Miramichi Smelt Fishery.

To say that the people of the Miramichi are disgusted with the treatment of the smelt fishermen receiving at the hands of the Fisheries Department but mildly express the prevailing sentiment on the subject.

It has been proposed by some that the time for beginning bag-net fishing, as well as some other matters now dealt with by order in Council, should be left to the decision of an Inspector with an exclusively Miramichi, or else general North Shore jurisdiction.

It is almost the sole dependence of the people of that section for a winter livelihood. For a reason that would be almost incredible to those unacquainted with the history of this important interest, the regulations governing the fishery have been constantly undergoing changes, almost every season, bringing with it new Orders-in-Council to be varied or suspended by telegraphic relaxations from Ottawa; or, else, commands from the Inspector at St. John for their rigid enforcement.

For the thirteen years during which the fishery has been carried on by existing modes, no man engaged in it has been able to determine, for any length of time in advance of the open season, what the conditions would be on which he might base prospective operations, for it has seemed that during each close season, when there was no active local interest felt in the matter, the Department would be induced to make orders on an almost prohibitive basis, which had only to be relaxed when active interest was created by the river freezing over—thus bringing on the natural fishing and shipping season and leading to efforts to have the facts correctly placed before the Minister.

The whole history of the industry in Northumberland has, in short, been that of an official misreading of the Department, resulting in irritation to those engaged in it by unnecessary restrictions, which have hampered both fishermen and shippers, entailing direct losses as well as the prevention of the people from reaping the advantage of opportunities for securing the legitimate profits of the business.

The means employed in official quarters have been the exaggeration of each and every drawback or feature of the fishery calculated to impress the authorities with the necessity for its prohibition. This policy began with the inception of the industry, when the Inspector for the province attempted to have bag-nets entirely prohibited, because he misunderstood the nature and magnitude of the fishery, which was new to him, as it was to the country.

The Department, at that time, became aware that its officers were fogged with the Inspector in systematically misrepresenting the facts, and the Minister took the trouble to make an independent investigation.

grown out of the peculiar temperament and prejudices of an officer at St. John, who has abundantly proved that he not only has no sympathy whatever with the fishermen, but has lost no opportunity to create antagonism between himself and them and the Department.

It would be good policy for him to do so, for it would not pay her to allow France or Germany or Russia to spin any other nation to establish flag on her northern boundaries. Our only danger would lie in a quarrel with the States.

If that could be averted, our peace, progress and prosperity would be amply assured. And we believe it could be averted, and very easily too. The Americans at heart are not belligerent and quarrelsome, and would not be at all likely to try to force the hand of this country.

It is conceivable, that the fishery controversy may provoke a collision between Great Britain and Great Britain, says Lord Rosebery. We might add it is also conceivable that the Sackville affair may cause an appeal to arms. In one case Canada would be the indirect if not the direct cause of hostilities; in the other England would be the occasion of disturbances.

It sounds well to talk grandiloquently of the strength and grandeur of a great offensive and defensive alliance between Great Britain and Great Britain. And we are free to admit that for some of the Colonies it would be a highly beneficial arrangement. But for Canada it would never, never do. To be at the mercy of the British manufacturer, and to be compelled to respond to the cry "to arms" when any part of the Empire was threatened would be an experience that no Canadian would do well to covet.

It is in his Edinburgh speech on Imperial Federation, Lord Rosebery is credited with the sensible remark that the present state of things between Great Britain and her Colonies is anomalous and cannot continue, because on the one hand, Great Britain pays for everything, and that is a fair bargain on her side, and, on the other hand, the Colonies may be dragged into a war without a voice in the matter, and that is a fool's bargain on their side.

equal the responsibilities that would be laid upon her. Canadians have no fear of interference from beyond the Continent they inhabit. The United States would come promptly and willingly to the assistance of the Dominion, independent, should we, for any reason, be attacked by foreign powers.

It would be good policy for him to do so, for it would not pay her to allow France or Germany or Russia to spin any other nation to establish flag on her northern boundaries. Our only danger would lie in a quarrel with the States.

what they find to be exceedingly valuable service. The map is a very fine one. On the other hand, the actual reputation abroad of Canadian butter today, compared to what it was at one time, is of a less flattering character.

