Select Poetry.

The Ashes upon the Hearth.

I went to the old time cottage Where I dwelt in childhood days; I looked through the dear old window That seemed to return my gaze; I sought for some sweet reminder To bear from my place of birth, But ah! there remained no token But the ashes upon the hearth.

The chambers were bare and empty, And the echoes seemed to say: "Oh! where is the busy household, Oh! why do the children stay? A branch of the veteran oak tree, That now was a century old, Still outspoke my little window That mirrored the sunset's gold.

I wandered to "mother's chamber," To the room where father wrote. No sound broke the mournful stillness, But the chimney swallow's note. Then again I sought the kitchen, Once a place of joy and mirth, And I sought the past before me Like the ashes upon the hearth.

How often we merry youngsters, For our chests sweet and brown, Made a bed in the hot "wood ashes," With the live coals dropping down, While the girls pulled molasses candy, And tossed it with glee on high, And the golden pippins rosted In an earthen pan near by!

Since those happy days of childhood It is fifty years or more, And the "boys and girls" have scattered To many a distant shore, While some dear heads were folded And sheltered by Mother Earth, As they dropped away from the spirit Like the ashes upon the hearth.

Interesting Story.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER.

"I'm not good for much, am I, mother?"

The question was asked playfully, but the young man at the breakfast-table, from which a red-armed girl was carrying the dishes, threw down his paper, and springing up, said, with a flushed face,—

"No, Dick, you're not good for anything!"

"Come now! I was hurried for response, and Mrs. Barnes hurried forth nervously, for it seemed as if the two brothers would fight.

"It's a fact, you are living on us; you are lazy—and you're almost twenty years old," said Tom, the eldest.

"O boys! boys!" protested the woman, holding out her hands. "You never quarrelled in your life. Don't begin now!"

"It's time he heard the truth!" muttered Tom.

"But, mother, haven't I tried?" asked the boy, turning to her, and his voice trembled just a little.

"You know, Tom, that Dick is delicate!" pleaded the woman.

"Yes, and that's been his shield long enough, I should say. He's not too delicate to go to all the merry-makings, and I eat his share, and when he gets a chance in life, he don't know it. I'll never try for him again, never!" and out he went, slamming the door behind him.

"I don't see what's got into Tom!" said the widow, distressfully. "I never knew him to act so before."

"Oh, it's been in him some time," muttered Dick, hoarsely. "Ever since he got acquainted with the Mosses. That's what's the matter."

"Do you really mean it, Dick?"

"Of course I do. He likes Miss Anne, and he wants to marry and settle down. I'm in the way. I wish father had lived, or I had died with him."

"Dick, darling, don't talk so!"

"I say I do! Everything was going on just right. I liked my studies and meant to make a man, though in a different way from Tom. He likes hard work, and can do it. I hate everything but books, study and law. I don't see why Tom should be so hard on me. I'm trying my best. Lawyer Bates says that in less than two years I can make my own way."

"My poor, dear boy! You are doing your best, I know you are."

"Yes, you think so; you feel so; I'm sure of your sympathy, but you see, Tom wants me to be making money. He begs me to get the food I eat, and thinks I am shirking, and trying to get along without work. He never said so before, but I have seen it of late. I can read it in the way he looks at me."

"My dear boy! try not to mind it!" said the widow, distressfully.

"I have tried; laughed at his hints, and swallowed my chagrin. But I can't do it any longer: my self-respect is hurt. All is, I must throw up my place with Lawyer Bates, and go out to Oregon and buckle down to hard work."

"Dick, I never will consent to it!" said his mother, growing pale. "You, with your delicate constitution, to go away so far from home—from me, when you have always needed to be watched over and cared for!" Try not to mind Tom!"

"I have done so, mother, but I can't pretend to try any longer. Tom wants to be married—to the silliest girl in the family, too, because she has a pretty face and dresses so stylishly. I suppose he's not to blame; he's twenty-five years old, and doing a fair business. It's only I am in the way. He has to help me to clothes, you know, and of course my board costs something. I might as well say yes. The journey will do me good, maybe, and there's a chance to make money. It's a new place, you know."

