"DUFF" WOOD IS CHAMPION; WON IN COLLEGIATE SPORTS

Splendid Showing Made by Athletic Students at Tecumseh Park—Florence Woolley Wins the Race for Girls.

Malcolm J. Wood, son of Dr. J. N. Wood, the well-known lawn bowler, yesterday proved himself the premier Collegiate athlete at the annual field games of the Institute held in Tecumseh Park, and took the championship in clever fashion.

The new champion also made more points than were made by McDonald, last year's leader.

Fred Mitchell, a coming young athlete, took first honors in the junior class, although hard pressed by little Everett Clen, who showed up in much better form than he did a year ago.

Well Attended.

The games were well attended by students from the Collegiate, the medical and other schools, and everything was run off in a business-like fashion, barring the keeping of scores, which should in the future be centralized.

The race for first honors in the senior events was one of the best the Collegiate sports have seen in a long time, and the best boy won on his merits.

The runner-up in the senior class was John Higgins, who surprised even himself by his clever showing. He was just three points away from the leader.

A strong contender for second honors was Russell MacRobert, who exhibited rare form for a boy in putting the shot, the high jump, the 220-yard dash, and the standing broad jump. MacRobert took the shot-put and the broad jump with some to spare, and finished third in the other contests.

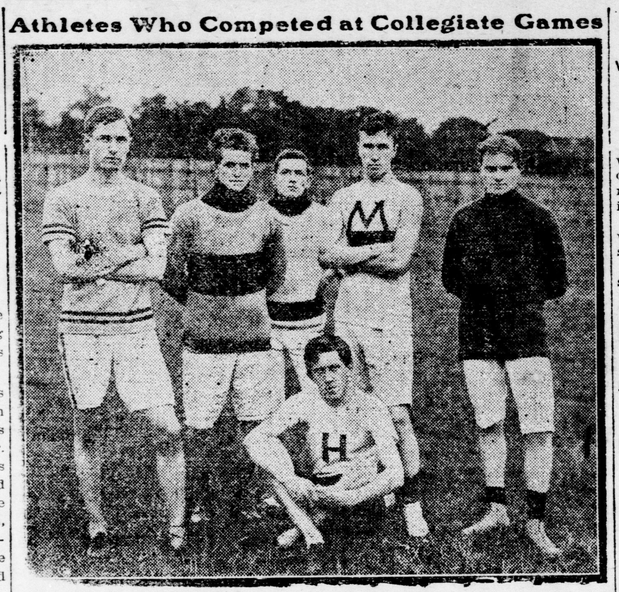

The boys finished in the championship competition, as follows: Wood, 13 points; Higgins, 10 points; MacRobert, 8 points; Pope, 7 points.

Girls' Contests.

In the contests for girls the honors were fairly equally divided.

Nearly All the Delegates Are Named For Selection of Labor Candidate

Local Branch of Canadian Labor Party Is Working on the Campaign.

The press committee of the Canadian Labor party has given out the following statement for publication:

This evening, with the meeting of the Typographical and Pressmen's Unions, and tomorrow, the stage hands and a number of railway organizations who can only meet on Sunday, the selection of delegates to the Labor convention to nominate a candidate for the by-election will have been practically completed, and immediate steps taken to convene the convention and place the nominee before the electorate.

The executive of the new Labor party has already prepared circulars for distribution all over the Province for the purpose of raising funds from the different organizations; they are also arranging for the speakers, and have full charge of this work. The executive of the Trades and Labor Council have full charge of the raising of finances within the city.

The two executives have each a special work to do, but, when necessary, will have joint meetings, and the same headquarters will be used by both. The executive of the Labor party has been meeting every night, and expects by Tuesday to commence the distribution of the first campaign literature.

By thus specializing the work it is felt that the best of results will be attained. Headquarters have been secured, and will be at once opened, and kept open during the campaign.

The registering of voters will also be well looked after, and steps taken to see that only qualified persons shall have their names on the list. Arrangements are about completed in connection with the mass meetings that will be held in the interests of the Labor candidate, and it is determined to put up such an aggressive campaign as to demonstrate that every energy is being exercised to carry the election.

Prominent outside speakers are voluntarily tendering their services. The labor people have not been losing time since deciding to place a candidate in the field; they have been working hard, and will now enter upon the real work of the campaign.

London Man Injured in the Storm Was on a Steamer in Lake Superior

Mr. William Lowery Had a Most Terrible Experience on the Majestic.

Mrs. William Lowry, of 515 King street, received word today from her husband, who was on the steamer Majestic, which recently had such a terrible time in Lake Superior while trying to make Port Arthur.

Mr. Lowry is well-known as proprietor of the Spingbank Pavilion and the Simcoe street rink.

His escape from drowning was a close one and in his letter he states that in one of the worst storms ever encountered on the lake the steamer broke her steering gear and for forty hours drifted helplessly while the big waves washed her decks.

Mr. Lowry was standing on the deck when a big wave broke over the bows and hurled several heavy casks from their places.

A Close Call.

Before he could escape Mr. Lowry was struck by one and knocked down and only by the efforts of Captain Wright, who happened to be standing near, was he saved from being washed overboard.

Mr. Lowry was so severely injured that he had to remain under the doctor's care for over a week. Several other persons were knocked about, and before they left the boat got together and presented Captain Wright with a purse of $100 for his bravery during the storm.

Mr. Lowry is at present in Winnipeg on his way west.

Clark Brown in the Vaudeville War; Says It Will Soon Come to an End

Bennett Houses All Along the Circuit Line Doing Well—Feature of Battle.

Mr. Clark Brown, who is the New York representative of the Bennett Theatrical Enterprises, is in the city, having completed his trip to the theaters on tre Bennett circuit. He spoke of the splendid success the theaters were meeting with, and declared that in every city he visited the Bennett Theater had its recognized place, and was highly regarded by the people. He leaves on Monday for New York. Mr. C. W. Bennett is at present in New York, relieving Mr. Brown.

All Doing Well.

"The Bennett theaters are all doing well," said Mr. Brown. "In Quebec the theater, under the management of Mr. Jas. H. Aloz, formerly of this city, is doing exceedingly well. Mr. Aloz is a splendid advertiser, and has made the theater a great success. It is bound to be one of the best theaters on the Bennett circuit. The situation is peculiar there on account of the fact that the whole population is French, and only about 50 per cent of them can understand English.

"Mr. R. A. McVean is doing well in Montreal, although there is opposition there. We are getting the money.

"In Ottawa the same good steady business is being done, and the theater is doing well.

"In Hamilton there is considerable opposition in the Savoy Theater, but the business is satisfactory. The city is hardly large enough for two houses, but we do not think we will have to move out. We are there to stay.

"In London, of course, you know the situation as well as I do. The Bennett circuit is a good one, and will do well.

Vaudeville War.

"There is an interesting vaudeville war on at present between Klaw & Erlanger and the Keith interests. This war has raised the price of acts from 25 to 40 cents, so that it now costs us about one-third more to put on a show than it did last year. Both companies have scoured England and Europe for acts. The situation is peculiar. At present there is such a dearth of material in England that the English man-

$7,500 for an Accident Claim; Peculiar Case of Late James Angus

Was Insured for $10,000, But Company Claimed He Was Not Burned to Death.

The death of Mr. James Angus, who was burned in a burning building last May, death resulting in a few days afterwards, has opened up a very interesting law case.

Mr. Angus was insured in the Canadian Casualty Company, taking out an accident policy for $5,000.

This policy was a double liability policy, and would pay $10,000 if the man insured was burned to death in a building.

When Mr. Angus' death was reported to the company it wanted to settle for $5,000, and refused to pay the $10,000, claiming that Mr. Augus was not burned to death.

Mr. George Angus, father of the deceased, in whose favor the policy was drawn though his solicitor, Mr. Geo. C. Gibbons, K.C., threatened to enter suit against the company.

A settlement was reached today, by which Mr. Angus receives $7,500 in full of all claims.

Where to Register for By-Election; Places Named by the Local Board

Registration Begins a Week From Tuesday Next—Will Continue Four Days.

The board of registration, composed of Judge Macbeth, Judge Elliott, Police Magistrate Love, and Local Master Cowan, met yesterday afternoon at the court house and arranged the list of places for registration.

The dates of registration will be the 15th, 16th, 17th and 19th of this month.

The places of registration will be open from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., and 7 to 9 p.m.

The registrars have not as yet been appointed.

The board of appeal will sit to hear and determine all cases brought before it at the court house on the 22nd, and 23rd, of the present month.

Where to Register.

The places of registration will be located as follows:

City Hall, for registration district No. 1, comprising subdivisions 1 to 7, of Ward 1.

No. 499 Richmond street, for district No. 2, comprising the whole of Ward 2.

Trebilcock Hall, London South, comprising polling subdivisions 8 to 13, of Ward 1.

No. 341 Colborne street, for district No. 4, polling subdivision of Ward 3.

Town hall, London East, for district No. 5, comprising subdivisions 9 to 13, of Ward 3.

No. 644 Dundas street, for registration district No. 6, comprising subdivisions 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8, of Ward 4.

No. 418 Piccadilly street, for district No. 7, comprising subdivisions 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, of Ward 4.

Fall Assizes Are of Much Interest; List of Actions a Very Lengthy One

Two Criminal Cases, One for Murder Will Be Tried—A Huge Grist.

The assizes, which open before Mr. Justice Teetzell in this city Monday morning, will be the largest that have been held here in a very long time.

When twenty cases are entered for the assizes the court is considered a good one. This year there are exactly thirty cases down for hearing. Of that number, however, several have already been settled, and a number of others will probably be settled out of court later on or adjourned for a later sitting.

Of the eighteen jury cases entered, the bulk call for damages amounting to $5,000 or over each. The non-jury cases are for much smaller sums.

Two Criminal Cases.

But two criminal cases have been set down, but they are both very important.

Thomas Noah will have to answer to a charge of having murdered a fellow-Indian named Absalom Fox, and James Gray will face a charge of rape.

Among the damage suits are two which call for $5,000 each for the loss of an eye. In both suits the claim is set forth that the foremen of the defendant companies were negligent in not providing goggles or other eye-protectors for the injured workmen. It is understood that one of these cases, the one against the Grand Trunk Railway, has been settled on terms satisfactory to both parties. J. M. Faulds is acting for the plaintiffs in both actions.

Four Insurance Actions.

The four insurance cases entered by Harper, Gibbons & Harper, on behalf of the London Hat and Cap Company, may be settled by arbitration. One of the cases has already been stayed. These actions are for alleged unpaid premiums which fell due as a result of a fire in the plaintiff's place of business last year. The defendants say they are willing to settle up just as soon as the amount of damages is appraised.

The action of A. E. Welch, the local stock broker, against the Esperanza Mining Company, will prove interesting.

Mr. Welch alleges that the latter company agreed to buy some property upon which he held options, and then refused to keep its agreement,

Sixty-Three Girls Killed And As Many More Injured

Awful Explosion in Japanese Factory—Were Sorting Cartridges.

Tokio, Oct. 5.—A terrible explosion occurred this morning at the Takatsuke factory, Ossa, while a number of girls were at work sorting shells and cartridges which had been condemned. Sixty-three of the girls were killed, and over sixty others injured.

As the dispatch is sent, the factory is on fire, and a number of boats containing explosives are also burning.

MET HIS BROTHER'S FATE

W. C. Shelton Killed on Railway Bridge Crossing Rideau River.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Ottawa, Oct. 5.—W. Clifford Shelton was killed this morning by being run over by a train while crossing the railway bridge over the Rideau River in Gloucester Township.

His brother, Harry Clifford Shelton was killed near the same place in a similar way about three months ago.

Shelton resided in Gloucester Township.

LONDON SHOULD GET AFTER THIS FACTORY

Former Resident of Forest City Speaks of Proposed Branch of St. Louis Firm.

Mr. W. H. Trebilcock, president of the New York Millinery Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, Mo., is home on a short visit on his way to New York, and remarks the substantial progress made by London during the past few years. Mr. Trebilcock says that London should leave no stone unturned to secure the great manufacturing plant of the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, of St. Louis, that is contemplating opening a large shoe manufacturing plant in Canada, as the firm has been the means of making St. Louis the greatest shoe center of the United States. Its sales last year alone were over $10,000,000. Added to the large shoe factories already here this would make London the great shoe manufacturing city of Canada. It is to be hoped the proper officials will get busy and secure this industry for London.

SERIOUS RIOTING IN CALCUTTA

Students in the Melee—Forty Policemen Were Wounded—A General Fight.

Calcutta, Oct. 5.—Seditious agitation led to serious rioting here on Tuesday night, in which no less than 40 policemen were wounded.

A meeting was being held in honor of the students recently punished for assaulting the police, and harangues were delivered advocating the establishment of self-government, the meeting of opposition by force, etc. These speeches worked on the crowd, and presently stones were thrown at the policemen present to preserve order.

The excitement grew and the disorder increased until the police were instructed to break up the meeting. This they started to do, but met with resistance from the mob. Reinforcements were then summoned, and with their advent the fighting became more general. There was considerable local looting, and the police were stoned from neighboring houses. The rioting continued for several hours.

The Bengal newspapers declare that scores of native policemen doffed their uniforms and joined the rioters, and the courage of these men is extolled.

TWO MOTIONS

Disposed of, at a Sitting of the Weekly High Court.

Two motions were disposed of at the weekly sitting of the high court for London this morning:

Re John Coy—Motion for construction of will. Judgment reserved. Pope, for adult parties; Betts, for infant, Ross, for executor.

Cole vs. Monarch Insurance Company—Motion to stay proceedings. Motion adjourned before trial judge at the assizes next Monday. McKillop, for motion; Gibbons, K. C., for plaintiff.

—Mr. A. J. Bates, of this city, left for England yesterday. A large number of his personal friends gave him a good send-off at the C. P. R. station. Mr. Bates desires to thank his friends for many marks of goodwill shown him before leaving.

WILL JUDGE PROBE CHARGES? NEW PHASE OF SCHOOL CASE

Chairman Fitzgerald Says the Matter Will Not Be Allowed to Rest as It Is.

The board of education will not burk the inquiry into the coal scandal.

So said Chairman Fitzgerald this morning to The Advertiser. He has given instructions to the committee to continue the work, he says, and if sufficient facts are adduced, the matter will be laid before the county judge.

He declared that it was the duty of the board to find out whether the coal had been delivered or not, and that it was the duty to clear the board and others from all insinuations in the matter.

The committee will meet in a few days to consider the question.

Will Be Investigation.

"I want to correct the impression that there will be no investigation into the coal situation by the board of education," said Chairman Fitzgerald this morning. "We do not intend to burk injuiry, but will probe the matter to the bottom. The committee was instructed by the board to go into the matter thoroughly, and see what was the trouble. The committee only adjourned the other evening, I gave instructions to the chairman to meet again and that meeting will be called shortly. If sufficient facts are adduced we will take the matter to the county judge. If we are not getting the coal we ordered and pay for, we want to know it. If we are getting every pound of coal we order, then in the light of what has been said we want to know that also. It is our duty to see that this matter is cleared up, and we will do it. It is a serious matter. As I said, the committee will meet soon, and the matter will be probed."

Getting Things in Shape.

Now that there is certain to be an investigation, the parties interested are beginning to get their cases in order. Mr. W. Buchanan, the contractor interested, is preparing his case, and when "the investigation begins he will be ready with documents, he says.

"I intended to make a statement to the papers regarding our side of it," said he to The Advertiser, "but now that there is going to be an investigation, I do not think it wise to do so. When the investigation comes on, we will be ready with our side. We will have affidavits and such. We do not fear the fullest investigation into the

Chelsea Green a Pretty Suburb; Going Ahead at a Very Rapid Rate

Many New Houses Have Been Added—New Factories Are in Sight.

From a few bare fields over what used to be known as the old Port Stanley bridge there has arisen in a few short years a suburb that any city might well be proud of.

The story of the growth of Chelsea Green is a story of progress right from its inception up to the present time, when it is progressing more rapidly than ever. In the last year the population has increased over 25 per cent, buildings valued at over $50,000 have sprung up, and the prospects are that next year a large and flourishing industry will be added to the plants which are already erected at Chelsea Green.

A Buoyant Spirit.

Chelsea Green people are optimistic. They believe Chelsea Green has a future, that it is destined to become one of the leading manufacturing districts of a busy manufacturing city.

Their enthusiasm is justified, for go where you will around the pretty suburb, you cannot escape the hum of machinery that tells that goods are being manufactured there in no small quantities.

On the north the immense McClary works are turning out stoves which go to all parts of the world. West of this big plant is the rolling mills. These two plants, with their big smokestacks, which for hardly a day, year in and year out, cease to smoke, give employment to over 1,500 men, many of whom have their homes across the river in Chelsea Green, where they are just far enough away to be out of all the smoke, and yet remain within easy reach of their work.

Some Splendid Homes.

London is famed throughout America for the fine class of workingmen's homes it contains.

The houses of Chelsea Green are

South London Liberal Club Opening

The South London Liberal Club was opened for the season last evening, with a good crowd of the young Liberals present. The evening was spent informally, with cards and a smoker. The affair was a splendid success, and Mr. Angus Elliott, the hustling president, expressed himself as being much pleased at the prospects for the season. The South London Liberals have a very fine clubroom, and this winter it is expected that it will be the home of the Liberals in that district. The boys are very enthusiastic.

When the card games were over, Mr. Angus Elliott gave a brief address, in which he said that he was delighted to meet so many of the Liberals of South London, and he gave them a hearty welcome to the club. The club was achieving a recognized place in the life of Liberalism in South London, and he hoped that it would be the home of the young Liberals of the neighborhood. It was especially for them, and he was sure they will make use of it.

Mr. R. Smith, first vice-president also delivered a short address. He was delighted to see so many of the young men present. The South London Liberals had a very pleasant home, and he was sure they would appreciate it. Speeches were made by Mr. R. A. Kennedy, second vice-president; Frank Millson, secretary, and J. Harry Fowler.

The club will hold a whist and literary evening once a week from this time on, the day to be decided upon shortly.

Object to a Building Inspector Real Estate Men Pass Resolution

Say City Engineer Graydon Can Do All the Inspecting That Is Necessary.

The Real Estate Owners' Association, at a well-attended meeting last night had a warm discussion over the appointment of a building inspector for this city.

The members taking part in the discussion argued that there are comparatively few buildings erected in London each year of such a character that they would need inspection, the two used for argument being the Reid building and the new premises of Smallman & Ingram.

Buildings of this class, it was pointed out, in which there is likely to be large numbers of people, should be made as safe as possible.

Job for Mr. Graydon.

The members thought the city engineer was in a position to do all the inspecting necessary, although up to the time of the Reid disaster he had little or no authority, owing to there being no bylaw giving him power to enter premises and enforce what he thought was best.

It was suggested that if a bylaw were passed giving the engineer the necessary power to act as he thought proper and make what recommendations he thought right for the alteration of buildings, nothing more could be desired, and the appointment of an inspector would be unnecessary.

Against Fees.

The question of raising the proposed inspector's salary from fees from the buildings inspected would, it was stated, have a depressing effect on building operations.

Tenants were complaining now of the high rents, and if the builders have in addition to pay a large fee to an inspector for dwelling houses, they must charge more rent. Why it was necessary to inspect dwellings was a point which none of the members could understand, their opinion being that only such buildings as are in constant use by a large portion of the public, such as stores, hotels, etc., were all that needed to be made subject to such inspection.

Resolution Passed.

The following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Resolved: That in the opinion of this association, the appointment of a special building inspector would be quite unnecessary, as the three or four buildings per annum that it would be necessary to inspect could be done from the engineer's office."

K. O. T. M. Initiation.

There was a large initiation of candidates last night into London Tent, No. 17, K. O. T. M., Sir Knight Garner officiating. A large number of members were present, and a very enjoyable time was spent. The Forest City Hive, K. O. T. M., will entertain the members of London Tent at the next regular meeting.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES DISTEMPER.

SEALED TENDERS ADDRESSED TO THE undersigned, and indorsed "Tender for "Public Buildings at Kincardine, Ont.," will be received at this office until Tuesday, Oct. 22, 1907, inclusively, for the construction of a Public Building at Kincardine, Ont.

Plans and specification can be seen and forms of tender obtained at this department and on application to the postmaster at Kincardine.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed form supplied, and signed with their actual signatures.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted check on a chartered bank, made payable to the order of the Honorable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10%) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or if he fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the check will be returned.

The department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender. By order,

FRED. GELINAS, Secretary.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES DISTEMPER.

SEALED TENDERS ADDRESSED TO THE undersigned, and indorsed "Tender for "Public Buildings at Kincardine, Ont.," will be received at this office until Tuesday, Oct. 22, 1907, inclusively, for the construction of a Public Building at Kincardine, Ont.

Plans and specification can be seen and forms of tender obtained at this department and on application to the postmaster at Kincardine.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed form supplied, and signed with their actual signatures.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted check on a chartered bank, made payable to the order of the Honorable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10%) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or if he fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the check will be returned.

The department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender. By order,

FRED. GELINAS, Secretary.

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, Sept. 30, 1907.

Newspapers will not be paid for this advertisement if they insert it without authority from the department. 65o-tyw

THE GRADE CROSSING PROBLEM.

The grade crossing problem, which seems so slow of solution in this city, is also proving a very knotty one in Toronto. Casualties have been so frequent and delays to street traffic so constant and annoying as to arouse the citizens and cause the press to call for a speedy remedy.

Recently the Globe sent a commissioner, Mr. John A. Ewan, to the Eastern States to investigate the situation there. In a series of letters he shows what has been accomplished by American railways, on their own initiative, and, to a considerable extent, as a result of state legislation, in the direction of abolishing this grave modern evil.

When the late Commodore Vanderbilt years ago conceived the idea of building a station for his great railway, the New York Central, in the north end of New York City, he realized that before connection with the new building could be made some four and a half miles of track must be laid, and nearly one hundred busy streets must be crossed. To cross them at a level was out of the question. He must go over or under them, and he adopted both plans. The result is that today the railway, after crossing the Harlem River, runs for some distance on a solid stone viaduct, but soon dives underground, and is lost to sight until it emerges in the Grand Central station at 42nd street. Its right-of-way forms a sort of middle-of-the-road boulevard down the entire distance of Park avenue. A neat iron fence surrounds each plot between the streets, the grass is kept green and trim, trees and shrubs add to the boulevard aspect, and instead of being an eyesore the avenue is made a handsome and distinctive highway. The cost of the work was enormous, while the maintenance of three miles of lawn must be a source of no inconsiderable expense.

The other great railway systems of the Eastern States, whose terminals are on the far side of the North and East Rivers, necessitating the conveyance of passengers into New York by ferryboat, have long felt that they were handicapped in serving New York by the N. Y. C., and to overcome that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Long Island Railroad are now engaged in the enormous engineering and financial enterprise of piercing the two rivers with tunnels for six tracks, which will traverse the island of Manhattan underground. These will give access to what will be the largest railway depot in the world. The cost of the entire work is estimated at $50,000,000, the price of the station site alone being $8,000,000.

In the distance between New York and Philadelphia, 90 miles, the railway, though passing through three or four smaller towns, scarcely crosses even a country road at a grade, and the same may be said of the journey from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, and to Wilmington, Del. Through the whole stretch of Philadelphia, the main line of the Pennsylvania Railway is elevated above the streets, the work having been completed some twenty years ago. Since then considerable work of a similar kind has been done on branches of that road and other railways, and the good work is still going on.

All this has been brought about by means of negotiation between the municipal authorities and the railways. The result has been much to the advantage of the railway companies. Where the railways are still at grade casualties are constantly occurring, which only emphasizes the value of what has been accomplished and the urgent need of completing what remains. That is both the railway and the public view of it. One of several undertakings now in contemplation calls for the abolition of thirty-seven Philadelphia and Reading level crossing at a cost of $10,000,000.

In Buffalo, N. Y., twenty years ago the grade crossing situation was very bad. A dozen lines entered the city and the main street was crossed at one of its busiest points. In all there were 500 miles of railway in the city, and 330 grade crossings. The Legislature appointed a grade crossing commission, with power to negotiate with the railways and secure, if possible, voluntary action. A compulsory clause provided that where consent of the railway could not be obtained the city might go ahead with the improvement and charge the railway with its share of the cost. The first work was carried out in 1895. Where the tracks ran in a depression streets were carried over them by bridges or viaducts; and where tracks were high the roads were depressed and run under the tracks. By means of 17 viaducts, 19 subways, 5 foot bridges and the closing of 24 streets, 65 grade crossings were abolished. Up to date the cost of improvements has amounted to $5,361,160, the city's share of which has been $1,162,062. There have been in addition consequential damages of $2,035,244, the city assuming $1,055,101 of these. Before all the work had been completed the fatal accidents at grade crossings were reduced one-half.

At the present time the law of New York state provides that all steam surface railroads must hereafter be so constructed as to avoid all public crossings at grades where practicable so to do, nor may a new street or highway cross a railway at grade. The act also makes the railway responsible for the maintenance and repair of bridges and abutments at crossings. Where a new street is projected under or over a railway the cost is equally divided between the municipality and the company and one-quarter each by the municipality and state. The railroad commissioners may abolish a level crossing where public safety demands it.

In the Eastern States the grade crossing will soon be unknown. The laws of Connecticut require that all railways in future must pass over or under a highway, and as regards those already in existence the law provides that every company must abolish one grade crossing a year for every sixty miles of line it operates. This minimum rate of abolition has been much exceeded by the companies of their own motion. The law further provides that a steam railway shall not cross an electric railway or a horse railway at grade, and the municipality or railway company may petition the railroad commission for an order for the abolition of a grade crossing. Between New York and Bridgeport the railway does not pass a single roadway at grade. Nowhere do the railway and the highway attempt to occupy the same space at the same time. As might be expected Bridgeport did not get rid of the crossings by means of elevated tracks, without the usual wrangle over who should bear the cost. Finally the city's share was fixed by the railroad board at $400,000, which was calculated to be one-sixth of the estimated cost.

In Massachusetts $7,000,000 has been spent by the state alone in abolishing grade crossings. The railways have been in sympathy with the movement, and the work has consequently been much easier than it would have been under other circumstances. In 1890 the Legislature passed an act providing for the extinction of dangerous level crossings throughout the state, and distributing the cost as follows: The railways, whose tracks are affected, 65 per cent; the state 25 per cent, and the municipality directly concerned, 15 per cent. Already the Legislature has appropriated $10,000,000 towards the work, and although much has been accomplished, operations are still being vigorously carried on.

With regard to the share of the cost allotted to the railways and cities respectively in other states, it is learned that in Chicago the whole cost is put upon the railways; in New York States, excepting the city of Buffalo, where the work preceded the general law in regard to crossings, the railways pay 50 per cent; the state 25, and the city 25. In other states the practice has been also to divide the cost between the public and the railway corporations.

COTTON GROWING ON BRITISH SOIL.

That the British Government is hopeful of seeing a large portion of the cotton used by the mills of England grown under the British flag is shown by a clause of the public works loan bill, passed at the last session of Parliament, pledging the Government credit to the extent of £2,000,000 for the speedy development of the cotton-growing industry of West Africa by means of a railway running along the Niger into Northern Nigeria.

British skill and experience have enabled England to hold a proud position as the world's greatest cotton-manufacturing country, and it is realized that if British soil can be made produce the raw material required by the cotton mills of Lancashire and other sections of the United Kingdom, the great industry will be given a wonderful impetus.

Investigation and test have demonstrated that, leaving out Egypt, there is no part of the British Empire so well suited for the cultivation of cotton as Northern Nigeria. It is a well recognized fact that so far as soil and climate are concerned the region is as well adapted as are the American Southern States to the growth of cotton of good quality, while colored labor is to be obtained at least equally as cheap. But, unfortunately, Northern Nigeria suffers from lack of transportation facilities, caravans being the only means of carrying the products of the soil, which makes impracticable the export of a commodity of such large bulk as cotton. It is to overcome this serious drawback that the Imperial Government is now directing its attention, and it is felt that that end can be most speedily accomplished by the construction of a railway such as described.

In Southern Nigeria cotton-growing is only in its infancy, British experiments dating only five years back. Thus far the annual output has been insignificant, amounting in Lagos to but 500 bales in 1903. The past year, however, the quantity grown increased twenty-four-fold, to 12,000 bales, and if the crop should increase at the same rate during the next five years, in 1912 it would amount to 288,000 bales. By 1917, if it should still continue, the output would be close on 7,000,000 bales. The significance of this will be seen when it is stated the world's total actual supply in 1905-6 was 14,072,000 bales, nearly 12,000,000 of which United States cotton fields furnished.

The total length of the projected railway will be about 500 miles. It will begin at Baro, 70 miles from the mouth of the river. By means of jetties, similar to those at the mouth of the Mississippi, it is intended to give the lower reaches of the Niger a minimum depth which will make the river navigable all the year round. From Baro the railway will run to Kano, the Hausaland capital, there to connect with other lines now in course of construction or projected. The idea is to have the first section of the road completed in two years, and the last in four years.

Now that the British Government is showing an earnest desire to develop the cotton industry in this outlying portion of the Empire, it would seem that the time is not far distant when the United States will cease to enjoy practically a monopoly of the supply of raw cotton.

A NEW FIGURE IN POLITICS.

Politicians may learn something by keeping an eye on J. W. Curry, the Liberal candidate in East York for the Legislature.

Mr. Curry made a reputation as crown attorney of Toronto by setting the law in motion against the combines, and he is showing the same active and courageous spirit in politics.

He has accepted the Liberal nomination in East York, but gives all parties fair warning that he will be at no man's beck and call. He tells the electors what he believes and thinks about public questions, and that he intends to promote his own views if he reaches the Legislature, whether they agree with the views of his party associates or not. He declares that he will prosecute anyone spending a dollar illegally in the riding, and that no one need look to him for favors if he is elected. "I hope," he says, "that those who support me will not do so in the belief that in future they may be rewarded. I do not believe it is the duty of the representative of a riding to seek for his constituents public offices. If I cannot obtain a majority by fair fighting then I don't want to be elected."

Mr. Curry is out for civil service reform. He would divorce patronage from politics. He would reform criminal and civil law procedure; as an attorney of wide experience he speaks by the book. He does not believe in government by commission, which, he says, is an evasion of responsible government. He would place the responsibility of the public service squarely upon the shoulders of men elected by the public. In other respects Mr. Curry takes advanced ground.

While all the members of his own party may not agree with him, they must give him credit for sincerity and courage. His is a new voice in politics. His upright and downright methods are likely to strike a responsive chord. More and more they are becoming the methods which spell success in the public life of this country. Public men will do well to watch J. W. Curry.

Curry (J. W.) is hot stuff.

The Atlantic liners are being equipped with theaters and tennis courts. As Kipling's sailor contemptuously remarked: "The liner, she's a lady."

A good story appeal to a large proportion of newspaper readers. "As a Man Sows," which begins in today's edition is one of the best that have appeared in The Advertiser.

The garrison orders for the Toronto church parade, refer to street cars as "trams." This is typical Toronto snobbishness. A Canadian term would be beastly vulgar, doncher know.

A letter on the work of the church army in England by a Chicago writer, published in this edition, is capital reading. The combination of the sublime liturgy of the Church of England with stereoptican views and a brass band, suggests possibilities that have not occurred to churchmen on this side of the pond.

Our local contemporary, in discussing the water question today, overlooks the point that if the high-pressure system will save half a million gallons of spring water today, it will save much more ten years hence. There is a rapidly growing use of water for industrial and commercial purposes, street sprinkling, etc. The high-pressure service would serve the threefold purpose of supplying river water for all these uses, of reducing insurance rates, and of affording a degree of fire protection which no other scheme approaches.

A GIFT of $1,000

would please your wife, wouldn't it? It would please you too, to be able to give it—but perhaps you can't.

But you can make an investment which will give your wife—in case of your death—a Reserve Dividend Policy which is absolutely safe and as good as gold. It will guarantee her comfort at a time when she will most need it.

This is a new plan. It is one which every man in Canada should know about. Write to us and we will send you full information regarding it.

SWEET CHARITY.

[Hamilton Spectator.]

Sweet charity droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven. A few years ago there arrived at London, Ontario, a tiny girl, homesick and forlorn. For years she worked on a farm, and as she grew her desire to see her mother and little brother in faraway Ireland correspondingly increased. To bring them to Canada she did not possess the means, and finally her heartache drove her weary miles to London, where she told her tale to the Salvation Army. Her little story of distress was published in the London papers, and what happened? Already the sum of $108 has been subscribed, and soon there will be sufficient to bring the mother and brother to Canada, and make three hearts happy

WHERE MARRIAGE IS HAPPY.

[Nos Loisirs.]

Dublavin took a walk in the cemetery, where he noticed on a tombstone: "Good husband," "Good wife," "Good son."

"It is evidently here that the happiest homes are to be found," he reflected.

IT WILL HELP.

[Philadelphia Public Ledger.]

"You told him to diet himself," said the young doctor's wife.

"Yes," replied the young doctor. "I told him to eat only the very plainest food, and very little of that."

"Do you think that will help him?"

"It will help him to pay my bill."

THE GIRLS WITH THE MUSIC ROLLS.

[Chicago Record-Herald.]

See them going in the mornings to the many studios,
They are flocking in by hundreds, with what chances, goodness knows!
There goes one whose friends have told her Patti's voice was ne'er so sweet
As the voice that she possesses. Here comes one along the street
Who will some day make the people in their ecstasy forget
That there ever was a Melba—but she's practicing as yet.

See them with their rolls of music as they go their many ways;
Each from some grave-featured teacher has received unstinted praise.
They are leaving foolish pleasures for the sweet rewards of art,
They have dreams of future glory; each has courage in her heart;
From the flats and from the mansions they are hurrying along,
All supposing Fate has chosen them to cheer the world of song.

They are plain and they are pretty; they are short and they are tall,
But one hope they share together, and one dream is dreamd by all;
Future Calves by the dozen, future Melbas by the score,
They go wildly screeching daily till their diaphragms are sore,
And if even one among them shall achieve the splendid height,
It is well that they are hoping, that they try with all their might.

BASES OF GREATEST STEAMSHIPS' NAMES.

[New York Times.]

In all that has been written about the Lusitania, nothing that we have seen has been said about the meaning and origin of the name, and, while the word is so little mysterious that any moderately well-read person ought to know all about it, only a little questioning of such persons is needed to show that this is one of the bits of information which everybody, or almost everybody, who ever heard it has forgotten—for the reason, probably, that it was of no use. Looking a little deeper, an explanation is found in the curious withdrawal, after a period of intense activity and enterprise, of Portugal from the rest of the world's sight and hearing. Of all the surviving nations in Europe, Portugal seems most set apart, and for many a year it has but rarely made a visible ripple on the surface of events as known to the international journalism which is for most of us modern history.

Be that as it may, the Cunard Company, following its long-established habit of naming its ships after the classic subdivisions of Europe, lighted upon "Lusitania" and "Mauretania"—which might better have been "Mauritania"—for its latest and greatest achievements in marine architecture. The first is the ancient name of the country inhabited by the Lusitanii, which included the greater part of modern Portugal and ran over into the present Spanish provinces of Esdremadura and Toledo. The second, of about the same ages, comes from across the Straits of Gibraltar, where the Maurl lived—the present Morocco, or thereabout.

CANADIAN FOOTBALL GUIDE

making a catch the rule is: "Opponents who are off-side shall not come within 3 yards of nor interfere in any way with a player attempting to make a fair catch or receiving a bounding ball. In case the ball bounds 3 yards must still be given." The penalty is the same as usual, viz., loss of the ball and scrimmage on spot where ball was last played.

A Clean Scrimmage.

The scrimmage rule is as follows:

A scrimmage shall consist of three players, who must form one compact body; when the ball is fairly held within the grounds, one of the scrimmagers of the side to which it belongs shall bring it into play where it was held, by placing it dead in front of him; and one of the scrimmagers of the side in possession of the ball must then put it into motion in any direction with his foot.

Opposing players must not come into contact with each other until the ball is placed on the ground, and no player shall touch the ball with his hand until it has been put in motion by a foot of one of the side in possession of the ball.

If any player being on the ground does not immediately get up, or if the ball is not put into play, or if an opponent interferes with the ball being put into play, or if during a scrimmage any player gets upon his knees, lies upon the ball, or touches it with his hands before it is put in motion with the foot of one of the side in possession, the side offending shall be penalized.

