done annually. I say that my connection with the concession was not for the purpose of exercising any kind of influence upon the minister. I and my partner in Dawson had been acting as solicitors for these gentlemen. We had nothing to do with obtaining the concession; in fact, did not know that the concession had been granted until two or three years after it was granted. We were asked to do professional work for these gentlemen. Work was done representing a large sum of money. Mr. McDougall and myself agreed to look after the interests of this concern in Dawson and in Ottawa. We agreed to give our professional services gratuitously. We agreed for ten per cent of this stock, which is now valueless and which we had little reason then to think would have any great value, to forego the large bill of costs we had against these people and to give our services gratuitously in future, both at Dawson and at Ottawa. We have given these services gratuitously since, I must say that it is a most unjust and unjustifiable insinuation for any one to make or repeat in this House that there has been anything improper in the transaction. I am not surprised however, at the attack made here to-day. I must say that, a short time ago, it was intimated to me that unless I made myself the means of bringing about a settlement of this suit against the company by Mr. Tyrrell, in which he claims about $42,000, these letters would be used in the way they have been and an attack would be made upon me. in the press and in this House. And I was strongly urged by Mr. McDougall, in Dawson, because of the annoyance he knew it would cause me, to try and get a settlement and have Mr. Tyrrell paid his claim.

Mr. FOSTER. As that implies something perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) will allow me to make a statement. I have not seen Mr. Tyrrell, nor has Mr. Tyrrell seen me. No words have passed between Mr. Tyrrell and me; no letter, no communication has passed between Mr. Tyrrell and me.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not mean to imply that the intimation came from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I simply meant that that intimation was made to me by Mr. McDougall himself, that it had been intimated there that unless Mr. Tyrrell was paid this $42,000 this charge would be brought against me, and he urged me to settle the matter because he felt that it would be a considerable annoyance to me to have a discussion of this sort. My reply was that I would have nothing to do with any settlement, and that from that time I would have nothing to do with the case. The case went on. On March 7 it was concluded, and on March 9 this attack upon me was commenced. I declined to have anything to do with any settlement, because I thought that it would be submitting to intimidation and to a species of blackmail. And I repeat I have nothing to be ashamed of or to apologize for as I acted strictly within the bonds of propriety as a professional man and as a member of this House. I did not attempt to bring any undue influence to bear upon the minister, as is shown by the fact that no favour was granted to these people, but, on the contrary, as they say, they have been hampered and hindred at every turn. We know why the officers of the department acted in that way. Everybody knows that these concessions in the Yukon have been the subject of constant attack. The attack made to-day in which I happen to be included, is not so much directed against me but against the concession; it is a case of throwing mud at the concession, in order, that possibly the government may be led to cancel it. I am not the party—I suppose I am not of sufficient importance—who is really attacked, it is the concession they are trying to get at. It is true they are doing it over my head, and they try to besmirch me because that is a part of the attack upon the concession itself. The attack was premeditated, for, as I have said, it was intimated to me that it was to be made; but I declined to have anything to do with the conditions sought to be imposed in order that the attack might be warded off. I must say that I do not attach very much importance to the Yukon 'Daily News,' I do not think it a responsible paper. Nor do I attach very great importance to the Yukon 'World.' But, perhaps the House would like to know the opinion of the Yukon with reference to the paper from which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) quoted so profusely and of the gentleman who wrote these articles. So, with your permission I will read part of an article which appeared in the Yukon 'World' of March 11 :

The same old concession story in the same way.

The Dawson 'Daily News' is indeed unfortunate in the manner which it has of treating the public questions in which large corporations are interested.

It will be remembered that some years ago the Dawson 'News' was fighting the Bronson and Ray concession.

As a matter of fact, everybody there was fighting everything in the way of a concession.

At that time the editor is said to have attempted to get the concession to give him something in payment for his silence.

That is the editor of the 'Daily News' whose writings have been the inspiration of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster).

Well, that time is past, and that particular incident is closed. But once again the 'News' starts at the Bronson and Ray concession. This time it anounces that it has certain information, that it is going to publish certain information that will be so harmful to the concession that it will result in its cancellation.

The 'News' can do business as it pleases. but so long as the 'Yukon World' is under its present management there never will be an article appear in it telling how it intends—in the near future—to publish something that will hurt some great and wealthy corporation—if nothing happens in the meantime. Such a course is open to extreme misconstruction. If the people pursuing such a course are in earnest, they are wretched bunglers and bad managers. To be the publisher of such a threat, to the ordinary man, looks like a plain 'hold-up.'

But, whether or not, it is ineffective. There is no source of information open to the 'News' that the 'World' cannot reach. The 'World' will see that the 'News' is kept to its promise. and if anything occurs to 'interrupt' the publication of these statements that are going to ruin (according to the 'News') this million dollar company, the 'World' will raise such a clamour that the 'News' will stand itself revealed for what it is to the whole country.

Another thing. When the opposition men of this territory were fighting this concession the 'News' stood aside. When there were real wrongs to right the miners got no assistance from the 'News.' It was only when shouting was quite harmless to the concession that the 'News' indulged in it. Now, after McInnes is in Ottawa and is making certain recommendations about the concession, after Mr. Oliver. Minister of the Interior, has visited this country and said, in plain language, that he intends to take up the fight and tells what it is going to do. Then whatever the government finally does, the 'News' will claim the public credit.

One word to the local men who have the conduct of the concession affairs, so far as Dawson is concerned. These men are clever business men and probably know as well as the 'World.' that the Dawson 'News' is not trying the case. has no influence in the matter, that whatever side the 'News' takes is regarded as being the sensational side, is regarded as being the opinion of the agitators who have always held the country back, of the men who had they been allowed to have their way in the past, would have made this country an unpeopled wilderness.

And so on. Now, though the hon. gentleman contented himself with making insinuations and innuendoes, which, I say, were absolutely unjustified and unjustifiable, and which I would have been strictly within my right to treat with the silence they deserve, still, I thought I owed it to the House and to my own sense of honour and to my own reputation to offer to the House the statements that I have made. I venture to think that any man who is unprejudiced, who is fair minded, and who will look at this matter in a proper light, will acquit me of any improper doing or improper intention, and will acquit me of having in any way violated the independence of parliament or of having done any act of which a gentleman should be ashamed. As I have said, I have not spoken as offering any apology or excuse. I consider that I have absolutely nothing to be ashamed of, nothing to regret, nothing for which I am called upon to offer any excuse or apology. I leave it to the fair-mindedness of every man in this House and outside to say if I have not disposed completely, not by my statement alone but by the statement of gentlemen whose words cannot be disputed, of the unjustifiable attack made upon me to-night.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). I do not intend to discuss this question, namely, the Bronson and Ray concession, from the standpoint of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Belcourt). A reference to that gentleman has been made in the Dawson press, and every member of this House can read the Dawson press for himself and draw from it any inference he wishes. But that is not the line I intend to take. With the permission of this House, I will briefly discuss this Bronson and Ray concession from the standpoint of its history. Now, the question of concessions in the Yukon is a live one, always has been and always will be a live question until the last one is wiped off the map. Of all the concessions there made, which have been cancelled and of all the concessions still remaining of which there are many, the most iniquitous is the one known as the Bronson and Ray. Now, the Bronson and Ray concession and many others were investigated by a commission appointed by parliament in the year 1903, under the great seal of Canada, and composed of Judge Britton and Mr. Benjamin Bell. The result of their investigation can be found in sessional papers No. 142, a return to the House of Commons. Judge Britton presided over that investigation in the city of Dawson, and investigated these various concessions. He found that this concession was lease No. 5, comprising a tract of land commencing 2½ miles from the mouth of Bonanza creek and extending up that stream for a like distance, issued in favour of the Hon. E. H. Bronson and C. C. Ray, and known as the Bronson and Ray concession. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to enlighten the House on the question of concessions in the Yukon, let me say that when the government originally granted these concessions, it was with the idea that they should be worked in a hydraulic manner and that they should cover ground which could not be worked in any other way. That is the argument the concessionnaires used to obtain their concessions from the government and that is the ground upon which the concessions were granted. I ask the House to bear that in mind. I now quote from Judge Britton's report page 21, on the Bronson and Ray concession.

> Lease No. 5 comprising a tract of land commencing about 2½ miles from the mouth of Bonanza creek and extending up that stream for a like distance, issued in favour of the Hon. E. H. Bronson and C. C. Ray, and known as the Bronson and Ray concession.

That was on May 6, 1899, this is April 10, 1906, and Mr. Speaker, during all those seven long years these absentee landlords living here in Ottawa, never turned a sod on that concession. Will my hon. friend from Ottawa or any other hon. gentleman rise in this House and attempt to defend these concessionnaires on the ground that they have complied with the law ? If any hon. gentleman will do that, I will challenge every statement he makes in connection with it.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will the hon. gentleman deny that the officers of the government in Dawson have reported yearly that the work required by the regulations had been performed on those concessions ?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not deny that statement, but I will quote from Judge Britton's report to prove that they did not do the work. My hon. friend confuses the names of Bronson and Ray with the company which was formed after 1902. The men who are behind this concession and always have been behind it, are these two Ottawa men, Bronson and Ray.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend say before the company was formed there was not an exemption granted of the assessment work ?

Mr. THOMPSON. Exactly.

Mr. BELCOURT. Now let us have the facts—I do not want to embarrass my hon. friend. Is it not true that since then the company has done the assessment work yearly ?

Mr. THOMPSON. The company may have done the assessment work yearly since that time, but before that time the assessment work was not done, not sufficient work was done to hold the ground.

Mr. BELCOURT. Was it not during that time that the concessionnaires were exempted from doing assessment work ? It is not true that the concessionnaires were exempted for a number of years from doing assessment work ?

Mr. THOMPSON. It does not make any difference to me, wuether they were exempted or not, the facts remain that they were not doing the work. But that is not the question. These vast areas of land in the richest section of country that God ever made, were not intended by this government to be held simply on the payment of a rental, they were intended to be worked, and that is where the people of the Yukon have their complaint this concession has not been worked.

On the 3rd of November, 1899, a lease of the location is surveyed, containing the usual provisions, was issued in favour of Bronson and Ray.

They got the lease. Now on March 15, 1900, the lessees were granted an extension of time within which to comply with the conditions. They did not expend this money, they did not do that work, but they were granted an extension of time.

Mr. BELCOURT. There is a statement there that they were exempted, that was found by the judge himself.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, every foot of land in that country was valuable, and when we had people there from all over the world who were looking for placer ground, and this land was locked up in that Bronson and Ray concession, and it is yet locked up in that concession. Now Judge Britton discusses the extension of time :

A condition of all hydraulic leases is that 'the lessee shall have sufficient hydraulic or other machinery in operation on the demised premises within one year from the date of lease to permit beginning active operations for the efficient working of the rights and privileges granted, and that such operations shall be begun within one year' and then that $5,000 shall be expended in each year.

Now, Sir, I am still reading Judge Britton's report, and I will refer the House now to his summing up, which I think will be a sufficient answer to the remarks of my hon. friend.

The expenditure incurred in the construction or acquirement of a flume, ditch, or pipe-line to convey water to a location has by general practice been accepted as expenditure 'in mining operations in, about and upon the location' as required by section 4 of the lease, and such flume, ditch or pipe-line also constitutes the machinery which the lessee is required, under the same section, to place upon his location.

Now listen to this :

I think that any machinery or appliances which a lessee may have placed upon his location, so long as it is sufficient for the 'efficient working of the rights and privileges granted'—

He goes far afield, and allows every means possible of fulfilling these terms.

Must be accepted as compliance with the terms of the lease.

No sufficient hydraulic or other machinery was placed upon the demised premises in the Bronson and Ray concession within the year, nor is there yet such reasonably sufficient hydraulic or other machinery there as required for efficient working or for active operations.

It cannot be said that the conditions of the lease have been complied with.

There may have been waiver of the conditions other than the condition as to representation work which was waived to 2nd June, 1902, as above stated. Any such waiver would require to be evidenced by writing under the authority of the Minister of the Interior, and no such waiver was shown.

Now, Sir, that is the concession that my hon. friend has defended. It is absolutely impossible of defence, Mr. Speaker, in the eyes of those who know the circumstances. It is difficult for me to come here from a constituency 5,000 miles away and tell this House about gold mining in that country, or present to the minds of hon. gentlemen in this House the picture that is presented to the eye of any man who goes up Bonanza Creek where this concession is. I will tell you that an analogy is not to be found, so far as I know, on the continent of America. You have to go to the island of Ireland before you find an analogy to the conditions that exist on the two and a half miles of the Bronson & Ray concession. We have all heard of the absentee landlord of Ireland who has bought or inherited an estate and who allowed it to run to wreck and ruin, who has allowed the buildings to fall and has perhaps permitted the growth of a new forest as a hunting ground. That is practically the condition there, there is nothing on the Bronson & Ray concession but a silent solitude due to the machinations of these gentlemen in Ottawa, although I am glad to learn that in future the government are going to compel them to work the property or throw it up. That is, in brief, the history of the Bronson & Ray concession.

You would have thought to hear the hon. member from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) talk that it is a small concession in the bottom of the creek, some thing that does not interfere with the rights of men. I submit that is not a fact, it covers 2½ miles of the richest portion of Bonanza, one of the richest creeks on this continent or in the world, and surrounding it, above it, below it, on the right, on the left, on all sides of it, are men who have been working and earning a living for years and are doing so to-day and yet the 2½ miles of the Bronson & Ray concession are lying idle because these concessionaires have not developed it. That is the picture of the Bronson & Ray concession, and what is the result? We in the Yukon have beside us one of the most powerful mining nations in the world, the United States, in their territory of Alaska, and because this concession is locked up our miners have had to leave the country and go to the United States to get land to work, while these men, for seven long years have controlled 2½ miles our people have had to go across the border, and yet my hon. friend defends it. I say it is absolutely indefensible. He says the timber is stripped. The timber! Not content with the gold they want the timber as well. I suppose they will even want the hay; there is not a ton on the 2½ acres. He says: We do not work because there is no dumping ground. Is the progress of the Yukon to be stopped because they discovered after obtaining this concession that there was no dumping ground? That is something which, if these gentlemen were bona fide, should have been discovered before the lease was granted. It was only years after the concession was granted, years after the agitation against this was started, that they discovered this subterfuge, that they had not a dumping ground. I say that is no defence. So far as the people of the Yukon are concerned, this is not a political question. It is absolutely above the plane of party politics and no gentleman has ever appeared on any political platform of any shade of politics who has not had in his platform a plank against concessions. I say it is not a party question, it is a question which concerns the people of the Yukon, and until the concession is cancelled the agitation will never cease. My hon. friend may defend this, but I know what is the fact; I have gone over the Bronson & Ray concession time and again; I have seen the industry above, below and around it, and I have seen the blankness, the dreariness, the wilderness covering the Bronson & Ray concession.

This, as I say, is no new question with us, it is an old one. At the last session of parliament I had the honour of addressing this House on the question of the Yukon and attempting to show how necessary it was for a responsible minister of the cabinet to visit that far-off territory. I am glad to inform the House that during the past season the present Minister of the Interior, Hon. Mr. Oliver, went to that country, and, Sir, he, a disinterested observer—I shall not say a disinterested observer, but a stranger to the country—went over this country and saw exactly how this concession had been managed and what they had done, and I am glad to tell you now that these concessionnaires are dancing a different jig to what they did a few years ago. My hon. friend is bringing them down to the ring bolt, and that is why they are squirming; that is why they are kicking; that is why they are putting up this defence; they know that they are—no I shall not, I was going to use a Yukon phrase, but I shall not—they know that their days are limited. I am very glad to inform the House and to have been able to inform the people of the territory which I have the honour to represent in this House—the Yukon—that these concessionnaires are now being brought to task and that unless they fulfil absolutely the letter as well as the spirit of the law, I am advised that their vast leases will be cancelled. I am glad to be able to have this opportunity to present my views and those of the people I represent, and at the same time to refute a few of the arguments advanced by my hon. friend.

Mr. A. A. STOCKTON (St. John City and County). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the arraignment made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and I feel that the principle involved is of such magnitude that the members of this House should not allow it to pass in silence. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) says that he had nothing to do with obtaining this concession. I do not wish to, and shall, I hope, in the observations I make say any thing that may be personally offensive to my hon. friend for the city of Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). A higher principle is involved in connection with this case which I shall refer to before I am through. My hon. friend said that he had nothing to do with obtaining this concession. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) did not say or charge that my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) had any thing to do with obtaining the concession, but he did charge that he had something to do with retaining the concession after it had been forfeited under the terms on which the lease had been granted.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend permit me to ask him where he finds evidence that the concession was forfeited?

Mr. STOCKTON. Well, I will refer to the report—

Mr. BELCOURT. It never was.

Mr. STOCKTON. —of Judge Britton before I am through. I do not wish to be unfair to my hon. friend. At all events there was considerable stir in the Department of the Interior with respect to the cancelling of this lease. My hon. friend was called in to prescribe so that the lease should not be cancelled, and as I understand it, in consequence of the hon. gentleman having been called in the lease was not cancelled. Is not that a correct statement of the facts ?

Mr. BELCOURT. No.

Mr. STOCKTON. Will my hon. friend state what the facts are ?

Mr. BELCOURT. The facts are these : The concession was granted in 1898 and shortly after that, because there was no dumping ground and no water the concessionnaries asked to be relieved of the annual work. The minister granted permission. In 1902 the minister withdrew the exemption and gave notice to these people that they must go on and do the work. The concession never was cancelled ; there was a threat it would be cancelled if they did not do the work but having done the work the concession was not cancelled.

Mr. STOCKTON. In other words, the situation had become so acute that Messrs. Bronson and Ray could not attend to the matter themselves and they had to call in the member for the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BELCOURT. He had been called in long before ; I had been acting as their solicitor.

Mr. STOCKTON. He did not appear on the scene before, at all events so far as this correspondence is concerned. I do not know how long before it was that my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) was called in ; I am speaking on the strength of the correspondence that is before the House.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend permit me.

Mr. STOCKTON. Certainly.

Mr. BELCOURT. I was the solicitor of these gentlemen in various matters, long before this concession was obtained, and in this matter, they applied to me as their legal adviser in this city as they did in many other matters before and since.

Mr. STOCKTON. My hon. friend now says he was the solicitor of Messrs. Bronson and Ray, but I do not understand that he was the solicitor of Bronson and Ray with respect to the securing of this lease.

Mr. BELCOURT. I was not.

Mr. STOCKTON. Certainly not. He was the general solicitor of Bronson and Ray, but outside of him altogether they acquired that concession.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is so.

Mr. STOCKTON. And then, in consequence of certain arrangements with the department they were not called upon to comply with certain terms of the lease or certain terms of the regulations of the department, and the Minister of the Interior in whose department this was called upon them to comply with the terms of the lease after the 2nd June under the report of Judge Britton. Then it was that the matter became acute and they applied not to the Minister of the Interior, but they applied to my hon. friend who was the member of parliament representing the city of Ottawa, and they applied to him as appears from the correspondence because of his influence with the minister—not because of his professional relationship with Messrs. Bronson and Ray, but because of his influence with the minister as a member of parliament. That was a reason why the hon. member for Ottawa was called in. The hon. gentleman now says that he took this means of collecting a professional bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not take that means ; I said it was offered to me in payment.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then I will put it in that way : That these gentlemen, I suppose who are quite able to pay their professional bills in the ordinary way, offered to pay the professional bill of the hon. member for Ottawa in the way of giving him an interest in this concession. Is not that what I am to understand now ? Then, in consequence of that, Messrs. Bronson and Ray dropped out as a part of the transaction and a company is formed of which my hon. friend becomes a prominent member, and in consequence of that the hon. gentleman and his partner get what is equal to a $200,000 interest in a company stocked to the extent of $1,000,000. I think that is not incorrect.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is incorrect also.

Mr. STOCKTON. In what respect.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is not $200,000 at all. It was 10 per cent of the whole capitalization of the company which was $1,000,000.

Mr. STOCKTON. I apologize to my hon. friend for the mistake I have made. I understood my hon. friend to say that he and his partner together were to get $100,000 of stock, and that there were to be $500,000 of stock in the treasury, and he as a member of the company would be entitled to the benefit of his share of that $500,000 treasury stock when it was paid in. Therefore he would have his $100,000 in addition to the treasury stock that was paid in. It would appear therefor that for a professional bill of $4,000 or $5,000 he gets what is equal to at least $100,000 and the possibility of another $100,000 in case it should pan out as my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) expected it would.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend allow me to make him an offer ?

Mr. STOCKTON. Certainly.

Mr. BELCOURT. If he will pay that bill of $4,000 or $5,000 he can have all these shares right away.

Mr. STOCKTON. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) that had I offered him $40,000 or $50,000 at that time he would not take it. It has not panned out just exactly as my hon. friend thought it would. But Sir, that is no reason why we should condone the offence. His judgment then was that it was a creek, and I think it is on Bonanza. The truth is that it panned out just a little differently from what my hon. friend thought it would, but the facts are there all the same. Just let me refer to this report of Judge Brittons', at page 32 he says :

> On the 13th of March, 1900, the lessees were granted an extension of time within which to comply with the provisions of their lease as regards the annual expenditure of $5,000 in mining operations thereon, as certain placer mining claims within the location prevented them from operating to advantage. This extension of time to comply with the provisions of the lease was terminated on the 2nd day of June, 1902. On the 11th of November, 1902, the government mining engineer reported that no work had been done on this location, nor had any preparatory work to commence operations been started, nor had any machinery been placed on the tract leased. On the 26th of June, 1903, the department refused to accept the rental of this location and a cheque for $388.50, which was tendered in payment for the same, was returned to the agents of the lessees.

Up to that time, practically Bronson and Ray were out of the transaction, and in consequence of the appearance of my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) upon the scene the lease was not cancelled. Then the report goes on :

> Under the provisions of the lease an expenditure of $5,000 in mining operations should have been incurred between the 2nd of June, 1902, the date upon which the extension of time terminated, and the 2nd of June, 1903.

Was that $5,000 paid, up to the 2nd of June, 1903 ? Have the terms been fully complied with since ? My hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Thompson) says no.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not understand him to say 'no.' He said he would not deny that.

Mr. STOCKTON. Deny what ?

Mr. BELCOURT. That the assessment work had been done since.

Mr. STOCKTON. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) say that all the assessment work has been done and that $5,000 a year has been paid.

Mr. BELCOURT. I have said it half a dozen times to-night.

Mr. STOCKTON. From that time to the present.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes from that time to the present.

Mr. STOCKTON. Well now, my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) spoke with reference to this property remaining there without having been worked ; that it is a scandal to the people of the Yukon, and that while it is under the control of these lessees it is preventing the legitimate honest miners of that country going in there and developing that property, and that it is being held to-day merely for speculative purposes by men who have no interest and no residence in that country. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to refer particularly to that branch of the case. I hope I have said nothing that is at all offensive to my hon. friend from the city of Ottawa ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Except for deliberate misrepresentation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. STOCKTON. No, no, don't mind the point of order ; my hon. friend and I will deal with the question between ourselves. At the beginning of his speech the hon. gentleman referred to the preservation of the dignity of this House. I reciprocate that sentiment and I trust that in this discussion we shall maintain on both sides the dignity of the traditions of this House, and that we shall not forget that we are both members of parliament discussing a question which vitally affects the decency of the public life of this country. But Mr. Speaker, let me ask this question: has a lawyer—a man of the profession to which I have the honour to belong—has he the right to use means in his official position as a member of this parliament to obtain the payment of a professional bill which if he were not a member of parliament he would not have the right to use.

That is a question that vitally affects every member of this House. Now, the duty of a member of parliament, as I understand it, is higher than his mere duty as a professional man or a lawyer. As a professional man or as a lawyer he represents his own personal interest, and the interests of his clients; as a member of parliament he acts here representing the people who send him here as a trustee for the electors, not only of the constituency which sent him here, but of the whole Dominon of Canada, and no professional man upon the floor of this House has a right to use his position as a member of parliament to advance his position as a professional man or a lawyer. Therefore, I say there is a vital and important principle bound up in this question which is before the House to-night. I am not throwing any aspersions upon my hon. friend the member for the city of Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt); I should be very sorry to do so; and I hope my hon. friend will not think that I am doing so. But I have heard—it is more than rumour around the corridors of this House—that members of my profession are using their positions as members of parliament to advance their pecuniary interest. If that be so, Sir, I say it is degrading to the public life of this country, and it is unfair to the profession to which I happen to belong. I appeal to the First Minister as to whether it is a right thing for professional men who are members of this House to practice their profession before committees of this parliament or to use their influence on the floor of this House to induce legislation one way or the other, or in the departments of government. This is not a new matter. This matter has been discussed in the mother of parliaments across the ocean; and away back as far as 1695 this was approved by the imperial parliament:

> That the offer of any money or other advantage to any member of parliament for promoting any matter whatever impending or to be transacted in parliament is a high crime and misdemeanour and subversive of the English constitution.

And further as late as 1858 this was approved of by the officers of the Crown in England and by the parliament of the mother country to this extent:

> Is the House prepared for such an incorporation of professional and legislative duty on the part of its legal members as those gentlemen who have been retained by private individuals in the one capacity, should they take advantage of the other to further their clients' claims?

And it was unanimously decided in the negative. I appeal to my right hon. friend the distinguished gentleman who leads this House; I ask him, would he think that it would be right for me as a member of parliament to accept a retainer from any gentleman in Canada to promote a Bill before this House or to induce the government or any member of the government to do a certain thing that might be done because of my influence as a member of parliament? I say, Sir, it would be wrong. I do not throw any aspersions upon my hon. friend from the city of Ottawa. I believe that the sooner we grapple with this question and the sooner it is understood that the members of my profession on the floor of this House should cease attending to such professional matters here the higher will be the standard of public life in this parliament and in this country. My hon. friend has made an explanation. My hon. friend, no doubt innocently, may have dropped into this transaction; but I think we ought to bring this matter to the test of the country's interest so that every professional man, whether he sits to the right or the left of the Speaker, will understand that from this time forth we cannot use our position as members of parliament to further our interests as members of the legal profession. Therefore, I hope that this discussion will do good, and that from this time forth there will be no cause of complaint in this respect. I hope I have said nothing to hurt the feelings of my hon. friend from the city of Ottawa. I have as high a regard for the noble profession to which we both belong as my hon. friend or as any other member on the floor of this House. It is because of my high regard for the legal profession, for the position of a member of parliament, for the necessity of keeping the two positions apart, for the decency of public life, for the independence of parliament, and for the independence of the legal profession, that I am standing here to-night pleading, not only for the profession of which I am a member, but for the position of a member of parliament, that no member of this House should use his influence with a minister of the Crown or with the government for the purpose of obtaining concessions which he might not otherwise be able to obtain because he happens to be a supporter of the government of the day.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, it is my misfortune that when this question arose at eight o'clock I was not present in this House, having had an engagement elsewhere which I could not give up. Therefore, I come at some disadvantage to the question which is now before the House. Indeed, I do not think I would have risen at all but for the appeal that has been made to me by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Stockton) upon sentiments which I altogether reciprocate. The principles of the British constitution in this respect are well known; the rules are well known also; but it is possible that the rules are being forgotten in this House and in other Houses. At all events, I do not think that it would conduce to any good result if either one side or the other in this House were to attempt to throw stones at its opponents, as to which has been delinquent in this respect. I am happy to remind the House at once that my hon. friend, in the remarks which he has made, has not been personal. He stated over and over again that he did not want to say anything offensive to the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). He laid down principles with which I think we all agree. There have been rumours in this House and out of it that members of this parliament who belonged to the legal profession have taken advantage of their position as members of parliament to prosecute claims of clients. I do not know whether these rumours are true or not; but whether they are or not, I think we can agree that the reputation of the Canadian parliament ought to be, like that of the wife of Cæsar, above suspicion; and it is for this reason that the Minister of Justice, upon a suggestion thrown out by the hon. leader of the opposition last session, has introduced a Bill, which is now before one of the committees of this House, for the purpose of dealing with this very question. Perhaps it may be difficult to draw the line exactly where the rights of a member of parliament cease and the rights of a lawyer commence; but I agree with my hon. friend that this is a matter to which we should address ourselves, and as to which we should have a well understood rule, promulgated either by statute or by a resolution of this House, which would be a standard for the guidance of every member, and to which, if it were afterwards violated, every member would have the right to call the attention of parliament.

Coming now to the question at issue, I have only to repeat that I am sorry I did not hear the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who introduced it. I could only gather from what I heard since I entered the House what was the nature of his accusation. If I understood aright, it was that the hydraulic concessions, as they are known, made in the Yukon, instead of being a benefit, have been rather an incubus and ought to be dispensed with and disapproved. Sir, we must remember what were the conditions of the Yukon when it was first brought to our attention. In 1897, when the gold discoveries were made, that country was far removed from all centres of civilization. It was five thousand miles away from this city, as my hon. friend from the Yukon stated a moment ago. We knew little of the conditions, but we learned in a few months that whilst gold was plentiful there, water was very scarce. We knew also, after a few months experience, that without water it was almost impossible to prosecute the work of digging for gold. There were two kinds of miners out there. There was the individual miner, the placer miner, who with his pick and shovel and cradle got what metals he could at his hand. It was evident that this method of mining could not go very far. It was evident that if the operations were left to the placer miner, with his pick and shovel and cradle, he could at best but skim the surface of the earth and could not extract one-tenth of the wealth that was in it. Therefore the government came to the conclusion to give hydraulic concessions, that is to say, concessions made to some capitalists who would undertake to put in hydraulic plant and get water so that the mines could be worked by this approved method. This policy was followed for some years, and I think it was wisely conceived; and every one will admit that if it had ben carried out as it was conceived, it would have been very much to the advantage of the Yukon. I can appeal to the testimony of the hon. member for Yukon. There have been concessions and concessions and there are concessionnaries and concessionnaries. There are some concessionnaries who have complied with the conditions of their contract, who have put up hydraulic plant, and whose efforts have advanced the development of the country. But unfortunately there are others, by far a large majority, who obtained concessions and neglected to comply with the conditions of their contract. They may have done something, they may have complied with the letter of the contract, but they failed altogether to do the essential thing and that was to put up hydraulic plant whereby water could be collected and the gold in the ground brought to the surface. This thing has been going on some years. Two or three years ago we had complaints in this House and consequently thought it would be well to investigate the situation. We appointed a commission presided over by Judge Britton. I recollect very well that the action we took was very much criticised by gentlemen opposite. Now, however, they are bound to recognize that it was a wise and most profitable one and that commission did its work very satisfactorily. Its report is signed only by Judge Britton, as the other commissioner died before the work was completed. That report is before the House, and I think it gives an accurate statement of the conditions in that part of our country. After having had this report in our hands for some time, and digested it, a change took place in the Department of the Interior. Mr. Sifton, the former Minister of the Interior, resigned and the present minister (Mr. Oliver) was called to the office. He thought that the first thing he should do was to go himself to the Yukon and familiarize himself, by seeing and hearing, with what was wanted by the people of that section. He spent a few weeks there last summer and visited it again last fall and gave a good deal of his attention to putting into execution the ideas derived from his short visits, and perhaps I might say to the House what is the policy he has communicated to me on the subject. It is this—that at present the best thing to do is to give as fair a chance as possible to the individual miner. As I have said some of the concessionnaries did their work nobly and put up most expensive plant to collect and distribute the water. These ought to have the protection of the government. But I understand from my colleague that it is his idea that all the concessions, in which the concessionnaries have not put up the plant it was their duty to erect, ought to be cancelled at the earliest possible moment. This is the position of the question at this moment, and this is the policy the government intends to carry out so as to give to the Yukon the relief the people there are seeking and to which they are entitled.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I am rather surprised that the right hon. the First Minister did not ask his hon. colleague, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), to state fully and frankly what is the policy of the government with regard to members who indulge in what he has called an abuse of their position, because the Minister of Customs has sat in his place and heard every word of the discussion and consequently is in a position to give a decision on the facts as he has heard them. It is not the fault of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) if he has indulged in this practice, if it is a wrong one. It is the fault of the government because this government has encouraged this practice for the last ten years. The right hon. gentleman talked about rumours, but did he not hear five or six years ago members on this side charging a member on that side with being the open and paid advocate for his voice in this House. What was the answer ? It was a salvo of applause all along the government benches and headed off by the ministers themselves as if that were the proper thing to be done. Time and again have such accusations been made in this House and the government did nothing. The right hon. gentleman says that this side should not throw a stone. Well, the Conservative party were in power eighteen years, and never can the premier or any member of his cabinet instance a case during the Conservative administration such as has come before us to-night. Talk about rumours, why, there have been flat-footed charges, and the members against whom the charges were made said flatly that it was none of the business of members on this side to inquire into their conduct. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) says : Why not make a charge against me ? Why, no member in this House can prefer a charge against him if the facts are all true. Because they do not constitute a breach of the independence of parliament at all.

He has not been in the employ of the government or received any fee from the government. That would have been a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act. But this as we allege, is one of these cases of 'grafting' or whatever you like to call it, that have been going on in this country for the last ten years and that have been participated in not only by ordinary members of this House but by ministers of the Crown and men high in authority. And, so long as the government will encourage members to participate in these transactions as it has done for a number of years past, so long will the practices go on. It is true, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has framed a Bill on this subject, but I think there never would have been such a Bill from the minister if a Bill had not been threatened by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I am not going to quarrel with the hon. member for Ottawa particularly, because he has been indulging in a practice approved by the ministers. The facts are plain and patent. He has submitted a statement signed by Messrs. Bronson and Ray, who, everybody will agree with him, are men of reputation in the city. But I think they have put a face on this transaction which the letters filed in court will hardly put upon it. Their statement, as I understand, is that the firm of Belcourt and McDougall, of which the hon. member (Mr. Belcourt) is a member, in consideration of certain legal services to be by them performed, and which they did perform, should receive $100,000 worth of the stock of the company. That is correct, I believe—I want to agree with the hon. member as to the facts. The letters refer to this matter. Writing to Mr. Ray, Mr. Tyrrell, one of the parties says :

> With regard to the interest held by Belcourt & McDougall, I do not resent their receiving the stock agreed upon in a business like way, but I do object to their receiving without some definite agreement as to what services are to be rendered in return for it.

This letter is dated February 9, 1904, and is written from Dawson.. Now take some of the other letters. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) has stated here that he did not deny doing business for these gentlemen, but indicated that his firm had been called in in the most ordinary way to deal with the department in this regard. But see how this is borne out by the letters. Here is a letter from the hon. gentleman :

Both Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson are very much exercised over this matter and they have asked me to try and straighten it out with the minister, which I am trying to do.

And here is a letter dated July 2, 1902, from Mr. Ray to Mr. Tyrrell :

If we hold this concession, we can thank our solicitor who is moving heaven and earth to save it. I hope the proposed arrangement with Belcourt & McDougall will meet with your approval. It seemed the only thing to do if we were to save the concession, and if we cannot save it there is nothing lost by giving them an interest.

Does that sound like a member of a company writing to another about some ordinary work of their regular solicitors ? It is a most extraordinary letter. It indictates the conclusion arrived at between these members of the company that something desperate had to be done. Now, this letter of July 2, written to Mr. Tyrrell by Mr. Ray says also :

We saw at once that prompt action must be taken if we were to save the concession. After talking the matter over we decided to interest Messrs. Belcourt and McDougall with us in order to secure their assistance, both in arranging to obtain the concession and also later on, in connection with the working or sale of it, as the case might be, if we succeeded in holding it.

Is that an ordinary business letter of a client about dealings with his solicitors ? It seems to be most extraordinary business between a keen, shrewd, careful business man and a member of parliament, who he thought, had vast influence with the department. That is it pure and simple. And what more do we find in this letter of Mr. Ray to Mr. Tyrrell. He speaks of what is to be done :

The understanding with Belcourt and McDougall is that they give their professional services free, and that you do the same, and that Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson will do anything in their power that they may be able to do here in Ottawa during the session.

There is not a word there about past services; the services referred to are to be rendered in the future. If it is a question of past services I will refer to that file that is on record in the news letters of the 'News' which shows, in one of the letters, that one of the partners of Belcourt and McDougall was a creditor of this concern for the sum of $600, that being all their indebtedness. Now, I want the House to mark very carefully this letter written by Mr. Ray :

You will notice from Belcourt's memorandum that the firm of Belcourt & McDougall, Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson, are to receive each $100,000 paid up stock of the company.

There is another point made by Mr. Ray in this letter dated July 2, 1902, as to the remuneration that Messrs. Belcourt and McDougall are to receive. There is a letter written the same day by the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) to Mr. Tyrrell, in which he points out that ' Mr. Bronson and Mr. Ray are each to receive $150,000 and yourself $100,000 in shares.' But search the letter from one end to the other, and you do do not find any indication that a single cent is to go to the firm of Belcourt and McDougall. Why did he suppress the fact that they were to have $100,000 in stock ? Was it not that he did not want Mr. Tyrrell to come some day with a document in the hon. gentleman's own handwriting that he was to receive that stock ? Is not that a fair inference ?

Mr. BELCOURT. The original letter states the amount, and the omission of it is a suppression in the printing of it. If the hon. gentleman reads the other letters he will see it so distinctly stated.

Mr. BENNETT. I see that in a letter from Mr. Ray it is stated specifically that the interest of Belcourt and McDougall is to be $100,000. But the letter signed N. A. Belcourt to Mr. Tyrrell is utterly silent on that point.

Mr. BELCOURT. I tell the hon. gentleman that must have been omitted in the ' News ' office.

Mr. BENNETT. I cannot help that. If it is so let us have the original letter or the copy in the letter-book. But some confirmation of the fact that the letter in the newspaper may be right is the statement of the hon. senior member for Ottawa that $500,000 of stock is to remain in the treasury, for if the original letter says that $100,000 is to go to Belcourt and McDougall there would not be $500,000 of stock left in the treasury. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) has taken the ground, as I have understood him, that there is nothing wrong about a member of parliament being interested in pressing claims in this House. He has taken that ground before, and when he did so his position was not reprobated by any minister, in fact, it was applauded by both ministers and back-benchers alike. But, Sir, we have more evidence in this matter. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) thought the transaction was a perfectly open one, if there was nothing wrong in himself and his partner receiving $100,000 of stock, I ask him why his stock had to be placed in the name of Thomas Ahearn, of Ottawa ?

Mr. BELCOURT. The answer to that is the answer that I have had to make to the ' News ' article—it is a deliberate falsehood.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side applaud. I think that like the editor of the ' Globe ', they would applaud everything done by this government.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask if that statement is parliamentary, if it is permissible to say that a statement made by a member of the House is a deliberate falsehood.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that statement should be withdrawn, it is not parliamentary.

Mr. BELCOURT. I will withdraw the word 'deliberate,' compelled to bow to your ruling.

Mr. BENNETT. I take no objection to it. As I understand the hon. gentleman says that the newspaper report is correct.

Mr. BELCOURT. I say there was never a share of mine or of Mr. McDougall put to Mr. Ahearn's name at all. I have no certificate of a single share to-day, nor has Mr. McDougall. We have never received one single share of the $100,000 that was promised us.

Mr. BENNETT. I will read the newspaper report, it is filed as an exhibit in the court at Dawson City :

Ottawa, October 6, 1902.

Re Bonanza Creek Hydraulic Concession.

My Dear Frank :—We had last week several interviews with Mr. J. W. Tyrrell concerning his brother's interest in this company and matters have been satsfactorily arranged all round. To-day we had a meeting of the shareholders and directors. The meeting of the shareholders elected the following directors of the company : C. C. Ray, E. H. Bronson, L. Crannell, T. Ahearn and J. W. Tyrrell.

Now search the files through, and the name of Ahearn is not mentioned until that letter appeared.

Mr. BELCOURT. Let me tell the whole facts. Under the Joint Stock Companies' Act, five persons are required to apply to obtain letters patent, and the five names that the hon. gentleman has just read were the five gentlemen who applied for letters patent. They were the provisional directors and, as stated there, every one of these gentlemen subscribed for one share each.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a fair statement. Everybody knows that under the laws of the province of Ontario there must be five, and here there are five, and the public will ask why the member for Ottawa was not one of the five.

Mr. BELCOURT. The member for Ottawa was acting as solicitor, with his partner, in the application. That is the reason.

Mr. BENNETT. The member for Ottawa knows as well as I do, that that did not debar him at all.

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman, and those who have preceded him have spent their wind trying to show that it is improper for solicitors to practice in the departments, and when they find a solicitor who keeps his name out of an application for letters patent, he says there is no reason why he should keep his name out.

Mr. BENNETT. We will read a little further :

One-half the stock, namely, half a million dollars, the balance of the stock and the other half to be allotted as follows : $100,000 each to Messrs. Ray and Bronson, $100,000 to Tyrrell, and $100,000 to Ahearn representing you and myself.

Is not that an answer ? How unfortunate it is not to have a good memory.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is that letter signed by ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I again repeat that is not so, that is a false statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, if the hon. gentleman denies that he never wrote the letter, that there is no such exhibit on the files, then the 'Weekly News' of Dawson, is mistaken.

Mr. BELCOURT. I never wrote that that $100,000 in stock had been assigned to Ahearn or anybody else for Belcourt and McDougall. That is what I deny.

Mr. BENNETT. (reading).

$100,000 to Ahearn, representing you and myself.

That was part of the allotment of the stock. Later on, he says :

We feel that the concession is a valuable one.

Mr. BELCOURT. I wish to add to my statement, that up to the present moment, there has not been one single share of stock issued to McDougall or to me, or allotted to McDougall or to me, jointly or in any other way. I have no stock in that company issued or allotted to me yet.

Mr. BENNETT. These letters are spread abroad in the newspapers. In that letter of his own, he states to his business partner and his law partner :

$100,000 of stock is to be allotted to Ahearn representing you and myself.

Now, I expect that to-morrow the 'Globe' newspaper will allege that the hon. member for North Toronto, and myself, and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Stockton), are slandering hon. gentlemen opposite. Well, hon. gentlemen opposite, as long as they are mixed up in deals of this kind, must expect to have it laid bare. I think the hon. member for St. John——

Mr. BELCOURT. I think you had better leave the member for St. John out of that. Confine it to yourself and the member for North Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. Here are the facts of the case as they are disclosed, a case that has been notorious for months past. The case has been known to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I wish to say here that although the hon. gentleman has been applauded by some of those sitting behind him, he is not applauded by them all. I believe that among a majority of the members on the government side of the House, there is a feeling of dissatisfaction and disgust at this pillaging of the public chest, and a feeling that as members of parliament in discharging a public trust, they should rise above petty speculations. I say that feeling is shared by a majority of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. The feeling of disgust for actions of this kind is not at all confined to this side of the House. The opposition can well afford to stand the jibes of those hon. gentlemen opposite who applauded to the echo such acts as this, and I assume that they are only sorry that they have not similar fields to graze in. Now, I have been assailed for having brought under view the other day the actions of a number of gentlemen, another case in which a member for Ottawa was concerned, and what was the result? Yesterday, a whole column of the 'Globe' newspaper was hurled at my devoted head. Well, I can thank the 'Globe' for that excellent adverisement. So far as its personal abuse of myself is concerned, I am not at all annoyed by it, I would not expect anything else. The editor of the 'Globe' is a smug faced hypocrite, and I would not expect anything else from him. I have looked up the record of that man, and what is it? Prior to the last general election what happened in the city of Toronto? The Ross government, tottering to its fall, thought it would be well to call from the east and the west, from the north and the south, their friends and adherents together. They met in the city of Toronto to consider that black page, the record of crime that had been committed on behalf of that government to keep it in power. What happened? A reverend gentleman from Sault Ste. Marie got up and denounced the actions of those who were supporting the government, and who were bound to secure its return at all costs and hazards. A promient gentleman from the city of Toronto, a Mr. R. C. Steele, a well-known citizen, made use of these strong words:

> There have been things done in the name of Liberals that are a disgrace to Canada.

The whole convention was being stampeded by the respectable element, and it looked as if they might pass a vote of censure on the Ross government. What had to be done? Why, the editor of the 'Globe' had to obtrude himself, he was called upon, in desperation, in order to encourage them on, and that worthy individual made a speech that, for the moment, saved the situation. What were the words he used?

> He was prepared to look the ugliest page of the Liberal record in the face, and do all he could to return Ross with a larger majority than money could buy.

That pious and devoted man could not leave out the last suggestion about the power of money to buy. Well, Sir, when I look at the man who stands up before a crowd, when he finds that the voice of the respectable and honest men are decrying dishonesty and corruption in Canada, and when he declares that it is his boast that he can look the ugliest page of the Liberal record in the face, I am quite willing to take any slanders, slurs and mud from such a quarter as that. It will not do for the 'Globe' newspaper to endeavour to palliate such affairs as this and I suppose they will come to the rescue of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt).

Mr. BELCOURT. Oh, not necessarily at all.

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend perhaps thinks his is a minor offence and for that reason they will not come to the rescue. I can tell hon. gentlemen on that side that no matter how ugly is the crime that pious editor of the 'Globe' will come to your rescue so long as it is done in the interest of the Liberal party. The Liberal party cannot afford to have the assurance of the support of the 'Globe' newspaper because if they do they will have the same fate overtake them as overtook the Ross government in Ontario; but so long as abuses of the kind shown here to-day—and I say it is an abuse—so long as it is held out to the people of Canada and they are led to believe that if you have a bad claim, if you have a claim that is unjust, if you have a claim that will not stand the glare and light of day, that all that is necessary is to go to a prominent member of this House, get him to interest himself with a minister of the Crown, pay him a handsome fee and you will have your prayer answered, so long as that sort of thing goes on in this country, while I have a seat in this House, no matter who the member may be, I will denounce such action on every occasion and in every place I can possibly denounce it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

> Excise—salaries of officers, &c., to provide for increases depending upon the result of excise examinations, $300,574.75.

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). This sum will show an increase for the twelve months of about $14,877. It consists altogether of statutory increases to officers of the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. Under the Civil Service Act, excise officers are supposed to pass the Civil Service examination and no appointments are supposed to be made unless the applicants have passed that examination. We have an excise office in Prescott and I notice that under the minister's predecessor appointments were made of gentlemen who had not passed the examination. These were there previous to the examination, have been there ever since and will likely be there for all time to come unless some action is taken by the department. The same condition, I notice, prevails in Vancouver, Winnipeg, St. John and other places where we have more than one deputy collector and where there are temporary excisemen. In my constituency capable young men have gone to the trouble of passing the Civil Service examination and yet influence has been brought to bear by which men who have not passed and could not pass the examination and never intended to are appointed as temporary excise men. That, I think, is most unfair and unjust and I would like to know the policy of the present minister and what action is to be taken as regards those gentlemen who have been appointed as temporary excisemen.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The policy of the department is that no appointments are made without examination. It is sometimes necessary to appoint men temporarily on the distinct understanding that at the first opportunity they will pass the examination. Some times they fail to pass and further time is given them. It is my intention to continue the past policy of the department in that respect. Some men who were put on six months ago and who have failed to pass the examination have been retired from the service and others who are able to pass the examination have replaced them.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know for a fact that men who are well qualified to fill positions, men who have passed the civil service examination and who are supporters of the government too, are without positions because they have not sufficient influence, while men who are not qualified have been appointed. In my constituency there are men who have not passed the examination filling positions, and the time has gone by when they ever could pass the examination.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand my hon. friend to say he would approve of their dismissal. Can he give me their names?

Mr. J. D. REID. I approve of the dismissal of any man who is not qualified to fill his office. These men are supposed to pass an examination and not having passed it they are not qualified. I say that the government should appoint in their stead men who are qualified and who have passed the examination. The law is violated not only in my constituency, but elsewhere, by the subterfuge in order to ride over the law of appointing deputy collectors who are discharging the duties of excisemen. These officers have not passed the examination and cannot do so. Does the minister think that is right?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. gentleman is not right in saying that we are overriding the law; the deputy collectors are appointed under the law.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have heard it explained by other Ministers of Inland Revenue that in order to perform the duties of an exciseman at a distillery the officer must pass the civil service examination, and that a deputy collector can only be appointed to such an office temporarily until an exciseman is appointed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am informed that such an officer is not put in a distillery, although he may do exciseman's work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is not a brewery the same as a distillery in that respect?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is a third-class grade deputy collector who has not passed the examination qualified to act as exciseman in charge of a brewery?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am informed that a man can by practical experience secure the necessary knowledge to do that work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then what is the use of the civil service examination when you appoint men who have not passed it and who have nothing but political influence to recommend them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Civil Service Act says that deputy collectors and preventive officers in the Inland Revenue Department may be appointed without examination and without reference to the rules of promotion.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is a deputy collector of the third class, the lowest grade, qualified to act as exciseman?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are no third-class deputy collectors; there are deputy collectors class A and class B.

Mr. J. D. REID. I quite understand that the present Minister of Inland Revenue can have but very little experience in the department, but I would ask the ex-minister (Mr. Brodeur) who has had considerable experience and who so ably managed that department, too, I may add; I would ask him if a class B deputy collector has the necessary qualifications to take charge of a brewery?

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to the question of examinations, I have no objection to state what my views are. There are two sorts of deputy collectors—those called collectors, class A, and those called collectors, class B. These two classes are required by the Civil Service Act to pass an examination. My hon. friend says that the other officers at a port are required by the law to pass an examination. I may say that with regard to that he is absolutely mistaken ; there is no such provision in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does not the law require a person to pass an examination as an excise officer in charge of a brewery or a distillery?

Mr. BRODEUR. I must call my hon. friend's attention to the statement he made that we had appointed some fifty collectors in class B without requiring them to pass an examination. I think he is mistaken in that. I am quite sure that I never appointed any man to the position of deputy collector class B, giving him the position of an exciseman, without requiring him to pass an examination. I have always taken the stand that such an officer should pass an examination 'though we have the right under the law to appoint deputy collectors, class B, without requiring them to pass an examination' ; because I thought it would be unfair to the other officers performing the same functions who had passed examinations in order to get their promotions and increases of salary if the same rule were not applied to all. In that respect I agree with my hon. friend, and I was rather surprised to hear him state that I had appointed at Prescott an officer as deputy collector, class B, who had not passed an examination. If my hon. friend will supply me with the name of the officers in question, I will go into the matter more fully.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand the Civil Service Act, a man who has been appointed deputy collector under class B cannot take the position of an exciseman in charge of a distillery or a brewery without passing an examination. I may, however, inform the hon. minister that in the town of Prescott there is a deputy collector of class B filling the position of an exciseman in charge of a brewery who has not passed an examination ; and that has been the case for some time.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not in my time. The appointment was not made in my time.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not saying that the appointment was made in the hon. minister's time, but it continued during his time, and he assumed the responsibility of what his predecessor had done. If that can be done, it is unfair to those who have to pass the examination. The Civil Service Act has been violated in every inland revenue district in this province. The hon. minister knows that there are several others acting as temporary excisemen who were appointed when he was in charge of the department without having passed the examination, although there were some first class men in the county, good Liberals too, who had passed the examination, who wanted the position, and who could have filled it with credit to themselves and to the department. But for some reason or other he appointed men who had not passed the examination, and who never will pass it. I would like the minister to say whether that is fair or right to the men who have qualified themselves for the position, and who, though supporters of the government, have been thus turned down. So far as the Civil Service Act is concerned, in my county it is violated in the grossest way and it was done while the former minister of Marine and Fisheries were in charge of the Inland Revenue Department so that he has to assume the responsibility.

Mr. DANIEL. There is one point to which I would call the attention of the hon. minister and that is the great decrease of over $450,000 in the amount of excise revenue. I notice that the Auditor General called attention to it and asked for an explanation. The reply he got was that there had been a less quantity of excisable goods entered for consumption than during the preceding year. That reply however did not satisfy him and he asked for a return of the inspections from the different offices. To that I cannot see that he ever got an answer. He instanced the port of Montreal, where one third of the whole excise revenue is collected, as not having been inspected for five years. I see that there are other places which have been inspected, some at two years intervals and some at one year and some twice in the year, while in Montreal there has been no inspection for five years.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The explanation of the falling off of the revenue is very simple and will be found in a letter from the secretary of the department, who was then acting deputy minister, Mr. Himsworth. The decrease was in the month of February only. For the entire year there was a marked increase just as there has been since the close of the last fiscal year.

Mr. MONK. The statement made that the revenue office in Montreal has not been inspected for five years seems almost incredible. Is there no rule requiring a regular inspection of the office ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that there are no regular intervals for inspection. The inspections are made at irregular intervals and sometimes very frequently. We have no other irregularity in any branch of the service in our department. I am advised that the Montreal district is such a large one that the inspector has great difficulty covering the territory and making inspections as frequently as might be expected. Inspections are made by the collectors and deputy collectors who report.

Mr. MONK. It is often outside that if a committee of four or five good business men went throught the departments they would find many things to correct. It strikes me that a lack of inspection of such an office as the Montreal office for five years indicates a very slack method of doing business.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It indicates great confidence in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. I do not know that such confidence is absolutely justified. And in any case that is no excuse. I wish to renew the protest made every year since ten years as regards the Civil Service. Every year we hear that the Act is not observed. Men are appointed who have never passed the examination and who are never required to pass one. I have just heard the Minister of Indand Revenue declare in the most matter of fact way that in his own department men have been appointed and after an indefinite time have been called upon to pass the examination and were found utterly incapable to pass it. Our Civil Service system is becoming demoralized. In the United States since the beginning of the rule of President Cleveland, against great odds, they have improved their Civil Service, they have placed the Civil Service in a position where they could fulfil their duties and given them assurance that they would not be removed on a change of government. They have also provided that applicants must qualify for the Civil Service. As I have had occasion to say in this House before, the progress made in the United States has been admirable. We have been going backward and are still going backward, so that in large centres like Montreal and Toronto, young aspirants speak of the Civil Service examinations as a useless form because even though they qualify, people who have not passed the Civil Service examination are put in over their heads. This evening we are called upon to vote an increase of $14,000 depending upon what ? Upon the result of an excise examination. And we have had the admission by the minister, and by his predecessor, that appointments have been made without requiring the formality of compliance with the Civil Service law. I think that my hon. friend who has just come into the occupancy of the position of Minister of Inland Revenue might well, before we vote this money, announce to us what his policy is in regard to this most important point. Will he continue the system followed by his predecessor and other members of the government and name men for positions who have not complied with the law and kept them there until they have complied with the law, or will he adhere to the law and try in some way to improve our Civil Service system as has been done in the United States ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The policy of the department as I have stated, is not to appoint parties until they have passed the examination. Of course, appointments of men to temporary positions are some times made, even though the parties have not passed the examination ; but, in these instances the condition is that the parties shall pass the examination at the first available opportunity. I mention the case—and I think it is rather to the credit of the department than to its discredit—that when a temporary employee has failed to pass the examination he has been retired from the service. It is the policy of the department, where men are put on temporarily without passing the examination, to require that they shall pass the examination, when they can be appointed permanently. As to this increase of $14,000 in the estimates, of course, that covers not merely the nine months for which these estimates are voted but the whole twelve months of 1906-7. The increase is due to the statutory increases of the employees of the department. These increases are inevitable. Very few increases are made in class B the only class of employees who under the law have not been required to pass the examination. That policy will be pursued in the future. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that my predecessor was trying to enforce still more strictly the rule of Civil Service examinations and that few were appointed even to class B, for which examinations are not required, except persons who had passed the examination. I shall be very pleased to continue in the footsteps of my predecessor in that regard, and if I can improve upon what he has done, I shall certainly do it.

Mr. MONK. I have heard that stereotyped declaration of policy from almost every head of the departments in this House, ever since I first became a member of the House.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I never heard it.

Mr. MONK. I am somewhat disappointed to find the hon. gentleman (Mr. Templeman) adopt not only the declaration itself but even the form of it. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. I may simply point out that my hon. friend has declared that, having entered upon the conduct of the department he intends violating the law in the future as it has been violated in the past, and that there is no prospect whatever of our getting from my hon. friend any step in the direction of the reform of the Civil Service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know what words of mine justify the hon. gentleman in saying that I have declared that I would go on in violation of the law.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman says that he will do his best, having appointed people who are not qualified, to induce them to take the qualifying examination. He will have great difficulty in carrying out that policy, for these parties will submit to the operation of the law only if they lack sufficient influence to enable them to avoid compliance with it. We shall have no reform in this respect, until we have a man with the character of Mr. Cleveland, who will undertake seriously the work of reforming the Civil Service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) knows that a person is not appointed to the Civil Service until he is appointed permanently. To be appointed permanently they must pass the Civil Service examination. True, we have certain hired men, certain temporary employees, who are not in the Civil Service and who have not passed the examination. But the policy of the department as I have said, is to encourage these to pass the examination, and I expect to continue the policy of my predecessor in that line. It is a good policy. We violate no law in what we do.

Mr. MONK. Those of us who have been in this House before my hon. friend (Mr. Templeman) entered it will recall having heard that argument used very often. My hon. friend knows the French proverb, 'Rien ne dure comme le promissire.' The hon. gentleman's justification consists in saying: We do not appoint these men permanently, for the law forbids; we appoint them temporarily. That is an observance of the letter of the law, but a violation of its spirit. Though my hon. friend has not been long in the department, he has contracted the habits of his predecessor, and now we have his statement that he will continue the same methods.

Mr. BLAIN. How many of such temporary employees are there in the employ of the government?

Mr. MONK. Fifty per cent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that there are about 60 out of 400.

Mr. BLAIN. What length of time have these officers been in the employ of the government without passing the examination?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. For two or three years there might be a few longer, but they will average a couple of years.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to recall the minister's attention to a statement he made just now, that the falling off in the revenue was only in the month of February, and that on the whole year's operations there had been a material increase. Now, if he will look at page (K—25) where the excise revenue is given for the whole year, he will see that it shows a falling off of $371,428. I do not see how the minister can reconcile this statement in the Auditor General's Report with the statement he made just now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. According to the information now given me, I will have to revise my statement. The excise revenue for 1902-3 was $11,900,000 in round numbers, for 1903-4, $12,893,000; for 1904-5, $12,521,000. That shows a considerable increase in 1903-4 over 1902-3, but it shows a decrease of three or four hundred thousand dollars between 1904-5 and 1903-4. My information is that the revenue is increasing very rapidly since the close of the last financial year, and we expect that during the current financial year it will be greater than ever before.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know where the minister gets his figures, they are not such as I find in this printed report laid on the table of the House where the excise revenue for 1903-4 is given as $12,890,382. The excise revenue for 1904-5 is given as $12,518,954, showing a decrease of $371,422. Those are the figures that are laid before parliament as being correct, and I presume they are.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is the revenue as published in the Blue-book of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I have the Blue-book, and it does not agree with that statement. If you take the Sessional Paper No. 12, you will find that the excise for 1901 was $10,423,865; for 1902, $11,257,485; for 1903, $12,190,123; 1904, $13,126,596; 1905, $12,769,691.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. SPROULE. From the Inland Revenue Report for 1905, where the deputy minister reports to the minister, on page IX., showing the accrued revenue for the years ending June 30 from 1901 to 1905; and at the bottom of that page the decrease in the last fiscal year is given as $398,140.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend will see that it is reported by the deputy minister that the figures he has read show the accrued revenue for the years named. The figures I have given are the actual revenue collected.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between accrued and actual revenue?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One is due and the other is collected. The absolute collections during the year are the figures I have given.

Mr. BLAIN. What amount is due and uncollected, and what are the reasons?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It may happen that at the close of the financial year revenue has accrued that is not paid in until the following financial year, and that would make a discrepancy in the figures.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister give it as his opinion that these figures in the Auditor General's Report are merely the figures of the revenue due and money that has not been paid? I would hardly expect that from the Auditor General's Report. I think it would be more likely to give the exact money paid out and the exact money paid in.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If the hon. gentleman will look at page nine of the report of the department for 1905, he will see that the accrued revenue was $12,745,191 for the last financial year. He will observe further that this sum of $198,082.84 is a refund deducted therefrom, giving the actual revenue as I have read, $12,521,108. That reconciles the two statements.

Mr. DANIEL. The refunds and drawbacks are deducted in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Could the minister state if more commodious and suitable premises will be erected in Montreal than the homely premises we now have? Surely the great commercial metropolis is entitled to a better building. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) I think promised that something would be done before this session. The present building is really a disgrace to the great commercial metropolis.

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year a sum of money was voted to construct a new building or make an extension of the existing building, the idea of the department being to have an extension of the building on the square called Place Royale. The Public Works Department wrote to the civic authorities of Montreal and only this morning, after several months, a letter was received from Montreal asking for a sketch of the building which we intended to erect there.

Mr. MONK. If the government had pressed this matter after obtaining the vote and had not waited until they received a communication from the city, the remarks of the member for St. Lawrence division would have had a result before this.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is not absolutely fair in stating that the matter has not been pressed. The Minister of Public Works wrote and at my request wrote again to the city of Montreal. The matter was referred there to the roads committee and afterwards to another committee and I received a newspaper clipping this morning stating that the question was before a committee and they decided to ask from the Minister of Public Works or myself some more information. I had this morning a letter from the city clerk asking for information which I have asked the Public Works Department to supply.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will find that the real cause of delay is that a group of real estate owners around Place Royale do not want that vacant space to be deeded by the city to the government. That is what has retarded the progress and if the government now undertakes to press the matter as it should the matter will be settled in a very short time.

Stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco, $26,000.

Mr. MONK. In the Department of Inland Revenue, at least under my hon. friend's predecessor, when a reform was suggested and pressed it was generally carried out before the man who had suggested it had been able to derive any kudos from it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I may get the kudos.

Mr. MONK. I remember on one occasion there was a tobacco combine and I gave my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) the usual notice that two or three days afterwards I would bring the matter before the House. On the day appointed, before I had time to rise, he introduced a law to correct the abuse which I intended to point out to the House. I do not know if my hon. friend intends following the same system, but I would like to call his attention to another abuse and possibly before I move for its correction my hon. friend (Mr. Templeman) will follow the example of the previous minister and correct it himself. I refer to the stamps on Canadian tobacco. We in Quebec and those interested in tobacco production in Ontario have joined in representing repeatedly to the government that amongst other means of encouraging the culture, production and consumption of Canadian tobacco one of the principal means would be the abolition of distinction in the colour of the stamps. That has been urged by all the representative bodies interested in tobacco culture in Quebec. It has been urged from all the districts of Canada where tobacco culture exists to any extent. A need for the change exists today just as much as it did two years ago and I would ask the minister if the policy of the government is to abolish that distinction in colour of stamps. My hon. friend is aware that there are different coloured stamps for the imported, the mixed and the pure Canadian tobacco. Time and again the government has been asked to abolish that distinction. I think the demand is a reasonable one. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) knows the reasons which were given in the memorandum presented to the government on that subject. I do not want to go into that question just now but I think we are entitled to know from the minister, before we vote this amount, if the policy of the government is to abolish that distinction in colour and if any measure will be introduced to that effect this session.