The conference closed, and Dick went to the office, leaving his mother almost broken-hearted. It was such a change from the tender care of her husband, to dependence upon the strong, self-willed man whose word had begun to be law. And it was embarrassing to feel that before long she would only be second in his heart and home. For he called the home his, though his mother had bought it with her own money years before, and furnished it herself. But now she was left so impoverished that she had no means to pay the taxes, and her health was poor.

Tom would only wait! But no; Tom believed that Dick was lazy; that his studying law was but a farce; that he should be no more exempt from hard labor than himself. And he had just had such a splendid situation offered for him, that it angered him beyond measure when Dick declined, "gentle Dick," as he sneeringly called him. Besides, he did wish to marry, but would not while he fancied Dick an encumbrance.

That night the brothers met for a few moments; the mother was not in the room.

"Have you written your friend in Oregon?" asked Dick, and something in his handsome, intellectual face rebuked his elder brother as he answered,—

"No; I shall write him to-night."

"Tell him I accept," said Dick, shortly, turned on his heel and left the room.

"Come to his senses at last," said Tom, reflectively, yet with certain uneasy twinges, as he remembered the almost unnatural brilliancy of the dark, pathetic eyes, so like his father's. "Pshaw! it will do the fellow good to knock around the world a little. He has been tied quite too long to the law—there are too many lawyers already. He will thank me before the year is out, and mother, too."

Dick broached the idea to his friend Lawyer Bates, who tried all in his power to dissuade him.

"You've the making of an excellent lawyer in you," he said, "and you are getting along wonderfully. If you will go off so far, why don't you wait till you get your diploma? That's the business you were made for."

But all the talk did no good, and inwardly calling him a fool, the man turned to the papers before him. How could Dick tell him that he was an unwelcome guest in his mother's house?

"Die in a year," the lawyer muttered afterwards, when somebody spoke to him about it. "The boy isn't made for hard work, and he'll find it out."

The year passed. Tom had been six months married, and had brought his pretty, helpless wife to his home, hired extra servants, and seemed as happy as a lord. He did not notice the increasing pallor of his mother's face, the heart-broken look that told how she missed thoughtless, warm-hearted, loving Dick.

He had always made such a pet of his little gentle mother, and now she felt as if she were almost forgotten. Her son and his wife were kind to her—but oh, she wanted the clasp of loving hands about her neck, and the kiss of a son, sometimes. Her only solace was the reception of the letters that came at first every week—but of late there had been great gaps between. He laughed in his letters, but sobbed as he folded them; she never should know—never.

He had enjoyed the novelty of the trip, and the new associations among which he was thrown, for a time. The work which he was expected to do was entirely beyond his strength, and the people with whom he was thrown in contact were rough and uneducated. He had been accustomed to delegate and nourishing food; that which he tried to eat was coarse, badly prepared and unwholesome. Day after day he labored from early morning till late at night, leaving for his place of judgment so exhausted that the best meal would have been distasteful. As the weakness increased, he fought bravely against it, and yet the longing for home—the almost agonized desire to look upon his mother's face once more added to his physical sufferings.

"That boy looks like a ghost," said some one to his employer.

"Yes; not fit for the business," was his reply, "but the poor fellow is trying hard."

"O mother! mother! I am coming home. I must come home," he wrote, at the conclusion of the year.

"I thought so," said practical Tom, with a clouded brow, when his mother read him the letter, her voice trembling. "You made a baby of him for all time—he'll never be a man!"

Little he thought how prophetic were his words! The next letter said,—

"Expect me by the third of next month at latest." The next—written in a strange hand,—

"DEAR MAMAM—I am sorry to write you bad news. Your son was getting ready to start for home, when he broke down. He was never strong enough for the work, and I told him so, months ago, but he would not give up. There was good metal in him—but I think he mourned too much for his home and mother. Just before he died, he said, 'If I could only see my mother for one moment, I could die happy!'"

Why need we follow the letter? Tom broke down, for once, when the news forced itself upon him. The mother went rapidly to the grave, and to this day there is a look in Tom's face, which neither care nor bodily suffering can drive—only consciousness that having been his brother's keeper, he failed in both duty and affection, and for the rest of his life must pay the penalty.

CONFIDANTS.