If, after the scrimmage has taken its position, the player who is to scrimmage the ball should voluntarily make any motion as if to put it into play, whether he withholds it altogether or only momentarily, it shall be considered one down.

Lines Must Stand Apart.

At the moment when the ball is placed on the ground the players of both teams must be altogether behind the ball. Exception: The head and shoulders of the man who places the ball on the ground may be ahead of the ball, but only while so doing.

For any infringement of the above scrimmage rules the penalty shall be loss of the ball against the team in possession, and the loss of 10 yards or a free kick against the side not in possession of the ball.

After the ball is put in play, the players on the line of scrimmage of the side that has possession of the ball shall not lock their hands or arms, but only while on the line of scrimmage, may obstruct the opponents with the body only. For an infringement of this rule the offended side shall be given the ball. The player running with the ball may use his hands or arms.

No player shall hold with his hands or arms an opponent who has not the ball. For an infringement of this rule the penalty shall be 10 yards or the loss of the ball.

There is to be no throwing in on the touch-line. When the ball goes into touch it is brought back and scrimmaged anywhere from 5 to 15 yards from the line.

Coaches Off the Field.

A brand new clause is that which keeps coaches off the field. The rule: "There shall be no coaching, either by substitutes or by any other person not participating in the game. In case of accident to a player one representative of the player's team may, if he has first obtained the consent of the referee, come upon the field of play to attend to the injured player. The breach of any part of this rule shall be punished by a loss of 15 yards to the side whose man infringes, the number of the down and the distance to be gained for first down remaining unchanged."

TEACHERS IN CONVENTION

Interesting Subjects Discussed at Palmerston—Officers Chosen.

Palmerston, Oct. 5.—The annual teachers' convention of the North Wellington district was held yesterday at Palmerston, and was most successful.

Papers were read by Mr. C. Cameron (president), Mr. Ira Halpenny, Miss E. Sherman, Mr. W. J. Gardiner, Prof. W. J. Alexander, of the University of Toronto, and Mr. C. Sheppard, delegate to the O. E. A. convention. All the papers were well received, and created a favorable impression.

The officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Hon. president, Mr. R. Galbraith, B.A.; president, Mr. C. Sheppard; vice-president, Miss Mary Dulmage; treasurer, Mr. R. Galbraith, I. P. S.; secretary, Miss J. Craigmill; auditors, Miss E Shaughnessy and Mr. G. R. Theobald; executive committee, Messrs. C Sheppard, B. Atkins, R. Galbraith and Misses T. McIntyre, S. Calloway J. Craigmill, B. Montgomery, M Moore, C. Patterson, and M. Sidway.

It was decided to hold the next convention in Harriston during the first week in October. Miss L. Hawkins was chosen delegate to the O. E A. convention, with Miss J. Patterson as substitute.

Of the corrupt customs that marked old-time English politics a writer in the London Chronicle says: "During the reign of George III. 388 peers were created, most of them for political jobbery. The favorite type of jobbery was the manufacture of constituencies guaranteed to return faithful supporters of the Government. 'It was a common practice,' writes a historian of the period, 'to carry an election by splitting up one freehold into ten, thus multiplying ten-fold the influence of a local magnate.' Lord Melville, so late as the first quarter of the nineteenth century, was able to return 39 out of the 45 members for Scotland." eleven persons.

DESIGNED BY MARTHA DEAN.

6977—THE NEWEST THING IN WORK APRONS.

Picturesqueness is rather an unusual quality in a garment designed for purely utilitarian purposes, but it is the distinguishing feature of the work apron illustrated, the shaping of which is as effective as it is novel. The apron is ingeniously cut in one piece, the front being in princess style while the back is gathered into a belt. The square cut body portion, with extensions, forming epaulettes, gives a very smart appearance to the apron, which will prove an acceptable addition to the feminine wardrobe. Striped percale was used for making, 4⅛ yards 36 inches wide, being needed for the medium size. Gingham, lawn or crossbar muslin are also suitable materials.

6977—Six sizes, 32 to 42 inches, bust measure.

The price of this pattern is 10c.

Letter Carrier's Statement.

London, Oct. 3, 1907.

To the Editor of The Advertiser:

The letter carriers of London take exception to a statement or memorandum which appeared in the Toronto Globe, Sept. 26, as presented by Mr. Geo. Ross to the civil service commissioners.

He devoted considerable time and attention to the condition of the letter carriers; he advised against going back to a system of paying these employes by the month.

The letter carriers, stated Mr. Ross, very often compared their work with that of other laborers and cite the case of laborers on the street receiving $2 00 per day as compared with letter carriers' lower pay.

"In this connection it may be stated that the letter carriers are, with few exceptions, physically incapable of undertaking heavy manual labor. A large percentage of them are small of stature and lightly built and quite unable to endure the heavy strain borne by men employed as ordinary laborers. Indeed, I question if 50 per cent of the staff would be equal to the task and I am quite sure the employers of labor would hesitate at affording employment to fully 75 per cent of the letter carriers."

We infer from this that the letter carriers, or fully 75 per cent,are totally incapable of performing any kind of manual labor outside of letter carrying.

He also adds a large percentage are small of stature and employers of labor would hesitate to give 75 per cent of us employment. In fact, he represents us in his flow of wisdom as a miserable class of men.

Now, sir, we characterize those statements an insult to the carriers staff; an insult to our wives and children; an insult to our friends, and unless Mr. Ross apologizes through the press to the London staff of carriers, we hurl his offensive utterance back in his face with the same force and purpose with which he gives it to us, and say forthwith we can prove by facts and figures that in so far as his statement applies to London it is false and misleading in the extreme.

Now, in regard to men who are small of stature, I submit to you the names of twenty-seven men; men who are employed on the twenty-seven different divisions in our city.

Chas. O. Stapleton, 5 ft. 11 in.; 173 lbs.
Henny Bernard, 5 ft. 8 in.; 170 lbs.
Pence Flaherty, 5 ft. 11 in.; 172 lbs.
M. O'Rourke, 5 ft. 9½ in.; 140 lbs.
Fred Currie, 5 ft. 7 in.; 170 lbs.
Thos. Dixon, 5 ft. 7 in.; 142 lbs.
John Wilson, 5 ft. 9½ in.; 173 lbs.
W. M. Empey, 5 ft. 10½ in.; 186 lbs.
Jas. Cushing, 5 ft. 9 in.; 187 lbs.
Thos. Brennan, 5 ft. 9 in.; 152 lbs.
Jas. Nicholson, 5 ft. 11 in.; 162 lbs.
Walter Logan, 5 ft. 10 in.; 142 lbs.
John Denahy, 5 ft. 10½ in.; 150 lbs.
Wm. Stallard, 5 ft. 8 in.; 142 lbs.
W. R. Pate, 5 ft. 10 in.; 152 lbs.
Walter Pevler, 5 ft. 9½ in.; 156½ lbs.
Percy Phillips, 5 ft. 9½ in.; 145 lbs.
Fred Bailey, 5 ft. 7 in.; 134 lbs.
Thos. Cockrill, 5 ft. 8½ in.; 155 lbs.
Walter Taylor, 5 ft. 7in.; 134 lbs..
John Cushing, 5 ft. 8 in.; 172 lbs.
John Brimacombe, 5 ft. 9 in.; 135 lbs.
John Francis, 5 ft. 5½ in.; 148 lbs.
Chas. McIndoe, 5 ft. 9½ in.; 135 lbs.
Benjamin Kennedy, 5 ft. 8 in.; 198 lbs.
John McPhee, 5 ft. 5 in.; 140 lbs.
Harry Floyd, 5 ft. 10 in.; 185 lbs.

You can see at a glance we are above the average height and weight, and what is true of London is true, I verily believe, of other Canadian cities. We are prepared to make affidavit that the above figures are correct in every particular. We are also prepared to say that 95 per cent of the London carriers are capable of performing any kind of manual labor and the employers of labor in our city would not hesitate to employ us, because we believe along with the citizens of London that we are a superior class of men.

Go to any shop in Toronto or Hamilton or any other city, take your men as they stand at their bench or desk, place twenty-seven of them together, and unless you pick your men from several hundred as they are employed at any large establishment, I here question if you can produce twenty-seven men who will favorably compare with the carriers staff of the City of London.

We average in the heavy-weight class 161 1-5 lbs. per man; average height, 5 ft. 8 9-10 in., or 1-10 of an inch of being 5 ft. 9 in. per man.

We are a husky lot, this staff who hustles his majesty's mail in the city of London, and we question the right of any man to misrepresent us to the people of Canada, but more especially to the royal civil service commissioners.

Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor, and hoping that you will see that the letter carriers of London receive just and fair treatment in this matter, I beg to remain, truly yours,

W. MILTON EMPEY,
Recording secretary,
London Association of Letter Carriers.

To Our Patrons,—We believe vocal pupils will be delighted to know that the Conservatory has secured Miss Eva Van Norman Tillson for London, and, although having received many flattering offers, both in Paris and the United States, she believes in London as a center, hence her decision to make this city her home, and the Conservatory the focusing point for her rare ability in teaching. Miss Tillson began her vocal career in Toronto. She carried off the Conservatory gold medal for singing, before many competitors. Having proven her singing and teaching so successfully, she was engaged to teach at Havergal Ladies' College, after which she took charge of the vocal department at Alma Ladies' College. Not satisfied with such success as was hers, she decided to go to Paris, France, to study with Mr. Frank King Clark, that celebrated vocal teacher, who has ascended to a pre-eminent position in the musical world by reason of his wonderful method of voice-building, his rare gifts in imparting and his original ideas. Mr. Clark became so interested in Miss Tillson's personality and voice, and believing in her musical ability to sing and teach, he took exceptional care in developing her voice and imparting to her his method and ideas in voice-building, so she comes invigorated with the very latest ideas and method of the great teacher, full of enthusiasm, hope and belief in her power to produce a voice if one can be made. This is half the success of a pupil with a teacher. One can overcome many difficulties when the teacher is encouraging and honestly hopeful for a pupil. Among the many advantages of life in Paris, Miss Tillson had exceptional privileges of meeting and hearing the great artists in grand opera. The opportunities given her were unusual. She studied French opera under the chef du chant of the Paris Grand Opera, and also took the course in stage training from the First Dancer of the Grand Opera. This latter study is a necessary qualification for stage and salon deportment, and gives her a rare advantage in teaching vocalists the many little graces and nuances so necessary for concert appearances. Voice placing, breathing and repertoire will be found her chief delight in teaching, for a delight it is to her—no matter how small or insignificant the voice. She has the true instincts of a teacher, namely, to do the utmost with pleasure for the least of voices. Her accomplishments are many, numbering among them languages and piano. She will be pleased to hear voices, male or female, gratis, and may be interviewed at any hour during each day at the Conservatory, Dundas street. Day 'phone 1101, after 6 o'clock 'phone 462.

THE EMBRO FAIR

Big Crowd Saw Some Fine Exhibits—Directors Made Happy.

Embro, Oct. 4.—The annual fair of the Embro and West Zorra Agricultural Society was favored with fine weather in the morning, but in the afternoon the rain came down in torrents. A very large crowd attended, and the directors are well pleased with the results.

The exhibits of fruit, grain, vegetables, etc., was very good, and there was a good showing of ladies' work. Mr. W. G. Rounds, photographer, of Woodstock, exhibited a number of beautiful enlarged portraits, which reflected great credit on the artist.

Some fine horses, heavy and light, were shown, while in cattle, sheep, swine and poultry the exhibits were very large.

The Woodstock Band furnished excellent music for the occasion.

Under the auspices of the Curling Club a concert was held in the town hall in the evening, and was well patronized. The talent engaged for the evening were from the Harry Rich Entertainment Bureau, Toronto, and gave great satisfaction.

THE CAPTAIN SHOWED BRAVERY

Disregarded Serious Illness and Took Command When Crash Came.

Montreal, Oct. 4.—That there was no loss of life on board the Mongolian when she and the Hurona smashed together 110 miles east of Belle Isle Straits is looked upon as almost miraculous.

So dense was the fog at the time of the disaster that it was impossible to see a few yards ahead, and had the smash occurred amidships in place of the vessels coming bow on, it would have been a poor lookout for the 160 persons on board the Mongolian.

The collision occurred at 7 o'clock on Sunday evening. The Mongolian at the time was running slowly, the wind was high, and the seas were running heavy. The passengers who were on the deck of the Mongolian at that hour state that the first intimation the officers had of the approaching Hurona was when they saw a light on the port side, which could not have been a hundred yards distant.

The next they knew the two vessels met with a terrific crash. The Mongolian was struck by the Thomson Liner's bow some twenty feet from her cutwater, and an immense rent was torn from the deck down a length of 25 feet. An immediate rush followed by volumes of water into her fore hold, and it was only the bulkheads that kept the vessel afloat.

The Hurona had her stem badly broken and a hole forced in her bow which fortunate, however, was above the water line, therefore her injury was not of any very grave character. As a precautionary measure it was thought best to transfer the passengers from the Mongolian to the Hurona. Captain Gamble utilizing four of the Mongolian's boats.

Fortunately within five minutes of the time the collision occurred the fog lifted and those on board the Mongolian saw for the first time the Thomson liner and recognized the Hurona.

John Sharpe, who has resided in Toronto for over a year, and who was going to his home in Glasgow on the Mongolian, said: "I was walking on the stern quarter deck about 7 o'clock Sunday evening. We were about one hundred miles off the Straits of Belle Isle, and a dense fog prevailed. We were running slowly. I saw a green light loom out of the darkness on the port side. I judged it to be about a hundred yards off.

"The next moment I saw the vessels meet. The vessels seemed to sheer off after the collision, and the fog seemed to almost instantly clear away. There was practically no excitement on board the Mongolian. Orders were at once given to man the life boats and one of the boats put out to the Hurona in order to learn the extent of her injuries. On returning half an hour later the officer in charge of the boat reported that the Hurona was taking no water They also brought to the captain of the Mongolian an offer from the Hurona's captain to take all passengers on board, which offer was accepted. Captain Gamble, of the Mongolian, was at the time of the disaster very ill and confined to his bed. When the crash came he rushed to the bridge in his pyjamas and took charge of the ship."

The Mongolian limped into the port of Quebec at 9:30 this morning, some hours later than the Hurona.

Considerably more than half the people of the world live in the countries which border on the Pacific Ocean. The latest available statistics, furnished by the United States department of commerce and labor, give these countries, exclusive of the United States, an area of 17,096,060 square miles and a population of 904,363,000.

Malaysia—that is, Java,Sumatra and the federated Malay States—is of much more commercial importance than is usually thought. It buys canned apricots, peaches and pears almost entirely from California. Until 1903 the United States supplied three-fourths of the flour, but Australian flour has cut into that trade heavily. It is a large buyer of condensed milk from Europe, the United States and Canada. Its agricultural implement requirements are large. Modern mining machinery is growing in use for tin mining.

Pandoras Will Please You—SURE

My business is to sell stoves and ranges that stay sold when the buyer takes as a final proof cooking and heating deeds in the kitchen.

When I recommend a

Pandora Range

I back up the maker's guarantee, which puts responsibility on two shoulders for "full" service in every Pandora sale.

The Pandora inquirer doesn't need a bullseye to locate the merits.

They are just about every place on this range that you can put a finger.

Oven construction and ventilation grates, linings, flues, ashpan, reservoir, nickeling, etc., you will find with Pandora Range. There is that "something" which in people we call "caste"—a regular blue-blood range.

I should like to give you a first-hand demonstration of Pandora superiority—in service, in looks, in everything. Call and see me next market day.

The Charm of Beauty

NOTHING OF MORE VALUE TO WOMEN.

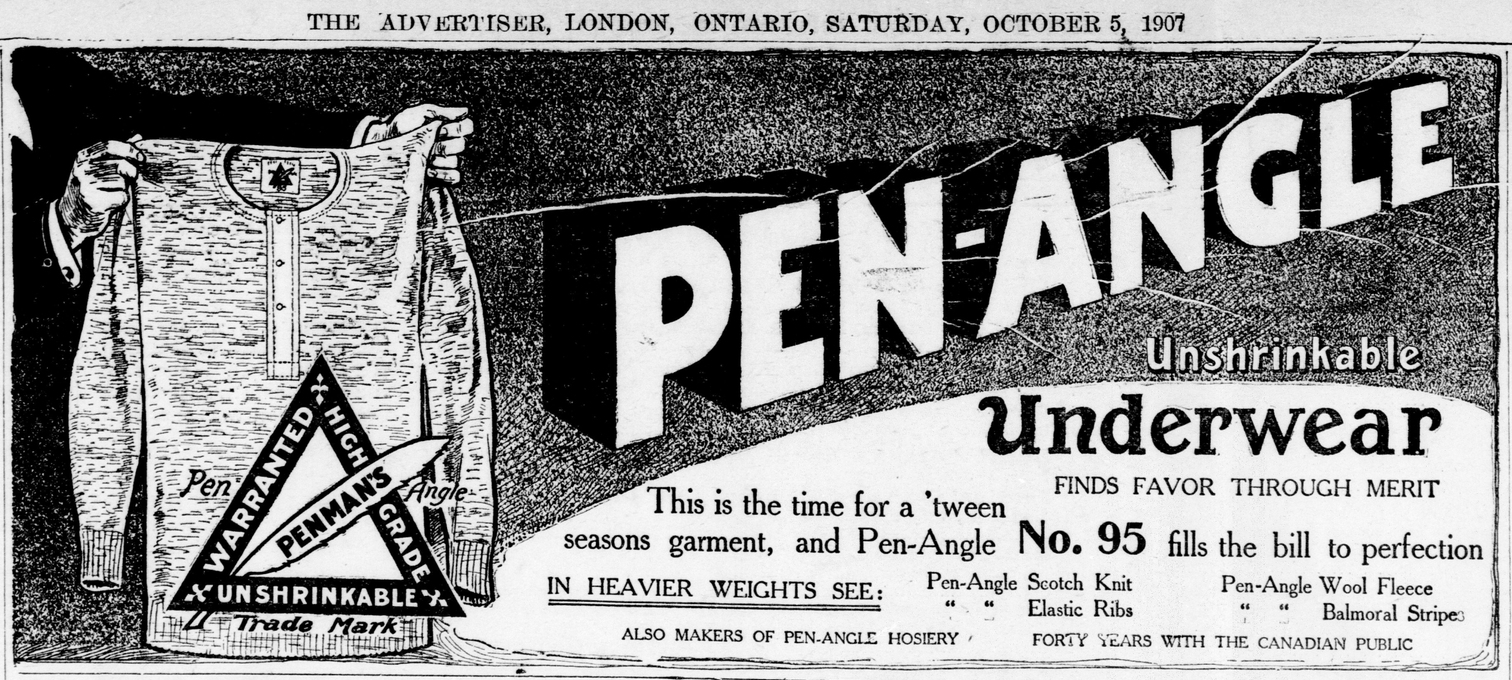

No weak woman can be happy or enjoy half the pleasures of life. Pallid cheeks, sunken eyes, exhausted nerves, all tell of a terible struggle to keep up.

What the weak women needs is Ferrozone; it renews, restores and vitalizes instantly—it's a "woman's remedy"—that's why.

Ferrozone makes women strong, plump and healthful because it contains lots of nutriment, the kind that forms muscle, sinew, bone and nerve.

Vitalizing blood courses through the body, making delightful color, happy spirits, true womanly strength.

To look well, to feel well, to enjoy the unlimited advantages of robust, bounding health use Ferrozone; sold by all dealers in 50 cent boxes, and refuse a substitute.

"DUFF" WOOD IS CHAMPION

Florence Woolley proved to be the fastest junior runner, with Mae Parsons a close second, and Edna Garrett just behind, while Geraldine Fitzgerald led the way for the senior girls, with Meta Patterson second best.

It was quite evident that Daisy Spicknell comes of a baseball family or has numbered among her ancestors some former knights of the diamond, for she threw the baseball in real Tyrus Cobb fashion in the junior contest.

Miss V. Ackland also proved that it is not only the boys who can throw the leather-covered spheroid by defeating a large field in the senior class.

The High Jump.

Perhaps the most interesting event on the programme from an athletic standpoint was the senior high jump, in which the Collegiate record was shattered by three inches.

At the start off the race appeared to lie between Pope and MacRobert. Later it was found that any one of five contestants had a look-in. Little John Higgins proved the dark horse in the affair, and his clever work was roundly applauded.

Jack Pope set the pace and jumped the cleanest of the two until five feet had been reached, when he hurt his wrist in landing, after one of the jumps, and took second at 5 feet 4 inches, two inches over the best mark made heretofore.

The Sprints.

In the sprints the new Collegiate champion, Wood, cleaned up handsomely, as well as showing his heels to twenty odd competitors in the half-mile run. The little champion was second in the running broad jump, and in putting the 12-pound shot.

He was strongly advised not to enter the latter event against much heavier opponents, and, as was afterward proved, could have won the championship without the two points gained in the shot-put.

A Surprise.

One of the surprises of the day was the showing made by Clifford Richardson, who ran an easy second in the 100-yards dash. The youngster had not trained a day for the contest, and entered the event just to see what he could do.

Higgins, the runner-up, had a monopoly on the jumps, winning both the running high and broad jumps handily.

In the open events, the Y. M. C. A. boys scored the largest number of points, which, of course, had no effect on the Collegiate championship.

That sterling sprinter, Jack Sweeney, led the way in the open 100-yard dash, but was beaten in the 220-yard affair, which was taken by Legge, a dark horse, who finished third in the 100-yard contest.

Gilmour, the well-known football player, ran in the latter event in full football regalia, and finished second.

Brock took second honors in the 220-yards dash.

Relay Race.

The one-third mile open relay race was a hummer, and although the Y. M. C. A. team, composed of Sweeney, Mel Brock, and Poulton, reached the tape first, the Medico team, made up of Kidd, Wilson and Ramsey, were only a few yards behind.

It is understood that all of Sweeney's points will be thrown out, as he is said to have never been a student of the L. C. I., or is not at present a student of any other school, as the rules governing the open events called for.

Many of last year's novelties, such as wrestling, obstacle racing, etc., were minus quantities.

The day's sport, however, was excellent, and everybody, from the standful of megaphoned, color-bedecked students down to the verfest youngster on the grounds, enjoyed themselves immensely.

A Popular Victory.

The victory of young Wood was a most popular one.

Three years ago Malcolm, or "Duff," as he is familiarly known by his classmates, came second in the junior events. This is his first year's competition as a senior, and he will be heard from again in the future.

BOWLY—PRIOR

Londoner Is Bridegroom in a Pretty Wedding in South Delaware.

A very pretty wedding took place in Burns' Church, South Delaware, on Tuesday, Oct. 1, when Emma Louise, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Prior, was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. Bowly, of London. Rev. R. McIntyre, officiated. As the bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her father, the wedding march was played by Mrs. John McFarlane, after which the choir rendered "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden."

The bride looked charming in a gown of white embroidered net, over white taffeta silk, and wore the conventional veil and orange blossoms.

She was assisted by Miss Nita Bowly, sister of the groom, who wore mauve eolienne, while Miss Gertrude Prior, cousin of the bride, acted as flower girl. The groom was supported by Mr. Wesley Forbes, of London.

After the ceremony the guests repaired to "Thrifty," the handsome home of the bride, where a reception was held. The many and valuable presents testify to the popularity of the bride and groom, among them being a silver tea service from the groom's father, and a handsome clock from South Delaware choir.

The bride's traveling dress was of green broadcloth, with hat to match. The happy couple left on a trip to Pelee Island and Detroit. Mrs. Bowly will be at home to her friends at "Brighton Villa," South London, after Nov. 1.

Sirs,—I came across a bottle of your MINARD'S LINIMENT in the hands of one of the students at the University of Maryland, and he being so kind as to let me use it for a very bad sprain, which I obtained in training for foot races, and to say that it helped me would be putting it very mildly, and I therefore ask if you would let me know of one of your agents that is closest to Baltimore, so that I may obtain some of it. Thanking you in advance, I remain, yours truly,

Gourlay, Winter & Leeming

FACTORY-STORE.

That there has never before been offered such great reductions in such high-grade Pianos in this city is evident by the number who are taking advantage of this wonderful sale of all rented and odd styles of pianos. People are buying that had never thought of pianos for some time to come, but when they see this stock they realize it is time to act.

The instruments are all such well-known makers as Gourlay, Mendelssohn, Dominion and Empress Pianos, and the usage they have had does not take from their value, in fact most of these pianos cannot be told from brand new ones. Then there are some odd styles of cases that we are closing out at prices that appeal to everyone.

Every instrument is guaranteed. Old instruments are taken in exchange. Terms arranged to suit you. If you had thought of buying for Christmas come in now and save just about one-half on the price and get a piano that is recognized as the best.

EMBRO INCIDENTS

Pretty Wedding at the Home of Mr. and Mrs. McCorquodale.

Embro, Oct. 4.—Scotch Thistle Lodge, the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. William McCorquodale, was the scene of a happy event recently when relatives and friends to the number of about 70 gathered to witness the marriage of their second daughter, Miss Ella, to Mr. Willis J. Burton, eldest son of Mr. Charles Burton, of East Zorra. To the strains of the wedding march, played by the bride's cousin, Miss Belle McCorquodale, the bridal party entered the beautifully-decorated drawing-room and stood beneath an arch of flowers and ribbon. Rev. James Barber, of Knox Church, perfosmed the ceremony. The bride was tastefully attired in a gown of white organdie, wearing the conventional veil and carrying a bouquet of white roses. She was unattended, save by her little twin sisters, Misses Sarah and Jessie, who acted as flower girls. After congratulations, the guests repaired to the dining-room, where a dainty repast was served. The young couple left on the evening train for Niagara and Toronto, where their honeymoon will be spent. The beautiful and costly array of presents testified to the esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Burton are held. A host of Embro and Zorra friends unite in wishing them every happiness in their wedded life. They will reside on the 16th line of East Zorra.

Philadelphia at Washington (2 games.)
Detroit at St. Louis.
Cleveland at Chicago.
Boston at New York.

Washington, Oct. 4.—The Philadelphias went down to defeat in the first game of the Washington series today thus losing one of the four games they had counted on winning in order to overcome the Detroits' lead should the latter lose the St. Louis series. The Philadelphias came back in the second game of the day, however, and won so easily that it heartened Manager Connie Mack, and tonight he claimed that the race for the pennant was still on.

"They did not display as much ginger in both games combined as Hughey Jennings in one inning," said a Washington rooter in a loud voice, as the double foray on the Washington lot between the Senators and the Quakers closed this afternoon. And the remark was applauded so vigorously as to establish that this was the sentiment of the grandstand.

Connie Mack Is Sore.

Connie Mack is very, very sore. He says so himself. But on the showing made here by the Detroits and Athletics it is apparent that the two teams are not in the same class, and that was the opinion of people right and left at the games today. Mack says he would have been all right if his pitchers, Bender and Waddell, had not gone wrong, and even so experienced a baseball critic as Nick Young, former president of the National League, who saw today's games, corroborate Mack's idea. That is to say, he thinks the main strength of Philadelphia was in its throwing artists, and when they failed the real caliber of the team was made to stand out in bold relief.

"There was never anything finer in baseball than the hit-and-run practice of Jones and Schaefer, of the Detroits," said Mr. Young today. "Four times I saw the man on first steal in the games Detroit played here with Schaefer at bat, and each time Schaefer put the ball through the hole left vacant by the man who ran to cover second. That is real baseball. I am sorry for Connie Mack, for he is one of the very best men I ever knew, and he feels very bad over losing out, but I must say that the job was done by people who are entitled to be where they are today."

Games Poorly Attended.

The games here today were not well attended. The people of the capital have made up their minds that the pennant goes to Detroit, and they did not think it worth while to go to the park to witness what happened there. Even if Philadelphia were to win all the games here, the Washington fans do not concede that they have a small show, for they expect to learn tomorrow and next day that the Tigers have taken all the games at St. Louis.

After seeing the Detroits play, and having had the Browns here within a few days, they do not see how it can be otherwise. But it did tickle the Washington players to be able to demonstrate that they are not as bad as their play against Detroit would indicate. When they won the first game, 2 to 1, the players cavorted and danced with almost as much evidence of joy as was shown by Jennings when he heard that Cleveland had beaten Philadelphia on the same day he took two from the Senators.

One Washington player, Mr. Delehanty, sezed a bat as the winning run came over and beat a tattoo upon the side of the grandstand with all his strength and several of them shook hands with themselves and everybody else within reach.

The game, the loss of which meant so much for the Philadelphias, went ten innings and "Idaho Wonder" Johnson was chiefly instrumental in practically extinguishing their chances for the championship. He was very effective with men on bases, and kept the light hits made by Mack's men well scattered. Plank was touched up for 10 hits, several of which came in bunches. The Washingtons broke the ice in the sixth inning, three singles sending Delehanty across the plate. The Philadelphias tied it up in the eighth. Collins, who batted for Powers, hit to the clubhouse for three bases, but was out at the plate on Hartsel's grounder to Shipke. Lord hit to left, scoring Hartsel.

The fielding of both teams for nine innings was perfect, although the people from Quakertown did not have the snap and go that one would expect from those claiming title to championship honors.

Athletics Show Their Yellowness.

But in the tenth, when the score was tied, 1 and 1, the yellowness of the Athletic outfit came to the surface after Shipke had batted the ball for a base. The next man up, Pitcher Johnson, made first on an error by Monte Cross. Then Milan bunted and he also reached first because no one was covering the bag. This packed the sacks with nobody out, and it only needed a bad throw by Harry Davis to the plate of Ganley's infield hit to demonstrate what was meant when it was said in the famous 17-inning game at Philadelphia that the Athletics were so scared that their faces were white.

Before Schreck could pick up the ball after dropping Davis' throw, Shipke had slid across the plate and the game was over, 2 to 1. But even if Davis had nailed Shipke at the plate the game would doubtless have gone to Washington, for with the bases full and such a batter as Delehanty next up it would have been all the same because Delehanty is good for at least one long fly against any pitcher on the road, while following him was Kay, who took three hits off of Bill Donovan yesterday. In the second game Dygert was at his best, as he is apt to be against a weak team, and there was nothing doing for Washington.

Hurst's Decisions Are Bad.

Hughes pitched a strong game for Washington at that, but he was the victim of a line of the worst decisions on balls and strikes Umpire Hurst is capable of, and everybody knows Tim can go some when it comes to being rotten. One of the meanest tricks played in connection with the campaign is the reproduction in half a dozen eastern papers of that series of interviews with different club managers about two weeks ago, in which all but Ned Hanlon said Connie Mack's team was to get there, and even Hanlon admitted that it was his sympathy for Jennings and not his baseball judgment that spoke.

Connie Mack tonight is sticking to that very obscure fraction by which he may still win in case Detroit drops all three at St. Louis and he wins both games here tomorrow, but he has a faraway look in his eyes as he speaks of this chance to bring the flag to Philadelphia. It is a very faraway look.

Over 50 telegrams went from Washington to tell Jennings how the first game here came out. Scores:

ARE YOU GOING TO DETROIT?

All arrangements have practically been made by the Hermitage of this city for the holding of their big excursion to Detroit next week on the occasion of the anticipated world's championship games there with the Chicago Cubs.

The fare for the round trip, good for two days, will be only $1 60, and it is expected that several hundred people at least will take in the trip. Information can be obtained from Allen Towe, Frank Millar, or any other member of the Hermitage.

DETROIT HAS GONE BASEBALL MAD

Detroit, Oct. 5.—"The pennant or bust!" is the epitome of the baseball feeling in Detroit. The city is baseball mad. On the streets, in the street cars, in the homes, everywhere, baseball and the Tigers are the subjects of discussion.

The whole State of Michigan, even to the water tanks, is howling for the Tigers. The newspapers are besieged with long-distance calls from towns in the northern peninsula each night, and the eternal question is, "Did the Tigers win?"

So great is the clamor to know the results of the games since the Tigers have been away, that the newspapers have ceased giving out the score over the telephone. Twenty girls on each newspaper couldn't satisfy the demand for baseball news.

CAN'T SHAKE HIM OFF

From the New York World.

A BATTLE ROYAL.

He Bet Against the Tigers

By way of punishment for having had the audacity to wager that the Detroit Tigers would not win the American League pennant, Roy Brebner, a St. Thomas young man, will be given a ride this evening up and down Talbot street, the main thoroughfare of the railroad village, in a baby carriage.

The winner of the wager was Michael Heenan, who will act as timekeeper for the baby carriage performance.

To Walk 136 Miles in 36 Hours

Peterboro, Oct. 4.—In an effort to establish a record as the champion long-distance walker in Ontario, David Hartley, of this city, will, on Friday, Oct. 25, walk 136 miles, practically the distance between Port Hope and Toronto and return, in 34 hours, four hours less time than that attempted by Reynolds, of Port Hope, in June last.

Hartley will start at Bowmanville on the morning of the 25th at 7 o'clock, will go to Toronto and return to Peterboro, a distance of 136 miles. The Peterboro man will make this attempt in the endeavor to prove that Reynolds' claim that he is the champion walker is not valid, and there is no side bet in the proposal. Hartley's record is 36 hours for 155½ miles Peterboro people will pin their faith on Hartley, and a demonstration is being planned for him on his arrival from his long walk. He expects to reach this city at 5 o'clock on Saturday night, Oct. 26.

He claims that, by starting this walk in the morning, he will have an advantage over the other men who have attempted this feat, since he will be starting after a night's rest, whereas Reynolds commenced at night, when he was tired.

Detroit Grit Won the Pennant

Looks like Detroit is the goods.

The only thing that can now transfer the American League pennant to Philadelphia is for every man on Hughey Jennings' team to break a leg and Hughey to lose his voice.

The Tigers practically cinched the flag when they grabbed those two games at Washington, while Philadelphia was being trounced by Cleveland and the Highlanders were garnishing off the White Sox. The world's champions were out of it two days ago, but Griffith thought it well to make the job complete, so the last nail was driven into the coffin on the hill with due and solemn ceremony.

The Athletics still have a mathematical chance, but it is very mathematical.

The victory of Detroit seems to be popular, notwithstanding the fact that the Athletics were a hot favorite in the east two weeks ago. The American public loves gameness, whether it be in a man, a horse, or a rooster. They have found that the Tigers are boiling over with grit, and just now Jennings can get anything in these parts that he wants. The red blood in his veins is what won the American League pennant and the American sportsman is foolish about his red blood.

On clear-cut ability the Tigers cannot be said to be a better club than the Athletics, but they have a certain amount of snap and vim that catches a crowd right from the start, and their opponents usually crumple up and quit. Their record has been most remarkable.

Starting from near the bottom, the Tigers have gradually fought every obstacle in the way until they are at the top. At the beginning Jennings had everything known among ball clubs to give him discouragement. His players were at war with each other, and were always fighting among themselves. But Hughey paid little heed to those conditions, which usually keep managers up at night. He taught them the spirit which lies in conquest, and made it so strong that personal affairs were soon forgotten. Today the same men who fought each other last spring will fight for each other now. Their heart is in the team, and not in themselves, while on the field.

Mack Follows a Lead.

The Athletics, on the other hand, are a plodding team, which goes along at the same steady clip every day, and makes no attempt at being aggressive. Mack is really more of a negative manager. He lets the other clubs lead the fight up to him—and then fights back. His ability cannot be questioned, for no man knows a ballplayer better than he. He hasn't the personal magnetism and the fire of Jennings, however, and, while the players hold him in the highest regard and respect his ability, they do not love him. The spirit of fraternalism which permeates the Detroit club is missing.

When they played that great game at Philadelphia on Monday the Athletics reminded one of a lot of callous veterans, ready to go through an ordeal, while Jennings and his crew of Tigers were like a lot of schoolboys patting each other on the back, kicking up their heels, and all talking at once. It is refreshing to see a ball club like that.

The Hockey Situation in Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 4.—The hockey situation is exciting a deal of interest these days, as inded it should. Many rumors are afloat regarding next winter's doings, but only a very few definite facts may be stated.

The league's make-up will be just the same as last winter, but many new players will be seen.

For instance, both the Victorias and Shamrocks will have practically new teams. Nearly all of last winter's Vics have stated positively that they will not play again, and the Shamrocks' executive is already working to strengthen their team.

The Wanderers are likely to get Arthur Ross. The latter had not decided just what he will do, but the Wanderers have been corresponding with him for several months, and it is known that he would like to come east again for a few months.

