which they indulge irregularly, as inclination or convenience dictates. When the men make excursions into an enemy's country, they will pass several days and nights successively without sleeping; but, at their return, devote as much time to repose as the space in which they had before with held from that gratification.

ligion is Paganism; for notwithstand , removing from one part of the country to another, the women and children are carried in waggons, which are a kind of travelling houses, and drawn by oxen or camels, they never using horses for draught. Their breed of the latter, however, is reckoned exceeding good; and they are accustomed to swim almost any river on horseback. The women and children smoke tobacco as well as the men; and this is the most acceptable commodity which a traveller can carry with him into the Tartar countries. There are here no public inns, which indeed are unnecessary; for so great is the hospitality of the people, that they will contend with each other who shall entertain any stranger that happens to come among them.—The principal branch of their traffic is their own children, especially their daughters, whom they sell for the use of the seraglios in Turkey and Persia, where they frequently marry to great advantage, and make the fortune of their families. Whatever may have been the original religion of this people, they have been successively converted to Christianity and Mahometanism, and have now no religion or worship among them. They break, without scruple, such oaths as they have taken on the bible and the koran; but there are certain forms of oaths, and certain places, in the neighbour-hood of their ruins (supposed to be remains of Christian churches) which insure their fidelity. Their courage, great as it is, is not proof against reli-gions terrors. Like all barbarians, they believe that what is called accident, may be influenced by particular ceremonies. The Circassians have not any letters of their own; those among them who wish to write their language being obliged to make use of Arabian characters

This delightful spot is in a high state of cultivation, even far up the ascent of the hills. A river of the same name, which rises in the middle of the county, runs acony this vale and having entered Flintshire, falls into the Irish Sea.

Clyde, a river in Scotland, which arising in Annandale, falls into the sea arising in Annandale, falls into the sea over against the isle of Bute. Next to the Tay it is the largest river in Scot-land; and is navigable for small craft up to Glasgow. The canal, which joins the Forth, falls into it a little be-low that city. Near Lanerk, this riv-er runs, for several miles, between high rocks covered with wood; and in its course exhibits many astonishing cataracts. At Stonebyres, it is confined within a very narrow bed, and makes one entire shoot, falling about 60 feet over a perpendicular rock; the water then pouring over another pre-cipice, is dashed into a deep chasm be-neath. The horrid and incessant din with which this is accompanied, unnerves and overcomes the heart. At Cora-lin, the falls are seen to most advantage from a solitary and ruined tower in a garden, placed in a lofty situation. The cataract which is precipitated at least 100 feet between two vast rugged precipices, is full in view, seen over the top of trees and bushes, precipitating itself for an amazing mountains, at the confluence of the interruptions, forming a rude slope of various foam. The sides are bounded by vast rocks, clothed on their tops with trees: on the summit and very verge of one is a ruined tower, and in front a wood overtopt by a verdant hill. A path conducts the traveller to the beginning of the fall, into which projects a high rock in floods insulated by the water; and from the top is a tremendous view of the furious stream. In floods, the rock and tower have been observed to shake in such a manner as to spill water in a glass standing pitated at least 100 feet between two

By the assistance of Zuric and Basil, with whom it was in alliance, it expelled the bislop, and embraced the reformation. But the Protestant cantons being worsted in 1531, Constance was obliged to submit to the emperor Charles V, and to readmit the catholic religion. It thus lost its independence, and be-ing neglected by the house of Austria, fell by degrees into its present state. Constance is famous for a council, in 1514, which caused John Huss and Jerome of Prague to be burnt; and kewise condemned the doctrine of Wickliffe, and ordered his bones to be burned 40 years after he was dead. The French took possession of this ci-ty in July 1796. It is 35 miles N E of Zuric. The inhabitants scarcely amount to 3000. Lon. 9 10 E, lat. 47 38 N.

Gonstantinople, the ancient Byzanti-um, one of the most celebrated cities in Europe, in Romania, and capital of the Ottoman empire. Constantine the Great chose this place for his abode, and rebuilt it after the model of Rome. It was taken, in 1453, by the Turks, who have kept possession of it ever since. It is seated at the eastern extremity of Romania, on a small neck of land which advances towards Natolia, from , which it is separated by a channel of a mile in breadth. The sea of Marmora washes its walls on the S. and a gulf of the channel of Constantinople does the same on the N. It is delightfully situated between the Black Sea and the Archipelago, from whence it is supplied with all necessaries. The grand seignior's palace, called the Seraglio, is seated on the sea side, and is aurrounded with walls flanked with towers, and separated from the city by canals. It is said the harbour will easily hold 12000 ships. The number of houses must needs be prodigious, since one fire has burnt down 30,000 in one day without greatly changing the aspect of the city. However, in general, they are but mean, especially on the outside, where there are few or no windows; and the streets being narrow, gives them a melancholy look. They reckon that there are 3770 streets, small and great: but they are seldom or never clean; and the people the snow from the adjacent mountains.

The suburb called Pera is charmingly situated; and is the place where the ambassadors of England, France, Ve-nice and Holland, reside. This city is built in the form of a triangle; and as the ground riscs gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea. Som of Denmark, situated on the eastorn shore of the island of Zealand, upon a fine bay of the Baltic sea, not far from the strait called the Sound. Lon. 130 E, lat. 55 30 N. Copenhagen is the best built city of the north; for although Petersburgh excels it in superb edifices, yet as it contains no wooden houses, it does not display that striking contrast of meanness and magnificence, but in general exhibits a more equable and uniform appearance. The town is surrounded towards the land with regular ramparts and bastions, a broad ditch full of water, and a few outworks; its circumference measures between four and five miles. The streets are well paved, with a foot-way on each side, but too narrow and inconvenient for general use. The greatest part of the buildings are of brick; and a few are of free-stone brought from Germany. The houses of the nobility are in genersplendid, and constructed in the Italian style of architecture. The busy spirit of commerce is visible in this city, which contains about 80,000 inhabitants. The haven is always crouded with merchant ships; and the streets are intersected by broad canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses that line the quays. This city owes its principal beauty to a dreadful fire in 1728 that destroyed five churches and 67 streets, which have been since rebuilt in the modern style. The new part of the town raised by the late King Frederic V. is extremely beautiful, scarcely inferior to Bath. It consists of an octagon, containing four uniform and elegant buildings of hewn stone, and of four broad streets leading to it in op-posite directions. In the middle of the area standa an equestrian statue of Frederick V. in bronze, as big as life, which cost 80,000%. The Royal Mu-seum, or Cabinet of Rarities, merits the attention of travellers. This collection, which was begun by Frederic III. is deposited in eight apartments, and ranged in the following order: animals, shells, minerals, paintings, antiquities, medals, dresses, arms and implements of the Laplanders. Corea, a peninaula of Asia, axtending between China and Japan. It is bounded on the N by Chinese Tartary, on the E by the sea and isles of Japan, on the S by the ocean, and on the W by the gulfand province of Leao-tong. This kingdom is commonly reckoned 200 leagues from N to S, and 100 from E to W. The king has absolute authority over his subjects, but is himself tributary to China. It is divided into eight provinces, which contain 33 cities of the first rank, 58 of the second, and 70 of the third. of the third. Kingkitao is the capital.

The Coreans are well made, ingenious, brave and tractable; are fond of dancing, and show great docility in acquiring the sciences, to which they apply with great ardour, and honour in a particular manner. The northern Coreans are larger sized and more robust than those of the south; have a taste for arms, and become excellent soldiers. Their arms are cross-bows and long sabres. Men of learning are distinguished from other classes of people by two plumes of feathers in their caps; and when merchants present the Coreans with any books for sale, they dress themselves in their richest attire, and burn perfumes before they treat concerning the price. The Corcans mourn three years, as in China, for a father or mother; but the time of mourning for a brother is confined to three months. Their dead are not interred until three years after their decease; and when the ceremony of interment is performed, they place around the tomb the clothes, chariot, and horses, of the deceased, with whatever else he showed the greatest fondness for while alive; all which they leave to be carried off by the assistants. Their houses, as in China, consist only of one story, and are very ill built. Their writing, dress, religious ceremonies, and creed, as well as the greater part of their customs, are borrowed from the Chinese. Their women, however, are less confined, and have the liberty of appearing in public with the other sex, for which they are often ridiculed by their neighbours. They differ from the Chinese also in their ceremonies of marmage, and in the manner of contracting it; the parties in this country taking the liberty to choose for themselves, without consulting the inclinations of their parents, or suffering them to throw any obstseles in their way.

Corinth, now called Corantho, or Go-rame, a celebrated city, in the Morea, with a Greek archbishop's sec. It was one of the most important places in Greece, on account of its situation on the isthmus into the Morea; its castle on the top of an almost inaccesible rock; its harbours on the gulfs of Le-panto and Engia; its riches, and its architects, sculptors and painters, who were the most skilful in Greece. It once belonged to the Venetians, but the Turks became masters of it in 1715, and have kept it ever since. It is now greatly decayed; for the houses are greatly decayed; for the houses are not contiguous, but intermixed with fields and gardens, which make it look like a village. The country about it abounds with corn, wine, and oil, and from the castle is a fine prospect over the sea to the E and W, and a fertile country N and S. Its chief rivers are the Tamar, Tale, Co-ber, Loo, Camel, Fowe, Haile, Le-mara, Kense and Aire. Its principal capes or head lands are the Land's End, the Lizard, Cape Cornwall, Deadman's Head, Rame Head, &c. and a cluster of islands, 145 in number called the Scilly isles, supposed for-merly to have belonged to the main-land, though now 30 miles distant; abounding with antiquities particularly druidical. It lies in the diocese of Exeter; contains nine hundreds, 27 market-towns, and 161 parishes; and sends 44 members to parliament. As Corn-wall is surrounded by the sea on all sides except the E, the summers are less hot, and the winters less cold, than in other parts of England, and the spring and harvest are observed to be more backward. High and sudden winds are also more common in this than in other counties of England. than in other counties of England. The soil, as it is shallow, is not very fruitful, especially in the centre or the hilly parts; the valleys are very pleasant and fertile, yielding great plenty both of corn and pasture. The lands near the sea-coast are manured and furtilized with sea-weed and a and fertilized with sea-weed, and a kind of sand formed by the particles of broken shells as they are dashed against each other by the sea. It has plenty of sea-herbs, and some other plants peculiar to its insular situation. The Phenicians early visited these coasts, some think, 400 or 450 years before Christ. It derives its chief importance from its minerals. The mines of tin are numerous, and are, in general, very rich in ore; these have rendered this county famous in all ages. There has been sometimes found a small quantity of gold and silver, but not worthy of notice. With the metalline orea are notice. With the metalline orea are intermixed large quantities of mundic and arsenic. Many sorts of stones are also found here, particularly moorstone which is used both in buildings and for millstones; when polished, it appears more beautiful than any of the marble kind, and makes the richest furniture, as tables, chimney pieces, &c. but being exceedingly hard, the polishing is expensive. The copper mines are also numerous, and rich in ore. In many

Cracow, a city, formerly the capital of Poland, where the kings were elected and crowned. It was once almost the centre of the Polish dominions, but since the partition of Poland in 1774, it is become a frontier town. It was former- ly a bishop's see, and had a fine cathetevery building bears the most striking are proad and nandsonie; but almost every building bears the most striking marks of ruined grandeur: The churches alone seem to have preserved their original splendour. The devas-tation of this unfortunate town was begun by the Swedes at the com-mencement of the present century, when it was besieged and taken by Charles XII. but the mischiefs it suffered from that ravager of the N were far less destructive than those it experienced during the late dreadful commotions, when it underwent repeated sieges, and was alternately in possession of the Russians and confederates. The effects of cannon, grape, and mus-ket shot, are still discernible on the walls and houses. In a word, Cracow exhibits the remains of ancient magnificence, and looks like a great capital in ruins: from the number of fallen and falling houses one would imagine it had lately been sacked, and that the enemy had left it only yesterday. The town is surrounded with high walls of brick, strengthened by round and square towers, of whimsical shapes, in the ancient styles of fortification: The university of Cracow was former-ly, and not unjustly, called the mother of Polish literature as it principally sup-plied the other seminaries with professors and men of learning; but its lustre has been greatly obscured by the removal of the royal residence to Warsaw, and still more by the late intestine convulsions. Towards the southern part of the town, near the Vistula, rises a small eminence or rock, upon the top of which is built the palace, surrounded with brick walls and old towers, which form a kind of citadel to the town. When the general insurrection broke out, in 1794, against the Prussian and Russian usurpers of the Polish territory, Koaciusco, the chief of the patriotic insurgents, expelled the Russian garrison from this city, on the 24th of March 1794; but having marched, in the sequel, to the protection of Warsaw, Cracow surrendered to the Prussians, Crimea, or Crim Turtary, the ancient Taurica Chersonesus, a peninsula in Asia, bounded on the S and W by the Black Sea; on the N by the province of Catharinenslaf, with which it communicates by the isthmus of Perekop; and on the S by the sea of Asoph and the strait of Cafla. The mountainous parts were inhabited by the Tauri, probable and the Spatian of bably a colony of Scythians; and its coasts on the W, the E, and the S, by Greeks. The Scythians were driven out by Mithridates; the Greeks by the Sarmatians; and these again by the Alani and Goths, a northern hord of Scythi-ans. The Hungurians, the Cossacks, and Tartars succeeded in their turn; while the Genouse in the 12th century, held a temporary and precarious possession of the seaports, which they were obliged to yield to the Turks in 1475. At the peace of 1774, the Tartars of the Crimea were declared independent. The mountains are well covered with woods fit for the purpose of ship-building, and contain plenty of wild beasts. The valleys consist of fine arable land ; on the sides of the hills grow corn and vines in great abundance, and the earth is rich in mines. But these mountaineers are as careless and negligent as the in-habitants of the deserts: slighting all these advantages; and, like their bre-thren of the lowlands, are sufficiently happy if they are in possession of a fat sheep and as much bread as serves them to eat. In 1783, the Russians took possession of the country with an army; the following year, it was ceded to them by the Turks; and the peaceable possession of the whole was secured to possession of the whole was secured to them in 1791, by the cession of the fortress of Oczakow. Cumberland, a county of England, bounded on the N by Scotland; on the E by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland; on the S by Lanca-shire, and on the W by the Irish Sea and Solway Frith. The length from north to south may amount to 55 miles, but the breadth does not exceed 40 It is well watered with rivers, lakes, and fountains; but none of its streams are navigable. In some places there are very high mountains. The air is keen and piercing on these mountains towards the north; and the climate is moist, as in all hilly countries. The soil varies with the face of the country; being barren on the moors and mounground bordering on the sea. In general the eastern parts of the shire are barren and desolate; yet even the least fertile parts are rich in metals and minerals. The mountains of Copland abound with copper: veins of the same metal, with a mixture of gold and silver, were found in the reign of queen Elizabeth among the fens of Derwent; and royal mines were formerly wrought at Keswick. The county produces great quantities of coal, some lead, abundance of the mineral carth called black lead, several mines of lapis calaminaris; and an inconsiderable pearlfishery on the coast near Ravenglass. The Skiddaw is the principal mountain; and the chief rivers are the Eden and Derwent. This county and the adjoining one of Westmoreland, are celebrated for their lakes, which have been repeatedly described by the pen and pencil. The lakes in Cumberland are the Derwent-water, Bassenthwaite-water, Buttermere-water, Cromack-water, Lowes-water, Uls-water, West-water, Ennerdale-water, Elderwater, Broad-water, &c. Carlisle is the capital.

It is scated at the foot of a mountain, and is built in a square form, in the middle of which is the best market in all America; four large streets terminate in the square, which are all as straight as a line, and regard the four quarters of the world. It contains eight large parishes, and five religious houses, and the number of the inhabitants is about 50,000, of which three-fourths are the original Americans. Streams of water run through the town, which are a great convenience in so hot a country where it seldom rains. It is 320 miles S of Lima. Lon. 73 47 W, lat. 12 0 S.

Cprus, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Syria. It was taken by the Turks from the Venetiana in 1570. The soil is an excellent fer-tile clay; and, if the natives were industrious, they might make it a paradise. There is one archbishop and three bishops. The priests are extremely ignorant, and they submit to the most servile employment to get money. The people are very lascivious, and agree perfectly with the character given them by antiquity. The exports of the island are silk, wool and wine, Nicosia is the capital.

Damascus, now called Sham, an ancient city of Syria, the form of which is an exact square, each side being a mile and a half long. It had three walls, now almost entirely ruined; and of the several suburbs which it formerly had, there remains only one, which extends three miles in length. The extraordinary beauty of this place is owing to several streams which run across the fertile plain of Damascus, and water all the gardens, supply the public fountains, and run into every house. The most remarkable things are the caravansaries, which consist of long galleries, supported by marble pillars, and surrounding a large square court. The houses are built of wood. with their fronts backward, and within is a court: in the streets there is nothing to he seen but walls without windows, and yet the insides are richly adorned. The castle is like a little town having its own streets and houses, and the famous Damascus steel was kept here in a magazine. The mosques the handsomest buildings, of which there are about 2000 the most stately of which was a Christian church. Here is a street which runs across the city and suburbs in a direct line, on each side of which are shops, where all sorts of rich merchandise are sold; and they have several manufactures among which that of sabres and knives has been most famous. It is an archbishop's see, and contains great numbers of Christians and Jewa. It stands on the river Barida, 112 miles S of Antioch, and 112 N E of Jerusa-lem. Lon. 37 0 E. lat. 33.45 N.

The bazars are filled with merchants. cious khans, collecting under their porticos the stuffs of India, the silks of mount Lebanon, sal-ammoniae, and pyramids of rice proclaim that it is a commercial town. The houses, parti-cularly those on the banks of the river, are lofty. They have in general hand-some saloons, built on the top of their terraces, which are open to every wind, where the Turks pass their life in smoking. Several large mosques a-dorned with lofty minarets are dispers-ed over the town. The port of Dami-etta is constantly filled with a multitude of small boats and vessels. It carried on a great trade with Syria, Cyprus, and Marscilles. They export great quantities of rice, which is cultivated in the neighbouring plains. The tongue of land on which Damietta is situated, straitened on one side by the river, and on the other by the W ex-tremity of lake Menzalé, is only from two to six miles wide from E to W. It is intersected by innumerable rivilets in every direction, which render it the most fertile spot in Egypt. It is there that nature lavishing profusely her pomp and riches, presents flowers, fruits and harvests at every season of the year. Damietta was taken by the French in their expedition to Egypt, 1799.

