Some of the lights used on cars in this district are, I am told, much too strong, and they are as a rule to be found on cars whose owners never dim them when meeting other cars, or who let them go full blast when driving in town. He stayed at the wheel until near the bottom when on account of the rocky ground it completely turned turtle and rolled over several times. The engine was about twenty feet, throwing him considerably damaged, but McLean escaped with only a few bruises and a severe shaking up as the result of his wild ride.

We heard a man say:

"Let the Telephone Company use the profits they made in prosperous years, if they need money to build more plant."

That's exactly what we have done!

Shareholders of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada have been paid only a moderate return on the par value of their stock—no more!

We have made no distributions of bonus stock, no 'melons' have ever been cut; no distribution ever been made of surplus earnings. Every share of stock has brought us its par value, or better.

For forty years we have consistently used all surplus earnings, all idle reserves to buy more telephone plant. Every dollar has gone back into the business to extend it and serve new subscribers.

What has this policy meant to the public?

The Board of Railway Commissioners at our last rate investigation found that if we had not pursued this honorable course of turning all surplus earnings back into the business we would have had to provide in the year 1918 alone an additional $908,000 out of revenue to pay interest on the plant so secured. This, of course, would have meant higher rates to subscribers.

The fact is, we need millions of new money just because our funds have always been at work, keeping down our bond and stock issues, and ensuring low rates to our subscribers!

Tom Tweedie of Calgary

WHETHER or not the foothills, the mountains, the Western ozone, or the rippling waters of the Rockies have or have not anything to do with it, the fact remains that when R. B. Bennett stepped aside previous to the election of 1917, Calgary sent down to Ottawa another M.P. with a voice and a tongue and an ability to use both that seems typical of the country that opens to the gateway of the Rockies.

In the most select circles, so the Parliamentary Guide informs us, this man is known as Thomas Mitchell March Tweedie, K.C., B.A., LL.D. It's a big name, but "Tom" Tweedie—that's what he's called everywhere except in the Guide—is a big man, mentally, in stature and on the scales, politically and otherwise. His voice, it may be said, is as big as his stature.

"Tom" Tweedie is liberal in everything save politics, in which he is a Conservative of the old school, taking them straight, without adulteration or dilution. Born in Nova Scotia of a Scottish-Canadian father and an Irish-Canadian mother. One day, having attained his youthful ambition to be a lawyer, he heard the call of the prairie West. In the year 1907, a bright May Day morning—such as can happen only in Sunny Southern Alberta—found "Tom" Tweedie transplanted at Calgary, ready to hang out his shingle on busy Eighth avenue.

While a lawyer by calling, "Tom" Tweedie is mostly a politician by profession and avocation. Having come to the front in a country where his party has had a rather chequered if not inglorious career, the Calgary member has come to be looked upon as a general utility man to be made use of at any time a Conservative task has to be performed. One of Tweedie's distinguishing features is that he invariably wears a red tie. Tweedie went into the Western Legislature with Arthur Sifton, and he journeyed to Ottawa with him. In the Alberta Legislature "Tom" Tweedie and Arthur Sifton fought one another in a political way that brought joy to the hearts of the free-mannered spectators. In those days, prior to 1917, Tweedie was about the whole Opposition against the Sifton Government. Then one day, in the face of war, Tweedie forgot he was a Tory, and Sifton didn't care whether he was or not. They each took the hatchet and pitched somewhere up across the North Saskatchewan river, and both decided to take a trip down to Ottawa to help Sir Robert Borden win the war.

The last time I saw "Tom" Tweedie in action in the Western Legislature was during the spring session of 1916. The Sifton party was strong, and the Opposition pretty weak—except for Tweedie. It was in committee one night when the members had under discussion a somewhat notorious piece of legislation called the Cow Bill. Tweedie didn't like that kind of bill. He was a lawyer, among a bunch of doctors and others on his own side who perhaps would not have known a cow from a steer, yet every clause met his fire for a period of two hours, during which man after man on the Government side who had milked the cows and fed the calves for years tried to convince the Calgary man that he didn't know anything about the bovine species.

"What's the matter with this clause?" asked one of the agricultural members as Tweedie attacked a provision that was designed to enable a farmer who wanted to acquire stock to secure some financial assistance for the purpose.

It didn't go far enough, according to the Calgary man, and he proceeded to point out why. "For all the good this will do for the stock industry of this country," declared Tweedie, "you might just as well kill this Cow!"

The speaker didn't get any farther. Some farmer wag in a back bench whispered across: "Why not shoot the bull?" And the debate was practically over.