Mr. BRODEUR. If I may be permitted to answer my hon. friend ((Mr. Monk) I may say this question has come up several times before the Tariff Commission. In Montreal representations were made by some persons that the different colours in the stamps should be abolished, while one section of the cigar manufacturers asked that the colours remain as they are. In Hamilton, London and Toronto, strong arguments were made against any change, while in Windsor representations to the contrary were urged upon us. You will see there is a difference of opinion. In order to change the colour of the stamps a change of tariff would have to follow and the tariff question has been postponed until next session.

Mr. MONK. Why is it necessary to change the tariff in order to change the stamps ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a different duty applying to each class of tobacco and a different stamp has to be used in consequence. Tobacco manufactured from foreign leaf has a blue stamp, tobacco manufactured from native leaf has a black stamp, tobacco manufactured from mixed foreign and Canadian leaf has a pink stamp, and all Canadian tobacco a green stamp. Each of these classes pays a different duty. If a man who manufactures from foreign leaf has a right to use a green stamp, he might defraud the department by paying the lower duty. When the tariff question comes up it will be considered whether the duty should be changed and whether the colour of the stamps should be retained.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The cigar manufacturers in Hamilton look on this as a very grave matter indeed, and the cigar makers also take the view that if the colour of the stamp is changed it would mean a reduction in the price of high class cigars, so that the manufacturers in order to compensate themselves for that loss would have to reduce the wages of the tradesman. The cigar makers object to this most strenuously, and the government must give the question most careful consideration before any change is made.

Mr. MONK. The government have been considering the question for many years and it looks to me as if the answer given by the minister (Mr. Brodeur) is simply an attempt to shelve the matter. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) has been misinformed by the officers who have told him that a change in the colour of the stamp depends upon a change in the tariff. He will find that it is quite possible for the government to change the colour of the stamp without in any way altering the tariff. It is impossible to see how a change in the tariff would make any difference in regard to these duties which are purely excise. The hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman represents the views of those interested in the importation of foreign leaf, whose object is to depreciate by every possible means the native product. I do not think there are any cigars now made, out of purely Canadian leaf ; efforts were made in the province of Quebec to engage in that industry, but I do not think it is carried on now. The producers of the native leaf simply ask that there be no distinction in the colour of the stamp, so that their product may be judged on its merits alone. The government is lending itself to the depreciation of native Canadian tobacco by maintaining this unfair distinction in the colours of the stamps. Are we to understand from the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) that this long deferred matter will be decided next session ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The matter will be dealt with when the tariff resolutions are brought down. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) says there will be no danger to revenue if only one colour be used in the stamps. But suppose tobacco manufactured in Montreal were sent to a warehouse in the west, how could it be ascertained there what tax would be paid on this tobacco ?

Mr. MONK. If the leaf was imported and manufactured in bond, the stamps are only affixed after the excise duty is paid.

Mr. BRODEUR. And as the law stands to-day, our only means of ascertaining that tobacco has paid the proper duty is by the variety in the colours of the stamps.

Mr. MONK. We deny that.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will be a cabinet minister one of these days ; he may be Minister of Inland Revenue, and he could not administer his department if the colour distinction were removed. It would be absolutely impossible that any fraud could be committed. That is the reason the department has adopted the different coloured stamps. It is in the interest of the revenue.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend says that the difference of colour must be maintained because otherwise the government could not see that the duties were paid.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am advised that so long as the different grades of duty are kept as they are to-day, it would result most seriously to the revenue to change them.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be as well to put the name on ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That would not do, because for a tobacco which is made of foreign leaf they could use Canadian leaf. I have studied the question very seriously, and the fact that my hon. friend is taking the opposite argument to that of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, shows how difficult it is to administer the excise department in the condition in which the duties are placed to-day.

Mr. MONK. I think my hon. friend from East Grey is right. I am perfectly sure that if you submitted the question to those interested, they would say that they prefer a uniform colour, and that the tobacco should be marked whether it is native or imported.

Mr. BRODEUR. No farmer in Jacques Cartier or Montcalm would accept the suggestion of my hon. friend to put the word 'Canadian' on his tobacco.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says they could put the wrong label on the tobacco. Might they not change the colour in the same way—putting on the Canadian tobacco the stamp that ought to be on the foreign ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a difference in the license also. There are four different licenses issued.

Excise—to enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturers, $43.000.

Mr. SPROULE. How is that bought now—by tender and contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, public tenders were called for last year by advertisement, and as a result the contract price was reduced by 11c. a gallon.

Mr. SPROULE. Has one individual got the whole contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, A. D. Gaul, of Montreal.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the price ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it is $1.29.

Mr. SPROULE. How many tenders were received ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think four or five.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the firm near Orillia, that was manufacturing this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is still manufacturing. The wood alcohol is one of the numerous by-products. There are also charcoal, acetate of lime and acetic acid.

Some resolutions reported.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Experimental Farms for the year ending November 30, 1905, and report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ending November 30, 1905.—Hon. Sydney Fisher.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 12.25 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Kettle River Valley Railway Company.—Mr. D. Ross.

COLLECTION OF LABOUR STATISTICS.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 109) to repeal the Act to provide for the collection and publishing of labour statistics. He said : The Act referred to has been on the statute-book for some time. It ought to have been repealed when the law creating the Department of Labour was enacted. The commission for the codification of the statutes pointed out that this law was no longer necessary. Therefore, I ask leave to introduce this Bill to repeal it.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I am not sure that I understood the minister's explanation. Is the idea to abolish the collection of statistics by the different representatives throughout the country ?

Mr. FISHER. No. The law it is proposed to repeal was one which authorized the Department of Agriculture to collect labour statistics. This work was never undertaken by the department. The Act creating the Department of Labour places this work of collecting and publishing statistics under that department.

Mr. INGRAM. The Act to be repealed was passed under the old government ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. But it was never acted upon, and has remained a dead letter.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). The object of this Bill is simply to prevent two departments being charged with the same duty.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—CLAIM OF MR. J. HANEY.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. How was the claim of Mr. J. Haney, contractor of the Hillsboro' bridge, against the Prince Edward Island Railway, for yard room at Charlottetown, contracted ?

2. Who ordered the closing of the switches against him, and why ?

3. How much did the matter cost ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. By reason of the detention of Mr. Haney's plant on the north side of harbour where his work was completed, which detention prevented him from taking plant across the harbour and continuing work on the south side of harbour.

2. Superintendent Sharp, of the Prince Edward Island Railway. Permission to transfer the plant was refused on the ground that the Murray Harbour branch had not been taken off the contractor's hands, he having objected to consent being given Mr. Haney to use it until the work was taken over, and on the ground that there was not sufficient room in the yard at Charlottetown to warrant the transfer of the plant to the yard.

MR. C. L. SMITH, POSTMASTER, WOODSTOCK, N.B.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

When was C. L. Smith appointed postmaster of Woodstock, N.B., and what is his salary ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General). Mr. C. L. Smith was appointed postmaster at Woodstock, N.B., on the 19th August, 1899. His salary, allowances and commission on box rents amounted to $2,654.39 for the year 1904-5.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—COST OF CONTINGENTS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Was the outfitting of the Canadian contingents for South Africa with clothing, arms, horses, and all necessary supplies, paid for by the Imperial government or by the Canadian government ?

2. If paid by the Imperial government, what was the total amount so paid ?

3. What were the total amounts paid for clothing, arms, horses and supplies, respectively ?

4. Did the Canadian government act as purchasing agents for the Imperial government ?

5. Was any commission paid by the Imperial government ? If so, what percentage, and what was the total amount of the commission so paid ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. The 1st and 2nd Canadian contingents were fitted out by and at the expense of the Canadian government. The cost of fitting out the contingents known as the Strathcona's Horse was borne by Lord Strathcona, and of the South African Constabulary and the 3rd and 4th contingents by the imperial government.

2 and 3. The total amounts paid for clothing, arms, horses and all necessary supplies respectively by the Canadian government for the 1st and 2nd contingents were: Pay, $445,000; transport, ocean, $670,000; transport, land, $110,000; clothing and equipment, $500,000; horses, $131,000; enlisting and sundry expenses, $119,000; total, $1,975,000. COST OF LIGHTING ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Before the orders of the day are called I wish to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) to a question which I had on the order paper and which was answered by the minister on April 5. I quote from 'Hansard.'

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. How many lighthouses are there between Lachine and Bay of Quinté ?
2. How many buoys are there fitted out with lights between Lachine and Bay of Quinté ?
3. How much was paid for carbide used for lighting system between Montreal and Bay of Quinté during the season of 1905?
4. What was the total cost for maintaining lighting system beween Montreal and Bay of Quinté for the season of 1905, including cost of maintaining and operating the steamers 'Scout,' 'Reserve' and 'Maisonneuve.' used on this lighting system ?
5. What was the total cost for maintaining the lighting system between Montreal and Bay of Quinté, season of 1896 ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I shall have to get the information from Prescott. We have written to Prescott about it and have not yet received an answer.

The question was not answered and it was dropped off the paper. I would like either to have the information now or have the question restored until I get the information.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I happen to have this answer in my hand. It has just been sent by Mr. Fraser. The answer is as follows :

1. 43 lighthouses, 2 lightships, this includes Nine Mile Point.
2. 36 gas buoys.
3. $2,975.
4. $36,701.57.
5. $7,979.90.

BROCKVILLE CHEESE CURING ROOM.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I also wanted to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a question which I had on the order paper and which the minister answered. On April 3, I drew his attention to the fact that there was a discrepancy in the answer and the minister said :

I shall be very glad indeed to have the accountant go through these figures again. Perhaps, in order to facilitate, the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to let me have the details which he says he has and which have not been published in 'Hansard.' Of course my accountant only had the 'Hansard' report to go upon. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) speaks of what he calls the 'loss,' but he does not take into account the benefit which the experiments have reaped for the country and which far outbalance any apparent loss.

I gave the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) the items as I gathered them from the Auditor General's Report. He said he would have his accountant go over them and see whether the statement he had made in answer to the question when I first put it on the paper was correct or not. I have not had from him yet a statement as to whether his accountant's version or mine as taken from the Auditor General's Report is the correct one and I would like to have a reply. The hon. minister is not present to-day but the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will draw his attention to 'Hansard,' and when the House meets again he will give me an answer.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Aylesworth) and the House to a return laid on the table on the 9th instant in reference to free rural mail delivery. The return consists in the report of two officers of the department who on instructions of the late Postmaster General proceeded to Washington to make certain investigations. I am very glad, and the House will be glad I presume, to have this report, but it does not comply with the order that the House made on the 6th of March, 1905. That order called for :

Copies of all reports, returns, estimates, correspondence, writings, records, documents, memoranda, or written or printed information of any kind in the possession or control of the Post Office Department, in reference to the question of establishing rural mail delivery in Canada, or the manner of estabishing or conducting such service, and the probable cost; including any information in the possession of the department as to the working of the United States system, or such a service or system elsewhere, and the annual expense and other particulars.

In fact all the documents in possession of the department upon this question. The House made that order no doubt inferring from the silence of the Postmaster General that there were papers, documents and correspondence upon this question, and of course there certainly are as we know from the discussion which took place. In answer to the order nothing has been brought down except this report which was not in existence at the time the order of the House was made, so there seems to have been some misconception as to what the order of the House referred to. I may say too, this order is dated 22nd May, 1905. As it is only fifteen pages, it is hard to understand the reason for the great delay in bringing it down. However, the main point to which I wish to call attention is this, that there must be a number of documents in the department which are of interest on this question, and which will probably show the matter in a different light from what this report does, and I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to call the attention of his officers to the matter, so that the order of the House may be complied with.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster lation.) Before the orders of the day are of which I had no personal knowledge whatever until it was mentioned by my hon. friend in the House a few days or a few weeks ago. I then made inquiries in the department with reference to the whole subject, and I was told then, and also afterwards in answer to a categorical question on my part, that there were no other documents touching this question in the department. I can ask again, but that is what I was told.

Mr. LENNOX. I have no hesitation in accepting the statement of the hon. Postmaster General, but from statements made on previous occasions, we had reason to infer that there had been other papers. However, perhaps the Postmaster General will have no objection to ask again.

CIRCULAR TO THE JUDGES.

Mr. J. E. E. LEONARD (Laval). (Translation.) Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the hon. minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) whether or not the circular letter which was referred to last week by the hon. gentleman, was really addressed by himself or his officers to all the judges. I would like to know whether or not this circular was addressed to all the judges in the province of Quebec, particularly to the judges of the district of Montreal. My reason for calling for this information is that the hon. minister in his statement declared that although he had sent the circular to all the judges in Canada, but few as much as answered it.

I would, therefore, ask for an answer as to whether or not this circular was really sent out and if so, when, by the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) It is customary, when some hon. member wants to secure information, that the minister concerned should be given notice of it. If in this instance the hon. gentleman had seen fit to give me a few minutes' notice, he would not see me in the predicament his request has placed me in. Therefore, I contend that it would be wise not to depart from this wise custom.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I do not mean to find fault with the course pursued by the hon. minister and my intention is not to throw any blame on him. I merely wish to find out whether or not this circular was addressed to all the judges indiscriminately. I am led to believe by the information I have that it was not.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) I am not in a position to give other information but that which comes to my memory just at present. It might be, of course, that these informations are not as complete as they otherwise would have been, had I had the opportunity after being duly notified to investigate.

A few days after that question was put by the hon. member for Grey, I immediately gave instructions to send out to all the judges a copy of the circular which is being referred to by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Leonard). This circular was drafted by my deputy and looked over by me. When I spoke of it before this House, I was under the impression that my instructions had been carried out, and that the letter had been sent out to all the judges. But I found out since that owing to the officer entrusted with the mailing of it falling sick, the circular was not addressed to all the judges but to part of them only. As a matter of fact, some of the judges in the province of Quebec as I notice, had not received it at that time.

I may add for the information of my hon. friend and all who are concerned that notwithstanding the fact that this circular has been issued for some time past, I have so far received but very few answers.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Would the hon. gentleman require that I should ask for a return for these documents ?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) Not for the answers which were received.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I presume that these answers are of a private character ?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) I am quite willing at any time to let the hon. gentleman take knowledge of them.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I suppose copy of the circular will be brought down ?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) Most certainly.

The orders of the day having been called.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House is not disposed to go in Committee of Supply, and therefore I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business may be expected on Tuesday next ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I expect that the Minister of Railways will take up his Bill on Railways, and the Minister of Justice will take one or two of his Bills, and then we will take Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 4.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. A. E. DYMENT moved :

That all petitions for private Bills presented to the House on Tuesday the 10th instant and Wednesday the 11th instant be read and received forthwith, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for receiving petitions for private Bills.

He said: I may say in explanation of this motion that the time for presenting these Bills was extended to the 12th instant, but the House adjourned on the 11th. I think, therefore, it is proper to make this motion.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF DAMS.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I was asked a question with respect to certain correspondence, and I was also asked whether the government would be willing to have it laid on the table and I answered, yes. But as no motion was made for the return I now beg to move:

For leave to present copies of orders in council and corespondence having reference to the assumption by the Department of Railways and Canals of the several dams owned by the Ontario government on the head and subsidiary waters of the Trent canal.

Motion agreed to.

HAY TRADE REGULATIONS.

Mr. AIME BEAUPARLANT (St. Hyacinthe—(Translation)—moved for leave to introduce a Bill entitled an Act respecting the hay trade.

He said : Mr. Speaker, as some hon. members are anxious that I should explain the object of this Bill, I may state that, as indicated by its title, it proposes to regulate the hay trade. I shall not enter just now into an explanation of all its details ; suffice it to say that the object of this Bill is to add to the good name and, consequently, to raise the price of an agricultural product which is very abundant in this country. Moreover, this Bill has in view to prevent some unscrupulous and careless persons from depreciating the hay which is sold by a number of dealers whose reputation is unassailable. The object of this Bill is also to deprive buyers abroad of any semblance of reason for refusing to accept consignments—a thing of frequent occurrence when the price drops in the interval between the sale and the delivery.

As to what means should be adopted, I believe it would be fairly feasible and effective to enact that the hay presser shall affix to each bale a label giving his name, his address, the quality of the hay according to the standard established by the Bill, and the weight of the bundle.

Another means would be to prohibit the baling of hay in such a manner as to show on the surface an article altogether different from the hay contained in the interior of the bale. I would also recommend—for the sake of uniformity, in order to put all dealers upon the same footing—that the shipment of hay from any part of Canada be forbidden unless the bales are labelled as aforesaid.

So far as the extent of this trade is concerned, I may say that it amounts to about two million dollars annually, if we only take into account the hay which is exported. Surely, such a trade is well worth the attention of the law-makers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this Bill leaves the hay growers at liberty to deal as they think fit with those who buy hay for their own use. But, the moment the sale becomes a commercial transaction properly speaking, that is to say, the moment the generality of careful farmers or the public are interested, I believe it is desirable that these should be protected. This Bill will, in my opinion, afford real protection to the mass of citizens, should the means I suggest be adopted.

I confidently submit it to the judgment of the House. I know that the hon. members, with the wisdoms that characterises them, will take it up in a spirit of fairness and adopt it, either in its actual form or with such amendments as they will deem fit to make after giving the matter due consideration.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS IN PROVINCIAL SECURITIES.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government one or two questions in connection with a return which has been brought down, being a > Return to an order of the House of Commons, dated the 17th July, 1905, for copies of all correspondence, documents, resolutions and other papers relating to any efforts or proposals to authorize the investment of trust funds in the United Kingdom in the securities of any province of Canada, and the fulfilment of any necessary conditions to that end.

I believe that this subject is governed almost completely by chapter 62 of the Imperial Acts of 1900. The second section of the Act provides that:

> The securities in which a trustee may invest under the powers of the Trustee Act, 1893, shall include any colonial stock which is registered in the United Kingdom in accordance with the provisions of the Colonial Stock Acts, 1877 and 1892, as amended by this Act, and with respect to which there have been observed such conditions (if any) as the treasury may by order notified in the London 'Gazette' prescribe.

I understand that an arrangement was made some two years ago by which the securities of the Dominion of Canada could be inscribed so that trustees in the United Kingdom might invest in them. There has been correspondence going on from 1900 to the present time between the government of British Columbia and this government in the first instance, and latterly between the government of Ontario and this government. That correspondence was directed to the end that the securities of these two provinces might be registered in the United Kingdom under the provisions of the statute to which I have called attention. I am not fully familiar with all the difficulties that have been found to exist but I observe a Memorial from the government of the province of Ontario which sets them forth pretty fully. As I understand the chief difficulty, it is that the government of the United Kingdom required the government of Canada to consent to the disallowance of any statute passed by the parliament of Canada which might be held to infringe upon the rights of the holders of such securities. I understand that the present administration gave their consent to the exercise of power by the imperial government for that purpose. So far as the provinces are concerned a difficulty, as I understand, has arisen in this respect that the power of disallowance under the British North Ameria Act must be exercised not by the government of the United Kingdom but by the Governor in Council of Canada. I observe that in the Memorial to which I have just now called attention—the Memorial of the province of Ontario addressed to His Excellency the Governor General some few months ago—a suggestion has been made as follows:

> The government of the province of Ontario would also respectfully submit that if deemed necessary the instructions from His Majesty to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada might be extended to authorize him to disallow any such legislation of this province as might prejudicially affect the interests of such stockholders.

In other words, as I understand the proposal, it is that the government of Canada would, at the request of the imperial government, exercise any powers of disallowance in respect to the provincial legislation which might be necessary for the purpose of protecting trustee investments in the United Kingdom in any securities of the provinces that have been registered under the terms of the statute to which I have referred.

I do not know whether any action has been taken by the government to bring about that result. I mention this because I notice that the government of the province of British Columbia are very firmly of the opinion, expressed several times in the correspondence which has been brought down, that if the securities of British Columbia could be registered in the United Kingdom so as to permit of the investment in them by trustees they would command a very much better price than they do at the present time and thus the finances of the province, in so far as they depend upon future loans, would be placed in a very much better position. I do not know whether or not the government are taking the suggestion of the government of Ontario into consideration. If the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not prepared to give an answer on the subject today, would either of them be good enough to take note of the matter and give an answer at some future day as it seems to me that it is of sufficient importance to demand immediate attention at the hands of the government.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I fancy the correspondence to which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden has referred includes all that has taken place, and if there is no report upon the line of what he has now suggested I fancy there is no such document in existence. However, owing to my absence from the House I have not seen the return. I should be very glad to look into it and if there is any information needed I should be most happy to give it to my hon. friend. The difficulties in the way of obtaining admission to the trustee list are very much greater than are supposed; they were found greater for a long time by the Dominion of Canada than we thought reasonable. It was many years before the Dominion of Canada was able to secure admission for its Dominion stock to the trustee list, and no provincial stock is likely to be admitted without hesitation and difficulty. Of course the provinces stand upon their own responsibility, but if without incurring any financial obligation we can in any way facilitate the provinces in this matter I quite agree that we should do it. If there is anything necessary to that end we should be glad to co-operate. I have no recollection of the imperial government ever stating that they would be prepared to admit the stocks of the provinces on these terms; possibly they may have made such a statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think they have.

Mr. FIELDING. Even if we accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, I am afraid it will not be sufficient, but there is no reason why the Dominion government should not do anything it can towards that good end.

WESTERN BLOCK—COLLAPSE OF NEW TOWER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he has any further information for the House with reference to the investigation, which I suppose is now being held, into the cause of the disaster to the Western Block tower, and whether he can inform the House if there was an inspector and what was his name. I have gathered from the discussion in the House and in the press, that while Mr. Taylor had a certain charge of this matter he was not an inspector in the ordinary sense; that his office duties were such as to prevent him giving to the work as it proceeded that attention which an inspector or a clerk of works would be supposed to give. The name of some person was suggested in the previous discussion as having had imposed upon him the duty of inspecting the work as it went on. Would the minister be good enough to give whatever information he deems it proper to give at the present time.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). The gentlemen who were appointed by order in council to investigate this matter commenced proceedings on Monday and Tuesday and they went thoroughly into the plans and specifications. I have neither asked nor received from them any report as yet.

After they had proceeded a certain stage, they thought it of the greatest importance that a certain part of the wall should be taken down so that they would be able to see the nature of the construction. That necessitated the putting up of some plant, and the commission adjourned until that should be done with the intention of starting work to-morrow morning at half past ten o'clock. The plant in the meantime has been prepared. As to the inspector, Mr. Taylor had full charge of the work. The question as to whether sufficient care was exercised in regard to the construction is one which will be brought before the commissioners and it is specially mentioned in the reference to them asking for a full investigation. The House I think might very properly wait until we have a full report of the investigation in that respect. The very moment the report is received by me I shall lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not asking for any criticism of judgment on Mr. Taylor, but I was suggesting that his other duties confined him to his office, and for that reason, as I understood, there was an inspector appointed altogether outside of Mr. Taylor.

Mr. HYMAN. He was not an inspector in the proper sense of the word; I mean no inspector was on the work all the time outside of Mr. Taylor. I was very careful in the order in council to draw the attention of the commissioners to that particular fact and to ask them to report as to whether in their opinion the department have exercised sufficient care in reference to the building.

OTTAWA POST OFFICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the position in reference to the Ottawa post office building at the present time. I understand it has been in progress for between two and three years and that about $172,000 have been expended upon it. There have been statements made that the roof is not in a very satisfactory condition, that it is sagging or that the supports are sprung, that a good deal of water has come in, that the plastering of the rooms has been injured, and that the work generally is not in a very satisfactory condition. It is also said that the minister has found it necessary already to hold a certain investigation into irregularities in connection with the building. Would the minister state, when it is expected the building will be completed, why the delay has been so great, and whether an investigation has already been held into irregularities in carrying on the work.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). The references of my hon. friend to the state of the building are entirely new to me. I have had no report, I have had no hint even of anything of the kind occurring. The post office building itself is practically finished ; there are certain fittings still required and this work the department has on hand at the present time. The House will understand that the work proceeded with difficulty because of the fact that the lower floor was occupied by the post office department, and great care had to be used during the reconstruction of the building. As to certain irregularities, spoken of by the hon. gentleman, a report reached me a few months ago in reference to the conduct of one of the officers employed on the building; it reached me in a way that I felt ought to be taken notice of. An investigation was held. The evidence was taken under oath and it turned out there was nothing against the officer in question. I shall be glad to lay the papers on the table of the House.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queen's P.E.I.). I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works when I may expect the correspondence between the government and the Dominion Coal Company in reference to the improvement of Glace Bay harbour ; ordered by the House on March 21.

Mr. HYMAN. I hope to be able to lay it on the table of the House by Wednesday next.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). A week or more ago I made a motion for the return of certain papers in connection with the construction of the Trent canal ; the minister has been good enough to bring down certain papers asked for in another matter by me, and I hope he will lose no time in bringing the Trent canal papers down.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend refer to the water-powers in possession of the Dominion government ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, I refer to the contracts and plans, and the moneys expended in connection with the Trent canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is in course of preparation. I have had to-day a statement from the clerk in charge saying that the accountant and law clerk are preparing statements, and Mr. Grant has been asked for a report as to the progress, and he hopes to have it within a day or two.

EMERSON POST OFFICE.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs (Hon. William Paterson) to a clipping from a Winnipeg paper which has been sent to me. I think it is my duty to allow the minister to have a chance to deny what seems to be the allegation in this letter, with reference to the collector of customs at Emerson. The report goes on to say that one Louis G. Gagnon, a collector of customs at Emerson, having been in charge for about three years or more, developed tendencies in several directions, one of which was to dismiss officers under him, who had to be restored to their positions when investigations were made by the superior officers and by the minister to whom the complaints were ultimately carried. It is also reported that some sixty-five irregularities were proved against him and that he went under cover for a number of months by way of suspension and now, when everybody supposed that he was gone to return no more, he has been reinstated and the paper says that there is something like an incipient strike developing in the office of Emerson. Now if this is so it is not very creditable, and if it is not so I hope the minister will give his denial to it. It may be that the minister's attention has not been brought to it.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). No, no article in a paper has been brought to my attention but I know the circumstances of the case. There has been trouble there and it was not a very easy matter to arrive at the real facts of the case. An investigation and report were made by the inspector for Manitoba and the Northwest provinces, which seemed to him to warrant the suspension of the officer. He was under suspension for some little time. The charges I might say were not in the opinion of the department at all conclusive. We did not feel that we were warranted in dispensing with the services of the collector altogether, nor did we, while things were in that condition, feel that we should remove the suspension. We waited until the chief inspector who was in Europe, where he had to attend to some public business, returned and then we had him go up and look thoroughly into the whole matter. As a result of his investigation and report the collector resumed his duties there. There seems to be a good deal of feeling and strife in the community there and it was a rather difficult matter to get at the facts, but from the chief inspector's report, which was very thorough, the department came to the conclusion that we would be warranted in reinstating the officer. I might say frankly that my own opinion is that when a suitable opportunity occurs it would perhaps be better for the peace of the community and for the conduct of the office if we were to effect an exchange to some other place.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the strike is practically on ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, there is no strike that I know of. Does this paper say there is a strike ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know anything about a strike being on.

POST OFFICE AT GOODERHAM.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria). I desire to draw the attention of the Postmaster General (Hon. A. B. Aylesworth) to a communication which has been sent by one of his inspectors to the postmistress at Gooderham. The point to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister is that his post office inspector, without any investigation whatever into the facts of the case, seems to have taken upon himself to adjudge the postmistress guilty of charges never preferred against her, of which there is no evidence and of which no evidence can be produced. The letter is as follows :

Dear Madam,—I regret to say that very serious complaints have been made against the management of the post office at Gooderham, and as this is not the first complaint I look upon, it makes matters far more serious, and if proof can be established of the charges made of course it means a change in the postmastership at Gooderham. It has been reported to the department that matter passing through the mail is made the subject of conversation and publicity in the village. While post office business is strictly confidential it would appear that the public in your village learn from the officials of circumstances in connection with mail matter passing through of which they should have no knowledge whatever—that parcels coming and going are frequently opened and examined.

I would like a full explanation of this matter by return mail, as the charge is a serious one. Your daughter may be in charge, and if so this matter better be seriously discussed with her.

Yours truly,

H. MERRICK,
Post Office Inspector.

The Postmistress, Gooderham.

I may say that the secret of the whole business is that a certain gentleman named Mr. Pearson, in charge of public works for this government in that locality, has a friend whom he wishes to put into this office, and since the reappointment of this gentleman to the position he has been very active in the locality in making all sorts of trouble not only for this postmistress but for other persons in positions whom he wishes to get rid of and annoy. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact and beg to inform him that the postmistress invites the fullest investigation.

Mr. PATERSON.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACTS AMENDMENT—ORDER DISCHARGED.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK moved :

The order for the third reading of Bill (No. 67) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act be discharged, and the Bill be referred back to the committee.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 62) to amend the Railway Act, 1903—Mr. Emmerson—read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1,

Subsection 3 of section 44 of the Railway Act, 1903, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

3. An appeal shall lie from the board to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of jurisdiction, but such appeal shall not lie unless it is allowed by a judge of the said court upon application and notice to the parties and the board and hearing such of them as appear and desire to be heard ; the costs of such application shall be in the discretion of the judge.

An appeal shall also lie from the board to the said court upon any question which in the opinion of the board is a question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board. The granting of such leave shall be in the discretion of the board.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The clause in the present Act is as follows :

An appeal shall lie from the board to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of jurisdiction, but such appeal shall not lie unless the same is allowed by a judge of the said court upon application and hearing the parties and the board ; the costs of such application shall be in the discretion of the judge.

The remainder of the section is not changed. The only change is the substitution of the words ' and notice to the parties and the board and hearing such of them as appear and desire to be heard.' These words are substituted for the words ' and hearing the parties and the board.' This change is made because of doubt as to the jurisdiction of the judge in case the board were not represented. It was submitted by the commissioners as a desirable amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should think it would improve the wording of the section if you would insert the word ' upon ' before the word ' notice.'

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no objection.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2,

Mr. EMMERSON. This section provides that the Board may accept evidence upon affidavits or written affirmation in cases in which it seems to it proper to do so. It also provides who may administer oaths and what documents may be accepted as prima facie evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The matters dealt with in this section are more particularly matters which might be provided for by rules made by the commissioners, if appropriate powers were given them. Is there nothing to that effect in the present Act ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think there is, but there seems to be a doubt as to the power of the board to accept evidence by affidavit even under regulation or according to prescribed rules. This amendment will remove any such doubt.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this on the recommendation of the commissioners themselves ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there any precedent for this or is it an entirely new provision ? It would be well to consider whether it is advisable to give power to the board to accept evidence upon affidavit in cases where objection is made by the other side. Suppose a railway company, for instance, should apply for leave to substitute an affidavit for oral evidence, will the board have absolute power to grant that application even against the objection of the other side, and without giving the other side the opportunity to cross-examine ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This wide power seems necessary in order to avoid expense to litigants. This is not for the purpose of permitting such evidence by affidavit in contentious matters although such power is given to the board, but the object is to enable the board to accept evidence by affidavit or declaration in ex parte applications and avoid expense to parties who consider themselves aggrieved and send in applications for redress. Supposing application came from the territories or British Columbia, this would enable the board to accept evidence in favour of such application by affidavit or declaration. The board, however, may order a hearing, if one be deemed desirable, and call upon the parties interested to show cause. This amendment is intended to facilitate and make more easy access to this court by the citizens of Canada. A farmer along the line, interested in crossings, may seek redress for a grievance by this easy and cheap method. Otherwise it would be necessary for him to bring witnesses to Ottawa and incur considerable expense. While the discretion given the board is a large one, I think that, considering the fact that this court is one of the highest in Canada, it may be safely left with it. Because the words here are, 'in cases in which it seems proper to it—that is the board to do so.' And naturally, as a judicial tribunal they will exercise that discretion with great care.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as evidence of a general character, such as service of a notice, is concerned, of course, it would be very proper that it should be given upon affidavit,—it usually is in all such matters in court. But, so far as evidence in regard to the merits of a case is concerned, evidence which one might liken to that given upon the trial of an action in court, it seems to me a little doubtful that such evidence should be given by affidavit without giving to the other side the opportunity of cross examination. It is a pretty general rule which should govern the courts——

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will allow me—I neglected to explain one point. My hon. friend has asked whether this was legislation that had been enacted elsewhere or whether it was original ? So far as I know, it is original with the chairman of the commission. And the chairman states that his experience as chairman of that board has led him to make this suggestion in the interest of speedy dealing with oftentimes, trivial matters, and the minimizing of the costs of applications.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, these are powers conferred upon the commission, and we must assume, I suppose, that they will be exercised with very great discretion. But I was about to observe that giving evidence upon affidavit without opportunity for cross-examination—evidence respecting merits of an application—would be very undesirable—

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But should not assume however that the commission——

Mr. EMMERSON. The board will hardly——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will hardly exercise its powers in that way.

Mr. LENNOX. It was asked a few moments ago about the general powers of the board to make rules. Section 23 and others provide for jurisdiction and general powers, section 26 and others for practice and procedure. Very probably all the powers it would be advisable to give the commission would be found capable of being worked out under these.

Mr. EMMERSON. Section 25 provides for orders and regulations.

Mr. LENNOX. I would pointedly call the attention of the minister to the fact that the Board exercises very great powers, and its findings have a very decisive effect, if we may use that expression. Under section 42, subsection 3, it is provided that 'The finding or determination of the board upon any question of a fact within its jurisdiction shall be binding and conclusive on all courts.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 44 gives unlimited appeal.

Mr. LENNOX. The section says, 'Subject to the provisions of this section, every decision or order of the Board shall be final.' We have to keep these sections in view in determining whether these——

Mr. EMMERSON. There are large powers of appeal under this section 44.

Mr. LENNOX. I was coming to that. We have to decide here whether it is wise to confer upon the board the right to deal with the production of evidence in the way contemplated,—by affidavit, and, so far as I know, though I may not be right in that, without the right of cross-examination upon these affidavits which is allowed upon ordinary proceedings in the courts. This, I submit, is a rather dangerous provision. Section 44 provides that subject to certain provisions, the decision of the board shall be 'binding and conclusive on all courts,' and it then goes on to provide under.

An appeal shall also lie from the board to such court upon any question which in the opinion of the board is a question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board. The granting of such leave shall be in the discretion of the board.

Therefore even in a proposed appeal upon a question of law three different conditions confront you. In the first place, the board must decide that, in their opinion the question is one of law; then, only upon application to the board can you get leave to appeal; and in the third place, the granting of leave to appeal is wholly within the discretion of the board. It is altogether a matter for the government to consider and to consider carefully. Therefore, I again call the attention of the minister very distinctly to the point that this is an innovation of a very serious character. The minister points out that a resident in British Columbia may find it to his advantage to be allowed to put in an affidavit instead of bringing a witness to the sitting of the board here. But, I would remind him that it is expected that the board, will, from time to time, visit British Columbia. I believe that it will be found in actual practice that it will be the railway company that will produce the affidavit much more frequently than the individual. It is very easy to provide against undue expense by leaving the costs in the discretion of the board. If you give the board the right to direct an affidavit, subject to objection to be taken by the opposing party, and if you leave the question of costs in the discretion of the board, I think you will accomplish, probably, all that you can accomplish in the direction of giving each party a fair opportunity of getting a matter determined as inexpensively as possible, yet without running the risk, the very great risk that I think will be incurred by doing away with the ordinary safeguards provided in the production of affidavits.

Mr. EMMERSON. The provisions relating to this board generally are practically an innovation. It has been an experiment; there is no precisely similiar tribunal anywhere in America; even the Inter-state Commerce Commission is not on a par with this Railway Commission of Canada. It seems to me that in view of the experience that these commissioners have had in connection with the duties devolving upon them, their views should have very great weight with the members of this commission. I know that they have great weight with me. Their suggestions, unless very radical, unless they violate some principle of our jurisprudence——

Mr. HAGGART. Have the commission asked for this amendment?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the request of the commission. And I have just said that I believe their suggestions should be followed as near as we can follow them, having regard to other principles governing our jurisprudence. Now, I do not think this power violates any principle of procedure followed in the other courts. This only leaves it discretionary. It is not a question as to who shall pay the costs, the question is to avoid unnecessary costs, I care not who is to pay them. The responsibility placed upon the board of determining whether it is proper to accept that written evidence, is a serious responsibility, and every time they have a question of this kind before them they will certainly hesitate before they accept such evidence. They will be guided, I assume, by the principles of justice and equity, having regard to the necessities of the case having regard to the circumstances and to the environments in connection with the grievance which may be sought to be remedied.

On section 3,

Section 91 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

91. Dividends, at and after the rate of so much per share upon the several shares held by the shareholders in the stock of the company, may, from time to time, be declared and paid by the directors out of the net profits of the undertaking.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to allow dividends to be declared by directors without the sanction of the shareholders being first obtained. The law has been different, but it has never been observed. Directors have been declaring dividends, for which they have never first asked the sanction of their shareholders. That is the uniform custom of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that apply to all railway companies?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that applies to all railway companies.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you mean by the words 'at and after?'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is a common legal expression.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the expression of the Act as we have it now, consecrated by long usage.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would ask the minister, in connection with this question of dividends, whether the Canadian Pacific Railway is making application this session for an increase of its capital, and whether he proposes to make any general legislation covering matters of that kind?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have seen in the newspapers that they are increasing their capital stock, that they have done so.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there more to come?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know; I am not advised.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The minister knows that what they propose to do is to give stock at par to their shareholders instead of selling that stock at a premium and putting the premiums into the treasury of the company, as I believe they ought to do in the public interest.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not the guardian of their conscience.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But you are the guardians of the rights of the public, and if there is no provision in the Railway Act to secure that protection to the public then there ought to be a protection of that kind. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, like all other great corporations enjoying public franchises, have a duty to the public, because the tax they take from the public is put upon the traffic that passes over the road, and it certainly follows that if stock is sold to shareholders at par when it could be sold at a premium, and the premiums put into the treasury of the company, the toll or tax probably would be less than it will be under the plan which it is proposed to follow. If that thing is done to-day, it is the duty of the Minister of Railways to see that an amendment is made to the Railway Act that will cover the case.

Mr. EMMERSON. Supposing a change as suggested by my hon. friend were made and they were compelled to sell, what would become of the premium ? It would go into the treasury of the company, and it is within the power of the company to divide that among their shareholders. This is not any violation of the principles which govern all corporations, and you would not apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other company any principle different from that which governs general business transactions and corporations throughout the country.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But does it not follow that if the company puts this money into its treasury then the Railway Commission would be justified in reducing freights, if the public ask for it? Certainly parliament would be justified then in doing what I asked them to do long ago, that is to make a maximum passenger rate. If the company has an overflowing treasury, as the Canadian Pacific Railway has to-day, and would have a still more overflowing treasury if it were allowed to put that premium in the treasury of the company, then parliament would be justified, and the commission would be justified, in reducing the rates of the company all along the line. Now, I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of his government to protect the people of this country in so important an issue as this. It will not do to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other great corporation to give stock to shareholders for less than it will really bring in the market. That stock ought to be sold, the law ought to compel them to sell it and put that money into the treasury, and if the money is in the treasury, and the treasury is full to overflowing, then a case has been made out for a reduction of the freight and passenger rates. This proposition is of far-reaching importance, it comes home to the people of this country; it raises the question of a reduction of freight rates, and the regulation of companies in a most vital way. Therefore, it is a question worthy of attention and worthy of a declaration of policy on the part of the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. The line of argument followed by my hon. friend is certainly a very faulty one. The very fact that they would have the premiums in their treasury would be followed by the additional fact that their capitalization would be largely increased. For what purpose? In order to facilitate the operation of the road; in order to add to the betterments of the railway; in order to furnish the public with better facilities, both as to passenger and freight traffic —all this would be in the interest of the country, to the advantage of the patrons, and necessarily there would be a greater draft upon the earning power and less dividends to the shareholders. It seems to me it makes but little difference whether the shareholders are given the advantage of that stock at a fixed rate, a consequence which usually governs in relation to all corporations, or whether that stock is put on the market and sold at a premium and the premiums are paid into the treasury of the company for distribution among the shareholders. Because the premiums do belong to the shareholders.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. To the public.

Mr. EMMERSON. To the shareholders. They have invested their capital and they are entitled to the accretion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I dispute this doctrine of this twentieth century government, which is here to-day justifying the watering of capital stock in another way—it is nothing but stock watering. We know what other companies do. If a bank increases its capital stock the premium goes into the treasury of the bank. The Consumers Gas Company in Toronto are selling their stock at a premium, that premium goes into the treasury, and the consumers in Toronto find that there is a steady reduction in the price of gas taking place. I contend that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by reason of its franchise and its contract with the public, is bound to husband its resources in every way that will lead to a reduction of rates. Now, the shareholders take all this money. They do not divide up a portion of it with the community or with the public. They are not doing justly by the public. They are benefiting themselves and they are keeping up the rates. The doctrine is maintained in this parliament and it has been maintained in other legislatures, that the legislature is not called upon to interfere with the watering of capital stock. Let me tell you how it works out in some prominent cases. In the city of Toronto there is the street railway franchise controlled by the Toronto Street Railway Company which has capital stock of $6,000,000. That was distributed among the promoters of the scheme gratis. It was given to the syndicate, they sold it to the public and the result is that now the first $1,000 that is earned every day by the street railway in Toronto goes to pay the interest on this $6,000,000 of watered stock, whereas that $1,000, instead of going to pay the interest on that watered stock, should go to the betterment of the road, to the improvement of the equipment and to giving the public a better service. But, the public get none of it and the shareholders get everything. Let me give you another instance. This big Electrical Development Company over at the Falls has been handled in the same way. The capital stock has been placed at $6,000,000 and it has been distributed among the promoters although they have paid for it not one cent. They are selling it to the public to-day at 60 and 70, and they are trying to get it up to par. In the latest statement of the Electrical Development Company this $6,000,000 is actually set down as having been expended on the works. It was not expended on the works. Now, in the official statement they say what the original franchise was worth and they say that this $6,000,000 was put into the work. They intend to ask the public to pay interest on this watered stock. The time has come when the watering of stock should not be encouraged. It should not be allowed to be issued by companies of this kind, but the General Act should compel them to stop watering their stock and it should provide that when an issue of new stock is made, where the stock is selling at a premium, the new issue should be sold at a premium and the proceeds should go into the treasury and be used as the basis of a reduction of the rates and tolls imposed upon the public. The hon. gentleman has not answered my argument, but he appears to justify this stock watering which is going on in all directions in this country. The greatest evil of to-day is this stock watering which is going on in connection with all kinds of public propositions and public franchises. I think that the time has come in dealing with a great corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway to pass a law so that if they increase their capital stock they shall not give it as par if it will bring more in the market but they shall sell it at the highest price, place the money in the treasury and reduce the charges which they impose upon the public, or in other words, that they shall share the proceeds of the issue with the public. The public has put millions and millions into that company, has given them millions and millions acres of land, has given them great franchises, and now that the company have justified the original construction of the road the public are entitled to some of the benefit and the way in which the public can get that benefit is in a reduction of the rates.

Mr. EMMERSON. The use of the term 'watered stock' may tickle my hon. friend's ears but it certainly has no meaning with respect to the application which he has made. Any increase of the capital stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway can only be made under the authority of parliament, and it would only be, I would assume, for the purpose of expenditure in the improvement of the railway, and it could not be diverted from such use. Does my hon. friend wish that special legislation should be had in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway? He has had that particular railway in his mind and he says that because of the increase of the capital stock and because of their action in this matter their profits would not be so increased that application could be made to the Board of Railway Commissioners in order to have their freight rates reduced. My hon. friend is surely aware of the fact that the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway, over a great portion of their line, are not subject to the order and direction of the Railway Commission.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will my hon. friend pardon me for a moment ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to finish. My hon. friend knows also that the fact that they are not so subject to the commission is due to legislation which, I think, my hon. friend supported when it was before parliament.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me if I tell him that I have heard the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) say in this House that now the Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates are subject to the control of the commission, and that the special privileges they had enjoyed have been removed by negotiations of one kind and another.

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Crow's Nest ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No. Before this debate is over I may produce that statement and I think the hon. Minister of Justice will bear me out when I say that he has made that statement in this House. It all goes to show that the hon. gentleman is wrong and that the Canadian Pacific Railway and all railways should be compelled by a General Act to utilize their stock in such a way as to reduce the traffic burdens of the public. This is the first instance in which it has come up. Here is a railway which has had these great privileges, these great franchises, these great bonuses in money and lands given to them and now they are becoming wealthy. Their stock was all watered. We know that.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. At least the common stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway was handed out to the syndicate and they distributed it amongst their friends, they gave it away, some of it was sold for ten and fifteen cents on the dollar. To-day it is quoted at 176.

Mr. EMMERSON. 172.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The passenger and freight tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway are so regulated as to pay interest on that 176 although the stock was originally given away for nothing. If this railway company now is allowed to continue to issue this stock at par to its shareholders who can sell it at 160 or 170 just as sure as the sun shines the traffic will have to pay interest on every dollar of that stock. The public should be protected by proper legislation being inserted in this Railway Act. We are dealing with dividends. The hon. gentleman has seen fit to deal with dividends, but now a condition has arisen under which he ought to deal with the issue of stock under the circumstances as they are presented here. I hope he will see some light before this debate is over and that he will find a way of dealing with this grievance.

On section 4,

Mr. EMMERSON. This amendment is proposed in order to give the minister power to approve of a portion of the route. In order to advance the construction of a railway it frequently becomes necessary for them to apply for the approval of the location map. They may not have all the data which the minister would require in determining as to whether the whole route should be approved or not, but it may be in the interest of the public in the interest of the company and in the interest of all concerned that a portion or a section of the whole route should be approved. This has frequently occurred in my day and I have always had doubts as to whether it was in the power of the Minister of Railways to approve of the route map unless he approved of the whole route covering the whole line as required by the charter.

Mr. HAGGART. The law formerly merely mentioned the objective points of a railway and left to the company the selection of the route ; the filing of the plans was a perfunctory affair and gave the minister no power to alter the location of the line. On account of some cases in British Columbia in which the railway companies had used their power for the purpose of building stations on their own property outside of a town, or, building up little rival towns to those already founded, the law was changed so as to prevent any such injustice as that. But the present Bill gives the minister very wide powers ; if a company is chartered to build from, say, Toronto to Ottawa, the minister can practically make the railway run where he pleases between these points. That is a power which should be vested, not in the executive but in parliament alone. It may be necessary to give the minister power to approve the location of a portion of a line so that construction may be proceeded with, but that is a different thing from giving the minister power to practically fix the location ; it may be at the instance of a political friend—of course I don't say this government would be influenced in that way——

Mr. EMMERSON. You shock me.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be that a political friend shall insist that the minister shall locate a line through his section of the country because in that section there live supporters of the government, as contrasted with another section where the residents are of a different political faith.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) has been at the railway committee the past two or three meetings——

Mr. HAGGART. I have never missed a meeting.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not making any charge against my hon. friend, but occasionally he is not present.

Mr. HAGGART. I have always been there.

Mr. EMMERSON. At all events, this matter has been discussed in the railway committee and the object of this Bill is to ensure that the wishes of parliament shall be carried out with respect to the route. The two objective points between which a railroad is sanctioned to run are not to be the governing features; the people in the country between the termini are interested, and the minister has to see that justice is done them. The railway committee in its wisdom has required that there shall be a map exhibited, and that is done for the purpose of guiding the members of the committee to a conclusion as to in what particular parts of the country the line shall be authorized along a particular route. Section 122 is designed for the purpose of requiring the Minister of Railways to carry out the behest of parliament in that regard, and to see that the line is located where parliament intended it should be located. Cases have arisen in which the minister has approved of a route map, that subsequently the companies thought it in their interest to make application to the Railway Commission, which has large powers with respect to the location, to divert the railroad to the extent of twelve and fifteen miles from the route located by the minister. If under section 122 that can be done, then the section means absolutely nothing at all. If section 122 does not contemplate practically that before a railway company sends in a route map it shall make a location survey, then I cannot understand English. That section requires that the road shall be located on the route map, and on the minister lies the responsibility of determining whether or not that route should be followed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose we concede all that; I understand that the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is this, that it is not the executive to whom that matter should be submitted but the Railway Commission, that it is a matter more properly to be determined by an independent tribunal than by the executive for the reasons he stated.

Mr. EMMERSON. The minister is called upon to carry out what parliament has determined with respect to that and I say that the map which is filed before the railway committee should be the governing map. This particular section which we are discussing has reference to the approval in sections and it becomes necessary in the public interest that such approval should be given or withheld with respect to sections. Perhaps the railway companies are not prepared to go on with the immediate construction of the entire road, but they do not wish to be delayed in the construction of a very necessary portion because, forsooth, they have not the data with respect to the whole route. It has therefore been deemed wise to make application for this power. I have always questioned the power of the Minister of Railways and Canals to take such a course.

Mr. BERGERON. What prompted my hon. friend to make this amendment? I was not here when the Railway Act of 1903 was passed, but it seems to me that parliament then divested itself of great privileges, even the government did so. It strikes me the government wants to take back all these privileges not for parliament but for itself. Has my hon. friend any case in view which makes it necessary to amend the Railway Act? Is there any special case, any reason for it?

Mr. EMMERSON. I know that on two or three occasions I have been asked to approve of sections, in one or two instances in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway or one of its allied lines, and also with reference to other railways. They had not had the data to furnish the information I ask with respect to their whole route but they were in a position to give me all that was necessary with respect to that portion of the road which they wanted to construct immediately. I was called upon to approve of sections and I doubted the power of the Minister of Railways and Canals to do that. I think it is in the public interest that he should have that power, if he is to have any power at all with respect to these route maps.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right that this clause is intended to give him the power of approval of portions of a route. His view of it was that unless the whole route was submitted and approval given to it, he could not proceed under the section. Under the old form the registration of the route was very particular; you filed in the minister's office the line over every block of land that the railroad passed. That was required by the law in connection with expropriation, and that information was also filed in the different registry offices of the counties through which the railways passed. This was as much for the purpose of expropriation and the unusual powers given under the Railway Act as anything else. What I object to is giving the general power to the minister to say to the railway company: You shall not build your line there but must build it 25 or 30 miles from there. What is the minister's answer to that? He says the minister must be trusted to carry out the views of parliament and the views of the committee. How does he know what the views of the committee are when the question perhaps never arose before the committee at all——

Mr. EMMERSON. He does every time.

Mr. HAGGART. Or the views of parliament in reference to the matter? Is it not better for the public to trust the railway company that the line will be built in the quickest, shortest and best route between the two objective points which parliament gives it, instead of giving the power to the minister to fix the route? Why would you not trust the railway company in building the road to adopt the best line between these two points rather than have them going to the minister who as I said before may be influenced by other considerations than what is best in the interests of the country in building a line of road between the two objective points? However, we are beating against the wind, because this is the law at present, that the minister should have that power, and the only question before the committee is whether the power is inoperative when applied to a short portion of the road and whether that power should be given to the minister to act in reference to these short portions as the general power is given in reference to the whole route. My argument is that the power given to the minister is one that the minister should not be able to exercise except for the purpose, as the minister stated when he first had that clause inserted in the Act of Parliament, of preventing injustice being done to particular localities on a line of road which parliament had already adopted. That is to say that no railway company should have the power of holding up a town or village and saying: If you do not give me a right of way, if you do not give me certain other powers, I will put your station a mile or two from your town and perhaps build up another town. Power should be given either to the Railway Commission or to the Minister of Railways and Canals to prevent such injustice, but to give a general power to the minister as to the location of the road I think is unnecessary and unwise and not in the interests of the government themselves.

Mr. EMMERSON. Let me explain briefly that my interpretation of this section is that the action of the minister is judicial, that it must be based upon evidence. I have so interpreted it and now the department has issued regulations governing the giving of notice to all parties interested in respect of application for the approval of route maps. All other railways and all towns interested must receive notice and in addition to that the applicant must furnish to the minister the original or a copy of the map which was used before the railway committee on the application for incorporation.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister is not limited even to that.

Mr. EMMERSON. He may require further information.

Mr. HAGGART. He may use his own judgment.

Mr. EMMERSON. But the responsibility is upon him of acting in a judicial capacity; it is not an act of administration. I may not have come up to my friend's high ideal——

Mr. HAGGART. That is a new view of the duties of the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it is the proper interpretation of the statute, and I hope I shall be able to live up to it, at least in so far as I am called upon to approve of route maps.

Mr. HAGGART. It is your successor I am after.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that if the railway committee makes any determination with regard to the route that determination should be expressed in the statute. I do not see how the minister could carry out afterwards some undefined intention which the majority or certain members of the committee may have had in their minds but which is not set forth in the statute in any way. It seems to me that the minister's argument fails when he makes his position depend upon considerations of that kind. In the first instance, before this Railway Act was passed, it was necessary to have power of this kind vested either in the railway committee of the Privy Council or the Minister of Railways, and it did not matter much in which it was vested because the minister would practically have the control in either case. We have passed away from the stage in which the railway committee of the Privy Council exercised judicial powers with respect to applications of this kind and we have established a new system under which an independent tribunal is vested with even greater powers than those which formerly belonged to the railway committee of the Privy Council. But the power dealt with by this section is one which was reserved to the Minister of Railways out of the general powers to which I have alluded. It is true, as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has pointed out, that we are not perhaps discussing the amendment so much as the general policy of parliament; but if we may be allowed to discuss that policy for the moment, was there any good reason why this exception should have been made? Would it not be more in accord with the general scope and intention of the Railway Act that a power of this character should be vested in the independent tribunal we have established than be exercised by the Minister of Railways? Let us assume that the minister is determining this matter purely from a judicial standpoint, yet his successor might put a different interpretation upon the statute. There are however no words in the statute which require that the determination of the minister should be a judicial one so that his action may at any time be governed by political rather than judicial considerations. It seems to me that that is unwise for two reasons. In the first place, because political pressure should not be placed upon the minister as it may be under the present statute. He should not be subject to that pressure. And in the next place if there is to be a judicial determination for the purpose of protecting any town or village or other locality along the route, that protection could better be afforded by the independent tribunal we have established than by the gentleman who, for the time being, may be the Minister of Railways. That is the argument of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and it seems to me a very cogent one and to concern itself with a very important question. I can see no reason why that protection, upon which the argument of the Minister of Railways is mainly based, could not be better afforded by the Railway Commission than by the Minister of Railways. It is perfectly obvious that the minister must be subject to pressure and to considerations which could not be brought to bear upon the Railway Commission, and it seems to me that every good object which could be subserved by the minister having the power given him by section 122 could be better subserved by transferring that power to the Railway Commission.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The criticism of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is not directed so much to the amendment suggested as to the policy of the Act itself. Therefore it is important for us to understand what that policy is so that we may decide whether or not it is desirable to make the radical departure from it which is suggested by my hon. friend. I would be inclined to consider the power whica the Minister of Railways is called upon to exercise as political rather than judicial. Parliament incorporates a company and gives it the power to construct a railway say from A to E, subject to the obligation to pass through or near to the intervening points B, C and D. This section in effect puts upon the minister the obligation to see that the instructions of parliament with respect to the location of the line are carried out. That is an obligation placed upon the Minister of Railways who, in that respect, represents parliament. He has to see that the location indicated in the charter is followed. That is the policy of the Act. If my hon. friend will look at the very next section, he will realize that there are two distinct and separate functions performed by two distinct and separate bodies. The first is the political function performed by the Minister of Railways when called upon to control the general location of the line by approving what is called generally the route map. When once he has given his sanction to that map, then the matter passes from the political control of the minister to the judicial control of the commission. Thus the determination of the gradients and all the other things necessary to immediate construction of the line are under the control of the Railway Commission but the location of the line must first be approved by the minister. If you will look at section 122, you will see that what the minister is called upon to do it to see that the company prepares and submits to him in duplicate a map showing the general location of the proposed line of railway, the termini and the principal towns and places through which the railway is to pass. He has to see that this line from A to E, as indicated in the charter, passes through the intervening points also therein designated. Here is the clause:

> The company shall prepare a map showing the general location of the proposed line of the railway, the termini and the principal towns and places through which the railway is to pass, giving the names thereof, the railways, navigable streams and tide water, if any, to be crossed by the railway, and such as may be within a radius of thirty miles of the proposed railway, and, generally, the physical features of the country through which the railway is to be constructed, and shall give such further or other information as the minister may require.

The amendment now proposed is intended to meet a difficulty which has arisen by reason of the literal construction which may be placed upon this section 122. That section, as it now stands, requires that a map should be prepared in its entirety from the starting point of the railway to its terminus, and it is only after that route map is prepared for the whole line, that the minister has the right to give it his approval. The intention of the amendment is to authorize the minister to do that which the practical application of the Act has made it necessary for him to do. That is to say it authorizes him, without waiting for the complete location of the line from the beginning to the end, to take sections of it and approve of particular sections before the entire route map is completed. When the minister has done that, it is necessary for the railway company to comply with section 123.

Mr. BERGERON. The minister will see that by subsection three it can be changed again with the approval of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the point, let the minister make that clear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My contention is that in the first plan filed and approved by the minister the location is fixed in a way that the commission have no power to change except subject to ultimate control of the Governor in Council. They have power to change the alignment gradients and so on. But the first plan filed and approved by the minister gives the sections and even the lots that are to be expropriated and used by the railway. So far as the route map is concerned, that map must state accurately what is known as the route of the railway, the general location.

Mr. HAGGART. The particular location—that is my argument.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will permit me to say that it is not a matter of argument but of the reading of the statute. The statute says: 'no change or alteration on the general location of the line of the railway, as approved by the minister, shall be allowed, unless such change or alteration has been first approved by the minister.' That is, the general location of the line of railway is approved by the minister when he approves of the route map, and from that general location there may be no departure—that is no radical departure, such, for instance, as building a line to run east and west instead of north and south except as I mentioned a moment ago. The general location has to be determined by the minister as an act of policy, as a political act. But, when he has determined the general location, then all the details with respect to construction—the plans and book of reference—must be approved by the commissioners. They have the final say with respect to the construction of the road. There is no use amusing ourselves with discussion of issues that do not exist or making dissertations which merely create false impressions. There is no doubt that the position of my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is correct with regard to the control exercised over the route of a railway by the minister. A departure from our present system in that matter would involve a complete departure from a principle that we have hitherto upheld, that principle being that the location of the road is under the political control of the minister and the government must be responsible for it. With respect to the details of construction that is a matter under the control of the commissioners a matter with respect to which they exercise judicial control as against the political control exercised by the minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The position under the law as I understand it is this: A railway company is chartered with authority to construct a road from A to D, passing through B and C. It is quite clear that that cannot be altered by the minister, the Railway Commissioners or anybody else. But, between A and B, between B and C, and between C and D there is a certain latitude for the location of the road. The question is whether this should be determined as a political act by the minister or as a judicial act—or administrative act if you like to call it so—by the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the issue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as I am concerned, my attention has not been called to any objection to the amendment provided that it is wise to entrust this power to the minister. I would say that it is a proper thing to give him power to deal with the location, if it can be shown that it is properly a question of policy. But that is a point on which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has not convinced me. If there is any political question in the location of the line, it seems to me that it should be dealt with by parliament in the charter. As to any question of the location of the line between A and B or between B and C, or between C and D, I do not yet appreciate any reason, even after what the Minister of Justice has said, why such a question should be determined by the Minister of Railways rather than by the Board of Railway Commissioners. Parliament deals with the whole subject from the standpoint of parliament and the people when it issues its charter authorizing the construction of the road between the points named. Apart from that, would it not be the wise policy to leave to the determination of the Railway Commissioners, upon hearing of the parties interested, any questions that may be involved, rather than to determine them by the political act of the minister. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) says that he does not deal with them as political questions—(of course, I am using the word 'political' in the higher sense—that is, the questions are questions of policy), he says he deals with them from a judicial standpoint.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will pardon me. I deal with it as a question of policy in carrying out the wishes of parliament; but I hold that it should be dealt with by the Minister of Railways as a judicial act having great regard to the effects and all the circumstances. I do not care what it is called, whether 'political' or anything else.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood from the minister (Mr. Emmerson) in the first instance, that he would deal with it very much in the same way as the Board of Railway Commissioners would deal with it, by hearing the parties and so reaching a determination.

Mr. EMMERSON. Having in view the intention of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That intention can be decided only by the statute. The hon. gentleman speaks of discussion before the committee of this House. It seems to me it would be wise in determining what is the intention of parliament, to go to the statute itself. You can hardly go back to the committee for an interpretation of the statute when the committee has not expressed its determination in the statute itself. Then, it simply comes down to what we said a moment ago—if parliament has dealt with the question of policy, as a political act, then, should not the location of the line be left to be determined by the Railway Commissioners apart from any influences which will make themselves felt whether my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) or any other man happens to be in office.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I appreciate thoroughly the position taken by the leader of the opposition, but I would repeat in a few words the view I hold. I would say that, parliament having authorized a corporation to construct a railway from A to D, passing through B and C, parliament has in itself power to see to it that the purpose it has declared shall be carried into effect. Parliamentary control over the location is exercised by the minister who is here in parliament to defend his actions. That is the view I take—that the minister exercises political control in the sense that he acts as the man responsible to parliament for the execution of the will of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. But only up to a certain point ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Up to the point covered by the charter.

Mr. FOSTER. But I understand the contention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) to be that he is to have power to deflect the railway, between the points named by parliament, according as he may deem best. The discussion is a very interesting one. Parliament authorizes the construction of a road from A to D, touching at certain intermediate points. It seems to me that nothing should interfere with that location, and nothing should govern but the best interest of the road—considerations of grades, curves and so on, the object being simply to build the most serviceable road. But the Minister of Railways will see that a question may arise as to the location, and that it may be urged upon him that the line should go through a certain village situated between the termini named in the charter.

The commissioners and the railroad company generally seem to be disposed to put it through that village. Now I am to take up the question as to whether it is to be deflected so far as to pass through that village. Well, what happens ? We get right into what we ought to keep out of, that is, the machinations and influences of party, political considerations. A very influential supporter of the government lives in the village, and he says, I want that to pass through my village. He is backed up by every man jack in the village, because they want it to go through. The railroad company and the commissioners may have their views. They may say: That does not make the best kind of road, we would like it to go through every man's farm yard if it were possible, but it is not ; and if you deflect it to that village you have a poorer road than you would have otherwise. But the minister says : I will decide that point. Parliament did not decide it, the commission has not decided it, and the minister says, I will decide it—and not entirely from a judicial point of view, because he is the minister, he is the man who is put there by votes, who stays there by votes, and he is always amenable, and will be as long as he is a minister, to the influences that can be brought to bear upon him, and he deflects that road you may say in that instance, or in any instance, according to his view of what is best. Well, he says what is best for the road, but how often it happens that what is best for the road gets a little twist into what is best for the party. Even although the right hon. gentleman shakes his head, that may sometimes happen.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Has not parliament decided that all these things are to be regulated by the minister ? The Act provides that the location map shall contain the information necessary to enable the minister actually to decide what is best under the circumstances with respect to the location as authorized by parliament. The Act says positively :

> The company shall prepare a map, and shall submit information necesary to show the physical features of the country through which the railway is to be constructed, and shall give such further or other information as the minister may require.