Darien, or Terra Firma Proper, province of Terra Firma, in South merica. It has along the coast of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and is particularly distinguished by the name of the Isthmus of Darien, and, by some writers, the Isthmus of Panama. It is bounded on the N by the gulf of Mexico, on the E by the river and gulf of Darien, on the S by Popayan and the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by the same ocean and Veragua. It extends in the form of a crescent, round the bay of Panama. It is 300 miles in length. but not above 60 broad; but this isthmus which binds together the continents of N and S America, is strengthened by a chain of lofty mountains, stretching through its whole extent, which render it a barrier of solidity sufficient to resist the impulse of two opposite oceans. The mountains are covered with forests almost inaccessible. The country is mountainous and barren, and the lowlands are overflowed with perpetual rain, so that the inhabitants, in many places build their houses upon trees, to be elevated from the damp soil, and the odious reptiles engendered in the putrid waters. The natives go naked; and the men have a silver plate fastened to their nose, which hangs over their mouths, in the shape of a half-moon; the women have a ring hanging down in the same man-ner; and they have also several chains of teeth, shells, beads, and the like, hanging down from the neck to the pit of the stomach. The men clear the plantations, and the women cultivate them. The girls are employed in pick-ing and spinning cotton, which the women weave, and the cloths are chiefly used for hammocks. Domingo, St. one of the richest islands in the West Indies, 400 miles in length, and 75 in breadth. It was discovered by Columbus, in 1492, and is surrounded by craggy rocks and dangerous shoals. The heat to the N and S E would be insupportable for six months of the year, if not qualified by the easterly winds, and frequent rains; but latter soon spoil the flesh, bread, and fruits. It has a great many rivers, and mines of gold, tale, and erystal. The Spanish name of it, originally given by Columbus, is Hispaniola. Since the French revolution this island has been desolated by the most dreadful calamities. In 1791, a most alarming insurrection of the negroes began in the French plantations. A scene of the most horrid cruelties ensued. In a little time no less than 100,000 negroes were in rebellion, and all the manufactories and plantations of more than half the northern provinces appeared as one general conflagration.
The plains and mountains were filled with carnage, and deluged with blood. In 1793, the royalists of fort St. Jeremie invited the English to take possession of that part of the island. They were obliged, however, partly on account of the disorders which desolated the island, and partly on account of that dreadful scourge the yellow fever, to abandon this island altogether. By the peace concluded between France and Spain, the whole of this island has fallen into the hands of the French.

It was taken down in 1753, and rebuilt in an elegant form, after the model of Westminster bridge, but much better proportioned, and on a more secure foundation. It has five arches, the buttresses between which support semicircular niches that project from the parapet; there are ballustrades between these niches, and continued to the ends of the bridge which is commodiously flagged for foot passages; the whole constructed fiot passages; the whole constructed with hewn stone in a very fine taste. There are four bridges besides this over the river. This city has two cathedrals, 18 parish churches, two chapels of case, 18 Roman-catholic chapels, six meeting-houses for Presbyterians, one Anabaptists, four for Methodists, two for Quakers, a church for French Calvinists, a Danish and a Dutch church, and a Jewish synagogue. Christ-church, or the Holy Trinity, built in 1038 by Donat bishop of Dublin, is a venerable Gothic pile; and its present appearance evinces its and its present appearance evinces its antiquity. St. Patrick's cathedral is also a fine Gothic structure; it stands on the east side of Patrick street; the monuments here are more numerous than in Christ-church; and the steethan in Christ-church; and the steeple is the highest in the city. St. Werburgh's church was originally built in a very early age. In 1301, when a great part of the city was consumed by an accidental fire, this church suffered in the conflagration: it was burnt a second time in 1754, and repaired in its present beautiful form in 1759. The front and steeple are admired for their elegance, lightness, and symmetry: the spire is a fine octagon supported by eight pillars; and a gilt ball terminates the whole, being 160 feet from the ground. The House of Commons was destroyed by fire in 1792, but is now rebuilt. The harbour is choked up by two banks of 1792, but is now rebuilt. The harbour is choked up by two banks of 1810, upon which at high water there is not above 17 feet; which prevents vessels of large burden from going over the bar; a defect which will be remedied, no doubt, by some fine projected improvemen'. Edinburgh, the metropolis of Scotland, situated in a county of the same name. It may properly be divided into the Old and New Towns. The Old Town is situated on a narrow steep hill, about a mile in length, terminated abruptly on the W side by the cas-tle, from which there is a gradual de-clivity to the palace of Holyrood-house, which is placed in a beautiful plain called St. Ann's Yards. From the level of this plain, and on each side of the ridge or hill on which the Old Town stands, run two narrow vallies, nearly parallel to each other; the southern one forms a street called the Cowgate, the northern continued a marsh till very lately, which was called the North Loch, but is now drained. The high-street which runs between the castle and Holyroodhouse, is long and spacious, and the houses are very high From this street many narrow lanes or closes run off at right angles, towards the N and S. The castle is seated on a vast perpendicular rock, accessible only by a drawbridge on one side, and in ancient times was considered as almost impregnable. The apartment is still shewn to strangers where the unfortunate Mary brought forth James VI. who afterwards inherited the crowns of England and Scotland. The complexion of the Egyptians is tavny, and the further S the darker, so that those near Nubia are almost black. They are generally indolent and cowardly: the richer sort do nothing all day but drink collee, smoke tobacco and sleep; and they are ignorant, proud boundary and ridical collection. rant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously heat, to an European, is almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The 8 winds are by the natives called poisonous winds, or the hot winds, of the deserts they are of such extreme heat and aridity, that no animated body exposed to it can withstand its fatal influence. During the three days that it generally lasts, the streets are deserted; and woe to the traveller whom this wind surprises remote from shelter. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by the annual inunda-tion of the Nile. When the waters retire, all the ground is covered with mud; then they only harrow their corn into it, and, in the following March, they have usually a plentiful harvest: their rice fields are supplied with water from canals and reservoirs. water from canals and reservoirs. There is no place in the world better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, augar, fruits, and all sorts of gardenstuff; and in Lower Egypt are oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, in great plenty. The sands are so subtile that they penetrate into the closets, chests, and cabinets, which, with the hot winds, are probably the cause of sore eyes being so very common here. The animals of Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes, black-cattle, fine horses, large asses crocodiles, the hippopotamus, the cameleon, and a kind of rat called ichneumon; ostriches, cagles, hawks, pelicans, water towls of all kinds, and the ibis which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and nonious insects. and covered by innumerable cattle. In and covered by innumerable cattle. In others, the pleasing viclasitudes of gently-rising hills and hending vales, fertile in corn, waving with wood, and interspersed with meadows, offer the most delightful landscapes of rural opulence and heauty. Some tracts abound with prospects of a more romantic kind; lofty mountains, craggy rocks, deep narrow dells, and tumbling torrents. Nor are there wanting, as a rents. Nor are there wanting, as a contrast to so many agreeable scenes, the gloomy features of black barren moors and wide uncultivated heaths. On the whole, however, few countries have a smaller proportion of land absolutely steril and incapable of culture. The richest parts are in general the midland and southern. Toward the midland and southern. Toward the N. it partakes of the barrenness of the neighbouring Scotland. The E. cost is in many parts sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, somerange of rude and elevated land, some-times rising into lofty mountains, ex-tends from the borders of Scotland to the very heart of England, running from N. to S. and forming a natural division hetween the E. and W. sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures. The rivers various mineral treasures. The rivers are numerous; but the comparatively small extent of England will not permit them to vie, in length of course, with the great rivers on the continent. The most considerable of them are the Thames, Severn, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Eden, Avon, Derwent, Dee, Mersey, &c. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive. They are chiefly in the N W counties; and those of Westmoreland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit such varieties of beautifully romantic and picturesque scenery, as to have become, for some years past, the fashionable object of summer excursions from the metropolis, and every part of the country. With respect to climate, England is situated on the N part of the temperate can reach, watered by copious streams, a verdure : but the harvests, especially in the northern parts, frequently suffer from unseasonable rains; and the fruits often fall short of their perfect maturity. The rigours of winter, however, as well as the parching least of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent; a circumstance common to all islands. While the seaports of Holall islands. While the acapters of For-land and Germany are every winter locked up with ice, those of England, and even of Scotland, are never known to suffer this inconvenience. The wes-tern side of the kingdom, receiving first the great clouds from the Atlantic Ocean, which are afterward intercept-ed in their passage by the middle ridge of hills, is considerably more exosed to rain than the eastern; but the posed to rain than the eastern; but the latter is more frequently involved in fogs and mists. The whole country, some particular spots excepted, is sufficiently healthy; and the natural longevity of its inhabitants is equal to that of almost any region. All the most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, of this country, have been imported from the continent, and have been kent un and improved by constant been kept up and improved by constant attention. Originally, this great island seems to have been, like the wilds of America, overrun with wood, and peo-pled only by the inhabitants of the forest. Here formerly roamed the bear, the wolf, and the wild boar, now to-tally extirpated. Large herds of stags ranged through the woods, roebucks bounded over the hills, and wild bulls grazed in the marshy pastures. By de-grees the woods were destroyed, in or-der to make way for cultivation; the marshes were drained; and the wild marshes were drained; and the wild animals, invaded in their retreats, gradually disappeared, and their places were supplied by the domestic kinds. England now possesses no other wild quadrupeds than some of the smaller kinds; such as the fox, the wild cat, the badger, the marmot, and others of the weasel kind; the otter, the hedgehog, the hare and rabbit; the squirrel, rmouse, mole, and several species o cone, so that it enjoys but a scanty the rat and mouse. On the other hand, share of the genial influence of the suntres and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes and is more favourable horses are to be found in England of to the growth, that to the ripening, of the products of the earth. No country for the saddle, the race, and the caris clothed with so beautiful and lasting riage, all equally good though of very

The difference races of sheep in England are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, and plenty or fineness of worl. The deer of our parks, which are originally a foreign breed, are superior in beauty of skin, the delicacy of flesh, to those of most countries. Even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity rarely to be met with elsewhere. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than in the animals. Nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which our woods could boast. To foreign coun-tries, and to the efforts of culture, we are indebted for our bread, the roots and greens of our tables, and all our garden fruits. The barley and hops for our malt liquors, and apples for our ci-der, are equally the gifts of other lands. The meanest labourer is now fed with more wholesome and delicate aliments than the petty kings of the country could obtain in its savage and uncultivated state. The rivers and seas of England are stocked with a great va-riety of fish, which yield a plentiful ar-ticle of provision to all ranks of people. The river fish are in many parts diminished. But the sea is an inexhaustible source; and every exertion of industry to precure food from thence, is amply repaid. The fisheries, at present, are great object of attention; and the whole sea-coast is enlivened by numer ous inhabitants, who gain their chief subsistence from the deep. The man-ufactures and commerce of this country are so vast, extensive, and various, that a particular account of them would lead us beyond our limits. In the woollen, cotton, and hardware manu-factures, in particular, it has long main-tained a pre-eminence; and, though nature has denied it the rich fruits of other countries, yet the manufacture, if it may be so called, of home-made wines, in imitation of all the varieties of the foreign, has been brought to an uncommon degree of perfection. Euphrates, one of the most celebra-ted rivers in the world, and the princi-pal of Turkey in Asia. It has its rise near Erzerum, in Armenia, from two sources that lie to the eastward, on high mountains covered with snow almost the year round. The plain of Erzerum is inclosed between these two fine streams, which, when united, are called the Euphrates, or the Frat. After this junction it begins to be navigable for boats; but the channel is so gable for boats; but the channel is so rocky, that the navigation is not safe. It first divides Armenia from Natolia, then Syria from Diarbeck; after which it runs through Irac-Arabia, and receives the Tigris on the confines of the Persian province of Kusistan: it then waters Bussarah, and 40 miles S E of it enters the gulf of Persia. It is also the N E boundary of the great desert of Arabia of Arabia.

Europe, one of the four general parts of the world, bounded on the N by the Frozen Ocean, on the S by the Mediterranean, on the W by the Atlantic and Northern Occun, and on the E by Asia. From Cape St. Vincent to the mouth of the Oby, it is near 3,600 miles in length; and from Cape Matapan in the Morea, to the North cape in Lapland, about 2,200 in breadth. It is much less than either Asia or Africa, but surpasses them in many particu-lars. It is entirely within the temperate zone, except a small part of Norway and Russia; so that there is neither the excessive heat, nor the insupportable cold, of the other parts of the continent. It is much more populous, and better cultivated, than either Asia, or Africa; is fuller of villages, towns, and cities, and the buildings are strongcr, more elegant and commodious. The inhabitants are a'l whitea, and, for the most part, much better made than the Africans, or even the Asiatics. With regard to arts and sciences, there is no manner of comparison; nor yet in trade, navigation, and war. Europe contains Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, Prussia, Poland, hish, and Fortiguese, which are that lects of the Latin: the German Flem-ish, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, and Eng-lish, which proceed from the Teuto-nie: the Sclavonian, which reigns (though in disguise) in Poland, Russia, (though in disguise) in Poland, Russia, Bohemis, and a great part of Turkey in Europe: the Celtic, of which there are dialects in Wales, the Highlands of Scotland, Ireland, Bretagne in France, and Lapland: the modern Greek, and several others. The principal rivers are the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Vistula, Volga, Dwina, Bog, Oby, Don, Scheld, Rhine, Rhone, Seine Loire, Gargune, Gruyne, Taic. Seine, Loire, Garonne, Groyne, Tajo, Thames, and Severn. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lausanne, Wenner, Ladoga, and Onegra. The chief mountains are the Alps, Appennines, and Pyrenees. The pre-vailing religion is the Christian, divid-ed into the Greek, Romish, and Pro-execution. The grand western end

Ferrara, a city of Italy, capital of a dutchy of the same name. It is seated in an agreeable and fertile plain, watered by the river Po, which is a defence on one side; and on the other is encompassed by a strong wall and deep broad ditches full of water, as well as by a good citadel, finished by pope Paul. In the middle of the city is a magnificant castle which was formerly magnificent eastle, which was formerly the palace of the dukes, and is not now the least ornament of Ferrara. It is quite surrounded with water; and the arsenal, which is near it, deserves the observation of travellers. Over against the palace is the duke's garden; with a park, called Belvidere, on account of its beauty. Behind the garden there is a palace, built with white marbie, called the Palace of Diamonds, because all the stones are cut diamond fashion. Ferrara had formerly a considerable trade; but it is now almost deserted, being very poor, insomuch that there is hardly a person to be seen in the streets. The country about it is so marshy, that a shower or two of rain renders the roads impassable. Ferrara was taken by the French in 1796. It is 24 miles N E of Bologna, 38 N W of Ravenna, 70 N by W of Florence, and 190 N of Rome. Lon. 12 14 E, lat. 44 36 N.

This country is almost surrounded by the branches of the Po, which often overflow the country, and form the great morass of Comachia, which has a bad effect on the air. which has a sale electron the air. It is thin of people, and indifferently cultivated, though fit for corn, pulse and hemp. The Po and the lake of Comachio yield a large quantity of fish. Ferrara is the capital town; besides which there are Arano, Comachio, Magnavacca, Belriguardo, Cento, Buendeno, and Ficherola.

Ferro, Furo, or Feroe Islands, a cluster of little islands, lying in the Northern Ocean, between 61° and 63° N lat. and between 5° and 8° W lon. They belong to Denmark. There are 17 which are habitable; each of which is a lofty mountain arising out of the waves, divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some of them are deeply indeated with secure har. are deeply indented with secure har-bours; all are very steep, and most of them faced with most tremendous precipices. The surface of the mountains consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility; for barley, the only corn sown here, yields about 20 for one; and the grass affords abundant pasturage for sheep. The exports are, salt-ed mutton, and tallow, goose-quills, ed mutton, and tailow, goose-quills, feathers, and eider-down, and by the industry of the inhabitants, knit woollen waisteoats, caps, and stockings. Flo trees beyond the size of juniper or stunted willows will grow here; nor are any wild quadrupeds to be met with event rats or mice, originally with except rats or mice, originally escaped from the shipping. Vast quanties of sea-fowl frequent the rocks: and the taking of them furnishes a very perilous employment to the natives. Among the numerous whirlpools of these scas, that of Suderoe, near the island of the same name, is the most poted. It is occasioned by a crater 61 wholesome, and the country full of mountains, particularly to the W and S, where mount Atlas lies; but it is po-fathoms in depth in the centre, and from 50 to 55 on the sides. The water forms four fierce circumgirations. The danger at most times, especially in storms, is very great. Ships sre irre-sistibly drawn in; the rudder loses its power; and the waves beat as high as the masts; so that an escape is almost miraculous; yet at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhabitants will venture in boats for the sake of fishing.