Canada a Dairying Country. (Published by permission of the Author.) In Canada's resources, developed and undeveloped, the field, the forest, the fishery, the mine, manufactures and commerce, all occupy no mean place. It is, however, no depreciation of the other resources to say that both in actual results and in future promise, the first named stands highest in importance.

Our exports are an illustration of this fact. In 1887 our agricultural exports amounted to more than half of the total exports. The industry which, by virtue of exports, is second in importance is that of the forest, and the exports of the latter were less than half those of the field. In round millions of dollars, our total exports, in 1887, were as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Category and Amount. Total: $78,000,000. Categories include: The field ($41,000,000), The forest ($20,000,000), Mines ($1,000,000), Furs ($3,000,000), Miscellaneous ($1,000,000).

In this classification I have made a departure from that of the trade and navigation tables. In the "field" (agriculture) I have included the products of the forest, except "furs," which I have classified separately.

These figures, striking as they are, do not fully express the relative importance of agriculture. Among the considerations which emphasize this expression are the following:—1. The forest products exported are more nearly in a raw state, like deals, planks, etc. and do not represent the employment afforded that field products do, the latter including such products as cattle, cheese, butter, grain, etc.

Now, an analysis of the exports of our most important and valuable agricultural resources will show there is one special branch of the industry which overtops the other branches, even as agriculture itself stands higher than any other resource. We export in 1887 in round millions of dollars:—

evidence of a mixed success, while there are rather evidences of failure, the genius of our people must be equal to the needs of the situation, even as it was in the case of cheese production. But the people should set themselves at once and heartily to the task. What has been done recently in this connection will show that the temper of the people for improvement and progress, but not enough has been done and not enough attempted. It is not clear that the task is a light one; I think only that the genius of the people is equal to the need, if it will assert itself here as it has elsewhere. What action must needs be taken, it is not within the scope of the present writing to discuss.

The agencies which are already working for improvement of dairying in Canada are mainly, the following:—The Western and Eastern Dairy-men's associations of Ontario, and the Dairy-men's association of Quebec, have been more than all else instrumental in building up our great cheese industry, and making it what it is. The Ontario Creamery association, of recent organization, is promising much help to the butter industry. The Nova Scotia Dairy-men's association is a large organization, and for about five years has done good pioneer work. There is an association in Manitoba of whose practical work I cannot speak from personal knowledge. The Ontario Agricultural College, at Guelph, has made a good beginning with its working dairies, and it is now doing good experimental work, and perhaps better lecture work outside among the farmers, and the head of this department has ability of the highest order, which fit him well to do a great work for general Canadian dairying. The Dominion experimental farm at Ottawa has not yet put itself on the record of things accomplished, but it may be made to do a most important and much needed service in the line of experiment and education. Canada has an excellent agricultural press, which has done and is doing, a grand work educating its readers. The ordinary newspaper itself is keenly alive to its own power to reach and impress the masses in the direction of improvement. The Dominion and some of the provincial governments have made a beginning by circulating dairy literature specially prepared for the writer of some of the pamphlets issued. I am glad to have substantial evidence that he has done good work.

In view of our natural advantage, the genius of our people, which has already been attained, and an awakened disposition throughout the country to make greater progress, there is surely reason to hope for the dairy industry in Canada.

As a matter of fact, in every province of the Dominion, and very likely in every country, more or less butter has been and is being made, which would be considered fine in any market. It is unlikely that the best and best butter can be made than in our own Prince Edward Island—equally good and beautiful. "Gilt-edged" butter may be made almost anywhere in maritime Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, with their rich meadows and grassy slopes, kissed by Atlantic breezes. Quebec has its Eastern Townships, the very name of which is synonymous with the best butter of the country. It has, too, its Kamouraska district, which though it has shipped enough bad butter to spoil the best reputation, did in spite of cattle, grasses and atmosphere which have produced some of the finest milk and butter in the world. Ontario being more of a wheat-growing country, has had less of the advantage of having made butter-making in some degree a specialty, but it is not to be doubted that in every one of its rich countries excellent butter has been made, though it has been spoiled by bad mixing and store packing. As for our glorious West, where the dairy cow is not only some parts of it lacking the abundance of pure water essential to the production of fine butter, but they are probably only a small proportion of the whole, and where there is water there are allied advantages of superb dairy cattle, rich, sweet pasture grasses, nature's purest air, cool summer nights, and, if it is added, a people of enterprise and intelligence, the pick of every where, if Canada does not take first rank as a dairy country, it will not be because she is not favored by nature with all the essential conditions of grass, water, climate, etc.