Showing that parliament wished that the minister should exercise control, subject, of course, to his obligation to answer to parliament for the exercise of that jurisdiction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no doubt parliament did that, but we are discussing whether parliament was wise.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let us take a case that frequently happens. An Act of incorporation determines the route, and decides that the railway shall 'as far as practicable' go to certain points. That is not unusual, it is not unusual for those words to be found in the charter 'so far as may be practicable.' Surely the minister has some discretion to exercise, he must take into account the physical conditions so as to see whether it is practicable to locate the line as proposed and he exercises this jurisdiction under a mandate of parliament, subject to the obligation that he shall answer to parliament for it. That is the law as we have it, and have had it, I think for years. I cannot speak with reference to the law previous to 1903, but my recollection is that these powers were exercised by the minister previous to the institution of the Railway Commission.

Mr. HAGGART. No. Under the Act as interpreted at that time, although the minister had the general approval of the location, it was held by the Minister of Justice that he had not the right of altering the location in any way.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said that nothing can occur before the committee that will in any way affect the route as clearly defined in the Act of incorporation. That may be true in a general sense. But circumstances may occur before that committee which will throw light on the meaning of the words used in that Act of incorporation. For instance, we had before the railway committee a few days ago an application for the incorporation of a railway starting at some point, I forget where, but ending at or near a certain point in the county of Bruce. The promoter of the Bill was catechised with respect to that route. The general route of that railway was clearly defined in large red lines passing in a general direction with relation to certain intermediate towns between the termini. Now it seems to me that the minister, in reaching a conclusion under section 122, might very properly have regard to that map, because that map had an influence on the members of the committee in determining their action in approving that Act. The minister should decide having regard to all this information which parliament has, in its wisdom, seen fit to require shall be furnished out. The decision may be political. I do not take exception to what the Minister of Justice has said—it may be political in this sense, that the Minister of Railways and Canals is giving an interpretation to the intention of parliament as well as to all the circumstances surrounding the case. But in so doing I hold that the proper meaning and interpretation of that section 122 is that he shall, in a judicial sense, have regard to the topography of the country, and to the intention as to the route which the road shall follow, and the towns through which it is to pass when he gives judgment thereon. There must be in addition to that map a statement showing and explaining the localities through which that railway will pass. Now it is true that you could not keep them down to the exact spot where they located the line on this map which is presented to the railway committee. But you must have regard to the surveys, to the topography of the country. Even though the Act says that it shall go through a certain town, if, from an engineering standpoint, that is impracticable, or impossible, I say the Minister of Railways and Canals is empowered to take that fact into consideration, together with all the other facts, in giving or withholding his approval.

Mr. BERGERON. But would the board give permission to build in a place which is impracticable ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It seldom comes to that. After the matter has passed through the hands of the Minister of Railways then questions as to gradients, as to curves, as to limitations or deviations, are matters for consideration by the Board of Railway Commissioners, as I understand the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I am getting more mystified all the time. When the Minister of Justice was speaking I thought I got hold of the thread of the argument, but after I listened to the Minister of Railways and Canals I found myself back again where I started from. May be it is because of my dullness.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is probable.

Mr. FOSTER. But I am bound to maintain it is because of the divergence between the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not see that we differ so widely.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Justice cited that particular Act where a road was to go so and so 'as far as practicable,' pass through certain points 'so far as practicable.' Now, suppose that practicability meant—I got that from his argument as well—whether a possible route could be obtained for a road by passing through or near, and how far from and how near to, these points. Well, now if that is it which of the two is the better authority to decide on what we might call the engineering difficulties, problems of the construction of the road. We have taken it out of the minister's hands and we have called in three experts. We make it their business, in so far as grades, curvatures and engineering difficulties are concerned to decide. Whatever is to deflect the road or put it in a certain direction goes to the judgment of the experts. They are there for that purpose, but the minister says that this is just what he wants to control and to give his judgment about, and if there are engineering difficulties so that the railway cannot go where it was said it ought to touch at he is to be the judge of those. If we had that expert commission appointed at all it was to take up all questions which refer to the construction of the road in point of engineering difficulties, as to what is the best route for it as regards curves, grades and everything of that kind. Where will the Minister of Railways be if he takes that upon himself and says: I have to go back even further than that; I have to go back to what was said in the railway committee ; I have to have respect to certain maps which may have been there for a fleeting moment and away again, that some members may have studied and may have given their votes in committee upon; I have to remember, to go back to and rake all that up and give my decision. Why, the minister is taking upon himself the location of the road between the points where parliament says it actually shall pass; he is taking that whole matter together with all kinds of engineering considerations into his own hands and he is giving the judgment. Everybody knows that when the minister arrogates this power to himself, when he has the right, for any considerations of the kind which may approve themselves to him, to deflect and change the road between the points that have been laid down actually in the charter, it becomes either a change from engineering considerations or a change from party and political considerations. If it is a change for the former reasons experts are the men who ought to be the judges and who are the best judges. If it is merely a change for party considerations ought the minister to ask that that power be thrust upon him and ought we in view of the fact that we have, by the creation of a commission, taken this matter as far as possible from the region of party politics, to put it back there again?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This whole question was threshed out three years ago when the railway laws were consolidated and when the Railway Commission was established. The considerations which are now before the committee were looked into and on that occasion by the very statute which created the Railway Commission the exercise of this power which is now under consideration was left in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals and not entrusted to the commission. We did that for reasons to which I will refer at a later period. The object of the legislation which is now before the House is not to change the intent of parliament as it was then expressed and put into the statute, but to improve the law. The law which was passed in 1903 provided that when parliament had decided to authorize the construction of a railway from a certain point to another point, or from A to D, passing through B and C, the location should not be left altogether to the company which seeks to build the road, but that there should be an authority to determine where the line should be located. Now parliament at that time thought that the approval of the location should be left in the hands of the minister. To-day the minister says that in the carrying out of the power which has been left in my hands I find that it would be more convenient if I were authorized to approve of a partial location instead of the whole location and I ask that the Act be so modified. The intent of parliament, as expressed in 1903, was to authorize the minister to approve of the location of the road. To this there seems to be an objection taken by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who has given a great deal of attention to railway matters and who says there is no necessity for any such legislation at all. He says that the location of the line should be left altogether to the company, that the company will select the best route in its own interest. So far so good; there is nothing to say against that and if we had to consider only in the location of the road the interest of the company and nothing else the argument of my hon. friend would be conclusive. It would be in the interest of the company to elect the best route. We might rest satisfied that under all circumstances it would select the best route according to its own interests. But, it is stated and rightly stated that in matters of this kind there has not only to be considered the interest of the company, but the interest of the public as well, and it is because the public have an interest in this matter that the right of supervision has been given to the minister. As I understand my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) they say it is quite proper that there should be the power of supervision of the location of the line and that the company should not be left to make its own location, but that the location should be supervised by somebody. My hon. friends contended that the supervision should not be left in the hands of the minister, but that it should be placed in the hands of the Railway Commission. Therefore, they contend that we should depart altogether from the policy which was adopted three years ago of placing the supervision in the hands of the minister by putting it in the hands of the commission which was created in 1903. When the law was passed in that year it was not authorized to exercise that supervision. I do not think that there is much difference one way or the other. There may be a good many reasons advanced one way or the other. My hon. friends have said, and said truly, that political considerations might weigh with the minister in the exercise of this power and perhaps that is the very reason why the exercise of this power has been placed in the hands of the minister rather than in the hands of the Railway Commission. If the power of supervision is placed in the hands of the Railway Commissioners there is practically no appeal from their decision. The commissioners will give drastic reasons for approving or not approving of the location. They may deflect the line from the proposed location or approve it as it is, but if the power is placed in the hands of the minister then there is behind the minister the powerful lever of public opinion. There is also the powerful lever that he is responsible to parliament for any decision that he gives; he is liable to censure and he must give reasons which will satisfy parliament. You might take a case in point that happens very frequently. Here is a line of railway to be built. It has to cross a river. The engineers of the company place the crossing at a certain point. It may be within a mile or half a mile or within a very short distance of a rising village or town. Immediately an appeal is made to the minister, very properly, by the people of the town who think the line ought to pass through their town. Every one will agree that if the engineering conditions are such that the river may be crossed just as cheaply, just as easily and just as effectively by passing through the town as by passing a mile or two miles from the town the company should be compelled to pass through the town or through the centre of population.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And put a station there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And put a station there. But, it may be that there are engineering difficulties in the way. The company will say it would be to our interest to place the crossing of the river at another point for this reason which we present to the minister. It will cost so much more, it will burden the road so much more and the minister has to determine what they should do and what they should not do. The minister having behind him the fear of parliament which is always present, and the weight of public opinion; he can be trusted to give a proper judgment on judicial lines, so far as judicial circumstances can apply in a matter of this kind. Would there be any greater guarantee if the matter were left in the hands of the Commission? My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says that all kinds of political pressure would be brought to bear on the minister; that is very true. But the minister has to deal fairly between the public and the railway company, and he must consider his liability to censure if he does wrong. I believe this is one of the powers of the minister which he would rather be rid of, because it is always difficult in such circumstances to give an opinion. The very fact that this power has been vested in the minister compels him to accept the responsibility, and I think myself that the fear of the censure of parliament is the best guarantee that the public can have. If it is thought advisable that this power should be vested in the Board of Railway Commissioners I do not know that I would have much objection to it. But, when parliament three years ago passed this law, it came to the conclusion unanimously and uninfluenced by the government, that this power should rest with the minister and not with the commission and so far as I know there has been no cause to regret that decision. If it be admitted that the principle is a good one then it must be recognized that the amendment proposed by the minister is necessary. If I understand the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) he says that there should be no revision at all on the power of the railway company to locate its line as it thought best. I understood him to say that the company should be left to carry out the intention of parliament without revision by the Board of Railway Commissioners or the Minister of Railways.

Mr. HAGGART. If that power is necessary at all it should not be a political power; it should be vested in the Railway Commission.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The railways are built largely for the benefit of those who live between its terminals and, while the terminals are easy to locate, the people living in the intermediate territory have interests upon which they should be heard. These may be local interests, but they certainly are interests which are well worth considering. I believe that the amendment is in the direction of providing that the people living between the terminals shall have an opportunity to come to the government and give their reasons why a line should be deflected, and if it is in the public interest to have that line deflected then there should be some authority to which the people can appeal. I believe the proposal is a fair one and that the decision should rest with the minister who is responsible for the administration of the Railway Department. We have not yet departed from the doctrine of ministerial responsibility in this country, and I have no objection to the minister being held responsible in a matter of this kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman has suggested that the Minister of Railways, in a matter of this kind, would be influenced by public opinion to a greater extent than the Board of Railway Commissioners would be. If he should carry that argument to its legitimate conclusion, then he should abolish the Railway Commission, and all questions with regard to tariffs, and railway crossings, and so on, would be determined by the minister instead of the commission. The proposal of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is not one which departs from the general policy of the Railway Act, 1903. The provision reserving this power to the minister seems to have been an exception to the general policy of that legislation, and what my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) suggests is that this exception should not be continued. In every respect mentioned by the Prime Minister, the public interest would be as effectually guarded by leaving this question to be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners instead of the Minister of Railways. The Minister of Railways tells us that you must have regard to the railway map exhibited to the parliamentary committee, but if the committee desires that any special regard should be paid to the intermediate locations indicated upon that map, then these intermediate locations should be set out in the Bill. If you do not insert them in the Bill, then the minister's memory would have to be refreshed by the production of the maps and the stenographic notes of the discussion before the railway committee, and these can be referred to just as well by the Railway Commissioners as by the minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When the Railway Commission was established this particular power was reserved to the minister and not given to the commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The commission was given many powers which are more judicial than the location of a line. For my part I see no great difference, and I am sure the Minister of Railways would not be heart broken if that power were taken from him and placed with the commission, he would be saved a great deal of worry and a great deal of anxiety. But the question is as to whether it is wise for parliament to depart from the policy it adopted in 1903 with regard to this matter. Suppose for instance a railway is to be brought to the neighbourhood of a growing town and there are reasons for its location at one particular place or another; decision has to be given as between the balance of advantage to the public and to the railway company, and the question is whether it would be better to have such a matter decided by the Railway Commission or decided as at present by the minister. That is a question as to which for my part I can only say I have no great preference one way or the other, but I can see a great deal of force in the argument that in a matter of this kind the public perhaps, and the company will have a better adjudication, a better chance of having justice done to all parties if this matter is adjusted by the minister upon his responsibility to parliament.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I may point out to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a number of instances of how it works out. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows the pressure that was brought to force the Canadian Northern to cross at the old town of Battleford. Was that in the interests of the public or of persons owning land in Battleford? Then Lloydminister was held back for several years owing to the action of the Minister of the Interior in seeking to place the town in a certain position. Then there is the town of Dauphin. When Dauphin was started a number of gentlemen owning farms each wished to have the town site on his property and the result was that there were two towns created some distance from one another. They got people to go in guaranteeing them an interest in the town. The natural site for the town was where the town of Dauphin now stands. These people had squatted on the land about two or three miles on each side of it. If the matter had been left to the minister in some instances I am free to say I do not think justice would have been done to the same extent as it would be if it were left to the Railway Commission. The First Minister knows about the Battleford case?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is a great credit to us; I am glad to say we did not yield to the temptation.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No, because the cost was too great.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Just so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course it must not be overlooked that if in the exercise of the discretion or the control which is vested in the Minister of Railways he does an injustice to a railway company there is an appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners, not an appeal by name but an appeal in effect. Section 130 of the Railway Act provides:

> If any deviation, change or alteration is required by the company to be made in a railway, or any portion thereof, as already constructed, or as merely located and sanctioned.——
> The plan, profile, &c.,—
> —shall, in like manner as provided in section 123, be submitted, for the approval of, and may be sanctioned by the Board; and the same when so sanctioned——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems very anomalous.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be anomalous but it is there.

Mr. FOSTER. An appeal from the creator to the creature.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And what is the limitation on the Board of Commissioners? The limitation is contained in the last paragraph of section 130 which provides that they shall not have the right to authorize a change with respect to the termini only; in all other respects their power is absolute always subject to appeal.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that limited by the new section five in substitution for section 123 which provides that there shall be no deviation by the board of more than a mile from that location by the minister?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a limitation to be considered hereafter. I am now talking of the limitations we have as a result of the law we are to change, because we are now discussing the merits of the existing Act, not of the amendments proposed to that Act. We are dealing with the section of the Act which vests in the minister power with respect to the location of the road and with the Board of Commissioners the final location of the road, carrying out the original distinction which existed in the Railway Act previous to 1903, because, as I said—and I have verified the accuracy of my statements since—the old Act provided that the minister should determine the location of the road but that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should finally settle the location so that we have carried on from the old Act into the new one that distinction which existed with respect to the relative or respective powers of the minister and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. To-day the minister continues on in the enjoyment of those powers which he has had under the Railway Act for years and years past, and the control exercised by the old Railway Committee of the Privy Council is vested in the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I must confess that I was not aware that that anomaly existed in the Act; I should think it ought to be corrected.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let us correct one thing at a time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It bears out the argument of the hon. member for South Lanark, to a certain extent because it enacts that the Board of Railway Commissioners in the end may override the minister. I do not think that is very good legislation after all, because the argument has been made this afternoon, over and over again, that this is a proper power to be vested in the minister because of his responsibility to parliament. But after he has made his determination and incurred that responsibility to parliament, then it appears that by section 130 he can be overruled, his political responsibility can be reduced to zero because he can point to the overruling determination of the Board of Railway Commissionners. They in the end are the final judges and it seems to me they should be the judges in the first instance, and we should not have a minister of the Crown placed in the position of incurring a certain responsibility to parliament and the country and then having his judgment overridden by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It must not be overlooked that the circle goes around, and any action of the board on such an appeal is subject to the Governor in Council. If you take the sections altogether, not take them one or two at a time, it works out all right.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice puts an entirely different interpretation on the law to what I do and of course he must be correct. What is the first thing the company does ? It furnishes these plans, profiles, &c., and

If any deviation, change or alteration is required by the company to be made in the railway, or any portion thereof, as already constructed, or as merely located and sanctioned,——

The company can appeal to the board.

—as aforesaid, a plan, profile and book of reference of the portion of such railway proposed to be changed,——

It is not the whole plan as approved of by the minister but any portion of it as constructed or if there is a mistake in the location of the plan the company itself may appeal to the Board. But as to the other aspect of it, which the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has spoken of, and has said it is best it should be left in the hands of the Minister of Railways, let me give a practical illustration. There is an application this session to shorten the Canadian Pacific Railway line from Toronto to Ottawa. The railway company applied for leave to shorten the line from Carleton Place to Sharbot Lake. The hon. member for North Lanark says : Oh, you are going to shorten the distance between the two points; it will make it shorter to go by the village of Lanark. It may cost the company four times the amount to do it, but the company before getting the road located from Sharbot Lake to Carleton Place go to the Minister of Railways for approval of the location of that route. The company wish to build another line, the cheapest, shortest and best line in the interest of the public, making their connection at Carleton Place.

But my hon. friend says, no, you will better serve my political interests by building the line through Lanark and you must do that even though it makes your line four miles longer. The minister will force the company to all that extra expense but the company will have the satisfaction of knowing that he is responsible to parliament. I do not think that would be much consolation to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What would my hon. friend do under such circumstances ?

Mr. HAGGART. I would do just the reverse. I would say to the railway company : build your line in the shortest and best way for the purpose of accommodating the public between Toronto and Ottawa, select the route that you like; and the company will be sure to construct its road in the cheapest, the best, the shortest and most expeditious way. You will, however, prevent it from doing that by this legislation. You will say to it : Before you can adopt the shortest and best line for the purpose of making the desired connection, you must have the approval—the political approval—of the Minister of Railways. And the Minister of Railways will say to the company : It is indispensable to my hon. friend from North Lanark, that your railway should go through his section of the country and we are giving you a subsidy for that purpose. It is true that will make your line four or five miles longer and it will not be the best line in the public interest but what does that matter compared with the importance of giving political assistance to our friend and supporter.

At six o'clock Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LENNOX. When we rose at six o'clock, I was about to suggest to the minister (Mr. Emmerson) that, even admitting that the proper principle is enunciated in section 122, there are several matters that could very well be further considered by him. Especially is this the case now that section 122 is being amended, and in view of our experience in the railway committee of this House. For instance there is the question of a map, to be submitted by the railway company. A map is produced for the railway committee. I suppose it would be useless to provide that that map should be made to a scale, because the railway company, in most cases, cannot have the information on which to base such a map. But more and more, the railway committee are endeavouring to define by local intervening points, and not merely by termini, the route of each railway that is chartered. But, when the committee have done the best they can do, there may be, on long stretches of railway, distances of 500 miles between defined points, and within that distance the railway company may deflect the line very considerably. The policy of section 122 is quite manifest. The subsection of section 4 which is now before us provides that 'before approving such map and location the minister, may, subject to the Special Act, make such changes and alteration therein as he may deem expedient.' And further on, 'and no change or alteration from the general location of the line of railway, as approved by the minister, shall be allowed, unless such change or alteration has been first approved by the minister.' This shows that the minister can, and that it is intended by the section that he may, deflect the line from the general location as approved by parliament at the time of the passing of the charter. Now, I think it impossible to deal properly with section 122 without referring to section 123, which also it is proposed to amend. I think we should aim at getting a provision in this Act to compel a railway company seeking incorporation to define specially what they propose to do and to be clearly bound to do only what is authorized by parliament. Either there ought to be a provision in this Bill, or it ought to be made a condition by the railway committee of this House that the map produced before the committee shall not leave the custody of the Minister of Railways and Canals. For it is impossible that we can be sure that the intention of parliament is carried out, in fact we cannot know that the minister has the means of knowing whether it is carried out or not, unless such a condition is observed.

There are one or two other points to which I may refer, especially as I intend to ask the minister to allow this matter to stand over, considering the importance of the points involved and considering also the fact that there are but few of the members who are interested in this matter present in the House this evening. I think, as this section 122 provides that 'the company shall prepare a map showing the general location of the proposed line of railway, the termini, and the principal towns and places through which the railway is to pass,' and so on, that there might well be a provision that the minister may alter the location only in detail. Of course, I do not give the form of words that I would suggest, but the idea, as the minister will understand, is to provide that the Minister of Railways and Canals shall not have power practically to build a new line, but that, in the railway committee and in this House we may feel assured that we know something of the general trend of the line from end to end. In the amendment of section 122 here proposed certain words of the section are omitted. The enactment seems to be the same as the original section down to the word 'board' in the seventh line. After that, special provision is made for the location of a portion of the line. As I understand this provision, it seems reasonable and I think, will be in the interest of the public as well as of the railway company. After the word 'board' the original section proceeds: 'And no change or alteration from the general location of the line of the railway, as approved by the minister, shall be allowed, unless such change or alteration has been first approved by the minister.' These words are not in the section now proposed by the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will find that in the following section.

Mr. LENNOX. I do find something similar in the following section; I do not know whether it covers the same ground or not. But I would call attention to the fact that subsection 4 of the original Act would require a verbal alteration, perhaps. It says: 'The foregoing provisions of this section shall only apply to the main line and to branch lines over six miles in length.' Branch lines over six miles in length, I suppose, are included under the provision with regard to branches up to thirty miles in length, which require an order in council.

Mr. EMMERSON. We do not require even an order in council for branches under six miles in length.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not made myself clear. I take it that the 'foregoing provisions' referred to would apply to the thirty-mile branches that may be constructed under the provisions of an order in council. I do not apprehend that the minister would think that the special provisions which he introduces as to locating a portion of the line would be necessary to apply to a thirty-mile stretch. Therefore, I think it requires a verbal alteration. That is a matter that can be considered. It is mainly because of the importance of this section and the smallness of the attendence in the House this evening that I would ask the minister to allow this section to stand over.

Mr. EMMERSON. A special committee of this House now has under consideration certain amendments to the Railway Act referring to the subject of telephones. On the committee the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) as he knows, is a member. I do not understand the hon. gentleman to disagree with the principle involved in the sections now under discussion here, and the details that he suggests should well be considered by the special committee having the other sections in charge.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not wish to take upon myself responsibility for that. I do not know whether this should go to the committee. Certain members who are not here should have an opportunity of considering it.

Mr. HAGGART. Just mention the amendments.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not considered them. I have a number in my mind; they are coming in from day to day; there was one sent in recently from the Manufacturer's Association, and they come from other bodies. Those might be considered when I have gone through them and am in a position to place them before the House. They might be referred to this special committee which has to deal with amendments to the Railway Act.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the minister would have no objection to furnishing a copy of the proposed amendments to the leader of the opposition and some others ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I certainly will. I think we might as well pass section 4 and the following sections, and then take up the other matters to which the member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has referred.

Mr. LENNOX. If we passed these sections we could not refer them to the committee. I submit there should be some alterations in this section, even if we admit the principle of it. I would not like it to pass in the absence of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand the suggestions of my hon. friend, they would in themselves amount to substantive amendments, they would not be incorporated in this section. The provision with respect to the route map being left to the Department of Railways and Canals is a provision covered by section 122 as it now stands. That provides that the minister may require such further information as in his judgment he thinks necessary. The regulations issued by the department and which have been distributed among the railway companies, require that all applications for approval of a route map should furnish the original map, or copies thereof, that was used before the Railway Commission on application for incorporation. That is a requirement now of the department on the hearing as to the approval of route map. The regulations further require that all parties and interests should have notice of the day of hearing and present their objections if they have any. If there are no objections, and in the judgment of the minister the route seems to comply with the special Act of incorporation giving powers to construct, the route map is approved.

Mr. LENNOX. As I understand the concluding part of section 122 concerning such further information as the minister requires, it does not refer to the beginning of proceedings in the railway committee, it refers to such further information as the minister should require when the route map comes to be placed before him, which is subsequent to the passing or granting of the charter of incorporation. There is no provision in the Act that I have been able to find, that requires that the map which goes before the railway committee should be retained in the custody of the department. That is an essential point, and was so considered by a great majority of the members of the railway committee. There ought to be a provision of that kind. Heretofore, in many important cases, we have gone through the sections generally, and those that were not quite satisfactory we have allowed to stand for further consideration; and this is about as important a matter as any we could have. I ask the minister to allow this matter to stand. There are some members on both sides of the House who are necessarily absent to-night.

Mr. EMMERSON. All right. Of course there is this to be said, that the map that is posted up in the railway committee on the application for a charter is not under the control of the department now in any way, I presume it would be under the control of the committee. But I claim that the Minister of Railways has a right, under section 122, long afterwards to require the applicant for approval of a route map to furnish the map which the committee used, or copies of it, as necessary information which the department requires.

Mr. LENNOX. Then the minister has a right to say: You must bring the map you had there so that I can compare it. Because without it we have no means of being sure that when they bring what purports to be a copy, it is a copy, and they could not expect the minister to be able to detect the differences in a case of that kind. What I want, and what I understand the committee wants, is a guarantee that that map should be in the department, and that therefore he will be sure to have the evidence as to what took place in the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. Sections 4 and 5 may stand.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the minister to say that when a route map is furnished by a railway company, before any changes are made in that map, notice in some manner should be given to the public, and that the public may have a right to give evidence before the minister, and that inquiry will be made before any changes are made in the route map?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the practice of the department now, and has been for the last six months. All parties and interests, so far as they are known, have notice of the day of hearing and of the application.

On section 6,

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to make some verbal changes in that section. On the seventh line, after the word 'highway' I would like to add 'or for the substitution of one highway for another.' I would also like to strike out the words in the twelfth line 'in the opinion of the board' and the words 'proper and.' I would like also to add, after the words 'efficient construction' in the thirteenth line,' the word 'maintenance.' The section with these verbal amendments, will read as follows:

Should the company require, at any point on the railway, more ample space than it then possesses or may take under the preceding section, for the convenient accomodation of the public, or the traffic on its railway, or for protection against snow-drifts, or for the diversion of a highway, or for the substitution of one highway for another, or for the construction or taking of any works or measures ordered by the board under any of the prosions of this Act or the Special Act, or to secure the efficient construction, maintenance or operation of the railway, it may apply to the board for authority to take the same for such purposes, without the consent of the owner.

Mr. LENNOX. Does that mean that it can be taken by expropriation proceedings in the ordinary way?

Mr. EMMERSON. By expropriation proceedings.

Mr. HAGGART. The parties would have to have notice?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. It would have to be applied for under the ordinary proceedings.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It means the taking of additional land for this purpose.

Mr. LENNOX. A question in regard to the substitution of another highway arose in our section. I know for an actual fact that this is a very necessary provision. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will explain the difference between what he proposes and the former section. We have section 139 and there is a general provision in it. What change are we making?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It practically provides additional cases where land may be taken.

Mr. EMMERSON. Section 139 of the Railway Act provides:

Should the company require, at any point on the railway, more ample space than it possesses or may take under the preceding section, for the convenient accommodation of the public, or the traffic on its railway, or for the protection against snow-drifts, it may apply to the board for authority to take the same, for such purposes, without the consent of the owner.

This is amplified and made more definite.

Mr. KEMP. I presume that these changes have been made at the suggestion of the Railway Commission. May I ask for any instances in which they have come up against difficulties in dealing with matters of this kind?

Mr. EMMERSON. The chairman did not give me any specific cases, certainly such as I would remember, but he spoke of the general exeperience of the board in the conduct of their business and said that generally these amendments were desirable in the interests of the proper administration of the Act.

Mr. KEMP. I was wondering if they had anything to do with the difficulty that arose in Toronto in the fire area where the railways and the owners had so much trouble in coming to terms.

Mr. EMMERSON. I really do not know, but you see that under the original section they are allowed to take additional land for the purpose of providing protection against snow drifts and matters of that kind. This provides that where they have to divert a highway or have to substitute one highway for another in all cases where such diversion or substitution has been ordered by the board the railway company may expropriate the land.

Mr. KEMP. Without reference to the Railway Commission or without going to them first?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Railway Commission would have to give an order in the first instance, or pass an order authorizing them to take this additional land for this purpose. They must first adjudge the matter; then, this gives power to expropriate the properties which have been ordered to be taken by the railway.

Mr. SPROULE. It gives power to expropriate the highway regardless of the wishes of the municipal authorities ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The municipal authorities have to be heard in the matter. Railway companies have power to divert a highway and even to substitute land for a certain highway.

Mr. HAGGART. Are all the suggestions of the Railway Commission embodied in the Bill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know that all the suggestions that were made were embodied in the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. This provision as to the diversion of the highway is new ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is new.

Mr. LENNOX. Would the hon. minister explain the effect of subsection two of section six ? It refers to the certificate provided for by the Railway Act of 1888.

Mr. EMMERSON. Under the Act the Minister of Railways and Canals is required to give a certain certificate in respect to the lands to be expropriated and having once given the certificate, the question, as I remember it, is as to whether he has exhausted his power. If subsequently the Board of Railway Commissioners should authorize the taking of additional land may he amend or add to the certificate originally given ?

Mr. LENNOX. Is the Railway Act of 1888 still in force ? I thought it was to be repealed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that some action was taken under that Act ; that is to say a certificate had been given by the minister when the Act was in force. Now the question arises as to whether or not that certificate, having been given by the minister at a time when the Act was in operation, it can be altered, varied or changed, and it is in order to make that point clear that this section is in the Bill.

On section 7,

Mr. EMMERSON. The change made is by substituting the words 'by payment into court' for the words 'by deposit, in a chartered bank designated by him, to the credit of the company and such person or party jointly.' It is in order to avoid conflict when the money has to be paid out again. The amendment has been suggested by the chief commissioner.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the amendment say that the payment into court is to be to the credit of any particular party ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. LENNOX. How will that work out ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is one of the series of sections which have reference to resistance ; you have to apply to the court to get your warrant for entering into possession. When the money is in court it is under the control of the judge who can order payment, but if it happens to get into a chartered bank to the joint credit of the individual and the company, a conflict often arises even though the issue is settled. The chief commissioner suggests that the payment should be made into court where it would be under the control of the judge who issues the warrant.

Mr. LENNOX. The system of paying money into court is considered as very satisfactory in Ontario. Has the minister considered whether in the courts of the different provinces there is such a system in force.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is paid to the credit of the case.

On section 8,

Mr. EMMERSON. This section is entirely new. It is to meet the changed conditions which have arisen in the country with respect to the transmission of power.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The telephone people have had a lot of trouble getting their wires across railway lines, and there should be some provision made for that.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the original Act there is provision with respect to telephone and telegraph lines, but power transmission wires are not included.

Mr. LENNOX. In the Railway Act, 1903, there is a provision that in the various provinces the municipal law shall apply in reference to the drainage of land. Will this amendment in any way conflict with that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a provision in the Act that if a farmer carries his drain under a railway he should not be put to any more expense than if the railway was not there.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amendment does not conflict with that.

Mr. LENNOX. That being so it seems to be a beneficial amendment.

On section 9,

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you provide that the engines shall use coal instead of wood ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The sparks from the wood fires are dangerous.

Mr. HAGGART. In some sections of the country, for instance between Pembroke and Fort William, although the railway could burn coal as cheaply as wood, nevertheless they use wood in order that its purchase may help the settlers. Has the minister consulted the railway companies about this ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That section we have now, the only change is adding the words 'accommodation and comfort' in the last line but one from the bottom.

Mr. LENNOX. And also it is optional for the board to make the order or not, and if the people in the neighbourhood did not want it, it would not be made.

On section 10,

Mr. EMMERSON. The change in this is simply to strike out the word 'serious' as it appears in the original section. The original section read :

Every company shall, as soon as possible, and immediately after the head officers of the company have received information of the occurrence upon the railway belonging to such company, of any accident attended with serious personal injury,——

Now the word 'serious' is left out, so that any personal injury will have to be reported. The word 'serious' now limits it too much.

Then the words 'or to any employee of the company' are added, so that if any injury occurs to any of the company's employees they will be compelled under the amended section to report such accident.

Mr. LENNOX. That is a very good change.

Mr. KEMP. Has the government taken into consideration recently the appointment of a proper official to inquire into railway accidents ? I notice that in 1903 the question was before the House and the Minister of Railways at that time said the government had this matter under serious consideration. A question was asked by the late Mr. Clarke :

Is it the duty of any public official, and if so, of whom, to inquire into and report to the government, upon all railway accidents which occur in the Dominion.

And the then Minister of Railways answered :

No official in particular has been assigned to the duty of making inquiry into railway accidents, but since and owing to recent railway accidents, the subject has been engaging the serious consideration of the government.

I would like to point out in this connection that according to an answer to a question which I had on the order paper recently, the number of people who were killed on Canadian railways for the year ending June 30, 1904, was 448, and for the year ending June 30, 1905, 524. The numbers of people injured (seriously, I take it, under the present wording of the law), in the same periods, were 2,249 and 2,653 respectively.

It seems to me, in view of legislation in other countries, particularly in Great Britain where there is an official whose duty it is to inquire into all accidents and report to the government, and in view of the seriousness of this question the government have been a little slow in appointing this official. I understand no official has been appointed and that it is the duty of no one to report to the government or of the Railway Commission as to the causes of these accidents. Sometimes from motives of economy and at other times when there is a very heavy rush of traffic, it is possible that the rules of the railways, which I believe are very good if lived up to, are not lived up to, and I would ask, would it not facilitate matters and be more satisfactory to the public if the government were to investigate these matters on their own behalf through proper officials appointed.

It seems to me the time is ripe for the government to take some steps in this direction, more particularly in view of the fact that this was promised by the Minister of Railways in 1903.

From the answer to that question which I asked the other day I find that the government have no information before them in respect to these accidents, that the country has to depend upon the findings of coroners' juries in cases of death, and on any other information they can get. I would like to find out what the views of the government are in regard to this question.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Railway Commission have jurisdiction with respect to that matter already and have officials appointed and assigned to the duty of inquiring into all such accidents. The amendments here proposed give the board larger power with respect to investigations of this nature, that is that they may, of their own motion send their officials to inquire into these accidents. And the amendment which we passed a moment ago provides that the railways must report all accidents in which their employees are injured, so that it will be the duty of the board to take these cases into their consideration and they may send their officials—they have two, I think, who have been appointed for that very purpose—here and there throughout the Dominion with a view to having the causes of accidents inquired into. They have also larger powers by this amendment with respect to uniformity of appliances so that they can of their own motion issue orders, not merely on the application of one party or the other or of the general public ; they can take cognizance themselves of the conditions existing and will take cognizance by reason of the reports that come to them from time to time as required by this legislation from the different railway companies. Thus I do not think the government is open to any charge of laches with respect to the inquiry that should be had and is being had into accidents.

Mr. KEMP. It may be that they have ample power, and I notice, referring to 'Hansard' of 1903, that the Minister of Railways at that time claimed under that new Railway Act there was ample power for the Railway Commission to make such inquiry as I have referred to.

Mr. EMMERSON. They have held such inquiries from time to time.

Mr. KEMP. The fourth and fifth sections of the question which I referred to a moment ago, answered on March 22 last were :

4. Have investigations been held on behalf of the government in respect to such accidents?
5. If so, will the government lay reports of such investigations upon the table of the House ?

And the answers :

4. I have no information on this question.
5. No.

So I take it that while the Railway Act requires that while an official should be appointed to make these inquiries and report, no such official has been appointed, and has reported according to the answer to this question.

Mr. EMMERSON. The question was put as to the government doing it. I do not remember precisely the question, but these powers have been delegated to the Railway Commission.

Mr. KEMP. The question said 'on behalf of the government.'

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not recollect the question nor the answer. There were two men appointed for the express purpose of holding investigations. I know that Mr. Duval and Mr. Lalonde were the two gentlemen appointed and that they have held investigations in different parts of the Dominion.

Mr. INGRAM. This is another example which shows wherein our Railway Act is defective. We have the railway reports which give the number of accidents on the different lines, but our Act does not provide that the Railway Commission should report to the government so that we might know whether they have investigated these cases or not. I do not see that in the hon. gentleman's Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have it ready to submit to the committee in a few moments.

Mr. McINTYRE. The object of the section evidently is to inform the Railway Commission of accidents which have occurred through carelessness or remissness or through some fault on the part of the railway employees. Injury to person or property is made the standpoint by which to judge whether or not there should be a report. But there may be very serious remissness or neglect not accompanied by accidents which the commission should be informed of. For instance, a short time ago I had an experience of this myself. A railway train on which I was travelling stopped half way between the station we left and the one we were approaching. It stopped in order to avoid colliding with another railway train which was coming in the opposite direction. Fortunately the two trains were approaching each other on a straight bit of track so that the railway men on both trains could see the danger and had time to stop their trains before they came together. But there was just as much remissness on the part of the officials as if a serious accident had occurred. No report of that carelessness ever reached the commission, and yet it would be well that the commission should be made acquainted with the facts.

Mr. KEMP. Would the hon. minister make inquiries regarding the question of accidents we have brought up and find out what the Railway Commission have done?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He could get a report.

Mr. KEMP. Yes, and submit it to us before the Bill is disposed of. Will the minister do that?

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly. I may say to my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. McIntyre) that of course the railway companies themselves are interested in holding investigations, and do hold very rigid inquiries into any remissness of duty such as my hon. friend has mentioned. My hon. friend will see that the neglect or carelessness which occurred in the incident he speaks of must necessarily be due to the criminal negligence of some official of the road, either a train despatcher or some other train hand, who had exceeded or entirely disregarded his orders. In all such cases the companies, in their own interests, hold very strict investigations, and the public interest is thereby sufficiently safeguarded. I do not think it would be possible for the Railway Commission to hold investigations into cases of remissness or neglect on the part of railway employees which are not accompanied by any accident. But where there has been an accident the duty is imposed on the commissioners to hold an investigation.

On section 11,

Subsection 1 of section 295 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor :

Every conductor, locomotive engineer, train despatcher, telegraph operator, station agent, switchman or other person who is intoxicated while on duty in charge of or in any employment having to do with the movement of trains upon any railway, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment.

This amendment simply adds to the number of officials who should be subject to the penalty. My attention has been called to the fact that the penalty is excessive and that consequently juries will not convict because if they do the accused will be sent down for ten years which they consider out of proportion to the offence. Consequently the very weight of the penalty tends to defeat justice by exciting the sympathy of jurors in favour of the accused. I simply mention this for the consideration of members of the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the penalty at present?

Mr. EMMERSON. Ten years imprisonment and that is not altered by this amendment. The amendment only adds to the number of persons who may come under the section.

Mr. LENNOX. At present it only applies to engineers and conductors.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and we are now making it apply to telegraph operators, train despatchers and switchmen, all of whom are just as liable through their neglect and carelessness or through intoxication, to cause loss of life as are locomotive engineers.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not strike out all the names and make it apply to everybody?

Mr. INGRAM. I think that the railway companies themselves will regard the offence covered by this section as a very serious crime and treat it as such. As a rule they will dismiss the guilty party. That being the case we ought to make the punishment lighter for a first offence by imposing a fine and short imprisonment. Then if the employee should be retained in the service and repeat the offence he should be made liable to a more severe penalty. I also see that under the old Act a fine and imprisonment are inflicted on persons found guilty of supplying liquor to railway employees, namely, a fine of $50 and imprisonment with hard labour for a term not exceeding one month, whereas the employee who is guilty is sentenced to imprisonment for ten years. It seems to me that there is some inconsistency in this and an amendment should be made putting both on a more equal footing.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps this section could stand over ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the suggestion ?

Mr. EMMERSON. To have the punishment graded according to the number of offences.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is only one offence, it seems to me.

Mr. EMMERSON. The question raised is as to the limit of ten years. Representation is made on behalf of the employees of the railways, and perhaps it is worthy of consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. Another point to which I would call attention and which arises in connection with what has been discussed here is this: Subsection 2 of this section 295 provides that any person selling or giving intoxicating liquor to a servant of the company while on duty 'is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding one month, or to both.' That is a pretty severe penalty considering that it applies whether the act is knowingly committed or not. In many similar statutes, the penalty is enacted against those who knowingly and willfully commit the act—for instance the law of Great Britain relating to those who supply liquor to soldiers. The minister might consider the amendment of that subsection.

On section 12,

Subsection 4 of section 303 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

4. The minister may, from time to time, change or vary the forms in the said schedule one contained, or may substitute other forms in lieu thereof, and, upon any such change, variation or substitution being so made, the company shall, in the manner above provided, prepare, make and forward returns accordingly; the company shall also, at all times, give such information to the minister as the minister may, from time to time, require for statistical purposes.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is found that our statistics are far from sufficient, especially by comparison with those that the American railways are required to furnish to the authorities of that country. Section 303 of the Railway Act provides that returns must be made 'in accordance with the forms contained in schedule 1 to this Act.'

Now, under this Bill we ask that the department be given power to change the forms from time to time. The department has under consideration improvements in the character of the statistics which the railways shall be required to furnish. Our requirements will be made more in accord with those that are imposed upon the American railways.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister the schedule of the information he proposes to ask for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not. We ask for power to change the form from time to time, that the information may be more complete. If we were simply to amend the schedule, we should be tied down absolutely to the form provided.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the meaning of the words in subsection 4 : 'The company shall furnish such other information and returns as are, from time to time, required by the minister ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Our experience may suggest, from time to time, the necessity of getting more complete information, or information in some different form. And so we could, under this proposed new section, make our forms to meet the exigencies of the case.

Mr. SPROULE. I should think it was questionable if the present law, under the words I have quoted does not give the minister all the power he requires.

Mr. EMMERSON. But there is a governing feature in that the section begins with these words,' every company shall annually prepare returns in accordance with the forms contained in schedule one,' and so on. This seems to be a limitation. To remove the doubt, we ask for this amendment.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there any objection to it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There surely cannot be any.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to me the minister would have ample power if he would strike out the last three words of his amendment. He provides here that the company shall 'give such information to the minister as the minister may from time to time require for statistical purposes.' The words 'for statistical purposes' are not in the original section, and if they were struck out of this Bill the section would be left more general.

Mr. FOSTER. He might become an inquisitor.

Mr. EMMERSON. Of course, a minister of railways would never require information for any other purpose, and I think the words should be left there to indicate what it is for.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to me that the old section is better than the one the minister proposes to substitute for it.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman will have to quarrel with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) about that.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not want to quarrel with anybody ; I am only making a suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. In a matter of this kind the advice of the lay members of this House may not be much considered, but there is one point which must appeal to the lay mind. We have in the present Act a schedule showing the information that the railway companies are required to furnish. That schedule was proposed when the present law was under consideration, and the business men on either side of the House considered it and determined what kind of information should be asked for. It seems to me that, whatever information is required of the railway companies, it should be required under a schedule of this Act. You do not need to change it every year, and if any change is required parliament can easily make it. It would then still remain an Act of parliament and the information would be called for by authority of parliament. Otherwise it is called for by requisition of the minister. The minister has power in relation to the railways, but perhaps, he has not as much power as parliament has. If it is left to the department, you never know what information is being called for until the schedule, each year, is laid before the House. But under the present system, everybody can read the statute and know exactly the position. I do not like the idea of authority in this matter getting out of the hands of parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. The information required is only for the information of parliament and in the interest of the public, and I think the department may very safely be trusted to call for only such information from the railways as will serve some public interest and not be merely inquisitorial.

Mr. FOSTER. But we might have a lazy minister who would call upon the railways—

Mr. EMMERSON. But we have not that kind of minister now.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be a change.

Mr. EMMERSON. We will try to have matters arranged before that. The section as here proposed seems to be a reasonable one. It seems to me there should be no hard and fast rules as to the form of the return. The character of the statistics required by parliament can easily be anticipated. But the Department of Railways and Canals might fairly have the responsibility of securing that in detail.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure, but it is better that there should be a hard and fast form, and then the railways will know what to expect. If it depends upon a regulation of the department, the information may differ from year to year. It is much better, I should think, to have a fair and square declaration from parliament as to what is required, and then make them live up to it. If the minister's reasoning was pushed to the extreme, we need not have any Railway Act at all, but leave it to the minister to do as he thinks best in the interest of the country.

Mr. PRINGLE. I quite agree with the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I think this section is too sweeping. I think it far better that the corrections should come from parliament. While the present Minister of Railways will no doubt get such information as would be desirable and useful we must remember that ministers of railways change from time to time; and while some minister might be too inquisitive and ask altogether too much, other ministers might not get sufficient information. I think it far better that there should be a schedule prepared and attached to the Act, then we would know exactly what information we could expect with regard to the railways of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister tell us what is the experience now with regard to these returns? I have understood from time to time that they were not very well made.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are not very satisfactory, I must say, and the schedules do not seem to provide a remedy. Even when they are conformed to, the information is not as full and comprehensive as it should be.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any reason to believe that if this proposed modification was made, the information would be more easily obtained?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it would be much more easy for the great railway systems to conform to the amended forms. If the forms were similar to those used in the United States, it would be easier for the railway companies to fill them out. There would be more subdivisions as to operating expenses, and everything of that character, and there would be less difficulty for them to furnish this information in detail than it is for them to give it now.

Mr. HAGGART. What power have you of compelling them to furnish the statistics?

Mr. LENNOX. A $10 penalty. I would like to know from the minister more definitely as to what returns are made. Have all the companies been making returns?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think all the important companies have done so. I have not inquired recently, but I can get that information later on. I do not think there is any complaint against the great railway corporations of Canada in complying with the forms sent out.

Mr. LENNOX. There is another point. Subsection six provides that the minister shall lay before both Houses of parliament within twenty-one days after the commencement of each session, these returns. Has that been done?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is done, you will find it in the report of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. PRINGLE. It seems to me that under section 303 of the Act of 1903 and subsection four, very large powers are now given to the Minister of Railways. Under section 303 the company shall annually prepare returns in accordance with forms contained in the schedule. Now, these schedules seem to be very full. Will the minister tell us in what respect there is any deficiency in the schedules that are referred to in this section? Subsection four provides that the company shall, in addition to the information required to be furnished to the minister as indicated in said schedule, furnish such information and returns as are from time to time required by the minister. Now my objection to the amendment is this, that it leaves the whole schedule under the absolute control of the minister. He can amend it, vary it or bring it down to almost nothing. At the present moment he has a schedule which has been prepared with great care, and which provides for all the information which the minister or the public are likely to require. Moreover, if there is any information which is not contained in that schedule, he has power to ask the railways to furnish it. Now, I think it is better to leave the schedule which gives him that power, than it is to give him power to abolish the schedule, or vary it as he sees fit. The present amendment leaves the whole matter in the hands of the Minister of Railways to abolish, or vary or do what he pleases with the schedules.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think that we need attach so much importance to the form. The question is to get the information for the benefit of parliament or the country at large, which information is published annually in the report of the Minister of Railways. Now, why be tied down to any particular form? My hon. friend says that the Minister of Railways has all this power now. The character of the information that we now receive makes it impossible to draw any comparison between a Canadian railway and a railway in the United States. Take up the returns of the New York Central or of the Pennsylvania system; you will not find anywhere in the public records of Canada similar information with respect to any of the Canadian railways.

Mr. FOSTER. And your schedules.

Mr. EMMERSON. We will amend the form, as the requirements suggest, in order to get the information. My hon. friend asks what additional information do we want. We want better subdivisions as to the character of the expenditures, and all details respecting the operation of a railway. You do not want it in the aggregate; you want it so that these figures and statistics will be of some value to you. I know that the system in connection with the Intercolonial Railway has been a very unsatisfactory one and it is only now that we are undertaking to have a reformation in this regard. It may have been delayed too long. Granted. But why delay it any longer? Give us the powers and we will secure the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to give one decided answer to my hon. friend. He says: Why not hand this power over to the minister and he will get you the information you want? Simply because it is an old fiction that parliament is the best judge of the information it wants and it ought to say what that information should be.

Mr. PRINGLE. I do not think the hon. minister understood me rightly. Subsection 4 of section 303 of the Railway Act as it now stands makes it compulsory that the railway companies shall furnish information according to certain schedules. I am not going to say that these schedules are too full or that they are not full enough, but it is absolutely compulsory that they furnish information according to these schedules which form part and parcel of the Act of 1903. Now, the minister wants to say that under this amendment I can wipe out those schedules altogether; I can follow them or not as I see fit. Then, it is entirely in the hands of the minister to get what information he may see fit. I think parliament has the right to say that it wants the information according to a certain schedule. If that schedule is not full enough then let us make it fuller; if it is too full, let us wipe out what we think is unnecessary, but let us have the schedule as part and parcel of the Act and not leave the matter entirely in the hands of the minister. I think that under the present Act pretty full power is given to the minister in regard to all the information he may require. If there is anything in the schedule that should be eliminated it could be eliminated, or if there is anything that he suggests should be added we can add it to the schedule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. Is section 12 carried?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. If section 12 is carried I would say that before the Bill passes entirely I would like to have some fuller information as to what changes the minister expects to make in the schedule. At least, parliament should know that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will remember that. I want to propose as the 13th section of this Bill the following:

The board shall, within three months after the thirty-first day of March in each year, make to the Governor in Council, through the minister, an annual report respecting (a) applications to and proceedings of the board under this Act and the Railway Act of 1903 during the year next preceding the thirty-first day of March; (b) such other matters as appear to the board to be of public interest in connection with persons, companies and railways subject to the said Acts, and (c) such matters as the Governor in Council directs. The said report shall be laid before the House of Commons of Canada during the first fifteen days of the then next session of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. They are already required to make a report, are they not?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, they are not required under the Act to make any report.

Mr. HAGGART. Would you not require them to furnish any information which might be asked for from time to time?

Mr. EMMERSON. Would not parliament have the power to ask for information by order of the House?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know. A body that is not removable in any other way than by impeachment might not pay any attention to an order of the House.

Mr. INGRAM. Would that report include decisions made by the board?

Mr. EMMERSON. It would include that information as I understand it.

Mr. INGRAM. It would be a very incomplete report if the decisions given by the board were not published or submitted to parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. A statement of each case would be necessary. All the requirements are as fully provided for as I thought were necessary. You cannot frame a section that will go into detail as to everything that may be required. It is general and the general requirements of the Act would include all these details.

Mr. INGRAM. I am just pointing this out for the reason that there are many similar cases that are liable to come before the Board of Railway Commissioners. Their decisions would be known to the public and as a result the public would then be in a position to say whether it would be of any use to bring a particular case before the commission.

Mr. HAGGART. Clause (b) is entirely optional with the board. It calls for a report on anything the commission may think would be of interest.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Subsection (c) provides for such other matters as the Governor in Council directs.

Mr. EMMERSON. That follows the line of the Trancontinental Railway Commissioners Act.

Section agreed to.

Mr. EMMERSON moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. minister say when he will take up the telephone clauses ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that it was my intention to move that the telephone clauses be referred to a special committee. A motion will be made, when the other sections relating to railways have been determined upon, that the order of the House be discharged and that the telephone clauses be referred to a special committee.

Mr. HAGGART. To the same special committee or to a separate one ?

Mr. EMMERSON. One to be named.

Mr. HAGGART. You propose to refer different clauses of the same Bill to two special commissions ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This subject relates to telephones.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. minister say whether he intends to bring in a government measure for the regulation of the tolls of express companies ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot give the information to my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Immigration—Salaries, general employees Canada, Great Britain and other countries, $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The understanding was that the Inland Revenue estimates would be proceeded with. We are not quite prepared for these estimates now so that the minister will have to be patient a little while.

Mr. SPROULE. In the meantime will the minister give us information as to the number of immigrants who were refused admission to Canada during the last couple of years ; also as to the number deported from the United States to Canada and the number of these again deported from Canada to the country whence they came.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The deportations from Canada appear in the departmental report. Of the number sent from Canada to the United States and then sent back from the United States to Canada and deported, there have been only one or two.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw it stated in the newspapers that, speaking from memory some 300 had been sent back from the United States to Canada.

Mr. BARR. I am not surprised that only two or three of these immigrants were deported from Canada in view of the loose system of examination we have. We have reports from charitable institutions all over the Dominion that immigrants suffering from diseases of all kinds and unable to earn their living are placed in these institutions as a burden. These immigrants are apparently allowed to land in this country without hindrance, while in contrast the examination of the United States is very thorough. It has been proved beyond all doubt that the examination of immigrants in this country is of the most cursory kind and that large numbers of immigrants who never should be allowed into Canada have become charges on the different communities. The time has come when the government should give this matter their most serious consideration and order a thorough examination and inspection of all immigrants.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish information with regard to some of these agents and agencies. For instance, at page L—23 of the Auditor General's Report I find that Mr. DeCœli, the agent at Belgium was paid the following sums :—Salary 12 months to June 30th, $1,200 ; addressing and posting pamphlets, $154.10 ; advertising, $1,198.37 ; board and lodging, $437.87 ; cleaning offices, $13.40 ; clerical assistance, $292 ; delivery mail and parcels, $34.30 ; distributing literature, $33.82 ; freight and express, $76.70 ; livery and cab-hire, $37.71 ; fuel, $13.56 ; light, $6.78 ; picture frames and photos, $10.66 ; postage, $1,047.62 ; printing, $72.50 ; railway and street car fares, $247.75 ; rent of office, $467.20; repairs to offices, $5.65; stationery, $27.90 ; stove for office, $11.80 ; telegrams and cables, $12.75; translating letters, $13.55; small items, $87.23, a total of $5,503.22 paid to this gentleman.

Who is Mr. DeCoeli, what does he do and where is his work done ?

Mr. OLIVER. These expenses are connected with the conduct of an active immigration effort in Belgium, which is recognized certainly to be one of the countries having the most desirable class of people, sober, industrious, intelligent, progressive and it is the most densely peopled country in the world.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we know that.

Mr. OLIVER. The people are energetic, aggressive, industrious, sober, intelligent, having all the qualities that make for success and it has been thought well to maintain in that country an active effort to induce immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. What does he do in the way of advertising for which $1,198 has been spent.

Mr. OLIVER. The advertising is by way of newspapers and also printing small pamphlets.

Mr. FOSTER. That would not be under advertising.

Mr. OLIVER. This is newspaper advertising.

Mr. FOSTER. What class of advertising?

Mr. OLIVER. This is of course advertising to bring to the attention of the people of Belgium the agricultural possibilities of Canada. A list of the papers can be produced later.

Mr. FOSTER. And a statement as to what kind of advertisments are published. Is Mr. DeCoeli a Belgian himself ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, a French Canadian.

Mr. BRODEUR. I remember having seen him some years ago, he was living in the county of Wright.

Mr. OLIVER. In the vicinity of Ottawa on the north side of the river.

Mr. FOSTER. And what experience had he in immigration matters and why was he selected ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is a Belgian.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend made a mistake; he was born in Belgium but came to this country many years ago and settled as a farmer in the vicinity of Ottawa. When it was decided to establish an agency in Belgium he was selected, partly on account of the fact that he was pretty well known in Belgium and also because he was conversant with the Flemish language.

Mr. MONK. It is pretty evident from the reports which we get from Belgium that there is not a very successful work being carried on there. But that is not the point which I raise. It seems to me that we are making a mistake in proceeding with the consideration of these very heavy items in connection with immigration at this stage. We are called upon to vote over $607,000 when we have just begun by the examination of two witnesses whose examination is not yet terminated, an investigation before the committee to whom our system of immigration appertains in order to correct such defects as these witnesses will point out to us. It seems to me to be contrary to every principle of common sense that when we are in the very inception of that investigation, which cannot be long but which must cover the examination of 10 or 12 witnesses and which will furnish us with ample information to enable us to appreciate the reasons given by the minister and to suggest appropriate criticism, we should be called upon to vote almost the entire amount for the payment of immigration agents this year in all the countries to which this investigation applies. I do not think it is reasonable or sensible or businesslike, and I would suggest to the minister that it would shorten the work of the committee and greatly shorten our work if we allowed these investigations before the committees to be completed first.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite agree that the investigation of these immigration matters by the committees would facilitate the final passage of the estimates in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. It should precede that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite agreeable that it should but of course as minister administering the department I am not asking for the investigations by the committees, and as we feel that we are ready to present the estimates to the House and to give some reasons for asking for these votes we bring them forward and offer them to the House and stand ready to offer such information as may be required by our friends in the opposition.

Mr. MONK. Have we finished all the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the main estimates have been passed. The estimates of the Department of the Interior, separate from immigration, have not been dealt with.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me not consistent with common sense to vote money in connection with a subject we are looking into.

Mr. OLIVER. I am more than pleased with the suggestion that the work of the Standing Committee should precede the work of the committee here, but that is not a suggestion which should properly come from myself. If the members of the opposition wish me to accept that suggestion, I am quite willing.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. minister his other estimates ready ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but unfortunately the officer of my department who has more immediate charge of these estimates is not here. However as the accountant is here, I am satisfied I can give the House a great deal of information.

Mr. FOSTER. And wobble along.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps even more than that. I do not expect the House to pass these large items without careful inquiry ; but by presenting these estimates to-night, inquiries might be made which would give me the opportunity to produce any further information desired that I may not have at hand and facilitate the passage of the items later on. If the opposition desire that we should forego the consideration of the immigration estimates to-night, I am quite willing to meet their view.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before passing away from the item, I would like to ask the hon. minister if we get many immigrants from Belgium. We hear about Galicians and Doukhobors and Mennonites and others, but I am not aware that we have any considerable number of Belgians and we seem to be spending very considerable sums to secure immigrants from that country. Would the hon. minister inform us briefly what success has attended the agency in Belgium.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that the results so far are at all commensurate with the expenditure. But it will be admitted that Belgium is a very desirable field for immigration efforts and that the department is justified in making every reasonable effort to secure settlers from that country, whether the result at the moment be large or small. Even if our efforts do not meet with immediate success, we always look forward to their bearing fruit in the near future.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I read the other day in a report published by the Society of Colonization of Lake St. John that the average number of Belgians who come to this country yearly is about 400 or 500 many of these people settle around large cities like Montreal and Quebec, and go in for market gardening. They are splendid gardeners. But the bulk of them go to the Lake St. John district and prove the best of farmers.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that there is any document which shows that 400 Belgians have gone during the year to the Lake St. John district ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, I saw it in one of the reports published by the Lake St. John Colonization Society.

Mr. MONK. Well, I am prepared to deny the authenticity of that report. However, desirable that immigration may be, we do not get that number in the whole year.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have in my hand a statement showing the immigration by nationality. It is a statement which was made up by the Interior Department a short time ago, and it gives a list of the immigration from the fiscal year 1900-1 to 1904-5. In that long list, which includes South Africa, Australia, Austria, Bohemia and many other countries, I fail to find that we received from Belgium a single immigrant. We are spending very large sums of money to induce people to come here from that country, who apparently have no desire to leave their own land for Canada. I was very glad indeed to hear some of the statements of the minister with regard to the advantage of persistent efforts being put forward to secure the right class of immigrants. I am quite well aware that we cannot turn the current of immigration in one year or two or even in five years without some very extraordinary efforts. We are often told that the present government's policy of immigration has been very successful compared with that of the former government more especially as regards immigration from the United States. This is held out to us as one of the things this administration can boast of, but what the minister has told us with reference to Belgium has a very distinct application to the question of emigration from the United States. Many years ago the late government attempted to secure immigrants from that country. They put forth every effort, they spent large sums of money, but, as the minister has told us, it takes time to get people interested in a movement of that kind, and we must not look for immediate results, so that the present government are reaping to-day the fruit of the policy adopted by their predecessors some fifteen years ago. In this, as in many other things, they are getting the advantage of the good foundation laid by those who ruled this country before they came into power.

Had the predecessors of these hon. gentlemen not put forth the efforts they did, had not the scheme for inducing immigration from the United States been inaugurated prior to 1896, it is very questionable indeed whether the success that has attended the work of the present government would be in any degree equal to what it has been. I refer to this simply because I know that justice is not done to those who directed immigration affairs in this country prior to 1896. These were the men who laid the foundation upon which their successors have built; and, had it not been for the foundation the superstructure would have amounted to very little. We have been told that all the results are due to the efforts of those now in power. But the minister to-night has given this a flat contradiction. He tells us that you cannot expect to turn the tide of emigration in a short time—we must go on with the work year after year, and some time we may succeed in getting immigration from Belgium. The Belgians are a good class of people and would make desirable immigrants for this country. I am not sure but that the minister may be justified in pursuing the course he has pursued, if we are to seek for European immigration. That, of course, is another question and one which I am not going to discuss—the question whether it is desirable to spend money in order to secure immigration from Europe. I believe that Canada is now sufficiently well known to attract the people that we want quite as fast as we can take care of them. I merely rose to call attention to the endorsement given by the minister to the view that the present government are benefiting by the policy of their predecessors.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad to say that I have found the report of the immigration by countries. I find that the kind of immigrants from Belgium were as follows :

1901-2	223
1902-3	303
1904-5	796

So, I think I was not very far from the mark when I said to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that we had from 400 to 500 of these immigrants each year. I saw it stated in the report of the St. John Colonization Society that they had between 300 or 400 Belgians located in the Lake St. John district.

Mr. MONK. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) to state that about 400 Belgians had settled in Lake St. John district. I do not think he has quoted anything to justify that statement. And, if such a statement is contained in the report of the society, I think it is exaggerated. The figures quoted by my hon. friend show the number of Belgians who arrived at Canadian ports. That is not proof that they settled in the Lake St. John district, nor even proof that they settled in Canada at all; for as the hon. gentleman knows, large numbers of Belgians come through Canadian ports and go to the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON. I glanced hurriedly over the report to which I referred. It was placed in my hand and I was told that it did not include any immigrants from Belgium. The report is in a statement by the Minister of the Interior on the 24th March, 1906, in answer to a question as to the number of immigrants that had arrived in Canada during the years specifying the countries from which they had come. I find that I overlooked the line in this return of showing the immigrants from Belgium. However, that the figures are there given as they have been quoted by the Solicitor Geeral. I am glad to have the opportunity of making this correction. The error was due to an oversight on my part—I did not catch the word 'Belgium' in hurriedly looking over the list. However, this does not affect the remarks I made to the effect that the persistent efforts made by the former government to direct the tide of immigration to this country were an important element in the success of Canada in attracting immigration to-day, and the present government are reaping, very largely, the results of the work of their predecessors.