ble, and contains about 80,000 inhabitants. The palaces are magnificent, and there are 700 mosques, 50 of which are very considerable, adorned with marble pillars and other ornaments. The houses are built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work; those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours, like Dutch tiles, and tile wood-work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. The roofs are flat, and they sleep thereon in the summer. There is a court to every house, in which are square marble basons. Here are two colleges for students, finely built of marble and adorned with paint ings; one of these has 100 rooms, and the sides are adorned with marble pillars of various colours, whose capitals are gilt, and the roofglitters with gold, azure, and purple. Here are many hospitals, and above 100 public baths, many of which are stately structures. All the trades live in a separate part of the city: and the exchange, full of all sorts of rich merchandise, is as large as a small town. The gardens are beautiful, and full of all kinds of fragrant flowers and shrubs, so that the city, in general, is a sort of terrestrial paradise. The inhabitants are clothed like the Turks: the ladies dress is very expensive in the winter; but in the summer, they wear nothing but a shift. Foz is the centre of the trade of this empire; and hence caravans go to Mecca, carrying rendy-made garments, Cordovan leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers, for which they bring in re-turn silks, muslins, and drugs. Though the character of the surface (which, in general, is a light sand) and the want of rain, may seem to announce sterility, yet the springs are so abundant, that few of the regions in the N of Africa exhibit a richer vegetation. From wells of eight or 10 feet deep, with several of which every garden and field is furnished, the husbandman waters the natural or artificial productions of his land; among which are the date tree, the nlive, lime, apricot, pomegranate, fig, Indian corn, and barley, wheat, pompions or calabash, carrots, cucumbers, onions, and garlic. Among the tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, and a species of the domestic fewl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds; one of which antelopes of various kinets; one of which is called the huaddee, and is relebrated for the singular address with which, when chased by the hunters, amid its craggy heights, it plunges from the precipice, and lighting on its hams, without danger of pursuit, continues till evening in the vale helow. The heat of the climate from April to Normannia, an intense that form since it was intensed. vember, is so intense, that from nine in the morning to sunset, the streets are frequented by the labouring people on-ly 1 and, even in the houses, respira-tion would be difficult, but for the expedient of wetting the rooms: from May to the end of August, when the wind is usually from the S.E to the S.W, the heat is often such as to turn silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tumbuctoo, and the river Niger: one of which consists of it change to the W or N W, a reviving 20,000 men. They travel over such dry harren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are salt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Here are a great number stroys their comfort. A multitude of Jews, who have handsome synagogues; but the bulk of the inhabitants are the constant inhabitants of the | seated on the gulf of Carnero, 17 miles fields, gardens, and houses; the air is crowded with musquitos; and persons of every rank are overrun with the different kinds of vermin that attack the beggars of Europe. The towns are chiefly inhabited by husbandmen and shepherds: for, though they also con-tain the merchants, artificers, minis-ters of religion, and officers of government, yet agriculture and pasturage are the principal occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; their hair a short curly black, their lips thick, their noses flat and bread; and their skin emitting a very fetid effluvia: they are tall, and well-shaped; but weakly, indolent, and in-active. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors of Barbawy. In their common intercourse, all distinctions of on the S by the Frith of Forth; on the rank seem forgotton; the shereef (or governor) and the lowest plebian, the rich, and the poor, the master and the servant, converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. Generous and hospitable, let his fare be scanty or abundant, the Fezzamer is desirous that others should partake of it; and if 20 persons were unexpectedly to visit his dv elling, they must all participate as far as it will go. When they settle, their money transactions, they squat upon the ground, and having lev-elled a spot with their hands, make dots as they reckon; if they are wrong, they smooth the anot again, and repeat the calculation. Even the bystanders are as eager to correct mistakes as if the affair were their own. Gold dust constitutes the cheif medium of payment; and value, in that medium, is always expressed by weight. In reli-gion they are rigid, but not intolerant Mahometans. The government is momarchical; but its powers are adminis-tered with such regard to the happi-ness of the people, the rights of property are so revered, the taxes so moderate, and justice is directed by such a firm, yet temperate hand, that the people are ardently attached to their sovereign. Florence, the capital of the dutchy of Tuscany, and one of the finest cities in Italy. It is surrounded on all sides but one with high hills, which rise insensibly, and at last join the lofty mountains called the Appennines. Towards Pisa, there is a vast plain of 40 miles in length; which is so filled with villages and pleasure-houses, that they seem to be a continuation of the suburbs of the city. Independent of the churches and palaces of Florence, suburbs of the city. Independent of the churches and palaces of Florence, most of which are very magnificent, the architecture of the houses in general is in a good taste; and the streets are remarkably clean, and paved with large broad stones, this led so as to prevent the horae from sliding. The city is divided into two anequal parts by the river Arno, ever which there are no less than four bridges in sight of each other. That called the Ponte della Trinita, which is uncommonly elegant, is built entirely of white marble, and ornamented with four beautiful statues representing the Seasons. The quays, the buildings on each side, and the bridges, render that part of Florence through which the river runs by far the finest. Every corner of this beautiful city is full of wonders in the arts of painting, statuary, and architecture. The streets, squares, and fronts of the palaces are adorried with a great number of statues; some of them by the best modern masters, Michael, Angelo, Brandinelli, Donatello, Giovanni di Bologna. On the sum-mit there is a kind of fort called Belmit there is a kind of fort called Belvedere. From this and from some of the higher walks, you have a complete view of the city of Florence, and the beauteous vale of Arno, in the middle of which it stands. This palace has been enlarged since it was purchased from the ruined family of Pitti. The furniture is rich and curious, particularly some tables of Florentine work, which are much admired. The most: larly some tables of Florentine work, which are much admired. The most precious ornaments, however, are the paintings. The walls of what is called the Imperial Chamber, are painted in fresco, by various painters; the subjects are allegorical, and in honour of Lorenzo of Medicis distinguished by the name of the Magnificent. The famous gallery attracts every stranger. One of the most interesting parts of it in the eyes of many, is the series of Roman emperors, from Julius Casar to Roman emperors, from Julius Casar to Gallienus, with a considerable number of their empresses arranged opposite to them. This series is almost complete; but wherever the bust of an emperor is wanting, the place is filled up by that of some other distinguished Ronan. The celebrated Venus of Medici, is thought to be the standard of taste in female beauty and proportion, stands in a room called the Tribunal. The inscription on its base mentions its being made by Cleomenes an Atheniar, the son of Apollodorus. It is of white marble, and surrounded by other master-pieces of sculpture, some of which are said to be the works of Praxiteles and other Greek masters. Forth, one of the most noble and commodious rivers in Scotland. It takes its rise near the buttom of Lomond hills; and running from E to W, receives in its passage many considerable streams, deriving their waters from the eminences in the midland counties of North Britain. Between Stirling and Alloa, the Forth winds in a most beautiful and surprising manner; so that, though it is but four miles by land, it is 24 by water, between those two places. Below Alloa the river expands itself to a great breadth between the counties of Lothian and Fife, till at Queen's-ferry it is contracted by promontories shooting into it from both consts; so that, from being four or five, there it is not above two miles broad. At the mouth of it, from North Berwick to Fifeness, it is full five leagues broad; having the little island of May in the middle of it, and to the W of this the rocky island of Bass; notwithstanding which, the largest fleet may enter and sail up it many miles with the utmost facility and in the greatest safety. Fourness, in Loynsdale Lancashire, is a tract, between the Kent, Leven, and Dudden-Sands which runs N parallel with the W sides of Cumberland and Westmoreland; and on the S runs out into the sea as a promontory. This whole tract, except on the coast, rises in hills and vast piles of rocks called Forness-Fells. In these mountainous parts are found quarries of a fine durable blue slate to cover buildings with, which are made use of in many other parts of the kingdom. The low or plain part of Fourness, produces all sorts of grain, but principally oats, whereof the bread eaten in this country is generally made; and there are found here veins of a very rich iron ore.

The inhabitants of the same island always pretend to be of the same race, and each one looks upon his island as a possession, the property of which is common to all individuals of the same society. Feasts are very common among them, and, more particularly. the remains, of a castle said to have been built in the time of the Saxon heptarchy. To this castle the princess Mary (afterwards Mary I.) retired, when lady Jane Grey was proclaimed queen. Here is a stately church, in common to all individuals of the sale-society. France was lately an absolute monarchy, and divided into several military governments, or provinces. These were Alsace, Angoumois, Anjou, Armagnac, Artois, Aunis, Auvergne, Barrois, Basques, Bearn, Berry, Bigorre, Blasois, Boulonnois, Bourbon-nois, Bresse, Bretagne, Burgundy, Cambresis, Champagne, Couserans, Dauphiny, Forez, Foix, Franche Comte, French Flanders, Gascony, Gevasidan, Guienne, French Hainault, 1sle of France, Languedoc, Limosin, Lorrain, Lyonois, Marche, Maine, Marsan, Navarre, Nivernois, Normandy, Orleanois, Per-che, Perigord, Picardy, Poitou, Pro-yrnce; Querci, Rouerdne, Rousillon, Shintonge, Soissonnois, Touraine, Ve-lay, and Vermandois. All these pro-vinces were divided into districts, which had their particular names. The air of France is said to be peculiarly mild and wholesome. The soil in many places is excellent, though in others the heat in summer entirely consumes the verdure; and these parched spots are scarce found capable of producing rye and chesnuts sufficient for the maintenance of the poor people who inhabit them. It must be owned, how-ever, that agriculture was never well understood in this country. France in general is not a mountainous country; though its houndaries on the land side are the high ridges called the Alps, which separate it from Italy, the Pyrenees which divide it from Spain, and mount Jura which separates it from Swisserland. Besides these, there are the Cevennes, in the pro-vince of Languedoc, and Mount Dor

It was intended for a communi-cation between the ocean and Mediterranean, to afford a more speedy pas-sage for the French fleet; but did not answer the purpose. The greatest part of the fuel used by the inbabitants of this kingdom is wood; which in the or this kingdom is wood; which in the northern parts is scarce, which proves very distressing to the people. In other places, however, there are large forests, particularly those of Orleans, which cover an extent of 14,000 acres. In Alsace there are mines of silver and copper, but too expensive to be brought; but there are minea of various metals in other parts, and coal is likewise met with in some provinces; there are several quarries of excellent stone, and a kind of a gem named the Twoquoise is met with in Languedoc. the situation of France in the year 1789, when the revolution commenced, since which time it has been in such an unsettled state, as renders it impossible to give a true representation of the state of that country. It cannot be imagined that we can here minutely trace the progress of the French revolution. For a particular history of the events of that period, we must refer to more copious histories. On ac-count of the deranged state of the finances Louis XVI. was induced to con-voke an assembly of the notables, and afterwards the states general, who had not assembled since 1614. These consisted of the nobility, clergy, and the third estate or the commons, who were all mingled in one assembly. In the mean time it was reported that Piris was surrounded by an armed force. Notwithstanding this, on the removal of the popular minister, M. Neckar, in July 1789, a dreadful insurrection ensucd in Paris; the military refused to fire upon the people; the formidable Bastile was captured by the citizens; the governor, and some other obnoxious persons, were beheaded, and their heads carried about in horrid triumph on poles; in a word, eight weeks after on poies; in a word, eight weeks after the opening of the states general on the fifth of May, a revolution was ef-fected, which then excited astonish-ment, and since that period even ter-ror and alarm in all Europe. On the 17th of July, the king visited the Hotel de Ville in Paris, and surrendered himself, as it were, to his people. From that moment, from being an absolute monarch, he became one of the most imited in Europe. The national assembly, now triumphant, proceeded to the most extraordinary measures. They abolished nobility and the whole feudal system, and, confiscating the possessions of the clergy, rendered them dependant for support, on a pubstate; and all the monasteries were suppressed. In October, in consequence of another dreadful riot at Versailles, the king, the royal family, and the national assembly, were removed to Paris. The king was now, in fact, a state prisoner treated with the formalities appendant to royalty, but watched in all his motions with the utmost circumspection. From this accusers, prosecutors, and judges, is less fine, and the sea coasts are not so irksome situation he attempted to well supplied with fish. Such was escape in June 1791, with the queen, his sister, the dauphin, and the prin-cess his daughter. He had almost cess his daughter. He had almost reached the frontiers, when he was arrested at Varennes, and conducted back to Paris. The national assembly completed a new constitution, which was accepted by the king in Septemwas accepted by the king in september of the same year, when a new national assembly was elected. But it was impossible that the king could long submit to the insults, which as they were not punished, seemed to be sanctioned by the national assembly. Some of their decrees which were quite contrary to the spirit of the New Constitution he refused to sanction. This refusal concurring with other circumstances excited the most violent tumults among the profligate populace of Paris. Innumerable libels issued from the press, full of the most mali-cious and absurd calumnies against the king, queen and the royal family, whom the Jacobin faction endeavoured by the vilest arts to render odious to by the vilest arts to render editions to the people. At last in August 1792, the mayor of Paris, at the head of a deputation from that city, appeared at the bar of the national assembly, and demanded the deposition of the king. Before they could deliberate on this demand, a dreadful insurrection ensu-ed; the Thuilleries, the royal resi-dence, was attacked; the Swiss guards were defeated and massacred; and the king and the royal family took refuge in the national assembly. That body instantly decreed the suspension of the executive power in the hands of the king, and the convocation of a national convention. The king and national convention. The king and his family was conveyed to a house in Paris, called the Temple, and there kept in close confinement, with circumstances of the most humiliating degradation. Between the prison and the grave of a deposed sovereign, the distance, it has been observed, is not very, remote. The convention met on the 21st of September, and instantly decreed the abolition of royalty, and the fornation of a republic on the principles of liberty and equality. In December following, they decreed, December following, they decreed, that the king should be tried before them. The trial accordingly took place; n.d this tribunal, exercising at once the incompatible characters of accesses a precent of the property of the condemned the unfortunate monarch; negociation for peace. Rastatt was who, in pursuance of their sentence, the place appointed for a congress of publicly beheaded, in the Place de la Revolution, lately called the Place de Louis XV. on the 21st of January 1793. All Europe exclaimed against the injustice and cruelty, not to say the impolicy, of this proceeding. Pow-ers, hitherto neutral in the war, were eager to take an active part in it; and the new republic had to contend with the principal powers of Europe. After the murder of the king, France be-came a prey to the most afflicting ca-lamities. The people either enslaved by bloody tyrants or oppressed by a lawless mob, harassed by proscriptions, arbitrary imprisonment, massacres, confiscations, submitted patiently to every new oppression, the nobility, clergy and men of landed property, being robbed of their estates, have been either brought to the scaffold; or been obliged to seek safety in poverty and in exile. The country has been wasted by the fury of contending factions; its fertile plains and populous cities desolated by civil war and polluted with blood. With respect to the war, it may be sufficient to state, in general that after four campaigns, in which great reverses of fortune were experienced, the French nation displayed against the combined powers such wonderful energy and resources, that, before the conclusion of 1795, they were in the entire possession of Savoy and of the Austrian and Dutch Nether lands, and the whole of Holland. In Spain, Italy, and Germany, they had niade such progress as to procure a peace with Prussia and Spain, and form an alliance with the United Provinces. Their commerce, however, was ruined: their finances were sunported by a vast emission of compulsive paper currency, and by plunder and confiscation; their armies which fought with the ardour of enthusiasm were recruited by despotic requisi-tions. The campaign of 1796 was carried on with various success. In Scutember they met with a reverse of fortune, and were driven from almost all their newly acquired dominions. The army under Bonaparte were more sucressful; they defeated the Imperia-deputies from the states of Germany. During this negotiation the French employed themselves in executing other ambitious enterprises. Under pretence of an insult offered to their ambassador at Rome, they declared war against the Pope, whose capital they took and plundered, and whose government they overturned. They likewise obtained possession of Mentz, They blockaded Ehrenbretztein, and forced that important fortress to surrender, Intent upon plans of aggrandizement they sent a formidable fleet and army to Egypt, who overran that country with uninterrupted success till their progress was stopped at St. John D'Acre by the gallant efforts of Sir Sidney Smith. The emperor having now formed alliance with the emperor of Russia determined to submit no longer to the injuries and insults of the French. Hostilities were accordingly commenced, when the French gained some advantages. They were, however, under general Jourdan completely defeated by the archduke Charles, and forced to recross the Rhine. The Austrians in Italy were afterwards joined by the Russians under Suwarrow.

The French were vanquished in repeated engagements, and were finally driven out of Italy. The emperor of Russia has since withdrawn from the confederacy, and the campaign of 1800 has terminated unfavourably for the allies by the fatal battle of Marengo. allies by the fatal battle of Marengo. The internal government is at present directed by Bonaparte, who rules with despotic sway. How long the tyrant will remain in his present insecure situation is a question difficult to determine, and indeed foreign to this work. The geographical division of the country, however, requires to be noticed. By the first legislative assembly France was divided into dispartments, and these departments were subdivided into districts, cantons, and municipalities. The names of the were subdivided into districts, cantons, and municipalities. The names of the departments, by the constitution of 1795, are Ain, Aisne, Allier, Alps Upper, Alps Lower, Ardeche, Ardennes, Arriege, Aube, Aude, Aveiron, Calvados, Cantal, Charente, Charente Lower, Cher, Correct, Cote d'Or, Cresse M. It is governed in spirituals by the bishop of Lau-Freise, a fortified town of Provence in France, now in the department of rance, now in the department of rance is a council, over which an avoyer presides. Its situation is very extraordinary, for only the W side is near ground, and all the rest is built upon rocks and precipices, several parts of which are accessible only by stairs and ladders. Three miles from this town is a celebrated hermitage, cut in a rock, which contains a church and steeple, a vestry, a kitchen, a large and it Roma. It derives its name from the coolness of the air, and fresh verdure of the fields around. In its neighbourhood are situate some of the mast sanne, who resides here, and in tempobourhood are situate some of the most the steeple, which is 70 feet high above

Friendly Islands, a group of islands in the South Pacific Occan, so named by cap's Cook, in 1773, on account of the andship that appeared to subsist near the German Ocean. It is because the control of the control of

among the inhabitants; and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, a Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1643, and gave the names of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Captain Cook explored the whole cluster, which he found to consist of more than 20 islands, the principal of which are Tongataboo, or Amsterdam; Eacowe, or Middleburg; Annamooka, or Rotterdam; Hapaee, and Lefouga. The first, which is the largest, lies in 174 46 W, lon. and 21 9 S lat. The general appearance of these islands convey an idea of the most exuberant fertility; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are very and a species of fig with narrow pointed leaves. On closer examination, they are almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest productions of nature; such as breadfruit and cocoa-nut trees, plantains, yams, sugar-canes, and a fruit like a nectarine. The stock of quadrupeds is scanty; but they received from captain Cook some valuable additions, both to the animal and vegetable king-dom. Their domestic fowls are as large of those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and parroquets of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society Isies. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter for an endless variety of shell-fish. These islands are all inhabited by a race of people, who cultivate the earth with great industry; and na-ture, assisted by a little art, appears no where in greater splendour. Agricul-ture, architecture, boat-huilding, and fishing are the employments of men; to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth.

Gandicatta, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, remarkable for a strong fortress, and a diamond mine near it.

Ganges, a large and celebrated river of Asia, which has its source in two springs, on the W side of Mount Kentaiffe, in Thibet. There two streams take their course westward, inclining considerably to the N, for a course of about 300 miles, when meeting the about 300 miles, when meeting the great ridge of Mount Himmaleh, they turn to the S, in which course they unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges. This great body of water now forces a passage through the ridge of Himmalch, at the distance of 100 miles below the place of its first approach, and, sapping its very foundation, rushes through a ca-vern, and precipitates itself into a vast basin which it has worn in the rock, at the higher foot of the mountains. The Ganges thus appears, to incurious spectators, to derive its original springs from this chain of mountains. The mind of superstition has given to the mouth of the cavern, the form of the head of a cow; an animal held by the Hindoos in a degree of veneration, almost equal to that in which the Egyptians held their god Apis. From this second source (as it may be termed) of the Ganges, its course becomes cus-terly, through the rugged country of Siringur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes from this mountainous tract in which it has wandered 800 miles. From Hurdwar, where it gushes thro' an opening in the mountains, and entera Hindoostan, it flows with a smooth na-vigable stream thro' delightful plains, during the remainder of its course to plains, it receives 11 rivers, some of the old marche of Brandenburg. It has which are equal to the Rhine, and none smaller than the Thames, besides as many of lesser note. In the annual inundation of this immense river, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 miles in width anothing appearing but villages and trees, excepting very rarely, the top of an elevated spot, the artificial mound of some descrited village, appearing like an is-land. The rise of the water, is, on an average, 31 feet. In a word, it is, in every respect, one of the most beneficial rivers in the world, diffusing plenty immediately by means of its living productions, and secondarily by enriching the lauds, affording an easy conveyance for the productions of its borders, and giving employment to many thousand boatmen.