Having arrived at Ottawa with a reputation that preceded him, Tweedie immediately stepped into the limelight. If Arthur Sifton drops out of the present Government—and he will some of these days owing to failing health—Tweedie will be mentioned for his place. But he will most likely refuse. He is, unless appearances are at fault, bound for the Alberta Supreme Court, where he will fill a seat most acceptably. But when he goes the political life of Western Canada will lose one of its most prominent figures.

Earl Ferrers' Hanging.

One of the earliest known occasions on which the drop was used in hanging was at the execution of Earl Ferrers in 1760. The family of this nobleman had a drop made in the scaffold so that his lordship might not swing off from a cart like a piebald culprit. The new arrangement did not seem to act very well, for the earl did not die for four minutes.

At a preliminary hearing before Magistrate Thomas Kelly in Petrolia Wednesday, Victor Bick was committed to the county jail at Sarnia to await trial before County Judge Albert E. Taylor, on a charge of drawing a revolver and threatening to kill Florent D'Hoey in the township of Enniskillen on August 16th. D'Hoey is the complainant in the case.

Throughout Oxford county the sow thistle, one of the most noxious weed pests of the age, is gaining an alarming foothold in practically all the townships. This weed has a yellow flower, somewhat resembling the dandelion, and the stalk and foliage are something like the Scotch thistle. It grows with alarming rapidity and is most prolific in both seed and root.

Annie McNeil, wife of Alex. McNeil, passed away at her home in Glencoe on Friday last, after a prolonged illness, in her 65th year. Mrs. McNeil was a daughter of the late John Walker, of Metcalfe, and was highly esteemed by a large circle of relatives and friends. Besides her husband she leaves two sons, Gordon McNeil, of Burk's Falls, and Archie Burke of Moss, also one sister, Mrs. D. J. McPhail, of Brooke, and two brothers, Duncan and William, of Metcalfe. The funeral service was held at Burns' church, Moss, on Sunday afternoon.

While driving on the Currie road in Metcalfe township on Sunday evening, ex-Warden John Currie's car was completely wrecked by fire. A short circuit caused a blaze which Mr. Currie extinguished without much trouble, but while doing so the car ran off the road a short distance and tilted slightly. While engaged in repairing some damage caused by the fire a gentleman in a passing automobile volunteered assistance, and lighted a match to look for something in the grass that was lost, when the whole thing went up, vapor from the escaping gasoline causing an explosion.

Rates for Telephone Service

Our rates for exchange service, fixed many years ago, developed many inequalities as between cities at one time equal in population.

In the new schedule filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners we have so grouped cities and towns of approximately equal telephone development as to wipe out these inequalities.

The rates for exchange service proposed for WATFORD under the new schedule are shown in the following table.

Business Service	Proposed Monthly Rate
Individual line	$2.75
2-Party line	2.25
Residence Service
Individual line	$2.00
2-Party line	1.75
Rural party service	1.75

These new rates, we submit, should be considered in the light of the present purchasing power of the dollar. They compare favorably with the increased rates which telephone companies have had to secure from public service bodies all over the continent.

The commodities we have to buy—labor and material—have advanced in no lesser degree than have those staples of every day use, the cost of which has made present living expenses so high.

Word was received in Sarnia Friday from Winnipeg of the death of W. B. Collins, former well-known Lambton county business man and until a year ago vice-president of the Sarnia Street Railway Co., and holding a like position on the executive staff of the old Sarnia Gas and Electric Company.

The late W. B. Collins left the Imperial City about a year and a half ago and according to the Winnipeg despatch his death was hastened by injuries he received in two street car accidents while he was a resident of Sarnia. In the Western city Mr. Collins resided with his daughter, Mrs. B. M. Mathews. He was well known in all parts of Lambton county, having at one time conducted a general store at Wyoming. He was also active in the oil business. The late Mr. Collins died in his 74th year and is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Gertrude McFarland, of Port Huron, and Mrs. B. M. Mathews, of Winnipeg. His widow predeceased him a number of years ago.

WHY BEAUTY FADES

A Condition Due Entirely to Poor Watery Blood.

The girl who returns home from school or from work thoroughly tired out will be fortunate if she escapes a physical breakdown, because this getting tired so easily is probably the first warning symptom of a thinning blood that must not be disregarded if her health is to be preserved.