Mr. FOSTER. Immigration from Belgium has increased, but it is still not nearly what I wish it was. But though, we are receiving immigrants from Belgium, we must not jump to the conclusion that these are the results of what Mr. de Coeli is doing. What I would like to know is what is the method of work followed. Of course, it is easy for a man to go over to Europe, sit in an office in one of the cities there, and spend some money in advertising; but we hope that that is not what Mr. de Coeli is doing. When $5,000 is being spent we want to know that it is being spent on a plan of operations that offers reasonable prospects of results. If the plan of operations is good, and if the field is good, we are willing, of course, to wait for results as the minister suggests.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry I cannot give the information that is asked for. Of course, immigration work must vary with the locality and the person employed. I do not think it would be possible for the department, in sending an agent to Belgium, to give him detailed instructions as to the methods of work he shall follow in his field. The best we can do is to chose the person whom we consider to be the best qualified and send him into the field with instructions to do the best he can. The work of this agent in Belgium is supervised more directly from the office of the commissioner in London. Mr. Preston is commissioner of immigration for Europe and has general charge of this agency as well as others. Any direct instructions issued to this agent would be from Mr. Preston's office rather than from the office here.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be very well, but it does not do us any good. We have to vote the money and we would like to know. There is no doubt that in an immense expenditure of this kind it is easy to throw away a great deal of money, and the departmental officers here are not to rest content when they make a million dollars expenditure in a year by saying that so many thousands were spent here, so many thousands there and so many thousands elsewhere. There is another duty the department has to perform, and that is to follow up its work, to understand exactly the plans upon which they are working, the methods they use, and that is what we want to know here. I want to say to the minister that there will be no estimates pass the House this year which will be more carefuly looked into their important points than the estimates of the Department of Immigration, and the minister must come prepared to give us definite information about these larger items. We do not propose to make an inquisitorial search into every item, but where you spend money in a certain way we want to know what your plans are, how they are being carried out, and then to be able to judge as to whether it is a good expenditure. Now, in the next two or three pages there is abundant food, there are tremendous expenditures in advertising of different kinds, and it will not be sufficient to say that so much is spent in such a newspaper office or in the printing of so many pamphlets. We want to know what kind of printing this is; we want to know where it goes and how it is distributed, and most important of all, if it is distributed in a way in which it may do good. For instance, in another place we were trying to find out in what way certain expenditures were made by a certain agency which is being paid by this government. What did we find out? We did not have a single scrap of information as to how the work was done. The only thing we knew was that that agency said it had done so and so, and placed its receipt voucher before the department, but the department itself never exerted a half ounce of energy to know whether that work has been done, whether the receipt voucher was something which actually showed reasonable and continued and productive work. Now, that is not the kind of expenditure the committee ought to vote, and I am certain it is not the kind of expenditure the minister wants to carry on. If we are to spend a million dollars in a propaganda with reference to immigration, we want to revise it very thoroughly and understand the means and methods which are employed in the expenditure. Then the House comes to the conclusion that certain parts of it are not well expended, and certain parts of it might be dropped, and that certain efforts might be better directed otherwise it will have some basis upon which to come to a decision in the matter. I am sure the minister will not think that we are asking anything unreasonable. But these immigration expenditures are going to be very closely criticised, and we have to ask the minister to rub up his knowledge with respect to them and to give us the fullest information.

Mr. OLIVER. Nobody recognizes more fully than myself the perfect propriety of asking that the House be placed in possession of the fullest possible information with regard to all matters of expenditure, including those of the Department of Immigration. However, everybody must recognize that immigration effort is largely of the same nature as the business of commercial advertising. It is just as difficult, I might also say impossible, to give definite information as to a particular method followed in all branches of a great service like immigration, as it would be to describe all the methods of advertising followed by a great commercial house. Conditions vary in different countries and at different times in the same country, and in different localities, and the methods must vary to meet those conditions if we would expect success. Speaking generally, that the methods of immigration have been successful is evinced by the results. In the case of this Belgian agency, as was read a few minutes ago, we began that immigration with something like 125 persons in a year, which number has increased rapidly from year to year. I think that is fair evidence of reasonable ability, and reasonably good judgment in carrying on the work. The details of the expenditure are contained in the Auditor General's Report for the year closing on the 30th June last. The agent himself gives a report, which is incorporated in the annual report of the Department of the Interior for the year 1904-5. As to the nature of his work, he has the following to say:

Mr. FOSTER.

The volume of correspondence is increasing continually. No less than 8,086 letters were received at this office in 1904-5, and were promptly answered when necessary. Besides this, personal inquiries are so numerous that on certain days I am kept from morning to evening answering questions. The immigrant now applying for information generally belongs to the farming class, as I give little encouragement to trades people. I always solicit correspondence from those who immigrate, as well as from old Belgian settlers ; in most cases the letters received eulogize the advantages offered by the country. A certain number of these letters were printed in the winter of 1904-5 in a propaganda publication, which also gave the names of numerous Belgians settled in Manitoba and the Northwest, from whom information could be obtained. This little paper was in great demand, as it stated facts that could easily be verified.

That is part of the work that this gentleman is doing. Of course it will be possible to get a fuller and more complete statement from him.

Mr. FOSTER. How many years has he been there?

Mr. OLIVER. Five years.

Mr. FOSTER. At about the same expenditure?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that his expenditures were less in preceding years than they were this year. In his report he mentioned that the Belgian exhibition has had an effect on immigration work, and I assume that the expenditure made by his office was correspondingly increased by the greater business stimulated by that exhibition.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he travel to different parts of Belgium, hold meetings and meet the farmers?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed he does travel in order to meet the people in different parts of the country

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all the information we can get hold of to show if he has exercised reasonable activity?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether we have a more detailed report in the department. Anything we have is certainly at the service of this committee or of the Standing Committee. To procure the information we may not have would, of course, take so long a time that it would deter the business of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not want to be unreasonable but we want to get what there is to get, hoping it will be satisfactory.

Mr. BARR. In looking over the report it is extraordinary that whilst we have this very large expenditure in Belgium we have a larger number of immigrants coming from other countries where there is not so large an expenditure and where, in fact, we have scarcely an agent. We find that from Syria we have received 3,276 immigrants in five years. It would seem that Belgium is made a sort of hub where these agents are sent and where they can operate. Whilst pretending to secure emigrants in Belgium they are bringing them from other countries where the law does not allow them to carry on a propaganda and the result is that we have a larger number of immigrants from other countries than from Belgium. It would seem that there is operating in this country a company which is very highly favoured, which receives extraordinary bonuses from the government and which we know nothing about. Although we do not know who is managing this corporation we do know that a large sum of money has been paid to it. We find that from such countries as Russia, Iceland and Syria a large number of emigrants are coming. It does not seem to me that the reports are not based on such facts as we should have presented to us, that there is a sort of grouping around Belgium and that they are endeavouring to cover up the propaganda which is going on in other countries. Looking over these accounts it is utterly impossible for hon. members of this House to know where the advertising such as we are being charged with is being done. It is contended that large quantities of advertising matter went out some two or three years ago, that this literature is piled up in rooms and that these old advertisements are sent out year after year. This material costs this company really nothing and yet large sums of money are charged up for the dissemination of the information contained in it. It does seem to me that the time has come when we should have a much more careful examination of these expenditures and a much more detailed account of them than we have at the present time. We are groping in the dark and, we really have no opportunity of checking the figures. I think that this country is now so thoroughly advertised that we will receive all the immigrants that we desire. We are getting them from the United States, and from the British Isles in such numbers as in the next quarter of a century will fill up the great Northwest and we will find in these people much more desirable immigrants who will become better citizens and do greater good to the country than the people we may secure from the continent of Europe. It is my opinion that we have now reached the point when our immigration system must be changed, but in the meantime we must have all the information so that we may have the proper data and vouchers to enable us to check these expenditures.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one point that strikes me as being objectionable in the make up of these votes and it is this: You give a general immigration vote and then you go to work and make large appropriations out of it for special objects. It would seem to me that when the House is passing the vote it ought to have these divided up. I spoke about this on two or three other occasions and my reason for urging it is to make more definite the votes that are given. For instance, you take a large vote for immigration and then you divide it and make special appropriations out of it. You give to the Societe de Colonization de Quebec an appropriation of $4,000; you give to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company a grant for colonization service of $8,000; you give to the Quebec and Lake St. John Repatriation and Colonization Society a grant of $4,000 and you give to others grants in all amounting to $9,600. What I contend is that in bringing down your estimates these large sums of money which are paid out and which are meant to be subsidies or grants to these different agents or organizations ought to be voted by themselves. They go to these organizations. You have no supervision over them. They are regular subsidies which these different organizations expend as they think best for the purpose of promoting immigration and so they ought to be specialized in the vote. Arguing out on these same lines you might as well let every department just take a gross sum and then let every department divide it up. But, it has always been considered in the interest of definiteness and good administration of expenditures that these amounts ought to be specialized and voted in their several amounts in the estimates. That I think the minister will agree to. It means just simply a change in the itemization of the estimates as they are brought down. Then, I see that there are various smaller items about some of which we would like a little information. I see that H. Greenwood, correspondent of the British press, has been engaged in writing for twelve months and has been paid $584 therefor. Is that Hamar Greenwood, member of the English parliament, and what has he been specially doing ?

Mr. OLIVER. He has been writing articles for insertion in the English papers dealing with Canada with the view of bringing Canada favourably to the attention of English readers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. minister if this Mr. Hamar Greenwood wrote the article commenting on that magnificent speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) after the recent English elections, was he paid for it and if Canada also paid for having articles copied from the Yorkshire Post and other country papers cabled out to Canada? Does the hon. minister know anything about that?

Mr. OLIVER. I must admit that I know nothing about it. I am not aware that the department does either, but if the hon. member wishes it I will make inquiry.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will be very pleased if the hon. minister does so because we are anxious to know if Canada is paying out money to have these gentry writing articles in the English press. The Minister of Agriculture, deviating from the rule laid down by the right hon. first minister laid down a platform of his own in relation to preferential trade with England after the recent English elections. There were editorials, or comments in the English papers upon this and these comments were cabled back to Canada. I want to know if these articles in the English papers were written by Mr. Greenwood and others of his friends in the pay of the Canadian government and if the people of Canada paid for the cablegrams back to Canada. I just draw the minister's attention to it. I think the tax payers and especially the farmers on the side lines of Victoria and Haliburton object to that sort of thing. We do not want to pay our money for that sort of business.

Mr. OLIVER. This department does not pay for the cablegrams.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What department is that in—the Finance ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Finance.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice a number of reports by Mr. Speers that he mentions as having sent to the department, but we have no information at all here or elsewhere as far as I know in regard to what these reports are.

Among others, he says that under date June 7, he reported to the superintendent of immigration concerning colonies of Belgian people settled in eastern Assiniboia ; on September 28, he reported on the Galician, German, Doukhobor and Mormon colonies ; in October he inspected and reported on various settlements in the Saskatchewan, and in November on the German, Hungarian, and Galician colonies in the Beaver Hills district. This gentleman refers to a great many of these reports, but there is no information in the report of the department with regard to the conditions he found existing.

Mr. OLIVER. If the committee wishes any of these reports they will be brought down. It would make the departmental report as bulky and as expensive as the Auditor General's Report if all these reports from officials were included in the volume.

Mr. SPROULE. We have practically only entered on the work of eliciting information from the commissioner of immigration, and the efforts of the committee have been set at naught by refusal to answer the questions put. We have another meeting of the committee to-morrow morning when the examination of the commissioner will be continued, and this information ought to be in our possession before we deal with these estimates.

Mr. OLIVER. If the committee orders any information within the control of the department it will have to be produced. Of course we do not know what the committee wants until it orders it. The committee having summoned Mr. Smart, they must deal with him in regard to the evidence they want him to give.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, and Mr. Smart stated that the former Minister of the Interior knew the names of the gentlemen who are supposed to constitute this North Atlantic Trading Company, and that the information was in the department. That being so, the present minister ought to know, that Mr. Scott, the commissioner of immigration, ought to know who the members of this company are. Mr. Smart was very particular in saying that the information was known to the officers of the department and the minister, but, that he now being in the service of the company he would refuse to divulge it.

Mr. SPROULE. We cannot vote these estimates blindly, before we get the information necessary to discuss them intelligently. The committee should first do its work and then these appropriations should be dealt with in supply. I incidentally mentioned that the committee is handicapped by the refusal of the witnesses to answer questions. Of course they were sustained in that refusal by the Chair and afterwards by a vote of the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. Can't the Minister of the Interior help us in this matter ? It is hardly conceivable that the government would pay money to this North Atlantic Trading Company without knowing the parties with whom they are dealing. The Agriculture Committee and the Public Accounts Committee have been unable so far to obtain any information as to the personnel of this company. The government is paying out public money to this company and surely the minister must know to whom the money is being paid. He should give that information to parliament so that the public may know how responsible these parties are and whether that money is being honestly earned and wisely expended. The feeling of the people of Canada, regardless of political party, is that it is not common sense for the government to pay out money to people whom they do not know ; and if they do know who they are then it is the duty of the government to disclose the information to parliament.

I do not think the minister will find there is any doubt that I am speaking the sentiments of men supporting him as well those opposing him, and that I am speaking the sentiments of Liberals in the country as well as of Conservatives. Look at these figures. The other day, in answer to the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), a return was presented of the amounts we have spent on immigration for the years 1900 to 1905. They are given in four classes. for immigration generally, for immigration from the United States, for immigration from Great Britain and for immigration from continental Europe. In the year 1900-01 we spent to promote immigration from all countries, $444,729.63; for promoting immigration from the United States, $144,000; for promoting immigration from Great Britain, $110,000; and for promoting immigration from continental Europe, $43,000. We have increased that expenditure very greatly from that time down to 1904-5. The total amount spent last year for promoting immigration as a whole is $972,356.67, or an increase from the first to the last year mentioned of 118 per cent. In the last year mentioned we have spent in promoting immigration from the United States, $318,000, an increase as compared with the first year mentioned of 120 per cent—this being greater than the general rate. We have spent in promoting immigration from Britain, $198,000 an increase last year as compared with the first year mentioned of 88 per cent; but we have spent $130,000 in 1904-5 in promoting immigration from continental Europe, an increase for the last year as compared with the first year of 200 per cent. We are increasing the expenditure for promoting European immigration in a much more rapid way than that for promoting immigration from any other country, Britain included. Britain has the lowest rate increase of all, only 88 per cent in that time. We have in connection with immigration from Europe this North Atlatic Trading Company of which we can get no information. It is not only the opposition who are complaining. I refer to this for the purpose of urging on the minister that before we meet again, if not tonight, he will make up his mind to tell the committee and the country just who it is we are dealing with. Let me refer the hon. gentleman in that connection to a few lines in an editorial in the Toronto 'Globe,' of April 13, it is not often I care to endorse statements of the 'Globe,' but I can endorse almost every statement contained in this article. I give a few lines from it in case, for any reason, it should change its mind as it has done on other occasions. It says :

> It must be said, however, that the payments to the North Atlantic Trading Company for European immigrants brought to Canada brings up again the whole policy of offering bonuses as an incentive to immigration. The refusal to disclose the personnel of the company makes it the more imperative that that branch of it at least should be closed down. The average immigration from Europe is not so desirable that the ordinary safeguards of government may be ignored in order to secure it. The public does not like secrecy of any kind in the transaction of public business, and if immigration cannot be secured from Europe otherwise, we should try and get along without it. Canada will recover from the shock if Europe will.
> It may have been necessary in order to get the tide of immigration flowing towards the Dominion in the past to employ extraordinary efforts. The time has arrived, and, we think, had arrived some time ago, to trust to the general attractions of the country.

Later on it says :

> If anything were needed to give it its quietus the fact that it is necessary to work in secret in Europe in order to get immigrants should furnish the needed force.

It winds up by saying :

> At all events there should be no companies with secrets operating in the field.

I commend that to the minister and I urge upon him that he will consider the question of whether this committee is not entitled to a full disclosure from the department as to the parties to whom we are paying this money, not merely by the name of the North Atlantic Trading Company but the personnel of the company.

The minister said he had nothing to do with controlling Mr. Smart. Mr. Smart left the Department of the Interior where, he was deputy minister, on the express understanding, as I think he stated the other day, that he would enter this service and would not be called upon to disclose the identity of the company in case he entered its service, and he did that with the consent of the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. The discussion has taken a rather wide range and does not seem likely to lead to any very definite conclusion. I am quite able to agree with a great deal of what has been said by opposition speakers, but it seems to me that they hardly appreciate the position. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has intimated that we should not do business with a company unless we know who compose the company. That is a remarkable doctrine. We pay subsidies to steamship companies to the amount of many, many thousands every year and we never inquire who compose the companies; it does not interest us who are the directors in the companies. We know with whom we do business and whether we get service or not, and that is all we require to know in the transaction. So in dealing with railway companies, we know with whom we are dealing but we do not know everybody with whom we are dealing, and it does not concern us and is not material, and so in transactions which the Department of Immigration may have in carrying on its immigration work the question is the results from that work rather than the personnel of those who are engaged in it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you think there is any analogy between this and giving a subsidy to the Allan Line, the Torrance Line, or the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not discussing that, I do not wish to enter into that branch of the question, but I should say that any payment for any service has an analogy to any other payment for any other service, whether large or small. But that is not the point. When my hon. friend suggested a little while ago that it was impossible to reach a conclusion with regard to the estimates now before the House because certain proceedings before a certain standing committee had not been concluded, I did not object at all to the position taken by him if he chooses to take it. But these estimates are put before the House for its information, and I am prepared to give all the information in my power both as regards the details and the policy of the department ; and there is no reason why the House should not make up its mind as to whether the expenditure proposed is a proper expenditure or not without waiting for a report of the standing committee. I do not know that the result of the proceedings before that committee would necessarily have any particular bearing upon the question of policy upon which the House must pronounce in voting these estimates. The question before that committee is not one of policy at all but is simply, if I may so describe it, a scandal hunt. In the presentation of these estimates I am not concerned with the result of the proceedings before that committee or the methods followed by it. That committee will carry on its operations as it may deem proper ; and if its proceedings should result in disclosures discreditable to one person or another or to the government, so much the worse for the parties concerned. But the investigation it is persuing has nothing to do with the question of the policy I am submitting to the House with regard to immigration and the expenditures necessary to carry out that policy, and in that connection I shall be very glad to discuss any question which hon. members may desire to have discussed and give all the information I can.

Mr. INGRAM. There is a question I would like to put now. Mr. Smart has sworn, as I understand from the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), that the names of those who compose the North Atlantic Trading Company are in the Department of the Interior and consequently are known to the hon. minister. Are we to understand that he declines to give the names which are already in his department.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman deny that they are in his department ?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge that they are, but if they are, they can be produced if the House wants them.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand, the hon. gentleman has no objection to giving them.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. When this question was up last session, I explained to the House as well as I could the conditions surrounding this particular contract ; and I said then that it did not seem to me to be sound public policy, as long as we were going to stand by the contract, to disclose any of the names of those connected with it. However, I referred the matter to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and the names, so far as I knew them then and have known them since, were I believe then made public. If they were not, they can be made public now, so long as the gentlemen of the opposition take the responsibility of having them published.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the members of the opposition will probably be willing to take the responsibility the hon. minister has referred to. I do not think there would be any responsibility in that connection which any one in this House ought to shrink from. The scandal hunt—if the minister desires to describe it in that way—is still going on before the committee of agriculture. At least I understand that the examination of witnesses in that connection is not yet concluded. I am not very familiar with the proceedings before that committee except as I have gathered them from the reports in the public press, but I did gather that Mr. Smart refused to give some relevant information which admittedly was in his possession, and that the majority of the committee sustained him. That however is not a matter for comment just now, though it may be at a later date. I did not know until this evening that the witness had undertaken to swear that the information which he withheld from the committee is in the possession of the department. The hon. minister seems not to be very sure whether it is or not. But I presume we can procure some information on that point at a later date. Of course the minister realizes that this contract was the subject of some discussion last year. As I understood the attitude of the government at that time, it simply amounted to this, that the operations, the supposed operations I would be inclined to say—of this company would be very greatly handicapped if it were known in certain countries of the continent of Europe that particular individuals are responsible for the efforts to induce immigration to Caanda from those countries. I recollect that the argument was to this effect, that these gentlemen had been employed to do certain work which they could not do without contravening the laws of the country where they were supposed to work and that this government was condoning the infraction of violation by these gentlemen of the laws of their country. Therefore this government, being the accomplices of these people, should not disclose the names of their accomplices. However, I do not know that we can deal with that matter very fully at present. The hunt, as the minister calls it, is still going on before the agriculture committee, and although he disclaims any possibility that he may be at all interested in the disclosures which may ensue, still it is possibly within the bounds of belief that they may be interesting to him later on.

I do not rise, however, so much for the purpose of discussing that particular subject as for the purpose of asking my hon. friend for some information about a very considerable item which appears in the Auditor General's Report at pages L-24 and 25. I find there an item of $12,250 for what are called special delegates. It might be very opportune, when we are discussing the general subject of immigration, that we should have some knowledge of the results of the efforts of the thirty or forty different agents who have been despatched to the old country as special delegates.

I have heard from various quarters that the chief work in which a good many of these delegates are employed is simply taking a trip to the mother country at the public expense, and that it would be somewhat difficult to indicate, so far as some are concerned, any special advantage to the country from these expenditures—although I have no doubt that the trips have been very enjoyable to the individuals concerned. Can the minister point out, in respect to any one of these items, what the result to the country has been in the shape of any increase of immigration, any actual results that have made themselves manifest? I have had inquiries concerning the efforts of two or three of these gentlemen. I will take at random one of the larger expenditures. Here, for instance, is an amount of $1,237.97 paid in the case of a Mr. Wilson. Is the minister aware how many persons Mr. Wilson has induced to come to Canada, in what part of the mother country or the continent of Europe he has been carrying on his work, and what he did while there? Mr. Wilson was absent for four months—I suppose the expenditure is for the whole time, from the day of his departure until his return. Of this expenditure, $400 represents his salary, and $837.97 covers travelling expenses of various kinds. Was he endeavouring to procure immigrants for the west or for the province of Nova Scotia, from which province, I believe he comes? I think information of this kind might be usefully given because this class of expenditure represents a considerable amount. If it serves a useful purpose, we would like to know it; if it serves no useful purpose except to furnish trips for these gentlemen at the expense of the country, we would like to know that. Has the minister any report from these gentlemen? And what does this expenditure result in?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to say whether we have a report from the gentleman referred to or not, but I believe we have reports from nearly all of the special delegates; if there is such a report in the case mentioned, I will see to it that it shall be brought down for the information of the House. In view of the expenditure that appears opposite his name, I presume that there is a report from Mr. Wilson.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there one of these gentlemen who has brought a single immigrant to Canada? Can the minister directly trace to the work of any of these gentlemen the bringing of a single immigrant? If the minister cannot point out that, can he show any general advantage, any single benefit to the people from the expenditure of this $12,250.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no personal knowledge of the results of the work of the gentleman in this list; but I have personal knowledge of the results of the work of a special delegate who went from the neighbourhood of Edmonton two or three years ago and through whose efforts a very considerable number of desirable people have come out and settled in Canada. I believe I have fair reason to assume, that, taken as a whole, the efforts of these special delegates have been very successful. It is impossible, of course, to put one's finger upon the total result of any particular effort in immigration work, just as it would be impossible to say of an advertisement that stands in the newspaper day after day, and week after week, that one particular issue had produced a certain result. No man can go through another country and disseminate favourable information in regard to Canada without having an effect beyond what he can show in immediate results. The visits of these special delegates have been part of the work done in England, Scotland and Ireland within recent years for the purpose of securing an increase in desirable immigration from those countries. Speaking for myself, I think it is the most desirable of all forms of immigration effort in those countries; and I think that the tremendous increase in the number of immigrants now coming from the old country, and especially the gratifying difference in the class of immigrants may fairly be attributed in some degree to these special delegates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not exactly see the analogy that the minister points out. An advertisement in a newspaper is usually prepared for a special purpose, it is prepared by an expert, and it is by preference, inserted in a newspaper of large circulation. It is couched in striking language, for as we know, advertisement writing has become an art. But the method of the department is not at all like that, as I understand it. The department does not seek to procure men specially familiar with the business of inducing immigrants to come to this country. Speaking under correction, the method of the department is to select some men without particular record or qualifications, except those of services rendered to the Liberal party, and to send them to the mother country at the public expense on the theory that they are a special delegate and can and will promote immigration. I am not speaking so much of the method adopted by the present minister (Mr. Oliver) because he has been only a short time in the department, but I direct his attention to this matter because he is technically responsible for what has taken place under his predecessors. It is idle to tell this committee or to tell me, that this method is in any way analogous to the business of a great firm carried on by advertising. In one case you have systematic and effecient methods; in the other you have nothing of that kind; you have men selected without regard to qualifications, other than party qualifications, who are sent at the expense of the public treasury to the mother country nominally to promote immigration. It may be possible, and no doubt has occurred, that some of these men are men of force and intelligence who have done some good. I am not speaking of the exceptions but of the system as a whole. Will the minister, when he comes to deal with this matter again—for it will have to be dealt with again—give us some idea of the qualifications of some of these gentlemen—for instance Mr. Wilson, Mr. Gillies, Mr. Douglas. On the ocean passage of the last named gentleman $29.20 was spent. I do not know what that item means. Will the minster say why these gentlemen were selected? If the minister proposes to do work of this kind, why does he not select experts, men who are familiar with the work and who have had experience in it? Why do you go on selecting new men year after year with no other apparent purpose than giving a new lot in every succeeding year an opportunity to take a trip to the mother country at the expense of the people of Canada? That is the criticism I would be inclined to make upon the methods of the past. I do not know what methods the minster proposes to adopt in the future.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the criticism is hardly fair and scarcely in accordance with the facts. I have some personal knowledge of the system of sending these special delegates in past years, and the desire was to select successful farmers, men who had made a success of farming in the west; I speak only of that part of the country. The object was to select natives of the old country who had been successful in the west who could carry back with them evidences of their success in Canada which would do more to impress the minds of the classes likely to immigrate than any other possible means. The man who himself has succeeded in Canada, though he might not be as eloquent as the professional immigration agent, yet his very presence and statements would carry convictions to the minds of his neighbours and relatives. This is the principle upon which these special delegates were selected; it may have been departed from in some instances. But when the hon. gentleman says there was no principle in the selection, I am compelled to differ from him and tell him that that was the principle, and in my estimation it was a good principle and has produced good results. The large immigration we are getting to-day from the old country is a part of those results. The information asked for by the hon. gentleman will be brought down at the next sitting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many of these men whose names are given on pages L—24 and L—25 came from each province; how many are from the west; how many were originally natives of the old country and how many of them have been selected for that reason? It may be that I am under a misapprehension as to the practice, the department may have had a perfectly good principle to begin its work upon, I am speaking of the practice as it is carried out to-day, of which information has come to me from different parts of the country, though I do not vouch for its correctness. I have no personal knowledge of the facts, and I am giving them to the minister exactly as they have come to me. If the minister will be good enough to give us that information we will discuss it more fully when we next take up the item now before us.

Mr. SPROULE. We have heard many complimentary remarks on the system of immigration carried on by the present government, but it occurs to me that their efforts have not been attended with such great results after all as might be expected from the large expenditure of money that we make when we compare the results with the immigration that is pouring into the United States. In answer to a question I put on the paper some time ago it was stated that the amount spent on immigration last year was $972,356. In 1896, when the Conservative government was in power, they spent $120,000, owing to the way they were attacked for this expenditure. They had been cutting it down every year, and still they were being attacked, I was going to say ferociously attacked, for the heavy expenditure on immigration. We were told that it was not justifiable, that it was not attended with such results as might be expected, that there was no wisdom in the expenditure. The incoming government put up the expenditure, and I think very properly, put it up at that time, because we were not receiving the immigration that we needed. But the expenditure has been increasing ever since, until last year it reached nearly a million dollars, and I have no doubt it will reach the million dollar mark this year. We are told that we receive wonderful results. But I notice in looking over the returns from the United States that they received in round figures last year about twelve times as many immigrants as we did. They have no more unoccupied land that they can offer to the immigrant, no more free grants, and the overflow from their country into ours is partly owing to that fact. Notwithstanding that I notice that they are getting twelve times as many immigrants as we get in Canada, and they were obliged not only to cut off their expenses for immigration, but to pass a Bill recently something like the following:

The house committee on immigration to-day completed its Bill to further restrict the coming of aliens to the United States. The Bill increases the head tax on aliens from $2 to $5.

They are charging $5 a head to let them into the country, while on the contrary we are paying them a bonus of $5 or $6 a head to come in.

It requires each male adult to possess $25 in money and each female $15. A family may be admitted on its head showing $50.

An educational test provides that each immigrant over sixteen years of age must be able to read in some language. It places in the excluded class imbeciles, the weak minded and manual labourers of poor physique. It gives the Department of Commerce and Labour discretion to admit or exclude immigrants under sixteen years of age coming to the United States alone.

Now if the United States are able to draw to their country without any free land grant to offer them, twelve times as many immigrants as we get, at the same time charging them $2 a head, as they have been doing in the past, excluding the physically weak, the imbeciles, the diseased, and all other undesirable classes, even sending them back at the rate of thousands every year, then I say we have not accomplished such wonderful results considering the great expenditure we have been making.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much does the United States spend in Europe ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know, but their expenditure has been cut down greatly, they say to-day that they do not require to pay aliens to come out from the old country, the trouble is that immigrants are coming in in too large numbers. On the other hand look at our situation. The hon. minister gave us a list of immigration agencies in the United States, Europe and other countries, and if my calculation was correct, we have over 125 salaried agents that are employed to-day in scouring the world to find immigrants to this country. The minister spoke a short time ago about the very desirable class of immigrants we are getting to-day compared with what it was a few years ago, and he wished us to conclude that we are getting splendid results for the expenditure. Our experience is that we are not getting the most desirable class of immigrants to-day. In various parts of the country you will find people who were brought out here as farm labourers or farm servants, and they will tell you that they have never been on a farm in their lives, and never worked an hour on a farm. They are coming from London, Liverpool, Manchester and from the other metropolitan cities of England and although they know nothing about farming they are put down here for the purpose of going on farms. These are not desirable immigrants and after you distribute them in the province of Ontario it is found by very many of our farmers that they are of little or no use. What is the result ? Many of them drift back into the villages, remain there for a short time and then gradually drift back to the cities. I could count up a number with whom I am well acquainted who came into our part of the country, who were of no use, who got back into the villages, who in time became a burden on the charities of the locality and some of whom have been kept from starvation. A sum of money has been spent by the authorities of these villages to take them back to the cities to get rid of them. This is not a desirable class. The United States, whilst refusing admission to the physically weak, to those who are diseased, to the undesirable element, insist that each male adult shall be possessed of $25 in money, that each female shall have $15 or that a family shall have $50. The United States do all that and yet they get more immigrants proportionately to population than we do to-day although they have none of the valuable and fertile lands to offer to immigrants that we have. In my judgment we are not accomplishing very much and we are bringing in a large number of people who are becoming a burden upon the charities of the country. There is no doubt about that. I took up a paper the other day and it gave the number of immigrants who had gone back to be supported by charity in Toronto last winter. In Montreal and other places the same condition is to be found. People who are reported as farm labourers, as having been brought from the farms of the old country, are settled on the farms here a large number of whom, I have reason to believe, were never farmers in their lives and have not in them the makings of farmers here. While I admit that there will be a percentage of them, who, although they have not been accustomed to farming, may succeed, the great bulk of them will not succeed. I do not think we have received the best results from the heavy expenditure we have been making in the last few years. I think the time has come when we should not require to have an army of paid immigration agents scouring the world for emigrants to bring to this country. I think that the inducements we can offer are sufficient to bring a desirable class here in as large numbers as in my judgment the country can assimilate and make good citizens of and that we do not require to bring in any other class. We are told that these immigrants are inspected in the old country, that we do not bring in any who are physically or mentally unsound. I took up a clipping from a paper a short time ago which refers to two cases and which I give as an example of many more that have got through in the same way. It is as follows :

Trachoma is a disease that is prevalent in southern Europe and we are told that these immigrants are examined and that any suffering from trachoma are not allowed to come in.

Trachoma is a disease of the eyes prevalent in southern Europe and in Asia and of such a virulent and infectious character that the government prohibits the entrance to Canada of immigrants afflicted with it. Recently a couple of Syrians affected with the disease passed the immigration authorities at Halifax or St. John and came on through Toronto en route to the United States. The United States immigration authorities stopped these two men at the border and they were sent back to Toronto, where they are now living in a poor way at the expense of a relative in the United States, who has work awaiting for these men. Mr. Walsh, assistant relief officer, endeavoured to see if these men could not get into the United States. but the authorities pointed to the evidences of the disease, which was plain to be seen, and consequently they are held in Toronto.

It is strange to me that if it was so plain to be seen by the inspector at the United States border it has not been equally plain to be seen by our inspectors at the Canadian border and if so I cannot understand why they were allowed to come in.

Mr. Walsh thinks it very curious that men who were stopped by the United States authorities should not have been stopped by the Canadian immigration physicians, who ought to be as strict. It is believed if the Canadian medical director of immigration, Dr. Bryce, knew of this, he would have these men sent back to Europe at the expense of the steamship companies. It is certainly felt they should not be dumped on Toronto.

I had two or three others. This is only one. An effort was made to send some of these people back but it did not succeed. It is claimed that they could not send them back and they are remaining in Canada. I merely read this as evidence that the inspection is not as thorough as we have been lead to believe or as we have been told it is from year to year because these people do come in. And they do come in, not at a time when the disease has not developed but when it has developed to the extent that it is quite apparent to the inspectors of the United States who do not admit these people into that country while the Canadian inspectors allow them to come in here. There are many of these cases drifting into the hospitals. I saw a report in which it was stated that a number had drifted into the hospitals in Toronto with other diseases as well. The same thing is true in regard to the hospitals in Montreal. If the inspection is as thorough as we are led to believe how do these people get in ? It seems that the inspection is faulty somehow or other. We allow this very undesirable class to come in, not only the diseased and the physically weak that are not fit for the rigours of life here but we are allowing a large number to come in who are not farmers, who never were farmers, who know nothing about farming and who are not even mechanics, but many of whom are becoming a burden on the charities of the country. Yet we say we are accomplishing such grand results by the expenditure for immigration. I say we have reached the day when the attractions of our country ought to be sufficient to bring immigrants here without spending the large amount of money that we are spending at the present time to try and get immigrants to come to this country. I say as well that there are many coming to this country who are very undesirable people and who become a burden upon the charities of the country almost as soon as they reach it.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the committee is to be congratulated on the frank position taken by the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Sproule). If the position which he has taken is the position of his friends on the other side we can perhaps arrive at a conclusion in regard to this immigration vote. If I understand the hon. gentleman correctly his view is that immigration effort on the part of Canada should cease and that this vote as a matter of fact should be struck out. That is an intelligible position and one that my hon. friend is certainly entitled to take. If it is the position of himself and his friends on the other side of course we are compelled to take issue with them on that point.

My hon. friend fails to appreciate the value of the immigration work done in Canada in recent years. I can speak of it impartially because I have been practically interested in it only so recently that my effort has had comparatively nothing to do with the result. My hon. friend compares the condition of Canada with that of the United States, and the immigration to Canada with that to the United States. The weakness of his argument is that there is no necessary similarity between the two countries. That is evidenced by the fact that although Canada has an area equal to that of the United States and although Canada has been the subject of colonization as long as the United States one country has 80,000,000 people to-day and the other but 6,000,000. That shows that there is a difference of conditions between the two countries which warrants the adoption of a different method in dealing with the increase of population. The people are not going to the United States because of free land for there is no free land there now; the immigration to the United States is largely of a class of people who are looking for opportunity which grows out of the occupation of land by others rather than by themselves. It is because such people carry with them the disabilities of which the hon. gentleman has spoken, that the United States government has found it necessary to take extra precautions to prevent the influx of the diseased and the undesirable This large emigration which is going to the United States is no evidence that if Canada ceased her efforts there would be a flow of desirable immigrants into Canada. We don't want the class of immigration that is going into the United States even if we could get it; we have a different field to offer immigrants and we are getting a different class. To-day there is a flow of people into Canada, from the United States, from Great Britain, and to some extent from continental Europe, at which many of us are astonished. But it has not always been so. Canada has been Canada ever since the world has been the world, Canada has been a united Canada since 1870; Canada has had a transcontinental railway since 1885; the Northwest has had railway development during all the years since; but although we have had the Northwest practically as it is to-day we did not have immigration. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite stated that we could not expect settlement in Canada until the United States had filled up. But the United States was practically filled up years ago, and still we were not getting immigrants. At the time of the Oklahoma boom, when that great territory was thrown open to settlement, land hunger was so great in the United States that the people lined up in thousands at the boundary of that territory and at a signal rushed across the line and staked their claims and staked that whole state in side of a very few days. But at that very time you could not give land away in the Northwest, and there was no immigration. It was not because there was not a desire to get land, but it was because the knowledge of the advantages of our Northwest had not been spread in the United States. As my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) said, this effort must be persistent in order to secure results. The first efforts of this government did not procure great results; it required persistence. It might seem to some that a complete withdrawal of efforts now may not be followed by the cessation of these results. That may be a possibility, but the fact remains that it is absolutely because of the efforts of the immigration department that the rush of immigration has been brought about. My hon. friends hardly realize what this rush of immigrants has meant to the Northwest and to all Canada. A few years ago we had vast areas on these prairies at the value of $1 or $2 an acre. It was not worth $3 an acre because it could not be sold for that price. The Canadian Pacific Railway had some 16,000,000 acres of land there, and the first and the last acre of it could have been bought at $3 an acre, but neither the first acre nor the last acre was bought, nobody wanted it at the price. To-day that land is worth $8 or $10 or $12 an acre; no one can fix a value on a great deal of it. This means that the actual assessable value of this Dominion has been increased by hundreds of millions of dollars because of the movement of immigrants into that country, and because the value has been created by the demand for the land. It is not necessary to point to the result that has come to eastern Canada by reason of the increased trade resulting from the increase in population in the west. The wholesale dealers of Montreal and Toronto, the manufacturers throughout eastern Canada owe their increased prosperity in recent years very largely to the increase of settlement and production in the west. That comes about, not because the Northwest is different from what it was before; not because of great railroad construction in the Northwest as compared with years previously, but solely because of the influx of people which has been brought about by the efforts of the immigration department. My hon. friend talks about the large expenditure on immigration to-day; he says it was $100,000 under the late government and that the Liberal opposition then said it was too large. The reason it was said to be too large was because there were no results, because the money was being thrown away and there was nothing to show for it. The condition now is altogether different. A million a year for which results can be shown is economy where $100,000 a year producing no results is an absolute waste. Considering the results of the immigration policy of my predecessor the value outweighs a hundred times and a thousand times the expenditure made upon it. Criticism of details of that administration may be legitimate but the details are a small matter, let them be what they may, as compared with results.

Methods must change with varying conditions. Reference has been made to disease in immigrants. This government has dealt with that to a very considerable extent. One hon. gentleman wondered that two cases of trachoma had succeeded in getting past our medical inspection. If my hon. friend were to visit a seaport and see the passengers landing he would give great credit to the medical service of this department for not letting pass a very much larger number of such cases. The returns show that for the year 1904-5, 496 deportations were made of undesirable immigrants through Canadian Atlantic ports and 115 by American ports, a total of nearly 600 deportations for that year as the results of the efforts of our medical department. With thousands of people coming in there is always the danger of importation of disease and poverty and although efforts have been made by the immigration department in past years these efforts have been hampered by the state of our law. My predecessor referred to that in the House and I have given notice of a Bill to amend the law in respect to medical inspection of immigrants and I hope, I have no doubt, I will have the support of hon. members in getting that Bill through the House. It will make provision for much greater energy in handling immigrants, in following them, in classifying them, in deporting when necessary and in dealing with them generaly. It is necessary we should have these enlarged powers in order to handle this question successfully. We have to meet conditions as they arise and we hope to deal with them more effectually in the future under our new Bill.

In regard to the working capacity or cal ling in life of immigrants we are aware that in the past there has been some complaint, as there must necessarily arise complaints, in regard to the class of people who will take advantage of the supposed favourable conditions in a new country. Our arrangements for the encouragement of immigrants from England, besides advertising and general agency work, included the payment of a bonus of $1.75 per head to the booking agents as an inducement to them to book the prospective immigrants to Canada rather than to any other country. That is the principle on which the bonus has been paid, and the principle has been acted upon by the government of Canada for very many years. It may be good or bad, but that is the principle, that it pays to give the booking agents some small consideration as an inducement to book the passengers to Canada if possible. It was understood that this bonus should only be paid on immigrants who were of the farming or farm labouring classes, but this was so administered as to include as farmers or farm labourers, immigrants who on landing in Canada declared their intention of entering upon farm work, or entering upon farming as an occupation. The result of that system of paying the booking agents a bonus on the expressed intention necessarily was that any man of any class, an artisan or clerk or whatever else he might be might on landing in Canada, after expressing his intention of becoming a farmer, be rated as a farmer. In practical operation this was found to work out not entirely satisfactorily. On one hand our agents at the ports refused to accept very large numbers of these people for bonus, on the ground that they were not people of farming occupation. On the other hand the booking agents claimed that they were entitled to this bonus because these people had informed them that when they bought the tickets that they were going to engage in farm labour in Canada. Some little time ago the conclusion was reached that it would be advantageous to change the basis of payment of this bonus and to make it contingent upon the person having been actually engaged in farm labour or in some similar or kindred occupation in the old country for at least a year before starting for Canada. That is to say we changed the basis of paying the bonus from the expressed intention of the immigrant to his actual occupation in the old country.

Mr. SPROULE. When was that change made ?

Mr. OLIVER. That came into operation on the 1st of April of this year. The result of this change would naturally be to very much decrease the number of people upon whom the bonus would be paid. I thought that, under the circumstances, recognizing the shortage of farm labour in Canada at present and the desirability of getting a class of people who may be expected to be useful on a farm, it would be fair to increase the bonus, so that instead of paying $1.75 per head upon all who may declare their intention of becoming farmers we now pay $5 a head upon those who have been farm labourers or been engaged in kindred occupations in the old country. The notice is dated March 20, and is as follows :

The Canadian government has decided to make a change in the system of payment of bonuses to booking-agents on tickets sold to Canada, and I beg to inform you that the following rules will come into effect respecting tickets sold on or after the 1st April, 1906 :

1. Bonus will be paid, provided the regulations of the department are complied with, upon tickets to Canada sold to persons whose occupation in the old country is, and has been for at least one year, one of the following, viz.: farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway sectionmen, navvies, or miners, and who have signified their intention of following farming in Canada ; and to female domestic servants.

2. The bonus will be £1 on each person of prescribed classes, eighteen years of age or over, and 10 shillings on those between one and eighteen years of age. No bonus on infants, tourists, returning Canadians, saloon passengers, prepaid tickets, or persons of other occupations than one of the above named, or on persons mentally or physically unfit.

We think that the result of this change will have a desirable effect in many ways; and not the least will be that it will place beyond question our position regarding the bringing in of artisans. It has been a matter of some comment and question among the labour organizations that there was possibility of the machinery of the immigration department being used to promote competition in their particular lines of labour. The department has never had any desire to take that position. Its efforts have been entirely in the interests of agriculture and not of manufacturing and other industries. We believe that the change of system will put beyond question the fact that the machinery of the immigration department is not to be used for the purpose of promoting the immigration of people other than those who are likely to engage in farm work.

Mr. LALOR. What evidence do you get as to the occupation of the immigrant? How do you know that an immigrant is a farm labourer?

Mr. OLIVER. We have the provision here that the booking agent must place the evidence as to his occupation before one of our accredited agents in the old country before he can get the bonus.

Mr. LALOR. Is it simply the statement of the immigrant which is taken?

Mr. OLIVER. No, our agents must be satisfied as to the class to which the immigrant belongs.

Mr. LALOR. I would suppose that the agent would be easily satisfied on account of the $5 he received.

Mr. OLIVER. It is the booking agent, and not our accredited agents, who receives the $5. It is our salaried agent, who has nothing to do with the booking agent, who has to pass an opinion on the qualifications of the applicant for the ticket. And if the individual immigrant does not receive a certificate from our accredited agent in the old country, then our agents at this end of the line question him and accept or reject him for the bonus according to their best judgment. And judging by the complaints we have had from ticket agencies, I am satisfied that there is little danger of the bonus being paid in any case where it is not warranted.

Mr. LAKE. Is there different treatment accorded to the British immigrant as compared with the foreigner? As I understood the other day in the examination of the Commissioner of Immigration, it is the purser on board ship who takes the list of passengers and finds out whether they claim to belong to the farming class or not.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the purser makes out his manifest giving the list of passengers and all particulars in regard to them, but that is for information only, and it does not control our commissioners when checking the lists for the payment of bonuses.

Mr. LAKE. But our officials take the purser's list to ascertain whether an immigrant is a farmer or not.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the supposed case.

Mr. LAKE. Is it actually the case?

Mr. OLIVER. I am told it is within reasonable limits.

Mr. LENNOX. The answer we got from the Agricultural Committee was that the question was never asked.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The manifest of the purser is taken as a guarantee.

Mr. PATERSON. Is it at all likely that the committee have the information they desire to enable them to let some of the items pass or do they require more? There are very few here at this hour and it is evident that if the items do not pass the whole thing will have to be repeated again, and I do not know why we should waste any more of our time to-night. If there is any possibility of the committee doing any work we will sit on, but if not we might as well adjourn especially as it is now past midnight.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is very sensible.

Mr. PATERSON. I take it for granted you have not yet had all the information you require.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is just a preliminary canter.

Mr. PATERSON. We have been at it two days now.

Mr. OLIVER. In reply to the hon. member from Marquette (Mr. Roche) I wish to say again that the ships manifest is not accepted as our authority in checking the immigrants.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That differs from the evidence given in the Agricultural Committee the other day.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the government propose to take up any of its own business to-morrow if we should get through in time with the notices of motion and public Bills and orders?

Mr. PATERSON. I have no information on that point. Is it likely that we shall clean the order paper to-morrow?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no idea.

Mr. PATERSON. I can only say that if we do and the government business is gone on with we shall probably move to go into supply. If the idea of the hon. gentlemen opposite is that we should wait until the labours of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization are completed, we might take some other branch of the estimates. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) informs me that he is ready and we shall probably take up his estimates first.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned 12.10 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

PETITION OF PACIFIC AND EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa) moved:

That the petition of Sir Henry Pellatt and others presented this day praying that leave may be granted to Sir Henry Pellatt and others to present their petition for an Act to incorporate the Pacific and Eastern Railway Company, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for receiving such petition, be read and received forthwith and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the explanation?

Mr. BELCOURT. The explanation is that the time for the presentation of petitions was extended until the 12th of this month. The gentlemen concerned in this Bill thought they would have until that date to present it and it would have been presented on the 12th, only the House was not in session on that day. You will remember that the House rose on the 11th and there was no opportunity of presenting it on the day fixed.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That the name of Mr. E. D. Smith be substituted for that of Mr. White on the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, and that Mr. Ross (North Cape Breton and Victoria) be appointed a member of the following standing committees: Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines; Banking and Commerce, and Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. He said:

The object of the Bill is to reorganize the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. Several representations have been made to the department by the boards of trade and others asking that a reorganization should be made of the Harbour Commission and it was found advisable after having given the matter serious consideration to reorganize the board. There are at present 11 commissioners; six are appointed by the government and five are nominated by different local bodies—the board of trade has one representative; the corn exchange one; la chambre de commerce, one; the shipping interests, one; and the city of Montreal is represented by the mayor who is a commissioner ex officio. Contracts were given some years ago to carry on certain works in the harbour and for different reasons those works have been greatly delayed. It has become advisable and indeed urgent that the constitution of the board should be reorganized in order to push more actively to a completion the works which are now pending. The Bill provides for the repeal of all the sections of the old Act governing the appointment of the six commissioners appointed by the government and of the five commissioners nominated by the different bodies I have mentioned. It is provided that the eleven commissioners shall be replaced by three commissioners who will be appointed during pleasure by the Governor in Council. I am free to say that this step which we are now taking is in the direction of making Montreal more and more a national port. This idea has been long ago ventilated not only by the people of Montreal, but by the people of the different parts of the Dominion, and I believe we are voicing the sentiments of the people in declaring that Montreal should be more and more a national port. It is suggested also that the commissioners should devote most of their time to the business of the port. I have said that there are important works now under contract and the existing commissioners had not sufficient time to devote to the consideration of the different questions which were daily arising in connection with these works. It is expected that the three new commissioners who will be appointed will have to devote all of their time or most of their time, to the business of the commission.

Mr. MONK. Are they to receive a salary?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes; the Bill provides that they shall receive a salary out of the revenues of the harbour. There is a further provision that the Bill shall come into force on proclamation. It is thought that if the Bill should come into force immediately without proclamation, then on the day of its sanction the present commission would cease to exist and the harbour of Montreal might be for some time without any commission in charge. Hence the provision that the Bill shall come into force by proclamation.

Mr. MONK. Does the Bill deal with the existing funded indebtedness of the harbour ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The indebtedness of the Harbour Commission remains as it is.

Mr. MONK. What salaries are these commissioners to receive?

Mr. BRODEUR. That will be fixed by the Governor in Council. There is no stated salary in the Bill for these commissioners.

Mr. STOCKTON. I understood the minister to say that this was a movement in the direction of eventually making the port of Montreal a national port. I wish to ask, whether he, or the government of which he is a member, has also considered the desirability of moving to make our other Atlantic ports, national ports?

Mr. BRODEUR. As I have just declared, this Bill is in the direction of making Montreal more and more a national port. The question of making the other ports national ports has not been absolutely considered by the government, but of course that is a question which will have to be considered very soon.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the minister kindly explain what he means by 'nationalizing a port'; what does it really mean ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I said that the commissioners would be men appointed by the Governor in Council, and in that respect they become more and more under the control of the national authority.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all?

Mr. DANIEL. Does it mean or does it not, that it will make Montreal a free port ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is quite a different thing; it is a national port.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

NEW BRUNSWICK PETROLEUM COMPANY.

Mr. BARKER asked :

1. How, when and where was the New Brunswick Petroleum Company incorporated ?
2. What is said company's authorized capital, its subscribed, and its paid up capital ?
3. How much of such subscribed and of such paid up capital stock, respectively, is held by the Hon. H. R. Emmerson in his own name ; and how much additional stock, if any, is he entitled to or interested in ; and in whose name is such additional stock ?
4. What are the names of the several persons who have been presidents, vice-presidents, managing directors, directors or secretaries, respectively, of said company, from the time of its incorporation, and for what periods did they respectively hold such office ?
5. Has the Hon. H. R. Emmerson at any time, and if so, when, transferred to any person, and to whom, any and what stock in said company ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Under an Act to encourage the discovery and development of oil and natural gas within the province of New Brunswick, passed in the year 1899, it was provided that in order to thoroughly explore and prospect a portion or portions of the province which furnished strong indications of the existence of oil or natural gas, and if possible to demonstrate the existence within the province of valuable deposits of such oil and natural gas, and to induce capitalists to venture and expend the amount necessary for that purpose, the Lieutenant Governor in Council be given an authority to grant a license to search for oil and natural gas within an area or areas in the province, to be specified in the license, to a company of persons or body corporate, who should be incorporated under the laws of that province, for the purpose of prospecting for and mining oil and natural gas, and who should satisfy the Lieutenant Governor in Council of their ability and bona fides in the matter. Subsequently, and in the same year, the New Brunswick Petroleum Company was incorporated under the laws of the province to carry out the objects of the said Act.

2. The authorized capital of the New Brunswick Petroleum Company was $1,000,000, of 100,000 shares at $10 each, paid up and non-assessable. The subscribed stock at the date of incorporation was 32,000 shares, which has since been increased to 76,869 shares, there remaining in the treasury unsold 23,131 shares.

3. Mr. Emmerson was not a shareholder nor in any way financially interested in the New Brunswick Petroleum Company at the time of its incorporation, nor until June, 1901. He holds, by purchase from time to time since June 1901, paid up stock to the extent of 10,910 shares. Mr. Emmerson is not entitled to nor interested in any other shares than those standing in his own name.

4. The provisional directors at the date of incorporation in 1899 were: Hon. George G. King, Hon. Ambrose D. Richard, Henry C. Read, Mathew Lodge, Ernest Hutchison, Willard Kitchen, W. Frank Taylor.

Subsequently, the following persons were elected by the shareholders: Hon. George G. King, president; Hon. A. D. Richard, vice-president; Ernest Hutchison, director; Willard Kitchen, director; Henry C. Read, director; A. P. Barnhill, director; Mathew Lodge, director.

Mathew Lodge being the Secretary Treasurer.

At a meeting of the directors on 24th October, 1900, E. P. Eastman was appointed manager. He resigned in June, 1901, and H. R. Emmerson was appointed to fill the position.

On 5th November, 1901, the following were elected: H. R. Emmerson, president; A. D. Richard, vice-president; Mathew Lodge, secretary-treasurer; Joseph Allison, director; A. P. Barnhill, director; Ernest Hutchison, director; Harvey Atkinson, director.

In October, 1902, the directors of 1901 were re-elected.

In October, 1903, the following directors were elected: H. R. Emmerson, president; A. D. Richard, vice-president; Joseph Allison, director; Fred W. Sumner, director; Nathaniel Curry, director; Hon. A. R. McClelan, director; B. F. Pearson, director.

In December, 1904, the directors of 1903 were re-elected, with the addition of C. S. Hickman and F. H. Deacon.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Shortly after January of that year, Mr. Emmerson tendered his resignation as president and director of the company. This was not acted upon, Mr. Sumner assuming the duties of managing director and acting in the place of Mr. Emmerson in all matters relating to the company.

In 1905, the directors of 1904 were re-elected.

In March of the current year, the resignation of Mr. Emmerson as president and director, tendered early in 1904, was accepted, and Mr. F. W. Sumner was elected president, in addition to his duties as managing director. Mr. M. Lodge was elected a director to fill the vacancy.

5. Mr. Emmerson has not disposed of any of his stock in the said company.

EMPLOYEES OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. SPROULE asked:

1. How many permanent employees are at present in the service of the Senate and House of Commons, respectively, and what are the names and duties of each?

2. What is the salary and length of service in each case?

3. How many sessional employees are at this date in the service of the Senate and House of Commons, respectively, the daily pay of each, and the names and duties of each?

4. What number of employees of both classes were employed in the session of 1896?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With reference to questions 1, 2 and 3, the information is too voluminous to be given in the form of an answer. If my hon. friend will move for an order of the House, the information will be given forthwith. With regard to the 4th question, the staff of the House of Commons in 1896 was as follows: permanent staff, 57; sessional staff, 117.

Mr. SPROULE. I may be allowed to say that I thought it was so easy to give this information that it was unnecessary to move for a return. When a return is moved for, it is so long before we can get any reply that it is practically useless.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I have the reply here, but it fills several pages.

IMMIGRATION—IRREGULARITIES.

Mr. BARKER asked:

1. Has the Department of the Interior, or any department or member of the government, any, and if so, what, information regarding alleged irregular or improper dealings, acts, charges, payments or accounts of any officer, agent or other person in Great Britain and Ireland, or in Europe, in connection with immigration to Canada?

2. What is the period covered thereby?

3. What, if any, communications upon or in relation to such matters have been had from or with the High Commissioner for Canada, the Commissioner of Immigration, or others, in writing or otherwise ?

4. Will the government lay upon the table of the House all correspondence, reports and papers, if any, relating to such matters ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The information asked for can best be given in the form of a return, which can be brought down as soon as an order of the House is obtained.

GEOLOGY OF PONTIAC COUNTY.

Mr. PICHE asked :

1. Has the government any information in regard to the geological formation of Pontiac county ?

2. Has a report been made by the officers of the Department of the Interior ?

3. Could a copy of this report, with maps, be laid on the table of the House ?

4. If the government is not in possession of full information, does it intend sending engineers to make a complete survey and report on the mines in that country ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. In Pontiac county geological surveys have been made of the eastern portion from the Ottawa river north for a distance of sixty miles, extending west thence to the upper Ottawa at Des Joachims rapids, the map now in the printer's hands showing the country north of the Ottawa as far west as Deep river, where the northern line of the map is distant about ten miles. The only other portions of the country which have been examined by the geological survey is a portion east of Lake Temiskaming extending eastward as far as the eastern shore of Kippewa lake, shown on Dr. Barlow's map of the Temiskaming area, and a portion along the upper Ottawa extending as far south as Grand land, Victoria, shown on Dr. Bell's map of the basin of the Nottaway river. Between these lines no work has yet been done by the survey.

2. A report of the area west of the Gatineau and north of the Ottawa as far west as Oiseau rock is in the director's hands, but not yet printed ; the map to accompany this is in the printer's hands, but not yet quite ready for issue.

3. Not until published.

4. The matter is under consideration.

MR. P. J. HAMILTON.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. Has the Indian Department received reports from their officials as to the qualifications of Mr. P. J. Hamilton, when farm instructor at the Touchwood Hills agency ?

2. Were these reports of a highly favourable character or otherwise, and what dates do they bear ?

3. Upon whose recommendation was this gentleman appointed to take charge of the Kinistino Indian reserve ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. A report was received concerning the Touchwood Hills agency and staff, of which Mr. P. J. Hamilton was a member.

2. This report, dated 8th July, 1904, dealt generally with the management of the agency.

3. Following the appointment of a new agent and a measure of reorganization it was considered in the public interest that Mr. Hamilton should be transferred to his present position at the Kinistino reserve.

MINERAL BORINGS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked:

2. Have any applications been made to the government for an advance for the above purpose ? If so, by whom ?

3. Have any moneys been advanced by the government for the said purposes ? If so, how much, and to whom advanced ?

4. Have any applications been received from parties south of township 34, in the province of Alberta, for said purpose, within the last twelve months ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes; $3,000 to be taken from the general appropriation voted for the Geological Survey Department, 1905-6. Natural gas or oil.

2. Yes. Northwest Gas and Oil Company, Edmonton, Alta.

3. Yes. $1,000 Northwest Gas and Oil Company, Edmonton, Alta.

4. Yes.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked:

1. At what dates, respectively and to what depth did the government, under the direction of the Geological or any of its departments, drill or bore for petroleum or any other natural product at or near the following points: (a) Pakan or Victoria, on the North Saskatchewan, probably about ranges 16 or 17, W. 4th; (b) Athabaska Landing; (c) Pelican Rapids, on the Athabaska river ?

2. What were the results of each of such undertakings ?

3. If any oil or gas was obtained, at what points, in what quantities, and at what depth ?

4. What was the cost or expenditure in each case ?

5. Is it a fact that a large volume of gas was struck by boring at the Pelican Rapid location ? If so, at what date?

6. What was the pressure of such discharge ?

7. What was its volume per minute, estimated in cubic feet ?

8. Is the gas still flowing there ?

9. Has any effort been made by the government to stop such flow ? If not, why not ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Athabaska Landing. Dates and depth —Commenced 1st August, broke ground; drilling, 15th; left off at 1,011 feet on October 24, 1894.

1895—Boring resumed 27th April. Owing to difficulties considerable delay all season. October 10 stopped at 1,722 feet. Actual boring operations 1894, two months; 1895, six months.

2 and 3. Athabaska Landing—245 feet, strong flow gas (no oil); 267 feet, more gas; 334 feet, more gas roaring could be heard half a mile away and foreman considered flow as strong as that of the well known well at Kingsville, Ont. It was sufficient to make boring very difficult; 780 feet, small amount of salt water struck also strong flow of gas, estimated 50 lbs. pressure to square inch; 1,055 feet, struck gas; 1,090 feet, saline water; 1,643 feet, a little gas; 1,722 feet, stopped on October 10, 1896; 1,770 feet, stopped on December, 1896.

Pelican River boring—Gas and some oil struck at 750 feet; oil mixed through sand and stone.

At 773 feet a heavier flow of gas was struck with odour of petroleum. At 820 feet a tremendous flow of gas struck; the roar was heard for three miles or more. 837 feet, another very strong flow of gas.

Victoria boring—No indication of petroleum or tar sands at this depth, 1,840 feet.

4. Athabaska Landing, $16,437.99; Victoria, $12,869.52; Pelican, $8,998.89; total, $38,306.40.

5, 6 and 7. Yes, as stated above; pressure not measured.

8. Believed to be flowing yet.

9. Not up to present time. Pressure too heavy when the boring contractor was there.

INVITATION TO HIS MAJESTY TO VISIT CANADA.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa City) moved the following :

Address—To the King's Most Gracious Majesty :—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We the members of the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg to humbly convey to Your Majesty, with the assurance of our loyalty and devotion to Your Royal Person, the expression of the desire and hope, long and fervently cherished by all British subjects inhabiting British North America, that Your Majesty would be graciously pleased to honour them with Your Majesty's presence, and thereby enable them to offer the personal tribute of their unwavering attachment to the Crown and the government of the empire, of their deep affection for Your Majesty's person, and their profound admiration for those kingly virtues and truly humanitarian deeds which have earned for Your Majesty first place among the great Sovereigns of the world.

Nearly fifty years ago Your Majesty, then the heir apparent to the Throne which Your Majesty now adorns, honoured Canada with your presence, on the occasion of the inauguration of the Victoria bridge. The approaching completion of the Quebec bridge, the initial step and one of the great links in the Transcontinental Railway of Canada, whilst affording Your Majesty a fitting opportunity to witness the progress and development accomplished in Your Majesty's possessions on this continent, would enable their inhabitants to indulge in the manifestation of their loyalty and devotion to their beloved King and Queen.

We therefore most humbly pray that Your Majesty and Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen will lend their august presence on the occasion of the inauguration of the Quebec bridge.

He said : Before proceeding with the motion of which I gave notice on the opening day of this session, may I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to usurp for one moment and one moment only, your own functions in constituting myself the Speaker or spokesman of the House of Commons for the time being in order to extend, in the name of the honourable members of this House, a most cordial welcome to His Royal Highness Prince Arthur of Connaught, who, to-day, is honouring Canada and the Capital with his presence. The representatives of the Canadian nation, in parliament assembled, welcome with pride and pleasure, in the person of His Royal Highness, one of the members of the great and illustrious Royal family of England, so many of whom adorn the Thrones of Europe and have earned the respect and the admiration of the world, by their example in the practice of truly royal as well es eminently Christian and humane virtues and who, have assumed and ever performed with infinite credit to themselves and for the best interests of the nation, great and high functions in the diplomatic service, in the army and in the navy of the empire. We all trust and hope that the visit of His Royal Highness in Canada may prove highly interesting and as pleasurable to him as it is to all Canadians and that it may be our good fortune in the near future to again welcome him upon Canadian soil.