What a blessing is a confidant! A true friend to whom we can speak our minds, tell our secrets, and fearlessly lay bare the innermost feelings of our hearts; one of whose sympathy we are assured, on whose discretion we can rely, and whose advice we can safely follow.

The best confidant or confidante of all is our father, mother, sister, brother or other relation. Alas! we too often prefer to confide in strangers, and many a parent's heart aches on that account.

Many parents, however, have only themselves to blame for this. Not showing interest in their young children's affairs, and not sympathizing or respecting their childish confidences, they cause them to become shy and reserved, and the habit once formed remains an impassible barrier between them in after life.

There are confidants and confidants. The first paragraph describes the ideal kind, which is rare. A confidant of this kind is generally preferred by the confider (if arrived at years of discretion) to be of the opposite sex. That is to say, a young man usually prefers "a rare and radiant maiden" as a confidante, and, of course, vice versa. Failing these, choose one of their own sex.

Some confidants there are to whom you can confide most things, but other things you shrink from revealing; you know instinctively that you would receive no sympathy if you did so. In such cases perhaps it is better to have several confidants, each of whom will sympathize with one or more particular things. Thus you might have different confidants for literature, art, music, science, mirth, sentiment, etc. But these only in the absence of the ideal confidant; though, so to say, it would be rather hard on him or her.

There are some to whom you only confide once, if you are wise; not at all if you are wiser. These are the talkative ones who cannot keep a secret.

Others are treacherous; apparently sympathizing, they use your confidence to gain their own ends. Beware of them! Always be cautious as you possibly can in choosing confidants. Some may be unsympathetic and apt to make fun of your confidence. Yet such may possess good hearts and are frequently more valuable friends than those who are more complaisant. Some confidants listen to you out of pure good nature; they patiently submit to be bored. If you find them out, be merciful—a good-natured friend is not to be lightly lost.

The ideal confidant is often "every one's confidant;" everyone finds it out and takes advantage of it. He or she—it is generally a woman—is pitted by everyone who is not "everyone's confidant," but she probably likes it. It may be wearisome occasionally, but it is pleasant to be universally trusted.

The Book of God.

The bible is the best book in the world.—John Adams.

There is a book worth all other books which were ever printed.—Patrick Henry.

The bible furnishes the only fitting vehicle to express the thoughts that overwhelm us when contemplating the stellar universe.—O. M. Mitchell.

The grand old book of God still stands, and this old earth, the more its leaves are turned over and pondered the more it will sustain and illustrate the sacred work.—Prof. Dana.

All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming more and more strongly the truths contained in the sacred scriptures.—Sir John Herschel.

In my investigation of natural science, I have always found that whenever I can meet anything in the bible on my subjects, it always affords me a firm platform on which to stand.—Lieut. Maury.

So great is my veneration for the bible that the earlier my children begin to read it the more confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, and respectable members of society.—John Q. Adams.

It is impossible to govern the world without God. He must be worse than an infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligation.—George Washington.

If the God of love is most appropriately worshipped in the temple of religion, the God of nature may be equally honored in the temple of science. Even from its lofty minarets the philosopher may summon the faithful to prayers, and the priest and sage exchange altars without compromise of faith or knowledge.—Sir David Brewster.

The Decay of Profanity.

From having been the loudest and coarsest of swearers, English gentlemen have become the most intolerant of profane expressions, and even the mildest expletives are accounted by them as bad taste. Soldiers and sailors formerly looked upon swearing as a professional necessity, and perhaps still do so; but probably a man like Wolsey shares the feeling of other English gentlemen with respect to profanity, and we know that Grant went through all the excitement of the civil war without an oath, though on both sides the air was often blue with cursing. But, as we have said, most men swear habitually or occasionally. It seems to give them relief, or they imagine that it does, and they know no other way of strengthening an assertion than by using an oath. In general, this swearing is in good nature, or, at most, expresses only momentary vexation, and often the profanity is only indulged in as a banter, for instance, by the drivers in the streets, who will curse each other up and down, and still have no hard feelings. They simply swear for fun and to vary the monotony of existence. This applies only to this country though. In England one can mount upon a bus at the Kensington Museum, and drive through the great and crowded thoroughfares of London, all the way to the bank of England, and not an oath nor an expletive will be heard.