In respone to a query this morning, Ross wired:

"Undecided as to myself, but Brandon will be there with the big mitt."

This telegram would indicate that Ross is seriously considering the Wanderers' proposition. It also knocks in the head the rumor that Brandon would not have a team next winter.

The Wanderers' executive will be pretty well busted up. Jimmie Strachan, Bob Stevenson, and several other moguls have signified their intention of dropping out of hockey, and only two of the old guard, Tom Hodge and Secretary Jennings, are left. However, officials have been heard to talk like that before there was snow on the ground.

Ottawa will have a fair team, but no world-beaters, while Montreal and Quebec are hardly likely to improve on last year's aggregation.

First of World's Series Games Next Wednesday?

Arrangements Will Be Made on Sunday in Chicago—A Flip of Coin for Choice.

Chicago, Oct. 4.—The arrangements for the world's series have not been made as yet by the national commission and will not be made until Sunday evening when a meeting of the commission will take place in Chicago and the programme for the big battle given out. It is possible that the series will not be started until Wednesday, because if it is started on Tuesday, as has been the custom, many fans from the east will not be able to reach the scene of action, owing to the uncertainty of the place. Ban Johnson called on President Pulliam of the National League yesterday and offered to draw lots to decide whether the opening games of the world's series should be played on American or National League grounds, but Pulliam refused to toss the coin until the winner of the American League pennant has been decided.

Pulliam is eager to amend the rules of the commission, which state that the first three games of the big series shall be played in one city and the next three in the other city, and that the final game shall be decided by lot. "It will be better for the rules to read that two games shall be played in the first city and then three in the next," said Pulliam, "for it is possible for the winner of the series to win four games in succession, and if their games are played in the first city the fans of the other city could only see one game. If Detroit should win the flag in the American League the distance is not far from Chicago and we could have two games played on the first grounds, then three games on the opponents' grounds and then close with the last two games on the first grounds. I want a chance to propose this amendment to the rules of the national commission before it has been decided which league shall have the opening games. There is only one thing about the world's series, that has been decided, and that is that Sheridan and O'Day will be the umpires. Johnson has informed me that Jack Sheridan will be the American League umpire, and Hank O'Day will be my choice. The other officials of the world's series will be the same as they have been for two years. The scorers will be Francis Richter, of Philadelphia, and Joe Flanner, of St. Louis, and the gates will be in charge of Robert McRoy, of Chicago, and John Heydler, of New York.

"We have decided on holding our meeting in Chicago on Sunday, because the American League race may not be decided until the very last day."

The Latest Gossip of the Boxers

After much dickering a match has finally been clinched between Tommy Murphy, the crack New York lightweight, and Packey McFarland, of Chicago, who is one of the best fighters turned out in the West in years. They have been secured to meet in a ten-round bout before the Indianapolis A. C. on the night of Oct. 16, at 133 pounds, weigh in at 1 o'clock. Eddie Ryan, of Detroit, has been selected to referee the contest. The bout ought to be one of the best ever witnessed in the West, as Murphy has developed into a first-class lightweight during the last six months.

Barry to Fight Kaufmann.

Jim Barry, the light heavyweight of Chicago, who put up such a good fight against Sam Langford, the colored pugilist, will tackle a big heavyweight in his next battle. He has been signed by Bob Deady, the fight promoter of Philadelphia, to meet Al Kaufmann, the California pugilist, for six rounds in the main bout at the show to be brought off by the Industrial A. C., of Philadelphia, on Oct. 11.

Attell and Weeks Matched.

Abe Attell, the featherweight champion, and Freddie Weeks, the crack little fighter of Cripple Creek, Col., are now as good as matched. Attell has been guaranteed the $1,500 which he demanded for his end to meet Weeks, and the articles of agreement will be signed in a few days. The boys will box ten rounds under a tent which will accommodate 7,000 persons at Manhattan Beach, a suburb outside of Denver, Col., between Oct. 10 and 15.

Fighting Wins at Los Angeles.

The fighting game has won out again in Los Angeles, Cal. A bill was introduced recently out there at a meeting of the board of supervisors to stop all fights, but the sporting fraternity succeeded in killing the bill, getting three of the supervisors out of the five to vote against it. The man who introduced the bill said he would never attempt to put through a bill that would stop the sport.

Johnson Tired of Challenging Burns.

Jack Johnson, the colored heavyweight champion, has arrived in Chicago. He says he is tired of chasing after Tommy Burns for a fight and does not care now hether Burns meets him or not. While in Chicago recently Burns said that upon his arrival on the coast he would investigate Jimmy Coffroth's offer of a $25,000 purse for a battle between him and Johnson, and if it was a bonafide offer he would probably consent to take Johnson on.

Tigers Are Busy With the Dope

Columbus, O., Oct. 4.—The Tigers passed through here on their way to St. Louis to close the season, a happy but mighty nervous lot of ball players. Shortly after they left Washington last night there was a heavy rainstorm. The elements from then on figured in all their doping of the fight, for rain may, after all, decide which club shall land the flag. The "age of Ann" problem was never thrashed over so much as was the percentage dope on this trip, stubby pencils were stolen from the porter and all the available paper on the train was used in doping the race.

Cards, stories, songs, all the usual means of passing the time, were forgotten in working out the possible chances to win and lose.

"There is only one way of working it out," said Jennings. "Take two from St. Louis and forget Philadelphia and Washington."

"If we had to go another week we'd all be in the madhouse," said Bill Coughlin. "Half of the crowd are fit for the asylum now."

While this may sound exaggerated, there is foundation for it. One fan in Philadelphia who watched that 17-inning game is now in a padded cell in a Philadelphia asylum, according to the Quakertown papers. He raves constantly about the Tigers and "Silk" O'Loughlin. The club will reach St. Louis about midnight, the train having been delayed at Pittsburg.

"I'm as confident as though the flag was already ours," says Hughie. "St. Louis will be given the hardest fight a ball club has ever received. The Tigers have tasted blood and will not be denied."

Siever will open Saturday, while Mullin and Donovan will work Sunday in the double-header.

Connie Mack in Hot Water

Connie Mack is now up against it. He has accused "Silk" O'Loughlin of revengefully rendering decisions against the Athletics. If such is the case, and Mack can prove it, there is no room for O'Loughlin on the American League staff of umpires. If, however, Mack has made a statement blindly, and in the heat of anger, he should be the one to suffer. It is a matter for the league to take up, for it is the first time that a magnate has deliberately impeached the integrity of an umpire.

Mack probably spoke too hastily. "Silk" O'Loughlin has not a crooked hair in his head. If he has a fault, it is the fact that he plays to the grandstand, but he gives every decision honestly. He may have made mistakes in his decisions at Philadelphia, but that he was actuated by revenge does not seem possible.

Connie Mack, however, is the last man in the league that would be thought liable to make such an attack on an umpire. No matter what decisions are rendered Connie takes them philosophically as a rule and never makes a kick. For instance, a year ago, when O'Loughlin made the decision of forfeiting a game to the Yankees, Connie never made a protest. He just took his medicine, and not until Ban Johnson questioned him later, did he tell his side of the matter.

Canadian Football Guide Explains the New Rules

Scrimmage Game This Year, With No Interference and Forward Lines Apart.

The official Canadian Football Guide of 1907 is out today, and the first glimpse of the new rules which are to govern Rugby throughout Canada this season can be obtained.

This year there will be 14 players a side instead of 12. The scoring is 5 points for a try and 1 more for converted goal; 4 for a drop kick; 3 for a drop or place kick by way of a free or penalty kick; 2 for a safety, and 1 for a rouge.

Games in Quarters.

Matches shall last for one hour actual play, the playing time being divided into four quarters goals to be changed at the end of each quarter, with an intermission of 10 minutes at the end of the second quarter. In case of a tie 20 minutes' extra time shall be played, half each way.

On the kick-off the ball must go at least 5 yards towards an opponent's goal. A kick-out is a drop kick, and may move any distance towards the opponents' goal. From a mark the kick must be taken from directly behind and may be either a punt, drop kick, place kick, or a scrimmage if desired.

Must Give Three Yards.

For the protection of the half-backs

KICKERS' COLUMN

The local football squad got busy again last night after their brief layoff, and some good practice was indulged in.

The schedule for the junior series will be made up tonight in Toronto, and London will get busy next week.

The first O. R. F. U. game will be at Hamilton today, and will be between the Tiger III. and Dundas teams. That it will be a hummer goes without saying, and all the old-time rivalry on the football field between Dundas and Hamilton will be renewed.

A Hamilton dispatch says: "For those who had any fear that the Tiger senior team would not be as strong as last year they have only to look at the bunch of material that turns out at these practices to satisfy themselves that the Tigers will be just as hard to give a beating to as ever. There are a number of new men who look like finds, and Manager Thompson says the trouble will not be making a team, but it will be in selecting players, he has so many to choose from."

Some of the officers of the Hamilton Rugby Club are surprised and displeased at the action of Secretary Hay, of the O. R. F. U. in regard to the Tigers and the senior Ontario series. The Hamiltons have always understood that in case of a senior team dropping out, the intermediate champions of the previous year or the runners-up in the series would move up, and it may also be said that they were not always consulted either by the secretary. With four well-matched teams in the Inter-provincial League, and the same number in the O. R. F. U. senior series, the public will be treated to the best brand of football it has ever paid to see, and the O. R. F. U., instead of being weakened, will be strengthened thereby, and bigger gates will be the result.—Hamilton Times.

The Dundas Club imported several Peterboro players, but the O. R. F. U. promptly refused to allow them to play.

NO PRO. HOCKEY FOR TORONTO

Toronto, Oct. 5.—The prospects for a professional hockey team in Toronto this season are very poor. With present conditions there is only one way in which such a team will pay, and that is to have it controlled by the rink management. Even then, the returns hardly pay for the bother and work. Professional hockey will hardly be played here this year.

"The Serge of the Serges"

BLUNOZ CANADIAN Semi-ready

In the first place "Blunoz" serge is not made in Nova Scotia.

In the second place, it is not all a blue serge, for it is a freely woven Australian wool serge in both the navy blue and black colors. You have a choice of either.

To be sure they call the Nova Scotians "Blunoses"—but that is not the derivative of "Blunoz" serge.

Only two woollen mills in Canada can make the "Blunoz" Serge—and the Semi-ready Company control and absorb in their tailor shops the entire output.

This is the Canadian Serge which has made the British mills "sit up," and it is the Standard cloth by which the Government judge the tariff needs of this particular Canadian industry.

Semi-ready

Semi-ready "Blunoz" Suits, now $20, will cost $24 after January 1st, 1908.

The Caradoc Fall Fair Proved a Record-Breaker

Attendance the Largest in the History of the Society—Splendid Exhibits.

[By a Staff Reporter.]

The Caradoc fall fair held in Mount Brydges yesterday was a record-breaker, although the skies in the morning threatened rain up till 11 o'clock. As the day wore on the clouds lifted, and by 2 p.m. the weather was almost perfect.

The fair ground is a pleasant spot, almost in the center of the village, only a minute's walk from the post-office and easily reached from any part of the place.

The attendance was considered to be the largest in the history of the fair. In some sections the exhibits were light and in others there was an exceedingly large entry. Taking the whole exhibit, it must have been very gratifying to the directors, and a pleasure to the visitors.

In the Main Building.

In the main building, ladies' work almost monopolized every inch of the space, and made a very creditable showing. Home-made bread and biscuits were a good exhibit.

Apples.

The apples formed a very large entry, and were the best sample seen this season. The largest entry in any one variety was in Northern Spy. There was a prize given for one bushel best winter apples. The Northern Spy winning out.

Mangolds and potatoes were of immense size. Caradoc has for many years been the leading district for potatoes. There are more potatoes sold on London market from Caradoc than from any township in the county.

Live Stock.

Poultry, sheep and swine were small exhibits. Winfield Johnston, Appin, had a nice pen of Oxford Down sheep of superior quality. Mr. Bogue, of Strathroy, and Barclay, Poplar Hill, were the judges in poultry.

R. Pulling, Burwell road, won first on 2-year-old carriage mare or gelding. James A. Hill captured first prize on 3-year-old carriage horse.

W. H. Clark, Caradoc, won the red ribbon on a splendid heavy draught foal, and took second in the same class. Garfield McGuigan won first on a heavy draught 3-year-old, and first on a 3-year-old in the agricultural class.

G. Trott won out on a fine yearling in the heavy draught class. W. M. Faulds won first place with a handsome 2-year-old heavy draught.

D. A. Graham, of Lobo, on a splendid 2-year-old in agricultural class, won first place. Clinton Woodhull, Kilworth Bridge, was first again with his fine bay team of carriage horses.

The cattle class was about the same as in former years.

Horses.

The entries in heavy draught and agricultural classes exceeded all previous records. Wm. Young & Son, of Caradoc wont first on a splendid brood mare in the heavy draught class; Ed Trott, oMunt Brydges, took second in the same class.

D. A. Graham, of Lobo, had a fine string in the agricultural class, winning the bulk of the first prizes.

The judges in heavy horses were D. Graham and W. S. Weld, Delaware. In light horses, G. A. Scott and E. Douglass placed the awards.

Mrs. Joe Clark won first, and Mrs. G. Williams second for best lady drivers.

The Races.

The races was the drawing card of the fair, and were hotly contested. The large crowd present would insist on crowding on the track, much to the annoyance of the judges.

In the first heat of the 3-minute trot, Gold Bars collided with a buggy and knocked a man over with no serious results. This was a good race and created lots of enthusiasm. Summary:

Iron Bars	1	1	2	1
Betsy B.	2	2	1	2
Prince Patrick	3	4	3	4
Gold Bars	5	3	4	3

The free-for-all race was a good one, and barring two accidents to Little Ted, would have been a hot one. In the second heat of this race, Little Ted met with an accident, which put him in third place, although he was leading. In some unaccountable manner when turning the half-mile one of the wheels collapsed, throwing the driver, Mr. Archie Campbell. The horse went around to the three-quarter stretch as though nothing had happened, when he was stopped by someone in the crowd. This accident delayed the race for some time.

In the third heat, at the same spot, Little Ted (the same horse) seemed to buck in the hobbles. Breaking his check rein, his head came down, and the horse, rig and man turned a complete somersault, throwing the driver a considerable distance. It was thought he was seriously injured. Dr. Cairnes was called for, and had him removed to Harry Norris' hotel, where his injuries were attended to. At 10 o'clock he was resting easily, and expects to be all right in a few days. It was a marvelous escape, as the other horses were behind him in both accidents. Summary:

Little Ted	2	3
Paddy S.	3	2	2

The judges were Wm. Collins, London, and J. R. Hammond, Delaware. The committee on trials of speed were, A. Graham and J. Brodie.

Officers of the Fair.

The officers of the fair are, J. A. McGugan, president; W. A. Trott, first vice-president; W. Young, second vice-president; directors, W. T. King, A. W. Thomas, M. McNelll, E. Trott, J. Brodie, G. A. Williams, A. Graham, J. D. Carrothers and R. Sutherland.

The Chippewa Indian Band furnished the music, which was very much appreciated. The society has a great find in Mr. Henry Hardy "The human megaphone." Two gentlemen driving from Delaware, claim they could hear him calling on the different events when a mile out of Delaware. After the races were over he addressed the large concourse of people, thanking them on behalf of the judges for their attendance and good behavior.

In the evening there was a good concert in the town hall, which was crowded. Miss S. Steer sang a number of solos in a pleasing manner. Professor Jackson, colored vaudeville artist, in sketches, made a hit.

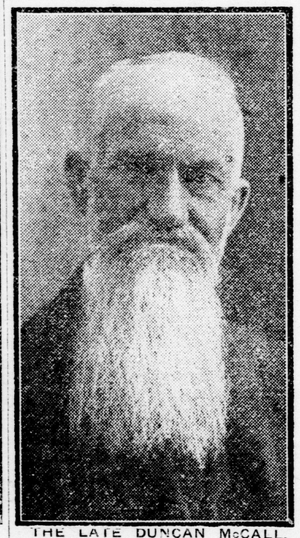

Master Stevely Steer and Fred Reed, of London, gave some good vocal music.

HINDUS DRIVEN OUT

Mob at Danville, Washington, Forces Them Over the Border.

Spokane, Wash., Oct. 5.—At Danville, Wash., last night, angry mobs drove a small party of Hindus across the line into Canada, sending a shower of missiles after them.

A few shots were discharged at the trespasser, but none was injured, it is believed. The Hindus had found shelter in a cabin at Danville, following their escape from Canada.

THE LATE DUNCAN McCALL, LOBO.

The funeral of the late Duncan McCall, which was held on Sunday last from the residence of his sister, was one of the largest ever seen in Lobo. People gathered from the entire surrounding country to pay their last respects to one who was ever esteemed as a man of highest principles. Born on his farm, October 27, 1833, he lived there his entire life, having never left it but one month to work for the late John Brown when he was a lad of 13 years. He was very successful in business as a farmer and cattle-dealer, and accumulated considerable wealth, but he was ever generous and ready to help along any worthy cause for the betterment of his fellow-men. He leaves to mourn him one sister, Mrs. D. Ferguson, at whose house he died, and a number of nephews and nieces. The sympathy of the community goes out to them in their bereavement.

SLIPPED UNDER ENGINE

Young Colored Man Meets Death on M. C. R. Near Fargo.

Chatham, Oct. 5.—George Smith, colored, aged 18 years, a sectionman employed on the M. C. R., was struck by a freight engine on that road near Fargo and received injuries from which he died at the St. Joseph's Hospital here. Smith was working with the rest of the gang at Fargo Thursday afternoon, when the alarm was given for an on-coming freight and all got off the tracks. Smith forgot his coat, which was left between the rails. He made a hurried effort to snatch it from in front of the engine, slipped and fell, the wheels passing over his left leg and right arm, almost severing them from his body. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital here, where amputation was immediately attempted, but he could not stand the strain.

Besides his mother, he leaves two brothers.

A MYSTERIOUS CASE

Raleigh Woman Supposed to Have Died of Poisoning.

Chatham, Oct. 5.—Mysterious circumstances surround the death of Mrs. William Bell, of Raleigh Township.

Dr. George T. McKeough, coroner, left for the late home of the deceased yesterday to make an investigation.

It is suspected that the woman died from the effects of some kind of poisoning. She lived on the ninth concession of Raleigh, and for some time she had been brooding over her poor health.

The circumstances surrounding her death, which occurred Wednesday, are very indefinite.

BRUSSELS FAIR

Had a Fine Array of Exhibits and a Large Attendance.

Brussels, Oct. 4.—The East Huron Agricultural Society's Fair held here Thursday and Friday was a splendid success. The interior department was filled with a fine array of exhibits and the show of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry was excellent. The speeding events went as follows:

Green race—1, George E. Henderson, Seaforth; 2, A. R. Currie, Brussels; 3, P. Scott, Brussels.

2:50 event—1 Archibald & Cudmore, Seaforth; 2 John Galbraith, Brussels; 3, Archibald & Cudmore, Seaforth.

There was also a colt race taken by Ernest Rosell, Miller Bros., and P. Scott.

The Ninety-first Highland Regiment Band, of Hamilton, discoursed music during the day, and Master Flett Duncan gave several Highland dances. The day's proceedings wound up with a big concert in the town hall, packed to the doors.

The attendance at the fair ran up into the thousands, and the directors are well pleased with the results.

BRANTFORD SCHOOLS

Brantford, Oct. 5.—Two new public school were dedicated here yesterday by Hon. Dr. Pyne. At noon a luncheon attended by 50 prominent citizens who are connected with local educational affairs, was held at Victoria Hall. The menu was prepared and served by girls of the domestic service class for the Central school.

Inspector Hoag, Dr. Pyne, Mayor Bowlby, Hon. William Paterson, T. H. Preston, M. P. P., and J. H. Fisher, M. P. P., of Paris, were the speakers. Chairman Thos. Ryerson, of the school board, presided. Dr. Pyne's speech was only of local importance. After the luncheon the new Alexandra school was dedicated.

What Joy to be Freed From Piles

It is not only the intense itching and stinging that causes such great suffering from piles, not only the dread of a surgical operation, with its pain, expense and danger, but the whole system seems to be undermined, and as the ailment drags on from day to day and year to year one becomes discouraged, despondent, and in despair gives up all hope of cure.

The joy which cured ones experience on being freed from itching, bleeding and protruding piles is told in the thousands of letters which we have received from time to time.

You need not tell the writers of these letters that there is a case which Dr. Chase's Ointment will not cure, for they will not believe it. They alone know how they suffered, and also know that Dr. Chase's Ointment cured them. In many cases the cures were almost miracles,so little ointment was used. In others, while relief came quickly, cure was only effected by the persistent use of several boxes of the ointment.

Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only positive and guaranteed cure for every form of piles, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

PARKHILL'S SHOW

One of the Best Displays Ever Seen in That Section.

Parkhill, Oct. 4.—Good weather favored the Agricultural Society, and the fair was one of the most successful in the society's history. The town was gay with flags and bunting, and the citizens extended a warm welcome to the crowds of people who came in from the surrounding country for miles around.

At the Agricultural Park was one of the best displays ever seen there, the exhibits of stock, poultry, farm produce and fine arts being of a splendid character. The only drawback was the failure of some of the races to materialize.

Great interest was taken in the farmers' trot, which resulted as follows: 1, Gold Bars, J. McInroy; 2 Hazel C., N. Carter; 3, J. W. P., R Hedden; 4, Brickmaker, J. Keyser.

The gate receipts amounted to more than $411, and a largely-attended concert in the evening at the opera house, brought the day to a most satisfactory close.

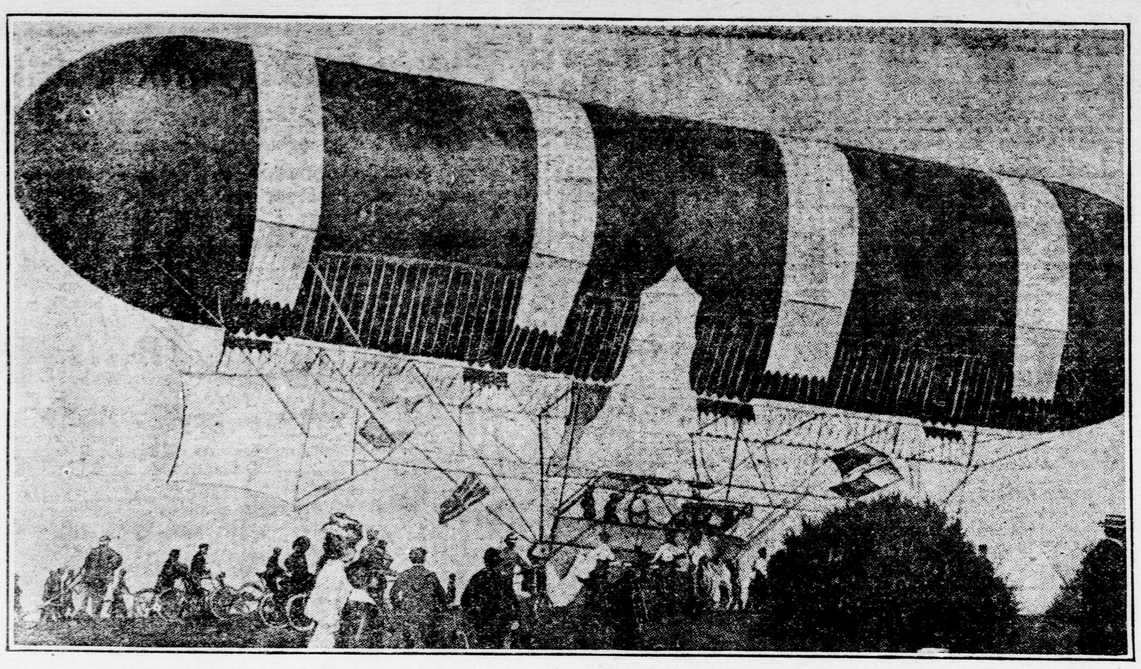

DIED OF HIS INJURIES.

Goderich, Oct. 5.—Joseph Taman, the man who had his head hurt by falling from a load of wood and having the wagon pass over him, as he was driving into town from Benmiller last Tuesday, died last night at the Goderich Hospital, where he was taken after the accident and where an operation was performed. The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Taman was 45 years of age.

A JEALOUS MAN'S HASTY CONCLUSION

Led Him to Desert His Wife and Leave Her Penniless—Son of Millionaire.

New York, Oct. 4. — Going to his wife's pocketbook to obtain some small change, Max Livingston, a bookmaker, found the small change, and then some. The "then some" consisted of about $45 in bills. Remembering that his wife asked him for money that same morning, saying she had none, Mr. Livingston jumped to conclusions, and two things happened.

One was that Livingston packed up two steamer trunks and left for parts unknown, taking along his wife's jewels, and, strange to say, the ill-fated $45.

The other was the revelation of a shattered romance that had its beginning in New Orleans more than four years ago.

At that time Livingston was only a sheet writer employed by a bookmaker on the New Orleans track. Marie Ehrisman, then a pretty 16-year-old girl from Memphis, Tenn., was visiting at her sister's in New Orleans, and one day accompanied the sister to the track. She met young Livingston, and four months later the two were married by a New Orleans justice of the peace.

At that time the bride only knew young Livingston as a sheet writer at the track. After the marriage it developed that the young man was the runaway son of L. Livingston, a Chicago millionaire baker, known across the continent for his charities, and called throughout the west "The Fleischmann of Chicago" because of his custom of furnishing free bread to the poor of Chicago's Ghetto.

The father wrote often to his errant son, offering him responsible and remunerative positions with the Livingston Company, but the son preferred to follow the race track. When the news of the marriage reached his parents the family was grief-stricken, not so much because Max had married unknown to them, but because his bride was a Christian, while the Livingstons are among the most orthodox Jews of Chicago. Letter after letter was sent to the son, urging him to give up his wife, but the young man continually ignored them.

Recently, however, the pair did not get along very well, and matters had almost reached a climax when they returned from Saratoga at the close of the meeting.

According to the wife Livingston was insanely jealous. Last week some of her New Orleans friends came to New York, and on Wednesday called upon her. Livingston had just left, giving her $50. Her New Orleans friends persuaded her to go to the track. At first she was reluctant, as her husband had often refused to let her accompany him.

But she went and so profitably invested the balance of the $5 that she returned with $45. That evening her husband found the money, and refuses to listen to any explanation. He packed his trunks, took all his wife's jewelry and the $45 and left the apartment, vowing never to return.

The wife was left penniless, and outside of her New Orleans friends, knew virtually no one in the city.

When a reporter called at the Livingstons' appartments, Mrs. Livingston was there only through the kindness of her landlady. She said she had not yet made up her mind whether she would ask a divorce, but intended to make him support her.

"I do not think the finding of the $45," she said, "is the real excuse for his leaving. I believe his relatives have finally persuaded him to desert me. I feel sure he loves me, and know that had we been left alone, all would have been well.

"I was born in Memphis, Tenn., where my father was a lawyer and afterward a circuit court judge. He died when I was a baby, and then I lived with my sister in New Orleans. My mother married again and lives in Decatur, Ill.

"I do not know what I will do. I have posed some for artists, and also taken fancy dancing lessons. I am more inclined to try to get an engagement on the stage.

Livingston has a brother, Abraham Livingston, who lives somewhere in the city.

SEA TELEPHONE WORKING WELL

Men on Warships Twenty-Two Miles Apart Could Hear Plainly.

Boston, Oct. 4. — The United States navy department is installing wireless telephones on the warships, not to supersede but to supplement the wireless telegraph.

Two battleships, the Connecticut and the Virgina, have been equipped with the wireless telephones, and it is understood all the battleships which are to start in December for the cruise to the Pacific are to be fitted with them before they begin the voyage.

Lee DeForest, the inventor of a wireless telephone, was with the North Atlantic battleship fleet in Cape Cod Bay for two weeks overseeing the installation of telephones on the Connecticut and Virginia. The system worked well, communications being heard at a distance of twenty-two miles. The system is substantially the same as the wireless telegraph. On the Connecticut and the Virginia the telephones are set up on the bridge handy for the captain or the navigating officer.

In tests recently made it was demonstrated that ships equipped with the wireless telegraph but not with the wireless telephone could distinctly hear through ordinary telephone receivers what was said in the transmitter of the telephone aboard another ship. Mr. DeForest, on the Connecticut, talked into the transmitter of the wireless telephone and the operators on the Kentucky and Illinois, although those ships were not equipped with wireless telephones, attached telephone receivers to the wireless telegraph instrument and heard distinctly conversational tones of Mr. DeForest. The Kentucky and Illinois were eleven miles away from the Connecticut.

That the operators heard distinctly what Mr. DeForest said was proved when they were required to transmit immediately by wireless telegraph back to the Connecticut not only the substance but a verbatim report of what Mr. DeForest had said.

On the Connecticut there was a phonograph, and Mr. DeForest, placing the machine in front of his telephone transmitter, played a number of selections. At the conclusion of each piece the wireless telegraph operators on the other ships, miles away, promptly telegraphed to the Connecticut the titles of the pieces played.

In one test of the wireless telephone the operator on a battleship twenty-two miles from the Connecticut picked up on his receiver the words that were being spoken into the transmitter and by wireless telegraph told the operator aboard the Connecticut what had been said.

In Brussels lives a lawyer who recently made good use of a phonograph in a lawsuit. He had been continually annoyed by the noises of hammering at an iron foundry in his near neighborhood. Finding that complaints were unavailing he brought the matter into court. But before doing so he placed a phonograph in his library for one whole day. When the case came before the court he produced the phonograph and set going the specially prepared cylinder. An uproar and din as from the forge of Vulcan was the result, and the ingenious lawyer won his case.

AMERICAN ARMY "JUST A FAKE"

Says General McCoskey Butt, of New York, Now in Paris.

Paris, Oct. 4.—"Our army in America is nothing but a fake," said Gen. McCoskey Butt, of New York, today. Since he retired from the national guard in which he commanded the First Brigade of his state's citizens soldiers, Gen. Butt has made a hobby of studying the development of military science in Europe, especially in France and Germany, with a view to qualifying as an expert in advising his home government on reforms in the American army system and methods.

He has just returned to Paris after observing the French army maneuvers. Prior to that he saw the German maneuvers at Metz. His conclusion is that until the United States army is trained in such details as are useful in actual warfare it is worse than useless. He has said this in interviews in New York, after previous visits to Europe. He is now starting homeward.

"The sham which pretends that the United States army is efficient," said Gen. Butt today, "is kept up by the higher officers, who would be loath to face a scientific inquiry into their own qualifications which would endanger their pay and perquisites. No intelligent captain or lieutenant can be found in our army to defend the existing system.

"Why, I have sometimes seen a parade where only three regular soldiers to a company were present. Parade drill for that matter, is absolutely valueless in the training of soldiers for war. All the nonsense goes by the board when men are out on a real campaign.

"Riding, shooting, marching, are the main things which ought to be taught and taught thoroughly. Shooting at a target, too, is useless. The French and German armies are beginning to recognize these points.

"It is not true patriotism to hide the fact that our army is in a state of inefficiency. It is rather the duty of a patriot to point out the shams in our service, especially since foreign critics are already aware of them.

"What is wanted is an appropriation of $120,000,000 to establish a strong, permanent army, well trained according to the most modern methods known to military science, and with officers schooled as highly as any nation's are.

"President Roosevelt, I think, is in entire accord with my ideas. I believe he desires to do for the army what he did for the navy when he was assistant secretary, and what he has since done as President.

"The French soldiers are the best marchers of all the continental troops. I saw 60,000 men cover fifty-four kilometers (thirty-three miles), in one day and only twenty men fell out. Their footgear is the best for service, a most important point. The French have also the best artillery. In cavalry they are about equal to Germany. On the whole, while I should say that a given thousand French soldiers could beat a thousand Germans, I am not so sure that one thousand Frenchmen would beat one thousand Germans. Germany has brought all its machinery of war up to highest state of perfection."

PAINLESS TEETHING.

There is no period in baby's life that mothers dread more than teething time. The little gums are tender and inflamed; the child suffers and is sleepless and cross, and the mother is usually worn out caring for the child. The use of Baby's Own Tablets allays the inflammation, softens the tender swollen gums, and brings the teeth through painlessly. Mrs. N. Suave, St. Rose de Lima, Que., says: "When my baby was cutting his teeth he was feverish, cross and did not take nourishment. After giving him Baby's Own Tablets he cut six teeth without the least trouble. I have never used any medicine for children I prize so highly as the Tablets." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FRUITLESS SEARCH FOR LOST LOVERS

Doubtless Drowned in Long Island Sound—Sad Ending of a Romance.

New York, Oct. 4. — All hope of finding alive Miss Beatrice Penton, 15 years old, and her companion, Guide de Angelis, the 22-year-old civil engineer, who disappeared from a small sailboat in a heavy squall off New Rochelle last Saturday afternoon, has been abandoned by their families.

A heartbreaking search, conducted in boats and from automobiles along both sides of the Sound, revealed no trace of the missing boat or of its fittings. This, in connection with the unseaworthy character of their knockabout in heavy waters, which was lately learned, has convinced the searchers that the young couple were drowned.

The sailboat Microbe, in which Miss Penton and De Angelis were crusing, was of solid mahogany, with only slight buoyancy. In addition it had a heavy lead keel, and carried 700 pounds of ballast. According to sailors and yachtsmen, it would have sunk at once if filled with water.

Charles Anderson, who was sailing in a light catboat, and was the last one who saw the Microbe, said that De Angelis seemed in trouble.

The young man, he said, was crawling forward with the evident intention of lowering his jib, the ropes of which had apparently become foiled. A few seconds later the boat disappeared.

Although De Angelis was an expert swimmer, Miss Penton was unable to swim a stroke, and those who are familiar with the water and the tide at the point where the couple were last seen say it would have been impossible for the most expert swimmer to get ashore burdened as De Angelis would have been.

The young man's father said that there was a slight possibility that his son and Miss Penton had been picked up by some ocean-going freighter or coastwise freighter which was not equipped with wireless apparatus, and that they might be carried to the first port at which the vessel touched before they would be able to communicate with friends. He said he did not place much faith in this theory, but spoke of it to console his wife.

The romance of the young couple has been beset with many difficulties, owing to the determined opposition of Miss Penton's father to young De Angelis. Some time ago, Mr. Penton had the young man called before Judge Van Auken of New Rochelle to try to have him punished for his unwelcome attentions.

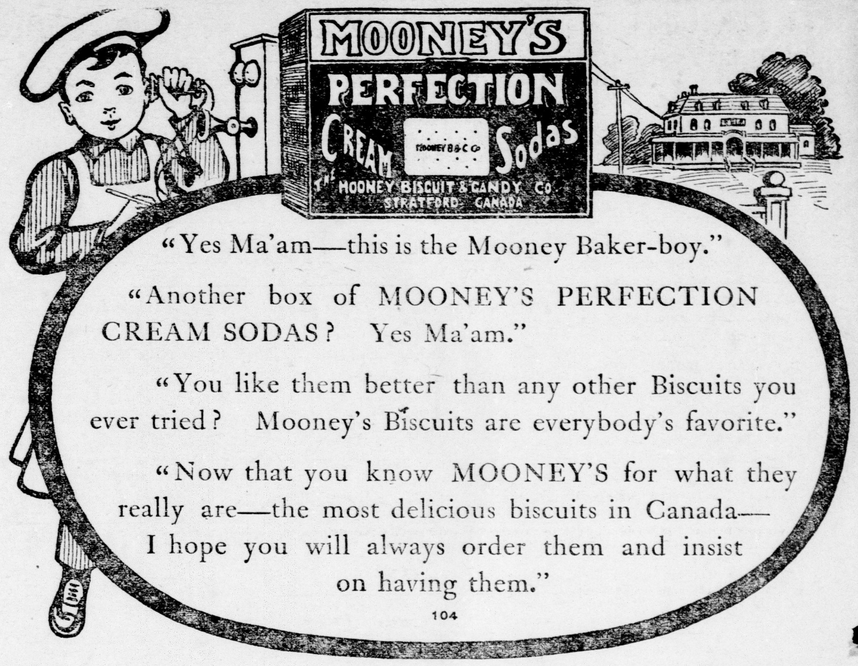

The judge declined to interfere. He warned De Angelis, however, not to elope with Miss Penton, as she was under age, pointing out that the penalty probably would be a penitentiary sentence for abduction.