Geneva, an ancient, large, and populous town, capital of a republic of the same name, near the confines of France same name, where the Rhone issues in two large narrow channels, which soon after unite. This river divides the city into two unequal parts. Geneva, which lies partly in the plain on the horders of the lake, and partly on a gently ascent, is irregularly built. It is the most populous town of Swisserland, containing 24,000 souls. The treaty of alliance which Geneva contracted with Bern and Friburgh, in 1526, may be considered as the era of its liberty and independence; for, not long after, the dukes of Savoy were deprived of the authority which they possessed over this city; the bishop was expelled; a republican form of government was establised, and the reformation introduced. In 1584, Gene-va concluded a treaty of perpetual al-liance with Zurich and Bern, by which it is alhed with the Swiss cantons, During the greater part of the last century, to the year 1789, the history of Geneva contains little more than a narrative of contests between the arishistory of which would require a volume to relate. It may suffice to observe here, that the years 1768, 1782, and 1769, were distinguished by great revolutions; and that, by the last, the constitution was wisely modelled into a mean between the too popular form established in 1768, and the too aris-tocratic form established in 1782. The houses of Geneva are lofty; and many, that stand in the trading part of the city, have areades of wood, which are raised even to the upper storics. These areades, supported by pillars, give a gloomy appearance to the street, but are useful to the inhabitants in proteeting them from the sun and rain. Playing at eards, or drinking at public houses is not permitted; but they exercise their militia, play at bowls, and have other diversions on Sunday; where, however the duties of the day, during the hours appropriated to divine during the noirs appropriated to divine service, are observed with the utmost decorum. In 1794, by the intrigues of the French faction, a revolution or insurrection was brought about, resembling in miniature that of France, by which much mischief was done, and many of the principal inhabitants

Geneva, Lake of, a magnificent expanse of water, in swisserland, which, from the city of Geneva to Villeneuve, extends 54 miles in length; and its breadth io the widest part, is 12. is in the shape of a crescent, of which Swisserland forms the concave, and Savoy the convex part. Savoy affords a rude and awful boundary of aspiring Alps, craggy, and covered with the ice of ages. From Geneva to the environs of Lausanne, the country slopes, Virons of Lausanne, the country stopes, for a considerable way, to the margin of the lake, and is enriched with all the varieties that nature can bestow. The long ridge of the Jura, fertile in pasturage, and varied with woods, backs this beautiful tract. Near Lausanne, the banks rise considerably, and form a charming terrace. A few miles beyond that town is a rapid descent. Near Vevay, hegins a plain, which is continued far beyond the end of the lake, but contracting by the approach of the mountains, toward the water; the colour of which is extremely beautiful and clear; and at a distance seems of a lovely and at a distance seems of a lovely blue. Georgia, a beautiful country of Asia, called by the Persians Gurgistan, and by the Turks Gurtshi. It is one of the seven Caucasian nations, in the countries between the Black Sea, and the Caspian, and comprehends the ancient lberia and Colchis. It is bounded on the N by Circassia, on the E by Dag-

new Russian government of Caucasus. Georgia is as fertile a country as can be seen; the bread is as good here as in any part of the world; the fruit of an exquisite flavour, and of different sorts; no place in Europe yields better pears and apples, and no place in Asia better poinegranates. The country abounds with cattle, venison, and wild fowl, of all sorts; the river Kur is well stocked with fish; and the wine is so rich, that the king of Persia has al-ways some of it for his own table. The inhabitants are robust, valiant, and of a jovial temper; great lovers of wine, and esteemed very trusty and faithful; endowed with good natural parts, but for want of education very vicious. The women are so fair and comely, that the wives and concubines of the king of Persia and his court are for the most part Georgian women. This country formerly abounded with great cities, as appears not only from its history, but from the ruins of many of them still visible, which show that they must have been very large, opulent, and magnificently built. These were all destroyed by the inundations of northern barbarians from mount Caucasus, as the Alans, Huns, Suevi, and some others, so much noted in history for their strength, courage, and con-quests. The latest division of this country is into nine provinces; five of which form what is commonly called the kingdom of Georgia; and four the kingdom of Georgia; and four compose the kingdom or principality of Imeritia. The hills are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chesnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes. From these is annually made as much wine as in progression for their results. wine as is necessary for their yearly consumption; the remainder are left to rot on the vines. Cotton grows spontancously, as well as the finest European fruit-trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The vallies afford the finest pasturage in the world; the rivers are full of fish; the mountains abound in minerals; and the climate is delicious; so that nature appears to have lavished on this country every production that can contribute to

That for the purposes of navigation; the part of Georgia which is laid out in for the purposes of navigation; the Black Sea, by which commerce and ci-vilization might be introduced from Europe, has been till lately in the ex-clusive possession of the Turks; the rade of Georgia by land is greatly ob-structed by the high mountains of Cau-casus; and this obstacle is still increased, by the swarms of predatory nations, by which those mountains are inhabited. The Georgians are Christians of the Greek communion, and appear to have received their name from their attachment to St. George, the tutelary saint of these countries. Their dress nearly resembles that of the Cossacks; but men of rank frequently wear the habit of Persia. Travellers accuse the Georgians of drunkenness, superstition, cruelty, sloth, avarice, and cowardice; vices which are every where common to slaves and are every where common to slaves and tyrants, and are by no means peculiar to the natives of this country. The de-scendants of the colonists, carried by Shach Abbas, and settled at Peria, near Ispahan, and in Masenderan, have changed their character with their government; and the Georgian troops, employed in Persial against the Affemployed in Fernia against the Amphans, were advantageously distinguished by their docility, their discipline, and their courage. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossi, and Armenians. These last are Ossi, and Armenans. Incee has are found all over Georgia, sometimes mixed with the natives, and sometimes in villages of their own. They speak among themselves their own language, but all understand and can talk the Georgian. Their religion is partly the Armenian, and partly the Roman Ca-tholic. They are the most oppressed of the inhabitants, but are still distinguished by that instinctive industry which every where characterizes the island lies between 38 13 and nation. Beside these, there are in Georgia considerable numbers of Jews, Gepping, an imperial town of some having villages of their own, and others mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartar inhabitants, but never with the Ossi; they pay a small tribute above that of the natives. It seems to abound with bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. The valleys were covered with snow; and the only vegetation observed, was a bladed grass, growing in tufts; wild burnet; and a plant, like meas, which sprung from the rocks. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast. This island lies between 38 13 and 35 34 W

It has several fine cities, castles, palaces, and seats, and is more populous than France. Charlemagne, the son of Pepin, and king of France, was the founder of the German empire in the year 800 of the Christian ara, being then sovereign of Italy, great part of Spain, and the S of Germany. The empire was divided among Charlemagne's descendants, and the novcreign of Italy and Germany only retained the style of emperor, the princes of the empire being then his feodaries or vassals. The imperial crown continued heredited. The imperial crown continued hereditary for 300 years after Charlemagne, when the Pope of Rome, in order to diminish the emperor's authority, and ammins the emperors authority, and increase his own, stirred up the German princes to alter the constitution, and make the imperial dignity elective. So that during the mutual struggles between the head of the church and the empire, for superiority, several sove-reign states were erected in Italy and Germany, independent of either. The emperors, after the breaking of the heemperors, after the breaking of the hereditary line, were at first elected by the body of the people; but the nobility, and great officers of state, observing that this gave occasion to endless confusion, excluded the people from their share in the election and assumed the right of chusing the emperor themselves; and at length the number of electors was reduced to seven, namely, the archibishops of Mentz, Triers, Cologne, the king of Bohernia, the duke of Saxony, the prince palatine of the Rhine, and the marquis of Brandenburch; but and the marquis of Brandenburgh; but upon the palsgrave Frederick incurring the ban of the empire, the duke of Bavaria was added as an eighth elector, and the duke of Hanover since that made the ninth. But though the imperial crown was elective, the house of Austria found means by the count of Hapsburg to continue it in their family upwards of '300 years, till upon the failure of the male issue of Austria, in the emperor Charlea VI. the elector of Bavaria was crowned emperor in 1742, who, contending with Maria Theresa queen of Hungary, and daughter to the and the murquis of Brandenburgh; but npwards of 300 years, till upon the failure of the male issue of Austria, in the emperor Charlea VI. the elector of Bavaria was crowned emperor in 1742, who, contending with Maria Theresa queen of Hungary, and daughter to the said Charles, for the hereditary dominions of Austria, he brought himselfinto great distress, ruined his country, and after a short reign, died in his ca-

The nine above mentioned electors now chuse an emperor, when the imperial throne is vacant, unless a king of the Romans hath been elected in the preceding reign, who succeeds of course. The emperor is the fountain of honour in Germany, disposing of all places and dignities both civil and military, except those that are hereditary, litary, except those that are hereditary, as the great chancellor, treasurer, sword-bearer, cup-hearer, which are only honorary posts with little or no profit. The inhabitants are excellent mechanics and chemists, yet among the latter have arisen several pretenders to the grand elixir; as among the former, several projectors have pretended to have found out the perpetusl motion. The invention of printing and gunpowder is generally ascribed to the Germans, and they have also brought clocks, watches, swords, locks, and fire-arms to very great perfection. The manufactures of tin-plates or white iron they have entirely monopolized. They are reputed good painters, engravers, enamellers, and engineers. Their forcign trade they carry on with great success, by means of the rivers Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Weser, and the Baltic Sea; more particularly from Hamburg, Lubeck, Bremen, Stetin, &c. and by land with Italy, Switzerland, France, and Holland. Some stretch several leagues in length, that of des Bois, in particular, is more than 15 miles long, and above three in its greatest breadth. The Lower Glaciers do not as is generally imagined, communicate with each other, they mostly stretch in a trans-verse direction, and are bordered at the higher extremity by inaccessible rocks, and on the other extends into the cultivated vallies. The thickness of the ice varies in different parts. M. de Saussure found its general depth in the Glacier des Bois from 80 to 100 feet; but questions not the information of those who assert, that in some places, its thickness exceeds even 600 feet. But in those parts where the plane on which they rest is horizontal, or only gently inclined, the surface of the ice is nearly uniform: the chasms are but few and narrow, and the traveller crosses on foot, without much difficulty. The surface of the ice is not so slippery as that of fro-zen ponds or rivers; it is rough and granulated, and is only dangerous to the passenger in steep descents: it is not transparent, is extremely poreus and full of small bubbles, which sel-dom exceeds the size of a pea, and consequently is not so compact as common ice. It is scated on the N side of the Clyde, over which are two stone bridges; one of them an elegant modern structure of seven arches, 500 fect long, and 32 wide; it was completed in 1772. The streets are clean and well paved, and several of them intersecting each other at right angles, produce a very agrecable effect. The four principal streets, which intersect each other at right angles, divide the city nearly into four equal parts; and the different views of them from the cross, or centre of intersection have an air of magnificence. Glasgow was once an archiepiscopal see. There are 11 churches in Glasgow, three of which are contained in the ancient cathedral, which is considered one of the most entire pieces of Gothic architecture in Scotland. St. Andrew's is the fin-est piece of mordern architecture in the city. It was begun in 1739 and finished in 1756. Glencoe, Vale of, a valley in Scotland, near the head of Loch Etive, in Ar-gyleshire, noted for the cruel massacre of its unsuspecting inhabitants in 1691. King William had published a procla-mation, inviting the Highlanders, who had been in arms for King James II. to accept a general amnesty before the 1st of January, on pain of inilitary exeast or January, on pain or mintary exe-cution after that period. Alexander Macdonald, laird of Glencoe, on the last day of December, went to Fort Wil-liam, the governor of which referred him to a civil officer. This made it the first of January before he could ruch Inverary, where he surrendered to the sheriff, who, however, accepted his submission, in consideration of his c fer to surrender the day before. The laird having taken the oaths, returned to Glencoe, in full assurance of safety; to Gience, in full assurance of safety; notwithstanding which, he, and his whole clan, were butchered, on the 15th of February, and the whole of that beautiful valley rendered a scene of massacre and desolation.

Good Hope, Cape of, the southern extremity of Africa, in 18 23 E lon. and 34 29 S lat. discovered by the Portuguese in 1493. The Dutch have here built a neat town and fort, which rises in the midst of a desert, surrounded by black and dreary mountains. From the shipping, the town appears pleasantly situated, but at the same time small. On landing, however, you are surprised, and agreeably disappointed, to find it not only extensive, but wel'-built, and in a good style; the streets spacious, and intersecting each other at right angles with great precision. The only landing place is at the E end of the town, where there is a wooden quay running some paces into the sea. To this place excellent water is conveyed by pipes, which makes the watering of ships both easy and expeditious. Close to the quay, on the left hand, stands the castle and principal fortress: a strong extensive work, having excellent accommodations for the troops, and for many of the civil officers belonging to the company. Within the gates, the company have their principal stores; which are spacious as well as convenient. of the slaves is as little regarded here as in the colonies of other European states: in other respects, they are treated with humanity, and are lodged and boarded in a spacious house, where they are likewise kept at work. where they are likewise kept at work. Another great building serves as an hospital for the sailors belonging to the Dutch East India ships which touch here. It is situate close to the Company's gardens, and is an honour to that commercial body, and an ornament to the town. The convalescents have free access to these gardens, where they enjoy the benefit of dens, where they enjoy the benefit of a wholesome air, perfumed by the fra-grance of a number of rich fruit-trees, and odoriferous shrubs, plants, and flowers. The inhabitants of the Cape, though in their persons large, stout, and athletic, have not all that phlegm about them which is the characteristic of Dutchmen in general. The ladies are lively, good-natured, familiar, and gay. The heavy draught work about the Cape, is chiefly performed by oxen, which are here brought to an uncommon degree of deality and usefularmon degree of doeility and usefulness. It is not uncommon to see 16 and sometimes 18 in one of their teams, which the slaves have in the most perfect subjection. One of them places him-self on the top of the load, and with a tremendous long whip, which he is o-bliged to hold with both his hands, manages those creatures with inexpressi-ble address. The inhabitants, in general, travel in a kind of covered waggon, drawn by oxen, which better suit the roughness of the country than more elegant vehicles; but the governor, and some of the principal people, keep coaches, which are much in the English style, and are drawn by six horses. The mountains behind Cape Town are, the Table Mountain, which is the highest; the Sugar-loaf, so named from its form; the Lion's Head, Charles Mount, and James Mount, or the Li-on's Rump. That part of it which the Europeans have any knowledge of is bounded on the W by Baffin's Bay, on the S by Davis's Straits, and on the E by the northern part of the Atlantic Ocean. It is a very mountainous country, and some parts of it so high that they may be discerned 30 leagues off at sea. inland mountains, hills, and rocks, are covered with perpetual snow; but the low lands on the sca-side are clothed with verdure in the summer season. The coast abounds with inlets, bays, and large rivers; and is surrounded with a vast number of islands of different dimensions. In a great many places, however, on the eastern coast especially, the shore is inaccessible by reason of the floating mountains of icc. The principal river, called Baal, falls into the sea in the 64th degree of latitude, where the first Danish lodge was built in 1721; and has been navigated above 40 miles up the country. East Greenland was for a long time con-sidered as a part of the continent of West Greenland, but is now discoverbetween 76° 46' and 80° 30' of north latitude, and between 9° and 20° of east longitude. It was discovered by Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, who called it Groenland; supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595, it was again visited by William Barentz and John Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called the country Spitzbergen, or Sharp Mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds. The only quadrupeds of either W or E Greenland, are deer, white bears, and foxes. To its frozen seas, the English and other nations repair annually, in the proper season, to fish for whales. England, there being nothing either in the soil or situation to render it otherwise. The soil throughout is excellent, and inferior to none, either for grain, fruit, or pasture, supplying the inhabitants plentifully with all the necessaries of life: but that by which it is distinguished from most others, is its fruit, especially apples, of which it produces such quantities, that the cy-der made of them is not only sufficient for their own consumption, though it is their ordinary drink, but also in a great measure for that of London and other parts. The county is well supplied with wood and water; for, besides lesser streams, there are the ridel, Arrow, Dare, and Monow; the last of which is large, and all of them are well stored with fish, particularly the Wye, which breeds salmon.

