Further to the east, between the Meus and the Moselle, the French have recovered the whole of the Forest of Le Pretre, and are much nearer the realization their aim of driving the enemy from his position at St. Mihiel. Elsewhere the lines in the western arena, from th Vosges Mountains to the sea, are changed but little from the previous week. In the eastern theatre, the tide of con bat, which for two weeks had flowed steadily in favor of the Teutonic Allies, was turned and is now beginning again to flo in favor of the Russians. In the Baltic Provinces the Germans hold Libau, but their advance eastward has been checked The Russians have retired somewhat in Russian Poland, and in western Galicia have had to straighten their lines to th east of Tarnow, which is now held by the Teutons; but in the south-east of Galicia they have been more successful, and are driving the Austro-German forces back. Only brief and contradictory reports are available of the fighting in the whole of this eastern field, but Petrograd seems to

The new cabinet is as part of the Straits is cleared of mines and follows: the forts on both sides, to the Narrows, are silenced. In the Naval operations on May 13 the British battleship Goliath was torpedoed and sunk, with a loss of over 500 men. A submarine made the entire passage of the Straits and entered the Sea of Marmora, where it torpedoed and sank two Turkish gunboats and a transport. The town of Minos has been destroyed by shell fire of the Allies. The advance Provincial Secretary—Valentine Winkof the Allies on the Peninsula is slowly reaching effect. The turn of German East Africa is now to come. And a good thing it will be, for natives and whites alike, when the last vestige of German rule disappears from the Continent of Africa. However good Germans have individually as colonists as a coloniment Committee appointed to investigate inution of the activities of the submarine "blockade" of British ports, consequent, perhaps, on the horrors of the Lusifania crime.

The outstanding feature of the week has been the note of the American Government, written by President Wilson and signed by Secretary of State Bryan, addressed to the German Government in the matter of the loss of American limited and the mass of the Lusifania and other ships sunk by German submarines. The note is all that it should have been and was expected to be—dignified in tone; clear and explicit, and leaving the way open to the German Government to satisfy the American nation without involving the two countries in war. That the Germans will cease from, or abate in any degree, the inhuman methods they have introduced of believed. Their brutality is ingrained in the third rature, and the words "chivalry" and "humanity" may as well be omitted from their wocabulary.

Another important feature of the week was the publication of the report of Lord Bryce's committee to investigate the alleged German outrages in Belgium, The report is conclusive and damning. It is to be translated into the various European and Assiatic languages, and to be circulated the throughout the world. The whole world will then know what a hideous monster Prussian militarism really is. The monster must be destroyed for ever.

The anti-German riots in Great Britain ave subsided, but drastic measures have been taken either to deport or to isolate and intern all enemy aliens in the country.

Throughout the Empire, but more especially in South Africa, where the provocation has been greatest, violent feel-ings have been displayed against Germany, and much property of Germans destroyed. This is undignified, and worse than useless; but the Lusitania atrocity has aroused the indignation of people throughout the world as has no other crime since Cain slew his brother. of the Allies on the Peninsula is slowly proceeding, but the fighting has been severe, and the losses on both sides great. Outside of the fighting in Europe, that in German South-West Africa has attracted most attention in the past week. Gen. Botha has at last reached and taken possession of Windhoek, the capital of the Colony; and as the railways are now practically all in the hands of the Union forces, the subjugation of the whole Colony may now be regarded as nearly complete. The importance of this campaign is not easy to gauge, but it will have a farreaching effect. Africa. However good Germans have been, individually, as colonists, as a colonial governing power the German nation has not been a success. The present war has made manifest the real reason for this—the domination of everything by the State, and the complete subjugation of individuality to police and military regulations and control.

In the past week there has been a diminution of the activities of the submarine "blockade" of British ports, consequent, perhaps, on the horrors of the Lusitania of the German individuality to the commercial houses, and the mass of evidence now submitted the report of the committee to Premier Asquith. The document is considered as probably the most severe arraignment thus far made of the German military aweep across Belgium, mainly because of the position of Viscount Bryce as a historian, and also because of the care with which the investigation was made, the great number of witnesses whose testimony was examined, and the mass of evidence now submitted the result of an injury received about a year ago. He was the youngest son of the late Sentor and Mrs. A. H. Gillmor. Senator Dan Gillmor of this town is a brother; another brother, Dr. Henry, living in St. Martin's, and a sister, Mrs. Dr. Dick, survive. To strike terror into the hearts of her opponents she is deliberately reverting to the methods of barbaric ages, and she is making war upon a defenceless population whenever opportunity arises, upon women and children, hoping thereby to induce the attacked nations to surrender and ask for peace.