Doubtless there are districts in Canada, because of natural conditions or circumstances, not so well adapted for butter as for cheese production. This may be true of some of our wheat-growing water-meadow districts, or some of our rich low-lying clay lands of our Quebec parishes; but these districts will confine themselves more closely to cheese production, as a profitable specialty, making butter only in a supplementary way, and mainly for consumption more or less local.

Second—The genius of the people of Canada is equal to the special needs of successful dairying. Here I have touched upon an important factor of success. Natural advantages, though necessary, are not complete success, are almost less than half the battle. We are coming more and more into days of stiff competition, in which intelligence, enterprise and skill are necessary to succeed. It is the united action of the pioneers of the industry in Ontario, in association, assisted, in a moderate degree only, by Government, which gave the first impulse to what is now our great factory system of cheese-making. Quebec followed closely upon Ontario, and now other provinces are on the move. The cheese industry is now in hand that there can be little doubt of such steady progress that the Dominion will lead all competitors in the race.

The good judgment of the Canadian dairy-makers is well indicated by their temper on the question of the adulteration of cheese. All the plausible arguments to greedily resort to the tempting profits of robbing the milk of its cream, and substituting something cheaper, are always met by a unanimous, even impatient opposition by our associated cheese-makers. The wisdom of this disposition becomes more and more apparent in the ever increasing reputation of our cheese in Great Britain. In a recent official examination of, I think, nearly 300 samples of Canadian cheese in England, not one was found to be adulterated.

clearly as possible and leave to the Times and its admirers the prize fight and other local accidents and tragedies. "Small things" take the merriest out of the lives of young girls and maidens.

One Thousand Dollars Award. - A reward of one thousand dollars is offered by the publishers for the best letter of suggestions for a Christmas souvenir that will equal the Christmas Number of the MONTREAL STAR at its published price.

Fireman's Meeting. - A large meeting, representing chiefly the small-fishing interest of the Miramichi was held at Mason's Hall yesterday afternoon.

Fire. - The following report was accidentally omitted from last week's issue: Mr. John Vanedon's house took fire about one o'clock on Monday and before being put out was considerably damaged.

Fire. - On Monday night, shortly after 11 o'clock, Mr. Jas. Desmond, who lives next door to the Golden Ball corner, had his attention attracted to fire in the warehouse at the rear of the Golden Ball building.

Fire. - A number of speakers addressed the meeting, most of them making practical suggestions, or stating matters of fact to show that the Minister, according to his letter read by Mr. Watt, must be very much misled.

Fire. - Mr. Donald Morrison of Newcastle stated that Mr. Adams and he had, for some time, making efforts to induce the Minister to visit Miramichi, and other wise acting with a view of having the Department obtain more accurate information than it seems to have in reference to our fisheries.

Fire. - After a good deal of discussion the meeting, by resolution, affirmed the statements and endorsed the prayer of the small fishermen's recent petition, varying it, however, so as to ask that bag-net fishing begin on the formation of first ice.

Fire. - The Committee, as appointed, was as follows: Dudley Walls, John Sharp, John Blake, D. Orliman, Donald Morrison, Geo. Watt, T. Crocker, Wm. Lyons, Jas. Bergin, Geo. Grosz.

Fire. - As a subject meeting of the Committee Messrs. D. G. Smith of Chatham, George Goss of Lower Newcastle, Alex. Murdoch, Jr., of Napan, and T. B. Williston of Bay Du Vin were added.

Fire. - It seems to be the Times' turn now to exhibit its jealousy over the fact that it does not receive the patronage of the Louisiana State Lottery.

Fire. - As to the statement of fraud goes we have to say what we have before, and via - that owing to certain men in Moncton subscribing stock to boot and eat, afterwards, repudiating their responsibility and also to the fraudulent character of the St. Stephen and other lotteries being established beyond a doubt, we made enquiry, through the leading Commercial Agency of the United States, in reference to the transactions of the Louisiana State Lottery, and the report we received was that the drawings took place in a bona fide manner, as advertised, that the prizes were regularly paid and that the business was as honest and legitimate as any lottery could be.