THE MOUTH OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

At last we were in the storied and romantic Pilot Town, the ancient city of pirates; among a people who have no law or lawyers, no priest or preachers, no policemen or magistrates. The builders and inhabitants of this town have long been called pirates. There are writers, and politicians, too, with vivid gifts of imagination, who insist that these strange people of these are the actual successors and descendants of Lafitte, the pirate, whom Gen. Jackson employed to defend New Orleans against the British. This is entirely untrue. Here, in the city that elsewhere would have at least a half a score of policemen, three magistrates, as many lawyers, and other like exorcism of civilization, nothing of that sort was ever heard of.

All the women, all the children—some of them black, but quite as many white and towheaded—came and sat in the hall to hear a Congressman speak, to see a man who had seen the city of Washington—the first and the last, perhaps, they have seen, or will see again. They had hung up extra lanterns about the doors of this hall; they had set on the wall, in wild Southern flowers from Congress, for their Creole member of these parts this legend.

"CARLETON HUNT, OUR FRIEND."

And how they listened, and how they leaned to look and hear and try to learn something! Ah! the hunger and thirst for something better in their desolate lives, as these women with their babies leaned and listened and tried to learn something. I tell you it was pitiful. And I went to the little ward, under the stars, and looked away, over the vast levels of the sea, toward where the Acadians of sweet Evangeline had landed, and I loved these people here, these pirates of Pilot Town who are now only the real Acadians, loved them and wanted to stay and live with them always. Far away yonder, under the stars that almost touch the edge of the Mexican seas, I could point out the spot where the Acadians settled down and melted into the civilization that came to envelop them. But here the sea held back all approach. No rich lands here in the orange mouth of the mighty river for men to struggle for; this new Acadia, these new Acadians will survive a long time.—(Joaquin Miller, in the Independent.)

HER GRAMMAR.

It is a pathetic sight to watch the meanderings of the childish mind through the intricacies of the English grammar. Little Kate has been repeatedly reproved for doing violence to the moods and tenses of the verb "to be." She would say "I be" instead of "I am;" and for a time it seemed as if no one could prevent it. Finally Aunt Kate made a rule not to answer an incorrect question, but to wait until it was corrected.

One day the two sat together, Aunt Kate busy with embroidery and little Kate with her dolls. Presently doll society became tedious, and the child's attention was attracted to the embroidery frame.

"Aunt Kate," said she, "please tell me what that is going to be."

"But Aunt Kate was counting, and did not answer. Fatal word, ba. It was her old enemy, and to it alone could the child ascribe the silence that followed.

"Aunt Kate," she persisted, with an honest attempt to correct her mistake, please tell me what this is going to am."

"Still Auntie sat silently counting, though her lips curled with amusement. Jane sighed, but made another patient effort.

"Will you please tell me what that is going to are?"

Aunt Kate counted on, perhaps by this time actuated by a wicked desire to know what would come next. The little girl gathered her energies for one last and great effort.

"Aunt Kate, what am that going to are?"

There is as much wisdom in bearing other people's defects as in being sensible of their good qualities; and we should make the follies of others rather a warning and an instruction to ourselves than a subject of mirth and mockery of those who commit them.

Let him who neglects to raise the fault on fear lest when he falls, no one stretch out his hand to save him.

THE ACADIAN

Calendar for August. Table with columns for days of the week and numbers 1-31.

THE ACADIAN. WOLFVILLE, N. S., AUGUST 21, 1885. ENLARGEMENT.

It is now nearly a year since we enlarged our paper. At that time we promised to again enlarge as soon as we could see our way clear to do so...

But, though grown larger in size, we still intend to raise our first banner and to work under it so long as our strength permits us. Honest, Independent, Fearless we started and so we shall continue.

In short, we started with the firm determination to run a local paper and we intend to carry out that determination. Just what new features will be introduced we cannot say as yet...

Not biased by either political or business connections, we are at perfect liberty to take any view we wish on any subject and our paper shall ever endeavor to reflect the opinions of the people as a whole.

your wife's relations. Anyway send the dollar and someone will be certain to get the value of it before the year expires.

A HOME IN THE COUNTRY.

"Good morning! Don't you want to take a drive and spend a week in the country?" shouted a friend the other morning. "That was just what I wanted."