Hindoo-ko. See Himmaleh, Mount. Hindoostan, or India, a celebrated country of Asia, which in its most extensive signification, comprchends the tract situated between the Thibetian and Tartarian mountains on the N. the Indian Ocean on the S, the Burrampooter and the bay of Bengal on the E, and the Indian ocean and Persia on the W. But this country must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Decean, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper includes all the countries on the N of the River Nerbuddah, which bounds it on the S as far as it goes; Bengal and Bahar compose the remainder of its southern boundary. It is divided into eleven soubalis, the names of which are Lahore, Aroultan (including Sindy) Agimere, Delhi, Agra, Oude, Allakabad, Bahar, Bengal, Malwa, and Guzerat. A 12th soubab, named Qubul, was formed out of the countries contiguous to the W sources of the Indus, and three new ones out of the conquests of the Deccan; Berar, Can-duste, and Amednagur. The Deccan in its most extensive signification is applied to the whole region of Hindoostan Proper; in its more limited sense it means only the countries situated beit means only the countries situated between Hindoostan Proper, the Carratic, the W sea, and Orissa; that is the provinces of Candeish, Dowlatabad, Visiapour, Golconda, and the W part of Berar. The tract S of these, or the river Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does by no means warrant it. There is no known history of Hindoostan extant before the Mahometan conquests. The first irruption of the Mahometans wars first irruption of the Mahometans was in the year 1000. was the first of the line of Tamerlane | an independent state too, formed by the who mounted the throne of Hindoostan : but their government was not established till the reign of Achar his son. Babar was however the real founder of the Mogul dynasty; and from this event Hindoostan came to be called the Mogul empire. The illustrious Acbar, failed in his attack upon the Deccan; an attempt, in which many of his successors were equally unfortunate, and which tended, in the sequel, to the decline and dissolution of the empire. Acbar was succeeded by Jchangubue his son, who reigned 22 years. In his reign, in 1615, Sir Thomas Roe was sent as the first English ambassador to the emperor of Hindoostan; and the Portuguese had, by this time, acquired considerable settlements in Bengal and Guzerat. In 1660 Aurungzebe peace-ably ascended the throne after he had deposed his father and murdered or expelled his brethren. During his reign Hindoostan enjoyed the most profound peace it had ever known. The conquest of the Deccan employed the last years of his life, from 1678 to 1707 during 15 years of which time he was actually in the field. This dereliction of his capital for nearly 30 years occasioned great disorders there, and laid the foundation of many more. Under his reign the empire attained to its full measure of extent, see Major Rennel's memoir of a map of Hindoostan, p. lxiii. In a word, instead of finding the emperors attemping now the conquest of the Deccan, their empire was attacked by the powerful nizam of that country, through whose contrivance, Nadir Shah, the Persian usurper, invaded Hindoostan in 1738. By the intrigues of the Nizam and his party Mahomed Shah was induced to throw himself on the elemency of the invader, who en-tered Delhi, and demanded 30 millions sterling, by way of ransom. Tumults, massacres, and famine were the result; 100,000 of the inhahitants were massacred, and 62 millions of plunder were said to be collected. He evacuated Delhi, however, and left the Nizam in possession of the whole remaining power of the empire, which he sacrificed to his own views in the Decean, where he established an in-dependent kingdom. Mahomed Shah died in 1747, having seen the Carnatic and Bengal become likewise indepen-

Rohillas (a tribe from the mountains between India and Persia) on the E by the Ganges, within 80 miles of Delhi; and the kingdom of Candahar, erected by Abdalla, one of the generals of Na-dir Shah. Ahmed Shah, the son of Mahomed, succeeded; in whose reign the entire division of the empire took place; nothing remaining to the house place; nothing remaining to the house of Tamerlane but a small territory round Delhi, with the city itself (no longer a capital) exposed to depredations, massacres, and famines, by the contests of invaders. The last imperial army was defeated by the Robillas in 1749. The Jats, a Hindoo tribe, founded a state in Agra; Oude was seized by the grandfather of the present nabob; Allahabad, by Mahomed Kooli. The Mahrattas, besides their ancient domains in the Decean, obtained great part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and Orissa. The Mogul empire was now become merely nominal: and the emperors from this period, must be regarded as of no political consequence, otherwise than as their names and persons, were made use of, by different parties, to promote their own views. That the name and person of the emperor were of use, as retaining a considerable degree of veneration among the bulk of the people in Hindoostan, is evident, from the application made, at different times, for grants of territory, forcibly obtained by the gran-tee, but which required the sanction of the lord paramount, to reconcile the transaction to the popular opinion. Another instance of the effect of this opinion is, that the coin throughout the whole tract, known by the name of the Mogul Empire, is to this day struck in the name of the nominal emperor. Ahmed was deposed in 1753, and was succeeded by Allunguire, who was deposed and murdered in 1760. He was succeeded, however, by his son Shah Aulum, who was alternately de-Snan Addum, was was arcmately de-pendent on the contending powers, and more particularly upon the English, who obtained from him a grant of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Oris-sa, together with the Northern Circars on condition of paying him 360,000*l*, per annum by way of tribute. It was his misfortune however, that he could not accommodate his mind to his circumstances, and put himself into the hands dent, under their respective nabobs; of the Mahrattas, who promised to scat

It was his er, that he could not mind to his circummind to his circummself into the hands who promised to seat him on the throne of Delhi. He thus lotted to them. These are held sacred tost all he had acquired with the British, and has ever since continued a general character of the Bramins, as kind of state prisoner; living on the produce of a trilling domain, allowed him out of veneration for his ancestors, that I have conversed with, (says Mr. and for the use of his name. In the sequel, he was dethroned and murdered by the Robillas. These being defeated by Madajee Sindia, a Mahratta chief, his son, Jewan Bucht, was permitted to succeed him, and to live in the same deplorable state of degradation. The whole of Hindoostan in 1792, consisted of six principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some inferi-or states. These six principal states, were, the British, the Poonah Mahrat-tas, the Berar Mahrattas, Nizam Ally, soubah of the Deccan; Mysore, or the dominions of Tippoo Sultan; and the Seiks. The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, Benares, the Northern Circars, the Jaghire in the Carnatic, Bombay, Salsette, the district of Midbonnay, sasette, the unstreet of whit-napour in Orissa, and some considera-ble cession from Tippoo Sultan, in 1792. Since 1792, war broke out with Tip-poo, who was defeated, and his capital taken by assault, together with an immense quantity of plunder, Tippoo lost his life in the attack. By his fall, a great extent of territory will accrue to the British, and their power will be secured on a stable and permanent foun-dation. The allies of the British, who may be considered as dependent upon them, are the nabobs of Oude, and the Carnatic, and the rajahs of Travancore and Tanjore. For the five other principal states, see their respective names, and for an account of some inferior independent states, see Bundela, Ballo-gistan, the Jats, Rohilcund, &c. According to Mr. Orme, the inhabitants of Hindoostan are computed at 10,000,000 Mahometans, and 100,000,000 Hindoos. The Hindoos or Gentoos, are of a black complexion; their hair is long, their person straight and elegant. Their limbs are finely proportioned; their fin-gers long and tapering; their courte-nances open and pleasant. They differ materially from all other nations, by be-ing divided into tribes or casts. The four principal tribes are, the Bramins, Soldiers, Labourers, and Mechanics.

These are subdived into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are Bramins of various degrees of excellence, who have the care of religion al-

Scrafton) acknowledge the errors that Supreme Being, and laugh at the idolarry of the multitude, but insist upon the necessity of working upon the weak-nesses of the vulgar."—The generality of the Bramins are as ignorant as the laity. Such as are not engaged in worldly pursuits, are a very superstiworldy pursuits, are a very supersuitions, innocent people, who promete charity as much as they can, both to man and beast; but those who engage in the world are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; for, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and being exempt from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice (under the Gentoo governments) they run into much greater excesses. The Soldiers are commonly called Ra-The Soldiers are commonly called Ra-jah-Poots; that is, descended from Rajahs. They are much more robust than the rest, have a great share of courage, and a nice sense of military honour, which consists, among them, in fidelity to those they serve. Fight-ing is their profession; they readily enter into the service of any that will have them and will follow whether the pay them, and will follow wherever he leads; but, should their leader fall in the battle, their cause is at an end, and they run off the field, without my stain to their reputation. The English East India Company have many battalions of India Company nave many battations or them in their service; they are called Sepoys, and are clothed and disciplined in the European manner. The Labour-ers include farmers, and all who culti-vate the land. The Mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade: these again are subdivided into each profession. Besides these, are the Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse of all the tribes. They are a set of unhappy wretches, destined to misery from their birth. They perform all the vilest offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away everything that is polluted.
All the different tribes are kept dis-ry deviation from these points subjects milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. them to be rejected by their tribe, renders them polluted for ever, and obliges them, from that instant, to herd with the Hallachores. "The members of each cast," (says Dr. Robertson) adhere invariably to the profession of their forefathers; from generation to generation, the same families have fol-lowed, and will always continue to follow one uniform line of life. To this may be ascribed that high degree of perfection conspicuous in many of the Indian manufactures; and though vencration for the practices of their ancestors may check the spirit of invention, yet, by adhering to these, they acquire such an expertness and delicacy of hand, that Europeans, with all the advantages of superior science, and the aid of more complete instruments, have never been able to equal the execution of their workmanship. To this circum-stance also Dr. Robertson ascribes a striking peculiarity in the state of Hindoostan, the permanency of its institu-tions, and the immutability in the manners of the inhabitants. Hence it is, that the Hindoos admit no converts, nor are themselves ever converted, whatever the Roman missionaries may pretend. The Hallachores may be here excepted, who are glad to be admitted into any society where they are treated as fellow creatures. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese, in respect to the antiquity of their nation; and the doctrine of transmigration is one of their distin-guishing tenets. Their institutions of religion form a complete system of su-perstition, upheld by every thing which can excite the reverence of the people. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious cere-monics splendid; and the absolute do-minion which the Bramins have obtained over the minds of the people, is sup-ported by the command of the immense revenues, with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends to a thousand particulars, which, in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, enstom, or fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages,

The warrior cast may eat of the of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior casts may eat poultry and fish, but the inferior easts are prohibited from esting flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spiceries and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. Their happiness consists in the solaces of domestic life; and they are taught by their religion, that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man, who does not entirely separate himself from the world, from a principle of devotion. Their religion permits them to have several wives; but they seldom have more than one; and their wives are distinguished by a decency of demeanour, a solicitude in their families, and a fidelity to their vows, which might do honour to human nature in the most civilized countries. The custom of wemen burning themselves on the death of their husbands is still practised in Hindoestan. In some parts of India, as the Carnatic, it is asserted, that they dig a pit, in which is deposited a large quantity of combustible matter, which is set on fire, and the body being let down, the victim throws herself into the flaming mass. In other places, a pile is raised extremely high, and the body, with the wife, is placed upon it, and then the whole is set on fire. In the Code of Gentoo Laws, translated by Mr. Halhead, is the following passage concerning this practice? "It is proper for a woman, after her husband's death, to burn herself in the fire with his corpse. Every woman, who thus burns herself, shall remain in paradise with her husband three crores and fifty lacks of years, by destiny. If she can-not burn, she must, in that case, pre-serve an inviolable chastity: if she remain always chaste, she goes to para-dise; and if she do not preserve her chastity, she goes to hell." This code of laws, with their sacred books, the Veidam and the Shastah, were written and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee (a kind of imperfect butter) concise. Hindoostan, toward the N

Hinzuan, Joanna St. one of the Com-ora islands in the Indian Ocean. This island is a proper place of refreshment for the East India ships, whose crews, when ill of the scurvy, soon recover by the use of limes, lemons, and oranges, and from the air of the land. The town where the king resides is at the east side of the island; and though it is three quarters of a mile in length, it does not contain above 200 houses. Their principal houses are built with dle, and are only one story high. All the other houses, or rather huts, are slightly composed of plastered reeds; and yet the mosques are tolerable struc-tures, very neat and clean in the inside. The horned cattle are a kind of buffaloes, having a large hump on their shoulders, which is very delicious eating; but there is not one horse, mule, nor ass, in all the island .- The originwar with the Arabian interiopers, who established themselves on the scacoast by conquest, and are about 3000 in number. They get their supplies of arms and ammunition others, being of a copper complexion, with better features, and a more animated countenance. They consider a black streak under the eyes as ornamental, and this they make every day, with a brush dipt in a kind of ointment. The custom-of chewing the betel-nut prevails here, as in most of the eastern countries, and answers to the fashion of taking snuff with us, except that with them it is more general. No one is without a purse or bag of betel; and it is looked on as a piece of civility to offer it to your friend when you meet him or take leave. Their religion licenses a plurality of wives and likewise concubines. They are extremely jealous of them, and never allow any man to see the women; but female stran-gers are ad aitted into the harem; and some English ladies, whose curiosity has led them there, make favourable reports of their beauty, and richness of apparel displayed in a profusion of or-naments of gold, silver, and beads, in form of necklaces, bracelets, and ear-rings; they wear half a dozen or more of each through holes bored all along the outer rim of the ear. The men seem stone, with a quadrangle, in the mid- not to look with an eye of indifference on our fair country women, notwith-atanding they are of so different a com-plexion. They are very temperate and abstemious, wine being forbidden them by the law of Mahomet; and are frequent in prayer, attending their mosques three or four times a day. These people profess a particular regard for our nation, and are very fond of repeat-ing to you, that Joanna-man and Enal natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are generally at war with the Arabian interlopers, who established themselves on the scacoast by conquest, and are about 3000 in number. ed by frequent cataracts, cascades, woods, rocks, and rivulets, intermixed, form the landscape. Groves are seen extending over the plains to the very edge of the sea, formed principally by the palm and ecco-anut trees, whose long and naked stems leave a clear and uninterrupted passage beneath; while their tutied and overspreading tops form a thick shade above, and keep off the scoreling rays of the sun. In the interior part of the island, surrounded by mountains of a predigious height, and about 15 miles from the town, is a sacred lake, half a mile in circumference. The adjacent hills covered with lofty trees, and the solitune of the place seem more calculated to inspire religious awe, than any sanctity that is to be discovered in a parcel of wild ducks inhabiting it, which are deified and worshipped by the original natives. Holland, the largest of the seven Total Provinces, is bounded on the W by the German Ocean, or North sea; to the E by the Zuyder-sea, the province of Utrecht, and part of Gelderland; to the S by Dutch Brabant and Zealand : and to the N by the Zuyder-sea. Its greatest extent from N to S, including the island of Texel, is about 90 English miles; but from E to W its extent varies from 40 to 25. To defend it against the sea, dykes have been erected at an immense expence, and innumerable canals cut to drain it. as being naturally very low and marshy. Some parts of the province are very fruitful in corn; but the greater parts consist of rich pastures, wherein are kept large herds of kine, which supply them with incredible quantities of but-ter and cheese. Of the latter, that of Edam, in North Holland, is highly es-teemed. The many rivers and canals that intersect the provinces are of great advantage to its commerce, but contribute to render the air foggy and unwholesome. There is a communication by water betwixt almost every town and village. Towards the middle also of the province are great numbers of turf-pits. It is so populous, that the number of inhabitants is computed at 1,200,000. In point of cleanliness no country surpasses, and few come up to it, especially in North Holland, and that even in the villages. It has considerable linen and woollen manufactures, and numerous docks for the building of ships. The French effect-ed, by the aid of a severe frost, the entire conquest of this province in January 1795; and till the era of a general pacification, no account of any permanent government can be given. The established religion is Calvinism; but all religious sects are tolerated. Amsterdam is the capital.

Holland, one of the divisions of Lin-

and 15 of the third class in its district, | sembles the province of that name upon the continent, in most respects, being low and marshy, with the sea on one side, and canals running through it, that it must either have had its name from thence, or on the same account. On the E it has what the ancient geographers call Æstuarium Metaris, now the Washes, which are overflowed at high water, and part of Cambridgeshire on the S. The lower part of it is full of bogs and marshes, and has huge banks to defend it against the sea and land floods. The ground is so soft, that horses are worked unshod; and it produces plenty of grass, but little corn.
The whole tract seems to have been gained from the sea; and is divided into Upper and Lower, the latter of which was impassable; but since the fens have been drained, the lands are grown more solid, and the inhabitants sow cole-seed upon them to their great profit. Though there are no stones to be found in or upon the ground, yet most of the churches are of stone. They have no fresh water but from the clouds, which is preserved in pits, but if these are deep, it soon turns brack-ish; and if they are shallow, they soon become dry.

Holland, New, the largest known land that does not bear the name of a continent: it extends from 10 30 to 43 42 S lat. and from 110 30 to 153 30 E lon. so that its square surface considerably exceeds that of Europe. When this vast island was first discovered, is uncertain. In the heginning of last century, the N and W coasts were traced by the Dutch: the S extremity was discovered by Tasman, in 1642.
Captain Cook, in 1770, explored the E and N E from 38° S, and ascertained its separation from New Guinca; and, in 1773, captain Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Cook's, completed the circuit. In that part of it, which Tasman distinguished by the name of Van Diemen's Land, and which was visited by Furneaux in 1773, and again by Cook, in 1777, the land is, for the most part, of a good leight, diversified with hills and vallies. Holstein, a dutchy of Germany, bounded by the German ocean on the W; the Baltic or the gulf of Lubeck, on the E; the dutchy of Mecklenburg on the S E; that of Brennen, with the river Elbe, on the S W; and Lauen-burg, with the territory of Hamburg, on the S. Its greatest length is about 80 miles, and its breadth 60. A great part of this country consists of rich marsh-land, which being much exposed to inundations both from the sea and rivers, dykes have been raised at a great expence to guard and defend them. The pastures in the marshes are so rich. that cattle are bred in vast numbers and fattened in them, and great quantities of excellent butter and cheese made of their milk. They are also very fruitful in wheat, barley, pease, beens, and rape-seed. In the more barren, sandy, and heathy parts of the country, large flocks of sheep are bred and fed: nor are orchards wanting, or woods; especially of oak and beech; nor turf, poultry, game and wild-fowl. Nothwithstanding this country's advantageous situation for commerce, there are few manufactures and little trade in it. Hamburg and Lubec supply the inhabitants with what they want from abroad; from whence and Altena they export some grain, malt, grots, starch, buck-wheat, pease, beans, rape-seed, butter, cheese, sheep, swine, horned cattle, horses, and fish. The manu-factures of the dutchy are chiefly car-ried on at Altena, Kiel, and Gluckstadt. Denmark now possesses, the whole dutchy; the imperial cities ex-