When the blood becomes thin and impure, the patient becomes pale, haggard and angular. She not only tires out easily but suffers from headaches, palpitation of the heart, dizzy spells and a loss of appetite. This condition will go from bad to worse, if prompt steps are not taken to increase and enrich the blood supply. To make the rich, red blood that brings the glow of health, no other medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If given a fair trial their use brings rosy cheeks, bright eyes, a good appetite and good spirits. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made thousands of pale, languid girls active and strong. On the first sign of poor, thin blood mothers should insist upon their daughters taking a fair course of these pills. They will not only restore health, but will save further doctor bills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PAULA THE POET.

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

(Copyright, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Paula was curled up on the wide couch by the window, scratching oddments of inspired thought.

Beth, most understanding, capable, moodless a chum that an erratic poet ever had, was busy preparing a dainty and nourishing evening meal.

Paula was a girl of brilliant intellect, wonderful in poetic fancy but utterly and completely lacking in the domestic virtues. She could no more have cooked the little meat loaf and biscuits that were scenting the apartment than she could have put out to sea in the R-34. Her taste in clothes was simply a wish to cover herself decently, and her hair was long and natural and wound about her head in the particular way that it happened to go. And she wore ordinary boots, not sandals.

But Paula could write poetry.

Beth possessed all the artistic tastes that go to produce a perfect type of temperamental poet. Her hair was tanned and most becomingly bobbed. Her orange and black smocks were poems of batik art and often while entertaining at tea she wore an adorable Chinese mandarin, from which her little feet peeped out from the wide trousers like captive butterflies. There was always incense burning when Beth was around.

But Beth could cook, make wonderful clothes, entertain with great success, and she was a delightful bit of the feminine world to have about the house.

Beth could not, however, have written a poem any more than she could have put together the parts of their joint flier.

"Here's another man person wanting to meet the poet, Paula," called Beth as the postman left his wares at the door. "He has been reading your verse for two years and is coming from the middle West just in the hope that you will give him the pleasure, etc., etc." Beth finished off with a laugh. "Oh—to have some great Western cowboy consumed with passion for me—just once."

Paula, too, laughed from her nest of brilliant-hued cushions that Beth had made, but her laugh was a trifle impatient.

"I just can't be bothered meeting all these perfectly strange people all the time. You've no idea what a muff I feel listening to their ravings. I have absolutely nothing to say to them, and my poor brain struggles for conversational niceties and I very nearly pass out in the attempt."

"That's what you get for being a genius," said the unfeeling Beth. "The penalty for writing boring, scorching love effusions which you no more feel than I do is to have to let all the strange men in the world come and gaze into your soulless eyes."

"You have all the soul and scorching emotions for both of us," laughed Paula. "If we each had temperament and moods, then, honey, we couldn't live together so happily." She jumped up and just as Beth was about to take her hot biscuits from the oven Paula swept her into an encircling arm. "You're a little duck," she said affectionately, "and I wish just for once you would meet this Western cowboy as Paula."

When Beth had rescued the biscuits she turned questioning eyes on Paula. "If you really mean it—it would be a bit of a lark. I have all the earmarks of a poet—nuttiest of nuts."

So it happened that the two girls exchanged identities, and never were two more alluring personalities transferred for the mere sake of joggling the credulity of a Western cowboy.

And the heart of the Western cowboy, who went by the name of John Rylance, was most assuredly rampant when he found two delightful girls waiting to receive him at tea. The small apartment was curiously homelike. Rylance felt, decidedly at home even before he was directed by Beth toward the great cushioned chair in the sunny window.

Paula had met the big ranchman with her habitual calm exterior, but within her brilliant brain there was an instant desire to write a splendid poem. She effaced herself behind a wall of concentrated thought that left Beth a free hand to weave her net about their visitor.

Rylance realized that his interest was straying from time to time from the animated Beth to the strangely magnetic personality of Paula. It was true he had come from the West to meet the poet who had set his heart to singing by the mere printed words of her "Songs in Exile," yet now as he sat looking into her piquant little face with its frame of bobbed hair he felt more genuinely the lure of the other girl.

And yet this girl who had been introduced as Paula Raymond was the exact duplicate in appearance of the type he had expected. There was the stamp of Greenwich village on her and the undoubted charm of character. That which was lacking, Rylance could not define. He knew that while he talked with her he was constantly longing to probe the mind of the quiet, introspective, apparently disinterested girl whom he had met as Beth Goodwin.

And the real Beth's alert senses caught the vague disappointment in the Westerner's mind. She knew that his soul and the soul of Paula the poet had found something that had made a meeting of the physical beings necessary. It had been the lure of Paula's soul that had dragged him all the long way from the West, and now he was struggling against a vague regret that he had come.