Miss Penton is the daughter of Thomas B. Penton, jun., an insurance broker, and is wealthy in her own right. She inherited her fortune from her mother, who was divorced two years ago, the father became her guardian and she came to New Rochelle to live with him. Soon after this the acquaintance with De Angelis began and has continued, despite the father's opposition.

Miss Katherine Elkins, daughter of the West Virginia Senator and heiress to a goodly fortune, is one of the few athletic girls who refuse to acknowledge the passing of their type. Few persons outside her family circle have seen Miss Elkins when she was not astride a horse and clad in the most masculine-looking garments. She invariably wears a derby hat, a stiff linen collar, small black tie and cutaway coat. She has magnificent black hair, but she conceals it under her hat, and, it is said, in mischief, Miss Elkins takes a positive delight in being mistaken for her brother.

The common sunflower, a native of Peru and Mexico, is gaining favor in parts of Europe as a febrifuge. In Russia, where the plant is extensively cultivated for its edible seeds and its oil, fever patients sleep upon beds of sunflower leaves, and a Russian physician, experimenting on 100 children between 1 month and 12 years of age, has found that alcoholic extracts of the leaves and flowers cure fever as speedily as quinine.

FIFTY PER CENT OF A YEAR FOR HIS

Magistrate Love Provides Time for Young Gentleman to Sober Up.

Magistrate Love freed Mrs. Jane Armstrong, for a time at least, of a son who, from her story, has been a decided nuisance to her for the last couple of years. Mrs. Armstrong in the witness box stated that the young man was 25 years old, and that until about two years and a half ago he was a good industrious boy. Then he took to drinking and she has had to work hard to earn her own living.

In addition to this, she has practically supported her son, who has been going from bad to worse and for the last few months has refused to do any work.

Mrs. Armstrong stated that she had only received $15 from him all summer in return for board, washing and all the other things she had done for him.

Lately young Armstrong has been drinking heavily and last night came home in an ugly temper.

He tried to throw a chair through a window and in doing this tore the blind down and attracted the attention of Policeman Taylor, who saw him trying to beat his mother with a cane. She resisted with the poker and about that time Taylor interfered and placed young Armstrong behind the bars.

After giving the young fellow some good advice, Magistrate Love sentenced him to six months in the Central Prison.

Dog Taxes.

Inspector McCallum figured prominently in a dozen cases where local people were charged with not paying their dog tax.

An infinite number of excuses were put up, but the majority of those summoned did not appear to be aware that if they owned a dog at all this year they were liable whether the dog had died or had been stolen, sold or disposed of in any way.

In every case those charged reluctantly paid the tax and an additional 95 cents costs.

Inspector McCallum has a list of over one hundred and fifty people who have not paid their tax.

In every case so far the inspector has won out.

A Crabapple Blossom.

among the most attractive that can be seen. The people take such a pride in their homes that this summer, when a prize of $5 was offered for the best kept lawn, there were so many well kept lawns that the judges have as yet been unable to award the prize.

The streets are wide and have been laid out with an eye to the future—the not far distant future, when, as the residents hint, the whole big plant of McClary's will be placed near Chelsea Green, and a big plow works will be located within its limits.

Chelsea Green's Plans.

Then wide streets will be needed, for Chelsea Green will take its place as the city's most important suburb.

Already plans have been laid for lighting the streets, and within a short time gas mains will be laid.

Water famines and water problems do not worry Chelsea Green residents, for they have a supply of the best spring water that never fails. It is pumped from springs across the river to a big tank, and distributed among the homes by its own force.

Work will be commenced next spring upon the construction of a sewerage system.

New Homes Added.

Among the new homes built this season were a handsome brick residence for Mr. George Wright, two modern brick dwellings for Messrs. Jackson and dwellings for Messrs. Hartson, Pyman, Harris, Fleming, George Snow, N. Toole, and T. Cornellius.

JUDGMENT FOR $200

Case of Reid vs. Shuttleworth Has Been Disposed Of.

After several months' delay, the case of Reid vs. Shuttleworth has been disposed of.

Miss Reid has sued Mr. Shuttleworth, the wholesale milliner, for large damages for wrongful dismissal after he had signed a contract with her for a year's employment.

The case came up at the sessions some time ago, and the jury rendered a verdict for $200 in favor of the plaintiff.

The defendant then asked the case to be non-suited, and judgment was reserved until today, when Judge Macbeth gave a verdict for $200.

J. M. McEvoy for plaintiff, J. B. McKillop for defendant.

70th Anniversary of the Church

The seventieth anniversary of the First Congregational Church will be observed tomorrow, and also on Oct. 13. The pastor, Rev. D. S. Hamilton, will preach at both services, and a communion service will be held in the morning, at which Rev. F. A. Steven will assist. On Sunday, Oct. 13, Rev. J. W. Pedley, B. A., an esteemed former pastor of the church, will preach at both services. A tea meeting and entertainment will be held on Oct. 14, in connection with the anniversary. Tomorrow will also mark Mr. Hamilton's sixth anniversary in the pastorate of the First Congregational Church.

Navvies Made Trouble for Conductor

A bunch of Italian navvies, en route for Toronto to work on railway construction work, nearly caused trouble at the station this afternoon.

The gang, which numbered about twenty, had with them enough goods in the shape of picks, shovels, concertinas, tin boxes and bundles done up in red handkerchiefs, to fill a couple of drays.

They insisted on being allowed to take all the stuff into their seats with them.

The conductor refused to allow them to enter the car with the things and one word led to another until the foreigners got mad and made a rush, getting by the conductor and placing themselves and their possessions in one end of the train.

The police were summoned, and after much talk and waving of arms on the part of the foreigners, they consented to ship their goods by express.

BROWN ON VAUDEVILLE WAR

agers have had to go to continental Europe for acts. The result is that the English concert halls and vaudeville theaters are filled with German and French pantomime acts, and Spanish dancing acts and such.

Best Acts Here.

"The best English acts are in this country, receiving, in many cases, four times as much money as they received in England. Of course this cannot last for ever. The Klaw & Erlanger syndicate has seventeen theaters, and have had to close one of them lately. Our business has not suffered at all. But the price of acts is too high, and there must be a reduction. The Keiths are too well entrenched to lose."

"Then the war will not last much longer?" was asked.

"No; I do not think it will," he replied. "The craze for foreign acts will cease shortly, and the situation will adjust itself. We will continue to send the best acts available to the Bennett circuit."

WILL THE JUDGE PROBE?

matter. We will be ready when the time comes."

"Then you are not worrying about the outcome?" was ventured.

"Decidedly not," he answered. "We have nothing to fear."

The Vouchers.

Secretary McElheran of the board of education declared that the vouchers for the coal were all in, and had been sent on to Treasurer Pope. The vouchers could not be seen by an Advertiser reporter ,but he was told that they were all signed and sent in.

vrtvhe8fr.. StDer. &&eI..h acmfwapp

The method of procedure is that the contractor sends in a bill for coal,with the voucher signed by the janitor of the school or the principal, that the coal has been delivered. These vouchers are certified to by No. 2 committeee , and by Secretary McElheran, of the board of education, and sent on to the city treasurer for payment.

"Are all the vouchers signed," Secretary McElheran was asked.

"As far as I know they are," he replied.

"What about car lots?" was asked.

"Well, the figures of the railway company are taken for that," he said.

Must Be Mistake, He Says.

"All the soft coal is delivered from the car?"

"Yes. It seems to be the best method. The hard coal is all weighed. This year it was all weighed except one car. That was sent to a school by mistake."

"But some of the janitors say that they did not sign vouchers?" was asked.

"There must be some mistake, for the vouchers are signed by either the janitor or the principal," he said.

WATERS VS. WATERS

Case Settled Out of Court—Parties Coming to an Agreement.

The case of Waters vs. Waters, which had been set down for the assizes, was settled this morning out of court.

Some time ago Betsey and Christian Waters, of Caradoc, agreed to sell Arthur Waters, of the same township, a piece of farm land for the sum of $300. Later they thought that the property was worth more than the sum offered, and refused to keep their agreement. The suit was then entered.

This morning the defendants agreed to accept $300 for the property, providing the plaintiff paid the costs of the case as far as it has gone. The costs amounted to some $25.

J. M. McEvoy acted for the plaintiff, and T. G. Meredith looked after the interests of the defendants.

Marcus Helfman and Max Block Meyer of Dantzic, are charged at Liverpool with conspiring to defraud the C. P. R. in connection with an attempt to smuggle Russian emigrants suffering from trachoma into Canada.

Moule, of the First Congregational Church, have returned from Belwood, where they attended the meetings of the Western Association of Congregational Churches. They report a good attendance of delegates, and an interesting and profitable programme. One of the interesting features of the meetings was the presence of a number of the ministers of the United Brethren churches, which recently united with the Congregational denomination.

PLANTS DISTRIBUTED

Surplus Products of Victoria Park Given to Citizens by Mr. Pearce.

The plants not needed for propagating purposes in Victoria Park have all been distributed or given away to the school children and others of the citizens.

Thousands of plants have been distributed by Parks Commissioner Pearce, and hundreds of children have invaded the park during the past few days.

Each child got one or more plants, all being handed out by the parks superintendent or his assistant.

No child was allowed to touch anything nor help himself in any way.

The superintendent also says that the children all behaved exceptionally well and nothing has been disturbed by them, which is very gratifying, and speaks well for the behavior of the children.

East and West—Hodgins and Park, 3; Owens and Evans, 1.

MANAGER NOW PROPRIETOR

The "Thoro" Business Purchased by Mr. Frank C. Hooper.

—Mr. E. F. Ely, the well-known gents' furnisher of Toronto, who opened the "Thoro," store in London, next to Bennett's, some few months ago, has disposed of the business to his London manager, Mr. Frank C. Hooper. The latter gentleman has made for himself a reputation of fair and honest treatment to customers since coming to London, and the many friends he has made here will learn with pleasure of his purchasing the business. The name "Thoro" has become so well known that it is now a synonym for good quality and honest prices. Mr. Hooper will retain the name.

OLD LAND MARK GONE

Meaford Town Hall Gutted by Fire—Loss $1,500.

Meaford, Oct. 5.—The town hall here was gutted by fire early this morning. The building was about 50 years old, and one of the landmarks of the district. The building was condemned for public gatherings by the Government inspector last week, and there was some talkof it collapsing. The cause of the fire at present is unknown. The Gore Insurance Company are interested to the extent of $1,500.

LABOR PARTY IN OTTAWA

National Trade and Labor Council Organized at the Capital.

Ottawa, Oct. 5.—The movement to create an Independent Labor Union for Canada received an impetus last night, when whatis to be called the "National Trade and Labor Council" was formed.

The carpenters, painters and decorators, plasterers and typographers, who have Canadian unions here, form the nucleus of the new council.

This morning an interview is published by J. W. Woods, president of the board of trade, strongly advocating Canadian federation for Canadian labor.

Mr. J. W. Woods' remarks are entirely separate from the union meeting mentioned.

BETTER Baking Powder

There can be no better baking powder than Strong's. In making baking powder there are certain definite materials to be used. A cheap powder can be made by using unwholesome ingredients; a good powder by using pure and healthful materials.

The leavening properties of an alum powder may be equal to a cream tartar one, but we prefer cream tartar, and so should you. Strong's Baking Powder is a cream tartar product, and it costs you less than any other pure powder you can buy.

MELDRUM--McLEAN

Wedding of a Popular Couple at Bangor, Michigan.

The Bangor (Mich.) Advance of Sept. 27, says:

The home of Mrs. Catherine McLean Murphy was the scene of much pleasure on Wednesday last, when at high noon, Miss Maude Maclean, niece of Mrs. Murphy, was united in marriage to Dr. William Meldrum, of New Durham, Ont. The house was decorated with smilax and scarlet and white carnations, which made pretty surroundings for the bride, who was charming in a gown of silk mull over white silk. The ceremony was performed by an old-time friend of the bride and groom, Rev. John Thomson, of Ontario. A bounteous turkey dinner was served directly after the ceremony, covers being laid for twelve, among whom were the following out-of-town relatives: Miss Alice E. Murphy, of Hinsdale; Mrs. M. Y. Campbell of Indianapolis; Miss Margaret Maclean, Norman Maclean, father of the bride, of London, Miss Cameron, of London, Ont., Mrs. Chas. E. Powell, of DeKalb, and Rev. Thomson, of Ontario. Dr. and Mrs. Meldrum were given a merry sendoff in the afternoon when they left on the 3:05 train for their home in Canada.

In France there are 6,000,000 smokers, and of every fifteen there are eight who smoke a pipe, five who smoke cigars, and only two who are cigarette smokers. Still the French consume more than 800,000,000 cigarettes a year, or enough to go around the world 500 times if they were placed end to end in a line.

H. C. Becher, stockbroker, received the following by private wire from Bartlett, Frazier & Carrington today:

New York, Oct. 5.—Americans in London were inactive and fractionally lower. The money market especially in call loans was easier, during the entire week the London market has been more or less depressed by liquidation from Berlin and Amsterdam. This has been checked by the easing of money and the satisfactory termination of October settlements. At the openinig of our stock market Pennsylvania, New York Central, Reading, Union Pacific and Steel common declined fractionally, and to show the measure of the trading at twenty-five minutes after the opening there had been no quotation in Amalgamated Copper. The bank statement shows one laudable feature at least, a decrease in loans through the aggregate cash decrease was larger than anticipated according to our currency movements. There is nothing new in copper metal except some prophesies that Butte mines will be shut down completely by the first of the year and that for the present there is going to be no wage reduction.

The London Economist says that commodity prices are lowering all around, and that commercial activity in the United States and Germany has been affected by contraction. It does not though expect this condition to last long, During the last fifteen minutes the stock market was again sold on the prospects of continuing demands on money next week, and on the loss in cash shown up in the bank statement.

Bond markets ends up the week uninteresting as usual, and very little activity in the majority of issues, but with the city bonds holding up well. Next week railroad meeting, contention between various factions in the meetings, will form the topics to come, but the same professional market will undoubtedly be here, interspersed with a contraction now and then in call money, but the main feature of the whole stock market situation is that of late liquidation has not kept pace with the short selling, and the market apparently can assimilate a good bit of bear news and remain composed.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—Wheat—With very little sentiment wheat worked up 1½c, reacting but a trifle toward the close. Trade was more general and sustained than at any time for ever several weeks. Opposition also seemed less aggressive, which may be explained in part by the fact that every short faces a loss at tonight's close. European centers ignored the fractional decline here yesterday, adding a little to the big advance of the previous two days. Cash houses here were liberal early buyers in the pit, and the aggregate sales from the seaboard and interior markets again led Chicago, Winnipeg advancing 2¼c. Local stocks will on Monday show a material loss for the past week, probably in the neighborhood of 600,000 or 700,000 bushels. Stock to the long side. It is the logical play in view of the position the world over, and a little patience will pay handsomely later on. Cars, 65.

Corn—Firm, despite strong pit opposition. The demand is good, and receipts will probably be in reduced volume shortly. The weather today was favorable throughout the belt. This market may prove a little slow for a time, unless outside influences stimulate buying. The final out-turn of this crop will prove very disapointing. Cars, 674.

Oats advanced ¼c on very moderate buying reacting fractionally toward the close. Buying of the past few days reflects how light offerings really are. The Northwest has been a good buyer in a small way. With a falling off in receipts, prices will work up without any help. Cars on Monday, 261.

Winnipeg closed: Wheat—October, $1 09⅞; December, $1 07⅞; May, $1 12.

LOCAL MARKET.

London, Saturday, Oct. 5.

The market today was a large one, and Market Clerk Maker had his hands full endeavoring to find places for those who had produce to sell. The streets adjoining the market were occupied by vehicles, and even then there was not room for those who were late in reaching the market.

A gentleman from the United States, on viewing the market, remarked that the people here were good feeders, and he would not mind all the money that it took to purchase the large quantity of stuff offered for sale.

Grain—Oats sold at $1 55 to $1 57 per cwt. Wheat sold at $1 per bu.

Hay and Straw—There were three loads of hay brought in, which sold at $16 to $16 50 per ton; there should be a demand for at least 30 loads at Monday's market. Straw is also wanted, and no doubt prices will be firm

Butter and Eggs—Butter was quite plentiful; there was, however, a good demand, and all the offerings were soon sold at 25c for crocks and 26c for pound rolls, in wholesale lots. Eggs were a little slow, at 22½c for crates and 23c for basket lots.

Vegetables and Roots—This line was easily the feature of the market; potatoes were well represented and there was a good demand at 80c to 90c per bag; tomatoes sold mostly at 25c per bu for ripe and 40c for green; onions, $1 per bu for large; small pickling onions sold at 10c to 15c per quart; celery, 40c per dozen; cabbages, 40c to 60c per dozen; beets, 40c per bu; carrots, 35c per bu; turnips, 30c per bu; parsnips, 50c per bu; sage and savory, 20c per dozen; peppers, 5c to 10c per dozen.

Fruits—Apples sold at 50c to 80c per bu; some fine ones sold at $2 25 per barrel; pears sold at 75c to $1 50 per bu; peaches were lower, at $1 to $1 25 per basket; plums higher, at 80c to 95c per basket; muskmelons, 5c to 15c each; grapes, 25c per basket.

Poultry—There was a big supply and a fairly good demand; spring chickens sold at 8c to 10c per lb alive, for birds which would weigh 5 to 7 lbs per pair; dressed chickens, 10c to 12c per lb; ducks sold at 80c to $1 25 per pair dressed; old fowl, 7c per lb alive and 8c dressed.

Dressed Hogs—Not many offered; sales were brisk, at $8 25 for the majority.

Butchers' Meats—Beef sold at $4 50 to $6 50 per cwt; lamb was lower in price, at 11c per lb; mutton, $6 to $8 50 per cwt; veal, $8 to $9 per cwt.

Live Hogs—The price to be paid for Monday's shipment will be $6 per cwt; the market is weak and prices may be easier; small pigs sold from $5 to $7 per pair.

The lightning rod was invented by Benjamin Franklin in 1752 to arrest the electricity of the thunder. When the information of the discovery reached Rabbi Saul Katzenellenbogen of Wilna he said that the theory was not new, because it was already known in Talmudic times, and he showed a passage in the Tosefta (third century), where it says that "On Sabbath it is permitted to place an iron near the hennery to safeguard the fowls from thunder and lightning strikes." The Talmud vouches that "there is nothing superstitious about this belief."

A man charged at Bow street police court, London, the other day with being drunk, asked the magistrate to excuse him, as he had got very excited over the visit of the colonial premiers.

PRES'T ROOSEVELT GOT HIS BUMPS

Almost a Disaster — Boat With President on Board in a Collision.

Evansville, Ind., Sept. 5.—Inspector Williams issued telegraphic orders last night, ordering the suspension of the license of the captain of the steamer Fred Hartweg, for 90 days, in accordance with a request of President Roosevelt. The offense charged against the captain of the Fred Hartweg was racing with the steamer Alton, thereby endangering the Mississippi, on which President Roosevelt was traveling. The Fred Hartweg and the Alton accompanied the Mississippi on its trip down the river to Memphis.

According to a dispatch from Cairo, Ill., the incident which resulted in President Roosevelt requesting the suspension of the men in charge of the steamer Fred Hartweg occurred a short distance below that city Thursday. When the boats composing the fleet left Cairo, the dispatch states, the steamer Alton, carrying the St. Louis delegation, had the position immediately following the Mississippi, with President Roosevelt on board, and was endeavoring to wrest the position from the Alton. The captain of the Hartweg turned out against the Mississippi, causing it to veer, the President being thrown against the wall of his stateroom with considerable force.

But for the action of the pilot aboard the Mississippi, the dispatch adds, in endeavoring to get out of the way of the Hartweg, a serious accident might have resulted.

A report has been received from the department of agriculture in India showing the extent of the war carried on against the Bombay locust. In all about 1,500,000,000 individual eggs, adult locusts and "hoppers" were accounted for. Of this number 60,000,000 were adults that would have produced another 8,000,000,000 "hoppers" had they lived. This slaughter cost about $65,000 in awards and saved probably millions in the value of crops. Nature also helped. The report adds that juari birds arrived on the scene in large flocks and devoured the locusts greedily, so that the preservation of the crops was due possibly "as much to these birds as to the effects of human agency."

LOCAL TRADE IS GROWING BETTER

Bradstreet's Notes Much Improvement in Conditions.

TORONTO TRADE IS NOW BRISK

Feeling of Confidence for the Future in Winnipeg—All the Reports Are Satisfactory.

Montreal, Oct 5.—Montreal reports to Bradstreet's says: Little change has shown forth in the trade situation here during the past week. There has, perhaps, been rather a brisker tone to the retail movement here and in the surrounding country. Cool damp weather has started the movement of fall clothing. The business in men's furnishings has been particularly brisk. The hat trade has been heavy and there has been a big call for nearly all lines of haberdashery. Heavy drygoods continue to move well, although retailers still show reasonable conservatism in placing orders. This is particularly true in all lines of business at the present time. The policy of the banks in restricting loans and advances is undoubtedly having some effect in limiting the volume of trade in all parts of the country, to some extent. Wholesalers here are inclined to expect a good reorder trade to spring up soon in nearly all branches of trade, as they believe the business of the country during the coming season will be rather better than most people at present expect. The hardware trade is taking on a better tone.

Toronto reports: Fall retail trade has been quite brisk here during the past week. Cool weather has favored this business. Wholesalers are experiencing a good re-order movement and winter lines are going out satisfactorily. The general outlook for the trade of the coming season is satisfactory. While collections are still slow and money holds tight and all credits are limited, there is still a feeling of confidence regarding the future. These conditions are the result of conservative measures instituted by the banks and big jobbing houses and it is generally felt that such measures have served their purpose.

Winnipeg reports to Bradstreet's say there is now a feeling of confidence for the future that was hardly in existence a week ago. The much reported crop damage is beginning to be better gauged than was then possible. The most likely estimate says that the damage amounts to about thirty per cent of the total crop. But, owing to high prices the returns to the farmers will, as a whole, run about twenty per cent less than that of last year. Collections are still slow, and money is tight. Threshing returns are generally showing a very excellent quality of wheat although the amount of frosted grain will be large. In former years this grain has been very largely lost, but owing to the growth of mixed farming it can now be profitably used as feed in most districts.

Vancouver and Victoria reports to Bradstreet's say: General trade continues brisk all along the coast. The shortage of money in the other parts of Canada is, however, lessening the activity in most of the provincial industries. The demand for lumber has fallen off on this account. Owing to the difficulty the employers have in obtaining sufficient labor this is not so serious as it might be.

Quebec: Too much rain is interfering with business, country roads in some sections are not good, and travelers are retarded in their movements. City trade is quiet, which is attributed to climatic conditions. Collections show no improvement over the preceding week, and a quietness is still noticeable amongst the shoe manufacturers.

Hamilton trade reports to Bradstreet's say a good brisk movement is noted in all wholesale lines.

London reports to Bradstreet's say the tone of trade there is generally good. Large shipments of goods are going forward, and prospects for wholesale trade are considered bright. Country produce is coming forward well, and values are firm.

Thousands of Women Tortured

BY BLINDING HEADACHES.

Who Could Be Well, and Happy, and Free From Pain.

Headaches simply mean poisoned blood. The human body is constantly decaying and being renewed. Dead matter is absorbed by the blood, and should be taken from the blood by the kidneys, bowels and skin and passed out of the system. If one of these organs does not act properly, the blood becomes impure—if two fail, death is certain.

When there are constant headaches, it is always found that the bowels are irregular, the kidneys weak, or the skin sluggish, pale or sallow. The tissue waste is left in the blood—carried to the brain — and irritates the nerves. To treat headaches with cocaine, morphine, phenacitine and the host of "headache powders" is useless. They relieve for the moment, but they clog the system and do harm. They never reach the seat of the trouble, they cannot purify the blood.

"Fruit-a-tives" completely cure headaches. They stimulate the liver and make the bowels move regularly. They regulate the kidneys. They induce healthy skin action. Thus, all the waste matter—body poisons—are taken out of the blood and there is nothing to cause headaches. "Fruit-a-tives" are the only remedy that really cure.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fresh fruit juices — in which the medicinal action is greatly increased by the special way in which they are combined. 50c a box; 6 for $2 50. At all druggists' or sent on receipt of price.

Right Kind of Clothing
FOR MEN AND YOUNG MEN IS WHAT WE SHOW.
The difference in clothes: It is the easiest thing in the world to buy poor clothes. They prevail to a much greater extent than the well-tailored and distinctive kind.
The poorer kind is the easiest to make, and the profits thereon are larger. But when it comes to satisfaction—that is, wearing quality, perfect workmanship and faultless fashioning (and these are the features we conscientiously claim for the clothes we sell)—you can't get anything but good clothes at this store.
We would like the opportunity of showing you the difference between the clothes we sell and the ordinary ready-made.

REMAINS WERE LAID AWAY THIS AFTERNOON

Funeral of the Late Mr. Archibald Blue—A Well-Known Mission Worker.

The remains of the late Mr. Archibald Blue, whose death occurred on Wednesday at Victoria Hospital, were interred this afternoon in Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

Mr. Blue was one of the best-known mission workers in this part of the province, especially in the pioneer days, when he worked among the Gaelic settlers, who were scattered throughout Western Ontario.

He was 88 years of age and had lived in London for a long term of years, and will be most prominently remembered as a mission worker who devoted much of his time ministering to the sick body at the hospital and to those with ailments of the soul at the county jail. He was indefatigable in his work for bettering the cause of those who suffered, no matter from either ailment.

Born in the Highlands of Scotland, Mr. Blue was for many years employed by one of the big steamship lines. He cruised in many parts of the world. Coming to Canada he found himself particularly adapted to the work of ministering to the Gaelic people in this country.

Since coming to London, Mr. Blue was occupied with mission work. He is survived by four daughters, Mrs. James Bentley, of South London; Mrs. E. H. Russell, Teresa street; Mrs. William Sully, Ridout street, and Mrs. Axtel, Thames street, and one son, Duncan Blue.

There will be an element of surprise in the advice of Dr. Henry Gannett, of the United States Geological Survey: "If you are old go to Alaska by all means, but if you are young, wait." Mr. Gannett gives this reason for his advice: "The scenery of Alaska is much grander than anything else of the kind in the world and it is not well to dull one's capacity for enjoyment by seeing the finest sights first."

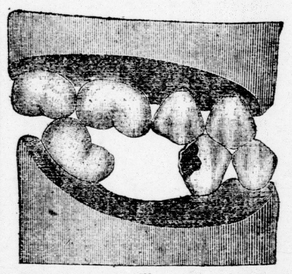

The throttle of the first Japanese railway train was pulled by Duncan McDonald, now a veteran in the employ of the Southern Pacific. That was 35 years ago, says the Railroad Man's Magazine, on the occasion of the completion of the narrow-gauge line from Yokohama to Tokio, and McDonald had the honor of drawing the present Mikado, then a young man of scarcely twenty.

Jacob Buck, who died recently near Newport, Perry County, held the record, so far as known, for living descendants. He was 91 years old, and was the father of nine children, with 49 grandchildren, 133 great-grandchildren, and 16 great-great-grandchildren. The father and grandfather of Jacob Buck were among the first settlers in "Buck's Valley," Perry County.

Artificial Teeth Without a Plate or Crown and Bridge Work

The above cut illustrates a condition common to many mouths. Two of the most important teeth are missing. These should be replaced by means of BRIDGE WORK, and not by wearing a plate, which will destroy all the remaining teeth in time. A Bridge properly inserted feels just like your own teeth, and it can be done PAINLESSLY.

A Close Shave.

A sensational rumor was current last evening in the city to the effect that a local barber was drowned at Springbank below the dam while canoeing. The story was to the effect that the barber had two young ladies out for a canoe ride, and that in some manner the canoe capsized, the young man losing his life. On investigation the rumor proved to be unfounded.

Vanderburg—Scott.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Monday evening, at the home of Gilbert Vanderburge, 61 Arthur street, when his youngest son, Wilfred, was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Scott, third youngest daughter of Jonathan Scott, Delaware. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Rural Dean Chadwick, rector of All Saints' Church. The groom was attended by Mr. Harvery Adair, of Detroit, while Miss May Calter, also of Detroit, attended the bride. After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served, and a pleasant evening spent. A number of intimate friends were present.

"Hymn of Praise."

Mendelssohn never wrote a more lofty work than the "Hymn of Praise." It was written to commemorate the invention of the art of printing, and praise to God for the creation of light is the theme first, last and always. The choir of Dundas Center Church (augmented to over sixty voices), under Mr. J. Parnell Morris, and accompanied by two pianos and the organ, will present this work Tuesday, Nov. 5. Mr. Theo Van Yorx, of New York, has again been secured to assist.

LONDON AND DISTRICT

—Miss Alice Halls, contralto soloist at Dundas Center Methodist Church, has returned to the city after a lengthy visit in eastern cities. Her many friends will be glad to welcome her back to the city again.

—Mrs. Harry H. Young will receive for the first time since her marriage on Thursday and Friday, October 10 and 11, from four to ten o'clock, at 283 Dufferin avenue.

—The death took place yesterday of Ronald Knightley, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Jones, 311 Wolfe street. The funeral will be private. Mrs. Jones is a daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Stewart.

—The communion of the Lord's Supper will be observed at the close of the morning service Sunday in Chalmers Church. The Rev. Mr. Harris addressed the preparatory service last evening. At the close the new members received the right hand of fellowship.

Walter Howard, the London dramatist, was leaving the stage door of a theater one evening when an anaemic-looking youth stepped up and said: "Are you Mr. Howard?" the author replied in the affirmative, whereupon the young fellow said he wanted to go on the stage. Noticing his evident unfitness for such a life Howard advised him to stick to his present occupation, whatever it was. "I am assistant to the pawnbroker across the way," said the ambitious young man. "And what do your people thing of your going on the stage?" asked Howard. "Oh, they are right against it," was the jaunty reply, "but I shouldn't mind the disgrace myself."

CHAPTER I

IN THE TAPESTRY ROOM.

Basil Conyers leaped from the station dogcart before the big chestnut was fairly pulled up, and dashed up the broad steps.

"Any news, Sim?" he asked breathlessly of the old butler awaiting him in the arch of the doorway.

"Not a word, sir, not a trace! Oh, sir, it's a sore stroke, and it's a sad house you've come to, but Sir David and my lady'll be fain to see you, and you surely can help us, sir"—conventional respect and some deep trouble struggling oddly together in voice and manner.

"Is Sir David in?"

"No, sir, he's out. I don't rightly know where, but I'll inquire, sir. It's as if he couldn't bide still in the house, but my lady's in the tapestry room, sir."

"Stop, Sim, you needn't announce me," said Conyers hastily. "How—how is she?"

"What could you expect, sir?" said the old servant, shaking his head; and, like one giving himself no time to think or to hesitate, Conyers quickly opened the door, and stepped into the familiar room. A noble room, almost resembling a gallery in its proportions, and lit at the further end by a great three-light window.

As its name suggested, the walls were hung with rare old tapestry, the work of busy, skillful fingers folded long ago quietly enough. Time, the great artist, had dealt kindly with the results of their toil. The original tints had gently faded to a tender, all-pervading pinkish gray, making a harmonious background to one or two remarkable portraits, and to the severe, simple lines of the fine old cabinets and tables.

To the young man it was all familiar with a lifelong familiarity, and he cast one quick glance almost of stupefaction around at the deep-toned masses of autumn flowers, the books, the prints, the photographs; at the hundred little tokens of a continuity of cultured life, each generation leaving its growing legacy to the next. What had happened was so impossible, so unbelievable, and it seemed a thousandfold more unbelievable here, in this room, which breathed the very essence of stately, peaceful, well-ordered life.

Then his eyes quickly traveled to the solitary figure in the deep window recess. She was apparently gazing steadily out at the ample landscape framed by the three tall lancets—the broad, smiling valley in its autumn bravery of ripening fields, of yellowing leaves, sloping gradually upward till field and meadow were merged in rolling moorlands, beyond which misty peaks and distant summits loomed dim. But her fixed eyes were doubtless seeing little enough of the mellow harvest cheer, or of the bright reaches of the river, gleaming here and there amid tufted woods, for when at last Conyers stepped softly to her side, and she slowly turned her head, there was for a moment no recognition in her gaze. If till now all had seemed bewilderingly unchanged to Basil Conyers, there was change enough here in the blank, bitter hopelessness, the tragic woe looking out on him from the sunken eyes; in the cruel furrows plowed deep in the handsome, high-featured face.

"You—you have no news?" he blurted out, hardly knowing what he said, "None!"

but feeling that the silence was unbearable and must be broken.

The pale lips hardly opened. The single word dropped out as a stone sinks into deep water, and as the water closes over it, so the silence fell again, and Conyers stood overawed before this grief, which he could neither help nor comfort. But a young man's endurance is short-lived. There must be something to be done. He laid his hand gently on her rigid arm.

"Dear Lady Stormont, can you bear to speak to me——"

She started at the touch, and looked up like one waking from a dream.

"Oh, my poor boy, it is you at last. If you could have come sooner, I think you might have brought hope with you, but now——" Her voice broke.

"I would have given my right hand to have been here," said Basil, passionately, "but by some cursed chance your wire missed me, and has been following me about the Loffodens, and then there was the crossing; but if you can bear to do it, for God's sake tell me about it. Remember, I've only had your wire. I know nothing more. I couldn't bear to question Rogers as I came from the station, nor even Sim—tell me what you can. I can't take it in yet it seems so impossible, but there must surely be something that I could do."

"That is the dreadful part, we are all so helpless. If only there was anything more we could do than what has been done. My poor husband tries to cheat himself into the belief that there is—and now you! Oh, my dear boy, forgive me. I was almost forgetting what it means to you. I forget everything now. Yes, you have a right to know."

"No, no I don't mean that—never mind about me. Sir David will tell me.——"

"I do not know when he may come in, not for hours likely—he cannot rest day or night. I may as well tell you; it is never out of my thoughts. I go over and over every detail, wondering if there is nothing that we have overlooked, nothing that would afford some clue, till my mind is like a mill ever grinding out misery." The hands, lying passive in her lap, clasped themselves tightly. "It will be a week tomorrow—" she began again in an altered voice.

"My God!" uttered the young man under his breath.

"She had not been quite so bright, you know, since we came back from town; how often I have wondered if we let her overtax herself, but there—that's over. Her home had always been so much to her that I thought the little"—hesitating for a word—"depression would soon pass, and that it would pass all the sooner if we were quietly alone together here. That was why I encouraged you to go to Norway—perhaps I was wrong there, too," sighing. "Perhaps I let her fall too much into her old solitary ways. She would spend hours by the riverside or in the woods alone. She seemed happier so. You know," fixing pleading, miserable eyes upon Basil's face, "such very young girls often are fanciful, and that was always her fancy—to be alone."

Basil nodded rather gloomily.

"And—and did the depression seem to pass?" he asked a little awkwardly.

Lady Stormont was silent for a moment.

"Not so much as I had hoped," she said with evident difficulty, "but, indeed, it was only the old desire to be alone. I began to think that I had perhaps yielded too much to her whims, that unconsciously she was moping here alone with only us two old people. I thought I would write to you and ask you if you wouldn't shorten your cruise. I thought of asking one or two people—young, amusing. I proposed it to her, but——"

"I think I ought to know exactly what happened," said Conyers gravely.

"It seemed to excite her," went on Lady Stormont with the same difficulty. "She said she wanted no one, that she only wished to be alone. It wasn't like her; she was always so gentle. Then on Friday last"—the clasped hands clenched themselves tighter—"I had to go to Duncaird. She said that she didn't care to drive, that she was going to her hammock in the Round Wood—she has spent hours there lately. I told Justine to go with her, and to be near her mistress in case she wanted anything, but—but Isobel sent her back for some trifle, and when Justine reached the Round Wood there was no one there, and since then——"

Lady Stormont's voice had sunk to a hard whisper, and it broke off short, and it was long before Conyers made any effort to break the silence.

His eyes sought a portrait on the opposite wall, and fixed there—a fine, full-length Sargent, which had been one of the chief attractions of the last season's academy. The picture was that of a very young girl in a diaphanous white frock of almost childish simplicity. She was standing on a flagged terrace walk beside a dwarf orange tree in a huge majolica pot—one slim hand in the act of breaking off a white spray of blossom. The limpid light gray eyes were the eyes of a child in their absolute innocence and vague wonder, and yet for imaginative onlookers there was a subtle suggestion that these bridal flowers were waking some new emotion in the young bosom under the swathing folds of maiden white—was it shy hope, or fear, or chiefly bewildered shrinking?