Where my friend took me was to his home, where his father and his mother, brothers and sisters live; where he lived when he was not big enough to work, and where he loves to spend his holidays, and hastens to when he is sick.

As a family they were all happy, and contented with their lot, with one another and the whole world. They all had to work, and they all had their leisure. They ate what they raised, so they knew what they ate.

Farming is a grand occupation, and a farmer should be a grand and intelligent man. He should go some to mind instead of all to muscle.

The Montreal Witness says, General Middleton has learned in the same school as General Wolsley, the lesson that troops are better in every way under conditions of total abstinence from strong drink.

Dr. Adlington, M. D., Edinburg, says: "I have often prescribed EGAR'S PROPHYLACTIC in Consumption and other wasting diseases. It has been invariably beneficial in the cases under my observation."

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS. Please write on one side of the paper only. Give full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

Before the 1st day of March, in each year, an alphabetical list of the qualified electors of each polling district, prepared from the Assessment roll, is posted up in three of the most public places in each ward.

Not being a candidate for the "Holy Office" or any other, I shall not confer the glorious crown of martyrdom on my innocent victim by misrepresenting any of his eloquent remarks.

GENTLEMEN.—In looking over your paper of yesterday, I notice in a correspondence, signed Yum Yum, a whole publication of misrepresentation.

[We must decidedly refuse to publish any more correspondence on this subject.—Ed.]

THE OTHER SIDE.

To the Editors of the ACADIAN.

SIR,—An article recently published in your columns under the heading, "Convincing Evidence of the Superiority of the Domestic," contains so many statements calculated to mislead the ordinary reader that I must ask you as a favor to grant me a small space in which to give your readers the other side of the subject.

As to the alleged superiority claimed for the Domestic, allow me to say that it exists only in the imagination of the writer of that article and in that of a few agents and dealers who still adhere to the old-fashioned system of doing business, to which I have referred.

RACE.—There is to be a trotting race for $250 a side on the Kentville Driving park on September 10th, between Thomas Doran's "Harry Morgan" and Prof. Frasier's "General Sherman, Jr."

The Gay Family performed in Music Hall last Friday evening to a fair audience, which would be undoubtedly much larger if they should visit Wolfville again. The performance was good and no portion of it could offend the taste of anyone. We hope to see them in Wolfville again.

If you wish to color wool, cotton, silk or feathers, use the new Electric Dyes, Strongest and Best in the world. 10 cents at all dealers.

RUNAWAY.—Quite an exciting runaway occurred on Tuesday. Mr Chas. Bishop's meat wagon was standing in front of a house on Water St. when the horse took fright, and running up Water St., turned the corner onto Earl St. so sharply as to almost demolish the wagon. He then started up Main St. and was soon stopped.

CROWN PICTURES.—Lately received at Rockwell & Co's, direct from the manufacturer's, a large lot of moulding expressly for framing the Crown Pictures. As this moulding has been prepared at bottom prices, we are now prepared to frame these pictures at over prices than have ever been quoted before.

It is our sad duty to record the sudden death of our esteemed friend and fellow townsman, Mr Anderson Martin, who died at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, on Thursday. He was suffering of an abdominal tumor and had gone to Boston for surgical aid, but did not live to have the operation performed. His remains were brought home and interred at the Simson Cemetery, in Gasperau, Wednesday afternoon. An immense crowd assembled at the house, where the Rev. John Williams preached the funeral sermon. After the sermon St. George's Lodge, No. 20, R. N. S., F. & A. M., took charge of the services and buried Mr Martin with Masonic honors. Anderson Martin was a general favorite with all who knew him, and the immense crowd who attended the funeral testified to his popularity. He always had a kind word and a cherry smile for everyone, and his face will be missed for a long time throughout Horton and Cornwallis. He was 32 years of age.

Messrs Maclearn and Bonness, the customs detectives who caused so much excitement in this County last year, visited Bear River on Wednesday last, and the brig, Delma C. was seized for infraction of the customs laws.

Just received at Rockwell's, a fine lot of Commercial and Fancy Stationery, which will be sold extremely low.

The public schools are expected to re-open on Monday next. The vacation has been extended some time over the usual time on account of repairs on the schoolhouse of which we expect to give a more extended account next week.