Into the mind of Rylance came a short verse of Paula's that had always more or less puzzled him as to her exact meaning. The words of the verse could be taken as the reader chose, but somehow Rylance felt a keen desire to know the poet's own meaning. He was curious to know if she would enlighten him or whether the poem had entirely drifted from her mind with the flow of others.

"Miss Raymond," he said, looking at the girl whom he supposed to be Paula, "I wonder if you would mind very much giving me your own real interpretation of these four lines?" He took the little worn volume from his pocket and read to one of Paula's own favorite bits. When he had finished he looked expectantly at the girl in the orange smock. Would her eyes kindle with the fire of genius—the inspiration that had flung those words from her pen—or would they remain birdlike and alert?

Rylance drew a laggard breath. The eyes were utterly and completely blank. Then he remembered that undoubtedly poets forgot many of their own inspired words as soon as they were transferred to paper. He was, however, disappointed. More and more he regretted having risked losing the ideals he had formed of Paula Raymond through her verses. He wished he had remained in his dream of her out in the broad West.

Then some strange impelling force dragged his eyes to those of the quiet Beth and, as if she had been flung before him in painted letters, he knew the truth.

Her eyes were alight and her cheeks were soft flames while now from her lips came forth a flood of exquisite words like the rushing torrent of an impatient brook. An explanation, wonderful, deep with thought, and put forth with such brilliant understanding as to make the soul of Rylance glow within him, came from that other soul—the soul that Rylance had loved. Beth had been making frantic efforts to stop the flow of words from Paula's lips. Her alert eyes had caught the knowing expression in the Westerner's quiet smile, and somehow she felt a keen relief.

"You are fortunate in your friendship," Rylance said with a queer look in his eyes, "there are not many chums who could so get under the mind of the other and in fact sense the poetic thought of another so truly and express it so magnificently."

Paula had the added grace to blush and Beth jumped up suddenly, bent on brewing a cup of tea. Having beaten her retreat, she wondered what method Paula would take to extricate herself from the false position they had assumed.

Paula was not troubled about having given away her identity, but she felt a bit startled at the new emotions within her that she knew were not destined to spend themselves on the mere writing of verse.

Then Beth, from the little kitchenette, heard Rylance speaking. "You couldn't have hidden your soul long from me, Paula Raymond. I have loved it too well for it to escape me under a camouflage."

Beth couldn't hear Paula's answer, but it must have been satisfactory, for when she returned with a dainty tea tray there was an atmosphere of happiness that prompted her thoughts to stray toward strange blossoms and wedding bells.

COOL MILK IN HOT WEATHER.

Essential to Pipe Spring Water to Dairy House.

Regulations now require that milk be cooled artificially as soon as it is drawn from the cow. According to specialists in the Department of Agriculture, the most simple and efficient method of handling this matter is to harness natural resources on farms having permanent springs that flow throughout the year and do not dry up in the summer.

It is essential to pipe the spring water to the dairy house where it should flow into a concrete tank of size adequate to provide ample space for cooling the maximum production of milk on that farm. The tank should also be provided with an outlet or overflow so that a constant stream of water passes through it. Ingenious farmers may be able to devise some other use for this flow of water during the time when the tank is not needed for cooling milk. Ordinarily the temperature of the spring water in the tank does not get lower than 55 degrees F.

On dairy farms where springs are not available it is customary to use concrete cooling tanks which are insulated with cork and provided with a hinged top, so that ice can be used to decrease the temperature of the water in which the milk cans are placed. Generally these tanks are made in two divisions, so that when most of the cows are dry the smaller compartment can be used for cooling the dairy products, as its use necessitates smaller drain on the ice supply and eliminates the cooling of a large amount of water. When the herd flow is at a maximum both chambers of the cooling tank are used.

Uncooled milk and cream usually result in the production of dairy products of low quality and often of sour milk and cream as well as products of high bacteria content. The investment in cooling tanks, equipped either with spring water or ice cooled, pays heavy interest the year around and is profitable on every dairy farm. Milk of high bacterial content will contain about twelve hours at 120 degrees F.; 24 hours at 75 degrees; 80 hours at 55 degrees, and 180 hours at 40 degrees; while milk of low bacterial content kept sweet for 36 hours at 100 degrees F.; 60 hours at 75 degrees; 180 hours at 55 degrees, and 306 hours at 40 degrees.

Mixed Farming.