There were few, however, who remarked what might after all be a mere trick of the fancy, born of the conjunction of that embodiment of youthfulness and the white flowers, symbol of the fulfilment of a woman's life. Those were inclined to remark rather upon the superb brushwork of the picture—the majolica pot a joy of color in its maze of blue and green, the waxen flowers, the golden fruit and the glowing leaves with the summer sky beyond—and to decide that but for the wonderful hair, the colorless young face and the slender white figure would have been overpowered by the sumptuous accessories. But that bright cloud of hair of an unusual tawny-red shade would have given distinction to a face far less fair than the delicate one for which it formed such a glowing frame.

"The Stormant hair" was as well known as the old family name. Not only was it repeated in the one or two notable portraits, a Romney and two admirable Raeburns among them, which adorned the tapestry room, but Lady Stormont, one of the family by birth as well as by marriage, had her share of the family inheritance, though the last few days had robbed it of its brightness and given it a blanched, lifeless look.

This one striking peculiarity was not the only characteristic of the race. There was, besides, a marked similarity of type, and under Cavalier lovelocks or Georgian peruke, above the soldier's scarlet, the clerical lawn, or the lawyer's black the same cast of features was more or less discernible. To the women it gave at least, as to Lady Stormont, a haughty comeliness, while here and there, as in the youthful face upon the canvas, it flowered into positive beauty. The family tree had spread into many branches, but a certain "clannishness," not to speak of questions of property, had led each succeeding laird to marry among his cousins till the main stem had at last put forth this one frail blossom, the fragile girl looking down upon them from the wall—the last descendant of so many stalwart men and vigorous, capable women.

Basil Conyers knew this world, and knew too well that with some girls as tenderly nurtured and as zealously sheltered as Isobel Stormont had been there might be other reasons to account for this bewildering disappearance than those which all who loved her dreaded. But, while like an honest man he would have deemed such things impossible in his own womenkind, one glance at that young face would have made such a thought, had he been capable of it, a blasphemy. Still, as he sat gazing at it, his mind awhirl, a slow red rose under the tan of his young face, which had been pale enough before.

"Will you tell me one thing," he said, slowly. "This—depression"—he, too, halted over the word—"had nothing to do with—with me, had it? You don't think she was regretting—anything? She was—she is so good and sweet and gentle that perhaps because she knew that you and Sir David wished it—and I wished it," the last words came in rather like an afterthought. "Oh, you know what I mean," he broke off, helplessly.

Lady Stormont started. "I am certain it was not that—absolutely certain," she said with an emphasis, a passion, which suggested that she had already inwardly striven again and again to repel the same suggestion. No, if she were to keep her reason, that thought must gain no harborage in her mind. Had she not known from her own school days that some day she was to marry her cousin David, and had ever union been happier save for the one ever-present anxiety—the frail health of their only child? That there could be any other cause for anxiety was never admitted. And had she not thought that she in her turn was doing her best for her dreamy delicate darling in planning this marriage for her with her distant cousin, Basil Conyers, a Stormont by descent on the mother's side, whose hearty, honest, unemotional nature was just the corrective which Isobel's had needed? Her child would be so safe in Basil's keeping, and her great inheritance, too; and once happily married, that cloud which at times darkened her young life would, of a surety, pass away.

With her daughter, Lady Stormont had had no difficulty. The girl was so accustomed to obey that she had acquiesced at first in the arrangement as if it had been some question as to what she should wear, and if afterward Lady Stormont had any reason for misgiving, she had silenced it with the assurance that the marriage once accomplished all would—all must be right. It needs a much severer and more lengthened experience of Fortune's buffetings than had as yet fallen to Lady Stormont's lot to convince us that our deepest desires have, after all, no materiol influence on the course of events.

As a boy, Conyers had been much at Stormont, when he had regarded his little cousin with the healthy indifference of an active boy toward a creature who is "no good" for games, varied at times by a rough but kindly solicitude for one so feeble. But when, after some years' absence, he had returned to find the ailing child developed to a slim and graceful maiden, her pallor gaining beauty from the glory of her hair, a few judicious hints had effected all that Lady Stormant could desire. His own possessions were sufficient to make him a suitable aspirant even to the Stormont heiress his quondam guardians were all urging him to marry—of course he must marry some day, then why not his little cousin Isobel? He was by no means in love; he knew nothing of it yet, in its heights or its depths, its power or its weakness, but he liked the girl, or his ideal of her to be nearer the truth. In her gentle yielding grace, she was the type of femininity which at the time most commended itself to him.

A few words one evening settled it all. Isobel was to be presented, have her first season, and the marriage would take place in the late autumn. If in the hurry of London life he saw little of his fiancee, or that when he did see her she seemed to have so little to say, did not disturb him. He was quite ready to endow her silence with all manner of gracious things, and if at times he was conscious of a baffling change in her manner, of a strange, gloomy aloofness, he was quite willing to accept Lady Stormont's assurances that these were but the morbid fancies of girlhood and that, like the morning clouds, they would soon pass away.

But now these clouds took on a darker hue. He could but remember how at times Isobel had seemed to shrink from him, and he had counted such timidity as but another charm lacking in too many of the girls of his acquaintance. Was it possible that the poor gentle child had mistaken her own desires, and had been brooding over it, until at last she had been afraid to face friends or lover? The idea was too horrible. He hastily averted his eyes from the wistful, pictured face, and made a rapid turn up and down the long room.

"Then you mean to tell me," he said, pausing again by Lady Stormont's side, "that from the moment that Justine left her, no one saw her again. Forgive me. I know I am putting it brutally, but what can one do? It seems impossible, she was so well known about here, and even among strangers she could not pass unnoticed."

"That is my despair," said Lady Stormont. "Not one of our own people saw her; but if she went beyond the gates, perhaps by the east gate, where there is no lodge, some passerby, you would think, must have seen her in the road. But we can hear of no one. At first, when it seemed that a few hours must put an end to our suspense, that there must be some simple explanation, we only inquired cautiously. I could not bear that there should be any talk, a whisper even, about my darling's name—good God," with a sudden harsh laugh, "I am long past that now. The whole country is ringing with her name, and yet not a word—not a word. Oh, Basil, where can she be—where?" the flood of her anguish breaking out at last. "My darling, my own flesh and blood—the one child that I bore, the child for whom I cried to God—'Give me children, or I die'—and the little baby for whom I thanked Him day and night—my child whom I have watched and tended since her eyes opened on mine!—I trembled if the wind blew on her, and now—where, where can she be these six days and" ping his arm hard.

Basil shuddered. What might it not mean indeed?

"She was wearing one of her little white frocks like—like that," went on Lady Stormont, glancing hastily at the picture. "She had only her little slippers on, and no hat, Justine says," the poor mother's voice faltering over these details, which had gained such poignancy now. "Where could she go like that?" piercingly. "Do you know what is always in my mind," her voice sinking—"the Adler Pool in the river where the water is so deep and black."

"No, no, dear Lady Stormont—don't—you mustn't"—Conyers began incoherently, when she suddenly checked herself, the despair in her eyes changed to a pale flicker of expectancy, as a tall man entered the room.

CHAPTER II.

Where?

If hope, so hard to kill, had struggled up again, one glance at the newcomer was enough to quench the feeble flame. His wife had no need to put a question to him. She turned away to the window as Sir David, seeing Conyers, exclaimed almost angrily.

"So you are here at last. Perhaps you can help us with some suggestion now that you are here?"

He was a tall man, rather spare and thin for his height, from which a slight stoop detracted a little. In spite of his easy old shooting suit, his appearance did not suggest the country gentleman or the man of outdoor pursuits. Rather he had something of the bookish student air. The grief which had crushed his wife into at least outward quietude seemed to have well-nigh unhinged him. Under the heavy eyebrows, of the same reddish tawny hue as his hair, the gray eyes, red-rimmed by nights of sleepless misery, looked out—fierce, desperate, shifty—like those of some hated creature. Ever seeking, and ever seeking in vain, they darted their hungry, questing, craving glances on all sides, and the same consuming fever of unrest possessed the man's whole frame. He could not sit, he could not stand still. His feet uneasily shifted, as if they would fain carry him in some new direction; his hands worked ceaselessly while he hastily recounted to Conyers all that had been done, his voice harsh with the strain of repressing the inward passion of revolt.

How long can an animal live without eating? Last year a dog was imprisoned for 29 days in a rabbit warren at Guildford, England, yet was dug out alive. During the siege of Metz, in the Franco-Prussian War, a dog was confined without food or water for 39 days, while Dover records have the story of a pig which, buried alive by a fall off a cliff came out all right at the end of 160 days.

Work of the Church Army

JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT DESCRIBES AN EVENING SPENT WITH REV. WILSON CARLILE, THE FOUNDER—KEPT HEARERS AWAKE WITH A TROMBONE—A CULTIVATED ENGLISH GENTLEMAN WHO GETS DOWN AMONG THE MASSES.

It is the custom of many people who are especialy interested in the work of the Church Army to look in on Rev. Wilson Carlile at 5 o'clock of a Sunday afternoon for tea. He lives four flights up—and they are very steep flights — in a clean but cheerless building that in America would be described as a tenement, and that would fall far short of fulfilling the requirements of a model dwelling of that class. It is situate in that part of London which reeks with "a very ancient and fishlike smell," particularly on days when there is no breeze stirring on the Thames. The monument that commemorates the great fire is only a few squares away, and so is London Bridge.

A man to whom the writer of these going to evening service at Prebendary Carlile's church, said: "You'd better not—he may ask you to march with him across London Bridge." The clergyman's dwelling is adjacent to the church of St. Mary-at-Hill. That church was built by the great Wren in 1672-77, but its tower is modern. It is dingy without but spacious and beautiful within. The pulpit is a notably ornate and dignified piece of work, and to see Prebendary Carlile standing beneath its somber, stately canopy and ripping out notes from a devastating trombone when he thought his congregation needed rousing was an experience that probably couldn't be duplicated in any other state church in Christendom.

Among the guests at 5 o'clock tea on the Sunday afternoon here recorded was a lady whom the English newspapers would describe as "a very exalted personage," and a kindly old man, who had spent some thirty years of his seventy in English prisons, and who, in the time of his greatest activity with the pen, had been known as one of the most accomplished forgers in Europe. The princess was making her visit incognito and her desire for privacy was scrupulously respected. A room was reserved for her, and the ladies and gentlemen who attended her, and you could hear her gentle voice asking questions. It was a voice to fall in love with—princess or no princess. She came at 5 o'clock precisely, and when she descended the stairs at 6, the hour at which the preliminary service of song began in the adjacent church, the fluttered commoners in the room across the corridor were supposed to avert their eyes and affect utter unconsciousness of her presence. This they all did.

Meanwhile the writer was getting on famously with the former forging gentleman, who was a most polite and pleasant old man. He poured the tea and tendered the bread and butter and marmalade and was quite grieved when the marmalade was declined. He talked about the industrial future of England and was strong on protection, which he seemed to think was the only way to the financial salvation of the country. The problem of the unemployed rested heavy upon him and he talked forcefully and sensibly on social and economic matters in general and with Christian fortitude about the weather, which that day was peculiarly low. When Prebendary Carlile introduced him he said, "This is Mr. —' a very old friend of mine," and added: "Mr. ——, I'm going to ask you to see that our new friend from America has tea and a good visit, because I must leave you for a few minutes." Then he went back to the very exalted personage with the pleasant, interested way of speaking, and I settled down to an excellent tea and one of the cheeriest visits imaginable. In about twenty minutes Prebendary Carlile came back to us and said, "Oh, ——, old fellow, her royal highness would like to see you," and with that the old man got up from his seat and begged to be excused and toddled out of the room. Then the prebendary said :"Like my old friend?"

"Yes, thoroughly."

"Well, don't you ever put his name in print, but that nice old man has been 30 years in prison. Wonderful forger in his day. Been straight eight years now and has accumulated a nice little fortune through honest work. When he was serving his first term in prison the wardens wouldn't go alone into his cell—always in pairs. So desperate, you know. Well, when we got hold of him we had the hardest time finding work for him, because he looked so old. Thirty years in prison does age a man. Finally I said: 'Well, old boy, you've got to dye to live,' so we dyed his hair and got him a job. He proved so faithful and honest and hard-working that in time he was able to hold the job on his own terms, and now, as I told you, he's got a nice little fortune of his own, all the result of honest toil." It was significant that the preacher did not say anything about what the Church Army had done for the man, but credited it all to him, and he seemed sincerely to feel that it was a privilege to have known him.

Tea over, the guests descended into the street. The clergyman had donned his Church Army uniform of blue, and over that he wore his surplice and bands. At the church door he assembled his musicians and singers, who also wore surplices. He carried a

Tasks of the Beauty Hour

THE PRETTY WOMAN'S ROUTINE BEFORE GOING TO BED.

Processes of the Toilet That Undo the Ravages of the Day—Care of the Hair, Face and Hands.

"The hour between 11 o'clock and midnight is my beauty hour," said a professional beauty. "During that hour I undo the ravages of the day and make myself so good-looking that I pass as a very pretty woman.

"This may sound a bit conceited, but the credit is not due to me, but to the beauty of the hour. The idea came to me one summer in Paris.

"I was visiting a beautiful French woman who showed me, upon her dresser, a calendar, which instead of being for the month and year was for the week and day.

"'This is my social and beauty calendar,' said she.

"Upon this calendar was the day's programme. It began by recording the hour to get up and take the cool perfumed plunge. Then came the five minutes of exercise, then the light breakfast of coffee and rolls, and then the day's engagements.

"Running her slim finger down over the page my hostess came to the last hour in the day. It was marked 'beauty hour,' and then came the outline of the duties for the beauty hour.

"'I have it all written down,' said she, 'because I am apt to forget. I am tired and sleepy, like all the rest of the world, and unless I have it in black and white I may omit something. And each detail is important.'

"The idea impressed me as so good that when I returned home I made a day calendar of my own. Like my French friend, I have come to consider the beauty hour the most important of all.

"I will say that though the beauty hour is set down as the hour before midnight I endeavor to arrange it a little earlier. I try to go to bed a couple of hours before midnight three or four nights a week. Sometimes this is a difficult matter, but no matter how late, I never forget my beauty hour.

"Every woman develops during the day a few cross lines in her forehead. The more emotional she is the quicker and the deeper do the lines come.

"I work upon these very industriously. My first step is the splashing of my face with soft cold cream, which I heat by placing the cold cream jug in a saucer of hot water.

"When my face is covered with this lotion I go through some waist exercises that make a woman slender along the belt line. I work upon my fingers for 15 minutes, bending and twisting, and going through a set of gymnastics which I studied out for my own particular case.

"Meanwhile the cold cream is getting in its good work upon my face and neck and arms. Even better than cold cream is sour cream of milk. This is slightly acid and is the best of all things for the skin.

"I dash my face and neck with hot water and rub in the sour cream or milk. It is a grand thing for any complexion, for it restores to it the very juices which the skin needs.

"The next best thing is the face bath in sour milk or buttermilk. In Paris I obtained a jug of buttermilk every day for the skin. I found it excellent for making my cheeks pink. It seemed to take off the outer hard yellow skin and to make my face soft and almost infantile.

"There are women with lovely complexions who sleep all night with sour milk upon their face. It soon dries and though slightly uncomfortable, for it gives the face a drawn feeling, it does not interfere with one's rest.

"I have never been willing to do this, not even for beauty's sake. So, after the sour cream massage, I wash my face with very hot water and daub it with cold cream which I send into the skin with swift, brisk hard pinches. It is very good indeed for the cuticle.

"While studying my preparations for the night, I learned something from my dentist, and that was the trick of brightening the teeth. There are bleaches for the teeth, and these are best applied at night.

"During the beauty hour one must brush the hair. This is a rather tiresome process, but it may be made less so if one will ventilate the hair before brushing it.

"The idea is to shake it, strand by strand, and separate the hairs so that they are soft and fluffy. It takes only a little while, and if one can stand in front of an open window and allow the wind to blow the hair about it will be ventilated just so much more quickly. Hair that is ventilated each night will not need to be shampooed as often as hair that is ventilated only once in a great while.

"I brush my hair along my forehead because I realize that the hair grows better when lightly stimulated with the brush. Hard brushing will kill the roots, but a gentle tapping with a soft brush will make them strong.

"I devote about ten minutes to the hair, for I feel that a woman's charm is pretty well gone when her hair begins to fall her, and I want to keep mine for a long time to come.

"I sometimes rub a little good tonic into my hair, and I have been known to apply castor oil to the roots at night, but I use so little that it is scarcely worth mentioning.

"Into a gold thimble I pour about ten drops of oil, or about half a coffee spoonful. When I have parted my hair I rub my fingers down the parting, tapping as I go along. This stimulates

The Spirit of Toynbee Hall

THE PARENT OF THE SOCIAL SETTLEMENT — JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT WRITES OF ITS HISTORY AND WORK — A FAR-REACHING WORK AMONG THE POOR OF LONDON.

The social settlement is undoubtedly the purest utterance of democracy in our age, and of all such institutions Toynbee Hall, in London, is the parent. This light amid the darkness of Whitechapel which has burned steadily for three-and-twenty years has a special attraction for the people of Chicago because it may be regarded as the father of Hull House. Toynbee Hall was founded by men and its work is in the direct charge of men. Hull House is a woman's achievement, and so the relationship of father and daughter between the University Settlement in Commercial road and the great school in Halsted street is not entirely a rhetorical way of defining the sentimental attachment which binds the two institutions together in a common purpose and common tasks.

Granting so much, we may think of Hull House as Toynbee's fairest daughter, and it was with peculiar pleasure, therefore, that one who reveres the founder and loves the atmosphere of Hull House passed out of the clatter and grime of Commercial road into the quiet cloisters of Toynbee Hall. Many Americans spend an hour there; some take up studies that keep them there many weeks.

From an hour's tarrying something may be gained; some notion may be obtained of the spirit of Toynbee Hall, the spirit of fortitude, patience, gentleness, high culture and perfect equality as between man and man, that animate its work. The teeming life of Whitechapel hurries and scampers all around the low, dull-red buildings, and in Whitechapel life is so active, so prolific that humanity, as you observe it from the top of the tram car rumbling down Commercial road, takes on the aspect of vermin. You think the less of yourself for feeling that way, but the impression is inevitable. What seems inevitable either in fact or fancy—and there are so many facts that seem inevitable in the Whitechapel region—has never been a barrier between the workers in Toynbee Hall and the people around them to whom they would minister and whom they would be taught. "The longer one lives there," said T. E. Harvey, who knows the place as well as he loves it, "and the better one knows it, the more one feels its exceptional advantages as a meeting ground for men of all sorts and conditions, for all kinds of varying ideas and ideals. And it is a friendly meeting place.

Rural Russia In Despair

THE PEOPLE COWED AND DISORDER IS GENERAL.

Bad Example of Organized Revolutionary Bands—Newspapers Often Fined—Where the Dissolution of the Second Duma Has Left the Country.

Professor S. N. Harper, of the University, of Chicago, writes in the New York Post from St. Petersburg, as follows:

After the dissolution of the second Douma, my colleague, Mr. Bernard Pares, and myself started from St. Petersburg for old Novgorod—drove over a hundred miles along the post road, passed down southwards into the government to Tver, picking out the district from which many Liberal leaders come. From Tver we have been following the Volga—getting off now at Kimery, an immense village devoted entirely to the making of shoes; stopping at the house of a large lond-owner, going to Toraslav; branching off to Rostov, where the peasants are most enterprising and well-to-do. So we have pushed on to Nagau. In the cities we looked up newspapermen, Zemstvo workers, men who have been active in various political organizations—now Liberals, now Conservatives — sometimes extreme reactionaries. We have also turned to the revolutionaries.

It must be admitted that we have found considerable apathy. "Give me a rest," says an ex-deputy, a Liberal. "I am sick of politics." But he was complaining from the very opening of the Douma. He was not made to be a politician, he finally admitted. "We are busy getting in our crops," said the peasants of one village. "We have no time for politics." But a closer cross-examination revealed the fact that it was not that they did not care. There was discontent; there was sympathy with a political movement, without which better economic conditions were impossible. And another factor explained their seeming indifference: "I am so hemmed in and tied down that it is better not to talk," one peasant said to us as we tried to question him on the street. We had known this man in the Douma. He was a cadet. On the other hand, we often hear of meetings in the woods, of progress of organization, of the development of a most "conscious" attitude among the peasants.

Our task is rather difficult. It would seem that we are back again to the state of things which existed before the movement, when one looked around to see if one was being overheard. This timidity is especially noticeable among the Liberals. The Revolutionists go too far in the other direction, however, and we are sometimes a little uncomfortable when the voices are raised too high and the place is a little public. For even we must recognize the fact that the police are again on top since the coup d'etat of June 16.

LIBERALS DOWNHEARTED.

The Liberals are inclined to be downhearted. "There is no issue. We are back to the old regime. How many victims there have been, and where have we gotten to? What have we accomplished? It is a hopeless task we have ahead of us." Not all, however, show this lack of stamina. Many follow the admirable example of Professor Unlynikov, who, after each blow, goes on with his work with tireless energy and enthusiasm.

Many are discouraged at the friendly attitude taken by the authorities toward the reactionaries who openly and shamelessly attack the very principles for which Mr. Stolypin stands. The Reactionaries we have met show little sign of political strength. They are poor in ideas, weak in numbers, though they are reputed to inscribe women and children as active members. They are prominent only because they alone can hold public meetings, can write what they wish in their newspapers.

The bitterest complaint of the Liberals is the free-handed way in which local governors inflict fines on their newspapers for articles which are considered "hostile to the Government." These fines of $500 often coming down on the same paper a second and a third time are heavy burdens for a struggling, provincial paper. The offending article is not always mentioned when the fine in imposed. The editors are not sure just in what point they have been indiscreet.

The electoral lists have been prepared in many places. The new electoral law works out worse than had even been feared. The predominance of the large landed gentry is assured, and though a peasant must be elected from every Government, what does this mean when the majority, who in the final elect this peasant, are gentry? The procedure of registration has been changed. One must fill out one's blank in the presence of the police this year. "Why, they want to get a look at us so as to keep us under surveillance," explained a radical voter. "I am not going to risk it. I would

PALATABLE WAYS OF PREPARING APPLES

Paring Apples Properly

Apples for Sauce should be cut into eighths.

Coring Should Be Done Before Paring

Pineapple Gives a Delicious Flavor to Apple Sauce.

Device for Making Apple Balls.

At THE first thought, it hardly seems as if there were any way to prepare apples which is not already known to all the world.

We run them over to ourselves, the good old standbys. We could readily believe they dated as far back as the time of Adam, except that we are convinced that there were never any apples, cooked or uncooked, allowed in Eve's kitchen!

But by the time of Noah they had perhaps outgrown the prejudice, and it requires no effort of the imagination to think there must have been some of these dishes then.

Apple pie, apple pudding, apple dumplings, baked and boiled; apple sauce, apple butter, apple jelly, baked apples, steamed apples, and so on and so on.

It is a long and respectable list, but sadly lacking in novelty. And novelty is what every one is seeking in cookery.

The most ambitious cookery enthusiast can hardly hope to revolutionize the apple at this late day and give it a new flavor.

But time-honored though it may be, it is possible to offer it in new combinations which, if not entirely new, are yet different, and which will be fresh to a good many readers.

Some of these dishes are simple, others elaborate. All are worth trying, and in every case I hope some one will find them worth repeating more than once.

Recipes for Tasty Dishes

Apple Trifle.

Select tart apples, peel, cut them in half, removing the core; lay a slice of lemon in the center of each, pour a cupful of water over them, and steam until tender and clear. Take them out and set aside until perfectly cold.

Lay a dozen split lady-fingers, or half a dozen penny sponge cakes, split lengthwise, in a glass dish, and moisten them with sherry.

Lay the apples on this, sprinkle thickly with powdered sugar, and heap over all a cupful of whipped and sweetened cream. Serve very cold.

Apple and Rice Pudding.

Peel small tart apples, core and put them in a baking dish. Have ready a cupful of boiled rice, mix with it two cupfuls of hot milk into which has been beaten the yolks of three eggs and a half cup of sugar.

Stir into the rice a half cupful of blanched almonds cut into strips, a half cup of seeded raisins and a couple of dozen strips of citron. Pour this mixture over the apples, after having put a teaspoonful of sugar into the core of each.

Put in the oven, covered, and bake until the apples are tender, about half an hour.

Uncover, heap on the pudding a meringue made of the whites of three eggs beaten stiff with a little powdered sugar, brown lightly, and serve either hot or cold. Pass cream with it.

Fried Apples (a Sweet Dish).

Core good-sized apples—a sweet apple is better than a tart—and cut them into slices about a quarter of an inch thick. Mix a tablespoonful of sugar and one of good brandy with the juice of a lemon, pour over the apple and leave it thus for half an hour.

Melt a tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan, lay in the apples, cook for about five minutes, or until soft; take out, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve.

These are very nice served on slices of cake which have been moistened with sherry or with cream.

Apple and Bread Custard.

Soak slices of bread from which the crust has been cut in as much milk as they will take up without becoming mushy. Put a layer of these in a buttered mould and on it place a layer of sliced apples, peeled and seeded, and on these a stratum of seeded raisins.

Sprinkle with powdered sugar, add a little grated lemon peel and finish the pudding with a layer of bread. Pour in two cups of milk into which have been beaten the yolks of three eggs, and bake until the pudding is firm.

Make a meringue of the whites, heap on the pudding and brown lightly. Serve cold with rich cream.

Parisian Apples.

Peel large apples and cut from them balls with a Parisian potato scoop. Put them over the fire as soon as peeled in a half cup of water to which have been added a quarter cupful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice.

Cook until the apple balls are tender, heap them on rounds of buttered toast which have been spread lightly with apple jelly, strew with blanched and chopped almonds and heap with a meringue made of the whites of two eggs beaten light with two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a teaspoonful of lemon juice.

Serve cold, either with or without browning the meringue. If the latter, put on the meringue some bits of bright-colored apple or crabapple jelly.

Stuffed Apples.

Steam half a dozen large apples, first coring them and filling the centers with sugar.

While they are cooking put over the fire a cup of water with a cup of granulated sugar and boil for five minutes. Cut into small pieces a cupful of candied fruit, pineapple, cherries, apricots, pears, etc.; stir it into the boiling syrup.

Take from the fire and when the apples are tender put this mixture into the holes in the centers. Set aside to become cold, whip a cupful of cream, add to it bitter almond extract to taste and heap on the apples.

If you wish you may substitute chopped nuts for the candied fruits.

Apple Custard.

Make a good apple sauce of tart, well-flavored apples, coring and slicing the apples, but not peeling them. When the sauce is smooth, put it through the colander, sweeten to taste and add a little cinnamon, unless you object to the flavor.

To every quart of the apple sauce allow four eggs and, after beating these well, stir them into the sauce. Cook the mixture in a double boiler until it thickens. This will be in about ten minutes.

When cold, turn into custard glasses and put a teaspoonful of whipped cream on top of each.

Baked Apple Sauce.

Peel, core and slice good tart apples and put them into a baking dish. To three pints of the apples add a pound of sugar, the juice of three lemons and the grated rind of half a lemon.

Cook two hours; turn into a dish and set aside to become ice cold. Eat with cream.

Apple Fool.

Make a good apple sauce of tart apples, put it through a colander, sweeten to taste, add a pinch of ground cloves or of cinnamon or of nutmeg, as the taste indicates, and beat well.

Mix in gradually a half pint of milk and a half pint of cream, and bring to a boil, adding more sugar if needed.

When cold, heap on slices of sponge cake and serve.

French Apple Conserve.

Put a pound of sugar and a cup of water over the fire together in a clean saucepan and boil to a thick syrup.

Put into this eight good tart apples, pared, cored and sliced thin, the grated rind and the juice of a lemon, and cook fifteen minutes.

Pour the mixture into a mould and set it aside. Serve cold, with cream or custard.

Jellied Apples.

Peel and core firm apples and put them over the fire in just enough water to cover them. Sprinkle them thickly with white sugar and cook slowly until the apples are tender.

Take them out with a split spoon, let the liquid left come to a boil and cook for twenty minutes. Turn over the apples in a dish and leave them until the next day.

The jelly should be firm and clear. In some cases a tablespoonful of gelatine soaked in a little cold water is added to the syrup, but with a really good tart apple this is not necessary.

Eat ice cold, with whipped or plain cream.

Apple and Custard Pancakes.

(An English Recipe.)

Beat four eggs light, adding to them a half pint of cream and a little ground cinnamon. Peel and core the apples, cut them in thin slices and fry them tender in a little butter.

When browned slightly, turn them over, pour in the custard and fry to a light brown

Turn out on a hot flat dish and sprinkle powdered sugar over the pancake.

A Few Hints for the Housewife

DON'T put croquettes in lard until a blue smoke rises from it, to show it is absolutely boiling. Too low a temperature means greasy, indigestible frying.

Don't attempt to fry anything until the lard is first tested on a piece of stale bread. If it turns a clear golden brown at once, you are safe in beginning.

Don't use lard unless you are absolutely sure it is pure, and then don't use it for anything except meat balls, devilled crabs and such things as need deep frying, if you possibly can afford butter or olive oil.

Don't forget to clarify and strain your fat after it has been used and save it for next time. Only a wasteful cook throws away her frying material after it has done duty but once.

Don't forget to have heavy brown paper in a colander on top of the range, and put your fried things into it as soon as done. The paper absorbs any superfluous grease.

Don't neglect to save your cuttings from steaks, chops, roasts and other meats. They make the nicest possible frying mediums.

Don't put a frying pan away dirty. If the grease gets cold in it the next thing coooked in the pan will undoubtedly be spoiled.

Don't fail to remember that for the blackened, burned frying pan there is but one remedy—to buy a new one. If you cannot afford it, buy it anyhow, and learn to be more careful in the future.

Don't have but one frying pan and use it indiscriminately for browned onions with a "soupcon" of garlic and a delicate fritter or omelette. Every housekeeper should own at least three—small, medium and large—with an extra one thrown in that may be kept exclusively for what "The Music Master" would call "vegetable limburgers."

Lastly, don't fry when you can bake, boil, stew or eat raw. Complexions and tempers will both be better if this rule is observed.

IT IS not generally known that soda may be used in connection with sweet milk, especially in chocolate loaf cakes, where it seems to lend a richer mahogany color to the cake.

A lump of alum dropped into the starch while hot will prevent starch from sticking to the irons.

To prevent white fabrics such as tulle or silk or crepe becoming yellow when packed away, sprinkle bits of white wax freely among the folds.

The mattress slip is one of the best devices for saving the wear on a mattress. Buy unbleached muslin of the 5 or 6 cent quality and make a slip for the mattress, sewing by machine the three sides and leaving one side open to slip the mattress in. Sew by hand to fit snugly. It saves the mattress from becoming soiled, and is easily ripped off and washed when necessary.

To remove stove polish from the hands, first rub the hands thoroughly with lard and then wash with warm water.

After washing and thoroughly drying the baby's white bear coat take an old clean comb and comb it. It will be as soft and silky as when new.

If the water in which windows are washed is blued they will retain their brilliancy longer and polish easier.

The coarseness of cake is frequently due to its standing too long before being placed in the oven.

When removing fruit stains with boiling water have the water fall from a distance of at least three feet, as the force that is thus secured is a great help in removing the stain.

When sweeping stand with the broom rather behind you, partly facing it—the brush farther back than the tip of the handle. Used in this way the dust will not rise higher than the brush.

PAINT will stick to tinware if the surface be scratched first with a piece of rough pumice stone or coarse sandpaper, and then a thin coat of shellac varnish be applied before the paint is put on.

Wring chamois out of the soapy water in which it has been used without rinsing. When it dries, it will be soft and serviceable, instead of stiff.

To remedy a creased rug turn it upside down and wet the crease with a moistened broom until the rug is quite wet. Stretch the rug tight, and let it remain over night, after tacking it with tin tacks, which do not rust.

Before using a new broom, let it stand in warm water for a few minutes to soften the bristles. If a broom should get very dry at any time, it would be well to repeat the process, as dry bristles are apt to break. Always hang a broom up, in a linen or cotton bag, if possible; standing on the floor injures it.

Mice can be kept away by gum camphor sprinkled around their haunts; water, or Croton bugs, by borax and camphor or red pepper.

It is almost impossible not to soil the wood of the door in cleaning a brass keyhole. The best remedy is to cut a hole the shape of the brass in a piece of cardboard about ten inches square, and put it over the hole when cleaning.

The right way to hang pictures on the walls of a brick house is first to pierce the wall with a darning needle, in order to find the crevice between the bricks before driving the nail. Nails driven in indiscriminately only injure the wall to no purpose, as they bend against the bricks, and are hence useless for the purpose for which they were intended.

To know if an egg is fresh place it in a basin of cold water. If it remains at the bottom, it is all right; if it floats at all, it is of doubtful freshness; and if it floats gaily on the surface, you may be sure it is quite bad.

The Housemothers' Exchange

IS THERE anything I can put with fruit so I can make the juice thick that children may spread it on their bread?

Something that is harmless and which will not prevent it from keeping well?

And may I say to the family that I would be glad to have a Reference Bible, one with medium large print?

I should also be glad to get a book of Bible stories or something similar for children's reading and instruction.

J. J. G. (Hartford, Mich.).

Nothing will thicken the juice of canned fruits that would not affect taste and prevent it from remaining good.

Why not boil down the surplus juice one always has from stewed fruits, add sugar and keep it for the children?

In canning the juice is usually poured off before the fruit goes into the jars. I utilize it for jelly, thus accomplishing the two tasks simultaneously.

I insert the request for Bible reading for children, in the confident expectation that I shall be called upon for your address before long.

Discussion on Vegetarianism

Let a lover of whatsoever is pure and clean, and in accordance with Scripture teachings, express wonder and pain at your continued advocacy of filthy flesh foods for men who are made in the image of their Maker.

I have noted with sorrow you can hardly understand that when you, now and then, discountenance the national habit—I call it a vice of gorging ourselves with flesh-food—you plead that too much of it is the sin, not that total abstinence from the unclean thing is a Christian duty.

Will you tell me what lesson you draw, what lesson you must draw from the enclosed?

Cast aside the fear of man and the traditions of false teachers, and speak freely!

Thus writes a correspondent, who gives no signature and no address.

The postmark upon the envelope of the letter is "Buffalo, N. Y." Beyond this, I have no clue to the identity of my critic.

I may remark that a duplicate of the card inclosed with the letter lies before me, and that the postmark upon this is likewise "Buffalo."

I give the card verbatim:

What to Eat.

"And God said, Behold I have given you every green herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat." Genesis, i. 29.

"Meat."—Webster's Dictionary—"Food; provisions; Flesh for food."

"It is both inhuman and unreasonable to kill animals or any living thing to eat or for pleasure; also to crate them, or pack them close together in cars, to travel long distances. Every effort ought to be done to do away with this evil."

A Wee Help for the Exchange

Put 10 cents' worth of soap bark into a quart of water. Simmer over the fire until but a pint is left. Brush all the dust out of the skirt; spread it smoothly on a table or a board; soak a sponge of fair size in the warm liquid and wash the skirt thoroughly with it, breadth by breadth, from the band down.

Then dip the skirt in clear water to rinse it, doing this in several waters until the last is clear.

Do not squeeze or wring it, but pin on a clothsline by the band and let it drip until it is nearly dry.

Have the irons ready heated and press the skirt through an old fine sheet. I am sure you will be as well pleased with the result as I was. A. K. (Chicago).

Soap bark is one of our best and safest cleansers. It takes out grease and dirt generally without weakening the texture of the stuff or fading the color.

It is clean and easily used, requiring no other preparation than boiling in clear water.

How to Trim Lamp Wick

I read once in your Corner an inquiry from a constituent as to the best method of trimming a lamp wick to avoid the irritating horns of flame that smoke and break chimneys.

I take it for granted that a flat wick is meant. To secure the desired end cut straight across the wick; then clip the ends of it diagonally, and there will be no trouble with the flame of the burner be kept clean and the sieve open by an occasional boil, say, once a month, of the burner in soda and water.

I trust this bit of information, though coming from a "mere man," will find its way into your Corner.

J. M. A. (Phoebus, Va.).

It is a valuable bit of ore, and the more acceptable, in that it is a proof that our big brothers now and then cast a friendly eye upon our modest Exchange of household helps.