Burpee Witter has just opened a large variety of Hoop Skirts, Bustles and Dress Improvers in all the newest styles.

PERSONAL.—Dr Bars and Mr. E. S. Crawley left on Monday for a short pleasure trip through the Province. They drive their own team, and go first to Halifax, then down the southern shore and follow the coast around home. They expect the trip will take about a week, and will without doubt spend a pleasant time. Mr E. W. Sawyer has charge of Mr Crawley's office in his absence.

THE ACADIAN will be sent to any part of Canada or the United States for $1.00 in advance. We make no extra charge for United States subscriptions when paid in advance.

We have received from the managers a bill advertising a grand excursion on the 22d (to-morrow) from Kentville, Wolfville, Hantsport, and other stations, to Walton, by the str. Hawatha. It gives promise of being a very enjoyable time and no doubt many will avail themselves of the opportunity of spending a day on the Basin of Minas and enjoying the beautiful scenery of the Avon river. The fare from Kentville, Port Williams and Wolfville is $1.25; Grand Pre, Horton Landing and Avonport, $1.00; Hantsport, 75c.

At a regular meeting of Acadia Lodge, I. O. G. T., it was resolved that a copy of the following be sent to Prof. and Mrs. Jones, and also that it be published in the ACADIAN.

MR and MRS R. V. JONES.—RESPECTED AND LOVING FRIENDS.—Whereas, your beloved son, Aubrey, has suddenly been removed from amongst us by the hand of Death, we, in behalf and in the name of the members of Acadia Lodge, I. O. G. T., tender to you and the members of your family our heartfelt sympathies and tenderest expressions of sorrow in this sad bereavement.

He was a valued member of our Lodge, prompt in the discharge of his duties, courteous and gentle to all. We shall miss his presence in our gatherings, but we trust that the God who doeth all things well and whom you serve, will vouchsafe to you and yours, the consolation which He only can impart, and bind up and heal the wound as none other can do, and that in the days to come you may be enabled to see His hand in this sore affliction and be led to say with His servant of old, "The Lord gave, and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

On behalf of the Lodge. Committee: W. C. Archibald, Thomas Wallace, J. L. Bishop.

MARTIN.—At the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, on Thursday, August 13th, Anderson Martin, of Wolfville, aged 32 years.

GOSPIR.—At Windsor, on August 15th, Ernest, youngest son of Dr. Chas. J. and Jane S. Gospir, aged 2 years and 3 months.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

—West Virginia has two tin mines in successful operation.

—A U. S. vice consulate will be established at Moncton.

—Missouri, in Montana, sounds the fire alarm by the firing of guns.

—Until 1776 cotton-spinning was performed by the hand spinning-wheel.

—Birmingham, England, has the most extensive button trade of any city in the world.

—Rubinstein, followed in the wake of Rossini, has just composed a sacred opera entitled Moses.

—Chas. Wright, of Wethersfield, Conn., one of the leading botanists of the United States, is dead.

—The entire wool crop of the Puget sound counties amounts this season to 250,000 pounds.

—Abstemious and facetious are said to be the only two words in which the vowels follow one another.

—The Austrians have unearthed at Luxor five large granite statues of Rameses II., one of which is perfect.

—Forty Germans have been expelled from Russia. Many Germans are becoming naturalized to avoid expulsion.

—The most decisive battle in its results of antiquity was Marathon, 490 B. C. It saved Europe from being Orientalized.

—The National, the first journal to announce the appearance of cholera at Marseilles, insists that the number of deaths there from the disease is still much underrated.

—The relaxing power of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is almost miraculous. A gentleman whose leg was bent at the knee and stiff for twenty years had it limbered by its use, and the leg is now as good as the other.

—The business of the little cluster of islands which lie in the Pacific Ocean just off the south west coast of Patagonia is sheep raising and selling, and is nearly all in the hands of one man, Mr. Kerr by name, who is the Governor. He went many years ago as a poor man, and he is now worth more than $5,000,000. The number of sheep on the islands is about 400,000.

—The growth of the cattle industry is wonderful. Twenty years ago a million of dollars would cover the amount invested in cattle ranches in the United States, while now the investment is estimated at a hundred millions. Not only in this country, but abroad, agriculture has been superseded in many places by cattle raising, which is lowering and will continue to lower the price of beef.