This province, and the peninsula of Juca-tan, on the other side of the bay of Honduras, do not, like the other territories of Spain, in the New World, derive their value either from the fertility of their soil, or the richness of their mines; but they produce in greattheir mines; but they produce in great-er abundance than any part of Ameri-ca, the logwood-tree, which, in dying some colours, is so far preferable to any other material, that the consump-tion of it in Europe is considerable, and it is become an article in commerce of great value. During a long period, of great value. During a long period, no European nation intruded upon the Spaniards in these provinces, or attempted to obtain any share in this branch of trade. But, after the conquest of Jamaica by the English, one of the first objects of the settlers on that island was the great profit arising from the logwood trade, and the facility of wresting some portion of it from the Spaniards. Their first attempt was made at Cape Catoche, the SE promontory of Yucatan. When most of the trees near this cape were felled. the trees near this cape were felled, they removed to the island of Trist, in the bay of Campeachy; and, in later times, their principal station has been in the bay of Honduras. The Spaniards alarmed at this encroachment, endeavoured by negociation, remonstrances, and open force, to prevent the English from obtaining any footing on that part of the American continent. But, after struggling against it for more than a century, the disasters of an unfortu-Madrid, in 1763, a reluctant consent to tolerate this settlement of foreigners in the heart of its territories. Hottentots, Country of the, a large region in the S extremity of Africa, extending N by W, from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of Orange River, and from that cape, in an E N E direction, to the mouth of the ENE direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish River, which parts it from Caffraria. It lies between the tropic of Capricorn and 35° S lat. and is bounded on the west, south and east by the Atlantic, Southern, and Indian Oceans, and on the N by regions very little, if at all explored. The Hottentots are as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender, and the characteric are more slender; and the characteris-tic mark of this nation is, the smallness of their hands and feet compared with the other pasts of their body. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, re-sembling that of an European who has the jaundice in a high degree. There are not such thick lips among the Hot-tentots as among their neighbours, the Negroes, the Caffres, and the Mozambiques; and their mouth is of the middling size, with the finest set of teeth imaginable. to that of the poppy mixed with spices. The women who are ambitious to please, not only grease all the naked parts of their body, to make them shine but braid or plait their hair as an additional elegance, and adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. A Hottentot lady thus bedizened, has exhausted all the arts of her toilette; and however unfavourable nature may have been, with regard to shape and stature, her pride is wonderfully flattered, while the splendour of her appearance gives her the highest degree of satisfaction. But with all this vanity, they are not devoid of modesty, for the females of this nation cover themselves much more scrupulously than the men. They seldera content themselves with one covering, but almost always have two, ard very often three. These are made of wellgreased skins, and are fastened about their bodies with a thong, almost like the aprons of our ladies. The outershow, and frequently adorned with glass beads strung in different figures. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded. Neither their ear, nor nose are adorned with any pendent ornaments, as they are among other savages; but the nose is sometimes, by way of greater state, marked with a black streak of soot, or with a large spot of red lead; of which latter, on high days, they like wise put a little on their cheeks. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs. Most of these are made of thick leather straps, cut in a circular shape; and these have given rise to the received notion, that the Hottentots wrap guts about their legs, in order to eat them occasionally. Rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, are considered as more genteel than those of leather; but the genteer than those of reather; but the girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. The Hot-tentots seldom wear any shoes. What they do wear, are made of undressed leather, with the hairy side outward; they are rendered soft and pliable, by 24 feet in diameter, and so low, as savages are entirely naked; but some scarcely possible for a middle-sized of them cover their body with the skin man to stand upright. But neither the lowness of the hut, northat of the door from the shoulder downward as far as

which is barely three feet high, can be considered as any inconvenience to a Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in stooping and crawling on all-fours, and who is, at any time, more inclined to lie down than stand. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The Hottentot, inured ... it from his infancy, sees it hover round him, without feeling the least inconvenience arising from it to his eyes; and rolled up, like a hedge hog snug in his skin, he lies in the midst of this cloud, till he is now and then obliged to peep out from beneath his sheep-skin, in order to stir the fire, or perhaps to light his pipe, or turn the steak he is broiling over the fire. The order of these huts in a craal or clan, is most requently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. Such are the Hottentots in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope. In 1778, lieutenant Paterson visited a Hottentot village in the small Nimiqua Land, in the N W part of the country, it consisted of 19 liuts and about 150 inhabitants. In the and about 150 inhabitants. The ensign of authority, worn by their chief, was a cane with a brass top, given to him by the Dutch East India Company. The Hottentots amused them, part of the night, with music and dancing; their visitors, in return, treated them with tobacco and dacka, or hemp leaves, which they prefer even to tobacco. Their music was produced from flutes, made of the bark of trees. from flutes, made of the bark of trees, of different sizes. The men form themselves into a circle, with their flutes; and the women dance round them. Among other tribes of Hottentots are the Boshmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, NE of the Cape, and are enemies to the pastoral life. Their weapons are poisoned arrows, which shot from a poisoned arrows, which shot from a small bow, will hit a mark with a tolerable degree of certainty, at the distance of 100 paces. Their habitations are not more agreeable than their manners and maxims. Like the wild beasts, being beat and moistened, and are very tance of 100 paces. Their labitations are adapted to their wandering pastoral life. They are merely huts, resembling bushes and elefts in rocks, serve them a round bee-hive or a vault, from 18 to

As ignorant of sleep promiscuously agriculture as apes and monkies, they are obliged, like them, to wander over hills and dales after certain wild root; berries, and plants, which they ear raw. Their table, however, is composed of several other dishes, among which are caterpillars, termites, locusts, grasshoppers, snakes, and spiders. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange River, were observed by licutenant Paterson, in his journey to the N W in 1779. Their huts were loftier, and thatched with grass. Their mode of living is in the highest degree wretched, and they are apparently the most dirty of all the Hottento tribes. Their dress is com-posed of the skins of seals and jackalls the clesh of which they cat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part of it remains; and in this manner, it sometimes affords them sustenance for half a year, though in a great measure decayed and putri-fied by the sun. They smear their skin with the oil, the odour of which is so powerful, that their approach may be perceived some time before they appear in view. With respect to the Hottentots, in general, none of them seem to have any religion, nor do they app ar willing to receive any instruction. All of them, however, have the firmest opinion of the power of magic; whence it might be inferred, that they believe in an evil being, but they pay no reli-gious worship to him, though from this source they derive all the evils that happen; and among these they reckon cold, rain, and thunder. So monstrously ignorant are they, that the Boi 1opprobrious epithets, and threaten to assault the lightning. Even the most intelligent of them could not be convinced by Dr. Sparrman, that rain was not always an evil, and that it would be an unhappy circumstance, were it never to rain. They seem, however, to have some idea of a future state, as they reproach their friends, when dead with leaving them so soon, admonishing them to behave henceforth more properly; by which they mean, that their deceased friends should not come back again and haunt them, nor allow themselves to be made use of by wiz-

The whole of this country is naturally barren and mountainous; but the industrious Dutch have overcome all natural difficulties, and it produces, not only a sufficiency of all t' a necessaries of life for the inhabitants, but also for the refreshment of all the European ships that touch here. The Dutch consider the year as divided into two seasons, which they term monsoons, the wet monsoon, or winter, begins in March; and the dry one, or summer, in September. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; and to these may be added the Bannat of Temeswar, incorporated into the kingdom of Hungary in 1778. Hungary formerly in-cluded Transylvania, Sclavonia, Dalma-tia, Servia, and Walachia. The printa, Servia, and Walachia. The principal rivers are, the Danube, Save, Drave, Tresse, Maros, Raab, and Waag. The air is very unhealthy, occasioned by the lakes and bogs, insomuch that a sort of plague visits them every three or four years. It abounds in all the precessing of life. in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tockay, is excellent. There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron, and they have such plenty of game, that hunting is allowed to all. The Hungarians are said to be of a sanguine, choleric temper, and somewhat fierce, cruel, proud, and revengeful. They have been always reputed good soldiers, being much more inclined to arms, martial exercises, and hunting, than to arts, learning, trade, or agriculture. The in all the necessaries of life, and the exercises, and hunting, than to arts, learning, trade, or agriculture. The nobility affect great pomp and magnificence, and are much addicted to feasting and carousing. The men in general are strong and well proportioned. They shave their beards, but leave whiskers on the upper lip; wearing fur caps on their heads, a close-bodied coat girt with a sash, with a short cloak or mantle over all, so contrived as to be buckled under the arm, and leave the right hand at liberty. Their horse are called hussars, and their foot heydukes. Buda is famous for its mineral waters and baths, and is the capital of Lower Hungary, and Presburg of the upper.

Jamaica, an island of the West Indies, discovered by Columbus, in 1494. It lies in the Atlantic Ocean, 30 leagues W of Hispaniola, nearly the same distance S of Cuba, and 145 leagues N of Carthagena, on the continent of South America. It is of an oval figure, 150 miles long, and 40 broad in the middle. It contains upwards of 4,000,000 acres, and is divided by a ridge of hills which run lengthwise from E to W. Here numerous fine rivers take their rise from both sides, yet none of them are navigable, even for barges; but some are so large, that the sugars are carried upon them in canoes from the remote plantations to the sesside; some of them run under ground for a considerable space, and particularly the Rio-Cobre and the Rio-Peara. The mountains, and great part of the island, are covered with woods, which look green at all times of the year; for here is an vailey, on the Rio Cobre, seven miles wiley, on the Rio Cobre, seven miles N W of Port Passage, on the bay of of every hill, and forming groves and Port Royal. Jersey, an island in the English Chan-nel, 18 miles from the coast of Normandy in France, and 84 S of Portland in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English; but is still governed by the ancient Norman laws. It is 30 miles in circumference, and difficult of acccss, on account of the rocks, sands, and forts erected for its defence. It contains 12 parishes; and the chief town is St. Helier, in the S part of the island. It is well watered with rivulets, well stocked with fruit trees, and has a noted manufacture for woollen stockings and caps. The soil is fer-tile though there is a great deficiency of arable land for corn on account of the vast quantity of apple trees planted here for cider, 24000 hogsheads having been made here in one year. In 1781, a body of French troops landed on this island, surprised the lieuten-aut governor, made him prisoner, and compelled him to sign a capitulation: but major Pierson, the commander of the English troops, refused to abide by this forced capitulation, and attacked the French in the town of St. Helier. Indies, West, the name given to a great

Cuba is the most western, and Barbadoes the most eastern of these islands. When Colum-bus discovered them in 1492, he considered them as part of those vast regions in Asia, comprehended under the general name of India, to reach which, by a W course across the Atlantic O-cean, had been the grand object of his voyage; and this opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of an agreement, granted to Co-lumbus, upon his return, gave them the name of Indies. Even after the error which gave rise to this opinion was deteeted. and the true position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of the West Indies is given by all the people of Europe to these islands, and that of Indians to the inhabitants, not only of these islands, but of the conti-nent of America. They are likewise called the Caribbee Islands, from the aborigines of the country, and the sea in which they lie is called the Carrib-bean Sea. By the French, they are called the Antiles; and nautical men distinguish them, from the different same character they have maintained invariably in all subsequent contests with the Europeans. The British islands are Jamaica, Barbadoes, St. Christopher, Antiguta, Anegada, Nevis, Montferrat, Barbuda, Anguilla, Dominicia, St. Vincent, Granada, the Bahama Islands; and part of the Virgin islands with Tobago, Martinico, and St. Lucia, conquered from the French, the first in 1793, and the other French, the first in 1793, and the other two in 1794. Cuba, Porto Rico, Tri-nidad, and Margarita, belong to the Spaniards, who have the eastern part of Hispaniola. The French have Guadaloupe, Marigalante, Descada, and the possession of Hispaniola is disputed between the French and Mulattoes. The Dutch have St. Eustatia, Cura-cao, Saba, and St. Martin; the Danes, St. Thomas, St. Croix, and part of the Virgin Islands; and the Swedes, St. Bartholomew.

Indians of North and South America, the original natives of these two vast continents; of whom it is observable, that there is a natural distinction between the inhabitants of the temperate zones and those of the torrid; and that accordingly, they may be divided into two great classes. The one com-prehends all the North Americans, from the river St. Lawrence to the gulf of Mexico, together with the people of Chili, and a few small tribes toward the extremity of the southern contithe extremity of the southern conu-nent. To the other belong all the in-habitants of the islands, and those set-tled in the provinces, which extend from the isthmus of Darien almost to the southern confines of Brasil, along the E side of the Andes. In the former, which comprehends all the regions of the temperate zone in America, that are inhabited, the human species appears manifestly to be more perfect, the natives are more robust, active, intelligent, and courageous; and have defended their liberty with persevering fortitude against the Europeans, who distinguish them, from the different courses taken by ships, into the Lee-ward-and Windward Islands, which see. The name of Caribbee should properly be confined to the smaller islands, lying between Porto Rico and Tobago. These were inhabited by the Caribs, a fierce race of men, nowise resembling their timid neighbours in the larger islands. Columbus was a people of Chili, though early invaded, subdued the other rude nations of A-merica with the greatest ease. The Spaniards, and have set bounds to their bit of cloth about the middle, a shi spanarus, and nave set pounds to their encrowchments I whereas in the warmer regions, men are more feeble in their irame, less vigorous, in the efforts of their mind, of a gentle but dastardly spirit, more enslaved by pleasure, and more sunk in indolence. Accordingly, their interests, area, statements, and more sunk in indolence. cordingly, it is in the terric zone that the Europeann have no tellectually established their dominion over Americay and, if saternl ribes there, still enjoy independence, it is either because they have never how a mucked by an enemy already satisfied with conquest, and possessed of larger territories than he was able to occupy, or because they have been saved from oppression by their remote and inaccessible situation. This distinction, however, although so conspicuous, is not universal. Of the manners of the North American Indians, a general idea may be formed, by an account of those who inhabit the countries to the E of the Missippi. These consist of 28 different nations; the principal of which are the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Chactaws, Creeks, Delawares, the six Nations, the Shawanese Hurons, Illinois, &c. Allowing about 700 to a nation or tribe, they will contain, in all, 20,000 souls, and may furnish between 4 and 5000 warriors. These Indians take a great deal of pains to darken their complexion, by annointing themselves with grease, and lying in the sun. They also paint their face, breast, and shoulders, of various colours, but generally red; and in many parts of their bodies they prick in gun-powder in very pretty figures. Their features are well formed, especially those of the women. They are of a middle stature, their limbs clean and straight, and scarcely any crooked or deformed person is to be found a-mong them. They shave, or pluck the hair off their heads, except a patch about the crown, which is ornamented with beautiful feathers, beads, wamears are bored, and stretched by a thong down to their shoulders. They are wound round with wire to expand them, and adorned with silver pendants, rings, and bells, which they likewise wear in their noses. Some of them will have a large feather through the cartillage of the nose; and those who can afford it, wear a collar of bit of cloth about the middle, a shirt of the English make, on which they bestow immumerable stitches to adorn it, a sort of cloth boots and mockasons, which are shoes of a make peculiar to the Indians, ornamented with porcupine quills, with a blanket thrown over all, complete their dress at home ; but when they go to war, they leave their trinkets behind. There is little differonce between the dress of the men and women, excepting that a short petticoat, and the hair, which is exceedingly black and long, and clubbed behind, distinguish some of the latter. Except the head and eyebrows, they pluck the hair, with great diligence from all the parts of the body, especially the looser part of the sex. Their warlike arms are guns, bows and arrows, darts, scalp-ing knives, and tomahawks; this is one of their most useful pieces of fieldfurniture, serving all the offices of the hatchet, pipe, and sword. They are exceedingly expert in throwing it, and will kill at a considerable distance. The world has no better marksmen with any weapon. They will kill birds flying, fishes swimming, and wikl beasts running. They are not so ignorant as some suppose them, but are a very intelligent people, quick of apprehension, sudden in execution, subtle in business, exquisite in invention, and industrious in action. They are of a very gentle and amiable disposition to those they think their friends, but as implacable in their enmity; their revenge being completed only by the entire destruction of their enemies. They are very hardy, bearing heat, cold, hunger, and thirst, in a surprising manner; and yet no people are more adicted to excess in eating and drinking, when it is in their power. The follies, nay mischief they commit, when inebriated, are entirely laid to the liquor; and no one will revenge any injury, (murder excepted) re-ceived from one who is no more himself. Among the Indians all men are equal, personal qualities being most esteemed. No distinction of hirth, or rank, renders any man capable of do-ing prejudice to the rights of private persons; and there is no pre-eminence from merit, which begets pride, and which makes others too sensible of their own inferiority. Their public wampum, a silver breast plate, and conferences show them to be men of ggine of tash tish as perfet colors with gram pretition and affice with his or traiting the color with the colo

One of their towns called Old Chelicothe, is built in the form of a parallelogram; and some of genius; a. form of a parallelogram; and some of their houses are shingled. A long council-house extends the whole length cut asunder, serve them for pails, cups, and dishes. The accounts of travellers concerning their religion, are various; and although it cannot be absolutely affirmed that they have none, yet it must be confessed very difficult to define what it is. All agree that they acwhat it is. All agree that they acknowledge one Supreme God, but do not adore him. They have not seen him, they do not know him, believing him to be too far exalted above them, and too happy in himself to be concerned about the trifling affairs of poor mortals. They seem also to believe in a future state, and that after death they shall be removed to their friends, who

They have their festivals and other rejoicing days, on which they sized described. on which they sing and dance in a ring, taking hands, having so painted and disguised themselves, that it is difficult to know any of them; and after enjoying this diversion for a while, council-house extends the whole length of the town, where the king and chiefs of the nation frequently meet, and consult on all matters of importance, whether of a civil or military nature. Some huts are built by setting up a frame on forks, and placing bark against it; others of reeds and surrounded with clay. The fire is in the middle of the wigwam, and the smoke passes through a little hole. They join reeds together, by cords run through them, which serve them for tables and boiled, the friends and near neighbors of the patient invited, and having first thrown tobacco on the fire, and covered it up close, they all sit down in a ring, and raise a lamentable down in a ring, and raise a lamentable cry. They have brass kettles and pots to oil their food. Gourds or calabashes, cut anuder, serve them for pails, cups, nrst sent about, every one taking a bit, and giving a loud croak, in imitation of crows. They afterward proceed to eat all the buck, making a most harmonious, melancholy song; in which strain their music is particularly excellent. As they approach their towns, when some of their people are lost in war, they make creat lamentations for war, they make great lamentations for their dead, and benr them long after in remembrance. Some nations abhor adultery, do not approve of a plurality of wives and are not guilty of theft; but there are other tribes that are not and too happy in himself to be concerned about the trifling affairs of poor mortals. They seem also to believe in a future state, and that after death they shall be removed to their friends, who have gone before them, to an elysium, or paradise. The Wyandotts, near Detroit, and some others, have the Roman catablic religion introduced a mong them by missionaries. These have a church, a minister, and a regular burying ground. Many of them appear zealous, and say prayers in their families. These, by their acquaintance with white people, are a little civiliz-