And "household" is an elastic word, embracing the head of each home no less than the lesser members.

I wish I knew who first used that phrase, "A mere man." In the connection in which it is now popularly employed!

There is a sneer in every letter.

And we of the Exchange mean so many and such good things toward our brothers.

Stocking Pattern

I have a good stocking pattern that would be a great help to a mother of young children.

It has saved me many a dollar in stockings. Please give my address to any one who may wish to try it.

Mrs. C. W. K. (Hobart, Ind.).

Do you mean that the stockings are knit? or are they sewed?

I am a bit befogged on this head. We should be glad to hear more definitely on the subject.

Meantime I hold your address.

Silver Polish and Window Cleaner

In partial return for the many valuable items I have gleaned from your page I should like to add a trifle.

Do our housewives know that a preparation of equal parts of washed whiting, ammonia and soft water make an excellent silver polish and window cleaner?

ONE WHO WOULD LIKE TO HELP (Fox, Ill.).

Help one of us yet further along the path of housewifery lore by explaining what you mean by "washed whiting."

Perhaps everybody else who reads this knows, but I hear of it now for the first time.

Lovers of music are looking forward with the most pleasurable anticipation to the offering at the Grand next Saturday, matinee and evening, when the prince of comic opera celebrities, De Wolf Hopper, appears in a new role. It is that of King Ecstaticus, monarch of "Happyland," (Elysia), a mythical realm, wherein happiness reigns supreme for all except the king himself. His troubles are numerous and his tribulations such that he finds the life of a monarch far less endurable than that of his poorest subject. Chief among his worries is the fact that having bargained to give the hand of his son in marriage to a neighboring potentate, on condition that the latter shall withdraw his army, he has no son to give, his only offspring being a daughter. On this slim but none the less safe and solid foundation the plot of the opera is built, and De Wolf Hopper, for whom the piece was expressly written, has ample opportunity for the exploitation of his genius. "Happyland," is in two acts and two scenes, one of which represents the courtyard of the imperial palace of Elysia, and the other the Elysian fields. In supplying Mr. Hopper with a first-class vehicle as a successor to "Wang," and "El Capitan," the question of the proper and adequate support was carefully considered. Consequently the tall comedian finds himself surrounded by an excellent company, including a large and finely equipped chorus, among whom are many of the New York Casino girls, and a cast comprising such favorites as Marguerite Clark, Ada Deaves, William Wolff, Detmar Poppin, Edmund Lawrence and George Odell and Jos. Phillips.

Local society is all agog in anticipation of the forthcoming Oriental musical comedy, entitled "Jappyland," which will be produced at the Grand on the evenings of October 15th and 16th, for the benefit of the furnishing fund of the new isolation hospital, to be built in connection with the Victoria Hospital.

Over three hundred local people are enlisted on the big cast and choruses, and the entertainment is doubtless the most extensive and elaborate ever undertaken by local talent.

Special scenery and costumes will be brought up from New York, and everything connected with the big production is said to be on a grand and lavish scale.

It will be presented here under the distinguished patronage of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Victoria Hospital, the hospital trust and the following prominent local people: Mrs. Adam Back, Mrs. C. S. Hyman, Mrs. (Senator) Coffey, Mrs. Judd, Mrs. R. Muir Burns, Mrs. T. H. Carling, Mrs. F. P. Drake, Mrs. Herbert Gates, Mrs. Jeffrey Hale, Mrs. Jas. Kerrigan, Mrs. C. S. Moore, Mrs. Jas. Niven, Mrs E B Smith, Mrs. Edwin Seaborne, Mrs. A. W. White, Mrs. F. P. Betts, Mrs. Hume Cronyn, Mrs. F. W. Eccles, Mrs. Geo. Gibbons, Mrs. Wm. Gartshore, Mrs. C. B. Hunt, Miss Harris, Mrs. T. G. Meredith, Mrs. R. W. Puddicombe, Mrs. S. Stevely, Mrs. S. Screaton, Mrs. John D. Wilson, Mrs. Wishart.

Another brilliant comedy bill has been provided by Manager Elms, of Bennett's "popular home of refined vaudeville" for his patrons next week. Eight standard acts are programmed headed by Bert Howard and Leona Bland, who are now presenting a brand new comedy creation, "The Stage Manager." The act depicts a scene which is very likely to happen in any vaudeville theater on a Monday morning when the stage crew and orchestra are rehearsing and preparing for the new show. It is bright and breezy from start to finish, giving Mr. Howard an excellent opportunity to introduce his wonderful trick piano playing and Miss Bland to display her remarkable vocal attainments. Howard and Bland were seen at Bennett's last season in "The Absent Boy," which was a delight to all auditors and a great local hit. It is said that "The Stage Manager" eclipses "The Absent Boy" in every way. If this is the case Londoners have a real treat in store for them.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thorne & Co. make their first appearance in London on this bill. Here is the real big laughing act of vaudeville. "An Uptown Flat" is absolutely devoid of dull moments, and it will be a sensational laugh-producer from the start. Mr. George Watson and Miss Ione Robertson two exceptionally clever players are able assistants to Mr. and Mrs. Thorne in this sparkling act.

Walter Hawley and Natalie Olcott present a novel comedy singing and dancing specialty called "Just Married a Week." These clever artists are well-known for their excellent work in many of the leading New York musical productions.

Donald & Carson have a unique offering in "Alex MacLean's Dream," a Scotch singing and comedy act which is far different from anything ever before seen at the local house.

Belleclaire & Kramer, world-famous athletes and exponents of physical culture, have a remarkable offering in the gymnastic line. Kramer is conceded to be the finest proportioned man in the world, while his partner, Belleclaire, is the exact counterpart of the famous Louis Cyr, and has been pronounced his equal in every respect. This is a feature which will be appreciated by everyone interested in physical culture and those who admire athletes alike.

The Beldons are colored entertainers par excellent, and have one of the most pleasing acts now on the road.

Cook Bros., who have just finished a successful engagement of several weeks at Hammerstein's, have a juggling specialty which will be a marvel while Banks and Newton have an exceptionally clever line of talk, which will catch on immediately.

New subjects on the Bennettograph will complete this excellent bill.

Johnny Stanley, who is surrounded by Gus Edward's blonde typewriters, will be the feature at Bennett's the week after next.

Loris Scarsdale, who has recreated the role of Bob in Willard Spenser's "Miss Bob White," in which Nixon and Zimmerman are this season starring Frank Deshon, supported by an all-star cast, is the same little lass, who made such a lasting impression as Mrs. T. T. in "Rosalie." Miss Scarsdale was last season with Richard Carle.

Robert Burdett, nephew of N. S. Burlew, of the Burlew Theater, Charleston, West Virginia, and who was last season with Paul Gilmore, in the successful college play, "At Yale," has been secured by Nixon and Zimmerman for the support of Mary Emerson, in Henry Miller's production of "On Parole," a beautiful drama from the pen of Louis Evan Shipman.

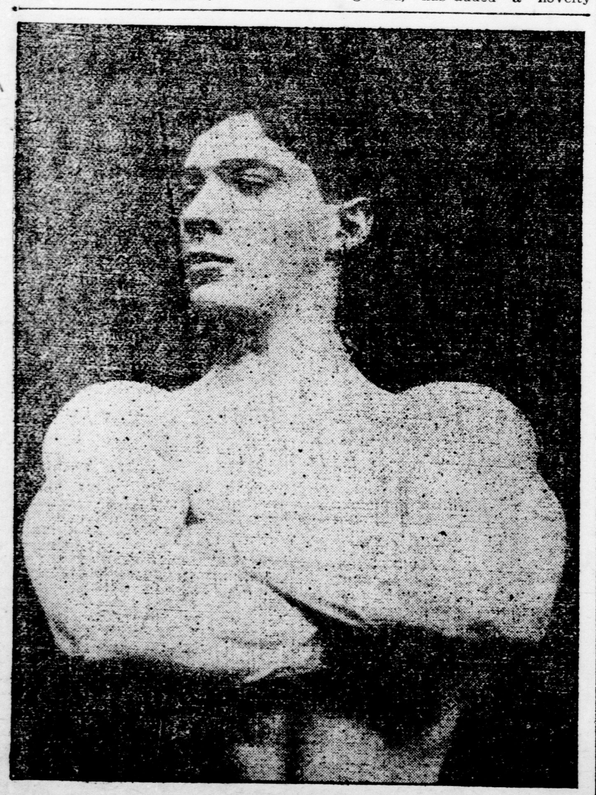

Harry West, for many years with the Roger Brothers, has been loaned to the Nixon & Zimmerman Company, for the difficult role of "Spiegelburger" in the musical cartoon extravagant "Simple Simon Simple," which Messrs. Nixon and Zimmerman will present here in the very near future.

Ross Snow and Gus Pixley, the comedians alternating in the role of King Bunn in the Nixon and Zimmerman production of A. Baldwin Sloan's and Frederick Rankin's musical fantasy, "The Gingerbread Man," are an excellent pair of comedians, evoking vociferous laughter everywhere. This is Snow's fourth year with the company, while Pixley is a new-comer, having last been with "Babes in Toyland," having spent four years with that company.

Tom Waters, whom Nixon and Zimmerman are featuring in "The Mayor of Laughland," has added a novelty to his famous piano specialty, in the imitation of a brass band, that is reported to be his best effort.

THE BELLES OF "HAPPYLAND,"
With De Wolf Hopper, at the Grand Next Saturday, Matinee and Night.

SAM KRAMER,
Of Belleclaire & Kramer, Marvelous Athletes, at Bennett's Next Week.

Klaw & Erlanger will produce in this city for the first time at the Grand Opera House on Oct. 26, matinee and night, a dramatic version of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel, "The Right of Way." The dramatization of what has been pronounced the greatest novel of the decade was made by Eugene W. Presbrey, the successful adapter of "Raffles." The story is told in six episodes. The first shows Charlie Steele at the height of his success as a lawyer and leader of the social world in the city of Montreal. He is a man without heart, a doubter, a wrecker of men for selfish reasons. There is a quick transition in the second episode, showing Steele seeking his recreations in the mire of the river tavern on the banks of the St. Lawrence—a blow and his memory is wiped out. Here playwright and novelist part. Sir Gilbert Parker never answered the question of Steele's redemption. He left his readers with the impression that Steele died a suicide and a debauche. Mr. Presbrey will show his salvation through faith and love. Guy Standing will play the part of Charlie Steele; Theodore Roberts, so well remembered here for his many fine performances, the French-Canadian, Joe Portungais; May Buckley, the heroine, Rosalie, and Alice Lonnon (Mr. Willard's late leading lady), the wife. The production is on the same scale as all of Klaw & Erlanger's masterpieces, and every effort has been made to make the burning of the Church of the Holy Cross at Chaudiere a realistic picture. A play abounding in such intense local interest is bound to draw a large amount of comment.

Mr. Mantell plans to effect his revival of Shakespeare's King John" early in November in the Grand Opera House, Chicago, where he will play a month. Contrary to what appears to be popular expectation in the matter, he will play the name-part in this tragedy, and not Faulconbridge, just as a year ago, he chose Brutus in "Julius Caesar" rather than Marc Antony, the part for which he was popularly regarded as better fitted. The character of Faulconbridge is one of rare attractiveness to the actor mind and temperament, which find in it a medium for easily-attainable popular success; while it is a fact that the fame of very few players rests on the part of King John, although it is one of the most fascinating studies in all Shakespeare.

Mr. Sidney Ayres, formerly the star of the play called "Texas," is the Sunlocks to Mr. Wilton Lackaye's Jason in the latter's production of Hall Caine's "The Bondman." The Greeba of the cast is Miss Elsie Ferguson, known here chiefly for her work in music-plays. She has a recent London success to her credit, in "The Earl of Pawtucket."

M. Mantell's phoduction of Ibsen's "Brand" is definitely announced for October, 1908. The tragedy is being arranged for the stage by Mr. Frederick Donaghey, who is in direction of Mr. Mantell's business for Mr. William A. Brady.

A play which the veteran Sardou is writing to order for the great Coquelin will, in this country, be a medium for Mr. Wilton Lackaye, if Mr. William A. Brady exercises an option on the composition obtained while abroad, where he read the Sardou scenario. This play is to take the place in Coquelin's plans of "Chanticleer," the work on which M. Rostand has so long been engaged, but without, apparently, being nearer completion than two years ago. Mr. Brady held until recently an option on "Chanticleer," also with a view of making use of the play for Mr. Lackaye.

Mr. Douglas Fairbanks, who announced his retirement from the stage on the occasion of his marriage to the daughter of "Cotton King" Sully, is again acting his original part of the idler in the New York City cast of "The Man of the Hour." Announcement is made that he will be made into a star, with a play by Mr. Broadhurst, upon the expiration of his engagement in "The Man of the Hour."

The Salvation Army has made many converts from the stage, but now the stage has its revenge. It has captured a Salvation Army captain. After devoting seven years to ardent work for the Salvationists, Capt. Bailey has laid aside the uniform of militant righteousness to don the motley. He will soon make his first appearance in his new role in a London music hall. As a Salvationist, of course, theatrical performances of all kinds were tabooed to him, but in the interest of religion he was allowed to go behind the scenes and seek converts there. And what he saw convinced him, he says, that the profession is by no means so black as it has been painted. "I know," he adds, "that the Salvation Army leaders will not approve of the step that I have taken, but if they will go behind the scenes and investigate things as I have done they will see that they are laboring under a false impression as to the character of most of the folk connected with the stage. There is no reason nowadays why an actor should not also be a man of piety and lead an unblemished life."

What Capt. Bailey saw behind the scenes convinced him of something else, too—that he could give quite as good a "turn" as many of those who appear on the variety stage and earn salaries equal to the pay of a dozen Salvation Army captains. Anyhow, he is going to try. If he makes good perhaps his example will be followed by others who are now enlisted in the warfare against Satan under Gen. Booth. "For," says Capt. Bailey, "I am convinced that there are many in the Salvation Army who would make good comedians."

The dramatic tastes of the King of England may be judged from the following list of plays, performances of which he attended during the late London season: They were: "His House in Order," "The Bondman," "Les Marvelleuses," Peter's Mother," "The Dairymaids," "The Man From Blankley's," "The Morals of Marcus," "Toddles," "Le Voyage de M. Perrichon," "Education de Prince," "The Stronger Sex," "When Knights Were Bold," "Les Affaires Sont les Sevens," "The Impudence of the Creature," "The Merry Widow," "The Coriscan Brothers," "Mrs. Ponderbury's Past," "My Wife," and "Le Maitre de Forges."

It will be noted that the King gave no encouragement to the "American invasion" of London theaters.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who will arrive in New York about Nov. 10, for a tour of America under the direction of Liebler & Co., will appear in "Electra," a new version of Euripides' Greek tragedy. Mrs. Campbell will essay the title role, that of the unhappy daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. Instead of masked men and boys, the Greek chorus, which is retained in the new version, will be composed of women. Great care has been taken in getting sketches and drawings for scenery and costumes, all of which will be brought from England.

Charles Frohman has arranged a busy year for his favorite star, Miss Maude Adams. Beginning the latter part of this month she will undertake another tour in "Peter Pan," going as far south as New Orleans. Then she returns to New York for her annual engagement, presenting the Barrie fantasy during Christmas and New Year's weeks. On Jan. 6, Miss Adams will appear in "Quality Street," and a week later will be seen for the for the first time in the new poetical play from the French, "Les Bouffons," which is to be called "The Jesters."

Burr McIntosh, an actor who has played many important roles in the past, including Taffy in "Trilby," Jo Vernon, the blacksmith, in "In Mizzoura;" David Bingley in "The Governor of Kentucky," and the title role in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," has returned to the stage. During his retirement he has been interested in art photography, but now is appearing in vaudeville in a playlet entitled "The Colonel's Christmas Eve."

Miss Julia Marlowe will devote only fifteen weeks of the present season to the stage. She does not plan to resume professional activity until January, and then will appear in her Shakespearean repertory and also in revivals of "Jeanne d'Arc" and "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Frederick Lewis, who was identified with the Sothern-Marlowe forces last season, will assume the roles formerly played by Mr. Sothern.

Although no disposition has as yet been made of the scenery and effects of the many productions made in the last ten years by the late Richard Mansfield, his widow has arranged with a firm of play brokers for the stock company rights of many of the plays in which the noted actor played the stellar roles. These plays include:

"Ivan the Terrible," "The Scarlet Letter," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "A Parisian Romance," "The Misanthrope" "Nero," "Napoleon," and "Don Juan."

It has been decided that "Beau Brummel," one of the most successful plays in the Mansfield repertory, will not be leased for stock performances. It was in this play that the actor was appearing at the time of his marriage, and as a matter of sentiment, Mrs. Mansfield will not agree to have the play included among those rented to stock organizations.

By arrangement with Charles Frohman Miss Nance O'Neil's manager, Charles Dillingham has secured the Pinero play, "His House in Order," for the use of his star. Miss O'Neil will play the part of the wife, Nina, in which Miss Illington was seen to such advantage last season.

Out of a total of about eighty concerts which he will give in America between October 28 and May 1 Paderewski will play only twelve times with orchestras. With the Boston Symphony Orchestra he will give two performances in Boston and one each in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. He will give two performances with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra in Chicago, two with the Pittsburgh Orchestra in Pittsburgh and one with the same Orchestra in Cleveland. All his other performances will be recitals. New York and Chicago are the only cities in which he will give more than one. He plans to give three recitals in New York and two Chicago.

Gus Pixley, the comedian of Nixon and Zimmerman's Gingerbread Man Co., who was last season past, and in fact, for several seasons past, leading comedian with "Babes in Toyland," is no relation to Annie Pixley, as popular opinion seems to suggest. Mr. Pixley, however, is related to the co-author of Prince of Pilsen, etc., and comes of an old theatrical family.

BERT HOWARD AND LEONA BLAND.
In Their Latest Comedy Creation, "The Stage Manager," at Bennett's Next Week.

In Baltimore on Monday evening Miss Amelia Bingham began her season with the initial presentation of "A Modern Lady Godiva," by Frederick F. Shrader and Lloyd M. Bingham, her husband.

The play, which was given a cordial reception, tells the story of an English noblewoman who makes a sacrifice of her modesty for the sake of her ruined and invalid husband by posing for a picture of the medieval heroine of Coventry.

The play held the interest of the audience. The supporting company included Ralph Kellerd and William L. Abingdon.

For the first time since a serious illness brought her tour to a sudden end last spring Miss Fritzi Scheff appeared on the stage last Monday night. The opera was "Mlle. Modiste," in which she has been singing successfully for nearly two years, and the scene of her re-entry the Knickerbocker Theater, New York. There was a very large audience to welcome the prima donna, and her entrance in the role of Fifi, the shop girl, was the signal for as hearty a greeting as her best friends could have wished. The little singer was quite overcome. She was kept bowing for what seemed a long time, and, the applause continuing, she stood nervously kissing her hands to the audience, while tears filled her eyes.

When finally she was allowed to go on her voice was so husky for a few minutes she could scarcely be heard, but she was quickly her sprightly self again, and she sang and acted with all her old-time spirit. Her voice showed the good effect of her long rest.

After the first act there was another demonstration, when, after the curtain had been raised nearly a dozen times, ushers carried forward immense bouquets and baskets of flowers and passed them across the footlights. Miss Scheff handed roses to several of the singers and then smiled happily from behind a whole sheaf of forget-me-nots. Again at the end of the performance there were more curtain calls and applause.

Once more Miss Maxine Elliott has conquered London, her new production at the Lyric having been received with much favor. The piece is a new play by Henry V. Esmond, entitled "Under the Greenwood Tree." It tells the story of Mary Hamilton, a rich young woman, who, wearying of social gaieties, purchases a gypsy caravan so as to live the "simple life" in the New Forest. Although this life is elaborately artificial it brings the heroine to the altar as the bride of a gallant young hero, who falls in love with the impossible gypsy and finds he has won an heiress. Miss Elliott played the role of Mary Hamilton with skill and character. Conspicuous in the cast were Mary Jerrold, Charles Cherry and Eric Maturin. The basis of the plot has its parallel in real life, one of the young women of an English ducal house having gone on a similar lark with a caravan last summer.

THE ETERNAL RECOMPENSE.

The open door of the school struck terror to your vacation-loving soul. It seemed as if all joy had gone forever. But you forgot all that when your eyes strayed across the room. Prim, beribboned heads bent with studious affectation over books. Demure eyes stole sidewise glances in your direction. You regarded them impersonally until there came the one thrilling, fleeting flash of brown eyes for which you had been waiting. Blushing deeply, you turned to lose yourself in life's serious business.

On your way home, by the merest chance, you found your footsteps beating slow cadence with hers. Awkwardly you tried to conceal the delight of this almost forgotten joy. Once more life was bright with the iridescent glamor of youth. The call of the river was lost among the dim, unregretted memories of the past. School—ah, school was not so bad, after all.—M. B. Stewart, in The Bohemian.

LITTLE SAN-FOY, IN "JAPPYLAND," AT THE GRAND OCT. 15 AND 16.

SIDELIGHTS ON NOTABLE PEOPLE

BY THE MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

Lord Northampton's determination to let Castle Ashby, his superb country seat in the county from which he takes his title, is prompted not by financial straits but by a desire to have more money at his disposal for the numerous philanthropic enterprises in which he is interested. For Lord Northampton is rich, indeed, the late marchioness having been the only daughter and heiress of the greater part of the wealth of the second Lord Ashburton, who in his day was one of the principal partners of the House of Baring. She brought her husband in marriage a great fortune, including extensive ground rents in the Clerkenwell and Islington districts of London, which are increasing in value all the time. Lord Northampton's philanthropy has led him in the pursuit of schemes for the betterment of the poor to become not merely a radical but even something of a Socialist in politics, and he is the founder of all sorts of institutions and enterprises for the improvement of the conditions of the masses.

Castle Ashby, which is now in the market for rent, is situated on the high ground above the River Nene. The present mansion was built for the greater part in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and completed in the reign of King James I., who paid a state visit there with his Queen. Inigo Jones in 1624 made some additions, including two turrets and a long gallery, and a great dining-room was added in 1695 on the occasion of a state visit of William III. One of the lords of Northampton was a man of great piety, and it is to him that are due the biblical texts in huge stone letters which form the balustrade around the edge of the roof and also of the many terraces. It is said that the gardens and avenues of Hampton Court Palace were modeled on those of Castle Ashby.

The first Lord Northampton rendered himself famous by his romantic marriage with Elizabeth, only child of Sir John Spencer, lord mayor of London in 1594 and 1595. He started out in life as Will Compton, son of King Henry VIII.'s favorite gentleman-in-waiting, Lord Compton. Will Compton was a scapegrace and Sir John Spencer objected to his suit, so young Compton disguised himself as a baker's apprentice and carried off Miss Elizabeth Spencer, the object of his affections, concealed in a baker's basket on his shoulders. Sir John began by disinheriting his daughter, but ultimately relented, and when he died left her his vast fortune, which was estimated at a million pounds sterling, a colossal sum in those days.

Its amount seems to have turned the head of his son-in-law. For the latter indulged in such insane extravagance, spending half a million dollars in a fortnight, that his wife secured his incarceration for a few months in the tower of London until he had recovered his senses. Although created by reason of his wife's fortune Earl of Northampton, he to the end of his days was known among his contemporaries as the "crazy lord," owing to the dementia to which he had given way on his sudden accession to riches.

Lord Byron, who has had such a narrow escape from drowning through the running down of the steam yacht Eros off the Isle of Wight by a steam collier—Lord Byron was below at the time, was carried down with the wreck, and only saved himself by swimming—is descended from the great poet's first cousin and successor, served for a time in the army, from which he retired with the rank of captain, and married a few years ago a widow of the name of Mrs. T. Broadhead. He has no children, and the heir to his peerage is the Rev. Frederick Byron, rector of the parish of Maldon, in Essex. Lord Byron before his marriage came into a good deal of prominence in connection with his bankruptcy through the agency of Mrs. Howard Kingscote, who is now in this country. Mrs. Kingscote, daughter of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, managed to obtain many thousands of pounds from him, and then denounced him as a fool when he asked her to return the money.

Emperor Francis Joseph's vaccination last week in his seventy-eighth year, owing to the outbreak of a particularly virulent epidemic of smallpox at Vienna, serves to call attention to the benefits which the reigning houses of Europe have derived from the great discovery of Jenner. Nowadays smallpox is extremely rare in royal palaces, and the only members of any of the sovereign families whom I can recall as having been stricken by the disease in modern times are the homely, elderly sister of the King of Saxony, Princess Mathilde, and her aunt, Princess Elizabeth of Saxony, widowed Duchess of Genoa and grandmother of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy.

The old duchess was tended throughout her illness with the utmost care and devotion by her only daughter, Queen Marguerite. The latter's conduct in the matter deserves much praise. For she has been a wonderfully beautiful woman and has not yet abandoned her pretensions to good looks, fostering the remains of her former loveliness with an anxiety that is as evident as it is pathetic. Fortunately she did not catch the disease and was therefore not punished for her filial devotion.

In the nineteenth century I cannot recall any crowned head succumbing to smallpox. But the latter carried off many of the anointed of the Lord and princes and princesses of the blood during the eighteenth and latter part of the seventeenth century. Thus, two emperors of Germany, six archdukes and archduchesses of Austria, an elector of Saxony, the last elector of Bohemia, a king of France, and a dauphin, a queen of Sweden, and an emperor of Russia, all succumbed thereto, while it wrought wholesale havoc in the reigning family of Great Britain, among the victims being Queen Mary whose husband, King William III., had his entire health undermined from the effects of the malady, his friend, Bentinck, first duke of Portland, becoming a physical wreck from the same cause.

The duke, in fact, voluntarily caught it from the King. The physician of the monarch declared that he would die unless some healthy person, who had never had the disease, would enter the bed and hold the King in his arms for some time. The eruption having refused to come to the surface, it was hoped that animal warmth might cause it to respond, and Count Hans William Bentinck, who was at the time a good-looking page of honor in the service of the King and Queen, volunteered to render this proof of devotion and of loyalty to his sovereign. Needless to add, he became infected with the malady, and his comely face was marred for life thereby. He was compensated, however, by the gratitude of the King, who conferred upon him the dukedom and earldom of Portland and all sorts of other honors, besides vast estates, in return for his unusual and extraordinary act of devotion. It is, indeed, a unique origin for a dukedom.

It may be remembered that before Edward Jenner discovered vaccination in 1798 inoculation had obtained considerable vogue in England as a preventive of the worst evils of smallpox, and one of the most successful practitioners of the method was Dr. Thomas Dimsdale, grandson of that Robert Dimsdale, who accompanied William Penn to America, and was his most intimate friend and lieutenant. Dr. Thomas Dimsdale was summoned to Russia by Empress Catherine, who caused him to inoculate both herself and her son, Grand Duke (afterwards Emperor) Paul. He acquitted himself so much to the satisfaction of his imperial patients that the Czarina conferred upon him a barony of the Russian empire, a sum of $60,000, and an annuity for life of $3,000.

The English crown granted a royal license for the use of this title in England in deference to a request from Empress Catherine, and it is borne today by Baron Charle Dimsdale, who is a member of the bar, son-in-law of Sir Brydges Henniker, and owner of two beautiful country seats in Hertfordshire. Sir Joseph Dimsdale, who was lord mayor of London at the coronation of King Edward, and who received a baronetcy in connection with the Barons Dimsdale. It is interesting to note in this connection that the practice of inoculation for which Dr. Thomas Dimsdale in the eighteenth century was so lavishly honored and rewarded by Catherine the Great of Russia is today punishable as a criminal offense.

The new Lord Aldenham, who through the death of his father at the age of over 98 has just become a peer of the realm, may be described as one of England's great merchant princes of that class, indeed, from which the British House of Lords is so largely recruited. Lord Aldenham is the head of the ancient city of London firm of Antony Gibbs & Co., which has been in existence since the time of the American war of independence, and which for the last hundred years has been so largely interested in the South American trade. The connection therewith led the new Lord Aldenham to resign his seat in the House of Commons some three years ago under circumstances which redounded to his honor and which attracted a good deal of attention at the time.

It may be remembered that while the war between Russia and Japan was in progress the British Government, by way of indirectly helping its Oriental ally, purchased two fine Chilean men-of-war which would otherwise have gone to swell the size of the Muscovite navy. This purchase was made by the English Government through Antony Gibbs & Co. Now there is an unwritten law in England to the effect that people interested in Government contracts cannot sit in the House of Commons. But it is a rule that in recent years at any rate has been more honored in its breach than in its observance, and there have been instances when not merely members of Parliament but even members of the administration have been quite as much concerned in Government contracts as the two Gibbs brothers without being called upon to give up their seats in Parliament.

The late Lord Aldenham, long governor of the Bank of England, and his two sons, Alban, the new peer, and Vicary, felt that with the altogether unblemished traditions of this firm, the name of which is a synonym for everything that is high principled and straight, not only at home but also throughout South and Central America and Australia, they could not permit any question to be raised as to their position in the matter. They felt this all the more strongly as the Hon. Alban Gibbs had then for ten years or more been the member for the city of London in Parliament, a dignity which, while it entitled him on each opening day of Parliament to a seat among the cabinet ministers on the treasury bench of the House of Commons, rendered it incumbent upon him to avoid anything that could in the slightest degree affect the honor and name of the great commercial constituency of which he had been so long the spokesman in the legislature of the empire. Needless to add that he was re-elected by an overwhelming majority at the last general election, but again resigned his seat, this time in favor of Arthur Balfour, the Conservative leader, who had found himself without a seat.

Arthur Balfour is therefore now member for the city of London in the place of Alban Gibbs, who has now become Lord Aldenham, and as such has a right to a seat among the members of the Liberal cabinet on the treasury bench on the occasion of the opening of Parliament at the beginning of each session. It is the first occasion of the leader of the Opposition being qualified to exercise this peculiar prerogative.

Lord Aldenham is a cousin of Arthur Balfour by marriage. For while the ex-premier is the son of the late Lord Salisbury's sister, Lady Blanche Cecil, married to James Balfour, Lord Aldenham's wife, now dead, was the daughter of another sister of the late Lord Salisbury, namely, Lady Mildred Cecil, married to the Right Hon. Alexander James Beresford Hope. This is by no means the only alliance of the Gibbses with the old houses of the British aristocracy. Indeed, there have been quite a number of such marriages, the Gibbses, in addition to being London merchants, having been likewise regarded as a county family, in possession today of lands which already belonged to it in the reign of King Henry VIII.

Lord Aldenham is a tall, reserved, silent, dark-haired and dark-eyed man, who was educated at that most high church of all the great English colleges, namely, Lansing, and at Christ Church, Oxford, and always has displayed a pronounced interest in church matters, with pronounced leanings toward ritualism.

Sir Conan Doyle, having successively cleared two innocent men charged with the perpetration of the horrible cattle maiming outrages at Great Wyrley, in Hertfordshire, seems at length to have brought home the crime to one of those numerous creatures with unbalanced minds who should be kept under severe restraint, but who are allowed to remain at liberty, owing to the fact that their dementia seizes them merely at stated epochs, and is restricted to a certain class of acts, leaving them in an absolutely normal frame of mind at all other times and in other particulars.

Sir Conan, by means of Sherlock Holmes lines of investigation, first ascertained the significant fact that the crimes in question, so falsely ascribed to the unfortunate Edalji, were invariably committed when the moon was full. This convinced him that he had to deal with a lunatic. For, as an Elizabethan dramatist puts it, "When the moon's in the full, then wit's in the wane," and there is no doubt but the old superstition to the effect that the moon causes and aggravates insanity has some foundation for its existence. Indeed, the word "lunatic" testifies to it, since the word, etymologically considered, means moonstruck. Sir Conan Doyle's discovery will now render this conviction as to the powers of the full moon more pronounced than ever.

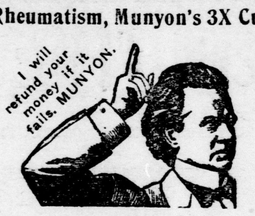

Lord Royston, who is now in America, out west, and whose engagement to Miss Bessie Thomas, daughter and heiress of a millionaire dynamite manufacturer, of Bay City, Mich., has just been announced, is the eldest son and heir of the Earl of Hardwicke, who succeeded to the family honors about two years ago, on the sudden death of his cousin. The present Lord Hardwicke was formerly in the navy, is a Crimean veteran, and, though better off financially than his predecessor in the earldom, is far from rich. In fact, the earldom of Hardwicke is today one of the most impoverished peerages of that rank in existence, so that it is a matter of great importance that Lord Royston should marry a rich wife.

Lord Royston is descended from Simon Yorke, of Dover, who is described as "a merchant and a person of good landed estates," and who died in 1672. His grandson, Philip Yorke, became lord chief justice of England, and was raised to the peerage as Lord Hardwicke at the age of 34, being promoted three years afterward to the woolsack as lord high chancellor of England and to an earldom.

The financial misfortunes of the house of Yorke, which have resulted in the alienation of the family estates and in the dispersal of the family treasures, have been partly due to agricultural depression, but also largely to the extravagance of the fifth and fourth earls, the present peer being seventh of the line. The ancestral home, Wimpole Hall and park, in Cambridgeshire, with its superb double avenue of elms, three miles long, each tree being several centuries old, is now in the possession of Lord Clifden, who, according to the late Lord Hardwicke and to his friends, secured the place at about one-quarter of its real value by quietly buying up the mortgages with which it was incumbered, and then foreclosing.

The late Lord Hardwicke died as under secretary of state for India, and as a member of the stockbroking firm of Basil, Montgomery & Co. in London. He was also chief owner of the London Saturday Review.

Rheumatism, Munyon's 3X Cure

Think of a remedy that relieves sharp shooting pains in any part of the body in from one to three hours, and effects a perfect cure in a few days.

It purifies the blood. It neutralizes the acid and takes all inflammation and soreness away. Have you a lame or aching back, lumbago or sciatica?

Have you stiff or swollen joints, no matter how chronic? Ask your druggist for Munyon's 3 X Rheumatism Cure, and see how quickly you will be cured.

If you have any kidney or bladder trouble get Munyon's Special Kidney Cure. Money back if it fails. Munyon's Vitalizer makes weak men strong, and restores lost powers. 691t-yt

CORONETS, NOBILITY AND PRECEDENCE

HOW THE BRITISH ARISTOCRACY IS GRADED—THE DIGNITY OF PEERS.

English titles of nobility are often a source of perplexity to the non-aristocratic American, in whose land there is only one order, freeman, and he utterly fails to comprehend the various seeming inconsistencies of the orders of our cousins across the sea.

For instance a peer of the realm cannot, by any possibility, lose his title, except by death or attainder. Even if he wastes his patrimony, as many a titled Englishman has done, and becomes as poor as the proverbial turkey of the ancient Job, he still retains his title and remains a peer.

There are some queer freaks, too, in the matter of precedence. One would naturally suppose that a gentleman with the high sounding title of duke would take precedence of clerical gentlemen, yet the contrary is the rule. Next in position to the Prince of Wales is the Archbishop of Canterbury, who takes precedence to dukes, and even of officers of the crown. He is the first peer of England, is known as "Primate of all England" and is styled "Your Grace." Even second place is denied the dukes and earls, as well as third, the Lord High Chancellor, so eloquently burlesqued by Sullivan and Gildbert, and the Archbishop of York, who is "Primate of England," being respectively if not respectably, entitled to that distinction.

And right here comes another puzzle to Americans. The wives and children of these exalted personages have no social precedence, so that on state occasions these peers are compelled to witness the spectacle of their families trailing far behind them.

There are three thousand persons in the United Kingdom who are entitled to be numbered among the nobility, but only eighteen hundred titles are of a hereditary nature. There are thirty dukes, thirty-five marquesses, three hundred and twenty-seven earls, seventy-one viscounts and more than four hundred barons.

Of course, the first and foremost "in honor, dignity and power" comes the sovereign, who, according to English law, never dies—that is to say the throne is never vacant, the succession of the heir being intantaneous. This great personage had no handle attached to his name until the reign of Henry IV, when that gentleman sought to add to his dignity by dubbing himself "His Grace."

Next in order comes the heir apparent, who, in order to hold his position, must be the eldest son of the sovereign, and who, since the time of Edward I, has been created Prince of Wales.

Then, in order as representatives of the nobility, follow, as has been stated, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord High Chancellor and the Archbishop of York, succeeded respectively by the dukes, marquisses, earls, viscounts, barons, baronets, knights, esquires, gentlemen and burgesses.