Mr. Speaker, almost fifty years ago the parliament of the United Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada adopted unanimously and with great enthusiasm an address to our late beloved and so universally lamented Queen, praying that Her Majesty would be pleased to honour Her Canadian subjects with Her presence in British North America. Most graciously was the address received by Her Majesty who being unable to comply with the loyal invitation decided to send in Her place and as Her substitute, Her own beloved son, our then future King, the present illustrious Sovereign of the British empire. The news of the approaching visit of His Royal Highness filled the hearts of all Canadians with deep feelings of gratification and gratitude, which upon his arrival among us found frequent and eloquent expression in loyal and enthusiastic manifestations. All over Canada and the British possessions in America His Royal Highness received a most cordial, a most fitting welcome, and his presence was the occasion for great rejoicing everywhere. He must, Sir, have been favourably impressed with the numerous and conclusive proofs afforded him everywhere of the loyalty of our people to the empire, and principally the affection, the deep affection, the profound veneration entertained by all for that noble and illustrious woman, his mother and our Queen. His visit must have been to him what it undoubtedly was to the Canadian people, an inspiration and an encouragement, an inspiration alike to him and to them to uphold firmly the dignity and power of the Throne which he would some day ascend and an encouragement common to both, to labour and strive constantly for the welfare and betterment of that empire of which it is no exaggeration to assert that it stands to-day first and greatest of all empires and a most potent factor in the civilization of the world. The coming of the Prince of Wales and his sojourn among Her Majesty's subjects, his truly royal bearing, his uniform kindness, the heartiness with which he entered into the spirit of and took part in the demonstrations which everywhere were organized and prepared in his honour, his graciousness to all, whilst serving to enhance the love for and attachment to British liberty and British institutions, gained for him that personal respect and admiration which we in Canada have ever since entertained for him and cherished and which since, his accession to the Throne, he has done so much to deserve from the whole world. The presence of the heir apparent in Canada and the great American Republic to the South, where he received so many evidences of good will and such hearty and magnificent greetings was fraught with lasting and benificent results, not only to the British empire but to the English speaking world as well. It served, Sir, to enhance and render more permanent and stable the friendly relations which have since existed between the American Republic and the United Kingdom. Canadian hearts would throb with delight if His Majesty would graciously condescend to come among them and thereby give them the opportunity, for which they have long and ardently desired, of testifying, by every means in their power, their love and attachment for British institutions, their desire and ambition to follow the noble example given by him and with him contribute to upbuild and maintain British Dominions. His Majesty's subjects in Canada of every race, of every creed, and of every class, one and all, eagerly desire to be enabled to offer to him in person and upon Canadian soil the homage of their respect and admiration and the tribute of their loyalty and devotion to his person and his Crown.

They would delight, Mr. Speaker, in assuring His Majesty that they shall ever gratefully remember that it was under the beneficent reign of his illustrious mother they were granted that full measure of freedom and constitutional government to which they are so much attached, which they so jealously treasure, and which they are assured it is His Majesty's intention and determination to fully and freely continue to accord to them. The descendants of mighty Albion and La Belle France, who compose the great majority of our population, desire to be afforded the opportunity of telling His Majesty with what deep interest, with what keen concern, they followed the endeavours of their respective mother countries to bring to a fruitful conclusion the timely and happy alliance which to-day so closely and permanently unites the French Republic and the United Kingdom. Canadians of English as well as of French origin desire earnestly to be afforded the opportunity of expressing to His Majesty their grateful recognition of the large share which they know he took in the consummation of the 'entente cordiale' and to express the confident hope that His Majesty may be pleased to continue to exert his all-powerful influence to secure permanence and stability.

They would, Mr. Speaker, with pride and pleasure, take him again over the route followed by him nearly half a century ago and also from end to end of their ever expanding national horizon and point to him the progress and development, material and intellectual, accomplished since ante confederation days.

It would, Sir, gratify the people of the whole Dominion to be permitted to point to His Majesty in person the achievements due to the practical wisdom and patriotism of the statesmen who founded the Canadian confederation and of those who have since, with the help and co-operation of the people of all the provinces, guided its destinies.

They would have him witness to the concord, amity and friendly rivalry which animate the various elements of our population and the patriotic emulation and firm resolve of all, under the aegis of the British Crown, to erect and maintain upon this northern half of the North American continent a robust, moral, law abiding and progressive nation—a nation proud of its double origin and of the great store of noble and elevating traditions bequeathed to it; a nation conscious of its strength, deeply grateful for its bounteous freedom and prosperity, and realizing to the full the great natural advantages with which Providence has endowed it and all the magnificent opportunities which lie before it; a nation which seeks, by following the noble example and the truly humane precepts of His Majesty himself, to erect and perpetuate a great christian commonwealth, whose success, whose achievements, will be based upon the efforts and arts of peace rather than those of war or conquest.

All wise and great sovereigns, Mr. Speaker, have ever considered it part of their royal duties, as well as of their royal prerogatives and privileges, to stimulate and encourage, by all means in their power, the ambitions, the aspirations, and the achievements of their subjects. His Gracious Majesty, King Edward VII, has never failed to manifest the keenest interest in all that affects the welfare of his hundreds of millions of subjects. His Canadian subjects would fain believe that His Gracious Majesty takes a deep and abiding interest in the welfare of this Dominion and, at this particular moment, in the great national undertaking, to the realization of which they are now bending their energies, and that His Majesty looks upon this great national work as of vast importance, not only to Canada, but to the British empire as well. So deep indeed, Mr. Speaker, is the interest which Canadians believe His Majesty takes in their affairs and this undertaking that they have conceived and do now entertain the hope that His Majesty would be pleased to come among them and thereby enable them, as I have said previously, to offer to him in person and upon Canadian soil the homage of their respect and admiration and the tribute of their loyalty and devotion, and receive from him in their national aspirations, in their national hopes, ambitions and achievements, that encouragement and approval of which his august presence would constitute such eloquent, signal and tangible proof.

Mr. Speaker, since the visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in 1860 to Canada and to the great and friendly American Republic to the south proved to be so interesting, so important, so gratifying, how much more important, how much more gratifying, how much more interesting, how much more pregnant with lasting, wide, far reaching, great and beneficent results would not be to-day the presence of him who has since become the sovereign of the British empire, on this continent of North America, whose progress and development have caused the admiration and wonderment of the universe and which has achieved so much for the cause of democratic institutions and liberty.

When His Majesty ascended the Throne, Mr. Speaker, who believed that the 'entente cordiale', such as it exists to-day, was probable or even possible? And if to-day the French Republic and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and its possessions all over the world are found allied in such a close, such a cordial, such a lasting alliance, it is conceded that it is due mainly to the wonderful tact, to the ever unerring judgment, to the genius, to the intense love of humanity, and the earnest desire for peace, of His Majesty. Have we not good reason to hope and to believe, Mr. Speaker, that His Majesty is not content to rest on the laurels, however great, which the world has so freely accorded to him, and that His Majesty will continue to devote his genius and his all-powerful influence in the cause of humanity until he has finally attained the realization of that so long and so ardently cherished hope of mankind, 'peace and good will to all men'?

And, Sir, may we not be permitted also to indulge the hope and the belief that a visit of His Majesty, the noble King of England, to that other noble and very distinguished man and statesman, the President of the United States, whose own efforts, whose own successes in the cause of peace among the nations, have gained for him likewise the gratitude and the admiration of the world, would afford an opportunity and the means of rendering more intimate and more cordial even the relations which exist to-day between the American Republic and our mother country? Nay, Mr. Speaker, may we not be permitted to indulge the hope and the belief that such a visit at this time would be the means of enlarging the scope of the entente cordiale so as to secure the mighty co-operation of the United States of America in the accomplishment of its great aim and its noble object? For if, Mr. Speaker, we are able to rejoice in an alliance between the Republic of France and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and its possessions all over the world, may we not hope to see that alliance extended so as to embrace the republic of the United States of America and that empire in the far east whose national emblem so typically and so truthfully symbolizes its recent brilliant exploits and its marvellous progress, an alliance between the foremost nations of Europe, the two greatest nations of America, and the only true great nation of Asia, an alliance encircling the world whose aim and motto would be universal peace, with all that these magic words imply for humanity? The time must come, may we not think the time has come, when the enlightened nations of the world will put an end to military armaments and cease paying to the devils of war the tribute of its best blood and of its best money? The nations of Europe have too long been staggering under the load, the heavy load of militarism. There is everywhere a desire, a demand for peace. Why, Sir, the very atmosphere is to-day filled with that fragrant air of peace. The noble King of England and the noble President of the United States have devoted themselves to the cause of peace, they are both thorough believers in, and have constantly and with maintained success preached, the gospel of peace. May we not to-day indulge in the hope that their recent brilliant successes are but the augury of universal peace in the very near future? Some may think and some may say, Mr. Speaker, that this is but a dream, though a very happy dream, still but a dream and an illusion. My answer is that dreams are not unfrequently followed by realization, and that what seems to-day to be an illusion to some may to-morrow be turned into a reality; my answer is that but a very few years ago the entente cordiale was nothing but a dream, but to-day it is a living and vigorous reality. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure, and I deem it a very great privilege and a very great honour to be allowed to move the resolution which I now place in your hands.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, from time to time there are measures and motions brought before this House which hon. gentlemen, both on your right and on your left, can support with equal sincerity and with a feeling of confidence that in so doing they are faithfully expressing the feelings of the people of Canada whom they represent. Such a motion, Sir, I believe is the one at present before this House. I support it with pleasure for many reasons, and for three in particular, and in expressing them I believe I voice the feelings of the people of Canada. I am proud of my King, I am proud of my country, and I believe that it is in the best interests of the empire that the acquaintance happily formed half a century ago between the then Prince of Wales and the few scattered isolated provinces which then represented British rule in North America, should be renewed and strengthened to-day by a visit from His Majesty himself to this great and growing Dominion of Canada. When the last dread messenger summoned our late revered Queen, there was a feeling of fear throughout the whole of the British realms lest there should be an end or at least a limitation to that widespread and beneficent influence which, through her individual personality, she had been able to exercise for so many years throughout the civilized world. To-day, Sir, I say with pride and with pleasure, that there is not a British subject throughout all these broad realms who is conversant with world politics, who does not only feel that the sceptre has fallen into the hands of one who has been able worthily to discharge the responsible duties of his high office, but who has also, by his wide view of public affairs, by his diplomatic ability, and by his humanitarian sentiments, justly earned the title that has been conferred on him by the world, of Edward the Peace Maker. And I believe, Sir, that, speaking as a Canadian if our Sovereign should visit this part of his dominions, no matter how green may be the remembrance of his former visit, no matter how carefully he may have studied the growth and rejoiced in the prosperity of Canada, I venture to say that neither His Majesty or any of his advisers who have not visited this land, have the faintest conception of the realities of to-day and the possibilities of the future which our country affords. Situated as we are geographically midway between the white cliffs of Albion and the mysterious lands of the distant Orient, a link, as it were, between the shores of the mother land and its vast possessions lying under the southern cross, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the one country in the world with both coal and iron on the coasts of both these oceans, blessed with marine, with mineral, with agriculture, with forest, with electrical wealth as no other country is, occupying the northern part of the temperate zone, in all continents inhabited by those who have been or are victors in the contest for eminence, presenting a climate unsurpassed and having a population which we believe is worthy of their heritage, I say that under these circumstances we are justified in asking our Sovereign to visit this brightest gem in his dominions and thus tighten and strengthen the ties that light as air but strong as steel bind us to the motherland.

Not only have we such a country, but I think that I am justified in saying that we have a people worthy of this glorious heritage. Observers of history well know that each country has certain peculiarities, certain characteristics, in which its people will excel those of all other countries, but to whichever land we may look, looking dispassionately and fairly, we must admit that in some respects the people of each excel those of all other lands. In Canada we have not one people sprung from a common stock, but a strong and progressive people descended from the greatest races of the earth. We have the honest, loyal, brave Englishman, we have the shrewd, long-headed, canny Scotchman, we have the dashing, eloquent, witty Irishman, we have the gay chivalrous, religious Frenchman, and we have the solid, methodical, contemplative German all living side by side, pouring all their blood into one common stream that flows in the veins and throbs in the pulse of Canada. I believe that not only is this country a part of His Majesty's dominions, that he should visit, but I believe the slightest reference to history will show us that there is no doubt a future before this country which perhaps few of us suspect. We find that we have four great continents, that the sceptre has passed through the hands of Asia, and Africa to Europe the smallest and poorest of the great continents, and surely we cannot be considered too extravagant in our views when we express the belief that the pendulum will still swing and the sceptre will pass to the continent of America, it must surely be to North America and to what part of North America shall it come? If not the northern half of North America surely all history must be reversed. The teachings of the past and the experience of all the different races prove the hardier character of the people who compose the nations lying in each continent to the north with its bracing climate, its pure air, its strength and invigoration, and that the nation with all these elements of strength is bound in the ultimate struggle to be the victor. So, Sir, I think that not only have we a country that our sovereign should see, but I believe that it is eminently suitable that the advisers of His Majesty should accompany him on his visit to our Dominion of Canada. We all know that a few years ago there was a disposition in the motherland on the part of statesmen on both sides of politics to regard the colonies as an incubus and the view was held that the sooner they were got rid of the better. To-day no statesman in England could more speedily and surely commit political suicide than by suggesting the disruption of the bond holding the motherland to her colonies. While I think it is fitting that we should extend this invitation to His Majesty it does seem to me that in all Canada no better or more fitting place could be found to welcome the sovereign to this portion of his realms than the classic city of Quebec. We all remember how one September morning, the British troops having scaled the heights, the battle began and raged the live long day between the French and the English. We remember the result. We remember that when the shades of evening fell the Union Jack floated from the battlements of Quebec. We remember well the two brave leaders who that day shed their life-blood and to whose memory there stands to-day a monument in the city of Quebec which is unique. Quebec has a monument erected to the memory of these two gallant leaders, sacred on the one side to the memory of Wolfe, the victor, and sacred on the other side to the memory of Montcalm, the vanquished, a symbol of that magnanimity and mutual good will, that racial and religious respect which represent the fabric on which alone the success of Canada can be built. I think it is most proper that our sovereign should be met in the shadow of that monument erected to the memory of Wolfe and Montcalm in the city of Quebec, and standing a symbol of the only true national unity. I have therefore much pleasure in seconding this resolution which I am sure will meet with the unanimous approval of the House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, the House, I have no doubt, will join heartily in this motion and will respond cordially to the sentiments which have been so eloquently expressed by my hon. friends, the mover, and seconder of the motion which is now in your hands. I have nothing to add for my part to the language of my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) or to that of my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup), except to say that if we should be honoured by a visit from their majesties the King and Queen of Great Britain, there can be no doubt whatever that the effects would be of the most happy nature. What has been said of His Majesty the King is the simple and literal truth. In the late reign of Her Majesty the Prince of Wales on many occasions gave evidence that he was possessed in the most eminent degree of those qualities which so well befit him for his high station, especially the quality of tact, the happy faculty of being able to reconcile differences and the capacity for pacifying quarrels. Since His Majesty has succeeded to the Throne it is nothing more than historical truth to say that on one or two occasions he has preserved the peace of Europe and that but for his happy interference probably we would have seen a conflagration such as we saw a few years ago in the Orient. Perhaps the conflict would have been transferred from the Orient to the plains of Europe. I also assume that his visit would have a desirable effect upon our relations with our neighbours. There is no need of any visit of this kind to strengthen the bond of empire between Great Britain and her colonies and especially between Great Britain and Canada. We would not be any more loyal than we are to-day if the King were to honour us with his presence and we will not be any less loyal if he should fail to accept our invitation. But, I believe it is the opinion of all who sit in this House that if the King were to visit Canada—and he could not visit Canada without visiting the United States also—the effect would be to bring more closely together than they are at the present time—and they are more than ever before—the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race on both sides of the Atlantic. But, whilst I agree cordially with the motion which has been made by my hon. friend, perhaps I may be permitted to offer him a suggestion. I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the second part of his motion which reads in this way :

> Nearly fifty years ago Your Majesty, then the Heir Apparent to the Throne which Your Majesty now adorns, honoured Canada with your presence, on the occasion of the inauguration of the Victoria bridge. The approaching completion of the Quebec bridge, the initial step and one of the great links in the Transcontinental Railway of Canada, whilst affording Your Majesty's possessions on this continent, the progress and development accomplished in You Majesty's possessions on this continent, would enable their inhabitants to indulge in the manifestation of their loyalty and devotion to their beloved King and Queen.
> We therefore most humbly pray that Your Majesty and Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen will lend their august presence on the occasion of the inauguration of the Quebec bridge.

To myself as well as to those who come from the district I represent nothing could be more pleasant or satisfactory than to have these words endorsed by the whole House of Commons, but I would suggest to my hon. friend and suggest to the consideration of the House generally, that perhaps it would be preferable not to limit the visit of His Majesty to anything in particuliar, but simply to invite Their Majesties to visit Canada quite irrespective of this or any other event. In the second line of the second paragraph I would strike out all the words after the words : 'on the occasion of the inauguration of the Quebec bridge :' down to the end of that paragraph.

Then I would beg to amend the prayer of the petition so as to make it read :

> We therefore most humbly pray that your Majesty, and Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, will honour the Dominion of Canada with your presence at such time as may be selected by Your Majesty.

I beg to move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. SPEAKER. Sir Wilfrid Laurier moves in amendment that—

Mr. BELCOURT. Will you permit me, Mr. Speaker; I would suggest that the motion be put to the House as amended by the right hon. gentleman, so that there will be no need for a formal amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Everything that could be said has been most appropriately said by the right hon. Prime Minister and by the hon. gentlemen who have moved and seconded the motion. I agree with the suggestion of the Prime Minister as to the form ; the motion as originally drafted would seem to limit to one occasion our desire to have His Majesty visit this country, and while it may be that the occasion mentioned would be an appropriate one, yet it is better that the selection should be left to His Most Gracious Majesty.

It is sincerely to be hoped that Canada shall have the privilege and honour of a visit from their Majesties. What the Prime Minister has said in regard to the services of King Edward in making for the peace of the world, is undoubtedly true. In days gone by there were those who thought that the influence and power of the Crown had almost absolutely disappeared, but this is to be noted : That His Majesty the King while in every respect acting the part of a constitutional monarch, has nevertheless been of the utmost service not only to the empire, but to the whole world in his successful efforts to preserve peace among all nations. It has been truly observed by more than one recent constitutional writer that the Crown is to-day the strongest bond between the motherland and the dominions of the British empire beyond the seas. That has come about through a curious process of constitutional development. As the various portions of the empire have gradually attained greater powers in respect to their internal affairs; the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland has to a certain extent lost that influence as a central body which it formerly possessed. The Crown at the present time represents more truly the dignity and the greatness of the empire to all those who live in the dominions beyond the seas than does the parliament of the United Kingdom. This is the natural course of a constitutional development which has been proceeding for years and which undoubtedly will continue in the future. For this reason, as well as for the reasons which have been so adequately expressed by the mover and seconder of this resolution, it is to be sincerly wished that we in Canada may have the privilege and honour of seeing amongst us His Most Gracious Majesty the King accompanied by our beloved Queen, and of offering to them a tribute of that devotion and loyalty which exist in the Dominion of Canada to an extent at least as great as in any part of His Majesty's dominions.

Mr. HENRY HORTON MILLER (South Grey). If I may be excused for saying a word at such a time as this; I am sure every member of the House will be heartily in accord with the invitation extended to His Majesty the King. We all love and respect him, not only because he is a most kingly King, but because he is a most manly man. I am sure, however, we will not forget that we have in England a Queen, who, as one of the most trusted and beloved friends of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, has been a helpmate indeed to His Majesty. She has proven herself to be a friend in deed and a friend in need to the poor of Britain and to all of the poor who have come within the range of her wide-spread charity. I trust that when His Gracious Majesty may choose to visit this portion of his empire he will not come alone, but will bring with him Her Majesty the Queen, who will be most enthusiastically received as being the most loved and most highly respected woman of the empire.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). I was in hopes that some of our friends on the government side would have seen their way to endorse still further this motion. I expected our friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) to have risen in his place to give his endorsation to his good friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). I had hoped also that the junior lieutenant of the member for Labelle would have risen in his place and given his endorsation to this motion. However, Sir, the prayer of the petition which has been presented by our good friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) will I am sure find a very earnest response in every heart, or almost every heart, throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. And although I may not be a very good judge of the proper effect of prayer, it is said that when prayer is delivered in absolute earnestness it is sure to be answered. Therefore, I have every reason to believe that the prayer of this petition which finds as it does a responsive echo in almost every heart in Canada will at a very early date be answered. The member for Ottawa referred to the devotion of the people of Canada to the King of England and to his noble wife the Queen. I say with all respect to His Majesty that our devotion is not to himself personally, not all to himself as a constitutional sovereign. First, the King of England stands warm in the hearts of the people of Canada and of every part of the empire through the fact that he is the son of the late illustrious Queen Victoria, a woman who endeared herself in every home not only throughout the length and breadth of the British dominions, but whose name is revered and honoured in the United States of America ; in every civilized state.

Throughout every civilized land the name of Victoria has done more than any single name in history to elevate and ennoble mankind. We join in the prayer of the motion also because of the visit of His Majesty to Canada many years ago, when as a young man he laid the corner stone of this very building in which we are sitting. We will also welcome his Majesty on account of his having been, so far as lay in his power under the constitution, a distinguished soldier, always ready to help in the defence of the empire in any and every way within his sovereign power as limited by the constitution. We also welcome him to Canada because of his distinguished statemanship, both before he ascended and since he has ascended the throne of this great empire. On more than one occasion he has secured the peace of the world and has prevented bloodshed, that bloodshed which all good people are so anxious to prevent. But, Sir, we admire him and would welcome him the more on account of his being a constitutional British Sovereign than from any other cause. Some years ago, speaking of the position of the Sovereign of Great Britain—and I believe it is a universal sentiment—the poet Cowper said :

> We love the King who loves the law, respects his bounds and reigns content within them. Him we serve freely and with delight who leaves us free.
> He is ours to administer, to guard, to adorn the state, but not to warp or change it. We are his to serve him nobly in the common cause, true to the death, but not to be his slaves.

These are sentiments which I believe pervade the hearts of the people of the great Dominon of Canada towards our Sovereign of to-day. He has proved himself to be, like his beloved mother, a constitutional Sovereign. I hearily endorse the amendment suggested by the first minister. I was going to take the liberty, when I spoke, of suggesting that the senior member for Ottawa should amend his motion to read that the Sovereign of the empire should be invited to visit us on the occasion of the accomplishment of a full partnership union between Great Britain and all her colonies. I thought possibly this might enlist the sympathies of my good friend the hon. senior member for Ottawa. I know that the first minister is already warm in the cause of a full partnership union of Great Britain and all her colonies, each being represented in the Imperial parliament, with the various parts of the empire being left as now to manage their own local affairs; and I thought that the accomplishment of such a union would be a fitting occasion for the Sovereign of the empire—and I trust it may come in the time of the present Sovereign—to visit the component parts of the empire. He could readily cross the Atlantic, for oceans no longer separate, but rather unite the various parts of the empire—revisit Halifax, which he visited many years ago, traverse the Dominion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, take a steamer of one of our Canadian line on the Pacific, touch at some of the islands of the Pacific, visit the great colony of Australia, thence back to New Zealand, thence to the Asiatic portions of the empire, thence to South Africa, and thence home again to England. I trust that if His Majesty is not able to see this consummation within the next year or so, the development of full partnership union between Great Britain and all her colonies will assume such proportions that long before the termination of his reign he will have the opportunity of visiting all the parts of the empire bound together in such a partnership union.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to rise and give my hearty approval and support of the motion which was presented by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), and seconded by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), and I do not think I needed the invitation of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam Hughes). I simply waited till the strongest and most eloquent upholders of loyalty in this House should have preceded my modest utterance ; but when I saw that so many of them were half sleeping, I thought I would give a deeper expression of support to the motion. I must, however, take a slight exception to the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member for Victoria, and I hope my loyalty will not be questioned on that account. I think it would be a pity if the visit of the King should be made the occasion of bringing forth and upholding the political ideas or principles of some specific group of party within the British empire. For my part, speaking especially as a French Canadian and as one of the representatives of the province of Quebec, I may say that of all the subjects of His Majesty none will be better pleased and honoured to receive their King than the subjects of His Majesty speaking French and practising the Catholic religion in the province of Quebec. If I were allowed on an occasion like this to speak of my own sentiments, I would say that of all those French Canadians, none will be better pleased to offer his homage to His Majesty than I will be—not because of my monarchical principles, because I may say I do not believe in the principle of hereditary powers—but because of my devotion and respect to the person of King Edward; and one of the reasons why he would be received in the province of Quebec, if he does us the honour of coming, with more fervent devotion, perhaps than in any other part of the British empire, is because we strongly believe that His Majesty is the personification of constitutional respect for all his liberty-loving subjects, and that he would be the last one in the whole empire to uphold any policy or to support any scheme by which any section of the empire would be deprived of any portion of its liberty or autonomy.

I have nothing to add to what the hon. member for Ottawa has said in reference to the role played by His Majesty. King Edward may be truthfully called the peace-making sovereign of the modern world; and just as the part played by His Majesty in the affairs of Europe has been so greatly beneficial, so I think his presence in any part of the British empire would be the occasion of a greater development of liberty and of peace between all the subjects of His Majesty, whatever might be their origin or their creed. I need not add anything further, Mr. Speaker, to what has been said. I simply repeat what I said at the first, that, as a French Canadian and as a representative of the province of Quebec it is with the greatest pleasure that I give my hearty support to the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) deserves the thanks of the House for bringing this question forward. It is especially suitable that it should be brought forward by a French Canadian, and by one who was at one time the First Commoner and Speaker of this House. If King Edward accepts our invitation, we shall be able to show him a very different Canada from what he saw when he visited our shores many years ago. We will show him a Dominion occupying a territory three times as large as his Empire of India. We shall show him a population that is twice as great as the population of the United States when they set up business for themselves 130 years ago. But my principal reason for rising was the few remarks that dropped from the lips of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). He was referring to the different nationalities which compose the population of our country and it occurred to me that King Edward is himself the representative of very many lines. Every Saxon finds in him a descendant of Cerdic the Saxon; every Scotchman finds in him a descendant of the Stuarts and of the ancient Scottish kings; every Welshman finds in him a descendant of the Tudors and of the ancient kings of Wales; every Irishman finds in him by tracing through the ancient Scottish kings a descendant of the former kings of Tara; and every French Canadian, if he chooses to study the matter, will find that he is a descendant of William the Conqueror and in him of Rue, the majestic and powerful Norseman who founded the Duchy of Normandy. In this connection it is well to remember that for hundreds of years the Saxons and the Normans had the same sovereign and stood shoulder to shoulder in many a hard fought battle, in which they opposed the aggressions of France. It was only through the foolishness of King John that the Duchy was lost, and it was long after the discovery of America ere Calais the last stronghold of Normandy was taken by the French. In the meantime many of the Norman-French having in their veins the daring blood of the Norsemen like the Israelites of old, had departed by sea from the land of their captivity. Finally they too found a land of promise on the banks of the St. Lawrence, where they returned to their first love, and gave their allegiance and their loyal support to their hereditary and legitimate sovereigns the Kings of England. Therefore, it is fitting that this motion should be proposed by a French Canadian. When we remember that His Majesty represents in himself every nationality that goes to make up our country it is certainly well that we should invite him and I wish to add my mite to this invitation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BELCOURT. Before we proceed, I wish to move, seconded by Mr. Northrup :

That a message be sent to the Honourable Senate transmitting the address just passed by this House and requesting their Honours to unite with this House in the same.

Motion agreed to.

MINISTERS OR DEPUTIES PRACTISING IN CANADIAN COURTS.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved :

That in the opinion of this House it is inexpedient that any member of the government, or deputy head of a department, should act or appear as barrister, counsel or advocate in an action, suit or proceeding, except where the interests of the Crown are involved, in any court presided over by judges or a judge appointed by the government of Canada.

He said : It is with some degree of regret that I turn from the contemplation of the matter which the House has just been considering, a matter in which we can all heartly unite. It is the result of the magnificent manner in which the recent sovereigns of Great Britain have cooperated with the parliament of Great Britain in governing the mother land that we have inherited the splendid system of constitutional government which we enjoy. The motion which I rise to move is not intended to be an attack upon any individual as such. I am actuated in bringing it forward by the desire to secure in this country the recognition of the splendid traditions which have obtained in Great Britain and which as a rule have been the traditions of the government of Canada in reference to the matters to which I shall refer. In a constitutional government such as ours, the various departments of the government are divided for convenience of administration, and although all the departments which go to make up our system are necessary to our well being there are degrees of importance to be attached to each of them, some being of more importance than others. We have the immigration system which is very valuable to the development of Canada but is still something that possibly we could do without. We would not do as well without it but it is not absolutely essential to our existence as a country. We have our system of transportation, a very important question for us to consider. We have our trade policy which is very important to the interests of Canada and the educational system, so far as it relates to the Dominion of Canada, a matter of great importance but of some difficulty to properly adjust or administer. But above all these we have our judicial system which is of vastly more importance to the interests of the country than anything else connected with the government of Canada. It is therefore, I hope, not too much to ask the House, altogether independently of party considerations to seriously consider the position in which we find ourselves to-day by reason of certain departures which are well known to exist in this country from the practice which obtains in the mother country. The judicial system is necessarily a part of the government of the country. In some countries, for instance under the British system, it is made a separate branch and recognized distinctly as a sub-head of government, as in the Commonwealth of Australia, under the constitution which they have recently adopted. In Canada as in Britain for centuries past, we have recognized that the position occupied by the judiciary is all important in the interests of the people. The boy is said to be the father of the man and the lawyer is the father of the judge; beginning at that point it is all important that we should preserve a high status of professional conduct on the part of our lawyers if we are to preserve and secure that position for the judiciary which as a rule it has occupied in Canada in the past and which it so essential to the well being of Canada that it should continue to occupy. Belonging to the profession of the law, I am naturally solicitous not only for its well being but that it should preserve unsullied those traditions for high honour and high regard for what is right and fitting which the lawyers of Canada have observed in the past. That the lawyers have had a great deal to do with the success of Canada and its governmental institutions cannot be denied by any one who has any knowledge of our history, and that others have exerted most powerful influence in bringing about that system of constitutional government which now exists in Britain and upon which ours is framed must equally be admitted. In Taswell-Langmead's constitutional history I find the following tribute to the work accomplished by the legal profession :

> Towards the end of the sixteenth, and during the earlier part of the seventeenth century, the House of Commons included among its members a large body of men of ability, recruited especially from amongst the lawyers, who became known to the electors by the talent which they displayed at the bar. The services which this class of men rendered to the cause of freedom are incalculable. The learning of the ablest lawyers in the sixteenth century may have been small in comparison with the stores of knowledge which may be acquired in our own day ; but, relatively, to the general education, it stood far higher. A few years later a race of parliamentary statesmen would begin to arise from amongst the country gentlemen ; but as yet, almost all pretensions to statesmanship were confined to the council table and its supporters. For the present, the burden of the conflict in the Commons lay upon the lawyers, who at once gave to the struggle against the Crown that strong legal character which it never afterwards lost.

I read this in order to point to the fact that when it became recognized that there should be a clear distinction between the Crown and the courts on the one hand and the courts and the Executive on the other, it was the lawyers in these old days who became first impressed with the importance of that distinction and struggled so successfully to bring about that condition of things in which that distinction was clearly recognized. The page from which I am reading deals with the reign of King James the first, and the citation has reference to the fact that one of the first public acts of the King, while on his way to London, was to cause a thief to be executed without trial. Then began the important struggle between parliament on the one hand and the Crown on the other, in which parliament sought to keep separate its functions from those of the Executive, and the functions of the courts from the constitutional rights and powers of the Sovereign. The resolution that I have to propose is as follows :

> That, in the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient that any member of the government, or deputy head of a department, should act or appear as barrister, counsel or advocate in any action, suit or proceeding, except where the interests of the Crown are involved, in any court presided over by judges or a judge appointed by the government of Canada.

I have sometimes heard it said by the right hon. the Prime Minister and by others members of the government that they could not adopt a certain resolution because it contained an insinuation. Sir, this is no abstract resolution. I hope it does not contain an insinuation so much as a direct charge. And if the government or its followers see fit to vote it down, I shall at least have the consciousness of having done my duty in endeavouring to bring to the attention of the House, not as an abstract question but as a matter of fact, the circumstance that in the courts of Canada to-day, presided over by judges appointed by the Canadian government, cabinet ministers and deputy heads of departments are practising the legal profession. We have in Canada as in Great Britain members of the government who are in the cabinet and others who are not; and in both classes we find offenders. I have no personal quarrel with any of these gentlemen, I have the honour to have some personal acquaintance with many, if not all of them, and I hope I shall say nothing that might be considered personally offensive to any gentleman who may consider that he has the right to be a member of the government and still practice before judges appointed by this same government. It is not necessary for me to deal individually with any of the deputy heads of the departments. The remedy will follow in their case which I hope to see applied to those who are in higher positions; and I would not be speaking openly and frankly if I did not state that my attention was drawn to this matter more particularly by the fact that the hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Postmaster General, is practising in the law courts of Ontario and the Supreme court of Canada while still retaining his cabinet position. This is not a matter which has now come to the attention of parliament for the first time, and the hon. gentleman to whom I refer has not been taken in any way by surprise in this connection. I do not see him in the House now, but I presume he is within its precincts, and I hope he will shortly be here, as no doubt he would be if something did not cause him to be unavoidably absent. At all events, at the request of the government, I allowed this matter to stand over until to-day; and in the meantime the government have no doubt considered their position and we will have from the right hon. gentleman who leads the government a definite statement of the position they take. While the hon. the Postmaster General was seeking election to this House, he was spoken to with regard to the position he would take in this connection should he be elected, and amongst other things he was asked at a meeting in Schomberg to define his position. And, as reported in the Globe of November 11, 1905, he said this:

> There is no understanding as to my practising. My idea is that there will probably not be very much spare time if I attend to my business in the government or in politics, but you remember that it was common knowledge among lawyers that when the late Sir M. C. Cameron was provincial secretary, he did not take any fewer briefs than before.

Now, the hon. gentleman is too astute a lawyer to think for a moment that there is any analogy between the case of the Hon. M. C. Cameron, a provincial secretary—in a local government—and the position of a cabinet minister in the federal parliament, a cabinet having power to control and the opportunity to promote or to retard the advancement of the gentlemen who sit upon the bench and before whom he practices.

Mr. LANCASTER. And fix their salaries.

Mr. LENNOX. Of course. The fact is the cabinet have the making or the marring of the fortunes of the gentlemen who preside in our provincial and federal courts. Now that the minister had that intimation before he took the position of a cabinet minister is evident by what I have read, and it is quite evident by what I have read that he did not at that time want to bind himself to the position that for what probably he calls a paltry salary, a paltry remuneration such as he would receive as cabinet minister and member of parliament, a matter of only $9,500 a year, he was going to give up the lucrative practice that he enjoyed up to that time. It is quite true that the hon. gentleman had led a strenuous life; had spent a great many years in the arduous profession to which he belongs, and that the time could not be far distant, looking at human concerns as we see them, when he, like Sir William Mulock and others, would become tired in the race, and would no longer have the earning capacity which he had enjoyed in years gone by. But at all events, he seems to have decided that he would not tie himself down to a statement that he would not carry on his practice in the courts after he became a cabinet minister in the same way and probably to the same extent, as far as circumstances would admit, as he had done previously. Then we find the matter taken up in the Canadian 'Law Times,' and its language is most significant. It would look as if it were inspired from a certain quarter. The 'Canadian Law Times' says:

> His friends think he is well fitted for a parliamentary career——

That may mean anything.

> ——and we believe that he can and will do much to elevate the standard of politics——

That would be very necessary, remembering some things that hon. gentlemen have been doing of late years.

> ——an independent man, whom the office has sought, will have a strong influence with his colleagues, and we may be sure that the new cabinet minister's influence will be on the side of truth and righteousness.

'Truth and righteousness'—that expression is ear-marked. That is the expression of the Hon. G. W. Ross. That expression was not made in Germany, but it was made in the local legislature where Mr. Ross presided. Whether it was made at the time of the Gamey investigation or before, when there was an important conference amongst some of those gentlemen, I do not know. But the Hon. G. W. Ross used almost the same words when he made that celebrated speech at Whitby, and when, indirectly, he reflected upon the gentleman who had been previously premier of Ontario by saying that he was going to do so much better than Mr. Mowat had done. He said :

Righteousness exalteth a nation. Let us strengthen the moral foundations. Let us purify elections, and not elections only, but the whole moral atmosphere, &c.

Then the gang proceeded, as you know, with Captain Sullivan and Vance and all that bodyguard, to perpetrate actions of which I do not wish to perpetuate the memory by recording them on 'Hansard,' but which are painfully evident to the people of the province of Ontario at the present time. Now, I want to point out that this article seems to be inspired, there seems to have been a deliberate intention, before the Postmaster General was sworn as a member of the cabinet, that he would continue his practice as he had done before ; and there are people not a few in the province of Ontario, and they are growing in numbers every day, there are hosts of people and hosts of Liberals who, by reason of what has taken place before we assembled here a month ago, and by reason of certain answers that the right hon. gentleman has given since, have come to the conclusion that there was a bargain between the right hon. gentleman who leads this House and the Postmaster General, that when the right hon. gentleman persuaded him, induced him, entreated him, as he says, to enter the cabinet, it was upon the understanding that he should continue to practice in the courts that I have referred to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Have you not read what the hon. gentleman said himself ?

Mr. LENNOX. I have a statement of what the hon. gentleman has said, and I have the fact that the hon. gentleman is not in the House. Why ? I hope that we will have an opportunity of hearing a denial of the hon. gentleman before this debate concludes. I will tell the right hon. gentleman this, and I will tell those who support him this, that whether we have a denial or a statement, or an explanation upon the floor of this House this afternoon or not, every hon. gentleman who takes the position of pledging his vote this afternoon—because if the proposition is not agreed to it is coming to a vote—who votes that it is expedient and right that cabinet ministers should practice in courts presided over by judges appointed by these gentlemen, will have to face an electorate who will not be so easily answered as some of these gentlemen are upon the floor of this House. But that is not all. We have this same 'Canadian Law Times,' which seems to have been inspired when the hon. the Postmaster was elected, also paving the way for this practice which, I say, saps the institutions of Canada to an extent that nothing else I can conceive of would do—I say we have this 'Law Times' again apologizing for the Postmaster General in December, 1905.

It seems almost a passing from the bar, for, although there is no reason why he should not practice, as other ministers, Dominion and provincial, do and have done, the session of parliament is now a very long one, and attendance and departmental duties will doubtless engross most of his time.

Not all his time, 'almost' but not altogether, 'almost' passing from the bar but not quite, like 'almost persuaded' as they used to sing in the camp meetings, but is not quite persuaded. The fact is that instead of his passing from the bar, we have it heralded without shame and without apology in the press that the hon. gentleman is still practising in the courts, is still in the Supreme Court at the foot of Parliament Hill, at the same time that his colleagues of the Privy Council are deliberating upon what is best in the interests of Canada.

We have not only the general practice, but we have it in the newspapers that the hon. gentleman is advising as a lawyer—just as a common lawyer—giving advice in the city of Ottawa. Notwithstanding that he has a law firm of which he is a partner in the city of Toronto he is advising in cases here in Ottawa and advising on what?—amongst other things advising upon matters that have come before parliament, advising upon matters that are before parliament during the time he is giving his advice. It may be right. My experience is not very wide, but it strikes me that it is wrong and because I think it is wrong, because I think it ought to be stopped at once, I have ventured to bring forward this matter and call it definitely to the attention of the House. I said a few minutes ago that I would refer to the attitude taken by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. I have great respect for the resoursefulness of the right hon. gentleman. I suppose he will be able to give some reason for departing from all English precedent in this matter. No one knows better than my right hon. friend that such a thing is unheard of in the mother of parliaments to which he so often refers. Such a thing would not be for one moment tolerated in Great Britain as that a cabinet minister, a gentleman, too, of whom it is said that he is brought into the cabinet for the express purpose of being Minister of Justice, should engage in the practice of his profession. It is no secret anywhere ; it is said every where that the present hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) refuses to stay very much longer in the government and that being the case my right hon. friend brings in this hon. gentleman who is practising in the courts of Canada to-day before the judges appointed by the present Minister of Justice and who is to be the maker of judges in the future or the unmaker of them if he will, a man who is to have their promotion in his hand, a man who is to take, if he ses fit the highest judicial position in the land and who will be entitled to that position by reason of his being Minister of Justice. I thought that we might get along perhaps withont this discussion. I would like to have done so. No Canadian can fail to admire the eminent position which the talents of the Postmaster General have won for him at the Canadian bar. We are glad to see him honoured, but lawyers regret to find that he does in this particular forget what is due to his profession, what is due to his position as a cabinet minister and what is due to Canada by practising in the courts and being a cabinet minister at the same time. I say I wanted to avoid this and so on the 21st of March I asked:

Since the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Aylesworth to the position of Postmaster General, in how many actions, causes, matters or proceedings, has he been engaged as a counsel before a judge or judges appointed by the government of Canada ?

That was a plain, honest, modest question, I think. I think it deserved an answer. Here is the answer that the right hon. gentleman who leads the House gave amid the applause of some of his followers—not of all. He said :

There is no department of the government which is in possession of any information under which any answer could be given to that question.

That is clever. That is evasive. It may be discreet, or it may not be. We will see. Does the right hon. minister who leads this House, who is the head of this government know nothing but what is recorded in the departments? Does he know anything of what his ministers are doing? I know that the other day we found a cabinet minister did not know anything of the qualifications of the gentlemen whom he appointed to positions. I know that in some cases it might be more to the peace of mind of the right hon. gentleman if he did not know all that was going on, but I do say that it is not reasonable to assume that the Prime Minister was kept in ignorance of the fact that one of the most important members of his cabinet was practising in the court at the time I refer to. Well, that pleased some of the following. Before that the right hon. gentleman gave to the House an explanation of ministerial changes. He told of the persistent efforts that he had made for a matter of four years, I think, to induce the hon. Postmaster General to become a member of the cabinet. He told of his success. He told us nothing of the arrangement by which he was to be allowed to practise in the courts and in case there was any arrangement by which the hon. gentleman was to have the right to practise in the courts he told us that he made no complaint and he did not take the country into his confidence and explain why it was that contrary to all precedent the hon. gentleman was practising in the courts. Until recently the ministry have been evidently intending to crowd this matter through, to laugh it through, to ignore the protests of the people, to carry it with a high hand as they frequently endeavour to carry things with a high hand and just go on as they have been doing without giving any explanation. So, I find a statement in regard to the matter in the 'Globe' of the 24th March:

Colonel Sam. Hughes said that so far as had been shown the late postmaster at Cannington had no interest in the grocery business. If he had would it be any worse for that man with $900 salary than the Postmaster General himself, who goes down to the Supreme Court to plead for clients and earn more money ? The Postmaster General should have a higher sense of honour.

How is that received? The 'Globe' says 'with ministerial laughter.' It may be a laughing matter, Sir. Some rhymster has said :

Just try to wear a solemn phys,
Be sober if you can—
It is a very serious thing
To be 'a funny man'.

And it may be that these hon. gentlemen to whom it is very funny now may not find it so funny in the end. They have been reconsidering this matter within the last few days. This subject will be one of great interest to the hon. gentlemen who support the right hon. gentleman—to those hon. gentlemen on my left and to those who sit behind the right hon. gentleman. What future is there for these hon. gentlemen? A dozen or two men are of the cabinet or advisers in the inner circle. What future is there for those men who sit around and who are brought in to vote for the measures of the government whether they like them or not? I talk to them at present and I ask them if they believe it is in the interest of the public or if it is expedient or right that a minister of the Crown, having the promotion of judges in his pocket, shall have the right to enter the courts, to enter the lists and to compete with other lawyers who are on the outside. I refer to the fact that the Postmaster General is carrying on his law practice throughout Ontario generally I presume; in the courts in Toronto and in Ottawa at all events. I took occasion some time ago when I thought this matter was coming up to ascertain some of the facts having failed to get the answer I have already referred to. I find that on the 12th of March, in the case of Milne vs. Yorkshire Guarantee Company, the counsels were Aylesworth, K.C., and Deacon for appellants; E. P. Davis for respondent. On the 15th of March, in Bradley vs. Saunders, Riddel, K.C., for appellant ; Aylesworth, K.C., for respondent. On the 16th of March, in Gibb vs. McMahon, Ritchie, K.C., for appellant, Aylesworth, K.C., and Dalamere for respondent. On the 20th of March, in the International Harvesting Company vs. Graham, Aylesworth, K.C., for appellant, Lynch-Staunton, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. FOWLER. This last March.

Mr. LENNOX. This last March. I have only taken the cases heard when the House was in session, and while the Privy Council was sitting every day from two o'clock to three o'clock. On March 23, 26, 27, 28 and 29 when the case of the Toronto Street Railway Company vs. the City of Toronto was being heard; on all these days except the 29th the counsel were Nesbitt, K.C., and Laidlaw, K.C., for the appellant; Aylesworth, K.C., and Fullerton, K.C., for the respondent. I am informed that on the 29th Mr. Aylesworth did not appear in the Toronto case, but he did appear on the same day in Miller vs. Globe Printing Company. This will be sufficient as an illustration. The extent of the practice is not material; it is pretty extensive all the same and it makes a pretty good showing during the session of this House. The court is not sitting now.

I want to ask the right hon. gentleman and the House generally; Is this a fair practice from any standpoint from which we may view it? It may be said of course that this is a little thing, that there are only eight or ten cases mentioned all told that have been tried in the Supreme Court between March 12 and 29. But, if it is wrong as regards a great number of cases it surely is wrong as regards these few. Is it fair to the litigant that a member of the government should plead for one side, and that the other side should be obliged to retain some one who has not this advantage and influence? The trouble is that in these matters it is generally the strong corporation, the rich men who secure the prominent counsel, and the poor man has to take such less prominent counsel as he can afford to pay, and so the evil is aggravated just in that proportion. I will not refer to whether it is fair to the profession; I incidentally referred to that before. But I ask: Is it fair to the judges? How can it be fair to the judges, when after a case has been argued by a member of the government, it may be deemed right by the Supreme court that a previous decision of the lower courts, before which that member of the government did not apear as counsel, should be reversed. Will not public attention be attracted to that, and particularly if it be a case that has a semi-political bearing, will it not be impossible to disabuse the public mind of the idea that injustice has been done by reason of what happened?

Mr. GERMAN. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does he suggest that any one of the judges of the courts of Canada will be biased in his view of the law by reason of the fact that a lawyer who happens to be a minister of the Crown is arguing the case?

Mr. LENNOX. I will try to make my remarks so plain——

Mr. GERMAN. I would like the hon. gentleman to answer the question.

Mr. LENNOX. I will try to make my remarks so plain that they can be understood even by the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) who has just spoken. The hon. gentleman is a member of an honourable profession; he is the material of which we make judges—sometimes. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that as a lawyer he will appreciate as well as the general public appreciate it, that it is not only that we have to maintain conditions under which the judges shall do right and will do right, but we must preserve that condition of things under which the judges will be above suspicion. If I had been more successful in expressing myself I would have made it plain to my hon. friend (Mr. German) that what I am trying to point out is this:—take that case of the Toronto Street Railway Company vs. the City of Toronto; Mr. Christopher Robinson was counsel in the early stages of the case. I do not know the history of the case, but let us suppose it was lost by the City of Toronto in the lower courts and when it comes to the Supreme court the Postmaster General is counsel, and perhaps when the judges have done the very best they could do, and have endeavoured to do absolute justice between the parties (as I believe our judges in Canada almost universally endeavour to do) suppose they find themselves compelled to reverse the decision of the lower courts and give judgment in favour of the side supported by the Postmaster General. It may be a just verdict, it may be the only verdict the Supreme court could honestly give, but will the public take it that way? I tell you that we are tampering too much with the judges and the administration of justice, in Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. We are giving them too many political and other jobs. We are bringing them in to too close touch with the executive, a thing that was fought against in the past history of the empire. And unless the government will right about face on this matter they are doing a serious injury to Canada. They may talk about immigration, they may talk about the prosperity of the country, but, if they do not reverse their policy in this respect they are doing an injury to Canada which never can be righted by them even though they remain in power for the next fifteen or twenty-five years. That is what I mean. I am not saying the judges will do wrong; I do not believe as a rule they will do wrong. But they are human like the rest of us ; some of them are very human. We don't want them to be tempted, and above all we don't want to have them put in a false position. We do not want that their judgment shall be open to suspicion by reason of the way in which the case was conducted before them or because of the position of the counsel who may appear before them ; we do not want it to be understood that the government, (in a word the executive) and the court is to go hand in hand in the trial of the case of this man and the other man or this corporation and the other corporation in the Dominion of Canada. The other night my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) stated in respect to a Bill which he was introducing, that he was quite willing to go back to the old state of things and lop off the additional $1,000 indemnity granted last session, and the Minister of Customs said: Is it right to do a little stealing and wrong to do a great deal of stealing ? How would it be to apply that now? We pre-empted, we bought, possibly at a low figure, the best services of the Postmaster General when we invited him to take a position in the cabinet, and the country understood and had a right to understand that his best energies, his time, his splendid talents, if you will, would be devoted to the service of Canada, and to the service of Canada alone.

What a grand position the hon. gentleman would have occupied, as compared with his position to-day, if, having attained to the high place that he has in his profession and being well able to afford it, he had said : I will henceforward devote my whole time to the service of Canada, and I will leave to the junior members of the bar a chance to fight out these cases on fair terms, not pitting against them a cabinet minister with all the prestige which that position implies. I read to-day or yesterday the following remark of President Roosevelt in a speech which he made the other day :

> The eighth commandment reads, Thou shalt not steal ; it does not read, Thou shalt not steal from the rich man ; it does not read, thou shalt not steal from the poor man ; it reads simply and plainly, thou shalt not steal.

The time of every cabinet minister belongs to the country. When he does not feel that it belongs to the country, he should surrender his position to some man who will give his undivided allegiance to the country, and the sooner the First Minister realizes that none of those who surround him and belong to his cabinet shall take from the country that which belongs to the country, whether it is time or money, the better it will be for the interests of Canada and also for the government, so far as their tenure of office is concerned. My hon. friend who interrupted me a few moments ago with his timely observation, has a high regard for the judiciary. So have I. I do not lag behind him in that respect. Let me read a line or two that will commend itself to him :

> The judges in their calm surroundings are above party prejudice and passions, remain garbed with that solemn oath they take of giving even handed justice to all contending parties before them and carried that atmosphere of calmness and impartiality from the bench into those inquiries, and I, &c.

That was said by an hon. senator of Canada. It will meet exactly the high ideals of my hon. friend, as it meets with my ideals. Let me read a line or two more from the same source :

> They (the judges) are clothed with absolute independence and removed from party factions and prejudices and have their own reputation at stake, which as judges they value.

Clothed with absolute independence—that is just what we want. We want that the judges shall be independent of the executive, and that the executive and the judges shall not go hand in hand in this matter. We want that the practice in Britain shall be followed here. They have no such thing in Great Britain as a Minister of Justice being a member of the cabinet, so that if there is a necessity for that rule being observed in Britain, that no member of the cabinet shall for one hour after he becomes a cabinet minister appear in the courts, surely it is much more important that it should be observed in Canada, where our conditions make it more fatal for the rule to be infringed than it would be even in the mother country. I said it was unfair to the judges. Let me read a few lines from a statement which was discussed some years ago in connection with New South Wales. Judge Boothby, reporting to the home government at the time, on the question which was then under discussion, as to having the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General members of the cabinet, said :

> The independence of the judges would be endangered, for they must listen to arguments at the bar, on great constitutional questions, arising between the Crown and the people, from the lips of men having the power of cabinet members, and who on leaving the court, might do so only to join a cabinet council to decide on the promotion to a higher rank in judicial office of the very judge to whom, the previous hour, they had been addressing their arguments in behalf of the Crown.

Is it any better, I ask, to have the argument addressed, not on behalf of the Crown —and I except that from my resolution—but on behalf of a private litigant ? In 1806 the question came up of appointing Lord Ellenborough, then Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, to the Presidency of the Council in Great Britain ; and the ideas of a large section of the British parliament were enunciated in these words :

> That it is peculiarly inexpedient and inadvisable, tending to expose to suspicion, and bring into disrepute, the independence and impartiality of the judicial character, and to render less satisfactory, if not less pure, the administration of public justice.

In 1903 the matter of the practice of law officers and deputy heads—not cabinet ministers—was brought up before the English House of Commons, and Sir William Harcourt on that occasion spoke as follows :

I took part myself in laying down and carrying out the principle that the law officers of the Crown should not engage in private business, because it was held that they had quite enough public business to do, and that it was possible that in undertaking private business they might have to deal with matters which come into conflict with their responsibilities to the government and the country.

He also said, in reference to the question of divided allegiance :

But when a man takes a responsible position such as that of a minister of the Crown, I say it is only common sense, to lay down the rule that he shall give up the whole of his time to the responsibilities of that position. This seems to me to be a proposition which can be unanimously accepted, and therefore I hope, &c.

Mr. Swift Mackevill, said on the same occasion :

Every person who enters into the service of the state should give his whole time to that service, and not place himself in a position in which there was any possibility of his public and private duties coming in conflict.

On a previous occasion Lord Hotham, bringing up a question similar to the one we have in this House to-day, and quoting with approval what had been said by the 'Times,' spoke thus :

Is the House prepared for such an incorporation of professional and legislative duty on the part of its legal members as that gentlemen who have been retained by private individuals in the one capacity, should take advantage of the other to further their clients' claims ?

I called the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that we are unfortunately mixing up the duties of the judiciary with the duties of the executive more and more. It is not an intentional mixing up in this instance but it is the inevitable consequence of what we are doing. We are doing it all along the line. We are calling in the judges to pull us out of our difficulties, to take a part in the government, to take the odium and the blame of what should be undertaken by responsible ministers and we are submitting, as has been suggested to me, hypothetical questions to them all the time instead of making these people who are directly responsible to the people and the people's votes shoulder the responsibility, those people who are amenable to the people's votes and who should suffer if they go wrong. We are putting in the judges between the government and the people and so shielding the government. The whole system is wrong and the sooner we stop it the better. This is one of the elements in that system that is- - -

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would my hon. friend particularize what he has in mind. He speaks of the tendency to mix the duties of the judiciary and of the government. I understand he gives a case in point, but what other point is there ?

Mr. LENNOX. For instance the Minister of Justice gave a long list of cases to-day.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Taking back to 1880.

Mr. LENNOX. Very likely, I am one of those who do not care a rap whether the Tories did it or the Grits did it. You said you were coming into power because you were going to do better. God knows you have not done it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The people don't say so.

Mr. LENNOX. The people thought at one time that you were going to do it. The people thought that even my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) was going to do better than he is doing. He could easily do it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I satisfied my people.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, he satisfied them.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, you bet your life.

Mr. LENNOX. And my friend (Mr. Johnston) satisfied himself by voting for the government every time the whip was cracked. He satisfied those people without redeeming the promises his party made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a very important question and I have listened to my friend (Mr. Lennox) with very great interest. He says there is a tendency prevailing at this moment on the part of this government to mix the functions of the executive with those of the judiciary. He mentioned a case in point from his own point of view. I have no fault to find with that, but I would be obliged if he would particularize the other instances he has in mind which go to prove the general tendency.

Mr. LENNOX. I will give the right hon. gentleman an instance without going out of the city of Ottawa. We have a sick commissioner at present somewhere in the city of Ottawa, a judge who has been appointed on a royal commission. When we inaugurated these proceedings it was said on the government side of the House : Everything is all right, everything is lovely, we are only doing this thing for fun, there is not a thing wrong about the insurance companies, there is not one thing wrong with the administration of the insurance laws of the Dominion of Canada, they are worked in perfection. What is the fact? Any one who has read the press knows perfectly well that there have been things wrong, that there are things wrong, and there are other things wrong that have not been divulged, and that this parliament should have known, this cabinet should have known that this insurance department was not being properly, was not being efficiently, aye, and was not being honestly administered by their subordinates who have given evidence at that commission. I did not say this government, I said the trend and tendency of governments in Canada is and it is the same in England, and has been spoken of in the legal journals there, and has been called 'jobbery' in the most respcetable legal journals there—the tendency is for governments to appoint commissions of judges and place those judges in position to be discussed by the public. Take the Gamey investigation by the government's friends in Ontario. Did they condemn it? No they sided with the government of Ontario in appointing that commission and is there a gentleman in Canada to-day who knows anything of public affairs who is so dense that he does not know that in all the history of the judiciary there has never been anything so utterly subversive of the best interests of the judiciary in Canada so utterly at variance with the respect and reverence we should owe to the judiciary and which we do owe and did cheerfully yield the judiciary here before the Gamey investigation as——

Mr. GERMAN. Will the hon. gentleman assert that the High Chancellor Boyd and Chief Justice Falconbridge were not two of the most upright judges in Canada?

Mr. FOWLER. They gave a rank decision.

Mr. LENNOX. All right, I am not saying anything derogatory of any judge, but if you take two of the most eminent judges in the land as my hon. friend has said—I think they would want a stronger champion than my hon. friend—but if you take the two most prominent judges in Ontario as my hon. friend has said and find that the result of that investigation is that one half the people in Canada are traducing them while another half are trying to uphold them, and that one half the people in Canada will never believe that that was an honest and fair investigation,—I ask when we find that—does it not emphasize what I have said in the most abundant and conclusive manner if there is anything we owe to Canada it is that we should see to it that at all hazards we preserve the independence of the judiciary and protect them from the assaults of politicians and maintain them in the confidence of the people as heretofore. I am glad my hon. friend referred to these judges, because, after all, if I remember rightly, I think the Postmaster General (Hon. A. B. Aylesworth) was one of those who stood up for the maintenance of British institutions on that occasion, and gave evidence and did a lot of judicious work previous to the hearing. I have a thorough appreciation of what my hon. friend said and I only ask him to come again.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand under the rules of the House this matter cannot be taken up to-night, but I presume on Monday next, when an opportunity will be given to my hon. friend to continue. We must not leave this matter undisposed of in its present form.

Mr. LENNOX. I want to go on at eight o'clock to-night.

The PRIME MINISTER. It must stand over till Monday next under the rules of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. Very well, I will be here.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. W. F. Maclean for the second reading of Bill (No. 9) to further amend the Railway Act, 1903.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Might I ask the Minister of Justice whether the government intend to announce their policy with regard to express companies? They did not make that quite clear the other night.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I understand that the conclusion to which the government has come is to wait until the Bill presented by the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) is disposed of.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

ANNUITIES FOR CERTAIN PRIVY COUNCILLORS.

On the order :

Second reading of Bill (No. 18) respecting annuities for certain Privy Councillors, and respecting the Senate and House of Commons.—Mr. W. F. Maclean.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I was ready to go on with that, but I want to wait until another Bill dealing with the same question comes into the House to-morrow, so that the two Bills may be before the House at the same time.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—SURVEY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND MONCTON.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Crocket for copies of all correspondence had between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the government, or any department thereof, and between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Transcontinental Railway Commission, in reference to the survey and location of the proposed Transcontinental Railway between Quebec and Moncton.

Hon. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.). I moved the adjournment of the debate on this question when it was last before the House, because I wished to say a few words upon it. The motion deals with the location of the transcontinental line, especially through New Brunswick, and representing as I do a constituency in that province, I thought I ought to say a few words before the motion was disposed of. I have no intention of criticising the motion itself, nor the speech delivered by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) in moving his resolution; nor have I any intention of entering into a lengthy discussion as to the merits of the two routes. I take the ground that it is no longer the business of laymen to discuss the merits or demerits of each of these two routes mentioned in the reports of the engineers. I take it for granted it is a question to be settled by the engineers, after a careful examination of the whole country. I can remember very well that when the government announced its intention of building a transcontinental line, an all-Canadian route, and when the Bill was introduced in the railway committee, that Bill was not fully satisfactory, nor did it indicate what we expected it would from the announcement of the government policy of an all-Canadian route. The Bill was introduced, I think, by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Leighton McCarthy), and it left the whole eastern country out on the ground that there was already railway communication from North Bay down to Quebec, and from Quebec to the maritime provinces by the Intercolonial. A movement was made then to extend that line further east, and a strong representation from Quebec very properly felt that the line ought to go to Quebec, and the eastern members from the small provinces thought it ought to go to the maritime provinces.

Unfortunately at that time for the province of New Brunswick, the minister of the province, the leader of the members in parliament, here, for reasons best known to himself and which I do not intend in any way to call in question or criticise, retired from the government as a strong protest against the whole scheme. It left the members from New Brunswick in a very weak position. Those who looked forward to the construction of an all Canadian route as a national undertaking, as one that would develop and build up the best interests of the country, felt themselves to be in an awkward position, but we thought our best efforts should be given to try to get that line extended eastward beyond Quebec and on to the sea-board. The absence of the then Minister of Railways and Canals, the Hon. Mr. Blair, left us in a very weak position. We had to look at the advantages as to distance that Portland, an American port, had against any port we had to offer. My idea at the time was and is still that in order to compete with Portland our efforts should be directed towards securing the construction of the railway to the nearest Canadian port we had. That would be the city of St. John. Now, whatever, opinions hon. gentlemen may have about my attitude towards the City of St. John on some other questions I want to say here and now and to affirm it most distinctly, that, viewing St. John as the commercial metropolis of the province, St. John has no better friend in so far as my confidence goes than the member for Victoria who is now addressing you. Mr. Speaker. I contend that St. John, like any other city in Canada cannot rely upon its own resources for its future. St. John is the commercial metropolis of our province, as Toronto is the commercial metropolis of Ontario and as Montreal and Quebec are large centres in the province of Quebec, but I say that the duty of the rural members and of those representing the city of St. John is to co-operate together because we are bound to build up St. John in the interest of the province and all we ask of the city of St. John and of its representative men is that they should remember that in building up the rural districts they are building up the trade of St. John.