—The present population of the city of Buenos Ayres is estimated at 400,000. One of the local newspapers predicts that in a few years it will be the New York of the Southern Hemisphere. Emigrants are arriving in a steady stream, and if the proportion of the first six months of the year is kept up, their number will be 150,000 before January 1st, 1886. Italians form the great majority of the immigrants.

—Bees in unaccustomed localities, according to H. Muller, are timid, and find honey with difficulty, but rapidly become accustomed to their surroundings. Flowers of subdued colors are selected by bees instead of the more brilliantly colored ones. Blue or violet appears to be most attractive, and bright yellow the least so. Fabres has found that many bees are able to return to their nests when carried to a distance.

—Visitors to Switzerland in the last twenty years have been disappointed to find the glaciers, whose greatness tradition has gloried in, dwindling towards the heads of the valleys, and by their shrinkage uncovering fresh moraines and broad acres of bare rock and gray rubbish not attractive to the general visitor, however interesting to the geologist. Now, however, Science is informed, the shrinkage has come to a halt, and many glaciers seem to have a forward advance again, and are likely to recover the ground lost through a series of warm years.

—The remains of Henry VIII., of England, are interred beneath the stone floor of the late in the choir of St George's chapel, Windsor. Beside him lie the remains of Jane Seymour. King George III, lies in a huge stone sarcophagus, in the crypt beneath the Albert memorial chapel, which forms a part of St. George's and formerly known as Woolsey's chapel.

—The remains of the Duke of Wellington, the hero of Waterloo, are in the crypt of St. Paul's cathedral London. This crypt is immediately beneath the centre of the great dome. By his side are the remains of Lord Nelson, the hero of Trafalgar.

—There was no complete Bible printed in English until 1538, a date much later than the appearance of the first complete Bible in German. The first printed English Bible was that of William Tyndale, the Wickliffe Bible, upon which nearly all later versions have in part depended, having been in manuscript only. The first authorized version in English, that of 1538, was printed in Paris by a printer who then furnished all of the church's books. The King James' translation was founded upon the Bishop's Bible, which from 1568 to 1611, was the one most generally used. King James I, while residing at Hampton court, in 1604, himself drew up the plan to be followed by his translators, stipulating in his own handwriting, in a document which is now preserved in the British Museum, that the forms of speech as we now have them, when the translation was completed, in 1611, he authorized its use by the church.

—Eight new gunboats have been ordered for the Russian navy.

—General Pallona has been named to command the Italian expedition in Soudan.

—Reports from Louisiana show that the rice crop will be the largest ever gathered in that State.

—More than half the entire annual honey crop of the United States is produced in Southern California.

DUBLIN, Aug. 14.—An obnoxious tenant on a farm near Clonkerry was terribly beaten last night by raiders.

—Mrs Helen Hunt Jackson, a well-known authoress, died in San Francisco Wednesday night of cancer of the stomach.

—The New Brunswick normal school opens with 178 student teachers, of whom 21 are French. Of the number 150 are females.

—The traffic receipts of the Canadian Pacific Railway for week ending August 7th, amount to $185,000. Corresponding week last year $135,000. Increase, $50,000.

—The house of the head valuer of the land commission at Kilmarey, Ireland, was fired into on Sunday night. No one was hurt.

—New York has made Grant a great funeral. But when he wanted to be president New York gave a majority of 60,000 against him.

—Only three hundred copies of the report of Giteau's trial were printed by the government, and most of these are in the hands of speculators.

MARSEILLES, August 15.—Doctor Brouardel, of Paris, has stated that the cholera here is due to the filthy habits of the people, and the citizens are indignant.

—There are a great many miracles reported among the thousands of pilgrims who patronize the religious shrines on the St. Lawrence, and is usual during the summer.

—Regarding the question whether railroads in Mexico should be expected from the operation of the decree June 22nd, the Mexican Government has decided that no exception shall be made in favour of railroads.

—The victory of Pydna by which the Macedonian monarchy was overthrown, made Rome mistress of the world. Macedonia was the last civilized nation that disputed Rome's supremacy.

—The evil consequences resulting from impure blood are beyond human calculation, so are the vast sums expended in worthless remedies. Parsons' Purgative Pills make new rich blood, and taken one a night for three months will change the entire system.