Fire. - Since the above was in type the St. John Globe comes to hand with the following: The Tory organ at Moncton complains that Chatham newspaper publishes advertisements of the Louisiana Lottery, and asks why it is not prosecuted, instead of such as those which are illegal.

Fire. - Messrs. Eckels and Smallwood have leased the Skating and Curling Rink for the season. The Advance's patronage has been frequently annoyed by such men running after them soliciting their advertisements in the "me too" principle - simply because they are to leave Bona in a city that there are not more of the establishments working summer and winter.

Fire. - Preparations are being made for the opening of the Toboggan Slide at Newcastle, and the Skating and Curling Rink. Mr. P. C. Secretary of the Kewook Toboggan Slide announces by advertisement that the slide will open as soon as the weather permits, and gives the price of the several kinds of tickets.

The Advance's patronage has been frequently annoyed by such men running after them soliciting their advertisements in the "me too" principle - simply because they are to leave Bona in a city that there are not more of the establishments working summer and winter.

Fire. - The Chatham paper referred to believes that the policy of encouraging prize fights and other immoralities by the publication of their details, is a question chiefly for the consideration of the reading public, and to be settled by them. There is unfortunately a large class who will pay for such harmful trash that when legitimate newspaper matter, and when decent newspapers condemn the parading of these degrading and criminal details in print, they resent in directing them to call attention to the fact that they are not to be published.

Fire. - She was married before she "struck" the tar. Her spirits sink as she beheld her new white gown blackened by the tar.

SAVED BY A SLUVE

BY WILLIAM C. PATTEN.

The omnibus was on its way to a dead halt at the road-agent's command. The driver sat silent beneath the threatening muzzle of a never-quivering rifle. The male passengers, three in number, had been compelled to step down from the coach and stand in line with upraised hands, not daring to move for fear of instant death at the hands of one of the five masked men. But within the coach, covering fearfully in a corner, was a handsome young woman who had not been compelled to alight.

The chief of the road-agents, a tall, dashing-looking fellow, uttered an exclamation of amazement and joy as his eyes fell upon the fair passenger's face.

"Nona Ray!" he cried. "Is it possible? The woman did not reply. She still covered in the corner, staring fixedly at him, with eyes in the depths of which shone a look of mingled fear and defiance.

"Mrs. Ray, I am delighted to see you," declared the tall road-agent. "This meeting is as unexpected as it is pleasant."

Then the woman spoke, and her voice had a haughty, defiant ring. "I do not know you, sir," she said. "How dare you address me in this manner?"

The man uttered a soft whistle of amazement. "Do not know me, sir?" he laughed. "I think you will know me when you see my face."

Then, after glancing over his shoulder to make sure that his act was unobserved by the other passengers, he swiftly lifted his mask, revealing a dark, handsome, yet sinister face.

Uttering a gasping cry of "Obad Marks!" the woman swooned. When she recovered consciousness the stage was once more swaying and rumbling over the rocky trail. One of the three passengers, a small man who wore glasses, was bending over her, chafing her hands.

"Where am I? What has happened?" she murmured.

"You are on the stage bound for Sutton's Flat," was this quiet reply. "We were held up by robbers back in the canyon, and one of them frightened you into a swoon. They have relieved us of our loose change and allowed us to pass on."

"Yes, I remember," he said slowly. "He came to the door. Obad Marks?"

"The small man started and gazed at her keenly through his glasses. "What did you say?" he asked.

"Oh, nothing, nothing," she protested, a little wildly. "I have not yet recovered from the shock."

During the rest of the journey to Sutton's Flat she remained very taciturn, persistently evading the small man's attempts to draw her into conversation. In her eyes there seemed to lurk a scared, haunted look.

At the flat the woman stopped at the only hotel, and was at once shown to a room. Once within this private apartment, she threw herself upon the bed in a paroxysm of anguish, sobbing and moaning as if her heart would break.

For nearly an hour she wept and moaned, at times muttering brokenly:—"Fate is against me! Oh, why did I ever dream that happiness could again be mine? But I thought he was dead—I saw a notice of Obad Marks' death in an Eastern paper. Oh, this sad, sad world! I am doomed—doomed!"