Each of these except the four latter orders wears a robe whose boublings reveal the degree of the wearer. For instance, the robe of the Prince of Wales, of purple velvet, has five doublings of ermine, while each successive order has one doubling less. Thus, the scarlet robe of the duke has four, that of the marquis three and and a half, that of the earl three, of a baron two and a half and a baronet two.

But all of these more or less distinguished personages are not content with clothing the body with a garb that will inform the ordinary observer of their exalted rank; they also wear a headgear as a distinguishing mark, which makes a procession on an extraordinary occasion, such as a coronation, look like a first class stage affair. And these coronets grow smaller as the wearer descends in the scale of aristocratic pre-eminence.

That worn by the Prince of Wales is a circlet of gold, adorned with jewels. Above the rim rise four fleurs-de-lys and four crosses-pattee, with an arched diadem and a gold cross, capped by a ball. The other sons and daughters of the sovereign must be content with a coronet of the same style but minus the diadem and the ball.

A Duke must wear a coronet of eight golden leaves, set erect upon a circlet of gold, the stalks connecting to form a wreath. This encloses the cap of crimson velvet, which is surmounted by a golden tassel, and is lined with ermine. The Royal Dukes have coronets as Princes. A Duke not of royal blood is merely "Your Grace," and is "Most Noble." His wife is a Duchess, and is also styled "Most Noble." She wears a coronet similar to that of her husband. All the sons of a duke are "Lords," and his daughters "Ladies." The eldest son bears his father's second title, and hence ranks as a marquis. His children are also "Right Honorable" by courtesy.

In order to uphold and even add to the dignity of peers, some high-flown language is used in heraldic documents. Thus, a duke is styled "High Puissant and Noble Prince."

The viscount is the fourth in order of the peerage, and was created by Henry VI., who made Baron Beaumont, K.G., Viscount Beaumont in 1440. However, the title of viscount (vice comes) existed at the time of William the Conqueror, the holder of the title being deputy to the earl, and now identical with the present high sheriff.

A viscount had to be contented with an ordinary hat as an adornment for his head until the time of James I., who devised a coronet for his nobles, consisting of a golden circlet, with fourteen small pearls set in close contact. A viscount is "Right Honorable," and is styled "My Lord," while his wife is styled "My Lady."

Charles II., "the Merry Monarch," granted the coronet, which consists of six large pearls, at equal distances, on a chapel. The cap is the same as the one worn by a viscount. A baron is a "Right Honorable" and is addressed as "Right Trusty and Well Beloved" by his sovereign.

Baronets take precedence according to the date of patent. They rank above knights, except those of the Garter, but they have no political privileges, their rights being simply limited to precedence.

The title of knight is not hereditary. His wife is styled "Lady."—Chicago Tribune.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE

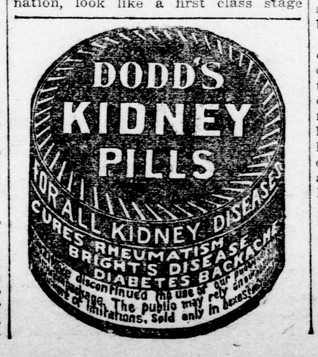

SAVED SUFFERING AND BROUGHT BACK HEALTH —DR. AGNEW'S GREAT HEART CURE AND CATARRHAL POWDER DEFY DISEASE AND NEVER FAIL IN THEIR MISSION OF HEALING

"I feel so thankful at the restored health of my daughter that if any use can be made of this I shall be pleased." This is what Mr. George Weels, of Elora, Ont., says in giving his testimony to the wonderful curative qualities of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart. Mr. Weels' daughter was a great sufferer from heart disease and nervousness. She was unable to lie on her left side. She ran down in health and her recovery was a source of anxiety. Induced by friends, who had proved its worth, she obtained Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart and before one bottle had been taken was able to lie in any position she desired, and when two bottles had been taken, an absolute cure was pronounced. Yes, this great remedy is a cure for all ailments of the heart, stomach and nerves, and the instantaneous relief given by it has snatched thousands from death's jaws. Don't trifle a minute if you have the slightest evidence of heart disorders, such as palpitation, fluttering or uneasiness. This remedy will relieve such troubles immediately and will cure the stomach and nerves.

"When I know a thing is worthy of a recommendation I consider it my duty to tell of it." The Rev. James Murdock, of Harrisburg, Pa., says this after having been cured of a very malignant form of catarrh by Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powders. What he can say of its healing powers thousands of others have said and can say of it. Don't neglect "only a little cold" in the head. It may lead to chronic catarrh. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder relieves in 10 minutes and is easily applied. Keep it near you if you are a "cold in the head" subject.

Drawing Lessons for School Children

NOTES.

Please remember that drawings of grasses from Grades I. II. and III. are to be sent into The Advertiser office by next Monday. Drawings of trees in perspective from Grades IV., V. and VI. are to be in by the following Monday, Oct. 14.

Landscapes by Grades VII. and VIII. are to be in by Saturday, Oct. 19.

A first, second and third prize are given each week. Those whose drawings are awarded prizes are requested to call for them at The Advertiser office some time early in the week.

Those who have already received prizes are eligible for the same prize, if at the summer promotions they passed from one group into the next. That is, if those who were last term competing with Grades I., II and III. are now competing with Grades IV., V. and VI., and those who were in IV., V. and VI. are now in VII. or VIII., they may win any of the three prizes, but those who are still in the same group may not receive another prize before the end of the year unless it is a higher one than they have already received. A special prize is to be given at Christmas to the one who has sent in the best work all round.

CRITICISM ON THE CHARTS OF FLOWER FORMS SENT IN BY GRADES VII. AND VIII.

I was proud of Grades IV., V. and VI. when I saw their illustrations in the paper, but I think Grades VII. and VIII. have made me still prouder. You may judge how difficult it has been to choose the six best when every drawing sent in was considered worthy of special mention, and almost every one was marked with the double triangle. This has not happened before. Your work was straight drawing, without anything to cast a glamor over mistakes, and the way you have risen to the difficulties has given me more encouragement than any work that has been done hitherto. There were mistakes, and you are going to hear about them, but I have never seen better, more conscientious drawing anywhere from the hands of school children than you have put in these flower charts of yours. You will remember that there were three standpoints from which you were to be judged, and you may have failed in some one of these three. Considered from any one alone of these points the list of prize-winners might have been different. Some of the most exquisite drawings cannot appear among the six best, because they are meager in their suggestions for the designer or are not well arranged upon the paper.

The following three points were to be taken into account in the judging of your drawings:

1.—The composition or arrangement of the figures in the chart.

2.—The neatness and accuracy of the drawings.

3.—The varieties of the forms discovered and their possibilities in the way of design.

The following flowers have been studied and drawn so well in their individual parts and different views that there is no mistaking them: Hollyhock, nasturtium, morning glory, poppy, round-leaved mallow, snapdragon, pansy, phlox, dahlia, larkspur, salvia, sweet pea, gladiolus, and one which might be the blossom of the artichoke. It is the only one of which I do not feel sure.

I wish it were possible to show all the drawings that have been sent in, but a number of them I intend to take with me to an out-of-town convention, to show outsiders what the London children can do when they make the effort. These drawings will all be returned later, excepting the six reproduced, which become the property of The Advertiser.

The following pupils handed in charts that were fairly well balanced. Others have surpassed some of them on drawing:

Grade VII.

Ernest Little, Roy Campbell, Gladys Wright, Ross Belton, M. Higgins, Edna Gillett, Gertrude Du Maresq, Russell Sage, Gordon Munnoch, Winnifred Reid, Mabel Seymour, Florence Keen, Frank Dowell, Frank Nickle, Clarence Hill.

Grade VIII.

Hadley Murray, Albert Upshall, Russel Palmer, Bertha Churchill, Annie Winslow, F. N. Mann, Minnie Austin, Mary Ball, Gordon Smallman, Verna Bridgeman, C. Slater, Caroline Vrooman, Essie McLeod.

Mabel Hynd, of Grade VII., Talbot, has made her work beautifully clear, and the drawing, especially of the nasturtium bud, is well done, but the arrangement is not so good. Notice the crowding in the left-hand corner.

Mattie Robinson, Grade VII., Lorne avenue — Drawing arrangement all splendid, but the balance out, all the weight being at the left side. Your hollyhock buds are particularly good, Mattie.

The snapdragons drawn by Rounding Moore and W. Bradley, Grade VII., Aberdeen, are well done, but there were many more shapes to be found, and they might have been arranged to better advantage.

Jennie McQueen, Grade VII., Chesley avenue, has wonderfully correct drawings of the dahlia, and we shall expect to see some excellent work from her in the future; but she has missed the idea of the lesson. You were to look at the flower from the standpoint of the designer and, although I do not think it would be possible to make a more correct outline of the dahlia blossom, I feel that her page has very few suggestions for future use in design.

Albert Wright shows his butterfly unit, made up from the poppy, partly in dark and light, partly in outline, so that it is not as pleasing as it might have been. The lines on the wing should radiate from a common center. Radiation is one of the big truths of nature that must not be violated in design.

The careful study of the round-leaved mallow in Grades VII. and VIII., Princess avenue, and the exquisite drawings of the larkspur made by Grade VIII., Aberdeen, deserve especial mention.

Bertha Churchill might have used blacker ink. It may come out all right when it is reproduced, but it is rather uncertain.

Gordon Smallman, Grade VIII., Rectory, and Hadley Murray, Grade VIII., Aberdeen, have beautiful drawings, but I feel that they might have found more shapes in the flowers studied by them.

I am rather disappointed at not being able to put C. Slater, Grade VIII., Talbot, among the six best. Had he followed instructions, I might have done so. He forgot his margins, and spoiled the page by writing the names of the separate parts underneath them. This was unnecessary. The page would have been more pleasing had it been arranged long vertically, instead of horizontally.

Taken altogether, notwithstanding all these criticisms, Grades VII. and VIII. are to be congratulated upon the results of their efforts.

A. A. POWELL.

NEXT LESSON FOR GRADES VII. AND VIII.—LANDSCAPE.

Instead of going on with design at this time of the year, I will ask you to put the charts that you have just made carefully away for future use, and while nature is in her present propitious mood, let us turn our attention to studying her. As an illustration of what I want you to do I have made a charcoal sketch of a group of old willows down on Lake Erie, where I usually spend a part of my summer vacation. There is nothing in the sketch but the foreground with the three trees, a narrow strip of the bay showing in the middle distance and the distant shore beyond. You will probably realize that although the subject of the lesson is landscape it is really the placing of trees in a landscape that we will find our difficulties turning upon. If you will read carefully the instructions given to Grades IV., V. and VI. last week you will find them helpful.

You may study pictures as well as nature for the appearance of near and distant trees. I am not going to limit you as to number or kind, but you are to have at least three trees in your picture. It is well to bear in mind, however, that something simple, well done, ranks higher than an elaborate creation, poorly handled.

Let us avoid rivers that coil and curl and arch their backs like serpents, and for this lesson stick to the simplest elements. Your distance may be a line of far-off woods or low hills that are sufficiently irregular to escape monotony, and yet have a quiet contour. Your middle distance may be a narrow stretch of water, similar to the one in the illustration, or may be just level land with or without a grove of trees. In the foreground I want you to sketch a group of trees, letting the tops of your nearest trees come right out of the picture.

To help you to see how trees appear as they recede from us, cut a rectangular opening about three by four inches in a piece of cardboard and look at some trees that are a couple of blocks away, holding this "finder," as it is usually called, so that you can see these trees in this opening as a picture framed by the cardboard. You will find the tops of the nearer trees cut off by the top of the finder.

Be sure to read last week's lesson on trees before you begin. Your problem is to be the placing of trees in a landscape. Stick to the problem, and do not put in any figures, animals, roads, fences, houses or boats.

Use the charcoal vigorously, and do not do any rubbing; keep it as much like pen and ink as possible. When you have made your first sketch, hold it at arm's length and study it. See if your arrangement is pleasing. Do the different parts compare well; that is, do they seem to belong together, and does each individual thing make everything else in the picture look the better for its presence? If not the composition will be better without it. Lay your finder down on your sketch and move it about until you find the very best picture in it. If this is more pleasing than your first sketch, make another sketch, copying and enlarging the picture you have discovered with the finder. The finished sketch is to be on six by nine inch paper, upon which you have allowed an inch margin at the top and sides, and a slightly deeper one at the bottom. The picture is to be made longer horizontally than

GOLDWIN SMITH'S POINT OF VIEW

A LIBERAL OF THE OLD SCHOOL, UNCONVERTED TO STATE SOCIALISM

[North American Review.]

It should be kept in mind that the standpoint of Goldwin Smith is that of a Liberal of the old school as yet unconverted to state socialism, who still looks for further improvement not to increased governmental interference but to individual effort, free association and the same agencies, moral, intellectual and economic, which have brought us thus far, and one of which, science, is now operating with immensely augmented power. In a word, Goldwin Smith accounts it the function of government to protect these agencies, not to supersede them. Obviously a writer of this school can have no panacea or nostrum to offer, and when a nostrum or panacea is offered he will necessarily be found rather on the critical than on the effusive side. He will look for advancement, not for regeneration; expect improvement still to be, as it has been, gradual, and hope much from steady, calm and harmonious effort, little from violence or revolution.

Not that he lacks deep and fervent sympathy with the effort of reformers to relieve the mass of workingmen from social and political disabilities. No man with a brain and a heart, he says, can fail to be penetrated with a sense of the unequal distribution of wealth or to be willing to try any experiment which may hold out a reasonable hope of putting an end to poverty. By the success of such an experiment the happiness of the rich, of such at least of them as are good men, would be increased far more than their riches would be diminished. Only the nihilist, however, would desire blindly to plunge society into chaos. Goldwin Smith sees that it is plainly beyond man's power to alter the fundamental conditions of his being. "There are inequalities, greater even than those of wealth, which are fixed not by human lawgivers but by nature, such as those of health, strength, intellectual power and length of life, and these draw other inequalities with them. Justice is human. Where inequality is the fiat not of man but of a power above man it is idle for any practical purpose to assail it as injustice."

No doubt the difference between a good and a bad workmen is, partly at least, the act of nature, but to give the same wages to the good workman and the bad, as communists propose, while it might be just from some superhuman point of view, would yet from the only point of view which mankind can practically attain be pronounced by Goldwin Smith unjust. While the limits, however, of human progress are thus clearly perceived, Goldwin Smith is no pessimist. On the whole his view of man's future is sanguine. He keeps in view the fact that steady industry, aided by the ever-growing powers of practical science, is rapidly augmenting wealth. He can discern no cause for doubting that thrift and increased facilities for saving and for the employment of small capital will promote the equality of distribution. "Let governments see," he says, "that labor is allowed to enjoy its full earnings, untaxed by war, waste or iniquitous tariffs. The best of all taxes, it has been truly averred, is the smallest. With equal truth it may be said that the best of all governments is that which has least occasion to govern."

Of recent years Goldwin Smith has evinced now and then an inclination to turn his attention from political, social and economic inquiries to the haunting problems concerning a future life and man's relation to the cosmos. Some of his thoughts upon this subject have been set forth in "Rational Religion and Rationalistic Objections" and in "Guesses at the Riddle of Existence." His specific point of view is that of an agnostic, but of one who recalls tenderly and gratefully the beauty and the nobility with which faith in elevating and benign religions has dignified and embellished human nature. Of such blessings he would hold fast to as much as is compatible with a paramount reverence for truth.

The old custom, honored by the use of centuries, whereby members of the British Parliament were given to wearing their hats in the chamber during the legislative sessions, is apparently doomed to speedy extinction. In the House of Lords the practice of keeping the head covered is still rigidly adhered to, but in the Commons it is decidedly waning, much to the disgust of many of its conservative men, who think it a miserable breach of decorum for any member not to wear his hat during his attendance on the sittings.

Edward Arthur Robinson, son of the late Peter Robinson, the London dry-goods man, is 24 years old and bankrupt, having managed to get rid of $2,100,000 since he came of age.

Drastic Purgatives Destroy the Intestines

If you burn your hand you have a good example of the sort of inflammation that the Drastic Purgatives excite in the intestines. Yet many people consider the virtue of purgative pills depends upon their activity.

Dr. Hamilton was the first to produce a pill that would cleanse the system, not by drastic action, but by exciting normal secretions of kidneys, liver and bowels.

The deepest recesses of the system are searched by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Poisonous and depressing accumulations whether stored in the lymphatics, kidneys, liver or bowels are driven out—inward cleanliness is effected.

You are sure to feel better, sure to experience the buoyancy of robust health that comes with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. No medicine is more gentle, more searching, or surer to give that buoyant feeling of sound health. For the family no remedy is so universally satisfactory as Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25 cents per box, at all dealers.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT THE THEOSOPHIST

A CORRESPONDENT RIDICULES THE MOVEMENT AND ITS LEADER

The following letter apears in the Pittsburg Dispatch of Sept. 18:

To the Editor of the Dispatch:

Not a little has been said in the public press in regard to the visit in America of Mrs. Annie Besant, who, years ago, was called the "most brilliant woman in England," and, as the lady is said to be en route for the East, and may probably halt in Pittsburg, a personal note about her may be of interest.

I am in no sense of the word a Theosophist, but have merely followed the trail of the "cult" in America as a student of stray activities in religion and philosophy. I am quite conversant with the claim of Mrs. Besant and her followers that the British woman is the representative of Madame Blavatsky, who was the founder of the cult in America. There is not a word of truth in this asseveration. If there be any "authorized" Blavatskyite she is Mrs. Katharine Tingley, who has within the last few years organized a really remarkable institution at Point Loma, Cal., just across the beautiful bay from the city of San Diego.

From the death of the Blavatsky two factions of Theosophists in America have been fighting for the upper hand as to which is, "by appointment," the anointed of Blavatsky. Each faction has denounced the other in its prints as a fraud, and many have been inclined to believe both. Mrs. Tingley, however, has the advantage of having done something tangible, as the institution at Point Loma has really performed wonders in the development of the child mind and instilling in it a love of useful knowledge. This is more than has been accomplished by any other claiming to be a Theosophist, the labors of other leaders being devoted to chatter over nonsensical visions and assertions of telepathic communication and astral body projection. Mrs. Besant bubbles over with evidence of her occult powers. Mrs. Tingley, equally able and admirable personally, has much less to assert in this field, and, altogether, must be considered the superior in worth as a teacher.

Why any sane person should hanker to be considered the direct representative in this incarnation of the Blavatsky is impossible to conceive. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky was an adventuress whose assumption of the powers of an "adept" of the East Indian or Buddhist cult was mercilessly exposed by the Society for Psychical Research, and later by Solovsky, one of the madame's own countrymen, in his book entitled "A Modern Priestess of Isis." It was my fortune once to meet Blavatsky for the purpose of an interview, and assuredly there was nothing of the ascetic in her appearance. A grosser person could hardly be imagined. She was a cigarette fiend and fond of living that was rich and high. Her following was never large, but it was sufficient to enable her to indulge her devotion to the carnal things of life, all of which was antipodal to Buddhist teaching.

As for Mrs. Besant, I first saw her as an associate journalist and lecturer of Charles Bradlaugh, who at that time was a continuous thorn in the pillow of the House of Commons. Elected time and time again by the constituency of Northampton, he was an often incontinently fired from the Commons because he was an atheist, several times while I was in London being expelled from those sacred precincts by force. Finally the admission of Bradlaugh to his seat, in response to growing liberal sentiment, practically destroyed the occupation of the two brilliant co-workers, and after the death of Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant espoused the mild type of social democracy which was the fad of the Fabian Society of London, but she was at no time accepted as a sincere Socialist by the followers of William Morris, the famous artist poet. Not finding a sufficient outlet among the timid Fabians for her assertive and now visionary nature, she flopped over to Theosophy, and thus from the hard-headed atheist of a quarter of a century ago, she has become a seer of visions and a dreamer of dreams in which "her eye with a fine frenzy rolling," she "gives to airy nothings a local habitation and a name."

Either Mrs. Besant or Mrs. Tingley, however, is a vastly more attractive creation than was Madame Blavatsky, and they would better drop the name of the cigarette-smoking, cordial-drinking Helena Petrovna, and travel each in her own direction, over her own name and fame. It is of interest that in all the sixteen years that have elapsed since the death of Blavatsky neither her astral, spiritual nor reincarnated body has made itself evident to anyone on earth, though it may be cutting up all sorts of antics on Mars or some other old planet. LADY GODIVA'S RIDES.

There is nothing new under the sun, not even the representation today of Lady Godiva's ride. At varying intervals of three and seven years the spectacle used to form part of the Coventry Fair. It ceased as a regular feature in 1826, but was revived in 1848, after which, says the historian, the attempts to repeat the spectacle did not meet the approval of the best citizens of Coventry. Be that as it may, the jubilee year saw it in full swing again, and today, we are assured, at least a hundred thousand Peeping Toms are risking a repetition of the fate of their first prototype in the role of onlooker. There is a couple of effigies in Coventry commemorative of the gentleman who peeped and paid for peeping. One is a copy of the other. The first, authorities say, really represents St. George. It is monstrous thus to pillory that pattern of chivalry for another man's misdeing. Besides, Peeping Tom himself seems to have been rather badly sold. One legend, which is doubtless as true as the others, declares that the eccentric lady, upon setting forth, clothed herself, not with her hair, as the unimaginative have it, but with invisibility—by a miracle. This considering his penalty, was hard on Thomas.

There undoubtedly was a Lady Godiva, though seventeen different authorities have as many different ways of spelling her name. That she ever performed the feat ascribed to her is not at all certain, seeing that the first record of the story occurs three centuries after her time. The customs of the feudal era were not such as should be recalled with pride. There is one thing to be said, however, the powerful ruffians of the time had ingenuity. The fantastic honeymoons which some American couples now gaily plan are tame and commonplace compared with those which the feudal baron was wont to design for his retainers. Some were compelled to pass the nuptial night in the tree-tops; others to spend the night in a river, or to be dragged, lightly clad as Godiva herself, at the tail of a cart.

the roots and the oil makes the hair grow.

"There are good hair tonics, and I use those I find to be good for my own individual case. The hair is queer in this respect; it differs according to the individual, and there are tonics adapted to all.

"I have a regular process for my hands. It is that of light manicuring. It takes less than five minutes.

"I shape the nails quickly and lightly with some slender emery boards, and I go over them with an oily lotion that softens the cuticle and keeps them from splitting. Then I put glove paste upon my hands and slip them into big loose kid gloves for the night. It sounds more difficult than it really is.

"None of my processes is long, but the results are telling. If I omit my beauty hour for two nights, my friends see it and tell me I look tired.

"I work upon my defects at this time. Not long ago I saw that my eyes were developing puffy little bags beneath them and I went to work upon them. I rinsed my eyes with boric acid, and managed to get rid of the sacs in a short time. It was partly done by massage, for the sacs can be removed by working upon them lightly with the finger tips.

"At this hour I try the new fads. Not long ago I saw a woman with an irregular forehead. It made her look coquettish and piquant. So I experimented upon my own forehead.

"In a short time I had the satisfaction of discovering an immensely pretty style of hairdressing. The irregular forehead has come to take the place of the one that was low, wide, smooth, and as regular as though it had been measured off with pencil and rule.

"The pen of the artist now draws the forehead with fascinating irregularity, and in real life the pretty woman is dressing her hair so that her forehead is high on one side and low on the other.

"The woman whose hair grows badly upon her forehead can rejoice, for the new style in foreheads makes it possible for her to be as pretty as her sister, whose hair grows regularly.

"In Paris the women show their foreheads, everything is done to make the brow smooth. The French woman feels that as soon as her forehead gets wrinkled, she is lost from beauty's standpoint. So she begins when little more than a girl to keep her forehead nice.

"The French woman will tell you that foods have a great effect upon the brow. Milk fattens the forehead. The French woman takes drinks that do not make fat, and she eats foods that are little fattening. Her main struggle with the forehead lies in the massage pot.

"She works night and day with oils and creams and lotions to keep her brow from getting that first wrinkle that is sometimes the beginning of many. In Paris the women steam the forehead at night, wringing out hot pack after hot pack.

"Those packs, which are long, thick, slender pieces of cloth sewed together with wadding in between, are steeped in hot water, then lifted out and allowed to drip. As they drip they cool, and when applied to the skin they are barely soothing in their temperature. To make the forehead too hot would mean to injure the skin, blister the surface and undo the work of the beauty hour."—New York Sun.

THE SPIRIT OF TOYNBEE HALL

where one can gain help from the other, and not a mere battleground where opponents meet as foes. Sitting side by side at the same class or meeting, sharing to some extent in a common social life, men come to understand each other better, and to respect what once they only disliked or despised. And even in discussion old enemies become, in time, old friends, and a sense of comradeship comes to underlie the widest differences of theory in politics or philosophy of life."

Educationally the aim of Toynbee Hall is perhaps not so much to instruct as to cultivate, and socially it aims to help the poor and the suffering not so much by giving them something, and letting that end the matter, as by getting to know them. That note is constantly sounded in all the work of the institution. Toynbee Hall takes it for granted that there are many who feel keenly the difference between their own lot and that of the majority of their fellow-countrymen, and who would be sorry to go through life without some definite and effective attempt to share what they have received, and "to make some of their friends among the poor." Browning's "all sorts and conditions together" is a very real epitome of the work and the method of work at Toynbee Hall, as a glance at the names of the men who have been or are associated with it will show. In the list of those who have desired to "make some of their friends among the poor" are the late Lord Aberdare, the late Earl of Dalhousie, Viscount Milner, the Marquis of Ripon, the Right Hon. James Bryce, the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, Hon. Alfred Lyttleton, the Right Hon. Sir John Gorst and many prelates of the Church of England. These men in laying out the policy of Toynbee Hall builded so wisely that it has never become a playground for the dilettante philanthropist who, going among the poor for a new sensation, seeks only to peep and peer about and to extend that lazy patronage than to endure which the poor would rather be left to their poverty. No, Toynbee Tall means work and it means friendship. In an announcement of certain of its activities for which helpers are required there were these paragraphs, and they indicate the scope and spirit of the work as strikingly as any brief extracts from its voluminous literature could:

BOYS' CLUBS—To organize games, athletics, boxing, etc., and to help in the managemnt.

WORKINGMEN'S CLUBS—To visit the clubs regularly; to arrange for concerts of good music, and for lectures, and visits to places of interest.

WORKING BOYS' HOMES—To visit working boys' homes in the neighborhood and make friends with the boys.

LODGING-HOUSES FOR MEN — To visit and get to know the men, and to encourage them to come to the entertainments and concerts at the hall.

CHARITY ORGANIZATION—To visit those who ask for help and to discover the causes of their poverty with a view to their adequate relief.

CASUAL WARD—To visit with a view to rescuing and finding work for young men who have drifted into destitution.

INQUIRIES—To gather information, e. g., about some local industry—the conditions and hours of labor — the housing problem—trades unions.

READING CIRCLES—To get the public libraries used by groups of men reading and meeting to discuss a given subject.

SCHOOLS—To act as managers of elementary schools (day and evening) and to make friends with parents, children and teachers.

CHILDREN—To take parties of children to places of interest and to visit the homes of those going to the country through the agency of the children's country holiday fund.

Here the note of friendship and of "get to know" is constantly iterated, and Canon Barnett, long a leader in the work, has recored his belief that there are greater possibilities in the system than have perhaps been fully realized. "If," he said, "every resident or associate added something of himself to the common life, if old residents and old students brought again and again the fruit of new experience, if every one who attended a class or a meeting felt something of what is meant by knowledge, culture, courtesy, public spirit or godliness, what a force would be added to the powers which make for good government and happy citizenship." He added that Toynbee Hall was never meant to be an institution founded to achieve definite results and able to report each year on numbers of converts, but rather to "bring into contact knowledge and industry, the universities and East London." In its study and its amelioration of the problems of the unemployed and in its efforts for the higher education of working men there has been close intercourse between residents and certain leaders of working class opinion, and, touching upon that solidarity, Canon Barnett expressed this significant hope as to the future:

"There have been no great calls to test the strength of the Toynbee Hall Society, no summons in the name of common need or public service which would show how far people who have fed on the same food would stand together. At any moment such a call may come. It may not be answered by a demonstration in force, but it may be hoped that in the event of trouble because of poverty, or because of party bitterness, Toynbee Hall people may be found united in urging on the strong the way of justice and on the weak the way of charity."

To revert to Mr. Harvey's epitome of the spirit of Toynbee Hall the eye is caught and the mind captivated by a phrase of description he bestowed upon the place, the most trenchant ever applied to it. He called it "a great clearing-house of thoughts and ideas" and said that it was no small thing to be placed in such a center and to see constantly around one "new thoughts springing into action." Looking into the future, he spoke these words:

"Without, the need of London grows greater day by day, and sometimes we may for a moment lose heart as we think of the vastness of the problems that still await solution, and the greatness of the human need that we are so powerless to supply. But as we share as best we can the common burden and set our faces resolutely toward what light we may dimly see, we feel that a strength greater than our own is about us and with us, and we can wait for the dawn, thankful that, however bad our times may be, they yet have found room for a place where all seekers after truth may meet together on a common footing and every honest effort after good find a welcome and a home."

All this reflects very accurately the spirit of Hull House, too. As to the resemblances and differences between the two institutions an afternoon's survey of the London settlement would, of course, warrant only superficial comment. The environment of the two is strangely similar—small shops, factories, tenements, a huge Jewish population, eager to learn and to get on in the world, then brick buildings set around courts, into which you come from the clamor of the streets to find yourself suddenly encompassed by incredible quiet. The structures in Commercial road are of dull red brick, and have more the aspect of cloisters, more of a scholastic atmosphere than do those in Halsted street. Inside they are not nearly so cheerful. The touch of a woman's hand is missing. Some of the schoolrooms, indeed, are almost desolate, and throughout the house there is an absence of that prettiness without fussiness and of that hominess without clutter which is so conspicuous and so charming a characteristic of the arrangements at Hull House. The drawing-rooms, if they call them that, of Toynbee Hall are, however, full of good pictures and casts and have an air of elegance without ostentation. In two respects it possesses aids to beauty and culture in which Hull House is as yet deficient; the English ivy climbs luxuriantly over the walls that inclose the courtyard, and its library is extensive. Time will drape the walls of Hull House with ivy, and in time, too, the public-spirited men of Chicago will doubtless see to it that its library is as rich as the momentous work of the institution demands that it should be. Perhaps it is reasonably sufficient now for immediate needs, but as I stood within the great, silent bookroom of Toynbee Hall and contemplated its 8,000 volumes extending in close, packed array from floor to ceiling, I could not help coveting them for the settlement at home. The collection is especially strong in works on political economy and social science, and many of the volumes are presentation copies from the authors or from those who are vitally interested in the subjects treated. The average number of readers per month is nearly 200, of whom, so one of the secretaries said, between 60 and 70 per cent are Jews. The number of volumes taken home by readers every month averages 100.

Memorial tablets adorn various parts of the buildings. One departed resident is commemorated in these words carved upon a mantelpiece erected in his honor: "Humble in his boldness; honest in his reverence; faithful in his service." On a set of massive doors in the same room appear these words: "Thankful for the example of his meek and manly service, the friends of T. S. Widowson have given these doors."

Of course, the question always in the mind of the visitor to these institutions that are keeping democracy pure amid the complexities and contradictions of a social and political order that is in a state of change and of experiment, is, "What are you teaching?" It is not very illuminating to say that they are working in the field of language and literature, economics and history, vocal and instrumental music, and physiology and ambulance work, but it is interesting to examine the outlines of some of the courses more particularly. For example, heading the list of lectures and classes for the autumn term of last year was a course of 25 lectures on "English Social Reformers," by Dr. Rickett. The charge for this, as for most of the other courses of the term, was the ridiculous sum of 1 shilling. It must have been inspiring to have taken up Dr. Rickett's course every Wednesday evening within the walls of an institution that has added so splendid a chapter to English social reform as has Toynbee Hall. The briefest syllabus of the lectures reads like the music of bugles, including, as it does, these names (one cannot forego the pleasure of writing them down): William Langland and John Ball, Sir Thomas More, George Fox, John Wesley, William Wilberforce, Jerry Bentham, William Cobbett, Francis Place, Sir Samuel Romilly, John Howard and Elizabeth Fry, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Robert Owen, Cobden, Ebenezer Elliott, John Stuart Mill, Charles Kingsley, John Ruskin, William Morris and finally, some women reformers. I have tried to make known the Toynbee spirit by merely touching upon some of its manifestations, and I think nothing so indicates that spirit as the roster of great men to whose lives and work it turned the minds of its people for five-and-twenty weeks. The Toynbee Shakespeare Society and the Elizabethan Literary Society held weekly meetings for the serious study of Shakespeare and the Elizabethans by means of reading parties, lectures and discussions. The Elizabethan Society, working under the presidency of Sidney Lee, heard papers on "The Culture of Sixteenth Century Women," "The Two Versions of 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,'" "Beaumont and Fletcher," "The Origin and Development of the Novel," "Conceits in Elizabethan Poetry," and "Shakespeare and Dickens."

This, surely, is carrying university culture to the multitude, for it is to be remembered that some of these papers were the free gift of men who are pre-eminent authorities on the subjects under discussion.

Though the 22 residents of Toynbee Hall are men, there are affiliated associations of women who carry on a far-reaching work among the neighboring poor, especially women and children. Among their activities is a Factory Girls' Dinner Club, to which cigar and cigarette makers from nearby factories come daily and have their food prepared in a wholesome manner, they furnishing the more substantial portions of the meal and paying a penny a week for the preparation of the food and a dish of potatoes. Incidentally they are also taught dancing, though perhaps it is not so incidental a matter after all, for in the theory and the practice of Toynbee Hall the ministry of beauty is next to simple friendliness, the big factor. The motto on its shield bears the words, "Dominus illuminatio mea quem nosse est vivere." To the 3,000 men, women and children who enter its doors every week it says, "The hall admits, without question or scruple, the services of all, whatever be their convictions or the expression which they are able to give them."

That is the Toynbee spirit. The Lord is our light, they say, but they take the phrase in its widest acceptance and it shines above their doors transposed but unchanged, and radiant with the glory of a perfect friendliness. For there light is God, and to know that light is to live.—James O'Donnell Bennett, in Chicago Record-Herald.

WORTH TAKING

One ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion;

One ounce Compound Salatone;

Four ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla;

Mixed and taken in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime, is pronounced by a prominent physician to be the best mixture for the cure of the kidney, bladder, and all urinary troubles.

This says the doctor, is the most simple though remarkable prescription ever written to cleanse the system of impurities and waste matter. It acts as a powerful tonic to the kidneys, forcing them to filter out the acids and poisons, overcoming rheumatism, lame back, sciatica and other afflictions arising from sour, impure blood.

The ingredients can be procured at any good drug store, and being purely vegetable and entirely harmless, can easily be mixed at home.

If you have a suffering friend show this to him, as he will undoubtedly be pleased to learn of so simple and highly recommended a remedy.

The Curse of Monte Carlo

LONDON TIMES CORRESPONDENT SUGGESTS AN END SHOULD BE PUT TO IT.

Where Gilded Youth Are Ruined Annually in Scores—Enormous Profits to Shareholders.

An interesting letter in the London Times, signed "Indicus," suggests that it is time an end should be put to Monte Carlo, the plague-spot of Europe.

"Before this hideous Monte Carlo tragedy ceases to be a nine-days' wonder," writes Indicus, "I would suggest that it is time attention should be drawn to the fons et irigo mali, the gambling rooms of that too notorious place.

"I speak as one who knows, having resided for some time at Monte Carlo, near the villa in which the Goolds rented a small flat. How long are the nations of Europe going to tolerate the continuance of this plague-spot in their midst?

"That is the question that should be agitated in the press and chancelleries of every European capital, whose gilded youth are ruined annually in scores, for they flock thither in ever-increasing numbers solely because of the gambling facilities, made more seductive by the beauty of the place, its gardens, and the unrivaled Casino band.

"The profits, I may state, accruing from the tables, which average 30,000,000 francs, are divided between the shareholders, the municipality and the Prince of Monaco. On the same day the Goolds are supposed to have committed the crime with which they are charged there occurred at Castellamare the suicide of a young English and American couple on their honeymoon, who had been ruined at Monte Carlo.