German submarines have, by order of their Government, sunk peaceful merchant vessels without regard to the lives of those on board, and prisoners in Germany, especially English prisoners, have apparently been deliberately ill-treated and badly fed. Not unnaturally a demand for retaliation has arisen. The official German handbook on the customs of war issued by the German General Staff in 1902, distinctly states that a nation can be forced to observe the laws and customs of war only by retaliation.

Although a soldier is supposed to obey his officer unquestioningly, the English soldier who kills by order of the levels of the obeyed by the English soldier. An English soldier who kills by order of this configuration in the lates of the obeyed by the English soldier. An English soldier to two possibly conflicting authorities is obviously subversive of discipline, for it makes the soldier is undoed of discipline, for it makes the soldier a under of discipline, for it makes the soldier is undoed of discipline, for it makes the soldier is undoed of discipline, for it makes the soldier as undoed of discipline, for it makes the soldier is undoed of the sold and the lates of the soldier as undoed the force and the law. At lates the soldier is defined to the soldier as the soldier as undoed to the soldier as undoed to the soldier as the soldier has two masters, his officer and the laws of the soldier has two masters, his officer as the soldier has two masters, his officer as the soldier has two masters, his officer as the laws and customs of war only by retaliation.

Inat obedience to two possibly conflicting authorities is obviously subversive of discipline, for it makes the soldier a judge as to whether he should obey or not. German discipline, on the other hand, makes obedience absolute, considers the soldier merely as a passive instrument executing a higher will, and makes the cofficer soldy responsible for the arbitage.

The soldier merely are a passive instrument executing a higher will, and makes the cofficer soldy responsible for the arbitage.

This feeling grows with passing time and its Allies are facing a crisis to-day the like of which is accentuated by the fact that I am not the lamber of the law for the arbitage of the law for the model of the soldier merely as a passive instrument executing a higher will, and makes the configuration of the model of soldier merely as a passive instrument executing a higher will, and makes the officer solely responsible for the soldier's action. That is the conception of discipline and responsibility held by our enemies. A German soldier or sailor who, at the orders of his officers, murders or steals has only done his duty. A soldier or sailor who refuses to murder or steal when ordered to do so is liable to be shot without trial for disobedience in face of the enemy.

The British and the German conceptions of the soldier's duty are thus diametric.

Only he who has given the words. or wrong. Only he who has given the order is responsible. To every German, soldier or civilian, it is inconceivable that men whose only duty consists in obeying deny the truth of the statement. On the given by the Emperor to Admiral von Tirpitz and by the Admiral to the officers, nobody, according to the German conception of right and wrong, is responsible except the Emperor himself. Surely no Englishman can expect that German officers and soldiers should be acquainted with the English conception of right and wrong, and regulate their conduct by

The nations attacked by Germany must suffer for the present under her criminal methods. Soldiers may not only die for their country. In the long run Germany's crimes will recoil upon the perpetrators. The logic of history will punish Germany more severely than can the Governments of the Allies. If the Allied Governments continue to fight a clean fight, it will redound to their credit for generations and generations. Twenty, fifty, or a hundred years hence the nations will have forgotten who began the war. Contradictory accounts will be published. If German crimes are answered with similar crimes perpetrated in the naine of retaliation by the Allies, future generations will say that it is doubtful who began the war, and that during the war both sides behaved equally badly. Possibly, if that state of affairs should arise, Germany might in the future create sympathy among other nations and obtain allies for a war of revenge. If, on the other hand, Germany stands branded as a nation which has conducted a criminal war with criminal means, whereas the Allies have fought an honourable fight, a war of revenge on the part of Germany need not revenge and the subject, some of you may have the adiceap with which a young nan can and burden himself. criminal means, whereas the Allies have fought an honourable fight, a war of revenge on the part of Germany need not much be feared, for that country would remain isolated. Future generations may suffer not only for the crimes committed by one of the belligerents, but also for the mistakes of other belligerents made in the name of retaliation.

© Once more, retaliation is not a game that two can play at if England is one of the two. It is a game at which we are sure to be beaten. We should, indeed, start beaten, and badly beaten. We must, of course, not show fear of German retallation, but keep calmly on our way, content to do right while others do wrong. One thing, however, we must avoid, and that is giving Germany any more excuses for repfleals such as Mr. Churchill gave them by his order in regard to the submarine crews. No doubt he only meant to mark his disgust at German brutality, and no doubt also no submarine prisoners has provided the Germans with an excuse foot all the laws of God and of man, in ternational law, the law between nation and nation, and, what is worse, the unwritten law of humanity, She has revorted to methods of warfare which were used in the dark ages, when civilization and humanity were words without meaning.