gives the bride a deer's foot, and she, the heart with horror, wherever men in return, presents him with an ear of have been accustomed, by mild institucorn, as cablems of their several du-ties. The women are very slaves to the men ; which is a common case in rude, unpolished nations, throughout the world. They are charged with being at liberty to move round it. All pre-revengeful, but this revenge is only do-sent, men, women, and children, rush ing themselves justice on those who injure them and is seldom executed but in cases of murder or adultery. Their king has so power to put any one to death by his own authority ; but pluck out their nails by the roots, and the murderer is generally delivered up to the friends of the deceased, to do as but their authority extremely limited. No people are a more striking evidence of the miseries of mankind in the want of government than they. Every chief, when offended, breaks off with a party, settles at some distance, and then commences hostilities against his own people. They are generally at war with each other. When they take captives in war, they are exceedingly cruel, treating the unhappy prisoners in such a manner, that death would be preferable to life. They load them with burdens, and when they arrive at their towns they must run the gauntlet. In this, the savages exercise so much ernelty, that one would think it impossible they should survive their sufferings. Many are killed; but if one outlives this trial, he is adopted into a fa-mily as a son, and treated with pater-nal kindness. And if he avoids their suspicions of going away, he is allowed the same privileges as their own people. But sometimes their prisoners are destined to be tortured to death, in order to satiate the revenge of their conquerors. While their lot is in suspense, the prisoners appear altogether unconcerned about what may befal them; they talk, they eat, they sleep, as if there were no danger impending: and when the fatal sentence is intimated to them they receive it with an unaltered countenance, raise their death-song, and prepare to suf-fer like men. The victors assemble as for like men. The victors assemble as to a solemn festival, resolved to put tions, to respect their species, and to melt into tenderness at the sight of human sufferings. The prisoners are tied naked to a stake, but so as to be upon them like furies; some burn their haibs with reduct irons, some mangle their bodies with knives, others tear their fiesh from their bones, rend and twist their sinews; and such to the friends of the deceased, to do as is their cruel ingenuity in torturing, they please. When one kills another, that, by avoiding to touch the vital his friend kills him, and so they con- parts, they often prolong this scene of tinue until much blood is shed; and at auguish for several days. In spite of last the quarrel is ended by mutual all their sufferings, the victums continpresents. Their kings are hereditary, he to chant their death-song with a firm voice, they boast of their own exploits, they insult their tormenters for their want of skill to avenge the death of their friends and relations, they ware them of the vengeance that awaits them on account of what they are now doing and excite their ferocity by the most provoking reproaches and threats. To display undaunted forti-tude in such dreadful situations, is the noblest triumph of a warrior: to avoid the trial by a voluntary death, or to shrink under it, is deemed cowardly and infamous. If any one betrays symptoms of timidity, his tormentors dispatch him at once with contempt, as unworthy of being treated like a man. Animated by these ideas, they condure without a groun, what it seems almost impossible that human nature should sustain. Weary at length, of contending with men, whose constancy they cannot vanquish, some chief, in a rage, puts a period to their suffer-ings, by dispetching them with his dagger or his club. The people of South America gratify their revenge in a manner somewhat different, but with the same unrelenting rancour. Their prisoners, after meeting at their first entrance, with the same rough reception as among the North Americans, are not only exempt from injury, but treated with the greatest kindness. They are feasted and caressed, and some beautiful young women are ap-pointed to attend and solare them. to a solemn festival, resolved to put the fortitude of the captives to the utmost proof. The moment he falls, the wo-nen seize the body, and dress it for the feast. They besmear their chil-dren with the blood, in order to kindle in their bosoms a hatred of their enemies, and all join in feeding upon the flesh with amazing greediness and ex-ultation. Wherever this practice prevails, captives never escape death; but they are not tortured with the but they are not tortured with the same cruelty as among tribes which are less accustomed to such horrid feasts. The Indians of South Ameri-ca, immediately under the Spanish government, although the most de-pressed order of men in the country which belauged to their appresses. pressed order of men in the country which belonged to their ancestors, are now far from being treated with that rigour and cruelty which was laid to the charge of the first conquerors of that continent. They are no longer considered as alaves; on the contrary, they are reputed as freemen, and entitled to the privileges of subjects. A certain tribute is, indeed, imposed upon them, and certain services required; but these are all under due regulations of policy and humanity. The Indians who live in the principal towns are entirely subject to the Spanish laws and magistrates; but, in their own villages, they are governed by caziques, some of whom are the descendants of their of whom are the descendants of their ancient lords; others are named by the Spanish viceroys. These regulate the petty affairs of the people under them, according to maxims of justice, transmitted to them by tradition. To the Indians, this jurisdiction, lodged in such friendly hands, affords some consolation; and so, little for still the solation; and so little formidable is this dignity to their new masters, that they often allow it to descend by here-ditary right. For their further relief, ditary right. For their further relief, the Spanish court has appointed an officer in every district, with the title of Protector of the Indians, whose duty is to assert the rights of the Indians; to appear as their defender in the courts of justice; and to set bounds to the exactions of his countrymen. Tigriu, a province of the Russian empire, which now forms the government of St. Petersburg. It is 130 miles long and 50 broad; bounded on the N by the river Neva and the guilf of Finland, on the E and S by the government of Novogorod, and on the W by that of Livonia. The czar Peter the Great wrested it from the Swedes, and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nystadt in 1721. The Ischortzi have for a long time followed agriculture, as well as the other Finns. Their economy is an ill-chosen mean betwixt that of the Russians and that of the Finns. They assemble in small villages, of five or ten farms each; and live miserably in small dirty huts. Their household furniture indicates the greatest penury; and their manner of living is squalid and disgusting. Notwithstanding that the land each family occupies is of tolerable extent, their agriculture and their cattle are equally poor. Their inclination to equally poor. Their inclination to to sell their stock, and the very corn they have saved for sowing the fields; the money which that produces they squander away in a very short time, and are thus reduced to the most deplorable indigence. In this state they behold their cattle die of hunger and cold with the most perfect indifference. Some of them, however, imitate the Russian villagers, who are better managers, more at their ease, and in hetter circumstances. With their poverty and disorderly life, the Ingrians are a stupid, suspicious, thievish race, and dangerous from their phlegmatic and piliering temperament. Those who live along the road to Riga greatly re-semble the people we call gypsics; are vagahonds like them, and calculate nativities, and tell fortunes. Such, as come to Petersburg for those fraudulent purposes would scarcely be known from the gypsies about London. It is but a few years ago, that a whole vil-lage of these wretches were banished to a desert island in the gulf of Fin-there was a monastery.

The houses are built of land, for murders and other crimes committed on the highway. The boys from several villages together frequently clope at once; and there is every reason in the world to believe that this is for very bad purposes. The dress of the men is exactly like that of the Finn boors ; but the habit of the women betrays a vanity, which, considering the poverty of this people, and the tyranny which their husbands and fathers exercise over them, may pass for luxury. When a man is in-clined to marry, he buys himself a girl, and celebrates his nuptials. All the way to the church they are accompanied by two women in veils, who sing as they go compositions, if one may call them so, totally destitute of common sense. No sooner is the marriage ceremony performed, than the husband begins to treat his wife with the utmost severity, and thenceforward keeps her under strict discipline; though not always with the greatest attention to justice. She is often beaten for the faults of the children, and sometimes for those of the domestics. The dead are buried by the priests of the profession to which they belong: but these superstitious people return to the grave under covert of the night, and, having taken up the sod, deposit eatables for their departed friend, which they renew during a fortnight or three weeks.

The country in gen-eral, is level and well watered with lakes and rivers : and the soil though rocky, is in most parts very good and extremely fertile in those places where it has been properly cultivated. It produces corn, pastures, hemp, and flax in great plenty; and there are so many cattle, that their beef and butter is transported into divers countries; and not only the English, but other slaps frequently come to be victualled here. The other commodities of Ireland are, wool, hides, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. Their principal manufacture is fine linen, which they have brought to great perfection, and their trade in it has greatly increased. Mines have lately been discovered in Ireland; several of them contain silver and lead. There are also copper mines, iron ore, excellent marble, porphyry, coals, and slates. The many secure and commodious harbours in this country, render its situation very favourable for foreign trade. The inhabitants of this kingdom have been rated at 3,000,000; but this it is probable is considerably under the real number, which cannot be less than 4,000,000, perhaps something more. The lower classes in this country are rude, ignorant, and uncultivated, and the greater part of them Roman catho-lies. The established religion is the lics. right to interfere in the judgments of their courts, or to make laws to bind Ireland in time to come. The perilons situation of Great Britain at that period left her no choice, all the demands of lett her no choice, all the demands of Ireland were therefore agreed to in a bill passed by the British legislature soon after. These concessions, great and important as they were, did not prove satisfactory; the total repeal of all the disqualifications under which the Roman catholics laboured was demanded, and various schemes of parliamentary reform, were devised; the a-gitation of these topics served greatly to enflame the minds of the people, the breaking forth of the French revolution, and the introduction of its pernicious principles into Ireland, completed their discontent. A traitorous society was soon after formed, under the name of United Irishmen, which soon spread itself over the country; their pretended purpose was to obtain parliamentary reform, but their real views were to separate Ireland from Great Britain, and erect it into an independent republic, similar to and under the protection of France. The vigorous and active measures of government forced them into open rebellion before their schemes were fully ripe: the consequence was, that after great numbers of the insurg-ents were killed in various battles, the conspiracy was defeated, and tranquillity began gradually to be restored to the country. The consolidation of the emcountry. The consolidation of the empire by the union of both countries pire by the union of both countries secmed now to be the only thing wanting to impart prosperity and mutual security both to Great Britain and Ireland. Islay, or Ila, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S W of Jura. Its greatest length is 25 miles; its breadth 18. The principal village is Bowmore, which has a convenient harbour. The face of the country is hilly. Several mines are wrought to great advantage, particularly iron and lead ore. Here likewise are copper, emery, na-tive quicksilver, and black lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure Much corn and flax is raised here, and a great number of cattle exported. In this, and some of the neighbouring islands, multitudes of adders infest the heath On the N W side of the island is the cave of Sanegmore, which is a grotto, divided into a number of far-winding passages, sometimes opening into fine expanses; again closing, for a long space, into galleries, and forming a curious subterraneous labyrinth. There are also many other caverus, the haunts of numerous wild pigeons, that lodge and breed in them. The goats that feed among the rocks are so wild, that they are obliged to be shot like deer. Some vestiges of antiquity are on this island; particularly, the remains of a circular dry stone building, on the hill of Losset, near the sound of Islay.

king is two miles and a half in circumference. There are 160 mosques, 1800 large caravansaries, above 260 public baths, a prodigious number of coffee-houses, and very fine streets, in which are canals, planted on each side with trees. The streets are not paved; but always clean on account of the dryness of the air, for it seldom rains or snows here. The inhabitants were computed at above 1,000,000; but this kingdom having been long disstracted by civil wars, the principal towns are greatly depopulated. Is-palian has three large suburbs, called Juisa, Hasenbath, and Kebrabath. It is bounded by Carniola on the NE, and on all other sides by the The air is unwholesome especially near the coast; but the soil produces plenty of wine, oil, and pasture ; there are also quarries of fine mar-ble. One part of it belongs to the Vene-tians, and the rest to the house of Austria. Capo d'Istria is the capital. Italy, one of the finest countries of Europe, lying between 7 and 19° E Ion, and 38 and 47° N lat. On the N and N E it is bounded by Swisserland and Germany, on the E by the gulf of Venice, on the S by the Mediterranean, and on the W by that sea and France. Its figure bearing some resemblance to that of a boot. Its length from Aousta, in Savoy, to the utmost verge of Calabria, is 600 miles; but its breadth is very unequal, in some places nerr 400 miles, in others not above 25. It is the most celebrated country in Europe, having been formerly the seat of the Roman empire, and afterward, of that astonishing, universal usurpation, the spiritual dominion of the pope. Italy is divided into a great number of states, which differ much in extent minions of the king of Sardinia, nameof the Milanese and the Mantuan; and S of these, are Modena, Mirandola, and Reggio, belonging to the duke of Modena. West of these are the of Modena. West of these are the dutchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, whose sovereign is of the house of Bourbon. To the S of Parma, lies the republic of Genoa; and S E of this, that of Lucca. Hence ex-tends along the coast of the Mediter-ranean, the grand dutchy of Tuscany. The ecclesiastical State, or territory of the pope, les N E and E of Tuscany, between the gulf of Venice and the Methe several countries contained in it. In those on the N of the Appenuines it is more temperate, but on the S it is generally very warm. The air of the Campania of Rome, and of the Ferrarese, is said to be unhealthful; which is owing to the lands not being duly cultivated, nor the marshes drained. That of the other parts is generally pure, dry, and healthy. In summer, the heat is very great in the kingdom of Naples, and would be almost intolerable, if it was not somewhat alleviated by the sea-breezes. The soil of Italy in general is very fertile, being watered by a great number of rivers. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe, excellent silk in abundance, corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in some other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, mulberry-trees without number, figs, peaches, nectarines, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chesnuts, &c. This country also yields good pasture; and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, bulleloes, wild hoars, mules and horses. The forests are well stored with game, and the mountains yield not only mines of iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. but also gold and and importance. Juan de Puerto Rico, St. an island of the West Indies, 50 miles E of Hispaniola, and usually called Porto Rico. It is 100 miles long and 50 broad, and belongs to the Spaniards. It is full of very high mountains, and extremely fertile vallies, interspersed with woods and well watered by springs and rivulets. It produces sugar, rum, ginger, corn, and fruits, partly proper to the climate, and partly introduced from Spain; and there are so many cattle, that they often are killed for the sake of the skins alone. Here are a great number of uncommon trees, and there is a little gold in the N part of the island. It is commonly said, that the air is healthy, and yet, in the reign of queen Elisabeth, the earl of Cumberland, when he had taken this island, lost most of his men by sickness, and, on that account, was forced to abandon it. It is subject to storms and hurricanes, like the rest of these islands. The capital is of the same name. Lon. 67 4 W, lat. 18 17 N.

Juan Fernandez, an island in the S Pacific Ocean, lying in 83° W lon. and 33° S lat. 300 miles W of Chili. It is uninhabited, but is found extremely convenient to touch at and water. There are instances of two men living alone at different times on this island for several years; the one a Musquito Indian, the other Alexander Scikirk, a Scotchman, who having been left on shore, in this solitary place, by his cap-tain, lived here five years, till he was discovered by captain Rogers, in 1709. From this remarkable history, Daniel de Foe is said to have derived the hints which gave rise to his celebrated production. The Adventures of Robinson Crusse. This island is not quite 15 miles long and about six broad; its only safe harbour is on the N side. It is said to have plenty of excellent wa-ter, and to abound with a great variety of esculent vegetables highly antiscor-butic; besides which, commodore Anson sowed a variety of garden-seeds, and planted the stones of plums, apricots, and peaches, which he was, many wears afterwards, informed, had thriven greatly; and now, doubtless furnish a wery valuable addition to the natural productions of this spot.

Jura, Mount, a chain of mountains, which begins in the canton of Zuric, in Swisserland, extends along the Rhine into the canton of Soleure and the principality of Neuchatel, branches out to-ward the Pays de Vaud, separates that country from France, and continues beyond the frontiers of the Genevois as far as the Rhone. In various parts of the Pays de Vaud, this chain forms many elevated vallies; of thes the most delightful is the valley of the lake of Joux, upon the top of that part called Mount Joux; it is beauti-fully chequered with wood, arable, and pasture; and is watered by two picturesque lakes; the largest of which is called the lake of Joux, and the other, lake Brenet. This little vale is very populous, containing 3000 inhabitants; some employed in making watches, but the greater part in polishing crys-tals, granites, and marcasites. These parts are much infested with bears and wolves. The descent from this de-lightful vale, through a variety of hill, valley, wood, and lawn, affords a very extensive prospect of great part of the Pays de Vaud, the lake of Geneva, with its mountains, and the lake of Neuchatel.

They have thick lips, a small nose, a short chin; and their heard is scanty, and appears late. Their teeth are even and white. Their complexion is a reddish brown; generally indeed from the wind and sun, and their neglect of cleanliness, it is of a yellowish brown. Their cars are very large and promiuent ; their hair is black. Their knees always stand outwards, like a bow; this proceeds from their customary manner of sitting on their ankles, and their being almost constantly on horseback. Their senses of feeling and taste are dull : but those of smell, sight, and licaring, are wonderfully quick. The women are of the shame shape and make with the men, only the skin of their face is very clear, and of a wholesome white and red. Their standing character is rough, but less dissolute and base than they are commonly supposed to be. Their prevailing temperament is a mixture of the sanguine and the choleric; the melancholy is seldom uppermost. They have a good understanding, and a quick comprehension; cager after novelties; of a tractable and teachable disposition; sprightly, hospitable, ready to do kind offices, active, and vo-luptuous; very much attached to their masters, though of other nations, and not dispirited or dejected by their fickleness and ill-nature, but contented with their lot. Their women are lively, frank, agreeable and very industri-ous. The clothing of the men is en-tirely Oriental, and their heads are exactly Chinese. They wind linen about their feet, and draw their buskins over it, which are of black or yellow, or some other coloured leather. Their breeches are large and ample: their under garment is of light stuff with narrow sleeves, and a girdle, to which is suspended the sabre, a knife, and the implements for smoking tobacco. The Kamtschadales are for the most part of a low stature, with broad shoulders, large heads, long flat faces, flat noses, small eyes, thin lips, and short legs. The women have black eyes and eye-brows; their skin is rather delicate, of a lively red complexion, a pretty hand, and small foot, and they are in general very well made. The Kamtschadales have a lively imagination, a strong memory, and such a genius for imitation that they can copy with ease whatever they see. Poverty gives them no con-cern; and nothing but the calls of hunger can drive them to the chace; and then they seldom go so far but they can return to pass the night in the arms of their women. They care not how their meat is prepared, so, it does but fill their stomach; nor of what quality their liquor is, so it does but intoxicate them. Pleasure and inaction are their only objects; they therefore steal nothing but women and dogs, which formerly were the contin-ual causes of national war. They are cowardly and base to an excessive degree, gratifying their revenge only by the darkest and most secret means. As to the climate of this counties try it varies according to the situation of places. In the low flat land, and especially in the marshes, the air is heavy, moist and unhealthy; and yet not to such a degree as it has been sometimes represented; for, with a little care and caution, strangers, as well as natives, quickly reconcile their constitutions to the temperature even of these parts, and live in them without much inconveniency or apparent danger. But, in other, to be met with in its bounds; and in no shire are any of these soils more fertile than they are in this. The Weald yields variety of fine timber, particularly of chesnut; the middle part has very rich arable land, annually bearing every species of grain in immense plenty, and these excellent in their several sorts. There are also many beautiful orchards, which produce a variety of fine fruits, and more especially apples and cherries, which were introduced here from Flanders. The many rich commodities produced in this county, is the reason why most of our writers have represented it as in a manner void of manufactures which, however, as appears upon a strict and impartial examination, is very far from being the case. Of iron works there were anciently many; and there are still some, where kettles, bombs, bullets. cannon, and such like, are made. The principal rivers, besides the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. Maidstone is the county-

This country in general is well timbered; and such is the variety and beauty of the flowering shrubs and plants which grow sponing shrubs and plants which grow spon-taneously in it, that in the proper sca-son the wilderness appears in blossom. The accounts of the fertility of the soil in this country have in some in-stances exceeded belief, and proba-bly have been exaggerated. That some parts of Kentucky, particularly the high grounds, are remarkably good, all accounts agree. The lambs of the first rate are too rich for wheat, and will produce 50 and 60, and in some in-stances it is affirmed 100 bushels of good corn an acre. In common the land will produce 30 bushels of wheat rand will produce 30 business of wheat or rye an acre. Barley, oats, cotton, flax, hemp, and vegetables of all kinds common in this climate, yield abundantly. The old Virginia planters say, that if the climate does not prove too moist, few soils known will yield more moist, few soils known will yield more and better tobacco.—The climate is healthy and delightful, some few places in the neighbourhood of ponds and low grounds excepted. The inhabitants do not experience the extremes of heat and cold. Snow seldom falls deep or lies long. The winter, which begins about Christmas, is never longer than lies long. The winter, which begins about Christmas, is never longer than three months, and is commonly but two, and is so mild as that cattle can

Killarnes, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, otherwise cailed Lough Lean, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is six miles in length, and from three to four in breadth. On the side of one of the mountains, is O'Sullivan's Cascade, which fa'ls into the lake with a roar that strikes the timid with awe. The view of this sheet of water is uncommonly fine, appearing as if it were descending from an arch of wood, which overhangs it above 70 feet in height from the point of view. The islands are not so numerous in this as in the upper take; but there is one of uncommon beauty, called Innisfallen, nearly opposite O'Sullivan's Cascade. It contains 18 Irish acres: and the coast is formed into a variety of bays and promontories, skirted and crowned with arbutus, holly, and other shrubs and trees. The promontory of Mucrus, which divides the upper from the lower lake, is a perfect land of enchant-ment; and a road is carried through the centre of this promontory, which unfolds all the interior beauties of the place. Among the distant mountains, Turk appears an object of magnificence: and Mangerton's more lofty, though less interesting summit, soars above the whole. The passage to the upper lake is round the extremity of Mucruss, which confines it on one side, and the approaching mountains on the other. Here is a celebrated rock, called the Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes: the report of a sin-from two to three in breadth. It is almost surrounded by mountains, from which descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and affords an amazing variety of picturesque views. The cen-tre lake which communicates with the upper, is small in comparison with the other two, and cannot boast of equal variety; but the shores are, in many places, indented with beautiful bays, surrounded by dark groves of trees. The E boundary is formed by the base of Mangerton, down the steep side of which descends a cascade, visible for 150 yards. This fall of water is supplied by a circular lake near the sum. mit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch Bowl; which on account of its immense depth, and the continual overflow of water, is considered as one of the greatest curiosities in Killarney. One of the best prospects which this admired lake affords, is from a rising ground near the ruined cathedral of Aghadoe. In the several mountains adjacent to the lakes are still to be seen vestiges of mines of iron, lead and copper.