—The new paddle-wheel built at Boston for the steamer Empire State, contains 444 pieces of white oak, measuring 5,640 feet and weighing 28,500 pounds. Of bolts, straps and other wrought iron fastenings, there are 5,042 pieces, weighing a total of 11,912 pounds.

—Mr John B. Gough, who lectured Wednesday night in Boston, was taken suddenly ill after the lecture, and his symptoms indicated prostration from the heat. His condition was improved next day. He has not been well this summer, and says his work is nearly over.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The father and brother of Proler, who was murdered in St. Louis, were yesterday shown the insurance yarn told by Maxwell at San Francisco. They declared that the statement was so ridiculous and so easily disposed of that it could only end in convicting Maxwell.

—The policeman in the City of Mexico is usually a strong, fine-looking young man, wearing a military uniform and openly displaying a six-shooter. His belt is in the middle of the street, where he can see and be seen, and instead of yielding the way to vehicles, makes them turn out for him.

THE HOTTEST PLACE IN THE WORLD.—Assab, a very small town on a bay at the southern extremity of the Red Sea, is said to be the hottest place in the world. A hundred miles further east, has a terrible reputation for heat, but Assab is said to be hotter by some three degrees. For four consecutive months thermometer readings at 9 a. m. have averaged over ninety degrees, and during the whole time rarely fell below eighty-eight degrees.

—While William Stead at the age of forty has risen to the editorship of the Pall Mall Gazette, says a Georgia paper, his brother, who possessed equal ability, steps in a nameless grave in the little town of Clayton, Ala. It was in 1872 that Stead made his appearance in Clayton. He was a tramp, but gave evidence of having seen better days. Penniless and friendless, he gladly accepted odd jobs, and soon went to work as a landscape gardener. To Professor Johnson, then a teacher in Clayton, Stead confided the story of his life. It was the old tale of drink and the train of evils following it. Rum had robbed him of family, fortune and friends, and made him a vagabond upon the face of the earth. Again the demon seized him, and this time death put an end to his struggles and temptations. Professor Johnson wrote to the great London editor, informing him of his brother's sad fate, and in due time a reply came acknowledging the relationship and giving the history of a brilliant but uncontrollable man. The propensities editor begged the professor to communicate anything of a pleasant nature he might know about the outbreak, but not to write any unpleasant tidings.

RETROSPECTION.
A slip upon the distant deep,
Just where the water meets the sky,

Deacon Barker's Conversion.

Concluded.
"Or!" responded Hay; "who d'ye
'pose'd go to it? Nobody! Ye can't rent us second-class houses, an' sell us second hand clothin', an' the cheapest cuts o' meat, but when it comes to cheap religion—nobody knows its value better'n we do. We don't want to go into yer pailors on carpets and furniture we don't know how to use, an' we don't expect to be asked into society where our talk an' manners might make some better educated people laugh. But when it comes to religion—God knows nobody needs an' deserves the very best article more'n we do."

sleep. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." There? he could hear that indignant carpenter again, what an unsatisfactory passage that was, to be sure! If it could only read the other way —it didn't seem a bit business-like the way it stood. And yet, as the Deacon questioned himself there in the dark, he was forced to admit that he had a very small balance—even of loans—to his credit in the hand of the Lord. He had never lent to the Lord except in his usual business manner—as small a loan as would be accepted, on an extensive collateral as he could exact. Oh, why did people ever forsake the simple raiment of their forefathers, and robe themselves in garments grievous in price and stumbling blocks in the paths of their fellow-men?

couldn't be—yes, it was—well, he never imagined Hay and his wife were so fine a-looking couple. They came nearer, and the Deacon, forgetting his cane, hobbled hurriedly to church, entered his pew, and left the door wide open. He waited long, it seemed to him, but they did not come. He looked around impatiently, and there, oh, joy and wonder!
—the president of the Pawkin Savings Institution had invited the whole family into his pew! Just then the congregation rose to sing the hymn commencing—
"From all that dwell below the skies Let the Creator's praise arise!"
and the Deacon, in his excitement, distanced the choir, and the organ—and the congregation, and almost brought the entire musical service to a standstill.