"President Roosevelt might well assume the initiative in this righteous crusade, for the American plutocrats are as prominent at the tables as the aristocracy of Europe."

MAX PEMBERTON'S VIEWS.

"Max Pemberton, the novelist, who is an authority on Monte Carlo, said yesterday that the diplomatic situation would make any such action difficult.

"I cannot pronounce an opinion on a crime that is still untried," he said, "but one thing is clear—Monte Carlo is the haunt of every adventurer and adventuress in the world. It is astounding how many big swindles and thefts have been planned at Monte Carlo.

"The obvious curse of the place is that fools go there to make money out of the tables, and rogues go there to make money out of the fools. The atmosphere is most demoralizing to young people, who lose their heads, and also all sense of the value of money.

"Another great evil is that of pure English girls succumbing to the atmosphere. They are often brought in contact at the tables with undesirable persons, with whom they actually converse.

"The government of every country is perfectly aware that Monte Carlo should be suppressed, but the diplomatic situation makes action impossible, and France, under whose protection Monte Carlo exists, is placed in a most difficult position.

"The authorities at Monte Carlo do their best to preserve order in the rooms, but it is perfectly impossible to keep out rogues of both sexes. Wherever you have unrestricted gambling you will have attendant crime.

"The suicides at Monte Carlo I regard as only a minor part of the evil. There must be thousands of tragedies in all parts of Europe which could be traced back to the gambling rooms at Monte Carlo.

"I am convinced that the suppression of Monte Carlo would prove a more practical and nobler work for humanity than the advancement of impossible propositions at The Hague peace conference."

SUICIDES HUSHED UP.

"The Monte Carlo casino has been responsible for more suicides than any other institution of any kind in the world," a frequent visitor to the Riveria told a reporter yesterday.

"It was said three or four years ago that the gambling house was about to be closed, but it is still drawing thousands of people into its net every year, and so great has been its financial success that a new gaming place in the neighborhood is being talked of.

"It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that thousands of people have committed suicide through being ruined at Monte Carlo. As a rule, the world hears little or nothing of such suicides, for it is not to the interest of the town to say much about them. But now and then striking cases come to light. Here are a few:

"Dec. 9, 1904.—Harold Clarke, son of a distinguished San Francisco family, a law student of New York, shot himself through the head in the Hotel Regina, Paris. He had just returned from Monte Carlo, where he lost all his money at the tables.

"Dec. 17, 1904.—A young Italian count walked out of the Casino, a picture of dejection, and, after sitting in the gardens for a while, talking to a lady, he pulled out a revolver and shot himself through the heart. Attendants quickly removed the body, and few persons were aware of what had happened.

"Dec. 19, 1904.—Rudolph Ryder, a young Viennese gentleman, lost all his money at the tables, and, going out early in the morning, lay down in front of a train at Villefranche, and was cut to pieces.

"These are only a few instances noted now and then during a single month," he continued. "No one knows how many more cases occurred altogether in that same month, or how many score occur in a year.

"Ruined players are continually jumping into the sea and getting drowned, or going to Paris or elsewhere, there to shoot themselves.

"But the suicides do not represent a tenth of the misery due to the Casino. So many people are broken by the bank that it has been necessary to establish a relieving department, in order to get rid of the ruined players, who might otherwise commit suicide.

FARES HOME PAID.

"Every day in the season a score or more of men and women apply to the Casino offices for a dole to pay their hotel bills and their fares home. Some time ago a British officer, who had lost every penny, was given a free P. and O. ticket to Calcutta and $250. The sums paid out by the Casino range from $25 to $2,500 a day.

"But in spite of this toll on its profits the Casino has made millions sterling out of the gamblers who try to break the bank. Last year its total receipts came to $7,549,400, an increase of $759,000 on the year before.

"After every expense had been defrayed there was close on to $5,000,000 for distribution among the shareholders, at the rate of $70 a share. This was equal to 70 per cent on the original value of the shares.

"The curse of Monte Carlo is not merely that it is responsible for the ruin of hundreds of men and women," he concluded, "but that it entails undeserved wretchedness on their families, who often have to suffer, not only privation, but great mental anguish, directly due to the evil influence of the gambling tables.

"It is a forcing bed for crime. Swindlers and thieves of every class haunt the place.

"The spot is the most beautiful one on the Riviera, and has the finest climate for invalids. It is time that such a place was rid of the curse of the gambling den."

AGRARIAN DISORDERS.

Agrarian disorders continue. If they are the result of agitation on the part of the radical parties one cannot use too strong terms in condemning. They help neither the land nor the liberty, which are the watchwords of the peasantry. It is not by such methods that a movement which is to rest on solid foundations, can be carried through. The more conscientious peasants do not go in for this kind of political activity. They see that it is moral force which must be used as long as the physical force still remains exclusively in the hands of the Government. The growing discontent is helping to develop this moral pressure which will eventually prove too strong to be resisted.

Like the agrarian disorders, the anarchism, the so-called "hooliganism" of which we find traces at every turn, is one of the most discouraging aspects of the present moment. It is the result of the example set by organized revolutionary bands—a peasant holds up a woman, takes her few rubles, hangs her, and calls it "expropriation for the revolutionary fund." A boat is held up, the Government money seized, but the passengers ar enot molested. This is actual expropriation; but the line of distinction is not always drawn, and the result is simple "hooliganism." It appears to be utter demoralization. Demoralization is evidenced in the increase of drunkenness. Crimes against women are frequent. "Why?" is the title of an article I read in a provincial newspaper the other day. The article was simply a chronicle of crimes of this character which had taken place in the tsur-rounding districts. Another newspaper tried to answer the question: Why this demoralization? It was fined $500 for the publication of an answer. Here are extracts from this same article:

DISEASED STATE OF SOCIETY.

"Yesterday we published the account of an attempted 'expropriation.' This account is interesting because it throws light on a kind of activity which remains incomprehensible to a vast majority of our public. It reveals a diseased state which must be first understood before it can be treated. We are not 'praising an offense' (a recent law of the Stolypin party, the praising of offenses.) We consider this act shameful; it shakes the very foundations of our social life. But it is the result, in our opinion, not of wicked intent, but of a morally diseased state of our society. There was here a touch of simple theft, but the root of the matter was the attitude toward expropriations as something most heroic, as a means of serving some social idea. We believe that the inflicting of the death penalty for expropriation has undoubtedly popularized them among the immature youth. We even say that the death penalty has increased rather than decreased these crimes, by giving to them a kind of heroic character. The death penalty does not frighten those who steal for an idea, for whom a crime is all the more an act of vengeance when the penalty for it is severer.

"This was the point of view of those who committed this act. The act was senseless if one looks at it from the point of view of gain to those who committed it. Could they expect to find much money in a Government village wineshop? Fifty to one hundred dollars at the most was what they could expect to find, and for this sum three young men risked their lives. Was it poverty that drove them to this? They were all provided for—one was a watchman in a school. They could have robbed the school building if they had simply wanted to steal. But, no. They went for the Government liquor shops—which meant, if caught, not simple prison for theft, but the death penalty for 'expropriation.' When these men saw that they were caught, one shot himself. The second man's gun would not shoot; the third man saw this and killed him. Then the third man tried to shoot himself, but only wounded himself. He now lies in the hospital; if he recovers he will be hanged.

"This is a disease, an epidemic, which is spreading all over Russia. This disease has broken out because of the unhealthy state of our social organism. The measure against this disease should not be such as to further weaken the organism. First of all, one should better those conditions in which our society has to live. Perhaps that is all that is necessary."

For this and another article, I repeat, the paper was fined $500. This instance, one of the many which have come under my notice these last weeks, may help the American reader to understand what the second dissolution has meant to Russia.

trombone under his arm. There was a drummer with a mighty stroke, and two cornetists, and several women singers. In a word it was a Salvation Army band plus a certain refinement and dignity—and the surplices. They started away singing and playing lustily, marching by roundabout ways to London Bridge, pausing frequently to urge the loafers along the pavements to join them. Once the prebendary fell so far behind his band that he all but lost sight of it. Then he tucked his trombone under one arm and his surplice under the other and ran briskly down the street. When he spied a ragged, wretched looking man he would sing out to him, "Old fellow, will you follow us to the church? Good music! Beautiful views! You can go in and out as you like. If you don't like it you can leave."

To another he cried, "Don't be afraid of us—we're perfectly harmless. Perfectly harmless!" Sometimes he got surly silence; sometimes rough answers. Once he laid hold of a man by the arm and the man almost struck him as he tried to pull away. The sight sickened the onlooker, for you must know that William Carlile is no mouthy, illiterate, sensational street-corner evangelist, but a cultivated English gentleman whom the state church has delighted to honor, whom the King and the great prelates of the church have praised and thanked, and who, with his prodigious energy and his amazing resourcefulness and executive skill, might long since have won a bishopric. And yet the man upon whom he had laid his loving hand pulled away from him with a sneer and a gesture that was crueler than words. The prebendary happened to glance up at that moment and he saw that his "new American friend" had witnessed the incident. There was a momentary flush on his face and a look of pain in his eyes, then he smiled again and cried to the man: "All right, I don't want to worry you."

Into the hands of some of the ragged men with whom he fell into conversation he thrust little metal buttons and said: "If you do come to church just drop that in the collection, will you? I can use it if you can't." He and his assistants carried great pocketfuls of these buttons, and the prebendary said: "They are my answer to the fellows who tell me they won't come to church because they haven't any money. They are ashamed not to give, poor as they are. The buttons save their pride."

The procession carried a banner that read: "Cinematograph and monster 'phone concert now going on at St. Mary's-at-Hill. Come and see." The pleasures of the entertainment were also heralded to the groups of loafers by one of the choristers, who used a megaphone. Sometimes the prebendary, whom you heard speaking so gently and tenderly to the West End congregation in Bryanston street in the morning, would supplement the racket with a terrific blast on his trombone. When the procession had got back to the church with two or three derelicts off the high seas of London humanity in tow one of the lay readers lingered in the streets on the chance of signaling one more unfortunate and luring him aside. He whistled cheerily as he stood at the edge of the sidewalk and flung out hearty greeting to various passers-by, some of whom he seemed to know intimately. To one poor crippled lad who was working his painful way toward the church doors he said: "Hello, Grindley, how's your poor old feet?" The man beamed with happiness and entered eagerly into a pessimistic diagnosis of his troubles, and that was, of course, a genuine comfort to him. The lay reader, having the wisdom of the serpent along with the harmlessness of a dove, undoubtedly knew it.

From 6 o'clock until 7 there was a preliminary service of orchestral music and colored and motion pictures. The music was hearty, the views vivid. The King being in Ireland that week, the papers were full of Irish news. Therefore it was presumed by the rector of St. Mary's-at-Hill that his friends from the gutters could be roused to a mild degree of interest by pictures of scenes in the sister island. Also there had been the theft of certain state jewels from the safe of Dublin Castle a few days before, and comment on the gossip about the crime was on every lip. Therefore the subject of the evening's sermon was "The Stolen Jewels."

Before it, however, came the regular service of the Church of England. "Regular," yes, for it was all there, from "When the wicked man turneth" to "Be with us all evermore," but it was performed in a manner so extraordinary and with interpolations so amazing that sometimes one was in doubt whether he was in a Salvation Army barracks or a Punch and Judy show—or both. Certainly the fact that one was in a seventeenth century Anglican Church built by the architect of St. Paul's and having on its walls many a tablet of brass and marble commemorating departed magnates of old London, was not allowed to obtrude itself. While the stereopticon man flashed his pictures on the screen and the orchestra stationed beneath the pulpit boomed through its martial and popular selections the church filled rapidly. Some were obviously regular attendants, some were stragglers, some were students of philanthropy and sociology from the West End. A group of lads who sat together, and evidently were being personally conducted by a man who showed a special friendliness toward them, presented such a marked similarity as to the croppings of their hair, which was close-clipped, that it seemed very probably that the services of their last barber had cost them nothing. All this time the church was kept darkened so that the pictures might be seen, and it remained so until the reading of the lessons.

Amid this darkness the choir entered, carrying Japanese lanterns, the orchestra meanwhile proclaiming "Onward, Christian Soldiers," with every instrument going at full tilt. The effect was extremely weird and solemn. When the service really had begun all the prayers, the general confession, the absolution, the psalms, the Magnificat, the nunc dimittis, the creed, and the collects were thrown upon the screen in letters so large that they could be read from any part of the church. Mr. Prebendary Carlile, standing in the pulpit, spoke the words in a loud voice. Sometimes he would interpolate phrases, as when, reaching the words, "He pardoneth and absolveth," in the absolution, he cried to the people. "You are pardoned now, at this moment."

Everything possible was done to enliven the service and bring home its significance to the people and make them active participants in it. Sometimes it was interrupted to give the ministers an opportunity to call upon members of the congregation for Bible verses, which they, rising, repeated with a good will. When he read the words, "Give peace in our time, oh Lord," he added this, "And a peaceful spirit between the United States and Japan at this time," and another of his interpolations into the service was, "Our prayers are offered for all those who are out of work, especially had been read the prebendary called across from his pulpit to the lay reader at the lecture, "Now, what do you make out of that, Brother Tirrell? What's that got to do with these ladies and gentlemen here?" Brother Tirrell thereupon proceeded briefly, bashfully and sincerely to expound the second lesson. When he had finished the minister turned to the congregation with a wink and said: "I don't mean to worry you about religion, but you see what it means to George here, and I think it's worth your thinking about." Then he winked again, as much as to say, "I don't believe we could do better than follow George's lead."

The sermon was short. The theft of the state jewels at Dublin was made the basis of a simple allegory. God's love and spirit were the jewels and the heart of man the strong box for their keeping. Was the safe a good one or had the devil broken into it and stolen the jewels away? The preacher paused and asked another of the lay readers if he had the jewels safe in his heart, and the lay reader answered that, by the mercy and goodness of God, he had. "But aren't you a conceited young puppy to talk that way?" asked the preacher. The lay reader thought not, for it was God that had given the jewels, not he that had won them. The preacher turned to another man and said: "Dear Barrett, what do you advise?" And then Barrett spoke simply and devoutly about his faith.

The regular service over, there was a short, quiet service of prayer and intimate appeal. It was very still and plaintive and tender and in strange contrast with the tumult of song and exhortation that had gone before. Some of the poor, ragged men went forward and knelt before the altar, and there the minister bent over them and questioned them, and you could hear some of them crying amid the shadows, for the church had been darkened again and was almost deserted. To some he gave copies of the Gospel according to St. John and to some an address where they should come to see him before the next Sunday, and to some little metal buttons which they were to put in the collection when they came again to church there, so that if perchance they had no money they should not be ashamed. He spoke to them like father and mother and friends, and their poor, broken hearts were melted and they were as wax in his pious hands. I could hear no more and went away, passing through dark courts and emerging at last into bright squares where the lights of many public-houses flared and where the people were laughing. The roar of London, sunk to a kind of weary moaning on this Sunday evening, engulfed me. I wondered whether I should ever see the church of the broken hearts again; wondered what the London of the morrow would hold for those who had knelt before the altar with the soldier of God and followed his prayers with trembling lips and gazed with tearful eyes out of the darkness and across the threshhold of what he had called their new life.

PANDORA RANGE

A Strikingly Handsome Range

The owner of a Pandora is always proud of the impression this strikingly handsome range makes upon her neighbors.

The solid, compact appearance of the smoothly finished body, the bold, large pattern of the carving, and the brilliance of the heavy nickel coating, combine to produce an effect that is distinctly pleasing to the eye of the most critical observer.

The Pandora Castings undergo a "special process" to make them easily and quickly take a lustrous shine.

The Nickeling is done with extraordinary care—will not chip and crack like the nickeling on ordinary stoves, but will retain its smoothness and brightness for years.

Because of the absence of any fine, fancy carving, which catches and holds the dust, the Pandora is much more easy to polish and will remain clean longer.

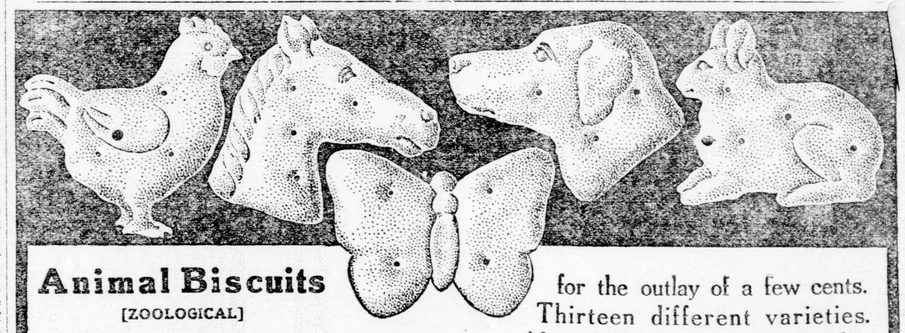

Altogether, the Pandora is a very superior range.

GARIBALDI'S RED SHIRT.

The most popular uniform of its day—perhaps of any day—in Europe, was the Garibaldean shirt, whose prosaic origin was little suspected by its adorers. In a note to Mr. Trevelyan's "Garibaldi's Defense of the Roman Republic," this origin is explained by Admiral Winnington - Ingram, who was in Montevideo in 1846, when and where the uniform was first assumed: "Its adoption was caused by the necessity of clothing as economically as possible the newly-raised Garibaldean Legion. A liberal offer having been made to the Government to sell at reduced prices a stock of red woolen shirts that had been intended for the Buenos Ayres market—now closed, through the blockade—it was thought too good a chance to be neglected, and the purchase was therefore effected. These goods had been intended to be worn by those employed in the saladeros, or great slaughtering and salting establishments for cattle at Ensenada and other places in the Argentine provinces, as they made good winter clothing, while by their color they disguised in a measure the bloody work the men had in hand."—T. HEROINES OF HISTORY: POCAHONTAS, THE LITTLE GIRL WHO SAVED AMERICA

By A. P. Terhune, in the New York World.

A soldier of fortune (incidentally a hero, adventurer, genius, braggart and amazing liar) had been captured by the Chickahominy Indians of Virginia early in 1608. He had been passed from band to band as a curiosity, until at last he came before the chief, Powhatan. The prisoner was Capt. John Smith, one of the leaders of the colony sent out by England to settle in Jamestown. Smith was also, perhaps, the only man of the whole colony who had enough common sense to warrant his presence in so wild a land.

The colonists, for the most part, were down-at-heel gallants, impoverished nobles and emigrants, who had left England for England's good. They had a hazy notion that Virginia was full of gold nuggets and precious stones. When Smith pointed out that the colony's one hope of success depended on every man setting to work clearing forests, building huts and planting grain, they at once hated and tried to depose him. But they could not get on without this one sane leader, so sullenly they obeyed him. Having arranged matters as comfortably as possible in the swampy, fever-swept settlement of Jamestown, Smith plunged into the wilderness in search of provisions. He was caught by savages and brought to Powhatan's camp.

There, his suspicions having been lulled to rest by courteous treatment, he was suddenly seized and overpowered by a dozen strong Indians, hurled to the ground and his head secured to a stone block. Then the natives prepared to beat his brains out with clubs. The Virginia colony's fate, and perhaps English power and language in America, hung in the balance. But from the crowd darted a little girl, barely 13 years of age—Pocahontas, the favorite child of Powhatan. She threw herself on Smith's body, sheltering his head in her arms and begging her father to spare him. The old chief's heart was touched and he set the captive free.

It has for centuries been a custom among many savage tribes all over the world to permit a woman to intervene to save the life of a captive, the rescue implying willingness to marry him. That such was Pocahontas' incentive, and that she really considered the act as binding her to Smith as his wife, is rather probable, judging not only by native custom, but by events that followed. For on Smith's return to Jamestown she visited him frequently. Learning that the colony was in danger of being wiped out by starvation she and her attendants regularly brought supplies of food, and thus a second time she saved America. Without her aid the Jamestown settlement must have failed through lack of provisions. Without her protection, it would doubtless have been destroyed by savages. To this Indina girl America owes a debt that can never be paid. The Spaniards and French were constantly encroaching on American territory, and were ready and eager to annex Virginia and the surrounding country were it to be left vacant by England. Jamestown alone represented the English-speaking race in that part of the world. From it as a nucleus sprang much of the present United States. But for Pocahontas, the Atlantic seaboard might for hundreds of years have been a series of Spanish or French colonies.

Smith, ill and discouraged, at length left Virginia. At once Pocahontas' interest in Jamestown ceased. She did not revisit the colony, nor send it supplies. Her love for Smith alone had made her the settlers' benefactress. On Smith's departure, too, the Indians dropped their friendly attitude toward the English. Once more the colony was in peril. And once more (this time unconsciously) Pocahontas saved it. For Capt. Argall, in 1613, treacherously captured her, took her to Jamestown and held her as hostage for the natives' peaceful conduct. There she heard a false rumor of Smith's death, and was heartbroken at the tidings. Caring little, seemingly, for what might befall her now, she consented to a plan for uniting the interests of English and Indians by a marriage between herself and a colonist named Rolfe. She also embraced Christianity, taking the baptismal name of Lady Rebecca.

She and Rolfe sailed to England in 1616. In court there the little Virginia princess was kindly received, and was petted and made much of. She bore her new honors meekly, taking scant interest in life, until one day she came face to face with Smith. Thinking him a ghost, she swooned. Then in an ecstasy of joy she forgot all court etiquette, she threw her arms about his neck and covered his face with kisses, calling him a thousand endearing names. Perhaps to remove her from such a dangerous rival, Rolfe decided to carry Pocahontas back at once to Virginia. But on shipboard she died.

Pocahontas at the time of her death in 1617 was only 22. Whether heartbreak at separation from Smith hastened her end, or if transportation to new scenes and a wholly foreign life crushed her no one knows. But the unfortunate little savage had lived long enough to make England's foothold in America permanent and to leave a name immortal in history.

The Stomach on Strike

THE TONIC TREATMENT FOR INDIGESTION IS THE MOST SUCCESSFUL.

Loss of appetite, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, heavy dull headache and a dull sluggish feeling—these are the symptoms of stomach trouble. They indicate that the stomach is on strike, that it is no longer furnishing to the blood the full quota of nourishment that the body demands, hence every organ suffers. There are two methods of treatment, the old one by which the stomach is humored by the use of predigested foods and artificial ferments, and the new one—by which the stomach is toned up to do the work nature intended of it. A recent cure by the tonic treatment is that of Mrs. Jas. W. Haskell, Port Maitland, N.S. She says: "For years I enjoyed perfect health, but suddenly headaches seized me. I had a bad taste in my mouth; my tongue was coated; I grew tired and oppressed; my appetite left me and such food as I did eat only caused distress. I had severe pains in my chest. I lost all strength and was often seized with vomiting. At different times I was treated by some of our best doctors, but although I followed their treatment carefully I did not get any better. One day while reading a paper I came across a case similar to mine which had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I immediately purchased a supply and it was not long before they began to help me. I grew stronger day by day till now I am as healthy as I ever was. I have a good appetite, am strong and active and can attend to my household duties without fatigue. I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all sufferers from indigestion."

Rheumatism, kidney trouble, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, headache and backache, palpitation, general weakness, and a host of other troubles, find their root in bad blood just as in the case of stomach trouble. That is why the Dr. Williams' Pink Pills treatment is always a success—they are a powerful blood builder and nerve tonic. Sold by all druggists or direct from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

A DEFENSE OF FRANCIS BACON

BACONIAN SAYS HE PLEADED GUILTY TO SAVE KING JAMES.

The following letter appears in the New York Sun:

To the Editor of The Sun: Sir,—The letter of "F." in The Sun of September 17, entitled "The Sad Misunderstanding Concerning Francis Bacon," contains a series of half-told facts that will give your readers altogether a wrong conception of the trial of Viscount Saint Albans (1561-1626), or, as he is more generally known, Lord Francis Bacon.

Bacon's enemies had planned his downfall; he was a very sick man when the trial was instituted; he was requested by King James to plead guilty, for the King feared to have any further agitation than was absolutely necessary. The King was aware of a state of growing discontent among his subjects. Twenty years later it cost his son Charles his life.

"F." fails to add the facts that Bacon's imprisonment lasted only forty-eight hours, that the fine was remitted and that Coke and other judges of that period also received their income from fees and presents. The salaries allowed judges were a mere pittance. "F." also fails to say that of the thousands of judgments rendered by Bacon none was reconsidered or annulled.

Spedding, the author of one of the biographies of Lord Bacon, has thoroughly discussed this question, and proved Bacon's innocence. A pamphlet in the library of Congress at Washington, D. C., entitled "The Vindication of Lord Bacon," by William H. Burr, A.M., gives further information on the subject which Mr. Spedding did not possess. The London magazine "Baconiana," 1900-07, published scores of letters from contemporaries of Lord Bacon after his death, in 1626, which were utterly at variance with the ideas advanced by your correspondent.

IS BLACK HAIR DYING OUT?

AN ENGLISH WRITER THINKS IT IS A QUESTION OF RACE.

People interested in Mr. George E. Boxall's "The Anglo-Saxon," will welcome his latest volume. "The Awakening of a Race: An Advance in Civilization" (Unwin, 7s 6d net). The author considers that in these islands there has been a fight for survival between fair and dark-haired races, and gives us this interesting note on the dying out of black hair:

As a fact, it is the Englishman that stands to gain by the struggle between the races. However numerous they may have been, the black-haired race in the British Isles has almost, if not quite, passed away. I was sitting in Victoria Park, Portsmouth, one morning in May, 1903, reading a paper, when a gentleman seated himself beside me and lit his cigar. I took no notice of him for a time, but suddenly he started and exclaimed, "Well! I never saw anything like it before!" Thinking that he addressed me, I lowered my paper and asked, "What?" "Look at that child," he said. "Did you ever see such beautiful black hair before?" I looked. An elegantly-dressed lady was leading a very pretty little girl, some five or six years of age, by the hand. The child had a very beautiful head of hair, jet black, hanging down in small ringlets all round. 'She is a beautiful child, indeed," I said, "and her hair is magnificent, black as the raven's wing. I have seen none like it for years. Probably she's Greek or Italian." "I've traveled over England, Wales, and Scotland for years, and never saw hair like hers anywhere," said my friend, "but I've never been to Greece or Italy. Do the Greeks have hair like that?" "Yes," I replied. "Generally the children in England have lighter hair than their parents," he remarked. "Yes," I replied; "that is so now, but a few generations ago you might have seen children in some parts of Wales, Ireland, and Scotland with hair like that little girl's." "You appear to have studied the subject," he continued: "The lady, I suppose, is her far as I could, and I believe it's all a question of race, and the black-haired race is dying out, or rather being bred out. There are still black-haired people in Spain, Italy and Greece, but they are becoming more and more rare even in Spain and Italy." The lady and the child passed again, and we remained silent as they were near enough to hear what we said. When they were far enough away I continued: "The lady, I suppose, is her mother, but if you noticed her hair you might see that, although it is very black, there is a tinge of brown underneath." "I was looking at the child," he said, "I did not notice the lady." "Well," I went on, "I should say that the mother is not quite pure-bred, but very nearly so, while the child shows no trace of crossing at all. Probably takes after her father." "How very interesting," he said, and I walked away. When I looked back I saw him following the child to have another look at her.—T. P.'s Weekly.

THE TRAGEDY OF GUY DE MAUPASSANT

A STUDY OF TEMPERAMENT—HAD NERVOUS TENDENCIES.

A curiously interesting study of temperament has just been issued in the lige of Guy de Maupassant by M. Edouard Maynial. Even in England Maupassant is generally acknowledged to be unsurpassable in his treatment of the short story. His tale, "Boule de Suif," translated into English some time ago, remains still an unbeaten masterpiece of condensation and vitality.

Reviewing Monsieur Maynial's biography, "Les Annales," recently gave several fragments from the book itself. Maupassant, it seems, had always something untamed and wild in his nature. The open air and solitude were a necessity of his nature. From a child upwards he possessed a passion for being alone and for being out of doors; and as he grew older this craving for the undisturbed presence of nature increased proportionately. But Maupassant's craving for the country and the sea was not, like other men's, due to a passionate response to the beauty and the wonder of it. He had no artistic feelings whatsoever, and was, as a matter of fact, a man of very few emotions. Monsieur Maynial says the temperament was markedly cold, and that, save his mother and his brother, he practically cared deeply for nobody.

His need of being upon the water and of roaming alone in solitary places was, if one can put it quite so strongly, a savage instinct—a savage revolt against civilization and all its ways. Moreover, as his nerves grew more overstrained and disordered, this solitariness increased, only that instead of finding peace in it, Maupassant, sightless, as it were, to the loveliness of fields and sea, merely allowed more and more scope to his own bitter and morbid thoughts.

As a young man Maupassant, as everybody knows, was physically a magnificent specimen of vigorous and full-blooded manhood, but he inherited very bad nervous tendencies — his mother was a highly neurotic woman —and he used life much as a jockey does a racehorse on the course. At 35 a friend who knew him well when in the twenties did not recognize him. The face had grown thin, drawn, sallow, more refined and intellectual it is true, but in a man once like a great bull in animal strength and spirits, appallingly enfeebled and bloodless. Long before Maupassant's sudden access of genuine insanity he had been haunted by his double—that is, by the vision of himself sitting or standing opposite to him. But the first outbreak of actual madness took place abruptly one night when he made an effort to cut his throat, after which, to the terrible end of his existence, he never knew another sane moment. This calamity came to him in 1892, about three years after the publication of "Fort comme la Mort," and he died on July 6, 1893.

THE MIRACLE OF TAN.

Has it ever struck you that sunburn is a miracle? Probably not.

When you go down to the seashore, and bask in the summer sun, the light attacks you fiercely, first reddening your skin, then swelling, blistering, and scorching it. If you kept in the sun long enough and the miracle did not occur, the sunlight would kill you, burning off your skin first and then fiercely attacking the raw flesh.

But the miracle does occur. The skin changes from its pale color to a tan, and upon this tan the sun has no effect. The sun may beat on a tan-colored skin for days, for weeks, for months, but the skin will remain always sound.—Answers.

WOMEN IN JAPAN'S HISTORY.

Women played an important part in the early history of Japan. To a woman, the Empress Jingu, belongs the glory of the first conquest made by Japan, that of Korea, A. D. 201. Dressed as a man, she led her fleet over the unknown waters, across which she alone believed a country lay to the westward. "If we succeed," she said to her chiefs, "the glory will be all yours. I will be responsible for the infamy of a possible defeat." The Koreans laid their wealth at the feet of the conquerors, and the king swore that as long as the stars shone and water ran down hill, Korea should be faithful to Japan. This achievement of the dauntless empress gave rise to the proud boast of the Japanese, "The arms of Japan shine beyond the seas." But the most important fruit of her victory was the introduction of Buddhism from Korea, as well as Asiatic art, science, medicine and literature. Jingu, however, was never actually proclaimed head of the empire. The first female ruler was Suiko, and since her time eight empresses have governed Japan, some of them with great wisdom.—London Chronicle.

Highland Mary

A GOOD INVESTMENT, NOT A GAMBLE.

Forty-nine men out of every fifty who make a practice of buying and selling speculative stocks lose their money. The man who watches the stock market quotations from day to day, and buys when he thinks they are going to advance, and sells when he thinks they are about to go down, is simply gambling with his money. He may win once in a while, but will oftener lose, and eventually become penniless, with no established or settled income.

Don't gamble. Don't try to get rich in a day. If you would create an income that would be permanent, so that some day you may take life easier, be an investor. Invest your money, do not gamble it away. Place your money in something good, that is sure to bring you an income. The shares of the Highland Mary Gold Mines of Larder Lake are this kind of an investment. It is an investment that will bring you an income. Buy the shares now at 10c per share, before the big advance that is sure to take place. Buy the shares now and keep them, and don't think of parting with them. Some day they will be worth many times what you can buy them for now, and that day is not so very far away. Its worth value will not be fictitious either, but will be based upon actual earning and dividends therefrom. We firmly believe that the dividends on each and every share of the Highland Mary will within one year equal or exceed the price it can be bought for to-day. We firmly believe that within five years the yearly dividends on Highland Mary will equal or exceed $1.00 per share.

This is the kind of an investment we feel justified in advising our friends and clients to invest their money in. The Highland Mary properties have been thoroughly examined and tested by our engineers and assayers. We feel that through our extreme caution in this respect the element of chance, that usually enters into mining propositions, has been practically eliminated. The Larder Lake gold fields are proving the greatest the world has ever known. This is being demonstrated from day to day to a certainty.

We want to induce our friends and clients to make a good, profitable investment, one that will bring them an income for the balance of their lives; an income that will amount to something, that will do some good; an income that will each year exceed the total amount of the investment; an income that will be your good friend in time of need; an income that will stand by you through sickness and adversity. An investment of this kind are the shares of the Highland Mary Gold Mines, now selling at 10c per share. We feel certain that an investment in these shares can be relied upon to do all this, and it will do it just as soon as the stamp mills can be established and the mine placed in proper working order. Some may be impressed with the idea that the shares of Highland Mary are a gamble or a speculation, but we say to all who think this, in all seriousness, that it is not. We say that it is a legitimate, honest and safe investment. A better, safer or more profitable one was never offered. It is no more of a gamble or speculation than the new dry goods store or shoe store to be established by a good business man, or the new bank to be established by tried financiers. You probably will ask, How is this? We say to you, a business man or financier will look the ground over, make calculations and figure out almost to a certainty whether the new business or bank to be established will pay. We say, further, that Law & Co., Limited, use this same caution in their business. We have looked over the ground. We know the mining business thoroughly, and we can see no possible chance of loss in the shares of the Higland Mary.

We are in a position to look ahead with some degree of certainty and figure it out. We are not making miscalculations. There is no more element of chance in purchasing the shares of the Highland Mary than there is in any legitimate business undertaking.

From our reports and examinations we figure out that there are thousands and thousands of tons of ore available for the stamp mills, and that when these thousands of tons have been milled there will have been developed many thousands of tons more. We figure that no stockholder of the Highland Mary will live long enough to see the ore exhausted.

There has never been a gold mine that did not have to make a start. It had to have a beginning. The greatest gold mines of the world had to take out the first shovel of dirt, or fire the first blast, and those who made the largest percentage of money and obtained the largest incomes were those who went in at the beginning, bought shares at the first issue price, put them away and kept them. Highland Mary is just starting; it is going to be a great mine; investors are going to get rich from shares of this Company.

The property consists of thirty gold claims of forty acres each, amounting to 1,200 acres. There are many veins and thousands of tons of ore available for treatment. Those who buy Highland Mary shares now at 10 cents and keep them will never regret it. They will secure

A NEVER-FAILING INCOME

The ore veins at Larder Lake assay all the way from $5.00 to $20,000 to the ton of ore—the most marvelous results known of any mining camp in the world. We figure out that the ore will run $50.00 to the ton right through, but, for an example as to future earnings, and to figure safely, we will say that the ore will average $25.00 to the ton. Now, the capacity of a five-stamp mill is about fifteen tons of ore per day, but for safe figuring we will place it at ten tons per day. Ten tons of ore at $25.00 per ton per day will amount to $250.00 per day. It will cost to operate a five-stamp mill, including cost of mining the ore, about $25.00 per day, which will leave at least $225.00 per day profit for each five-stamp mill installed. One mill alone for one month, 26 working days, will make a profit of $5,840, or a trifle over $70,000 for one year. Ten of these mills of the capacity of five stamps will be installed at the earliest possible moment. Ten mills of this capacity when in operation will produce a profit for the company of from $750,000 to $1,000,000 per annum, but the number of mills will eventually be more than ten.

The great Treadwell mines at Juneau, Alaska, now have more than 3,000 stamps in operation. Their ore averages only $2.60 per ton, yet it is one of the most profitable gold mines in the world. They started at one time just as the Highland Mary is starting now. They have grown, and the stockholders have grown rich. Ore can be mined and milled at Larder Lake as cheaply as at Juneau. The ore at Larder Lake averages twenty times the value per ton, and there is more of it to mine than at Juneau. These are facts that should be remembered. Highland Mary will make stockolders rich. Buy now before the big advance that will soon take place. Buy to keep; buy for investment.

Capitalization of Highland Mary, $3,000,000. Par value of shares, $1.00, 1,000,000 shares in the treasury for development purposes.

Lord Rosebery seems to be as distinguished in stock breeding as in politics, literature and horse racing. There was much interest lately in the sale of 44 of his Jersey cows and heifers at Dairy Farm, Mentmore, the highest price being $210, paid by Lord Rothschild.