One or two points in the remarks made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) might be referred to in this way: The hon.

member for York, in making his statement, complained of the greater length of time devoted by the engineers to the examination of what is called the back route, or the central route, as compared with the length of time devoted to the examination of the river route. I am sure that when I call the attention of the hon. gentleman, or of any other hon. member from New Brunswick, to the nature of the country along the Valley of the St. John he will readily understand, as I do, that it should not require anything like the same time or expense to examine the valley route that it would the central or the back route because the valley route runs down the valley of the St. John river. There are railway facilities along it, there are turn-pike roads on each side of the river, besides the use of the navigable river itself. It should not cause any surprise at all if the engineers were obliged to spend more time on the line across from Grand Falls to Moncton, through a wooded country, back from the river and without means of communication. Therefore, I say that the hon. gentleman in making the complaint that too much time was given to that examination, and in concluding that it looked as if there had not been fair play given to the river route makes a complaint in which I do not think there is much force as the hon. gentleman will, I think, admit when he considers the fact that on account of the facilities that can be obtained to examine the river route it should take very much less time to examine it throughly than it should take to examine the central route.

Another point that the hon. gentleman made was that several trial lines were run on the central route to shorten the distance while no such effort was made to shorten the distance on the River St. John Valley route. While in looking at the map and studying the available routes for an all Canadian transcontinental railway it would strike any one that if you could get the grades the distance should be shorter by going from Grand Falls direct to Moncton, the only question was as to whether you could get satisfactory grades. If you could get the grades you would have a shorter route and a more satisfactory route but that was an unknown country at that time to a large extent. Several lines were tried in the distance between Moncton and Grand Falls. Now, there was not the same necessity for different lines along the valley route because the contention of hon. gentlemen who preferred the valley route from their point of view—and I do not quarrel with it at all—is that the valley route should be followed on account of the grades you can get by following the flow of the water from Grand Falls to Fredericton. That is an arbitrary line. There was no necessity to try any other route because no other route was required. You had to start at Grand Falls and follow the route down to Fredericton. There was not the same necessity for trial lines to shorten the distance that there was going across country where you had a wide scope on each side of the proposed line. Another argument was used at the time that representations were made to the government recently in favour of the river route and against the back route which I think ought not to have too much weight. It was contended that while the back route, so called, or what is called the central route, was certainly some miles shorter than the river St. John route, still you had to climb over the elevations that were objectionable and that were not to be found upon the valley route at all. What I complain of is that the engineers having lengthened the line by the central route in order to get satisfactory grades, such grades as are required by the government and the transcontinental railway commission, the two objections should be used—first the length of the route and then the elevations to be overcome. The elevations do not exist. The elevations have been overcome by the lengthening of the central route, but the length of the route is still much shorter than that of the valley route.

In regard to the city of St. John I may say that when this question came up before and when the surveys were started I noticed in the Fredericton 'Herald' a strong article denouncing the central route and appealing to the muncipalities and counties to enter a strong protest against the road going by that route and to try and force it down the valley of the St. John. I had been well acquainted with the editor of that paper for many years and I wrote him a friendly letter. I have no objection to stating the reasons I gave why I thought he was making a mistake. I said that if I lived in Fredericton I would hold up both hands for the central route for the reason that going by the central route the moment you strike the Canada Eastern line, a government road which is part of the Intercolonial Railway, you strike communication with Fredericton and you approach Fredericton in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific line, east and west the mileage would not be more than by the River St. John route, you leave Fredericton with the existing railway and you give it the advantage of the newly constructed trunk line. You would develop a country of considerable importance and notwithstanding all that has been said about it as being a country well adapted for agricultural purposes you would open up a country well suited for the manufacture of lumber. Another objection has been urged against that route which I think is not a very strong one and that is that if you run the railway through there you will destroy the whole of the timber of that country which is more valuable to New Brunswick than the construction of the road. If that argument is any good at all you would have to change the whole line from the Pacific coast because one of the great advantages to Ontario and Quebec especially and to British Columbia is that you are opening up and developing a new country and that through British Columbia to some extent but principally through Ontario and Quebec you are opening up a large timber country. If it is going to destroy the timber in our province it will have the same effect in the other provinces, but what strengthens me is that the other provinces do not take the same view of it because Ontario and Quebec so far have hailed the construction of that road with delight because it will develop a country which it would tax them to their utmost to develop if it were not developed by this undertaking. I do not pretend that it is a colonization scheme. I do not pretend that it is a development scheme but I do claim that it is a scheme growing out of the transportation question. The problem was sought to be solved by the construction of an all-Canadian route having such grades and curvatures and being of such a character as to be able to carry freight in such a way as to compete successfully with Portland.

I believe the results of that project will be realized to its fullest extent. It is true that in constructing this road to meet the requirements of transcontinental transportation it incidentally becomes a great developing power, with respect to large sections of British Columbia, of Saskatchewan, of Alberta, of Manitoba, of Ontario especially, and of Quebec. There is no doubt that the distance through which it runs in New Brunswick will also be developed. I do not want to enter into any strong argument against the views of my hon. friends who have spoken and whose opinions are just as honest as my own, but I must speak my personal conviction with regard to the route which should be selected. When the National Transcontinental Railway Bill was first introduced I expressed the idea that it was possible to get a satisfactory line through that part of the province of New Brunswick which was supposed to be mountainous. As a matter of fact the country is not of that character at all. The reports of the surveys made under the supervision of Sir Sandford Fleming before the building of the Intercolonial Railway have been cited very frequently in this House, but it must be remembered that these surveys were made largely with the view of keeping away from the frontier. These surveys started from Moncton and different points and they nearly all centered at the head waters of the Tobique and Restigouche, making for River du Loup and Trois Pistoles. They therefore passed through the height of land in the province. Every one who knows the province of New Brunswick knows, that the Tobique, the Miramichi, the Restigouche, the Nepisiquit, all flowing in different directions take their source in the height of land in the centre of the province so that it is only a very short distance from the head waters of one river to the head waters of the other. But, at the time of the Intercolonial Railway survey a good line was found to the south of that territory by the late Mr. Hartly who lived in the county of Carleton and who represented that county in the legislature of New Brunswick. During the session of parliament when we were discussing the building of the Intercolonial Railway, he was sent out to make a survey, but it was a foregone conclusion that the railway should be constructed on the Robinson route, and the fact is that a satisfactory report on the central route was not wanted. The central route was then offered as a compromise between the advocates of the North Shore route and those who wanted the River Valley route. We joined in favour of the central route offering to take it as a compromise and Mr. Hartly was sent out, but the moment he reported that he was getting a favourable location he was called off and no further survey was made at that time. However, that route has been surveyed recently and it is proven that a practical line having the curvatures, the grades, and the requirements necessary for a first-class railroad can be obtained. I shall not pretend to speak for the city of St. John in the presence of hon. gentlemen who are better qualified than I am to deal with that point, but I am free to express my opinion that the city of St. John will be as well served should this route be adopted as it possibly can be served by the river route to Fredericton and thence to Chipman. It is my conviction that when this road is built, the city of St. John will be taxed to its utmost to handle the traffic that will be hauled into it over this very central route. What difference can it make to St. John at any rate, whether the river route or the back route is adopted. The advocates of the river route want to go to Fredericton and cross over to Chipman, but suppose the back route, or rather what I call the center route is taken, it also will go to Chipman and therefore Chipman is the objective point for St. John in any case. I cannot see that the people of the city of St. John would have any choice as between the two routes so far as their interests are concerned. I have no objection at all to the statements made by the hon. gentlemen from York and Carleton, but I do hope that we will not forget that the great object is to have an all Canadian railway built on all Canadian territory, to carry the grain of the Canadian west to a Canadian port in the east. I gladly supported the national transcontinental project, as I supported in earlier days the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; I supported the National Transcontinental Railway with a good deal more confidence than I did the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the experience we have had in the meantime led me to the conclusion that there was no doubt in the world about the success of our latest transcontinental scheme. But I supported it as an all Canadian route; I did not support it for any local considerations, and I say now that we should not divert that line one single mile to accommodate any local interests to the detriment of the greater interest we have in view. I hold that the line should be built as a commercial enterprise and with a view of getting the best grades and the shortest possible distance so as to enable us to successfully compete with American ports. I have confidence in the commissioners appointed for the construction of the eastern section; I have confidence in the chief engineer selected to carry out the surveys, and so I am prepared to accept the report of the engineers from the scientific point of view, and I trust that a sensible view will be taken of the matter by all those who want to do the best for Canada.

Mr. A. A. STOCKTON (St. John). I do not think I am sufficiently acquainted with the facts which have arisen in this discussion to speak at any great length. My hon. friend (Mr. Costigan) has put in a very strong plea for an all Canadian route, but I do not think that question is involved. Whether the railway goes by the central route or by the River Valley route it will be all on Canadian soil and therefore the plea that the hon. gentleman has put in—a very proper plea from a patriotic standpoint—that this transcontinental line should be all on Canadian soil, has no relevancy to the discussion. I listened with considerable interest the other day to my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and the way he crumpled up railway distances and stretched out railways as if they were made of India rubber, was somewhat startling. However, his conclusions came out pretty well, and I think he proved, as did my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket), that from the point of view of commercial success the valley route should be adopted by the government. I was somewhat interested in listening to my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) because I had not forgotten that when he ran his election in 1904 he had considerable to say with respect to railway construction in New Brunswick, and he practically told his electors that he had the assurance of the Prime Minister that the road would be built down the valley of the River St. John. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) who is sitting beside me says he does not wish to call me down, but I am perfectly willing he should.

Mr. CARVELL. I am very sorry to have to correct my hon. friend (Mr. Stockton), but I never made such a statement in my life during the election of 1904.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. CARVELL. In 1904 I took the same ground I took here last week, that both these routes should be honestly surveyed and that that which offered the best transportation facilities should be chosen.

Mr. STOCKTON. I accept unreservedly the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell), but he certainly did impose to a certain extent upon the credulity of the editor of the St. John 'Globe,' because during the progress of the election that gentleman undertook to make some little corrections as to the statements of the Liberal candidate for Carleton county, saying, he thought there must be some obscurity and that probably the Prime Minister had not made the statement as distinctly as was alleged by my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell). Now, I agree in the result with my hon. friend from the County of Carleton. I am not going to discuss the question at length, but I was impressed with the statement of my hon. friend—this was the inference—that there was no honesty on the part of somebody in preparing the first survey and making the first report. What did my hon. friend say, as reported in 'Hansard,' and as I understood him at the time? He said, on page 1502, speaking of the reports :

> While I do not say that they were dishonest—I won't go so far as that, and I am going to make no comments on these reports, because, if I did, I might say something uncomplimentary to somebody—but I do say they were very incomplete.

Who is the 'somebody' as to whom uncomplimentary remarks might be made, and by whom dishonest reports have been sent in and incomplete information has been given to this government? Who is responsible for that incomplete and dishonest information? Is it the chief engineer who is under the instructions of the government? I think that some member of the government should rise in his place on the floor of this House and make some statement with respect to that observation of my hon. friend from the county of Carleton. I may say that there is a rumour, a feeling, in my hon. friend's county and in all the counties along the River St. John that a report was put in which was not complete, which was not honest, and about which uncomplimentary remarks could be made. I agree with my hon. friend from Carleton as to that, and when my hon. friend from Carleton and Senators King and Thompson insisted that an honest survey should be made of the valley of the River St. John, what was the result of that survey? According to the statement of my hon. friend from Carleton and of the two senators whom I have named, whereas it has been represented in the report that there were hills to climb and engineering difficulties to overcome in the valley of the River St. John, an honest survey showed that all along that route of 137 miles only one hill of 30 feet in height could be found, with the exception of one 25 miles above the town of Woodstock. Therefore, I ask who made this report and under whose authority and direction was it made, that went into the government stating that there were great engineering difficulties in the St. John River route? All I want is that there should be an honest survey made and honest information given to this government and this House with respect to the Transcontinental Railway through the province of New Brunswick. My hon. friend said, and I suppose said truthfully, that he had nothing particular to say with respect to the city of St. John—that the city and county of St. John were not deserving of very much credit or of very complimentary remarks at the hands of the friends of the government. But, Sir, the city of St. John stands at the mouth of one of the noblest rivers of Canada. We are not responsible for the geography of the province of New Brunswick or for the fact that that river flows through one of the most fertile parts of that province to the sea. We have planted a city at the mouth of that river by the energy and industry and activity of its people, and they expect that justice shall be done in the expenditure of public money from the treasury of the Dominion. I feel it an honour to represent such a constituency as the great constituency of the city and county of St. John, and because we are independent and send men to parliament to suit ourselves, and not a particular minister, is that any reason why we should be penalized in the expenditure of public money, or that a great transcontinental railway should be ruined or impaired? The city of St. John was founded by men who preferred to leave their homes in the neighbouring republic in 1783 and to live under the British flag, and would the men who are their successors in the city of St. John to-day be worthy of their ancestors if they were willing to give up their judgment and their individuality at the beck and call of a minister of the day or of any clique or body of men? I do not think any minister would ask them to do that. All that we ask at the hands of the government of this country is fair play. We have a harbour there on which over $1,000,000 has been expended at the expense of the people of the city of St. John—what for? To provide facilities for the export trade, not of the province of New Brunswick alone, but of the whole Dominion of Canada—to handle the western freight which is to go forward to the markets of the world, and if there is any port in the Dominion of Canada entitled to consideration at the hands of the government and to be nationalized it is the port of St. John. With respect to that, I see my hon. friend the Minister of Finance present to-night, and I am glad to see him in his place again. I do not wish to say one word against the port of Halifax or the port of Montreal or the port of Quebec. I believe that all four of these ports should in the interest of the country be nationalized and that the facilities required for the transportation of the products of this country from the west to the east and to the markets of the world should be provided by the government of Canada. We have done our share and because we are in opposition that is no reason why we should receive unfair treatment at the hands of the government. We do not hope to be in opposition very long, Sir, but if the change takes place would it not be a small thing for us to penalize some other place because it happened to be independent enough to send men to this House who did not support the government of the day which is to be led by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition? That would not be statesmanlike; it would not be fair. We do not want a political railway in the province of New Brunswick. We want a commercial railway, a railway that follows the best possible route through the province of New Brunswick, and that will best subserve the public interests of the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N. B.). I have not had the pleasure as my hon. friend from the northern portion of New Brunswick said he had had, of speaking on this subject in the House before, but I have had an opportunity of presenting this question before the electors of my own county. I endeavoured to show my constituents or to tell them that the government had made a most favourable bargain in the interests of Canada at large, I told them that it was proposed to run this railway through the centre of New Brunswick diagonally across the province, touching the Canada Eastern a little west of the town of Boiestown. When I was at that town addressing the constituents of that parish I said it would not be many years until we could say to them, 'all aboard for Quebec or for the Pacific coast.' Although this was very clearly explained to be the shortest and most feasible route on which an all-Canadian railway could be built, yet in our province the Conservative press heralded it from one end of the province to the other that we were giving away at the cost of the country a railroad costing $150,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and they said that having paid 90 per cent of the cost we had better pay the other 10 per cent and operate the road.

Mr. DANIEL. Control the road, not necessarily operate it.

Mr. LOGGIE. My friend from St. John speaks about controlling the road, not necessarily operating it. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if we are not controlling the road as it is?

Mr. LENNOX. You are not controlling the expenditure very much.

An hon. MEMBER. It is an unknown quantity.

Mr. LOGGIE. That is part of the contract, it is all an unknown quantity until it is realized on. But, so far as we have gone, certainly the most favourable view that any man in the province took has been realized. It was announced that the object of the road was to develop the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and this road is a portion of the line that will gather freight in the orient, take it to its terminus on the Canadian Pacific coast and will then carry it to the eastern portions of Canada as well as gathering up the wheat in the great rich fields of the west. At the same time, as I see it the development of this country of ours is just as important as the transportation question and in our venture to spend money on transportation it certainly is incumbent on us to see that we spend it where the country will be developed. We are therefore spending this large sum of money by aiding the Grand Trunk Pacific and by building a portion of the road on our own account. We are spending money where the country is not now developed, and in doing so we will materially advance the interests of our country because increased population will come in and then farmers at a distance from the present railways will be enabled to market their grain at an advantage, and as population is pouring into the country at the present time I am sure our hon. friends will not say the venture was started any too soon, that they will admit it was not in the interests of the country that these operations should have been put off as they suggested at that time. I think, in view of the contracts that have been let, that the optimistic view taken by the government of this scheme has to that extent been realized. I see that the contracts have been let at a less cost than was estimated by the engineers.

I have mentioned the development that will probably take place between the Pacific coast and the southern borders of the province of Quebec. When we leave Quebec we pass along the borders of the state of Maine until we reach Grand Falls and from that point there are two routes, one down the St. John river, and the other a direct route to Chipman. By following the back route from Grand Falls to Chipman you are going through a country that is capable of great development. By referring to the interim report of the commissioners, you will find that the engineers state that the lands they surveyed are capable of cultivation, that there are well wooded lands for as much as 15 miles on either side of the railway; they especially mention birch trees of more than the ordinary size. We have in the town of Newcastle a firm manufacturing chairs for the European market out of birch and if this railroad goes through this well wooded country, with timber suitable for the manufacture of furniture for export, it will surely give an impetus to the starting of manufactories in that district, and then on the main line they will be able to have cheap transportation to the sea-board. It seems to me that these are reasons why that part of the country should be used rather than the St. John river which is already developed and has not this wooded land that I speak of. The important part is that it is possible to have the proper gradients, the proper grades and curves by the centre route. If these were not available, if the matter were now in doubt as it was two or three years ago when this Bill was introduced into the House, the situation might be different, but the report of the engineers verifies the statement that not only is it possible to have these gradients of four-tenths going east and six-tenths going west, but that the grades have been found. The grades are available.

Therefore if the back route from Grand Falls to Chipman is the more direct route and if it passes through a country capable of development and at present without any railway facilities whatever, is it not the duty of this government to see that this part of the great transcontinental railway is built through this country which is capable of development, which has resources behind it, and has no railway facilities. I think there can be hardly any question as to the duty of the government in this matter. The report of the Railway Commission is certainly most favourable to the back route. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Stockton) asks me to which report I refer. I am referring to the interim report of the commission. That report, my hon. friend says, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) declares to be of no use. Well, I fancy that neither the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) nor the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Stockton) can possibly change the geography of the country through which the central route is surveyed. I say that the gradients necessary, according to the contract, have been found over that route, by taking which we pass through a land that is capable of great development and will have besides a more direct line. Therefore that route has considerable claims upon the government.

I want also to say something regarding the cost of hauling over the central route as compared with the route from Quebec to Moncton over the Intercolonial Railway, and I base my figures on the report of Mr. Butler, who was then the assistant engineer of the commission and is now the deputy minister. He makes a comparison based on ten fully loaded trains which the Grand Trunk Pacific can haul over the low grades set out in the contract as compared with the cost of hauling the same tonnage over the grades of the Intercolonial Railway. The annual net saving in favour of the transcontinental railway, by following the low grades on the central or back route, Mr. Butler makes out will be $2,157,544.52 on operating expenses, which sum, capitalized at 3 per cent—that being the rate of interest which the Grand Trunk Pacific have agreed to pay on the cost—gives the fabulous sum of $40,453,959, while the cost of building the Quebec and Moncton section will be about $16,000,000, on which sum the Grand Trunk Pacific are to pay an interest of 3 per cent, or an annual expenditure under that head of $480,000. So that by an annual expenditure of $480,000 for interest or rent, they are enabled to save $2,157,544.52 yearly on the operation of ten fully loaded trains per day from Quebec bridge to Moncton. Yet the Conservative press say that the road will not be built to New Brunswick and others say the Intercolonial Railway should be used.

Mr. DANIEL. What Conservative newspaper of New Brunswick says that the Transcontinental will not be built through that province.

Mr. LOGGIE. If the hon. gentleman will refer back to the files of the St. John papers during the Dominion election of 1904, he will find that the St. John 'Telegraph' sent out that statement from one end of the country to the other. I have stated what I believe will be the annual saving to the Grand Trunk Pacific by using the back route as compared with any other route of the same length with the grades of the Intercolonial Railway; and in consideration of the importance of cheap transportation from the rich wheat fields to the sea-board and the practicability of hauling wheat for export all-rail to the sea-board in competition with the lake and rail route, there ought to be no difficulty in deciding what is the best route. And it is encouraging to believe that this all-rail haulage can be successfully done if the low grades such as are set out in the contract are available over the whole line. For example the cost per ton on the Intercolonial Railway from Moncton to Quebec is seventy-three cents as compared with the cost over the Grand Trunk Pacific to New Brunswick by the back route, with the low gradients found there, of forty-three cents. So that it will cost about 75 per cent more to haul over the Intercolonial Railway gradients than over the Grand Trunk Pacific gradients, and it will also cost less to haul passenger trains over the Grand Trunk Pacific gradients as you will find set out on page 77 of the commissioners' report, which refers to the saving as between hauling freight over the Intercolonial Railway gradients and hauling freight over the Grand Trunk Pacific with the gradients required by the contract.

I want to say a word or two about the advantage of the back route as compared with the river route. The engineer's letter to the department, dated I think, in April, 1905, shows the value of the back route over the river route to be $3,896,252.75. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Stockton) says that is where they say it is all mountain. I did not see that in the report. Perhaps he will tell me where he found it. But let me tell you what the report says, for I have it here. What the chief engineer says is this :

> Comparing the two routes, the route via St. John river will cost $1,500,000 more than the central route.

That is accounted for to some extent by the fact that two very large and expensive bridges will have to be built over the St. John river. Then the engineer computes that there is a difference of some 17 or 28 miles, and he goes on to show that there will be a saving caused by not having to operate this difference in mileage of $95,-850.11 per year which, capitalized at 4 per cent, will amount to $2,396,252.75, and to this you must add the $1,500,000 which the road will cost via St. John river over and above what it would cost via the back route. Therefore there will be a saving to the country in this way, and if there is any question as to the Grand Trunk Pacific being able to carry out its part of the agreement, this will enable it to meet its obligations to the extent that by using the back route it will save annually in interest and operating expenses an amount equal to interest on $3,-896,000, which will make it more easy for it to comply with its contract.

Again what does the letter say ? It says that the back route opens up a new country well adapted for settlement and at present without transportation facilities. Then again :

> The river route is already supplied with railway facilities and will in all reasonable probability be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points.

Then he unhesitatingly recommends the adoption of the back route with a grade of four-tenths equal to 21·1 feet per mile, rising eastward to a grade of six-tenths, equal to 31·6 feet per mile as the preferable line. When my hon. friend from St. John talks about an honest survey, I would like to know how it is possible to have a better one.

Mr. STOCKTON. My hon. friend is mistaken, I was not saying that. It was the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) who was asking for an honest survey.

Mr. LOGGIE. Well, my memory perhaps is not as good as my hon. friend's, but I thought that he not only said that, but reiterated his own wish that we should have an honest survey.

Mr. STOCKTON. I certainly do.

Mr. LOGGIE. Then it is not necessary for the hon. gentleman to say that he did not say so, that is the point I make.

Mr. STOCKTON. You must settle that with the member for Carleton, N.B.

Mr. LOGGIE. Now I want to read what the Railway Commission have to say about that:

> In the past all the information has been impartially given to the public, and we propose adhering to this policy in the future in order that no undue advantage may be accorded any one, but that all competitors may have exactly the same chances so far as the department and the commission are concerned.

I say it is hardly fair to assume that there has been any dishonest survey. We are sure of this, that the gradients that are claimed to have been found by the back route are there, or they would not be put in this report in such emphatic terms. If they are there, and the contract can be carried out by that route, and it is a shorter route, and develops a new country, and fulfils the understanding we had in 1904 that it would follow the direct route if these gradients were available, then that part of the question is a matter beyond dispute at the present time. It seems to me that all the advantages I have mentioned are available, and the Grand Trunk Pacific gives us the assurance that they will be able to carry out their proposition. Now what do we hear heralded? We hear it heralded that the Grand Trunk Pacific will never pay their interest. And what can we do about it if they do not pay their interest? I think there is everything to encourage us to believe that they will be quite able to pay their interest from the saving they will make on the road with such gradients as have been found. Then again as to the reason why we should select the back route instead of the river route—when the road reaches Grand Falls, which is a common point to both, it runs along the St. John river, paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway for some 70 miles, one road on one side of the river and the other on the other side, almost within a stone's throw of each other. Therefore what freight it gathers will be freight that naturally belonged to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are really serving territory that has railway facilities already, and we are leaving off serving a territory that has not railway facilities and will not be able to secure railway facilities unless it be a portion of some through line like the present one. Perhaps it is possible within the very near future that we may have another transcontinental line, and in that case that route might be served, if you do not serve it now, and instead go down the St. John river. Then after it leaves Woodstock, there is the Canadian Pacific Railway on both sides of the river. That I admit is back somewhat from the river.

Mr. CARVELL. Thirty miles.

Mr. LOGGIE. Thirty miles in some places I suppose. I congratulate my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., on the very able speech he made the other night. I have no doubt thirty miles is the furthest point. I wish the hon. gentleman would tell us now the nearest point. I do not know myself, perhaps it would not be thirty miles.

Mr. CARVELL. Twenty-five.

Mr. LOGGIE. Well, that is better. I would like also to say that from Woodstock to Fredericton we have already water facilities for a certain portion of the year, in the spring season, and also water facilities during the autumn months.

Mr. CARVELL. Last year it was fifteen days.

Mr. LOGGIE. Well, probably it was a very dry season in that part of the world. At any rate, we have at the present time railway facilities for seventy miles of the route within a stone's throw of where they wish to put this Grand Trunk Pacific line, and then we have two lines of railway from Woodstock to Fredericton and more or less water communication. The country is all opened up, all the lumber has been taken off, whereas the country along the back route is a forest, with a large quantity of birch, and those who are acquainted with birch know that it is a heavy timber that cannot be sent down the stream by water because it becomes water logged and sinks. Therefore that country is not capable of development unless you give it railway facilities, and with the quantity of birch and other wood on it that is useful for manufacturing furniture, I should think there would be considerable development of that section in the way of the export of lumber to Europe.

Now Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that everything points to the advisability of the government selecting the back route as the most direct one having the light grades and curves necessary for cheap transportation.

Although the back line does not touch my county, it comes near the borders of it. I am not personally interested except so far as my constituents are concerned, but I am intensely interested from a New Brunswick standpoint that our province should be given necessary railway facilities where development of the farm and forest is dependent upon transportation. I think there is a good deal in what my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) said to-night, that our friends from St. John should consider the fact that the road taps the Intercolonial west of Boiestown and brings them by forty miles into Fredericton. I suppose they can get right of way over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and then they have another outlet via the Canadian Pacific Railway into St. John on the west side of the harbour. I think the geography of the country gives St. John the advantage over any other port in the Dominion of Canada as a winter port for heavy freight. I would not like to see anything whatever done that would interfere with the prosperity of the great winter ports of this country. I am quite willing to endorse everything that has been said in favour of St. John, and making it a free port. I think that of all those ports that have been mentioned, St. John is the one that should first receive consideration. Quebec and Montreal are further inland and there is not the same competition. But when you carry grain from St. John you have to compete with Portland, New York or Boston, and I think anything the government can do for the port of St. John deserves our endorsation.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). It strikes me that the question under discussion should not be approached from a partisan standpoint, politics should not enter into this discussion at all. We settled the political end of the question at the elections of 1904. We on this side who belong to the opposition were opposed to building what is known as the Quebec section of the Grand Trunk Pacific. We thought that improvements could be made in the Intercolonial Railway which would obviate the necessity of building a new line from Quebec to the Atlantic coast. But the government did not take that view, and the people, speaking at the polls, have sustained the government in the attitude which they took upon that question.

Now, the question to be settled is which is going to be the better route. It seems that we are bound to have this new Grand Trunk Pacific line from Quebec to the Atlantic and the question now before the House is as to which is the better route. We should lay our politics aside and strive to get a route which is going to be best from the commercial standpoint. This road is not to be, as I understand it, a colonization road at all. My hon. friend who has just spoken has argued very strongly in favour of what is known as the back or central route on account of the advantages in opening up that section of the country. I want to say just now to my hon. friend that I am opposed to that route altogether and in favour of what is known as the valley route. All portions of the province of New Brunswick are not alike fertile. The fertile portions of our province lie in the valleys of the rivers and the section of the country that will be traversed by the Grand Trunk Pacific, if it goes by the central route, will be a section which is not good for cultivation, but a section that is to-day valuable by reason of the immense forests that grows upon it, the value of which will be destroyed if it is opened up by this railway. It will be a very serious loss to the province of New Brunswick because our forests are of great value to us and if this road goes by way of that central route it will open up this country and destroy a very valuable asset of the province. As I said, I think this question should be approached aside from politics altogether, but the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has not felt himself to be under any such obligation and he has found it necessary to bring in the political question. He spoke of the most optimistic dreams of the gentlemen who advocated this line as having been realized. I wonder what he meant. I wonder if it was the presentment of the case made by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or of that of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in which he stated that the total cost of this road would be only $13,000,000. We let a contract the other day to the lowest tenderer for only one-sixth of the distance and it is costing us over $19,000,000. Is that what the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) meant by the most optimistic dreams of the originators of this road having been realized? Perhaps he has reference to the statement made by the right hon. the leader of the government that the construction of this road would shorten the distance by 140 miles by taking the central route, when as a matter of fact we find by the report of these very engineers whom he eulogizes so highly—his opinion is not shared by the hon. member for Carleton, nor, let me tell the hon. gentleman, is it shared by the great majority of the people of New Brunswick—that this route will be about 21 miles longer than that of the much abused Intercolonial Railway. Is that then another of the optimistic dreams that have been realized according to the statement of my hon. friend here? He also speaks of the Conservative press, and attacks it in general terms, not specifying or particularizing what newspaper it was in which he saw these articles. Then, when pinned down, he says it was the 'Telegraph.' I would like to ask my hon. friend or any other hon. member when the 'Telegraph' became a Conservative newspaper.

Mr. LOGGIE. At the last election.

Mr. FOWLER. Any one who knows the circumstances knows it was nothing of the sort. It had been for years a supporter of the Liberal party, but it became shortly before the election an independent paper and has been maintained as an independent paper ever since.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend may laugh. It is the sort of laugh that sounds like the crackling of thorns under a pot. In so far as the paralleling of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the valley route is concerned, that surely would not give my hon. friends very much concern, because by this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway they are paralleling for many miles the Intercolonial Railway, a railway which belongs to the people of the country, and still while they can do that with impunity they now hesitate about paralleling a road owned by a corporation and not owned by the people at large.

Mr. LOGGIE. What part of the Intercolonial Railway will it parallel ?

Mr. FOWLER. A very considerable part. This is a matter of very great concern to the people of New Brunswick and to show how the people feel upon it I will mention that of the thirteen members from the province of New Brunswick eleven are in favour of the valley route. One is in favour of the central route. One, following his usual course, straddles both routes. That would give some indication, it seems to me, and a very strong indication of the feeling of the people in respect to this matter. As far as my constituency is concerned, it does not make a hap'worth of difference to them which of these routes is adopted. In either case the railway will go to Chipman and will go from Chipman through by King's county, a portion of the constituency which I have the honour to represent, to St. John. Therefore, in reference to this matter I speak without prejudice, without partisanship or without bias in any way. I voice the opinion which I have in respect to what is going to be the best for the province at large, the best for the country, the best for the Grand Trunk Pacific if it is to be made the great commercial road that we hope to have it. There is just one suspicious circumstance in connection with this whole matter, and it is this: The Grand Trunk Pacific promoters are men of intelligence, are men of ability, are railroad men who know what is the right thing and what is the best thing in their own interest and in the interests of their road. If they were honest about desiring this outlet for the products of the great west, if they were honest in their intention to carry these products through Canada and to serve Canadian ports you would find so strong a protest from these gentlemen against the central route that the government would not dare to build the road by that route. But what is the suspicion in respect to the matter? It is that they are glad to see the wrong route adopted; they are glad to see a route adopted upon which they will not be able to get the grades that they are supposed to require and that they do require in order to make this road a commercial success and they will make the excuse that they have to take the products of the west by way of Portland over the Grand Trunk system, the very thing that they desire to do. Therefore, the Canadian ports will not receive the benefit of having the products of the west exported through them to the countries of the old world. That is the view I take of this and I say it is a matter of very grave importance not only to the province of New Brunswick, but that it is a matter of very great importance to this all Canadian line, and I trust that when it comes to the selection of this route the government will select the route by way of the valley of the River St. John.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St John City). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to weary the House by any relation of a technical nature in regard to this matter or to go over to any extent tables of distances and things of that kind, but merely to refer to one or two points which most hon. members who are very directly interested in the question would consider to be practical points. I think that my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket) might very well be congratulated on the care and ability which he manifested in bringing this matter so ably as he did to the attention of this House. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) too, has certainly agreed with the hon. member for York to a very large extent in the way in which he treated the question, and has really backed him up in a very large degree as to the contention that the surveyors who have been sent to survey the Quebec-Moncton section have not paid so much attention as they should have paid to the valley route of the St. John river as compared with the attention they have given to the back or central route.

The hon. member for Carleton, N. B. (Mr. Carvell) expressed surprise that the hon. member for York, N. B. (Mr. Crocket) should go out of his way as he said, to suggest that this line should be run down the valley of the River St. John to the harbour of St. John at the mouth of the river. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) said : The agreement is signed, the bond is made, the law is there, the line must go to Moncton, and what is the use of talking about running it down the river valley to the harbour ? But, Sir, I contend that this matter is not settled by running the line to Moncton. The true object of the Bill as contained in its preamble if given effect to, renders the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) ineffective, because if you build the line to Moncton you do not comply with the declaration of the preamble, which says :

> Whereas by reason of the growth in population and the rapid development in the productiveness and trade of Canada and especially of the western part thereof, and with a view to the opening up of new territory available for settlement, both in the eastern provinces and in the west, and the affording of transportation facilities for such territory and for other reasons, the necessity has arisen for the construction of a national transcontinental railway to be operated as a common railway highway across the Dominion of Canada from ocean to ocean and wholly within Canadian territory.

Mr. FIELDING. Read on, the preamble specially mentions Moncton. The hon. gentleman has only read part.

Mr. DANIEL. The agreement says the road shall go to Moncton.

Mr. FIELDING. The preamble distinctly says Moncton is the objective point.

Mr. DANIEL. I am not saying that Moncton is not the objective point in the agreement, but I do say that to make Moncton the objective point does not carry out the object of the Bill as set forth in the preamble.

Mr. FIELDING. The preamble distinctly says that the line shall go to Moncton.

Mr. DANIEL. The preamble says the line shall run from ocean to ocean.

Mr. FIELDING. It says it shall run from Moncton to the Pacific.

Mr. DANIEL. The copy I have here reads that the line shall run from ocean to ocean.

Mr. FIELDING. If you will read further you will find it says distinctly that the line shall run 'from the city of Moncton in New Brunswick, to the city of Winnipeg.'

Mr. LOGGIE. But previous to that it says from ocean to ocean.

Mr. FOWLER. Moncton is not on the ocean.

Mr. FIELDING. Moncton is particularly referred to in the preamble.

Mr. DANIEL. I will read the remainder of the preamble :

> And whereas an agreement has been entered into bearing date the 29th day of July, 1903, between His Majesty the King of the first part, and Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, G.C.M.G., C.B., and others representing therein and acting on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. A company incorporated by an Act of the parliament of Canada passed at the present session thereof making provision for the construction and operation of such railway ; and whereas it is expedient that parliament should ratify and confirm the said agreement and should grant authority for the construction in manner hereinafter provided of the eastern division of the said railway between the city of Moncton in the province of New Brunswick, and the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba.
> Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :

I repeat that the line in going to the city of Moncton does not carry out the object of the Bill as stated in the preamble, which is to build a railway from ocean to ocean, because no one by any stretch of imagination could make Moncton an ocean port.

Mr. TAYLOR. Or Winnipeg either.

Mr. DANIEL. Winnipeg is not intended to be.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Finance was trying to argue that it was.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. gentleman from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) brought out that point very clearly in his speech when he said :

> I regret to say that in the distances which are given in the discussion to-night and also in the newspaper press, the objective points are taken as Quebec and Moncton, whereas I contend the objective points should be Quebec and tidewater, no matter where it is.

My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) is right when he says that the line should run from ocean to ocean, and not to an inland point. I take it that railway enterprises are a matter of business, and whether this railway is built by the river route or by the central route to Moncton, it will certainly be taking away from the only port in Canada fitted to do an export business in winter whatever chance it may have of ever doing that business. Remember our competing point is not Halifax, or any other port in Nova Scotia; our competitor is Portland in the state of Maine. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) gives us the distance of the shortest line from Quebec to St. John as 475 miles compared with 317 miles from Quebec to Portland. But he pointed out that the grade from Quebec to Portland is a one per cent, and that it would be necessary to add 83 miles to the 317 to get a four-tenths grade the same as the grade on the new transcontinental road. That would make the relative distance from Quebec to Portland 400 miles as against 475 miles from Quebec to St. John, and 75 miles added on to a long transcontinental railway haul would not be an insuperable objection. Let me point out that from Quebec to Moncton by the shortest route given in Mr. Lumsden's report, it is 514 miles. Now, suppose we were to carry this freight to Halifax, the Cobequid mountains would have to be crossed. The distance from Quebec to Moncton is 514 miles, and thence over the mountains to Halifax, 189 miles, or a total of 703 miles from Quebec to Halifax. But the grade across the Cobequid mountains by the Intercolonial Railway is actually over two per cent. I would propound this arithmetical calculation to my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell). If it takes 83 miles in a distance of 317 miles to reduce a one per cent grade to a four-tenths grade, how many miles will it take to reduce a more than two per cent grade in a distance of 189 miles down to a four-tenths grade. I find it will take about 100 miles, so that according to the calculation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) in order to get the true railway hauling distance from Quebec to Halifax, we must take the following figures :

	Miles.
Quebec to Portland..	400
Quebec to St. John..	475
Quebec to Halifax..	803

That is the legitimate conclusion from my hon. friend's argument.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend's argument, but I certainly must object to his conclusion if he places these words in my mouth. If he takes those figures as his own I have no objection but, for Heaven's sake, do not put them in my mouth.

Mr. DANIEL. I have no doubt the hon. member for Carleton may be a little startled at his argument being carried out to its full and legitimate conclusion, but as a matter of fact I have given the sum, which I ask him to do for himself, and if he can find any other result I shall be very glad to accept it. I believe the result I have given is absolutely correct, according to the railway arithmetic and the reasoning of my hon. friend from Carleton. It is just such thoughts as these that gave the people of the constituency I represent a great deal of food for thought. They felt that it was not right on the part of this government to take away so far as they seemingly could from the only port which was calculated to do this business to advantage, the chance of getting that business.

I would like also to call the attention of the House to the fact that my hon. friend from Carleton referred to the political aspect of the matter, so far as my constituency is concerned. He stated that the Conservatives down there had opposed the building of this line. I take issue with him there. I am not aware of any Conservative having taken any such stand. The stand we took there was the stand taken in this House by the leader of the opposition and by the members of the Conservative party standing back of him ; that is, that as the government had undertaken to guarantee nine-tenths of the cost of this line, it was better for them to assume the whole cost and own and control the road. In addition to that, we had other and possibly more important objections to the agreement that was made. One was that there was no clause in it compelling the Grand Trunk Pacific to carry freight to Canadian ports at all. I would like to make that perfectly clear, because I think it is one of the most important reasons that have given rise to the feeling of opposition where it exists to this contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific. The section which relates to this matter is section 42, of the Act of 1903, which says :

It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railway or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada, be carried entirely on Canadian territory or between inland Canadian ports.

What is the fact with regard to the railway haulage of freight ? Mr. Loud, representing the Grand Trunk Railway Company, a short time ago gave testimony in a court of law to the effect that ninety out of every hundred shippers specifically routed their own freight ; so that as a matter of fact under this very agreement we cannot hope to have more than one-tenth of this freight, supposing the shippers decide to route it in accordance with the probable wishes of the Grand Trunk people, so that they would take it to their nearest port of shipment ; because here is where the second part of the provision comes in :

And that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

So that we could only get that amount of freight that was not specifically routed otherwise, for our share of the business ; and, in order to make it sure that the Grand Trunk Pacific would haul their freight by its shortest line to the nearest port, it was provided that they should not charge any more for carrying it to a Canadian port than they could get by hauling it to their own foreign port. In other words the company will get just as much for its shorter haul to Portland as it will get for its longer haul to Canadian ports. These things all taken together made the people in my constituency feel that the bargain the government was making for the transcontinental railway, was not at all events favourable to the city of St. John.

My hon. friend from Carleton also referred to what he called, forcibly enough, though perhaps not very elegantly, the Portland howl. Now, Sir, there was a Portland howl, but it came after the day of the election, and it was a howl of delight. I will give you just a sample of the headliness of one or two of the New England papers on the day after the election. The Boston 'Journal' said : 'The Portland boom is assured by the Canadian verdict.' The Boston 'American' : 'Canada's vote gives a boom to Portland ; a Liberal victory assures the new road and the Maine City a big business.' Portland 'Argus' : 'Decisive victory for Laurier, the Grand Trunk, and Portland.' Now, I will just give a sample or two in endorsation of the statement of my hon. friend from Carleton that there was a Portland howl, and it was a howl of delight. On election day the Biddeford, Maine, 'Journal,' said :

Portland has almost as much at stake in the Canadian election as she has in our own presidential election in the United States. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government is continued in power, the Forest City will get most of the benefits of commercial annexation with few of the responsibilities that would accompany actual annexation.

The day after the election the same paper said :

In view of the result of the Canadian election, Portland would seem to be fully justified in burning a little red fire, and putting a little more carmine in the municipal paint.

That is not bad for a prohibition state where they call upon aldermen, in ordinary parlance, to paint the town red.

I shall now give the closing part in this connection of an editorial from the Boston 'Daily Advertiser'. I may say that the editorial contains throughout rather sarcastic references to any attempts on the part of the eastern provinces to obtain or control any great amount of this eastern business, but this is the way it closes.

The export business is not a matter of sentiment. The very fact that no contract has been made binding the Grand Trunk in the future is a pretty good sign that the Canadian government is building the new eastern line rather to catch votes than with much idea that the export business will be taken away from the ports of this section for very long.

While the council of the board of trade of Portland say in their report :

Our city is to be congratulated on the result of the recent victory of the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific, for the completion of this great system should mean more to Portland than almost any other point reached by the Grand Trunk road. Although it is impossible to estimate actual results, we feel safe in predicting that it will be the making of this port——

That is the port of Portland.

—from a commercial point of view.

I have no objection at all, I would rather endorse the action of the government in reducing in any way, the distance between Quebec and Montreal and the port of Halifax or any port in Cape Breton or in the extremest part of Nova Scotia. I have no objection to that. I think it is right and certainly I for one would not be disposed to go against anything of that kind, but where a Bill is passed for the express purpose of building a line from ocean to ocean and it purposely side tracks the only place that is in a position to do that business successfully on the Atlantic side, then I think we have a right to protest as earnestly as we possibly can and certainly that is the position I take with regard to that.

As regards the two routes I think that when we take into consideration the fact that under the most favourable circumstances export business can only be done about five or six months out of the year and that for the rest of the time the road must depend on its local business for money to keep it going then I take it that from that view of the case there is no comparison in so far as I am acquainted with the country as between the valley of the River St. John and the central route. We have had it explained to us by men who have been over that part of the country that in one section there is a large well being population, a prosperous people, and in the other a simple wooded country, a large part of which will never be fit for settlement at all, and here is a railway to be built through it which for the greater part of the year will have to depend on local business for its sustenance. The idea is apparently, if possible, to take it out through the centre of the unproductive part of the province rather than running it down into the part where it would be productive.

I did not intend to take any part in this discussion and would not have done so had my own constituency not been referred to so frequently, and I may say to the members who have spoken that I certainly return my thanks to them as representing St. John for the kind words they have given that port and harbour during the discussion. I have never seen as much justice extended to the port of St. John as during this discussion from members sitting on both sides of yourself, Sir. I thank the members for that and I may say that their statements are absolutely justified from the fact that during this past winter the harbour of St. John has done a winter port business with only the one railway helping it to any extent, of over $20,000,000 worth of exports, an increase of over $7,000,000 over last year and the winter is not yet ended. The fact is that the business there is only bounded and confined by the facilities which the port has for doing business and in that connection the Bill which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) referred to to-day in connection with nationalizing the port of Montreal will receive a great deal of attention from me, more especially when it is taken in connection with the report of the transportation commission recommending that a number of the harbours of Canada should be looked after in that way by the general government. I certainly would cordially support any such idea as that because I believe the business of the port and harbour of St. John is getting beyond the capacity of the corporation of that city to attend to as it should be looked after. Therefore I am in hopes that in the near future this matter will come up in such a way that it may be dealt with. Meanwhile while the government see fit to build their line to Moncton for the purpose of making as short a line to Nova Scotia ports as they possibly can, to which I have no objection, if they are going fully to carry out the purpose of this Bill as it is laid down in the preamble I hope they will build as short a line as can be built down to the port and harbour of St. John, the port that will be able to compete to some extent under favourable auspices with our great competitor the port of Portland in the state of Maine.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). This motion calls for papers in relation to the railway surveys. I do not understand that we are called upon to discuss the general question of the Transcontinental Railway; that was fully discussed in the past. Perhaps we may have to discuss it again, but I do not think it is necessary on a motion dealing entirely with this question of surveys, to enter into a general discussion of that great question. Rightly or wrongly the matter was threshed out in this House several years ago; parliament adopted the policy the government had proposed, and I am justified in saying the country generally accepted and ratified that policy. We are therefore now dealing purely and simply with the location of the road in the province of New Brunswick, and I venture the statement that there is no question in that calling for an extended debate. Parliament has settled practically the question we have been discussing by inserting in the Act a declaration that the eastern portion of that road should be constructed from the city of Moncton through the central portion of the province of New Brunswick and through the province of Quebec to the city of Quebec by the shortest available line. That is an engineering question; we have had to discuss political questions in connection with this enterprise in the past and this is not the moment to discuss them again. The question as it is presented to the House by the quotation I gave you from the Act of Parliament makes the matter simply an engineering question.

The policy of the government as laid down in this House,—which this House approved and which the country approved—was that there should be this great national transcontinental railway constructed from ocean to ocean, or from Moncton—the point where we are brought in connection with existing lines of railway running to our ocean ports, for nobody supposes you want to duplicate any line of railway unnecessarily—the policy was to build from Moncton to the Pacific coast an all British line; and as respects that particular section of New Brunswick, there are the words set forth in the Act of Parliament that the location shall be from the city of Moncton through the central portion of the province of New Brunswick and through the province of Quebec, to the city of Quebec, by the shortest available line. There is no longer therefore any political question in connection with this matter. If there was any such, it was settled, wisely or unwisely, long ago. So that all that remains is purely the engineering question. My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), the other day, referred to the importance of having a proper survey. He said that he thought that further surveys were necessary and urged on the government the importance of making them. That was a fair and reasonable request, and it has been met to some extent. Further surveys will be made, every reasonable effort that can be made by competent engineers will be made, to ascertain what is the shortest available line between the two points. Whether that will serve St. John or Fredericton or Halifax must be a minor question. The statute has laid down the policy, and it is laid down in the general interests of the Dominion and what we believe to be the general interests of the maritime provinces. I therefore do not want to discuss the merits of that question, but simply draw attention to the fact that parliament has settled the political question and that nothing remains but the purely engineering question—the question of ascertaining what is the shortest available line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What has been discovered in the last two and a half years?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has the reports which are before the House. He is aware that there was a preliminary report, and such later information as has been obtained has been brought before the House, and no doubt we will have further information. There is therefore no longer a political question, but simply the question of ascertaining from the reports of the engineers what is the shortest available and best possible line. I trust that hon. gentlemen will agree that parliament having declared its policy, it is the duty of the government to see that proper surveys are made. If adequate surveys have not been obtained, let us have further surveys. Let every reasonable effort be made to ascertain what is the shortest available line, and that line should be adopted in the general interests of Canada, and on that line the government will build the road.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am sure the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Finance must be especially refreshing to those who have listened to the elaborate calculations which were indulged in by him and his colleagues during the debate we had three years ago. I venture to say that any hon. gentleman in this House who listened to that debate will agree with me that the Finance Minister was then able to speak with ten times more confidence regarding that line through New Brunswick than he now ventures to do. He was then able to calculate its length to the mile. I very well remember one speech in which he discussed all the calculations as to the saving in distances. He cautiously took off a few miles here and added a few miles there, and was able to come down to an absolute saving of 79 or 80 miles between Quebec and Moncton. But now, when I ask him what information he has obtained in the last two and a half years, I am referred by the Finance Minister of this business government to documents which have been placed on the table within the last two or three days. Eighty miles was the very lowest calculation made by the most cautious of all the ministers of this business government, the Minister of Finance, as to the saving in distance, and that hon. gentleman does not know apparently that the calculations made by his own engineers, the engineers of this commission, show that instead of a saving of 80 miles there is an actual lengthening, as compared with the Intercolonial Railway, of about 21 miles. I do not know whether my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is aware of that or not.

Mr. FIELDING. What has that to do with the subject under debate? We are not discussing the general question of the Transcontinental. The question now is how this survey will run. Suppose it proves that the length is much greater, that does not alter the fact that the survey must follow the line laid down in the statute.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not surprised that my hon friend should thus desire to evade any discussion of the question although his own supporters have been discussing it for hours during the debate we have had on this motion. A very prominent supporter of the hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) discussed it at very great length and made elaborate calculations to throw discredit on the survey that had been made, and pronounced emphatically in favour of further surveys before any proper, reasonable conclusion could be come to on the subject. But compare for a moment the attitude of these gentlemen a few years ago with their attitude now. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister and the hon. the Minister of Finance, brought down to parliament, after nearly five months of the session had elapsed, a measure which resulted in the resignation of the Minister of Railways of that day (Mr. Blair), and they told us that the urgent necessity for then introducing that measure was because time would not wait. We had the Prime Minister telling us that it was not a question of a day, of a year, or two years or three years, of any time in the future, but a question of that very day, that very hour, that very minute. He then said:

> This is not the time for deliberation, but for action. We cannot wait because time does not wait, because in these days of wonderful development, time lost is money lost. Our duty is immediate and imperative. It is not of to-morrow but of this day, of this hour, of this minute.

When we asked: Why do you rush into this matter? Why do you not wait until another session? Why do you not obtain some information? What was the answer of the First Minister and the Minister of Finance? Their answer was this: We have mountains of information, we know all about this. The Finance Minister himself told us that he had surveys which amply demonstrated that it would be the easiest possible thing to obtain a line through the centre of New Brunswick which would reduce the distance from Quebec to Moncton by 80 miles. But to-day when I ask him: what information has this business government obtained with regard to that very line through the centre of New Brunswick during the last two and a half or three years, during which time could not wait, during which time lost was money lost, what is his reply? He tells me: We may find it necessary to make some further surveys. To-day that is the position taken by this business administration. That is the attitude of the Minister of Finance, who is leading the House to-night. He deprecates any discussion whatever of this important subject which was declared by him to be all pressing and all urgent only three years ago. Well, I venture to think that the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, who have been deliberately deceived in this matter, will not be ready to accept such excuses of the Minister of Finance as he has given the House to-night. Further surveys are necessary, after two and a half or three years have elapsed, is all the answer which he has to give to the criticisms and suggestions made, not from this side of the House, but by his own prominent supporters respecting the policy which is being carried out and as to the extraordinary operations which have been carried on by this administration through its engineers whose work has been so fiercely criticised by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). I think, Sir, it is well indeed that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) brought this matter to the attention of the House, and I venture to think that if the government does not desire to make a more pitiable spectacle of itself with regard to its pledges concerning this railway than it has in many other matters that might be alluded to, it will see that these surveys are no longer neglected, that the work is pressed on, that some decent pretense at least be made of carrying out those pledges so copiously poured out three years ago by the gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches.

ADJOURNMENT—NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the House adjourns, I wish to give notice to the Finance Minister and to the government that at the earliest possible opportunity, I suppose on going into Supply, I intend to move the following motion:

That the contracts entered into by the government of Canada with the North Atlantic Trading Company were made without the authority and knowledge of parliament.

That the engagements thus undertaken cover a possible period of nearly thirteen years and involve the payment by the country of about one million dollars without any reasonable compensating advantages.

That the contracts were made under a pledge not to disclose the personnel or agents of the alleged company who are either unknown to the government, or if known to the government have not been disclosed to parliament notwithstanding various attempts to secure the information.

That it does not appear that the alleged Trading Company has any corporate existence, any recognized headquarters, any known directors or officers, that it has any vessels afloat, or possesses any trading or operating facilities of any kind or any agents or agencies effective or otherwise.

That no evidence has been given to parliament of the plans and methods of operation, or that it has been primarily instrumental in sending one single immigrant to Canada and all efforts so far made to discover its workings have proved unsuccessful.

That the conditions of the contracts are injurious, improvident and absurd.

That immediate steps should be taken to terminate the existing contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. First the Bill standing in the name of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and then, if there be time, supply. I may say to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that I understand that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has some information touching that question which it is his intention to present to the committee to-morrow in response to a request from the committee. However, as he is not present I just mentioned that as likely to engage the attention of the committee to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What department will be taken up in supply?

Mr. FIELDING. Marine and Fisheries and Justice.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

QUESTIONS.

THE RAY AND BRONSON MINING CONCESSION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What was the date of the grant of the Ray and Bronson mining concession, and to whom was it made ?
2. What were the conditions as to rental and development of the property imposed by the lease ?
3. What has been expended upon the concession for each year since the date of the lease in respect of (a) rental ; (b) development ; (c) machinery and plant ?
4. For what years have exemptions from the conditions of the lease been granted, and on whose application and recommendation ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The lease is dated the 3rd day of November, 1899, and was issued in favour of the Honourable E. H. Bronson and C. C. Ray.

2. The lease provides for the payment of a yearly rental of $375, also that the lessee shall have sufficient hydraulic or other machinery on the location, within one year from the date of the lease, to permit of active operations being commenced for the efficient working of the rights and privileges granted, and that if during any year of the term of the lease the lessee shall fail to expend in such mining operations in, about or upon the location the sum of $5,000, of the fact of which failure the minister shall be the sole and final judge, the lease shall become and be utterly and absolutely null and void, unless the minister shall otherwise decide.

3. The amount paid for rental between the 3rd of November, 1899, and the 3rd of November, 1902, is $1,125, being $375 for each year. Since that date the rental has more than once been tendered by the lessees but has been refused by the department, as it was decided not to take any action with respect to the leasehold which might waive any right of cancellation the government might have in respect of the lease.

The requirements of the lease in respect of machinery and expenditure were suspended up to the 2nd of June, 1902. In July, 1903, affidavits were furnished to show that $6,029.84 had been expended in, about or upon the location, and that $3,053.66 had been expended on machinery. The assistant gold commissioner, therefore, issued a certificate of work for the year which ended on the 3rd of November, 1903. Affidavits were subsequently submitted to show that an additional expenditure of $6,652 had been incurred during the same year.

In August, 1904, affidavits were furnished to show that the lessees had expended at least $5,000 in mining operations on the location during the year ending the 3rd of November, 1904, and the government mining engineer reported that he considered the work done involved the above expenditure. In September, 1904, an affidavit was submitted to the effect that $5,500 additional had been expended on this location during the same year. The government mining engineer reported that $4,700 of this amount was expended in hydraulic operations.

On the 6th of November, 1905, the government mining engineer reported that the lessees had expended in hydraulic mining the sum of $5,089, and in placer operations the sum of $6,130 or $11,219 in all on the location during the year which ended on the 3rd of November last.

4. Exemption from certain conditions of the lease was granted from the 3rd of November, 1899, to the 2nd of June, 1902. Application for such exemption was made by Messrs. Bronson and Ray. There is nothing to show on whose recommendation this exemption was granted.

THE SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY LAND COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Is the government aware that the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, or its successors, purchased the rights in certain lands possessed by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, earned as railway subsidy ? What was the date of such purchase, and of the transfer to the former company ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The government is not aware of any transaction of the nature referred to.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. What is the amount of the construction contract of the new transcontinental line for the construction of that part of the line running from Quebec westward ?

2. What is the amount of the contract for the same line for the construction of the section from Winnipeg eastward ?

Hon. HENRY R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways). There is no contract for the construction of a new transcontinental line or any portion of it as yet entered into. Any contract which may be entered into would not be for a bulk sum, but would be based on schedule prices and be governed by the extent of the work done.

MAIL SERVICE, PRINCE ALBERT.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked:

1. Were tenders called for during the past twelve months to carry the mail between the Canadian Pacific Railway station and the post office at the town of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan ?

2. If so, how many tenders were received, who were the parties tendering, and the amount of the respective tenders ?

3. Did the lowest tenderer receive the contract ? If not, why not, and who was the successful tenderer ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Three tenders were received and are under consideration.

3. No contract has yet been entered into.

PIERREVILLE, YAMASKA, WHARF.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. What is the cost of the wharf built by the government at Pierreville, in the county of Yamaska, Quebec ?

2. What has been the revenue from such wharf ?

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works):

1. Total expenditure for wharf at Pierreville, $12,181.52.

2. None.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—PROPERTY AT HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

1. Has the government acquired for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway the property on the west side of Water street, lying between North street and Cornwallis street, in the city of Halifax ?

2. Has any portion of such property been acquired by the government ?

3. If not, is it the intention of the government to acquire such property ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes, the government has acquired for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway all the property on the west side of Water street, lying between Cornwallis and North streets, Halifax.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

TRACHOMA HOSPITAL, HALIFAX.

Mr. U. WILSON asked:

1. Has the government established, acquired or taken over a hospital for trachoma patients at Halifax ?

2. If taken over or acquired, from whom was it taken over or acquired, at what date, at what price, and for what consideration ?

3. What was the value of the property taken over by the government for this purpose, and by whom was such valuation made ?

4. What were the arrangements between the government and the person or persons from whom the said hospital was taken over or acquired ?

5. Under what arrangement with the government was the hospital originally established, if it was established in the first instance by private persons ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.

2. A building rented from A. M. Bell by Dr. Dickey who has been using it for some months as a trachoma hospital was taken over March 1, 1905. The rent before such taking over was, and it is now, $50 per month. There was no other consideration.

3. The property has not been valued by the department, as its use is temporary until the hospital building now under construction is completed.

4. The arrangement with Dr. Dickey was that his equipment be taken over at 75 per cent of the invoice value of the different articles.

5. There was no arrangement between the department and Dr. Dickey regarding the original establishment of the hospital. It was a purely private enterprise of Dr. Dickey's, who was paid by the steamship companies for treating detained immigrants.

LETTER CARRIER UNIFORMS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. From whom were the uniforms for letter carriers purchased for city post offices, amounting in all to $8,461.20, for the following places : Brantford, $136.75 ; Halifax, $347.75 ; Hamilton, $670 ; Kingston, $219.75 ; London, $484.45 ; Montreal, $1,984.05 ; Ottawa, $489.25 ; Quebec, $390.85 ; St. John, $360.55 ; Toronto, $2,466.60 ; Vancouver, $217.20 ; Winnipeg, $694 ; as shown in the Auditor General's Report for 1904-5, pages S—54 to 59 ?

2. Were these uniforms and supplies purchased by public tender ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General). Uniforms for letter carriers are not purchased ready made, but each carrier in the service throughout Canada is furnished with a uniform made to order.

Each garment of the uniforms is made at a price fixed by contract.

The contractors are the Crown Tailoring Company of Toronto, and the W. E. Sanford Company of Hamilton.

The contracts were entered into upon tender in each case.

ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Are sections 5 and 6 of chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, regulating the number of county courts judges (a) still in force ; (b) have they been repealed in whole or in part ; (c) or amended ?

2. If repealed or amended, by what statute ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I do not think my hon. friend should press for an answer to this question. He asks for an expression of opinion which would certainly involve the solution of an abstract legal question, and I doubt very much whether it would be of very much value to my hon. friend.

Mr. LENNOX. I anticipated that difficulty but I thought the hon. minister would give an answer as to the matter of fact, and that is as to the repeal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have asked one of my officials to prepare a memorandum which I shall be glad to furnish.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DISASTER.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg). Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask my hon. friend the First Minister if it is the intention of the government to officially notice the great calamity which has overtaken the city of San Francisco? Should the government feel disposed to make a substantial contribution to the sufferers, either in cash or kind, the Canadian people, I am confident, will support it in such action.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government, in common with everybody else, have learnt with the deepest concern the great calamity which has happened to this large city. So far, however, we have not yet considered it advisable to offer any contribution, either in money or otherwise, as we do not know the full extent of the calamity or whether or not the resources of the great nation to the south are adequate for the purpose.

HIGH COMMISSIONER AND MESSRS. PRESTON AND GRIFFITHS—CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the government to an order moved for by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. U. Wilson) on the 14th March last, which asked for the correspondence between the High Commissioner of Canada and Mr. Preston as well as the correspondence between Mr. Preston and Mr. Griffiths. I recently requested the Minister of the Interior, when the estimates of this department were under discussion, to consider as added to that motion, on my own account, all correspondence between the department and these gentlemen or between the department and the high commissioner in connection with the subject matter of these communications. A period of about five weeks has elapsed since that correspondence was moved for, and one would suppose that unless it be very voluminous it might have been brought down before this. Might I ask the First Minister or the Minister of the Interior to give to the matter such expedition as may be posible.

Mr. OLIVER. The correspondence is not yet ready for presentation to the House, and of course the additional request made adds very considerably to the delay in placing the return upon the table.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the return might be brought down in two parts. That called for by the former motion might be brought down and the other portion brought down separately.

Mr. OLIVER. All right.