Special attention will be given by the Better Farming Conference, called by the Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan, to meet at Swift Current, to the discussion of crops and farming methods which delegates have found most suited to combat drought conditions in the southwest portion of the province. It is generally conceded that continued cropping with grain cannot be relied on to provide adequate returns from farming in the district, and that live stock raising, with its accompaniment of pasture and forage crop growing, must be taken up if the agriculture of the district is to be kept up.

More than one section of South Saskatchewan was passed up as a farming possibility for years after more northern districts and a few favored spots in the south had been settled, and though, when put under the plough, these suspected areas give satisfactory crops for a period of several years, the old time weather conditions, which seem to come in cycles, returned, with unpleasant results for the farmers.

Some of these districts, such as Oxbow, present great possibilities for the farmer who is content to forgo the quick returns promised in wheat growing for the surer prospect presented in live stock raising, especially in this case where the valleys provide good shelter for farm buildings and live stock, and natural watering places for the stock. In the early settlement of the country, however, men who undertook to make their living by the live stock route, and picked valley locations with this end in view, were laughed at by the majority who preferred the high prairie land for its wheat-growing possibilities.

Good Cows Are Economical.

The first reason for having good milk cows on the farm comes from the fact that they provide the cheapest, best and most wholesome food for the family. Their value is hard to estimate when we consider the amount saved on the bills. Their produce is a superior substitute for many foods necessarily purchased at high prices. In fact, there is no economic way of doing without plenty of good milk on the farm.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF RHEUMATISM

Entirely Well After Six Weeks'
Treatment With "FRUIT-A-LIVES"

MR. AMEDEO GARCEAU

32 Hickory St., Ottawa, Ont.

"I was for many years a victim of that terrible disease, Rheumatism. In 1913, I was laid up for four months with Rheumatism in the joints of the knees, hips and shoulders and was prevented from following my work, that of Electrician.

I tried many remedies and was under the care of a physician; but nothing did me any good. Then I began to take 'Fruit-a-lives' and in a week I was easier, and in six weeks I was so well I went to work again.

I look upon this fruit medicine, 'Fruit-a-lives', as simply marvellous in the cure of Rheumatism, and strongly advise everyone suffering with Rheumatism to give 'Fruit-a-lives' a trial."

Better Ensilage Equipment With Greater Economy

Good ensilage will increase dairy or meat production 25%. But good ensilage demands a good silo, protecting the ensilage and giving ample capacity.

Toronto Silos are the best on the market. Made of double tongued and grooved staves of selected spruce, saturated with creosote, they give ample protection from air and cold.

Hip Roof design Toronto Silos have an unusually large capacity. Ensilage can be tramped right to the top of the walls.

The greatest profits result from your silo when you have a Toronto Ensilage Cutter on your farm. Rigid, durable, constructed entirely of metal, it will withstand the roughest usage. A Toronto Ensilage Cutter eliminates all chance of loss through corn lying in the field waiting for a hired machine. You can fill your silo when you are ready—as often as necessary.

A Toronto Kerosene Engine is the ideal economical engine for farm use. Gives efficient power on cheap kerosene. Not only will it run your ensilage cutter, but any other farm machinery you possess.

Write for more complete information on these three Toronto products. Let us show you how they increase your profits 25%.

EYEBROW IS HIS SPECIALTY

New York "Beauty Doctor" Makes Good Living Ministering to the Vanity of Women.

The American woman, according to a New York doctor, is the loveliest woman in the world, and he is beginning a "drive" to keep her so. He falls against the habits and customs of New York women, and declares they are ruining their intellects and their health by trying to keep young and beautiful the wrong way.

Flesh is a menace to longevity, and the woman over thirty should be careful of her diet, and take plenty of exercise. She should eat very little meat, plenty of fresh vegetables and fruit, and she should never smoke a cigarette!

The man of the hour in New York is the eyebrow specialist, who can change a woman from a beetle-browed beauty to a beauty with eyebrows that are just a slender curved line. That man does nothing but alter the shape of women's eyebrows, and he makes a good living at it.

He has long, delicate, white fingers and a little pair of silver tweezers. With these he tweaks out hair after hair until only a little group where the brow starts are left. Then he puts on some healing cream to ease the irritation of the tweaking, and finally, when you and your brows have recovered, he takes a slender camel-hair brush and paints a narrow curved line where your hairs once were.

The Wrong Man.

"These two crestfallen footpads were brought to the police station by the man they sandbagged."

"Well, if they ever hit him once I don't see how he kept from toppling over."

"Easily enough. The person they struck was Prof. Finetti, circus star, who bounced down a flight of steps on his head."—Birmingham-Age-Herald.