But the natives call it Nostka; the name now generally adopted by the English. Upon the seacoast, the land is tolerably high and level; but, within the island, it rises into steep hills, which have an uniform appearance. The trees, of which the woods are composed, are the Canadian pine, white cypress, and two or three other sorts of pine. In general, the trees grow here with great vigour, and are of a large size. About the rocks and borders of the woods were seen some strawberry plants, and raspberry, current, and gooseberry bushes, all in a flourishing state. The stature of the natives is, in general he-low the common standard; but their persons are not proportionably slender, being usually pretty plump, though not muscular. The women are, in general, of the same size and form as the men; nor is it easy to distinguish them, as they possess no natural fem-inine delicacies. There was not a single one to be found, even among those who were in their prime, who had the least pretensions to beauty or comeliness. The irregularity and confusion of their houses is far exceeded by their nastiness and stench. Every thing about the house stinks of trainoil, fish, and smoke; and every part of it is as filthy as can be imagined. In 1780, a small association of British merchants, resident in the East Indies, formed the project of opening a trade to this place, for supplying China with furs, and took measures, in 1788, to secure themselves a permanent settlement; but the Spaniards being jealous of the intrusion of the English into that part of the world, sent a frigate from Mexico to put an end to this commerce. The frigate captured two English vessels, and took possession of the settlement that had been formed upon the coast. The British ministry immediately ordered a powerful armament to give weight to their demand of reparation; but the affair was amicably terminated by a convention, in 1790.

high opinion of their country and constitution, are courageous, suspicious and revengeful; but, for the most part, laborious, sincere, susceptible of friendship, and faithful to their superiors. The Koriacs are divided according to their manner of living, into the settled and wandering, which are pretty equal in point of numbers. They speak a dif-ferent dialect, and for the most part do not treat one another as two bodies belonging to the same community, but as open and avowed enemies. The manners of the settled Koriacs are by far more gentle than those of the Nomades. They occupy the southern part of their country near the gulf Penschinskoi, and have 1 me settlements even in the very peninsula of Kamtschatka. dering Koriacs travel over the northern part of this country in the environs of part of this country in the environs of the river Anadir, near the Tschonkt-sches, and they often come as far as Kamtschatka. Their disposition is so wild and untractable, that it would be very difficult to bring them into any manner of subordination. The very suspicion of such a design would be very dungerous. The chief employments of the wandering Koriacs are the care of their rein-deer and the chase. Fish-Koningstuter, a town of Germany, of their rein-deer and the chase. Fish-seated in the territory of Brunswicking does not answer, as they are not ex-Wolfenbuttle. Lon. 11 7 E, lat. 52 25 pert at it. The poorest of them possess about fifty rein-deer, some have a hundred, the richest from one to two thou-sand. With these herds of rein deer they travel over their deserts and mountains, without any apprehensions of meeting with rivers or forests, so they do but find moss on the ground, that being all that is necessary for the subsistence of the rein-deer. They do not mik the female rein-deer, of course they have no such thing as cheese. Even the wealthiest of the Koriacs never kill one of these quadrupeds unnecessarily, unless it has some defect; their kitchen tends westward from the river Olomon (which runs into the Kolyma) as far as the Inas some descent the second the Indian ocean. Their neighbours by some disease, or to which some accrete Kamtschadales, the Tongusians, the Lamouts, and the Tschouktsches; the country which they perambulate in their nomadic courses is rule, marshy, their nomadic courses is rule, marshy, and for the same reason a great stock is necessary for their subsistence. The poor go into the service of the rich, full of small rocks, and in many places poor go into the service of the rich, absolutely destitute of forests. The Koriacs are of a short stature, have their masters. Every sort of game is small heads, little eyes, a round ad agreeable to them. The women gameagre face, flat noses, their hair m. ther roots and wild fruit. Whatever heards black, in general very little beard, rovisions they find are consumed im-and their eyebrows long. Before they enter on an enterprise, they always drink of the decoction of the interior and mushroom, to invalve themselve with to inspire themselves with more intrepidity and courage. Their arms are the bow and arrow, the lance, and the club. There are some to go to the chase and on their expeditions with no other arms than a stick. All their military art consists in falling on their enemy unawares. Theft, rapine, and murder, if committed among themselves, are criminal : if on another race, or upon strangers, they are heroic ac tions. Their greatest happiness consists in passing from one station to another, and seeing their numerous herds of rein-deer. When a herd has increased too much they divide it. There are few Koriacs who have herds so small that they are not able to count them; and yet if only on strays, it is immediately perceived. The Koriacs are all polygamists; some have four wives. The wives of the settled Koriacs live in the same hut with t'rem; those of the wandering are distributed among their different flocks, so that each has a flock under her care. These latter are exceedingly jealous, and torment the unhappy wives in a most cruel manner. Even an ill-founded suspicion sometimes drives the husband to sacrifice his innocent wife to his furious jealously; and the suspected gullant falls likewise a victim to his rage. The set-tled Koriacs err as much on the other extreme; for their compliance towards their wives is unbounded. They are happy to see them charm strangers; and the caresses the wife receives is so much pleasure bestowed on the hus-band. They offer their wives and daughters to strangers as companions for the hight. An acceptance of such offers is esteemed the greatest mark of friendship, and a refusal, of contempt, which highly displeases them. Yet

Kubeeha, is a large strong town situated on a hill between high mountains. Its inhabitants call themselves Franki (Frankis a name company). Franki (Franks, a name common in the cast to all Europeans), and relate that their ancestors were brought hither by some accident, the particulars of which are now forgotten. The common conjecture is, that they were common conjecture is, that they were mariners cast away upon the coast; but those who pretend to be better versed in their history tell the story this way: The Greeks and Genoese, asy they, carried on, during several centuries, a considerable trade, not only on the Black sea, but likewise on the Carring and were certainly set. the Caspian, and were certainly ac-quainted with the mines contained in these mountains, from which they drew by their trade with the inhabitants great quantities of silver, copper, and other metals. In order to work these upon the spot, they sent hither a number of workmen to establish ma-nufactures, and instruct the inhabi-tanta. The subsequent invasions of the Arabs, Turks, and Monguls, du-ring which the mines were filled up, and the manufactures abandoned, prevented the strangers from effecting their return, so that they continued here and erected themselves into a re-public. What renders this account the more probable is, that they are still excellent artists, and make very good near Tracth-Amawer Bay, where a castle formerly stood, now in ruins. It is 13 miles S by E of Carnarvon, and in gold and silver for exportation.

Kuriles, a chain of islands, extending Aurices, a chain of islands, extending from lat. 45 to 51 N, running from the southern promontory of Kamtschatka to Japan, in a S W direction. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Lopatka, who were themselves called Kuriles, gave these islands the same name, as soon as they became acquainted with them. Spanbug says they are 22 in number, exclusive of the very small ones. The northernmest island, which is called Shoomska, is about three leagues distant from the pro-montory Lopatka, its inhabitants con-sisting of a mixture of natives and Kamtschadales. The next, which is named Paramousic, is considerably larger than Shoomska, and is inhabited by the real natives. The Russians paid their first visit to these two islands in 1713, and added them to the dominions of the empress. Many of the inhabitants of those islands that are under the dominion of Russia, are now converted to Christianity. Perhaps the time is not far distant, when an advantageous commerce will be carried on between Kamtschatka and this extensive chain of islands, which may afterwards produce a communication with Japan itself.

Lancashire, a large maritime province of England, washed by the Irish sea on the W, bordering on the N with that part of Cumberland and Westmoreland; bounded on the E by the W Riding of Yorkshire, and on the W by Cheshire, extending 73 miles in length, and 41 in breadth, comprehending about 260,000 inhabitants. The eastern parts of the province are rocky, and in the northern districts we see many single mountains remarkably high, such as Ingleborough hill, Cloughbohill, Pendle-hill, and Longridge-hill. Nor is there any want of wood in this country, either for timber or fuel; wit-ness Wiersdale forest and Bowland forest to the northward, and Simon's wood in the southern part of Lancashire. The air of Lancashire is pure, healthy, and agreeable, except among the fens and on the sea-shore, where the atmosphere is loaded with putrid exhalations, producing malignant and intermitting fevers, scurvy, rheuma-tism, dropsy, and consumption. The soil is various in different parts of the country, poor and rocky on the hills, fat and fertile in the valleys and champaign country. The level country produces plenty of wheat and barley, and the skirts of the hills yield good har vests of excellent oats: very good hemp is raised in divers parts of the province; and the pasture which grows in the valley is so pocullarly rich, that the cattle which feed upon it are much larger and fatter than in any other part of England. There is not any part of the world better supplied than Lancashire with provisions of all kinds at a very reasonable rate; such N. as beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, poulas beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, poultry, and game of all sorts, eaught upon the moors, heaths, and commons, in the hilly part of the shire. As a commercial and manufacturing county, it is distinguished beyond any other in the kingdom principal manufactures are linen, silk, and cotton goods; fustians, counterpanes, shalloons, bays, serges, tapes, small ware, hats, sailcloth, sacking, pins, iron goods, cast plate-glass, &c. Of the commerce of this county, it may or the commerce of this county, it may suffice to observe, that Liverpool is the second port in the kingdom. The prin-cipal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Lon, Levern, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, Duddon, Winster, Ken, and Calder; and it has two considerable lakes, Winander-mere, and Conistonmere. Lancaster is the county-town.

Lancaster, the county-town of Lanca-shire, with a market on Saturday. It is governed by a mayor: sends two members to parliament; and is scated on the Lon, which here forms a port for vessels of moderate burden, and over which is a stone bridge of five arches. It has but one church, on the side of a hill, on the summit of which is the castle, serving both as the shire-house, and the county-gaol. On the top of this castle is - quare tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, whence there is a fine prospect of the mountains of Cumberland, and the view toward the sea, extending to the Isle of Man. Five miles from this place is Dunald-Mill-Hole, a cave at the foot of a mountain, into which a large brook runs, after it has driven a mill near its entrance. Some of its vaults are so high, that they resemble the roof of a church, and in other parts so low, that they can be passed only by creeping on the hands and feet. Lancaster carries on a considerable trade, especially to the West Indies; and is noted for the making of mahogany cabinet ware: It is 68 miles S of Carlisle, and 235 N N W of London. Landernau, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre and late province of Bretague, scated on the Elho-ro, 16 miles N E of Brest. Lon 4 20 , lat. 48 28 N.

Landes, a department of France, including the late territory of Marsan. It takes its name from a district, called Landes, extending along the coast of the Bay of Biscay. It is a barren sandy country, covered with fern, pines, and the holm-tree, of the bark of which corks are made. Mont-de-Marsan is the capital of this department, and Dox the episcopal see.

Languard Fort seems to belong to Statolk, but is in the limits of Essex, and has a lovely prospect of the coasts of both counties. It was erected and is maintained for the defence of the port of Harwich over against it; for it commands the entry of it from the sea up the Manning-tree water, and will reach any ship that goes in or out. It is placed on a point of land so sur-rounded with the sea at high water, that it looks like a little island at least one mile from the shore. The making its foundation solid enough for so good a fortification cost many years labour, and a prodigious expence. It was built in the reign of king James I. when it was a much more considera-ble fortification than new, having four bastions mounted with 60 very large guns, particularly those on the royal bastion, which would throw a 28 pound ball over Harwich. Here is a small garrison, with a governor, and a platform of guns. This fort is refitted and greatly enlarged for the conveniency of the officers of ordnance, engincers, and matroases; and a barrack built for the soldiers.

Luos, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by China, on the E by Ton-quin and Cochin China, on the S by Cambodia, and on the W by Burmah. This country is full of forests, and abounds in rice, fruits, and fish. The inhabitants are well made, robust, of an olive complexion, and mild; but very superstitions, and much addicted to women. Their principal occupa-tion is tilling the ground and fishing. The king is absolute, and has no other law than his own will: he shows himself but twice a year, and has a large revenue from elephant's teeth found in his dominions. Swedish Lapland com-prehends all the country from the Baltic to the mountains that separate Norway from Sweden. Lapland may be termed a lurge congeries of frightful rocks and stupendous mountains; interspersed, however, with many pleasant valleys, watered by an infinite number of rivulets that run into the rivers and lakes, which discharge themselves into the gulf of Bothnia. The names of the principal lakes in Lapland are the Great Uma, the Great Windel, the Oreavan, the Stor-avan, the Great Lula; the lakes of Kartom, Kali, Torno, Enara, and Kimi. Some of these extend 60 leagues in length, and contain a great number of islands; Stor-avan is said to contain 365; and Enora contains an archipelago of islands so large, that no Laplander has lived long enough to visit each particular island. It is bounded on the S and E by Persia and the Cas-pian; on the S W and W by Georgia, the Ossi, and Kisti; and on the N by the Kisti and Tartar tribes. It is divided into a variety of districts, generally independent, and governed by chiefs elected by the people. The Lesguis are supposed to be descended frem the tribes of mountaineers, known to ancient geographers under the name of Lesgæ or Ligyes. The strength of their country which is a region of mountains whose passes are known only to themselves, has probably, at all times, secured them from foreign inva-sion. They subsist by raising cattle, and by predatory expeditions into the countries of their more wealthy neighbours. During the troubles in Persia, toward the beginning of this century, they repeatedly sacked the towns of Shamachie and Ardebil, and ravaged the neighbouring districts. ain, one of the largest and most opulent cities in the world, mentioned by Taci-tus as a considerable commercial place in the reign of Nero. In its most ex-tensive view, as the metropolis it consists of the city, properly so called, the of Southwark, besides the suburbs in Middlesex and Surry, within what are called the Bills of Mortality. London and Westminster are in Middlesex, on the N side of the river Thames; and the N side of the river Thames; and Southwark is on the opposite bank, in Surry. The city is divided into 26 wards, each governed by an alderman; and from the aldermen the lord mayor is annually chosen. There are likewise 236 common-council-men, a recorder a common-serjeant, two sheriffs (who are also sheriffs of Middlesex) a chamberlain, a town clerk, a city-remembrancer a water-bailiff, and many inferior offi cers. Westminster, once a mile from London, but now united to it, is governa nobleman, chosen by the dean and chapter; and he has an under steward who officiates for him. The suburbs are under the jurisdiction of the ma-gistrates; and those of Middlesex, besides the county-hall, on Clerkenwell Green, have an office in Bow-street, long distinguished for public spirit and activity, and seven other public offices. In the reign of Edward VI. Southwark was formed into a twenty-sixth ward, by the name of Bridge Ward Without On the death of the alderman of this on the death of the alderman of this ward, he is succeeded by the next in seniority. The city has likewise a shigh bailiff and ateward here. Among the churches in the metropolis, the Tower an ancient fortress, once a royster Abby, the collegiate church of St. Peter, is a noble specimen of Gothic architecture. Here most of the English sovereigns have been crowned, and many of them interred. It contains also a great number of monuments of kings, statesmen, heroes, poets, and persons distinguished by genius, learnnegative the royal pears in the royal palace of St. James is an ancient building, on the N side of a small park, mean in external appearance; but the apartments are said to be the best calculated for a small park in the same and the same said to be the best calculated for a small park in the same said to be the best calculated for the same said to be the best calculated. regal parade of any in Europe. The royal town residence is a house at the W side of St. James's park, built by the duke of Buckingham, and purchased by the king in 1761, when it received the appellation of the Queen's Palace, but is atill frequently called Buckingham House. Carlton House, the residence of the prince of Wales, to the E of St. James's palace, is a stately building, on which vast sums have been expended, but it is not yet completed. The Banqueting House, at Whitehall, be-gun in 1619, is only a small part of the vast plan of a palace, intended to worthy of the residence of the Bri. a monarchs, but left iromplete. Besides the royal palares, there are many fine houses of the princes of the blood, and of the nobility and gentry. Among the public buildings, which can merely be enumerated here, are Westminster Hall, containing the supreme courts of justice, and adjoining to which are the houses of lords and commons. The former was anciently a chapel dedicated to St. Stephen, and there is a gallery where strangers are permitted to sit and hear the debates, but since the Irish Union it has been enlarged for the reception and accommodation for the reception and accommonators of the representatives of the three kingdoms, as has also the house of Lords, which is an oblong room not quite so large as the house of Commons, and is hung with fine old tapestry re-presenting the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588. London, then, in its large sense, in-cluding Westminster, Southwark, and part of Middlesex, forms one great me-tropolis, of vast extent and of prodigi-gious wealth. When considered with all its advantages, it is now what ancient numerous to be particularly mentioned. Rome once was: the seat of liberty, the encourager of arts, and the admiration of the whole world. It is the centre of trade; has an intimate connection with all the counties in the kingtion with all the counties in the king-dom; and is the grand mart of the na-tion, to which all parts send their commodities, from whence they are again sent back into every town in the nation, and to every part of the world. From hence innumerable carriages by land and water are constantly employ-ed: and from hence arises that circu-lation in the national body which ren-