POSTMASTERS IN PEEL COUNTY.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the Postmaster General when we may expect the return to the order I moved for on the 28th March last relative to postmasters, &c., in the county of Peel ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The papers are in course of preparation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the fact that arrangements have been made to allow members to present their respects to Prince Arthur in the other Chamber and in view of the numerous other functions which take place to-day, I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been suggested that all those who desire to be presented to His Royal Highness had better be here at four o'clock when we shall go to the Senate Chamber, where the presentation will take place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Bills, and then Supply of the departments of Justice and Marine and Fisheries.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 20, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CALAMITY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I beg with the consent of the House, to present a matter which hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, I am sure, will regard as one of urgency. Reference has already been made in the House to the disaster which has come upon one of the great cities of the neighbouring republic. I think the information which has now reached us through the public press is sufficient to give assurance that that disaster is of a very widespread character, and that there will be need of generous asistance from the liberal-minded people not only of the United States, but of other parts of the world. At all events, I am sure that this parliament, representing the people who inhabit the northern portion of this continent, will be glad to share in the opportunities of ministering to the comfort and the welfare of their afflicted brethren in the great republic to the south. I propose, therefore, at the conclusion of any observations which any other hon. member may desire to make on the subject, to present in the usual form a message from His Excellency the Governor General recommending this House to grant the sum of $100,000 as a contribution of the people of Canada to the afflicted people of San Francisco.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any hon. member of the House who would not cordially support the government in this proposal. The disaster which has overtaken the city of San Francisco is one which almost staggers our belief—one which we can hardly understand or imagine without actually seeing it. We have had substantial proofs in the past of the sympathy of the people of the United States in times of disaster to Canadian citizens. In the presence of an appalling calamity such as this, and for the purpose of rendering aid and succour to those who are in distress, the two nations are one.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. Speaker read the message as follows:

GREY.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 30th June, 1906, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 20th April, 1906.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the said Message and Further Supplementary Estimates were referred to the Committee of Supply.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege ; but I will ask the indulgence of the House for a moment or two, because it will not be very apparent at the beginning how the matter of privilege affects me. In the Toronto 'Daily Star' of Wednesday last, there appears a report of the parliamentary proceedings, which, I may say, deals very nicely with the proceedings of parliament throughout, and I take no exception personally to the item which I am about to read. That item is as follows :

The others, excepting Bennett, of East Simcoe, were seen, not heard. Bennett constituted himself chief inquisitor on the Railway Bill for the evening sitting. Bennett was full of interrogation, but he failed to embarrass the Hon. Mr. Emmerson a little bit. He, however, seemed more interested in striving to impress his importance upon the members of his own side. He moved an armful of papers down to a front row. This was Bennett's chance. He was on his feet continually. His questions may have been pert and pregnant with sharp criticism, but he has two serious defects. He lacks voice and personality. Bennett has a feather-weight voice and a school-boy delivery. There is absolutely no eloquence in the man. He chatters along in a dull monotone, and his points—if he has any, and I understand he has some—are lost in the monotony of his utterance. But for a queer habit of pausing and peering over his glasses, Bennett is entirely wooden when he is on his feet. Bennett is ambitious, but he will never rise in the party. He is a faithful committeeman and never misses a caucus. He always has much to say, but simply cannot impress himself upon either the rank and file or his leaders.

So much for William H. Bennett, of the East Riding of Simcoe.

That is a very good sermon : I do not object to a word of it ; I believe it all applies, and I think I know very well the gentleman it was intended for. As a matter of fact, the moment my attention was directed to it, I was told for whom it was intended. It is all right as a sermon ; it is only the text that is wrong. I do not want to be robbed of any of my glory. I want it to be understood that every word of that article applies to the member for South Simcoe, and not to the member for East Simcoe. I have had laurels from the same source before, and I look for them again. I hope it will continue in the future as it has been in the past.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 68) further to amend the Canada Evidence Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

On section 1,

1. Section 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893, is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :

4. Every person charged with an offence, and, except as hereinafter provided, the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person: provided, however, that no husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during their marriage, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during their marriage.

2. The failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of such person, to testify, shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge or by counsel for the prosecution in addressing the jury.

3. The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence against any of the sections of the Criminal Code, 1892, mentioned in schedule 'C' to this Act, may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

4. Nothing in this Act shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I beg to move that the words 'in addressing the jury' be omitted from subsection 2.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Do I understand the hon. minister proposes to take away the privilege, which has been granted the accused person, of giving evidence in his own behalf and of preventing counsel from referring to his failure to give such evidence ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute at present provides that no comments shall be made in addressing the jury. This is to prevent any being made whether in adressing the jury or otherwise.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the Bill as introduced, provision was made that no comments should be allowed, in addressing the jury, on the failure of the prisoner to testify. But one can easily imagine that it would be possible for counsel to comment on this at other times, and the amendment is to prevent any such comments being made at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In this respect the statute now is exactly as it is in Great Britain. There was, however, a subject mentioned when the Bill was in committee before. The amendment takes a step which seems to me a little retrograde. The English statute is very much the same as the one now proposed, but there is this to be observed. In 1891 we took a step in advance when we enacted legislation which permits the husband or wife to be called for the prosecution but does not make either a compellable witness. We are now preventing either from giving evidence at all. Each one ceases to be a competent witness against the other for the prosecution. We are therefore going back practically to what the English legislation of 1898 enacted. We were in advance of English legislation when we passed the Act of 1891, and I am not quite convinced that there is any good reason for our going back. I gave an illustration to my hon. friend when the Bill was before the committee the other day, but I think I can give a better illustration now. Suppose for example that the husband were guilty of cruelty to his children. Under the proposed amendment, the wife would not be even a competent witness for the prosecution, although in all probability she would be, the only witness available to give evidence of the offence. It may be however that the point I am making is covered by some other provision of the Criminal Code to which my attention has not been directed. The illustration which I gave the minister the other day was, as he truly remarked, a case which would very seldom occur, but the one I am now giving might very often be expected, in a great country like this, in the ordinary operations of the criminal law. Are we wise in going back in that respect and providing that the wife can not be a competent witness for the prosecution in such a case. Might I also ask whether the practical operation of the statute, as we have had it since 1891, has been found to result in any injustice or difficulty. Is there any good reason, from our experience of fifteen years of the practical operation of the statute of 1891, to justify our going back to the English legislation of 1898 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The amendment is made absolutely necessary because of a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court in the case of the Queen and Gosselin, where it was held that either the husband or wife was a compellable witness, the one against the other. That was a case of murder. If that judgment be pushed to its logical conclusion, the result would be that not only would the husband or wife be a compellable witness, the one against the other, but it would be possible for the Crown to take the prisoner out of the dock, put him in the witness box and examine him with respect to matters connected with the offence. In consequence of that judgment, this amendment is necessary. The amendment makes the husband and wife competent witnesses for the defence, and I do not think it would be proper to go further. If the relations between the husband and the wife be good and proper, it would be an act of atrocious cruelty to put the one or the other in the box to testify in a case in which the life of the accused might be involved. On the other hand, if the relations be improper, we should not place at the disposal of the one or the other such an instrument of attack.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite concur in that view. It was because of such reasons that for hundreds of years in Great Britain no party who had an interest however slight or indirect was allowed to give evidence. If in the most indirect way a man had an interest even to the extent of one penny, in any civil controversy, he was not allowed to give evidence. We departed from that long ago, and adopted another principle, which is, that, whether a man is interested or not, he should be allowed to testify, and it should be for the jury, or the judge as the case may be, to estimate the extent to which his evidence might be affected by that interest. Now, that is a reasonable basis upon which to rest the law of evidence. It seems to me that when you say that except in certain specified instances a husband or wife shall not be even a competent witness the one against the other, you are making an arbitrary distinction, which, if carried to its logical conclusion would send us to the old principles of the common law. I am not disposed to controvert what the Minister of Justice has said as to husband or wife being a compellable witness against the other. But the decision in the case of the King vs. Gosselin does not touch upon what I have said. Of course, I have not seen the case, but I am taking it from what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has said. The decision in that case enabled the prosecution to require the husband or wife to give evidence against the other. I concede that we should take away the power of the prosecution to compel the husband or wife to give evidence one against the other, but I submit that we should leave each a competent—not a compellable—witness against the other. You may say that if the husband and wife are on good terms there would be cruelty in this, and, if not, there would be an interest. But, if they are on good terms, the husband or the wife, under my proposal, is not obliged to give evidence. If they are not on good terms, it is for the judge or jury, after argument by counsel, to weigh what effect must be given to the circumstance that the husband and wife are not on good terms. I seek to retain in the law the principle that has been recognized by the parliament of this country since 1891. I state the matter as it strikes me. It seems to me that there is greater danger of a failure of justice if we amend the law in the direction pointed out by the Minister of Justice than if we simply amend the law so as to make the husband or wife a competent but not a compellable witness.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is of course, aware that the English Act makes the husband or wife a competent witness for the defence only.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So the principle we are adopting is the principle of the Engdlish law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am certain that it can be fairly said that those who introduced the amendment into this Act on which this decision in the case of the King vs. Gosselin is founded never contemplated a possible construction of the Act such as was put upon it by the Supreme Court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I dare say. I recognize the fact that the English statute does not permit the husband or the wife to give evidence the one against the other. But I do not know that we are necessarily controlled by that. In 1891 we took a step in advance. The English parliament, in 1898, followed that step to a certain extent. We now, in 1906, are going back to the effect of the English statute of 1898. And I must confess that, for my part, I do not think we ought to go quite that far.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to suggest that we amend subsection 3 of section 4 so as to make it read :

Subject to the provisions of subsection 1 of this Act, the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence against any of the sections of the Criminal Code, 1892, mentioned in schedule 'C' to this Act, shall be a competent and also a compellable witness for the prosecution without the consent of the person charged.

This would make them compellable in the case of examination under schedule (c).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is for uniformity.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would suggest to the Minister of Justice consideration of the question whether this Bill should not be further amended by the introduction of a clause similar to that in the English Act which would prevent any cross-examination of the accused on the witness stand as to whether he has previously been convicted of an offence. This provision is as follows :

A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character, unless—

(1) the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged ; or

(ii) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution ; or

(iii) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence.

I submit that the true theory, the true principle of adjudication as to the guilt or innocence of any accused person should be that that guilt or innocence should be determined solely by the evidence as to whether he is connected with the particular crime with which he is charged, that the mind of the judge or jury should not be influenced in any way by evidence of previous acts committed by the accused, for which he might have repented or for which there might have been some explanation, and which is given in evidence under conditions where the mind of the court would be injuriously affected in determining the one question submitted for their consideration, namely guilt or innocence in regard to that particular crime. In the United States, I think, the rule which I submit is the fair one and which I would like the Minister of Justice to consider, is the same as in England and it seems to me that in dealing with this whole question it would be wise for the minister to also look into the question as to whether or not all such evidence as now can be received and as is submitted by prosecutors generally as to the character of an accused person should only be received in evidence and only considered after the guilt of the person charged with the offence has been determined. We have no system under our jurisprudence in this country whereby it is open to a judge, in determining a sentence to be imposed, to inquire by legal evidence into the previous record of a criminal. This principle obtains in many of the United States, particularly I know in Massachusetts, and I submit it would be fair and proper to make an amendment to this Bill which would take away from the Crown the right to cross-examine as to character, except under the conditions provided in the English Act, and to institute a system of procedure by which evidence of that character can be heard after the guilt of the party accused had been determined. There is also another question which I would like to submit for his consideration, that is a question which is liable to arise at any time in the courts, which has occurred in my own practice, as to the right of the Crown to cross-examine an accused person who is giving evidence as to whether or not he had made certain statements which had previously been offered in evidence on behalf of the Crown which had been excluded by the court on account of the fact that this statement or confession had been made not in a voluntary way. A learned judge in Nova Scotia in a case of that kind ruled under the law as it stands to-day that it was not open to the Crown to cross-examine an accused person as to whether or not he had made statements to an officer or person in authority. It seems to me that the true rule in regard to that would be to permit the cross-examination of an accused person, to ascertain whether or not such statements had been made, giving the prisoner the full power to explain if they were not made or as to the circumstances under which they were made.

Mr. STOCKTON. They might not be relevant to the charge ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. They must necessarily be relevant. In the case I was referring to, the case in which the Crown proposed to give evidence of statements made in reference to the particular crime with which the prisoner is charged but which had been excluded by the court by reason of the fact that they had not been made in a voluntary way.

Mr. FOWLER. Or the Crown cross-examined.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The case was where the Crown would proceed to cross-examine an accused person giving evidence in his own behalf as to whether or not he had made a statement offered in evidence by the prosecution and excluded. It is a nice question as to what is the proper rule to follow. I think there is a clause in the English Act dealing with the question and I would like to submit it to the minister with a view to offering some solution as to what is the proper rule to follow. As I say it was ruled that as such a confession was not receivable in evidence on account of not being voluntary it was not open to the court by cross-examination to endeavour to get those facts in evidence. It was urged, and this is a fact which should be considered in determining this matter, that the policy which underlay the legal principle in the exclusion of confessions at common law, was that these statements made by an accused person should not be received in evidence on account of the fact that the mouth of the accused was closed, but as that principle has been done away with and as it is now competent for the accused to testify, the justification for the exclusion of that class of evidence is also done away with, and it is now open to the accused person to explain the circumstances under which the alleged statement was or was not made. These are questions which have arisen in regard to the interpretation of our Evidence Act and I submit to the Minister of Justice that they should be considered in connection with this Bill.

There is another matter which might not seem to be of so much importance but which is also dealt with particularly in the English Act; that is that an accused person who proceeds to give evidence on his own behalf without going into an elaborate defence by calling other witnesses, does not disentitle his counsel from the right to reply in closing to the jury which he would have if he had not put the prisoner on the stand on his own behalf.

Mr. FOWLER. He has not that now, if the Attorney General or Solicitor General appears.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. That depends of course to some degree on the procedure in the particular province. It may be a matter of procedure which is not germane, although I think it is, to the jurisdiction of this parliament. It does seem to me that these are matters of serious importance and I would like to submit to the Minister of Justice the wisdom of considering them in connection with his Act.

Mr. FOWLER. I think so far as the right of reply is concerned that is decided by the Code, where the Attorney General or Solicitor General appears, or any one acting on behalf of the Attorney General or Solicitor General, they have the right to reply no matter whether the defence called a witness or not. So far as the amendment of my learned friend is concerned, it seems to me that would be a very unfair thing indeed. Here is the so-called confession excluded by the court and then he would seek to get the advantage of that by having it brought before the jury under cross-examination. If it is improper to have the confession before the jury as evidence why allow it to be put in by cross-examination? The thing would appear to be absurd.

The only objection I have to this Bill is that I do not quite understand why a distinction should be made in different classes of cases, and that a husband or wife should be compellable in one case and not in another. My own opinion is that in no case should the husband or wife be compellable, and that the gravity of the offence should make no difference. The question is not one of the gravity of the offence but of the guilt or innocence of the accused and therefore it seems to me that all these different offences, no matter how grave or light, should stand on the same basis, and that in no case should the husband or wife be compellable to give evidence.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Dealing with the suggestions of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) I would like to say the intention of this Act is to make the witness competent when he goes into the witness box, that he should then become subject to all the same conditions as are applicable to any other witness. I can see no reason why, because a man happens to be accused and takes advantage of the Act to go into the box to testify in his own behalf, he should be exempt from cross-examination in respect to his previous character. Why should he be placed in a more favourable position than any other witness? The witness ought to be put in the same position as any other witness if he chooses to exercise the privilege given to him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I must confess that I do not quite appreciate the effect of section three up to this time. If it is intended to make the husband or wife a compellable witness in a very long series of offences

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, that was the old law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was the old law. I would like to see some intelligible basis upon which we are to amend this law if it is to be amended at all. I will take one of the twenty illustrations I could have chosen from schedule (c). If the husband fails to provide necessaries for his wife or children the wife is not only a competent but compellable witness. If, instead of doing that, he is guilty of the most atrocious cruelty to his wife or children the wife is not even a competent witness much less a compellable witness. That does not seem to be based upon any principle which would appeal to our sense of the justice or fitness of things.

Mr. STOCKTON. I understand the Minister of Justice intends that she shall be a competent witness but not a compellable witness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, no, that is not the case.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. For the defence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am using the word 'competent' in reference to the prosecution. She may be a competent witness in all cases for the defence as I understand the effect of the statute. The effect of the legislation proposed by the Minister of Justice is this—I will take one illustration out of many that I might take from schedule (c): If a husband fails to provide the necessaries for his wife or family the wife is not only a competent but a compellable witness for the prosecution. If the husband is guilty of the most unheard of cruelty to his children his wife is neither a compellable nor competent witness against her husband. I cannot understand the principle upon which you make that distinction.

Mr. FOWLER. There should be no distinction at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is that distinction in the law as proposed by the Minister of Justice. In section 174 and the other sections enumerated in schedule (c) there is a long series of offences in respect to which the wife is not only competent but compellable as a witness for the prosecution. Outside of these offences the wife is neither competent nor compellable.

Mr. STOCKTON. I understand you want to go a step further and remove the limitation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not say that the wife should be compellable but I am suggesting that the wife and husband should be competent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As the law will be if this amendment is adopted, the wife or husband will be competent for the defence exclusively, not compellable for the defence, but competent. The suggestion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, as I understand it is, that the wife or husband should be made competent not only for the defence but competent absolutely for the prosecution and for the defence. That is the difference between us in respect to that particular point. Then, my hon. friend goes on to draw attention to the fact that under the law as we would have it if this amendment is adopted the wife or husband will be competent for the defence but that in respect to a certain number of cases which are enumerated here and referred to as part of schedule (c) in the Criminal Code, they are competent witnesses for the prosecution or for the defence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And compellable.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And compellable—and that as a result of that a husband or wife might be obliged to go into the box and give evidence, for instance, in support of the prosecution, in the case of the abandonment of a child, refusing to provide necessaries, &c., but that if the father or mother is guilty of a gross act of cruelty, for instance, by striking a child with a weapon or with the fist, the husband or wife shall not be competent. My hon. friend says that there is no reason for that distinction. My hon. friend is perfectly well aware that the lack of logic of a great number of provisions of our rough and ready Criminal Code is well known to those who practice in the criminal courts. There is no logic in the Criminal Code at all. It is simply a series of enactments that have been prepared at different times for the purpose of providing for cases as they have arisen. But, in so far as the logic of this distinction is concerned it is that in all these cases where, as the result of the relations between parent and child or husband and wife, cruelty occurs such as the abandonment of a child, or when an improper act is committed on the part of the husband, these particular relations are relations which involve, almost of necessity, the absence of witnesses, or if there is a witness that witness, of necessity, will only be in one case or the other the husband or the wife and it is because of that fact that in the cases mentioned in schedule (c) where it is presumed there are no other witnesses available the husband and wife are made compellable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would that not apply to a case of assault? Would not that reasoning apply to what I have mentioned?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It might or it might not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might in some cases.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It might.

M. R. L. BORDEN. In some of them. In a good many of them there might be other evidence.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is possible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is just as likely to be a failure of justice for lack of other evidence in a case of cruelty to a child as in the case of certain other offences which are enumerated in schedule (c). Therefore, it does not seem to be based on that principle. I would not be disposed to go quite as far as the Minister of Justice in saying that the Criminal Code is absolutely illogical. I think the endeavour at least has been to base the provisions of the Criminal Code upon some principle. In so far as the present amendment is concerned it should be based upon some intelligible or reasonable principle and the principle to which I have referred is an intelligible and not unreasonable principle, namely, that you should not make the wife a compellable witness against her husband or the husband a compellable witness against the wife, but you should render the husband or wife competent witnesses for the prosecution as well as for the defence not only in respect to the cases enumerated in schedule (c) but in respect to all criminal offences. That is a plain principle and it seems a reasonable principle and a principle which is likely to lead to a better administration of justice than the provision which is sought to be substituted for that now in force.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The principle for which my hon. friend contends is absolutely in advance of anything that is to be found in any country where the English criminal law is adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We went in advance of it in 1891.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We went unwittingly in advance of it in 1891. I am quite satisfied that there was not a man in this House at that time who took any part in the consideration of that legislation who ever had in his mind the idea that the husband or wife should be compelled to go into the witness box and do that which the wife was obliged to do in the case of the Queen vs. Gosselin in a murder case ; that is to give evidence against her husband.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not referring to that case. I mean that we went in advance by providing that a person charged with a criminal offence could give evidence in his own behalf. We went in advance of British legislation in that by seven years. I am not afraid to go in advance of British legislation if you can show me any principle upon which to proceed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would be quite willing to march on myself if I were sure that we were going in the right direction. This Bill is intended to carry out the legislation of 1891 except in so far as the statute has been found to contain a very unnecessary hardship such as we found as a result of the case of the Queen vs. Gosselin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You not only do away with the effect of that decision by providing that the husband or wife shall not be compellable witnesses, but you go further and say that they shall not be competent. I still fail to see any intelligible principle which will justify us in passing such a provision.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Has any reason been given why the Act should be extended further than to put the law in the same position as we thought it was before the Supreme Court decided that case ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The intention is to endeavour to make our law conform to the law as it is in England, and in doing that I think we are moving in the right direction.

Mr. CLARKE. In glancing over the exceptions in schedule (c) they do not seem to include the case of a common assault by the husband on the wife. In a case of that sort the wife ought certainly be competent to give evidence against her husband. Under the common law, I do not understand that even in such a case the wife could give evidence against her husband. One of the first statutes enabling the wife to testify was in the case of assault by the husband but it does not seem to me as if that could be done under this amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under what clause of the Criminal Code is the wife enabled to be a witness in the case of assault by the husband?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Evidence Act without this amendment would permit it.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not remember the exact clause, but I do know that originally there was an express provision for that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Except it is under the Act we are amending, I do not think the husband or wife would be competent even in a case of assault, except at common law.

Mr. CLARKE. In a case of common assault?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. One of the very first provisions of the Evidence Act was to extend the right of the wife to protection by giving evidence in a case which she herself brings for assault.

Mr. FOWLER. As a matter of fact they do not give evidence ; if you look at the police court records of any city you will find that such is the case.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not asking as to whether they can or not; I am asking as to whether there is a provision in the law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In reference to the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke), I suppose it was not necessary so to provide in the Criminal Code because under the Evidence Act the husband could give evidence against the wife or the wife against the husband; but if you alter the Evidence Act so as to render the wife incompetent in any case to give evidence against her husband, then you bring about the exact result which was pointed out by the member for Essex (Mr. Clarke).

On section 2,

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. With regard to the right to cross-examine the accused party as to previous conviction did I understand the Minister of Justice to say that he thought it would be unwise to make such an amendment, or did he merely say that the provision as to the competency of a witness necessarily involved the right to cross-examination along these lines as well as with regard to an alleged conviction.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If a witness is put in the box for the purpose of giving evidence and goes there of his own accord, he must take all the consequences which may result.

Mr. STOCKTON. But not when he is compelled to go into the box?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not when compelled; that would be a different story. When he goes into the box voluntarily he should have no privileges which other witnesses do not enjoy. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Clarke) asked me with respect to the case of assault, and I asked him for the provision in the Criminal Code which made the wife or the husband competent the case of common assault. There is no provision in the Code with respect to that, but the law remains the same as it was heretofore in subsection 4 which provides for the case of witnesses who give evidence under the common law; the case comes under the common law.

Mr. CLARKE. If it comes under the common law that answers my objection. I do not understand that under the common law the wife could give evidence against her husband in any case.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In case of an assault.

Mr. CLARKE. Under the old Act the wife was competent in any case as a witness against her husband, if she chose. If you look back to the compilation of the criminal laws prior to the Code, I am satisfied from recollection you will find there is an express provision that if the wife is assaulted she is a competent witness. Of course when the Criminal Code was brought in there was no necessity for that express provision, because the wife was competent in every case. It was not expected at that time that the principle went as far as the courts interpreted it in the Gosselin case. I always understood that under the Evidence Act a wife was competent either for the prosecution or for the defence, and therefore there was no occasion for an express provision in case of assault. If my interpretation is right, then under this amendment a man can beat his wife black and blue and she cannot give evidence against him to prove it. It ought to be made plain that provision is made for such a case. If it is, there is no objection to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is aware that the Evidence Act was enacted long after the Criminal Code, and I remember that many years ago, when I began at the bar, the competence of a wife or husband to give evidence in cases of assault was never doubted.

Bill reported.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 83) respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. GALLIHER. In British Columbia there are cases in which the travelling expenses of county court judges exceed the maximum amount fixed here. Do I understand that the intention is to confine judges to a certain specified amount for travelling expenses in each year ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The object of this amendment is to remove the limits fixed by the statute of last session with respect to travelling allowances. That statute provided that each judge should be entitled to $6 a day, in addition to his moving expenses, but in the case of county court judges there was a limit fixed of $200 which was not to be exceeded ; so that one judge whose actual expenses might exceed that amount would not get more than $200, whereas the judge who spent less would get his actual travelling expenses.

Mr. MONK. Under the wording of this section, a judge attending in Montreal or Quebec, for the sittings of the court of review, in making this declaration as to his travelling expenses, is obliged to go practically to his own colleague, the Chief Justice, and get him to certify his account. I presume that these judges are called to Montreal or Quebec upon a letter of the Chief Justice. Would not that letter be sufficient, without requiring that their expenses should be certified by the Chief Justice ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This provision, as my hon. friend is aware, is not new at all. It has been on the statute-book for several years. My hon. friend will remember that it was alleged that certain judges charged for expenses for the total number of days in the year, though they were actually residing at home in the country. This is merely to provide that when a judge is summoned from a country district to take the court of review at Quebec or Montreal, he is to produce the letter of the Chief Justice summoning him to attend that court, and also the certificate of the Chief Justice that he has attended for a certain number of days. This provision has been in the statute for several years, but I am quite willing to consider whether or not it should be amended. No complaint has been made by any of the judges that it imposes undue hardship upon them. If a judge has been summoned to attend a court, I do not see why the Chief Justice who summoned him should not say: 'He attended at my request, and attended for so many days.'

Mr. MONK. I think there is a little distinction. Of course, this legislation is not very old, because it was introduced after I came to this House. My hon friend knows that in the province of Quebec certain judges, who were named for other districts, sat in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, and gave as a reason that their services were required in these cities, particularly in Montreal where there is always more work than the judges can get through with. But this is the case of judges coming to Montreal for specific purposes—not called in to assist other judges but to sit in the court of review. When making a claim for the ordinary allowance, they not only had to forward to the Justice Department a letter summoning them to Quebec or Montreal but in addition a certificate by the Chief Justice that their services were necessary. Some of the judges find that rather hard and it is not exacted in the case of ordinary civil servants.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should the judge of a district court in the province of Ontario get an extra allowance?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not very familiar with their duties, but they have a much larger area to cover than the county court judges. Some of my hon. friends from Ontario would be able to give a fuller explanation.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked one of them in particular and he did not know that there were any district judges in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. These judges have to travel through the newer districts of the country and have to cover large areas where the roads are bad and the expenses very great. They have always hitherto had an allowance made to them for that purpose in addition to that given other judges, but by an oversight it was left out of the present statute.

Mr. BOYCE. As representing a constituency, in which there is a large unorganized district, I can say that there is a great deal of difference between the work which has to be done in those districts by the district court judges and that allotted the county court judges in the settled portions of Ontario. The former have to travel over a large area which involves heavy expense and considerable hardship. In 1898 an allowance was made to these district court judges to cover this additional expense to which they were subject by reason of the distance they have to cover and the increased number of courts they have to preside over, but by an oversight that $500 allowance was not included in the measure passed last session. The effect of that omission was to deprive these judges of the increase which parliament intended they should have. And in consequence of that extra $500 having been taken away, the extra salary given only leaves them $100 better off than they were formerly. I might point out that their jurisdiction under chapter 109 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, is practically the same as that of a judge of the High Court, and that their expenses are so much greater that to place them upon the same basis as regards travelling expenses is simply to subject them in the exercise of their jurisdiction, to very great financial loss.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that this extra increase is entirely unnecessary. So far as my experience goes, there is scarcely a county court judge throughout the country who earns his salary. There are altogether too many of them in some counties. I believe that in Ontario some counties have three of these judges and a great many have two, a senior and a junior judge, one of which at least must have very little to do. If a county court judge is paid $3,000 a year, he is getting a pretty good salary and can afford to travel over some of these wide districts, such as are represented by my hon. friends from Parry Sound and Algoma. As far as I am concerned, I protest against the increase.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I have no hesitation in disagreeing with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Fowler). There cannot be any doubt that the judiciary at present administering the law in the districts of the northern part of Ontario are entitled to a considerable increase for travelling expenses above what the ordinary county court judges receive in counties where railway communication is perfect and there is no difficulty in a judge getting to his destination and sitting a day in court and then getting back to his home. But in districts, such as the district of Nipissing and Algoma, the conditions are entirely different, as the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) has pointed out. By reason of the Act of last session, the district court judges were deprived of the allowance they hitherto enjoyed, and consequently did not get the increase in salary which it was intended they should receive. This section therefore merely places them in the same position as that in which they would have been, but for this omission by inadvertence.

Mr. FOWLER. I may say that the Supreme Court judges also lost their travelling allowances. The Supreme Court judges of the province of New Brunswick always had an allowance of $100 travelling expenses for each circuit and as far as the Equity judge is concerned, his allowance amounted to $1,400 a year, so that by the increase of $2,000 he only gains $600 per year. These district court judges get an increase of $600 and lose their travelling allowance of $500, so that they have a net increase of $100. Well, since they took these positions at $2,900, surely they would be willing to take them at $3,000. The government can have no difficulty in filling the vacancies, but no doubt have difficulty in making a choice among the numerous applicants when a vacancy does occur. In my opinion a salary of $3,000 a year is considerably above the average income of a lawyer even in the province of Ontario, and I think it is a pretty good salary for the work which a county court judge is called upon to perform.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) has put the case very clearly. This is a question as the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says of putting the district judges back in the position in which they were before the passing of the Bill of last session under which, by inadvertence they were deprived of the increase of salary which it was intended to give them. Assuming that the district judges are a class of judges whose work is as important as that of the county judges, ought they to be placed in a worse position than the county court judges? I think it is only common fairness that this amendment should be made.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) may be familiar with the requirements and the practice of the province of New Brunswick, but certainly he is not familiar with the condition of affairs in Ontario. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the judges whose salaries are being added to by this travelling allowance of $500, practically exercise a high court jurisdiction as well as a county court and division court jurisdiction. Their duties are performed in the northern part of Ontario, and the area covered by them extends in some cases as much as a thousand miles from east to west. Their travelling expenses are very heavy, for travelling in that country is very expensive. In some cases there is no railway accommodation, and so the judges must hire conveyances or have other means of getting about from place to place to hold court. I can assure the House that the $500 provided for in this Bill is not more than sufficient to pay the bare travelling expenses of these judges. If a smaller allowance were made, these judges would be just that much short in the salaries which they honestly and faithfully earn. I think that the Bill merely remedies an error of last session and is in the right direction.

Mr. FOWLER. I guarantee that the travelling expenses of these gentlemen would not amount to half of this allowance.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOYCE. I beg pardon—

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend is very positive on this subsection. I do not know whether he is looking forward to occupying one of these positions or not. I know something of travelling, having travelled, perhaps, as much as some of these district judges, and I do not believe that these gentlemen would spend anything like this amount in travelling expenses during the year. I think the salary is quite sufficient.

Mr. INGRAM. I take advantage of this opportunity to back up the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) in what he has said about the number of county judges. In speaking on this subject, of course, I confine myself to the province of Ontario. I may say that, so far as the district judges are concerned, I think this amendment is only doing justice to these judges, and I am prepared to support it. Speaking of the county judges of the older part of the province of Ontario, I am bound to say that there are more judges than are needed. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier shakes his head. Well let me give proof of what I have said. Take the case of my own county of Elgin. We have there two judges. When the senior judge was superannuated, the junior judge came to Ottawa and saw the Minister of Justice. He told the minister that if he were appointed senior judge he would be able to perform all the duties of judge for that county, so that it would not be necessary to appoint an additional judge. This is the statement of the judge himself. Still, notwithstanding his statement, the government in their wisdom appointed a new senior judge. I wish to congratulate the government upon the selection they made of senior judge, for he is a first-class good man and fills the position well. I have no fault to find with him. But I do find fault with the number of judges, because the government are paying two judges where one would be quite enough. Of course, what I say about the junior judge could not be regarded as an attack upon a political opponent, for the judge is a Conservative like myself, and was appointed under a Conservative government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You are not a Conservative.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) would say I should call myself a Tory. Still I may point out that the chief duties performed by the junior judge are playing golf in the summer and curling in the winter. There are too many such cases in Ontario. If the county court judges are receiving less than they ought to receive I would not object to paying them more money but it ought to be accompanied with a reduction in the number. I think I have proven my case out of the mouth of the junior judge himself, and I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will not dispute the statement that was made to him, and now given by me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shook my head when my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) made the statement that there were too many county judges in the older part of Ontario. I took the liberty of dissenting from that statement because I could not but believe that if there were too many judges the new government of Ontario would soon reduce the number. We have nothing to do with fixing the number, for that is done by the local legislature.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) makes such a distinction between the new and the old government of Ontario. I do not doubt that he would readily believe that an evil of this kind would remain unredressed by the old government; and that he also believes that if there is an evil it will be redressed by the new one.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to uphold what the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) says. The government in Ontario have already inaugurated many reforms. I am satisfied that they will take the first opportunity of reducing the number of judges and so bring the opinion of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on this subject into accordance with my own.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But, until that is done, my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will not find fault with me if I side with the Ontario government against him.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that, in addition to the salaries received by these district judges there are certain fees, which bring their remuneration up to a very respectable figure. I would like to ask what fees they receive and what they amount to in the course of a year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not in a position to state what the fees amount to in any particular place. But I may be able to indicate it by stating that in a few of the large cities, like Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa, they were commuted. In Ottawa, I believe, they were commuted at $1,000 a year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For what were these fees given?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. For work in connection with the Surrogate Court. This is a system of which I am absolutely ignorant. But I understand that the practice existed in Ontario of giving the county court judges remuneration by way of fees for surrogate work. These fees they received from the litigants or from the province.

Mr. MONK. We are discussing the question of salaries for indemnities, which is always a delicate matter. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister to an omission which, I think, was made last year. This is in regard to the circuit court judges of Montreal. I hope my right hon. friend will not shake his head at the suggestion that these salaries ought to be increased proportionately. As the Minister of Justice is aware, these men are very much overworked. There are only three of them and their jurisdiction extends over a very important range of subjects. They are kept busy from one end of the year to the other.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All of them?

Mr. MONK. The three of them, oh, undoubtedly. We have not had the advantage in the province of Quebec of having an improved government such as they have had in the province of Ontario; we find their number insufficient. Seriously speaking I do not think there is any doubt whatever but they should have participated in the general increase. The position they occupy is an important one and I think figures have been sent to the Minister of Justice showing that the work they do keeps them extremely busy. The cost of living has increased in Montreal and it is impossible for a circuit court judge to live there on a salary under $4,000 a year. I believe the Council of the Bar of Montreal have had this matter under consideration quite lately and have forwarded a memorial to the Minister of Justice and I hope the Department of Justice will see its way clear to give these judges an adequate remuneration which they certainly deserve.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is aware that the jurisdiction of the circuit court judges of Montreal is not as great as that of the county court judges at Toronto, and the salary paid at Toronto to county court judges is the same as that paid to circuit court judges in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. Do they spend all of their time in the performance of their duties in Toronto?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand in Toronto their time is fully occupied in connection with their duties. Of course I understand that at St. Thomas the golf links may be exceedingly attractive, but other means may be found to restrict that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They do not get travelling expenses to the golf links.

Mr. MONK. I have always maintained that when we increase the salaries of judges we should take into consideration the cost of living in the locality where they exercise their functions. Although I do not suppose there is much difference in the cost of living in Toronto and Montreal still I think any person who takes the trouble to investigate will come to the conclusion that a judge having the jurisdiction that our circuit court judges have in Montreal cannot, in view of the greatly increased cost of living there within the past few years, live in a proper manner with the salary they are now allowed. I believe the police magistrates in Montreal, I would not be quite positive—are better paid than these judges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They get $4,000.

Mr. MONK. Under $4,000 it is impossible for a judge in Montreal to maintain the dignity of his station.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that in addition to the surrogate fees the judges in these district courts have a considerable addition to their income from revising the lists, that they act either as revising barristers or, at any rate, derive a considerable income each year from the revision of the lists. I would think that, added to the fees they get would give them nearly as much as the salary of a Supreme Court judge in one of the eastern provinces.

Mr. BOYCE. These duties under the Act do not necessarily fall on the district judges. In some of the unorganized districts there are stipendiary magistrates, and in Muskoka, Algoma, and I think in Nipissing the duty of revising the lists does not fall on the judges, a stipendiary magistrate is appointed for that purpose, and under the Act if a stipendiary magistrate is appointed then these duties are to be performed by the stipendiary magistrate, so it cannot be said in all cases that the district judges receive this. I think, in most cases the fees go to the stipendiary magistrate.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would like to ask the minister why he makes an exception in subsection 2 of this Act in regard to the province of Nova Scotia as to the judges of the Supreme Court receiving travelling allowances. There is no provision under the Provincial Act there by which a judge is compelled to reside in Halifax, and as a matter of fact there have been judges who reside in important centres outside the city of Halifax. I do not think there is any reason why the country bar in that province should be inconvenienced by reason of a penalty placed on a judge residing in other parts of the province. The courts in Nova Scotia sit in the winter time mostly and for about three or four months in the year the judges are compelled to be there. With the exception of that time the court does not require the attendance in Halifax of any particular number of judges because under the rota which has been framed there, by the judges themselves, each sits in chambers for two months. It seems to me if we have judges in that province who are residing and have resided ever since they went on the bench in other portions of the province than Halifax, the bar who reside in the counties where they do or in close proximity to them, should not be denied the advantage of approaching these judges at any season of the year as they have in the past. The effect of this Bill will be to deny them that advantage because no doubt these judges will move to Halifax if their living in the country is to be penalized in this way. I do not think there is that limitation in New Brunswick. There the court sits in Fredericton and there does not seem to be any suggestion that because a judge lives anywhere in the province other than Fredericton he should be deprived of the same emoluments that apply to judges in other provinces. It seems to me that distinction in our province is an unfair one. I am not speaking so much for the judges interested as the country bar, who should surely have the right of approaching a judge who lives in the country as they now can under our practice. This change will force us to utilize Halifax counsel at all times, and the judges who live in the country will be compelled to go to that city.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does not the statute as at present tend to operate in rather the reverse way ?

Shall not receive any travelling allowance for attending courts or chambers held at the city of Halifax.

Therefore he would be likely to hold chambers where he resides in the country. If you give him a travelling allowance he will be more likely to go to Halifax.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I understand the judges when in Halifax have received some allowance but it has been intimated that it will not be paid to them if they live in the country and therefore they go to Halifax.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say the effect of the law will be to establish the practice of holding chambers in the country where the judge resides. He is not allowed travelling expenses for going to Halifax and therefore he will hold chambers in the country where he resides.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend knows the practice. There is a rota of judges under which each judge alternately takes his turn at holding chambers in the city and I do not suppose they would agree to new rules.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These rules are entirely under the control of the judges themselves, who can amend them and provide that a judge may hold chambers in the country at the place where he resides.

Mr. FOWLER. There is another matter in connection with these allowances to the district judges.

In the province of New Brunswick county judges, outside of the judge of the county of St. John, have more than one county under their jurisdiction, and therefore they had a circuit allowance for each court held in the county in which they did not reside. They had no allowance for the county in which they resided but for the county in which they did not reside they had the usual circuit allowance. The allowances to these county judges were cut off when the salaries were raised. What is fair to one should be fair to the other. I do not think this increase should be given as a matter of fact. I do not think these district judges should get this increase. I think there is less reason for their getting it in the province of Ontario than there is in the province of New Brunswick, because it is a fact that the county judges in the province of Ontario have their salaries increased by reason of the fees they receive for performing duties outside of their duties as county court judges. In the province of New Brunswick the county court judges simply have their straight salaries of $3,000 a year. Some county court judges in the province of Ontario have salaries, I understand, by reason of these fees, equal to the salary of a High or Supreme Court judge. But, as I understand, it is different in the case of our county judges. If you think as a matter of justice and necessity that the district judges should get this increase be fair to the judges of New Brunswick and give these county judges their travelling allowances as they had them before. They get now only $6 a day. These district judges will get their allowances and the $6 a day that they get at the present time, will they not ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They get $500 additional and then the $6 a day.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that makes it all the $6 a day also ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, that is according to the old provision of the Act.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that makes it all the worse ; I do not think this extra salary should be given.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Judging from the remarks of the gentleman from New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler) I think it can safely be said that he must be looking for a post in New Brunswick to which this increased fee is to be attached. The districts that are covered by these district judges in the province of Ontario are larger than the whole province of New Brunswick put together. You could lose two or three New Brunswicks in the Algoma district alone. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) knows nothing about this matter because if he did he would not make the observations he has made in respect to the expense of travelling in that country. The expenses allowed under this Bill to these district judges will be all required by them in the way of actual disbursements in attending their courts in that district. Regarding the fees or other emoluments to which my hon. friend has referred, if they do receive any, none are received from this government. Whatever surrogate fees are received by them are received from the provincial government. The fees which they receive for the revision of the voters lists are received from the municipalities, but, as has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman for Algoma (Mr. Boyce), these voters' lists are not as a rule revised by the district judges but by the stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) who has just spoken is forgetful of the fact that the best parcels are always put into the smallest bundles and that it is the quality of New Brunswick that counts and not the quantity. It seems that these judges are still to receive the travelling expenses.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was in error as to that. If my hon. friend will look at the section he will find that it reads :

> There shall be paid to the judges for travelling allowances the sums following, that is to say :
> (a) To each judge of a Superior Court, each local judge in Admiralty of the Exchequer Court and each judge of a county court, except as herein otherwise provided, in addition to his moving or transportation expenses, the sum of six dollars for each day.

In addition to that we make special provision for the district judges.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice what interpretation he puts on subsection 3 as to the term 'county town of the county or union of counties,' does that mean that the judge for a district composed of two counties shall not receive travelling allowance if he officiates in a county in his district other than that in which he resides or has it some other meaning ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the county town or the town of the union of counties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I confess that I understand the objection which my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) raised but I do not understand the answer to it. What is the county town of a union of counties ? I do not understand that there is any town in Nova Scotia that answers that description.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In Ontario particularly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is nothing of the kind in Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia a judge is appointed for two or three counties. For instance, take Digby, Annapolis and Yarmouth ; the county of Digby has a county town—in fact it has two—the county of Yarmouth has a county town, and the county of Annapolis has a county town, but there is no town which answers to the description of a county town for these three counties and there might be the difficulty which my hon. friend from Pictou has referred to in so far as this Act would have application to the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The union to which reference is made here will be found in the province of Ontario where there are municipal unions of several counties and where there is for each of these unions a county town.

Mr. COCHRANE. For Northumberland and Durham the county town is Cobourg.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you leave the travelling expenses to the Governor in Council in the case of the Yukon Territory ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Because it is practically impossible to make any provision in respect to the Yukon Territory. They have very little travelling there. I think that altogether during last year the travelling expenses amounted to $200 or $300. We have thought it convenient to do it in that way and I can see no good reason why we should not exercise our judgment in respect to a particular case which arises. The amount of travelling there is practically nil.

On section 2,

For the purpose of authorizing and ratifying the payments heretofore made for travelling allowances to judges of the county courts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, this Act shall be deemed to have come into force on the twentieth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and five, and shall be deemed to be sufficient indemnity for all payments made to those judges under any order in council passed after that date.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is too indemnify myself practically. After having discovered how the Act of last session operated in respect to Manitoba and British Columbia where judges are expected to travel very great distances and seeing that one of them, at the end of one trip through his district had exhausted the total amount that I, under the law was permitted to allow him, I had to ask my colleagues to pass an order in council authorizing us to make provision in respect to these judges in Manitoba and British Columbia who were placed in this exceptional position so that they might be indemnified to the extent of their actual out of pocket.

Mr. FOWLER. That only relates to what you have already done.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What about the future ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. For the future the Act applies—$6 per day.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if it is a fact that under the legislation passed last session the senior county court judges in such cities as Halifax, Sydney, St. John and Toronto receive as salary $3,500 per annum while the senior county court judge in the city of Winnipeg only receives $3,000 per annum ? I should think that in a growing populous city like Winnipeg where the duties of a judge are much more onerous than in some of the other places I have named, the salaries of the judges should at least be equal to the salary received by the senior county court judges in these other places.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have had it on the statute-book for years that the senior county court judges of Toronto the judge of the county court of Halifax, the judge of the county court of the county and city of St. John, N.B., and the judge of the county court of Queen's county, P.E.I., should receive $3,500.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It may be a time honoured custom, but does not the Minister of Justice think it is an unjust discrimination against the senior judge of such a city as Winnipeg ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend insists on having my personal opinion I would be disposed to say that in so far as the judges of the province of Manitoba are concerned their case for an increase is a very deserving one ; I am now expressing my personal opinion.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I understand the judges of the superior courts may retire on full pay at the age of 70 years, and that a county court judge cannot retire under similar conditions until he is 75. Is it because of the superior mental qualifications of a county court judge that he is retained five years longer ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. County court judges have always been dealt with exceptionally with respect to the retiring allowance. I do not know there is any reason at the present time to change the legislation in that regard.

Mr. BOYCE. Will this apply to the travelling allowances last year of the district judges ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. It is intended to make it retroactive with respect to the county court judges of British Columbia and Manitoba, whose cases were in my opinion of exceptional hardship. With respect to the county court judges in the other provinces and with respect to the district judges of Ontario, the Act will be applicable from the date of its sanction.

Mr. FOWLER. Last year these district judges got travelling expenses and $6 a day ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They got travelling expenses and $6 a day up to $200.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT.—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved second reading of Bill (No. 97) to amend Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

Mr. GILBERT H. McINTYRE (South Perth). The subject of this Bill does not call for any lengthy remarks, but there is a point of view to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice. On the introduction of this Bill the Minister of Justice stated that it was due to an oversight on his part that provision had not been made when the Bill passed last session, for an allowance to members of the House who were absent owing to illness. I have no doubt that was the case, and had this provision been inserted in the Bill last session no doubt it would have been carried in the ordinary course. But that oversight may not have been considered by some as an actual oversight; the omission may possibly have been considered as intentional just as the dropping of the mileage allowance to members was intentional. I am not prepared to say whether that was the case or not, but I can see a line of argument under which it may reasonably be thought so. Under the old arrangement this allowance was made to members who were sick at Ottawa during the session, and it appeared to be reasonable when you consider that the indemnity at that time was not specially large; that indeed it was considered by many members to be entirely too small. It would not be unreasonable to suppose that when the indemnity was increased it was not considered any longer necessary to make this allowance in case of illness. Now, however, the Minister of Justice has introduced this Bill which again gives an allowance for illness. Whether or not it is the intention of the government to further amend the Act and reduce the indemnity to members, I do not know. I personally wish the government would do so, but I do not know what the attitude of the government may be. In saying this I am taking my share of the responsibility for the action taken by parliament last year in increasing the indemnity. I may say that I was not aware until I was actually in the election contest what indemnity a member of parliament got, but like many others I realize that in entering public life and coming to this House, great loss is entailed by members of parliament, and indeed in many cases financial ruin. After my first year's experience here, after indeed receiving the $2,500 instead of the previous indemnity of $1,500, I found myself as possibly many others have found themselves, worse off than I would have been had I not entered political life. When the indemnity question was being discussed among us I listened with a good deal of interest to the various arguments used and taking the general feeling throughout the House, it did seem to me that the old indemnity was not sufficient. It is not an easy matter to fix the exact amount of the indemnity which a member of parliament should be paid. With 215 members coming to this House under very different circumstances, making very different sacrifices to come here living under great expense and different amounts in different cases; it is not at all easy to estimate the exact sum that would be right. We realize that at the very best it must only be an approximation, and it was evident that all the House could do in fixing a sum would be to get an approximate sum. When it decided that this approximate sum should be $2,500 it did not mean that $2,500 must necessarily be the exact sum—$2,400 or $2,300, or $2,250 might equally have been chosen. It must be remembered that the amount of the old indemnity was variable according to the mileage payment that came attached to the $1,500. However, the amount having been placed at $2,500 the mileage was dropped and there was also this unintentional, let us say, dropping of the allowance for illness. The Bill in that form passed virtually with the entire consent of this House. It was a government measure for which the government naturally had to assume some responsibility, but not the ordinary responsibility which the government assumes in initiating legislation; the responsibility in this case being endorsed by the whole House. If that legislation of last year had received the actual sanction of the people of the country, it would have been well. But we have returned to our constituents in the interim. Many of the members of this House do report that there is no criticism of that Bill; I must report for my part that I find it otherwise. This is not in itself a question that involves a very great principle, because the principle of the payment of members is acknowledged, and so it devolves itself into a question of judgment as to what the amount of that payment should be. I find that it is necessary always to keep in touch with the people of the constituency which one represents.

I find that in my own riding the feeling is very strongly adverse to the change made last session. It is possible that in many cases there is not due and sufficient consideration given to the expenses attending the position of a member of parliament or to the changes that were made, in the cases of many, in connection with mileage or other allowances; but we have to recognize the fact that that feeling does exist. If the principle were really an important one, which you felt you must either insist upon or withdraw, one's course might be clear; but it is so evidently merely a matter of judgment, and that judgment touches a salary pertaining to oneself, that one should hesitate very much before insisting that one's own judgment should be taken. As a representative, then, of a riding which is strongly adverse to the change made last session, I hope the government will see its way clear to further amend the Act by modifying the indemnity clauses. I have not taken any previous opportunity to express that opinion on the floor of the House. Others have done so. Others have introduced Bills for that purpose. If those Bills were introduced from correct and proper motives, and without the intention of placing members on record or establishing a sort of political black-list on the question, as has been announced it would have been well; but in this case I think it entirely fair that the government should take the opinion of the House in some form —not perhaps by an actual vote—so that they themselves might act, instead of leaving the initiative to be taken by a private member, whose action I fear will be attributed to a desire to make political capital at the expense of other members of this House. That is a position I would not take, and it is only in obedience to what I consider a mandate from the constituents whom I represent that I speak at this time in this way. This feeling, like many other feelings expressed in a country riding, is of course of a mixed nature, and it strikes more strongly at some features of the Act than at others. Some of that feeling springs, I believe, from direct political antagonism; in other cases it springs from motives that are not at all creditable; but I realize also that a large proportion of the best people of the riding manifest it strongly. These are the people whom I am proud to represent, and whose feelings in a matter of this kind I must defer to, I therefore hope that before this Bill passes its second reading, we may have an expression of willingness on the part of the government to modify the provisions of the Act of last session.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, since this matter has come up in the way it has, I think we must all admit that there has been some opposition to the Act by which the indemnity of the members has been increased. We have all had evidences of that to a greater or less extent in our constituencies, and have seen it expressed by the newspapers of the country; but notwithstanding the opposition, I believe the indemnity has not been placed at too high a figure. I believe the opposition to it has been mainly due to the fact that the indemnity was increased by our own act; but the fact remains that there is no one else by whom that could be or ought to be done, or by whom salaries must be regulated. I believe we have the same right to regulate our salaries properly as we have the right to regulate the salaries of any other persons whose salaries we do regulate. I believe we have a right to be just as liberal—not more liberal—as we are in other cases. I believe we have a right to be just as fair and honest to ourselves as we are to others. We have a great country to be developed—

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether this discussion is in order just now, seeing that there are two Bills on the paper on which this discussion might properly take place? As this Bill makes no reference to the indemnity of members, this discussion is out of place. A good many members wish to speak on the question, and I think it would be better that all the speaking on it should be done at the same time.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that a general discussion on the indemnity question is hardly germane to this Bill.

Mr. MILLER. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the question of whether an allowance should be made to members who are ill and who are compelled to absent themselves through illness, depends to a great extent on whether the indemnity of $2,500 is adequate or more than adequate. In that regard, I thought I was in order. However, if you rule that I am not, I certainly have nothing more to say.

Some MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. MILLER. I was about to say that Canada was a very great country, a country that must be developed.

Mr. SPROULE. Chair.

Mr. MILLER. We have institutions to be established and maintained, laws to be made, laws to be revised, for the protection of life and property, and the well-being, comfort, and success of every Canadian citizen. We have an annual revenue to raise and an expenditure of from $70,000,000 to $90,000,000, and I think that $2,500 per annum is not too much for a man of the ability and the character which a man ought to possess to properly represent any constituency in Canada, and to take his place among the 214 or 215 members by whom that business must be conducted and Canadian affairs managed. It has been urged that $2,500 is too much for some men in the House, while not too much for others. I take it that the Canadian public have a very mistaken idea of the earning powers of a very large majority of the men who sit in the Canadian House of Commons to-day. I think a very large proportion of the members on either side of the House are men who, in their own callings and occupations, have earned and are still able to earn at least $2,500 per annum. I think also that the increase of the indemnity to $2,500 will make it possible in many instances to secure the services of better men in the constituencies. It may be that there are in this House some odd cases of men who are not able to earn $2,500 in their own calling. It may be that there are some constituencies which are not properly represented in this House. If that is true, what is the trouble ? It may be that there are better men in the constituencies whose services could be secured for $2,500 which could not be secured at the smaller sum. Further than that, I think that the same man is likely to do better work for a constituency if he is paid $2,500 than if he is paid $1,500. Not that the man receiving $1.500 shall not be disposed to do the best he can; but it is not possible for him to give the best of his time to the interests of his constituency while he has at the same time to provide for the maintenance of himself and his family and others dependent upon him. Other countries recognize this. Other countries recognize that it is not economy, but parsimony, to ill-pay their representatives.

In the United States, I am given to understand, that members of the American Congress receive $5,000 a year and an extra yearly allowance of $1,200 for the employment of a secretary. And I have been told that there is a movement now in the United States—whether following Canadian example or not I am not able to say—to increase the indemnity to $7,500. It has been urged that the United States is a richer country than Canada, that it has larger resources and population, but I will say this—though it might be better for some one else to say it—that the members of the Canadian House of Commons will compare very favourably in ability and character with those of the American Congress or House of Representatives, or perhaps with those of any other governing body in any other part of the world. It cannot be said that the Australian commonwealth is more wealthy than the Dominion, yet the members of the parliament of that commonwealth are receiving to-day $2,500 a year. And in Britain, where for so long no salary has been paid to members of parliament, it is now understood that the new government is likely to introduce such a measure and that it will be popular and well supported in the country. You may prefer to call the sessional payment to members an indemnity, but I do not know that it matters whether you call it an indemnity or a salary, and I do not know that there is any great principle involved in what particular name you may give it. But it may be said that if the salary be left at a smaller figure, many more of the constituencies will be represented by wealthy men. Well, there is more than one disadvantage in having a large majority of the constituencies represented by men of wealth. In the first place these men have not the same sympathy with the working class and the poorer classes and do not come so intimately in contact with them as would less wealthy representatives. They have not the knowledge of the labouring people and the earning and industrial people of the Dominion that members who have no great wealth are possessed of. But a still greater reason why I think that wealthy men are not the best representatives of the constituencies is this: The very businesses in which they have made their wealth and accumulated their fortunes they are still connected with, and their business interests loom up before them much more largely than their parliamentary interests and duties. There are many constituencies represented in this House by wealthy men who, if they were able to give the same personal attention to their parliamentary duties that they do to their business duties, would be very able representatives, but because of their large business and great wealth this they are unable to do.

It is very easy, Mr. Speaker, to arouse prejudices among the working men and to stir up feeling among the labouring classes in opposition to the payment of $2,500 a year to members of parliament. It is very easy to make the working man pause and consider how long it takes him to earn $2,500. But that is not an argument founded upon any good reason. The working man may have the same prejudice against the manager of a bank from whom he draws his $10 or the loan company from which he may borrow $100 or $1,000; but if he is a shareholder, if he owns one or two shares in the company, he knows, as does every shareholder, that it is poor economy to engage a manager simply and only upon the principle of paying him a small salary. Managers of loan, insurance and railway companies are receiving salaries of from $5,000 to $50,000 per annum. And in this there is no sentiment, there is no graft, but the directors, representing the shareholders, give these men large salaries because they know that men capable of properly and successfully carrying on the affairs of these companies are men able to earn and entitled to receive the large salaries paid them. I contend that the poorest workingman in Canada, the poorest labouring man in this country, is a shareholder in the Dominion.

He is interested just as are its more wealthy citizens in the success, progress and development of this country, and it does not pay the poor shareholders, any more than it does the richer shareholders, to employ members of parliament upon the principle simply of getting those who will work the cheapest. As for myself—and I may be pardoned mentioning myself as an instance, but I do it simply as an illustration and because I know more of my own case naturally than I do of the cases of others—in my own case I have to pay, on account of my attendance in parliament, $500 to $700 a year for additional office help. I represent as clean a constituency, politically, as there is in the Dominion, a constituency where votes are neither bought nor sold, and yet, be as economical as I reasonably and decently can, let me be as honest as it is possible for me to be—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. I do not place a limit—I cannot carry on an election at less than $1,200.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLER. I know it costs some of you a great deal more. That makes an average of at least $300 for each parliamentary session of four years; and when I add to that the cost of my living in Ottawa during six months in the year and the contributions which every member of parliament is expected to make and the loss of business that one suffers from year to year—and the fact that at the end of his parliamentary career, be it long or short, he is likely to find his business gone or largely gone—$2,500 is certainly not too large a remuneration. I have spoken of the contributions one must make in his constituency. I have seen it urged in the public press that the contributions which a member of parliament makes for public purposes in his constituency are but bribes given simply to popularize himself and maintain himself in his position. I submit, Sir, that that is not the case. There are in every constituency perhaps as many men who have just as great ability as, and indeed perhaps more than, the one who happens to represent it in the House of Commons, yet the people by their votes have placed the man of their choice for the time being in a position of prominence and they expect him to be, and he ought to be, a public-spirited man. And it is right and proper that he should, as a public spirited man, contribute to the various public enterprises and undertakings that he may from time to time be called upon to contribute to in his riding, though in my own riding no unbecoming or unreasonable appeals have ever been made to me. Contributions are not asked or expected from the member as an individual, but simply as the public representative, and and such contributions are neither expected nor given nor received as a bribe. They are received from the member people knowing that whatever member may succeed him will contribut in a similar manner.

Another idea that prevails is that the member receives his indemnity for six months in the year. That, I submit, is far from being true. While the session may not last more than six months of the year, the time of a member during the other six months is largely occupied in attending to his political duties. A member of parliament must travel to and fro throughout his constituency. It is his duty to attend public functions and gatherings because if he is to properly represent his people he must know the people and study their condition and interests, and he cannot go among them without spending time and money. He has besides a great deal of correspondence to attend to—correspondence in every department connected with the government and the House. In his constituency he is in fact the intermediary between the government and the people, acting for the time being as the agent of all the people. Whether they be Conservative or Reform, whether they agree with or differ from him in politics, he is the representative of all the people, and is, or ought to be, at their service, and if he is performing his duty he is spending a large part of the other six months in the service of the people.

Let me point out that in the Ontario legislature the members' salaries have been increased lately in exactly the same percentage as we last session increased the indemnity of members of this House of Commons, and no complaint has ever been made. I claim that to-day a member of the Ontario legislature is being better paid at $1,000 than is a member of the House of Commons at $2,500. Their sessions are very much shorter. The members of the Ontario legislature are but a short distance from their homes; they have telephone connection; most of them can receive and answer a letter in a day, and they get home at the week-end. They can keep a grip upon their business, their business does not slide from them as it does and must in the case of a member of the House of Commons at a greater distance from the seat of government.

There has been a good deal of criticism of this indemnity of $2,500, but I believe that that criticism is directed not so much to the amount as to the manner in which it was given. And I have a word to say as to that. It would be strange if the people should make very great objection to the increase of $1,000 in the member's indemnity, seeing that—though I know that this is not a sufficient argument the extra burden imposed upon the people of Canada is from 10 cents to 15 cents per annum for each voter or 3 cents or less for every citizen of Canada. While that is not a sufficient argument, the question really being whether the indemnity is too much or not, still the fact remains that the burden upon the country is not a large one. Now, I have said that the greater part of the objection taken is not to the amount that is paid so much as to the manner in which the legislation was put through the House. Prof. Goldwin Smith has said—and I notice that some of the newspapers have taken up the argument and repeated the statement—that the increased indemnity was given as a bribe to members to induce them to support legislation which went through last session, known as the Autonomy Bills. Now, we on either side of the House held different views upon that legislation, and most of us, I think, were honest in the views we held, however opposed one to the other. I am sure, however, that there is not a man in this House, on either side, who will rise in his place and say that there was any hint upon the part of any one that the increase was given to induce him to support the legislation. Notwithstanding, and with all due deference to the great learning of Prof. Goldwin Smith, I think that argument was simply ridiculous and absurd.

It has also been urged that it was not a manly thing that the legislation giving this increased indemnity should be introduced as the result of the signing of a round robin, and that the signing of a round robin was scarcely the right way for such legislation to be gone at. I do not wonder that criticism is made, for I admit at first sight that the signing of a round robin, would seem, to be not a manly way to seek this end. At the same time, I consider that, when the subject is properly regarded, it will be seen that there is nothing unmanly nothing dishonourable, nothing that is not upright, in signing a round robin. It was simply a written statement that the salary was not sufficient and a request that it be increased; and it was made in the way it was made in order that there should be no shifting of responsibility, in order that no one should be able to say that he was less responsible than any one else, in order that no one should be able say she tempted me and I did eat. It is a matter upon which no party capital can be made; it is a matter on which no capital can be made against any individual any more than against a party. It is a matter in which all persons who signed the request intended to be, and were expected to be, equally responsible.

It has also been said that this should have been made a matter of campaign discussion. But I think that that is not a reasonable position and that it would have been a most improper thing to do. If we had made this a subject of campaign discussion, though it surely would not have been the largest issue before the public, at the time, yet, as all must admit, no other question, however intrinsically important, would have been discussed so much as this one. The effect of the discussion of this subject in the heat and excitement of a political campaign would have been to hide and smother every other issue before the people. The matter of the salaries of the judges has been discussed here this afternoon. I think that the Canadian people generally desire that our judges shall be paid reasonable and proper salaries. I think that is the desire of the people at large as well as of the people in this Chamber. Yes, I venture to say, that if, during any election campaign the matter of the judges' salaries were introduced, it would influence a very large number of votes, that a large number of people in the heat and excitement of the campaign, would oppose an increase in the salaries of the judges. So, I believe that if this had been made a question at issue in an election campaign, it would have received an undue attention and would not have been discussed in the way in which such a question ought to be discussed.

Again, it has been urged that it may have been right to pass this legislation, but that it should have applied to the next succeeding parliament and not to this. That also, I think, is an improper stand to take. Either the increase of the indemnity was right, or it was wrong. If it was right, it would have been an unfair thing, and an improper thing to delay it for four years; if it was wrong, it could not be made right by deferring the execution of it for four years.

It has been urged that the legislation was hasty and that it was not considered properly. Whatever the people in the country know or think, every man in this House knows that the legislation was thoroughly considered so far as the increase in the members' indemnity was concerned. Everybody knows that there was no piece of legislation put upon the statute-book last session of which the members had more notice, concerning which there was more talk and discussion, than this. It is an unmanly thing and an unfair thing, for any member of this House to pretend that there was no proper discussion of this measure.

I would point out, Sir, that there has not only been the increase of the indemnity, but there have been other changes in relation to the indemnity as well. For instance, the mileage has been cut out. It has been urged by some hon. members that this was not reasonable. I know that some hon. members from the far west and some members from the far east say that an injustice was done them in cutting out the mileage.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. Some of them say 'hear, hear.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. And again they say 'hear, hear.' And yet I think that that feature of the legislation was just as proper and just as right as the increase of $1,000 in the indemnity. We sympathize with our members from the west and from the east who lose the mileage, but that loss is one of the many disadvantages they suffer from living in the wild and woolly west. The cutting out of the mileage lessened the payment to the members on the average, by, I should think, $150, thus reducing the increase from $1,000 to $850. A member's transportation is provided him by Act of this parliament without cost to himself, however far he may live from the seat of government. I think it is not right that a member of this House should have free transportation, and at the same time, be allowed the mileage.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does the hon. gentleman think it fair that we should spend at least six days in coming here without pay and six days in going back without pay, while he can come here in five or six hours?

