MORTIFIED HIM.

The Griffin, Georgia, 'News' says there's one man in town out of whose life all beauty has gone. He attended the polls yes: erday as became a good and patriotic citizen and exerted himself for the good yes: erusy as became a good and patriotic citizen and exerted himself for the good of the republic until the box was closed, then he suddenly grabbed himself by the hair, looking wild and sick as he leaned limberly up against a wall for support, exclaiming in a hoarse whisper: "Great Cæsar and Jerusalem! I've forgot to vote; won't somebody take me out and shoot me before the fool killer comes along ?" comes along ?"

A Serious Predicament

A story, illustrating the crushing force of mere circumstantial evidence, has for its hero a Russian gentleman of distinc-tion, who, provided with strong and flat-tering recommendations, visited the coin tering recommendations, visited the coin and medal room of a certain national institution. The coins and medals in this collection being, to all intents and purposes, priceless, the curators are compelled to use the utmost caution as to the admission of strangers, and to keep a sharp look-out on the visitors while hey are inspecting the rarest of the umismatic treasures.

The Russian gentleman wished to see The Russian gentleman wished to see a medal—say of Constantine Chlorus—which was of gld, of large size, a id reputed to be unique. Suddenly, while he was bending over it, the medal disappeared, and the foreigner declared that it had slipped from his hand and fallen to the floor.

After a scrupulous examination of syery chink and cranny in the room the every chink and cranny in the room, the officials began to doubt the stranger's integrity, and intimated that it would be necessary to call in a detective, and to have him searched, whereupon the genteman evinced great mental disturbance.

As this agitation only confirmed the suspicious of his guilt, a policeman was actually summoned; but, just as the half-resisting stranger was about to be exposed to gross personal indignity, an attendant cried out that he had found attendant cried out that he had found the medal. The effigy had indeed fallen to the ground and rolled under one of the presses. The curators of the collec-tion, of course, overwhelmed the Russian gentleman with apologies; but they could not refrain from asking him why he had exhibited so great reluctance to be

"For this reason," said the foreigner, still pallid and tremibling with agitation:
"It has been generally asserted and believed that the fellow to your Constantine Chlorus medal is not to be found in the whole world You told me so, half a dozen times, this morning. Now, I happen to possess a counterpart of this very medal"—he produced it, as he spoke, from his waistcoat pocket—"and it was my wish to enjoy your discomfiture when I proved to you that your treasure was not unique. But what treasure was not unique. But what would have been my position if your medal had not come to light, and mine medal had hot come to light and mine had been found in my pocket? Who would have believed in my story about the counterpart!"

This incident is strange, but true.

He feels of the outside of the pocket, pinches it curiously, lifts it up, shakes it, and after peering closely about the roots of it, he says, "By Gracious!" and he commences again.

He does it calmly this time, because hurrying only makes matters worse. He hauls up breadth after breadth; goes over them carefully; gets his hand first into the lining, then into the air again (where it surprises him when it appears) and finally into a pocket, and is about to cry out in triumph, when he discovers that it is the pocket of another dress!

He is wild now! The cupboard air almost stifles him. He is so nervous he can hardly contain himself, and the pocket looks at him so exasperatingly that he cannot help but "plug" it with his clenched fist, and immediately does it. Being somewhat relieved by this performance, he has a chance to look about him, and sees that he has put his foot through a band box, and into the crown of his wife's bonnet; has broken the brim of his summer hat, which was harding in the cupboard, and torn about the brim of his summer hat, which was hanging in the cupboard, and torn about a yard of bugle trimming from a new

The cause of the unhappy disaster, quietly inserts her hand inside the robe, and directly brings it forth, with the sought for article in her grasp.

He doesn't know why, but this makes him wilder than anything else.

STUDY AND BUSINESS.