Once or twice she whispered softly, "Henry," and with that name on her lips, fell asleep.

More than an hour later a soft knocking at the door aroused her. She sprang up, with her heart fluttering fearfully in her bosom.

"Who is there?" she called, chokingly.

"It is I, Obad Marks," was the cautious reply. "Open the door."

"No, I will not! Go away! For God's sake, don't come here to torture me!"

"Open this door, Nona Ray, or it will be the worse for you!" came sternly from beyond the portal.

She dared not disobey. Like a frightened child she crept forward and unfastened the door. The tall chief of the road-agents, now unmasked, stepped softly into the room, and bowed with mocking politeness to his fair occupant.

"Good-afternoon, Mrs. Ray," he said, in softly modulated tones. "I am delighted to see you, as I believe I informed you once before to-day."

"Why do you come here? What do you want?" she demanded, still remaining standing.

He closed the door carefully before replying. Then he said:—"I came to see you, of course, though necessity compels me to make my visit quite brief. You gave me the slip three years ago and I have been searching for you ever since. My surprise and delight were unbounded when I saw you on the stage to-day. You are looking remarkably well for a widow. How came you to find your way to this remote mining camp?"

"You have no right to question me!" she dashed, with a touch of defiance.

"Oh, very well! with a slight sneer. "Then I will tell you why you came. You came to meet Henry Graystone, the young superintendent of the True Lead Mine. You have been corresponding with him since he met you in Denver, a year ago. He has written asking you to be his wife. You have not promised, but have surrendered in your own heart, else why are you here? Does Henry Graystone know that you are a murderer?"

The woman shrank back as if she had received a blow in the face. She put up her hands in helpless appeal, but the man seemed to regard her agony with heartless triumph written on his handsome face. He continued:—"Have you ever told him that you possessed your husband, Belmont Ray? Have you told him that you only escaped justice by flight, being aided by one Obad Marks, Belmont Ray's former friend, but then desperately in love with you, murdered though you were? You have never told him these things. Think you his love would not turn to abhorrence did he know the truth? "As God is my judge, I did not murder Belmont Ray," gasped the tortured woman.

"Can you prove that to the world's satisfaction?" asked her tormentor. "It was well known that your parents forced you to marry him against your wishes. It is also well known that he abused you shamefully. He died suddenly under suspicious circumstances. An autopsy disclosed the startling fact he had been poisoned. Suspicion pointed to you, and your flight followed, quite satisfying everyone as to the guilty party. You may thank your friends of money and influence that you have not been hunted down and brought to punishment on these facts."

The woman reeled and would have fallen had he not caught and assisted her to a chair.

"Your nerves are wonderfully weak just now, Nona," he said, softly; "but you need not be alarmed. All the officers in the country cast their eyes upon me as I am here to protect you. I aided you to escape before, and you gave me the slip. For three years I have searched diligently for you, and have found you at last. My darling, I love you and you must become my wife!"

"Never!" she cried, starting up. "Leave this room, Obad Marks, or I will call for help and denounce you as the robber chief!"

"The moment you do you will put your own neck in a noose," was the calm reply. As she sank back in the chair, he spoke smoothly and rapidly:—"You must listen to me, Nona. Give up this Henry Graystone; forget that you ever met him. Become my wife, and we will go far away from here and from the past. I love you madly, and will do everything in my power to make you happy. The future will be full of joy."

"I must leave you now," he continued; "but to-morrow I will come for your answer. Look carefully on both sides. One shows shame, disgrace, imprisonment, perhaps death; the other peace, happiness, love, and life. Take your choice."

"Here I am known as Justin Murel, not Obad Marks. Be careful not to speak the latter name to anyone. And now I will go. Adieu, my darling."

Bowing low he left the room. Behind him he left a desperate, despairing woman. Springing up, she paced the room in a very frenzied agony, wringing her hands wildly, but uttering no sound. Finally her nerves became quieter, and she sat down by the window to gaze blankly out upon the collection of huts which composed the mining camp. Her lips moved slowly and she whispered:—"I have not yet recovered from the shock."

During the rest of the journey to Sutton's Flat she remained very taciturn, persistently evading the small man's attempts to draw her into conversation. In her eyes there seemed to lurk a scared, haunted look.