In learning, concentrate the energy of the mind principally on one study; the attention divided among many studies is weakened by the division: besides, it is not given to man to excel in many things. But while one study claims your main attention, make occasional excursions into the field of literature and science, and collect materials for and science, and collect materials for the improvement of your favorite pur-suit. The union of contemplative habits constructs the most useful and perfect character; contemplation gives relief to action; action gives relief to contempla-tion. A man unaccustomed to specula-tion is confined to a narrow routine of action; a man of mere speculation conaction; a man of mere speculation con-structs visionary theories, which have no practical visionary theories, which have no practical utility.

Excellence in a profession and success in business are to be obtained only by persevering industry. None who thinks aimself above his vecation can succeed in it, for we cannot give our attention to what our self-importance despises. None can be eminent in his vecation who devotes his mental energy to a pursuit foreign to it, for success in what we love is failure in what we neglect.

POURING TEA

The "Housekceper" says:—There is more to be learned about pouring out tea and coffee than most ladies are willing to believe. If these decoctions are made at the table, which is by far the best at the table, which is by far the best way, they require experience, judgment, and exactness; if they are brought on the table ready-made, it still requires judgment so to apportion them that they shall prove sufficient in quantity for the family party, and that the elder members should have the stronger cups. Often persons pour out tea who, not being at all aware that the first cup is the weakest, and that the tea grows stronger as you proceed, bestow the proceed was That if he could ever speculate he would make his fortune.

That smoking never hurt a man yet.
That his shirt buttons are grossly neglected.

That her mother-in-law is a very trying woman.

That her sister-in-law takes airs, and ought to be put down.
That her girls are prettier than Mrs. A's girls.

That she would like to know where eer husband spends his evenings when he tays out.

BEAUTY IN DRESS.

Appropriateness is absolutely necessary to secure beauty in dress. Colors, and forms, and modes, in themselves graceful and beautiful, can become ungraceful and ridiculous simply through inappropriateness. The loveliest bonnet the most approved 'modiste' can invent, if worn on the head of a coarse-faced woman, bearing a market-basket on her arm, excites ne emotion but that of the ridiculous. The second requisite to beauty in dress is the unity of effect.

As in every apartment, so in every toiridiculous. The second requisite to beauty in dress is the unity of effect. As in every apartment, so in every toilet, there should be one ground tone of dominant color, which should rule all others, and there should be a style of idea to which everything should be subjected. We may illustrate the effect of this principle in a familiar case. It is admitted that the majority of women look better in mourning than they do in their ordinary apparel; a comparatively plain person looks almost handsome in simple black. Now, why is this? Simply because mourning requires a severe uniformity of color and idea, forbids the display of that variety of colors and objects which go to make up the ordinary female costume, and which very few women have such skill in using as to preduce reclly beautiful effects.

EXTERMINATE THE MOTHS.

Early in the spring of the year small woman's pocket. This is especially the case if the dress is hung up in a cupboard, and the man in a hurry.

We think we are safe in saying that he is always in a hurry on such occasions. The owner of the dress is in the dress is hung up in a cup-board, and the man in a hurry.

We think we are safe in saying that the dress is in the ions. The owner of the dress is in the sitting-room, serenely engrossed in a book.

Having told him that the article he is in quest of is in her dress-pocket in the cupboard, she has discharged her whole duty in the matter, and can afford to feel serene.

He goes to the task with a d'm consciousness that he has been there before. Having told him that the article he is in quest of is in her dress-pocket in the cupboard, she has discharged her whole duty in the matter, and can afford to feel serene.

He goes to the task with a d'm consciousness that he has been there before, but says nothing.

On opening the cupboard door, and finding himself confronted with a number of dresses all turned inside out, and presenting a most formidable front, he hastens back to ask "Which Dress i" and being told the brown cn. and also heing asked if she had so many dresses that there need be any great effort to find the right one, he returns to the cupboard with alacrity, and soon has his hands on the brown dress.

It is inside out like the rest — a fact he does not notice, however, till he has made several infectual attempts to get his hand into it.

Then he turns it around very carefully and passes over the pocket several times without being aware of it.

A nervous movement of his hands, and an appearance of perspiration on his forehead are perceptible.

He now dives his hand in at the back, and feeling around, finds a place and proceeds to explore it, when he discovers that he is following up the inside of a liming. The nervousness increases, also the perspiration.

He twitches the dress on the hook, when the pocket in plain view—not only the inside, but the pocket pump and exaperating, comes to view. There is the pocket in plain view—not only the inside, but the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the outside,—and all he has to do is to the contents of the outside.—and all he has to do is to pany lately unearthed the latest incendiary device in connection with an $1,000 barn loss in Schoharie county, New York. The apparatus consists of a board covered with sand paper that faces another board filled with matches, set another board filled with matches, set in a parallel position so that the sulphur of the matches can rub against the sand. These were set against a hay mow and with the match-filled board attached to a ten foot lever with its bearings in the middle. At the end of the lever was a tin milk pail, and set above the pall was an ordinary funnel supplying the bottom to a bushel box filled with fine gand. This sand was allowed to run bottom to a bushel box filled with fine sand. This sand was allowed to run into the pan; and when the pressure was sufficient to move the lever, a string unloosened the funnel, and the balance of the sand dropped suddenly into the pan, moved the lever, and so the board ignited the matches, thus firing the barn. A belated traveller passing discovered the thing in working order, rushed in and saved it, and presented it to the insurance adjuster as an evidence of the inscreptive of man.

They were looking very sentimental, and neither spoke for some minutes, until she broke the silence in a sweet, musical voice:

"And you will always think as you do now, George?"

"Ever, dearest! Your image is impressed so indelibly that nothing can ever efface it! Tell me Julia, loveliest of your sex, that I have a right to wear it there!"

"Oh, you men are so deceitful!" she answered, coquettishly.

"True, men are deceitful," he said, drawing a little nearer to her, and at the same time climbing the gate; "but who, darling, could deceive you?"

"And if I were to die, George, wouldn't you find somebody else you could love as well?"

"Never—never! No one could ever fill your place in my heart."

"Never—never! No one could ever fill your place in my heart."
"Oh, quit now! That ain't right," she murmured as she made a feint to remove his arm from around her waist.
"Let me hold you to my heart," he whispered passionsately, "until you have consented to be mine!"
And he drew her nearer to him, and held her tightly until he obtained the And he drew her nearer to him, and held her tightly until he obtained the coveted boon.

ing, ere the moon and stars had paled, we heard a gentle voice exclaim:
"No, sir; you stayed out this long, and you may just as well make a night of it! I'll teach you to stay at the lodge until three o'clock in the morning, and then come fooling around my door, to worry me and wake the baby. Now, take that, and sleep on it!"

It seemed but vesterday that little It seemed but yesterday, that little scene at the gate; but when we accidentally became a witness to the latter scene, we remembered it had been longer.

ENFORCING THE RULES.

It happened the other day on the Le-high Valley Railroad. The train had just left Easton, and the conductor was making his first round, when he observmaking his first round, when he observed a small white dog, with a bushy tail and bright black eyes, sitting cosily on the seat beside a young lady so handsome that it made his heart roll over like a lop-sided pumpkin. The young lady ponted, but the brakeman reached over and picked the canine up as tenderly as though it was a two-weeks' baby. But, as he did so, a strange expression came over his face, like a wave of cramp colic, and he said, hastily, to the conductor:

"Here, you just hold him a minute, till I put this poker away."

And he trotted out at the car door and held on to the brake-wheel, shaking like a man with ague.

The conductor no sooner had his hands on the dog, than he looked around for a hole to fall through.

"Wes, sir," said the little miss, demurely. "Yes, sir," said the little miss, demurely. "No! I'm most awful sorry to say I din't know that!"