Mr. MILLER. I will answer that by saying that I do not think it is exactly fair. But I think the unfairness can best be overcome, not by re-introducing the mileage, but by making a per diem allowance to the hon. member for the time he is on the way coming to Ottawa and returning to his home.

Then I would point out that the legislation provides for the retention of $15 for every day the member fails to attend. This is a very good thing in many ways. I was somewhat amused to receive a letter from a candid voter who stated that he thought the business of the House would be expedited, and that it would be a good thing, if half the members remained away from parliament the whole time. There may be some truth in that; yet I think that the absence of members from parliament often delays the business of the House and prolongs the session.

It seems to me that when we deduct the mileage, when we deduct the $15 a day, the total expenditure will not be very much greater than under the old Act and that we will have a very much better attendance of members, an improvement in the public service and do very much better work. The Bill we are discussing to-day involves the question as to whether an allowance should be made for members who are ill and unable to attend to their parliamentary duties because of illness. If $2,500 is not too great an indemnity then I think sickness should certainly be allowed for. The life of a member of parliament is rather fruitful of illness and ill health, and here I want to point out that the newspapers and the public generally have got rather into the bad habit of criticising the life and character of members of parliament. As I said a few moments ago, perhaps such words would come better from some one else than from a member of the House of Commons and yet I think I would be corroborated by all men who are not members of the House of Commons, who, by residence in Ottawa, in the discharge of their duties about the House as reporters or otherwise, have an opportunity of observing, when I say that I do not know where you will find anywhere 214 or 215 representative business men of better lives or cleaner conduct than you will find the members of the Canadian House of Commons on both sides of the House. There are many things in connection with the life of a member of parliament that I am sorry to say are conducive to ill health. One of these is the late hours that attendance on the House of Commons entails, and when I have urged that matter in the constituency I have been met with the statement that the hours should not be so late, that the work should be done earlier in the day. But this I feel is an impossibility. We have our committee meetings in the forenoon. Some have said: Why not hold committee meetings at night? But that is impossible because many persons, the public, at least the interested public are entitled to attend the committee meetings and that makes it inconvenient if not quite impossible, to hold these meetings in the latter part of the day. That then makes it necessary that the sessions of the House should be continued late into the night. The late hours mean and result in an irregularity in the taking of our meals. The duties of the House prevent the taking of proper exercise, and whatever care may be taken to ventilate this Chamber, with so many men spending the day in the Chamber, the atmosphere is never just what it ought to be, and the fact remains that we have always, during every session, at least some of our members off through ill health. I fear that it is true that many a good man has lost his life and come to a premature death because of exposure in attending to his duties as a member of the House of Commons. I think there is no reason why this Bill should not become law or why the Act of last session, increasing the indemnity should be disturbed.

I may have a word to say at another time as to the pensions to ex-cabinet ministers and the allowance to the leader of the opposition and other matters but they do not relate to the Bill now before the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not propose at this stage to enter upon the discussion of the merits or demerits of the legislation of last session, but I may be permitted to say that perhaps the strongest criticism which has been or can be made upon that legislation is based on the fact that it was passed in the closing hours of the session. Now we have had two Bills introduced by hon. members of this House which will afford an opportunity for full discussion. I had been in hopes that these Bills, one of these Bills at least, would have been brought on for the second reading before this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear!

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The delay was unavoidable owing to domestic affliction in the family of the hon. member who introduced that Bill. All I desire to say at the present moment is that there should be a full and complete discussion of those measures at the earliest possible moment. I would deprecate most strongly the suggestion that the discussion should be postponed to any later stage in the session. It should have taken place last session when the Bills were first introduced. Those Bills should have been introduced at a much earlier date in the last session than that at which they were first brought down by the government. Some five or six weeks of the present session have already elapsed and I trust that the hon. gentlemen who have those Bills in hand will see to it that that discussion is not longer postponed; and if they do not see fit to bring these Bills forward for discussion next week, I venture to think that it is the duty of the government to have the Bills placed upon government orders for the purpose of expediting that discussion which I think should take place without delay.

I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the merits of those Bills at this moment because it does not seem to me that it is the proper time or the proper occasion, when the present Bill is being considered upon its second reading. I think it might perhaps be said that there has not, in some quarters at least, been a very fair or a very adequate statement or representation of the full effect and terms of the measures in question by a portion of the public press of the country. Those measures should be open to the fullest public criticism. They have been criticised very fully and in some instances very severely. No one of us objects in the slightest to that. The public acts of public men must at all times be subject to the strongest possible criticism, to the severest possible criticism that they seem to merit but the line should be drawn at that. There should not be any misstatement and there should not be any misrepresentation. I think it is desirable, not only in the public interest but in the interest of every man in this House, that that full and free and open discussion should take place in this House at the earliest possible moment. If these measures or any of these measures or any portion of these measures cannot be justified, then it is desirable that the measure as a whole should be repealed or that it should be modified so as to make it right. It is beyond doubt that one of the measures referred to was perhaps rather hastily prepared and not very fully considered and it must not of course be forgotten that the members of the House occupy a certain position which renders them vulnerable in this respect because they are legislating with regard to a matter which is of personal, pecuniary interest to every one them. That has to be considered and for that reason, as well as for the others to which I have alluded, I trust, and indeed, insist, that there should be at the earliest possible moment, that discussion of these measures which I have just now suggested.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that there should be at the earliest opportunity a discussion of the principle involved in the Bill introduced some time ago by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). If the discussion has not taken place it is not the fault of any one but the hon. member for South York. The hon. gentleman has had an opportunity four or five times during the present session of introducing it and inviting a discussion upon it. He could have done it not later than last Wednesday or last Monday. I do not intend to discuss the reasons why he has not done so. Some of them are domestic matters as to which we can only have sympathy and respect. But the hon. gentleman has been in the House and for reasons peculiar to himself he has let the opportunity pass on one or two occasions to have this matter discussed. I do not agree with my hon. friend that the government should place this Bill upon government orders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said if there were any further delay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, even if there were any further delay the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill should have a chance to move it and he should move it or drop it, but if anything is to be done in a matter of this kind I think the government should take the responsibility of it. It should not be left to any member. If there is any thing to be done in regard to the legislation which was introduced last session, which the government introduced, and for which they stand responsible, they must again take the responsibility and if the hon. gentlemen who have introduced Bills upon this subject do not take the opportunity of doing so it will be the duty of the government on their own responsibility to give an opportunity to the House of discussing the whole principle involved in that legislation.

In regard to what was said by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. McIntyre) I have simply no exception to take to the manner in which he has stated his views. Nothing could be fairer, more moderate or more reasonable than the views he has presented from his own point of view. I have only to observe this in regard to the Bill we have before us at the present time that if the principle be granted, as to which no exception has been taken and will not be taken, that it is fair and reasonable that in a country like this there should be an indemnity paid to members of parliament, whether the indemnity be $2,500, or $2,000, or $1,500, or $1,000, it should be accepted by every one that if a member is prevented by sickness from attending the House of Commons he should not lose his indemnity. That was the old law and I think every one will agree, even though he may think the indemnity is too large, that there should be no such a distinction as that. I think every one is well satisfied with the discussion that has taken place. There will be another discussion, and if so it is desirable that we should have it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was one of those who last session thought that when the provision as to sickness was removed the increase of the indemnity to $2,500 was intended to cover this and all other contingencies that might occur. I took that view of it and I made that argument with my people in the country in justifying the increase in the indemnity. I desire to refer to another matter and I shall do so in a moment before the House rises. Even if it is desirable to pass this legislation I would much rather that this Bill had not been introduced at the present time. I would rather that we had allowed ourselves to have an experience of a year or two under the arrangements which we made last year, and then if we found that any great hardship existed we could bring in a remedy. My impression is that the Bill will hardly cover what is even now intended. What are we to understand by sickness? If an hon. member should be unfortunate enough to sprain his ankle, but is able to attend to his business in his house, would a medical man say that man was sick? I doubt very much whether he would. Well, that is a case we would desire to cover. Then the clause in the Bill says:

> Provided that each day during the session after the first day on which the member attends as aforesaid, on which the member is in the place where the session is held, but is prevented by sickness from attending any such sitting as aforesaid, &c.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

That only applies after a member has actually been in the House. If a member has not been in the House, but has been ill for six weeks or a month, he would not get the advantage of this clause. I may be wrong, but I draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to that point. I think there are one or two cases at the present session that ought to be included, that the Bill should be made clear so that it would include the cases of two hon. members who were not here the early part of the session and who would not be able to take advantage of this clause.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 97) to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is my intention, when we resume the discussion of this Bill in committee, to move to substitute for the proviso to clause 1 the following :

Provided that any member who is prevented by sickness or illness from attending during a session or part of a session of parliament shall not for that cause forfeit any part of his sessional indemnity, but the days on which the member has been unavoidably absent owing to sickness or illness shall be allowed on production with the statement hereinafter mentioned of a medical certificate verifying the cause of such absence.

This is to make the provision as we have it applicable to a member who may be prevented by illness from attending on the opening day or during any portion of a session. I intend also to move another subsection to the following effect :

Any member residing at a greater distance than four hundred miles from Ottawa may commute such travelling allowance, receiving in lieu thereof an allowance of eight dollars per day for each day necessarily occupied in travelling between his place of residence and Ottawa, going and coming, once each way, the day of departure and the day of arrival being counted each as a full day.

So as to save a member from the necessity of keeping a record each day of his petty cash expenditures.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Minister of Justice has covered an amendment which I intended to suggest, except that instead of the word 'eight' I think he should insert the word 'fifteen.'

Mr. FOSTER. Make it a multiple of eight.

Mr. GALLIHER. For this reason. Every day that a member is absent from his duties in the House, unless he is absent through sickness, $15 per day is deducted. Now, a member living, in the far east or far west as members do, at a considerable distance from Ottawa, is necessarily absent from his home a greater length of time than a member resident at hand, by the days it takes him to go from his home to parliament, and from parliament to his home again. He is as much engaged in the service of his country from the day he leaves home till the day he returns as the sitting member for the city of Ottawa who comes here on the opening day ; and after he comes here, the law as amended last session provides that for every day he is absent $15 shall be deducted. Well, it seems to me fair and reasonable that if $15 is to be deducted for his absence for a day during the session, the same amount should be allowed in lieu of travelling expenses for the time occupied in coming here and in returning to his home.

That, I think, is but fair. I quite approve of the principle adopted last year in cutting off the mileage. When in 1903 we made it compulsory for railway companies to give members of parliament transportation free, there was no excuse for the payment of mileage, although I do not think that what was termed mileage was really intended, in the first place, to be in lieu of what was paid for railway fare but was rather intended to be some compensation that would equalize the position of members living at long distances with that of members living close by. However be that as it may, I think it was wisely cut out entirely by our Act of last year. But, as I have said, the far distant members were not placed on an equality with those living in the vicinity of the capital. I might quote, for instance, a case even more striking than that of any other member, the case of the member from the Yukon. Certainly in his case, while the sitting members for the city of Ottawa and those close by would pactically be receiving the full benefit of the increase of $1,000, to that gentleman the addition meant only the increase of a few dollars. Not only that, but the nearby member has the advantage of being able more or less to attend to his business while attending parliament, while the member at a great distance is practically disconnected from his business during the whole time that parliament sits. I think this will be regarded by the House and country as a fair proposition ; and while we are not asking to be restored financially speaking, to the amount we received as mileage under the old law, yet we are not asking too much if we suggest to the Minister of Justice that he should change that $8 per day to $15 and give us that allowance for the days spent travelling from the time we leave home until the time we reach home again, in view of the fact that, on the other hand, when we are absent from parliament a day that same amount of $15 is deducted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will carefully consider that suggestion between this and the next sitting of the committee. I wish to add something to the statutory declaration to the effect that absence was caused through illness whenever such is the case. I would ask leave therefore to submit the following amendments :

3. Section 31 of said chapter 11, as said section is enacted by section 8 of said chapter 43, is amended by adding at the end of subsection 1 thereof the following words :

And in case days are included on which the member has been prevented from attending by sickness or illness, setting forth that fact and that his absence was unavoidable.

I also propose to submit the following amendment :

And by adding at the end of subsection 2 thereof the following words :

And if the member has elected to commute his travelling allowances under subsection 2 of the next preceding section, a statement of the time necessarily occupied in travelling to and from Ottawa as provided in said section.

Having given this notice I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into committee of supply.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). In as brief a manner as possible, consistent with clearness, I wish, Mr. Speaker, to trace the history and the attendant circumstances of a transaction which is one of the most singular that I have ever met with in my parliamentary experience. I refer to the transaction which is well known as the North Atlantic Trading Company contract. I noticed during last session, and have remarked on several occasions during the present session, that more than once an assertion has been made with the evident intention of throwing the responsibility of this contract upon Lord Strathcona, the High Commissioner for Canada. In fact the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), last year, in some explanations which he gave of it, expressly asserted that the first contract or arrangement was made by Lord Strathcona. I do not think, Sir, that he should do that injustice to our Canadian High Commissioner. So far as I have been able to get at the history of this transaction, as revealed in the papers, and so far as knowledge has come to me from other sources, which I am not at liberty to state tonight as being proceedings in another part of this House, I do not believe that Lord Strathcona is responsible in the least for the transaction. I do find that he raised the question as to whether or not it was possible to enter into that transaction in countries whose legislation was hostile to the work of soliciting and directing emigrants from them to a foreign country. That, I think, was the extent of his services in that matter, except that he was, to a certain extent, the supervisor and head of the offices in London at that time.

This transaction bears all the marks of a Siftonian deal. Every birth mark is clearly defined. The supreme disregard shown for the significance and direction of a parliamentary appropriation, the utter contempt shown for such a thing as parliamentary authority, the entire ignoring, of the assent and confirmation of his colleagues as given by order in council, the lavish hand with which the expenditure was made, seemingly without regard to any but the beneficiaries of the stream of money which was to be poured out—all these have, as I have said, the true Siftonian marks which make me believe that this transaction had one origin and one only.

In August, 1899, the Deputy Minister, Mr. Smart, a Siftonian, went over to London for the express purpose of conferring with Mr. Preston, the Commissioner of Immigration, another Siftonian. And the two of them, as a consequence of repeated conferences, journeys to Europe and reports of the results thereof to Mr. Smart in London, reached a basis and made an arrangement to the extent that it was approved by both and forwarded for the sanction of the minister. This first arrangement—I will call it a contract, although it was not confirmed by order in council has not been placed before the House up to the present time. It was not among the papers laid before the House. The papers asked for and promised to be brought down were contracts and orders in council authorizing them. I think it is well to read this contract to the House as being the first contract or arrangement made by the department and without the sanction of order in council. On October 20, 1899, the following letter was written :

Dear Sir,—In view of our frequent consultations, we have the honour to submit the following proposal to the Canadian government. We will undertake to bring Canada to the attention of people residing in continental European countries——

Mark the words 'we will undertake to bring Canada to the attention of people living in continental European countries.'

—and, in answer to queries, furnish reliable information regarding the climatic conditions and resources of Canada, and, where it is the intention to emigrate, to point to Canada as a desirable field for settlement, upon the following conditions :

1. That the government will expend £500 in printing suitable literature as recommended by me——

The personal equation comes in there.

—placing the printed matter at our disposal.

2. That we shall receive from the government upon all emigrants from these countries for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, over twelve years of age, as registered at the ports of Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal, via these ports or via Portland and New York in the United States :

17 shillings and 6 pence sterling per capita on any number less than 10,000 in each year ;

20 shillings sterling per capita on any number between 10,000 and 15,000 in each year ;

25 shillings sterling per capita on any number exceeding 15,000 in each year.

3. That each head of a family shall be possessed of at least $100, or, where there is a community of families working together, they shall average an amount sufficient not to become public charges.

4. That this provision shall apply only to emigrants who are agriculturists or who intend to settle on agricultural lands.

5. The acceptance of this offer is to be for a term of five years, and may be subsequently cancelled by notice three months prior to the 1st of October in any year.

An essential condition of this offer is that by our action we shall not violate or contravene any law now, or which may hereafter be, in force in any country from which inquiries may be made or from which persons may emigrate to Canada.

Awaiting your reply, we are, dear sir,

Yours truly,

THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

W. T. R. Preston, Esq.,
Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, London.

To this the following reply was sent, dated Berlin, November 4th, 1899 :

To the North Atlantic Trading Company, Amsterdam—

My Dear Sirs,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 20th ultimo, and have carefully noted its contents.

Then follows a recital of his conferences with the High Commissioner and with the Minister of the Interior, and the authority under which he is now acting. And then goes on to say :

I now, on behalf of the Department of the Interior, accept your offer with the conditions attached thereto in connection with emigration to Canada from continental Europe. I only desire, in accepting your proposals, to accentuate the last clause in your letter providing that on your part there shall not be any contravention of the laws of European countries in carrying out your proposition.

Hoping you will not lose any time in entering upon the programme you have outlined in the interests of emigration to the Dominion of Canada, which is hereby accepted as contained in your proposals in the letter of the 20th ultimo, referred to, believe me my dear sirs,

Yours very truly,

W. T. R. PRESTON.

That was a five years' firm contract, terminable thereafter on three months notice, entered into, on behalf of the Dominion government, by the commissioner, which agreed to, and as stated which was planned largely by the Deputy Minister of the Interior and which received the adhesion and assent of the Minister of the Interior. You will notice that the very smallest, most indefinite, duties possible are laid on the North Atlantic Company. They are to undertake to bring Canada to the attention of people residing in continental Europe. To what extent? To how many people? In answer to queries, furnish reliable information regarding the climatic conditions and resources of Canada, and, where it is the intention to emigrate to point to Canada as a desirable field for settlement.' But for covering that small, indefinite area of duties, the government is to give them £500 worth of literature printed as they wish it, and to pay them toll upon every emigrant from these countries for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—(there is that saving feature in it)—over twelve years of age as registered at the ports named. This is restricted to agriculturists or those intending to settle on agricultural land. I believe this arrangement was without the knowledge of council, and certainly it was without the knowledge of parliament. With nothing but a general vote for emigration given from year to year, the minister and his two subalterns pledged this country to an unlimited, indefinite amount of money for five years at the very least. That is the first point which meets one in the history of this case. Now, Sir, this goes on from the 4th of November, 1899, when it became operative until the 31st of May, 1902, in the very face of council and of parliament. And yet I am certain, so far as we get it from the records as they are brought down, that neither the council of ministers nor parliament had the least idea that this contract had been made binding on Canada and that it was to run for five years.

On the 31st of May, 1902, some tremor of fear, some slight trepidation, perhaps, that it was being pushed a little too far, took possession of the department or of the Minister of the Interior and he came to the conclusion that he would get an order in council and so, on the 31st of May, 1902, an order in council was passed upon a report of the minister, and contract No. 2 was authorized and confirmed by the order in council. This was a contract with that same company, the Trans-Atlantic Trading Company, and it is peculiar that although the order in council was passed on the 31st of May the contract was dated back to have force from the 1st day of January, 1902. The second contract differs materially from the first. It is a contract wider in its extent, in most respects more favourable to the Trans-Atlantic Trading Company. It takes in a definite number of countries; the other was for continental Europe but this defines the area. It is to cover :

Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Russia, Germany, Austro-Hungary, Northern Italy, Luxemburg, Roumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, and any other countries which may hereafter be included in the agreement, France being omitted for the reason that the department is free under the local laws to maintain agencies in that country.

Now in this contract the main points are these: First, what is the company to do?

The company shall undertake a systematic and persistent propaganda in the countries named, by which people in the agricultural districts shall be made aware of the advantages offered by Canada as a field for settlement.

Still indefinite. The specifications are very loose, they can scarcely be called specifications, but that propaganda is to be systematic and persistent whatever it is and is to be carried out by means of Advertisements in the public press, pamphlets published by the company in the various languages and personal canvass.

All these to be approved if required by a representative of the department in advance of publication. In this contract the company binds itself to spend $15,000 per year for and in the purposes mentioned, advertisements, pamphlets, and personal canvass by representatives of the company. Then there is a clause by which if it undertakes a special work, the special work not being defined, in Sweden, Norway and Finland and expends thereon £1,000, the manner and method and quality of the expenditure not defined, the government shall pay it £750 per year for two years for that special work. There is to be a financial condition attached to a certain part of the settlers; $100 shall be in the possession of the head of a family, $25 for each of the children and $200 as a maximum for a family, no matter how many there are in the family. This contract is to extend for 10 years from the date of the contract which would be, having been set back, from the 1st of January, 1902, subject during the term of the contract to cancellation by the department if the company fails to carry out the conditions in any particular and also there is the right for either party to terminate the contract on two years' notice from the 1st of January of each year. Doing that this company is to receive for every person who may emigrate to and arrive in Canada being of the agricultural or domestic servant class—if of domestic servant class to be over 18 years—from the countries that had been named, a bonus of $5 per head.

These are the main points of that second contract. The onus is placed on the company to give proper evidence that it has expended the $15,000. Under the contract this bonus is to be paid on those who may emigrate from these countries and arrive in Canada, putting the onus on the company to show that these persons did emigrate from the country named and of course the proof was easy if they arrived in Canada under counting of the officers of the Dominion government. This contract goes on from January 1, 1902, the setback period, or from May 31, 1902, the period of the order in council, until September 20, 1904, and on September 20, 1904, when that contract had only run about 2 years and 6 months of its period, another order in council was passed and another contract based upon that order in council was entered into with the same company. Now when you come to examine that order in council you will find that in almost every instance the contract is changed in favour of the beneficiaries, the North Atlantic Trading Company and to the detriment of Canada, the other party to the contract. In the first place, here was a contract which had not yet been notified to parliament, a contract which had not been ratified by parliament, a contract entered into contrary to the spirit of parliament and contrary to the spirit of our administration and contrary to the law as well, for a period of ten years, and before it had run two years and seven months another contract is entered into under date September 24, 1904—that is the order in council and the cnotract thereupon is dated on the 28th of November, 1904—and by that contract the extension is for 10 years from that time, making an extension, added to the previous term of 10 years, of over two years thus making the whole contract period from the first up to the completion of the third contract period, 15 years and one month and at that time parliament had not been notified that there was any contract, any agreement, had made no appropriation therefor, and had not ratified the contract simply because, for one reason, the contract had never been placed before it.

Parliament had never been told and had never been asked whether it was in favour of it or not. Now, Sir, that is Siftonian in the highest and most absolute degree. Does the right hon. gentleman who leads the House subscribe to a doctrine of that kind? Did he know it? If he did not was he rightly treated by his minister? That is a question to be solved between the two, but we know the fact and I do not think you could find in all the annals of our parliament any such arrangement as that. The total amount of money which was involved, on a fair average of what has taken place in these three contracts, made without parliamentary appropriation, or authority, or sanction, was close to or a little over one million of dollars of the people's money. Now, I have said that this third contract was altered materially and altered in the interest of the North Atlantic Trading Company. In what way? In the first place, the work of the company is made, possibly, even more indefinite than it was before. Under this contract the company has to do what?

The company shall and will carry on an active educative work.

That is what its duty is. How definite! How delightfully specific that is! It shall —carry on an active educative work by advertising by pamphlet and by personal canvass of the representatives of the company.

That is the full extent of the specification. I commend it to the other departments of government who wish to make a contract for the building of a bridge, the construction of a railway, the construction of a great public building. How much trouble it would take from their hands and from the minds of their architects and engineers if they would just simply say : Mr. So and So undertakes and is bound to build a building and to have it finished at a certain time ! That would be just about as definite as this. But, it goes still further. A certain number of countries were specified in the preceding contract. Four of these are cut out of this contract and three of them are the least profitable and the most difficult to be worked. That is in favour of the company again. The expenditures to be made by the company are exactly the same but the special work is extended for four years in addition and for that special work, undefined, the manner of carrying out which is not stated, and about which I cannot get any information, they are to be paid $15,000 more than was contracted for in the preceding contract. The bonus is to be paid not on every one who 'emigrates to and arrives in Canada', but mark it, the bonus is to be paid upon every one who arrives in Canada—not even upon every immigrant who arrives in Canada. It is not stated that they must emigrate from Europe and must arrive in Canada as did the preceding contract and therefore put upon them the onus of showing that the emigration took place by the effort of the company. It is simply that for every one of the agricultural class, man, woman and child, and for every girl of the servant class above 18 years of age who arrives in Canada $5 shall be paid as a bonus to the company. In the first contract a special stipulation was made that they should expend $15,000 and proof was required to be adduced to satisfy the government that that $15,000 had been spent ; therefore the department or any officer could ask for specific proof, could ask reasonable proof, could ask for sufficient proof before a cent of money was paid out as bonus. In the second contract an ingenious article was inserted for the expenditure of the $15,000 per year. It shall be sufficient for the company to send in at the end of the year their account for $15,000 and a receipted voucher for the same. Alongside of this are the words 'or other reasonable proof', but inasmuch as it was stipulated that that would be one proof that would be sufficient that is all that has ever been demanded from them and when you question an officer of the department as to whether they ever went behind that receipted voucher and made inquisition as to whether that $15,000 had been actually spent, as to whether the advertisements had appeared in the newspapers all through, as to whether the pamphlets were actually distributed, where they were distributed, in what numbers they were distributed, the officer turns upon you and says: No, I did not inquire into that because the contract does not require me to. The contract says that a receipted voucher is sufficient proof, I have the receipted voucher and I do not go behind it. More than that the contract which was to have run for ten years from 1902, two years and six months of which had expired, was extended to run for ten years from the 28th November, 1904, making, as I said, the whole continuation of the contract fifteen years and one month without the authority of parliament, without the knowledge of parliament, and without the ratification of parliament. Why, cannot one ask, was not the contract, if altered it had to be, allowed to run for the remaining seven years and four months of the contract period, and why was an extension of two years in addition made to this North Atlantic Trading Company's contract ? Is there any answer to that ? May be we shall have one. In all these contracts, first, second and third, there is a clause that the North Atlantic Trading Company binds itself to do nothing in contravention of any law now in force or which may hereafter be put into force in any of these countries in regard to immigration. That is important to remember when we come to discuss some other portions of this contract. The changes in brief, in the third contract in favour of the company over and above the conditions in the second contract are : less definite duties, fewer countries to work, three or four of the less profitable ones having been cut out, monthly payments instead of quarterly may be demanded, onus of proof is taken off as to emigration, as to the expenditure, as to the financial state. That is all swept away.

The contract was extended for three years ; the time notice was extended from two years to four years. Again may I ask: Why the minister, and the department, and the government did not keep at least the check it had in the two years option to determine the contract ; why did they extend it to four years ? In the first contract the minister or the deputy could have determined the contract for failure to carry out their obligations in any part ; in the third contract they could only cancel it for failure to carry out their obligations ; that is, their obligations in toto. And whilst two years of the £750 payment for special work was made in the first contract, four extra years are added in the third contract, or a total or $15,000 to the perquisites and payments to the company. Why was all this leniency to the company and against the country in the arranging of this third contract ?

For one moment let us make a recapitulation of what this third contract actually meant, boiled down into as few words as possible. What was the company to do? It was to carry on an active educative work among the agricultural classes; to expend $15,000 yearly in pamphlets, advertising, and in personal canvass by representatives of the company; the proof of the expenditure to be sufficient when a receipted voucher was handed with the bill to the Department of the Interior; to expend $5,000 a year on the special work and to receive therefor £750 per year from the government. The government on its part was to pay $3,750 per year for the special work, (work not defined) and $5 per head for every man, woman and child of the agricultural classes and every servant girl over eighteen years of age arriving in Canada from the countries named. Now note this: That under that contract the company makes up no list of immigrants. I asked an officer of the department if he was assured that those who were counted and paid for were the product of the work of the company on the other side. What was his answer? His answer was: That was none of my business, I simply had to go by the contract and the contract tells me to pay $5 per head to that company for every single person of these classes that arrived in Canada. The immigrant need not stay ten days in Canada; he need not come to Canada as the result of their work at all; no matter about that, for every one that enters Canada from that cordon of countries $5 is to be paid to this North Atlantic Trading Company. There is no evidence to be submitted to the government by the company; there is no certificate required that a single immigrant came from that vast extent of Europe over which the company holds this power of levying toll. The company is asked for no list of its agents or of its canvassers; the seal of secrecy covers all. The company simply sends in its accounts with its receipted voucher and gets its monthly payments. No, it does better than that. It sends in its accounts and the receipted voucher at the end of the year for the expenditure of the $15,000; but for every month of the year it may get this $5 per head for every one of these immigrants that come into Canada. No examination is made by the department as to bona fides of the expenditure, of the work, of the advertising, of the pamphlet distribution, of anything at all. And when you ask the superintendent of immigration why not; he says: I am not compelled to do so by the contract, all I have to do is to count the heads, hear from them, or read from the ship's manifest that they come from one of these countries and then credit up the $5 each to the North Atlantic Trading Company. The government, however, is even more accommodating. It puts one of its paid men at every port in Canada for the especial purpose of conning the ship's manifest and finding out just how many step on Canadian soil. It sees by the ship's manifest, or it takes the word of the immigrants that they come from one of the countries within the line marked off for this North Atlantic Trading Company. And then with wonderful courtesy and wonderful good will this government makes up the accounts of the company and sends a cheque saying: This is your money. Just think of what it is—you draw a line around a certain portion of continental Europe; within that line is a broad field for work for any and every agency, to bring immigrants to Canada. But no matter how many agencies work, no matter what the local or general influences are that send people to Canada, when they come here, on every one of them the government says: we will pay $5 per head to the North Atlantic Trading Company. Mind you, it is not paid to the man or the agency who starts the immigrant and sends him over to Canada; it is paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company who has the delightfully specific duty cast upon it of carrying on 'an active, educative campaign' within the greater part of the continent of Europe. Now, will hon. members just for a moment take the map of Europe in view and see what this means. That cordon of countries which is marked off as the special tribute reserve of the North Atlantic Trading Company comprises a population of 240,000,000 more or less. You have Austria with 30,000,000; Norway with 2,500,000; Sweden with 5,000,000; Denmark with 2,500,000; Germany with 60,000,000; the Netherlands with 6,000,000; Switzerland with 4,000,000; and Russia with 108,000,00. I have been moderate—this contract takes in Russia from the Pacific ocean to the Baltic but I have kept it down to European Russia. This makes up altogether a population of 238,000,000. And what have you left in Europe? France is omitted from the contract, but France is not an emigrating country, and all else you have left are Spain and Italy. It will be therefore seen that you have blanketed all available Europe, placed it under the tribute power of the North Atlantic Trading Company and bound yourselves for fifteen years to pays to it $5 per head for every man, woman and child of certain classes that come to Canada from these countries.

Now, take those countries again: were they countries in which there was no freedom of change in population? Not at all. Those countries are the chosen recruiting ground of America for its new lands and its new areas. In 1901-1902, by the latest statistics that I have got on the subject, over 500,000 emigrants left that area and came to America and settled in America. It is no case of making an irruption on a closed country such as China was twenty or thirty years ago. Here was an open territory, the best recruiting ground for emigrants—nearly all the available recruiting ground for emigrants in continental Europe —all bound up to this company. Ah, but, the government says, we wanted immigrants, and they would not come unless we employed this means. You did not employ this means with reference to Italy, and yet 4,445 Italians emigrated to Canada in 1903-1904, and about the same number in 1904-1905 ; which shows that there was a stream started, and that of those 500,000 emigrants a certain proportion were making their way to Canada and would continue to make their way to Canada. And yet you cordoned off that area, the great recruiting preserve of continental Europe, and you put it under the toll and tribute of the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Now, have regard to another consideration. In those countries there are locally the strongest incentives to emigration that can possibly be had. In parts of those countries you have grinding taxation, which tends to disperse its population to free countries and freer conditions. In those countries you have ferocity of religious and race persecution, which, rising into violence and even murder at times, sends waves of people out of those countries to seek an asylum in freer and better countries. In those countries you have tyranny of the strongest, you have persecutions of section and race of the strongest, you have poverty of almost the direst and most compelling. All of these are local conditions which tend to drive people out of those countries. And over and above all, in Germany, in Russia, in Austria, in other of those countries, you have a grinding and impoverishing military system from which people are fleeing, in so far as their circumstances allow them, and will continue to do so. All these are agencies which tend to throw out emigrants, and which tend to populate the American continent. More than that, you have in those countries other agencies at work ; but it matters not what agencies work or gather the fruit, it has to be paid for in toll to the North Atlantic Trading Company. What happened in 1901-1902 ? The Jewish Association, with the beneficent donations made by Baron Hirsch and others, undertook to bring a number of persecuted Jews from Russia and settle them in Canada. They subscribed their money, $40,000 or $50,000. They sent for the Jews, clothed them, fed them, brought them out, and set them up in Canada ; and yet for every one of the hundreds they brought out $5 per head was paid by this government to the North Atlantic Trading Company. Other men truly have laboured, but this fortunate syndicate enters into the fruits of the labours of other men. No matter what agency—information, internal pressure, the kindness of friends—operates to bring settlers from those countries and land them in Canada, not to those who bring them goes the $5 per head, but to the North Atlantic Trading Company. What more ? The most efficient immigration agency we have in this country are the settlers from foreign countries who, having made their homes here, and having found the country to be well adapted to themselves, send home to their friends letters, information and money by the hundreds of thousands of dollars, to bring their friends out. A calculation could be made pretty exact as to what was sent by settlers from that range of countries in hard cash last year to friends in those countries to bring them to this country. Take the minister's own report, and one of his own inspectors says :

> Ruthenians and Galicians.—A large number of this year's arrivals evidently received help from those already in Canada arriving frequently and passing through to their friends.

But it is not the friend out in the west who labours, earns his money, sends his hundred dollars to the friends at home, brings out two or three or four of them and lands them alongside of himself in Manitoba or the Northwest—it is not to him the $5 goes. The $5 goes to the mysterious North Atlantic Trading Company. This is the government and this is the department whose motto is " the land for the settler." That is the cry but here again you have the evidence that everything goes to the speculator and nothing to the real worker. Over there somewhere—who knows where ? in some spot—who can place it ? within some building—who has ever located it ? somewhere in space never yet staked out, there is a mysterious nondescript labelled the North Atlantic Trading Company, and to that company the tribute is to be paid, the $5 is to go. Last year they drew out $88,000 and expended $15,000. What they did nobody in the department of the Interior, nobody in the departments at Ottawa, no man on the ministerial benches, knows or has the least idea. What we do know is that they said they had expended $15,000, and they raked in $88,000. Pretty good business for a government whose motto is : down with the speculator, up with the settler. So much, then, in reference to that. When your immigration inspectors stand, some at Quebec, some at Montreal, some at Halifax, some at St. John, some at Vancouver, some at Victoria, and count the heads on which to pay the tribute to this nondescript, if any friend of Canada were there and ventured to put a question like this ; you are paying $5 to the company for that man ? Are you sure that that company had anything at all to do with sending that man from Galicia? That is not my business, would be the answer, I am here simply to count the heads. Suppose the friend of the country were to put another question : Do you know that that company canvassed these people and set them on their way ? The answer would again be : That is none of my business ; it is in the contract that they get the $5 for every inhabitant from that certain place who sets foot on Canada, and all I have to do is count the heads and hand over the tribute. The friend of Canada therefore makes no headway with that officer or that department or this government.

Even as to the agricultural class part of the agreement, how does your counter at the seaport know that a certain man and his wife and family belong to the agricultural class? What evidence has he? None, absolutely none. But you say he has the ship's passengers manifest. And what is that? The purser goes to every passenger and asks him what is his name, where is he from, whither he is going, how old he is, and the like, and his replies are entered on the manifest. He is asked, for instance, are you an agriculturist? And whatever the passenger says in reply is put down—whether he is a labourer or an agriculturist or anything else. That manifest is scrutinized by the Canadian counter, the officer paid to count these heads, and he takes all these entries as being correct. But even should he be of an inquisitive turn of mind and seek to question the incomer, what evidence would he get? Is your name so and so? Yes. Are you from such a place? Yes. Are you an agricultural labourer? Yes. That ends it. But where is the proof? In the United States you make your agents there certify every man that they send over. When the agent is paid his bonus, the certificate is there in the man's possession that he has been started and canvassed by that agent. But no check, no evidence of any kind is required to show that these 40,000 or 50,000 who come from these countries have ever seen or heard of the North Atlantic Trading Company or any agent thereof.

So much with reference to that. Now I have a few general observations to make as to the whole scheme itself. As I have said, it was concocted by the Siftonians, unknown to parliament, without an appropriation, without the least authority, and carried on for two years and seven months in that way. Then put under contract, passed by council, with a ten years extension of time, still unknown to parliament, and without parliamentary appropriation, and afterwards, in September, 1904, the contract was extended a further ten years from that date, still unknown to parliament, and it only leaked out because of certain items in the Auditor General's book and thus became known to parliament last session and not before. When it became known to parliament and when my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) queried the government about it and when my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. U. Wilson) questioned the government concerning it and other gentlemen put their interrogatories, what happened? There was a flutter in the dove cots. No doubt about that. The contract was asked for, but was refused. The Minister of the Interior refused it, the Minister of Finance refused it, the First Minister himself refused it. They said: Yes, there is a contract, but we cannot make it public; we cannot show it to the House. In what age of the world, we may well ask, do we live? There was a time when kings and rulers had power over certain sums of money, called secret service money, in large amounts, and of that they gave no account to parliament. But even that has in these later days been brought under the scrutiny of a committee of both sides of the House, if I am rightly informed. But in a British colony, in a British parliament, in any constitutionally governed country to-day, what will be said of the government and the department which enters into a secret contract, without a shadow of authority or appropriation, involving a million of dollars of the people's money, and then, when the people's representatives sent here to guard their interests, ask to be shown that contract, meet their request with a blank refusal? And for what reason? Reasons of state forsooth. Prudential reasons. We will show it, they say, if you wish to the leader of the opposition. But, Sir, the leader of the opposition has no more rights, in one sense, in this House than any other member of parliament. The member for St. John, the member for Toronto, the member for York, reprensents his portion of the sovereign people. It is the money of the people that is being voted, and each one of these men has a right to that contract, and no man can long refuse it. But, as I am informed, the leader of the opposition refused to look at the contract when the offer was put in that way.

They come on to 1906, shuffling, evading, until the matter gets before a committee of the House, and that committee, after probing in every direction to find out who this company is, what it is, came up at last against the ex-deputy minister and put to him the final question: Do you know? Yes. Who are they ? He refused to answer. And then the chairman of that committee and the partisan majority of that committee, and I presume the government which has in charge these partisans and manages them most beautifully, all coincided in saying that that final question should not be answered. If ever there was a know-nothing society in the world it is the ministry on that side, backed up by the departmental officers of the Interior Department. Is there such an entity as the North Atlantic Trading Company? We do not know. That was the chorus from top to bottom. Who are its officers? Who are its directors? How much capital has it? Where does it live? Where does it do its business? To all these questions they answered: We do not know. Through the Auditor General's Department and the Interior Department there was one continual 'we do not know,' in a sneering, laughing way. Who or what is it? We do not know. Nobody knows.

Well, here is the grave point of the whole thing. What officers had you? The Siftonian officers were Preston and Smart. It was these officers who made the arrangements. Over their own sign manual, they declared that the contract had been made with the North Atlantic Trading Company, with an incorporated company, with a company whose capital was $200,000, with a company which represented far more strength than indicated by its capital. The ex-deputy minister, Mr. Smart, said that. The commissioner, Mr. Preston, said that. The minister, Mr. Sifton, said that. He put in his report to council, and the order in council, the voice of the whole cabinet said the same thing.

And yet, Sir, to-day, when we have driven them out from every one of their subterfuges, and, before an awakened country, have demanded to know what this company is and who its shareholders are, and when we telegraph to Lord Strathcona—under orders of the Public Accounts Committee—we received his telegram, and what do we learn? That there never had been, from July, 1899 to June, 1905, any such entity or corporation as the North Atlantic Trading Company; that it has all been, from beginning to end, one transparent—no one concealed—falsehood. Nothing more and nothing less. Lord Strathcona said:

> The persons named as subscribers to the memorandum and articles of association of the North Atlantic Trading Company and holding—— Listen. Oh earth!

> —and holding one share each are: Edward Samsbury, hotel proprietor, London; Alfred H. Alexander, engineer; John A. Randall, articled clerk, both of Cheswick; Geo. T. Dourney, Palwell Park, East Sheen, solicitor's clerk; Henry James Whitman, builder, Cheswick; John H. S. Thompson, Epsom, chartered secretary; Charles Guy Underwood, Acton, solicitor's clerk. The solicitor of the company is E. A. Alexander, Essex street, Strand. The capital of the company is £3,000 sterling in 300 shares of ten pounds each. Am endeavouring to get list of shareholders and amount actually subscribed and paid up. Company was incorporated on Island of Guernsey, as North Atlantic Trading Company, Limited——

Very limited.

Now, Sir, I ask this parliament, I ask this House, if anything more absurd, anything more farcical, any thing more indecent in the transaction of public dealing has ever been brought out or could be brought out in any country. For, where is the responsibility? Your commissioner of immigration, your deputy minister and your Minister of the Interior went over to Great Britain, they made that contract, and, when they came back, they sent in, over their own hands, the statement that there was a company called the North Atlantic Trading Company and that they had made a contract with it. Were these men stupid? I do not think that you could count any one of them stupid or ignorant? Were they guilty of fraud? Were they guilty of deliberate deception? Which was it—ignorance, fraud or deception? It must have been one or the other. And when the minister sent in his report and said to his brother ministers: I want you to sanction an agreement with a corporation called the North Atlantic Trading Company—was it ignorance on the minister's part, was it fraud or was it deception. Which? I will not believe that the members of the cabinet as a whole were guilty of either one or the other of these things. It is for these three Siftonians to clear themselves of the charge of ignorance or fraud, or of deliberate deception in this whole business.

We have all read that interesting story Japhet in Search of a Father. But there is one more pathetic that, I hope, some historian of modern events will put upon the written and printed page. After the deputy minister had formed his contract with that company, after he had declared that it was an incorporated company, had watched over its interests, had paid it money for three years and a half—suddenly he was moved by a wave of idle curiosity to visit the head office of this company. He took passage for Europe, he landed in Amsterdam. He inquired of all and sundry where this great and mighty establishment called the North Atlantic Trading Company was to be found. Got no answer but 'nit.' He pursued his inquiries; he continued his toilsome march; he looked at every establishment as it loomed in the distance. and going up to it, anxiously read its sign: No trading company. At last he wanders into a by and forbidden street and there he finds a little faded building. Two stairs up he finds a room with a door, and on the door, 'North Atlantic Trading Company.' He is at his journey's end. He tries the knob, but it yields not to his hand. He bares his manly fist and knocks upon the door. But no answer comes. Tired and sore from his exertions he journeys mournfully down the two flights of stairs and resumes his peregrinations and inquiries. Do any of the neighbours know anything about it? At last he finds one poor Dutchman who tells him that that door is occasionally opened by a lone and hungry looking visitor, who enters with any empty bag in his hand and goes out a few minutes after with the bag well filled—supposed to be with the cheques from the Department of the Interior made out to the North Atlantic Trading Company and which at last have landed in an upper story in an obscure building in Damarack street in Amsterdam. If it were not so important a matter that is at stake it would be the most ridiculous comedy that ever a comedian set himself to play or a writer of comedies set himself to write. But it is serious.

Now let us come for a moment to another aspect of the case. What are the excuses of the government? The excuses of the government and of the Department of the Interior were: We wanted this immigration, we could not get it in any other way and we were forced therefore to employ this company. I deny that this is well based. In the first place we do not want any more of that indiscriminate immigrant class from a large portion of that territory. If any of it comes naturally, when it reaches our shores let us discriminate as to its reception but pay no man a bonus therefor. Other and reputable agencies had been at work in these countries, the best of them, for many years, and had every year been giving their quota to this country. The United States gathers the main part of more than a million immigrants a year from these areas of Europe. They spend not a single cent, they rather put their force in making it as hard as possible to enter the United States as an immigrant. But the government have another excuse. They say the government could not work in those countries because it was opposed to the law of the land. Mr. Speaker will you just pay attention to one or two questions as they are put on that point. Against the law of these countries to do what? To solicit or direct immigration from the country to Canada. Therefore we cannot do it. If it is against the law of a country that you cannot solicit or direct immigration from that country through your agent is it a law which is directed only against aliens or is it a law which is equally against the citizens of that country as well as the alien? If it is against the law for an agent of this government to go in and solicit or direct immigration, it is equally against their laws for a citizen of their country to go in and solicit or direct immigration from that country to a foreign country. And what is the dilemma of the government? Either that its excuse is paltry or else that it hires somebody else to do the illegal thing and it proposes to reap the benefit from the illegal act. Is that a dignified position for the government? But there is a second absurdity. They have put a clause in every contract obliging this company and its agents to do nothing against any law existing or that may be passed in these countries against the soliciting or directing of emigration. Is that an honest clause? If so, then you pay your money to a company for doing what you absolutely prohibit them from doing. Now in the name of common sense what do these men do that you could not? Advertise in the newspapers of these countries. Cannot you do it? Could you not make terms with these newspapers to publish an advertisement in description of Canada and pay them for it and know that they do their work just as well as this North Atlantic Trading Company can do it? Can you not stay outside that country, put a booklet in a letter and send it to an address in that country the same as these people? For that is the way they have to do it. An officer of your Immigration Department under oath said that what these men did was to distribute booklets under seal and that they had to send them from an outside country into the country where they were to be received by the persons to whom they were addressed. Could you not get a force of clerks and mail letters to people whose names you get easily, because these are not benighted and unregistered countries. Could you not do that as well as this company and at infinitely less cost and know exactly what is being done? You declare that this must be done in secrecy. One of the most remarkable things with reference to this whole contract is this that your deputy Minister of the Interior and your Commissioner of Immigration when they made the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company pledged themselves absolutely not to reveal the names of any person in that company and when the deputy minister is called upon to reveal the identity of that company, asked if he knows any of them, he says he does. Asked if he will give the Parliament of Canada any of the names he says: I cannot give you any because I pledged my word of honour to these people that I would not ever disclose their names and therefore I will not. But there is one other factor to be taken into account with that. When Mr. Smart pledged himself to secrecy with regard to a company that never existed, with regard to the men who formed that syndicate, the identity of which he cannot show he admits another thing, that in 1901 he commenced private correspondence with one of the principal men of that syndicate in regard to matters of that company, which correspondence was maintained until it resulted in his being employed by that company. That is a nice condition of things, an officer of this department, in utter secrecy, makes a contract for a million dollars with a company that never existed but which he declared was a company and did exist, and after he has firmly settled that by a second order in council and fixed it, as he thought, for fourteen years, he makes his preparation to slip out of the department and enter into official connection and lucrative employment with the very company with which, under secrecy, he made these ruinous contracts. Did his minister know it ? Did the cabinet know it ? We all wondered when Mr. Smart left the department why he left, we could get no reason. Now we see the reason. He prepared a place for himself and to the place he prepared for himself thither he went in due process of time, and for years, from 1901 to 1905, your deputy Minister of the Interior certified to the accounts, sent the cheques, managed the inquisition which amounted to nothing, managed it so that it should not be anything to the company with whom he was in secret correspondence, for a place and a participation in their business. Asked if that was private ? Yes. Asked if the correspondence had to do with immigration ? Yes, but there was nothing very important about it. Will you produce it ? No, he would not produce it. That is a state of things, that is what is going on in the Interior Department, in how many other departments we do not know. In the resolution that I intend to move I have declared that this contract is injurious.

It is. Read the comments of the British papers last year when the first news came out that this strange contract had been made. Pay for a British emigrant 7 shillings 6 pence per head and give to an unknown company without an entity $5 per head for European continental emigrants ! What has Britain done that it should be discriminated against ? That sentiment amongst business men on the other side of the water was wide spread and strong and is to this day. To-day on the streets of London where men congregate and in the clubs this mysterious contract is talked about, and the question is asked : What does it all mean ? A company that never was a company, when driven by force of public opinion, has at last to get a lot of grocer's clerks, hotel clerks and solicitor's clerks to make a sham memorandum of corporation in the Island of Guernsey. And this was a company formed by the foremost steamship men upon the continent, with $200,000 of capital and even much more financial strength in the individual worth and positions of the men who formed that syndicate. Is there any doubt that this is injurious to Canada ? My hope is that this contract will be immediately and absolutely cancelled and until that is done the injury works. I have said that it was an improvident contract. Is it not ? What do these men do ? From that side of the House and from this side of the House there can come no intelligent answer. The only thing we know is that they say they spend $15,000 a year and that expenditure is not looked into by a single officer of the department to see whether it is made or not and they scrape in from $75,000 to $85,000 a year. My belief is that it is an unmitigated fraud from A to Z.—an unmitigated fraud and a disgrace from A to Z. It is an improvident contract and I think I have said enough to show that it is an absurd contract.

What about this doctrine of secrecy ? It will be said—the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has already said it—that it makes no matter whether these things are secret or not—none of our business who are the directors of the company, none of our business whether it is incorporated or not, we are too inquisitive. The only thing that it is necessary to know is : Do they do the work ? We do not know, we do not want to know whether they are a company, whether they are incorporated, or who is behind them or anything of the kind. That is not the work of this parliament. For the smallest steamship subsidy we give, a vote specially defining it, is passed by this parliament, we define the company, we know the company, we know its responsibility and we know if it is able to carry on the work. Unless we knew that we would not give the vote. We have tenders for the construction of a railway. What is all this pother about who compose the companies that tender, or their financial responsibility ? Yet, the hon. Minister of the Interior puts forth this doctrine :

> My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has intimated that we should not do business with a company unless we know who compose the company. That is a remarkable doctrine. We pay subsidies to steamship companies to the amount of many, many thousands every year and we never inquire who compose the companies.

That is not correct.

> It does not interest us who are the directors in the companies. We know with whom we do business and whether we get service or not, and that is all we require to know in the transaction.

Will the right hon. gentleman who leads the government subscribe to that doctrine ? There is such an Act as the Independence of Parliament Act. Take the doctrine of the Minister of the Interior and what would happen ? Every five members of parliament could form themselves into a company, keep it secret, refuse the names of their directors, the names of their incorporators and the like of that under the admirable and beautiful doctrine of the Minister of the Interior and every one of them could be up to the arm pits in contracts and business engagements with this government. Is not publicity the one thing that is required to-day and secrecy in public companies the one thing that is abhorred ? The whole of legislation, the whole trend of legislation, the whole trend of investigation is to bring out the responsibilities of the company by showing its men and showing its capital and holding it responsible. Who could you hold responsible now in this North Atlantic Trading Company ? The Minister of the Interior has been sitting there for six years and he has been checking out money all that time to a company that never existed. There is your Minister of Finance whose duty it is to keep the finances of the country and up to this date he has checked out $296,000 to a company that never existed. If you want to bring anybody to book whom will you bring to book ? The North Atlantic Trading Company ? It does not exist. It has no home, it has no body, it has no entity. Who is responsible ? Nobody, but the cheque goes out for $296,000 of the people's money and unless a change is made a cheque in the end to the amount of a million dollars of the people's money will go out. To whom? To the North Atlantic Trading Company of whom no man knows anything and which has been proved to have had, for six years at least, no entity, no existence and to-day when we get a shred of the truth we find a kind of clerk's association on the Island of Guernsey instead of the magnificent steamship magnates of Central and Northern Europe.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to carry this much farther. I have simply tried to draw an outline of this most singular and remarkable transaction. I have done it imperfectly but I have done it in part. What I have left undone those who are to follow will fully amplify. I commenced by saying that this had all the birth marks of a Siftonian transaction. I think I have proved that and proved it to the hilt. it is all delightfully Siftonian, characteristic, full flavoured, all the marks of the Siftonian cult about it. In the Department of the Interior, which seems to be a fit temple for its votaries, the cult was established and there it flourished. It has its land marks, its milestones, its places of rest, from the frozen Yukon to the sunnier climes of middle Europe, studded all along the path of pilgrimage. Into this temple men come. Out of it men go, but how changed. Its priests primary and secondary seem to be giving us the rakes progress reversed.

They go in at their worst and they come out at their best. Or, it is a kind of a modern Pilgrim's Progress—not to a spiritual but to a material Paradise. Your novice enters it a pauper—he comes out a millionaire. He goes in a poor pilgrim, leaning on his staff and with modest garments, he comes out a pampered prince, clad in fine raiment, riding in liveried chariots. Whiskey permits, Treadgold concessions, claim lifting in the north ; land looting, timber, coal scrip, wire fence graft in the middle areas. Immigration frauds everywhere—crowned by a million dollar contract with a headless, houseless, homeless monstrosity, a sort of a fugitive maw into which the Siftonians pour Canada's hard earned taxes. And who takes them out ? An interrogation point may well be put after that query ? All this seems to happen through the wonderful working, changing power in that temple of the Interior. And after the high priests and the secondary priests have had their transformations, the acolytes spread over a wide range of country with patrimony and franchises and benefices scattered to them with a liberal hand, applaud the progress of the chief, and now mourn his departure. But we have no sympathy with the right hon. gentleman who leads this government. Your sins are now coming home to you with just retribution ; the chickens that you hatched out of these eggs are coming home to roost, as curses ; you brought this gentleman from the west here ; you upheld his hands, you made him powerful, you fed him, you established his cult, you put his acolytes around him, you declared that every tree he planted bore golden fruit. If to-night, these apples of Hesperides in your mouth become ashes—and bitter ashes—we deplore it but we do not sympathize with you ; not one little bit.

I beg leave to move as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply.

That the contracts entered into by the government of Canada with the North Atlantic Trading Company were made without the authority and knowledge of parliament.

That the engagements thus undertaken cover a possible period of over fifteen years and involve the payment by the country of about one million dollars without any reasonable compensating advantages.

That the contracts were made under a pledge not to disclose the personnel or agents of the alleged company who are either unknown to the government, or if known to the government have not been disclosed to parliament notwithstanding various attempts to secure the information.

That it does not appear that at the time these contracts were made the alleged Trading Company had any corporate existence, any recognized headquarters, any known directors or officers, that it had any vessels afloat, or possessed any trading or operating facilities of any kind or any agents or agencies effective or otherwise.

That no evidence has been given to parliament of the efficiency of its plans and methods of operation, or that it has been primarily instrumental in sending one single immigrant to Canada.

That the conditions of the contracts are injurious, improvident and absurd.

That immediate steps should be taken to terminate the existing contract.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House and the country are to be congratulated on the successful deliverance to-night of the remarks of the assistant leader of the opposition. For some time past we have been teetering as it were on the edge of an abyss. The air has been thick with rumours of what was going to happen when my hon. friend exploded his bombshell in regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company. The business of parliament has been held up for two sittings awaiting the explosion of this supposed bombshell and a committee of the House has been sitting under stress for some weeks awaiting the same stupendous catastrophe. The only complaint I have to make is that in view of the information I will give the House before the close of my remarks, my hon. friend has placed the particulars of this contract before the House and country in such favourable terms that I am afraid the action which the department has found it desirable to take will not meet with that unanimous approval which I had looked for. There is one feature of my hon. friend's remarks which I may be pardoned for alluding to : I speak of that part of his speech which was essentially personal, in which he used the name of a member of this House who is not present.

Mr. LAKE. He never is.

Mr. OLIVER. This member of the House has been a member continuously for some ten years ; he has been subjected to attack, at rare intervals, to his face in the House, but never to my memory by the hon. the assistant leader of the opposition. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has so much to say with regard to the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) the late Minister of the Interior, it would be entertaining to this House, and I am sure my hon. friend Mr. Foster would get information and instruction that it seems to me he very much needs, if he were to await the presence of the member for Brandon and then use the remarks he has seen fit to use to-night. I have a little to say with regard to the discovery of the North Atlantic Trading Company contract. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has informed the country that its existence was discovered last session of parliament. It was perhaps the misfortune of parliament and the country that my hon. friend was not present during some of the preceding sessions ; but if he had been present, or if he had followed the proceedings of the committees of the House, he would have learned that the existence of the North Atlantic Trading Company was known to members of this House and was discussed in a Committee of the House ; and if the same course was not taken then that has been taken by my hon. friend—that is to say, if the privilege of parliament and the authority of parliament were not then invoked to probe this matter to the bottom, as he phrases it—it was, I assume, because the gentlemen who were then aware of its existence, and who were then responsible for the conduct of affairs in parliament, were willing to believe that the best interests of immigration and the best interests of the country were better served by respecting the conditions which were said to attach to that contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the occasion to which the hon. gentleman alludes?

Mr. OLIVER. The investigation by the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. U. WILSON. What year?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the year, but my hon. friend can easily find the documents. My hon. friend sees fit to disregard the position of consideration if not of prudence which was held by the then members of the House, including his colleague the leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not a member of the Agriculture Committee. That is the only instance the hon. gentleman has given to me.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is the leader of the opposition in this House; he was a member of the last parliament, and he must accept his share of responsibility for the action or inaction of his followers in regard to public matters.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the hilarity, the satirical hilarity, with which the suggestion of leadership by the hon. leader of the opposition is met by his followers is in very close accord with the opinion we on this side have generally held with regard to that subject. I was about to say that there are members of the House, and I believe members of the opposition, who look upon the question of immigration, as well as upon other questions concerning the government of this country, from a somewhat different standpoint from that occupied by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—who recognize their responsibility as members of the House and the responsibility of the government. Not so with my hon. friend. If it so pleases him, as a matter of curiosity, or as the basis of a speech, with which he may see fit to afflict the House, no consideration of public policy or of the public good will interfere with his carrying out of the whim of the moment. This matter of immigration is one of considerable importance to this country. It is one that is entitled to the consideration of every man who is charged with public responsibility, and it is some thing new to find that my hon. friend was cheered and applauded by his followers to-night in declaring against a policy of immigration.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. The time has come, he said, when the pressure from behind and the attractions of this country, the efforts of immigrants already here, were sufficient to induce all the immigration that Canada requires, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I am sorry to say that my hon. friend did not understand me correctly.

Mr. OLIVER. If I did not understand what the hon. gentleman meant, I certainly did understand what he said. Now, does the House and does the country altogether realize how important this question of immigration is and has been in Canada? Do they realize that the policy of immigration is a most important part of that general policy which has resulted in the present favourable conditions in this country, and do they realize that the policy of immigration is necessarily one that cannot be measured with a tape line, that cannot be fitted to the multiplication table, that cannot be measured by the standards which my hon. friend sees fit to set up, any more than water can be measured by the yard or peaches by the acre? He assumes to set up a standard that would be required, and properly required in the erection of a public building, and apply that to the carrying forward of a system of immigration. I had occasion to make some remarks in regard to that position a few days ago, and I have to say this, that if this House insists that every move that shall be made by this government to secure immigrants shall be known before it is made, then this House will have taken the responsibility of providing that that effort shall be forestalled by all agencies that are not favourable to immigration to Canada. The position which my hon. friend has placed before this House at such length to-night in regard to immigration would make successful immigration effort an impossibility.

Immigration, in the minds of most of our people, has meant the securing of settlement and development for the Northwest, the making of the prairies productive. It was with this idea in view that, away back in the fifties, the great men of the two old provinces of Canada undertook confederation with the hope of extending Canada to the Pacific ocean. They recognized that the agricultural possibilities in the valley of the St. Lawrence were limited, while the agricultural possibilities in the valleys of the Red river and the Saskatchewan were stupendous. They recognized that if Canada was to be a great country, it was there it was to be great. It is a lifetime since the great minds of Canada took part in securing control of those western prairies with a view to their becoming productive by means of settlement through immigration effort.

It is not only that they wished to settle up Western Canada but they also had in their minds the impossibility of holding the natural increase of population of Eastern Canada against the rival attractions of the Western States, and they hoped, by acquiring the Northwest Territories and giving access to them, to secure the settlement in our own country of our own people as well as an increase of population from other countries. Forty years ago it was recognized that if Canada was ever to become great, it must be by the settlement of the Northwest, and from that day to this that subject has been foremost in the minds of those charged with our country's destinies. Upon the success or failure of each successive government to secure the settlement and development of the Northwest stands or falls the credit of that government in the judgment of Canada. I do not wish to weary the House by any lengthy particulars, but let me express, in the fewest possible words, an idea of what the settlement and progress of the Northwest in the past ten years, under this Siftonian management of the Immigration department, has meant to Canada in hard cash. There are in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta a total area of some 370,000,000 acres. We will take it for granted, for the purpose of calculation, that half of that area, or a little more than half, is of agricultural value, and we will say that in that great western country we have 200,000,000 acres of agricultural land suitable for settlement and the production of wealth. In 1896 the extreme value that could be put upon that land was $2 an acre. That was the extreme value because as was stated here the other night, a railway company, which had the right of selecting the choicest lands within a tract of millions of acres, was glad to sell a million acres at $1.55 per acre, not ten years ago, but five years ago. Therefore I say that our 200,000,000 acres at that time was worth 400 millions at an outside figure, whereas to-day, if the reports which we hear from day to day are correct, that land is worth $6 an acre, at a moderate estimate, or $1,200,000,000, being an increase value of $800,000,000 in the real estate of Canada in six years under the Siftonian administration of the Interior and Immigration Department. Is it then wonderful that the position of Canada to-day is different from what it was ten years ago? Is it wonderful that our wealth has increased, that our cities are building up and increasing in number, that we can get millions for railways to-day where we could not get thousands ten years ago. In my administration of the department of the Interior I have from day to day to turn people away who are asking for thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of that land at advanced prices, and it is safe to say that every acre could be sold within a month, in the present condition of the money and land market, at the price I have mentioned.

Now, what had the immigration work of the department to do with that increase in value? It is the people who make the country, and it is the demand for land by the people which makes the price. The reason the land was only worth $2 an acre ten years ago was not because it was not fertile or because the climate was not good or because there was not railway communication or because the country did not have good institutions, or law and order were not well maintained. No, it was because nobody wanted the land, and that lack of demand was due partly to the fact that the country had been badly administered and partly to the fact that the people who wanted the land did not know how good it was. It has been the work of the Department of Immigration in telling the people of the world how good the land of the Northwest is, to which this great advance is due. Because of that administration, which makes living in that country desirable, which has removed the disabilities that lay upon it during those preceding years, and because of the information that department has spread, by one means and another, throughout the world during those ten years, we have had that demand for settlement which has produced that increase in value at which we are all surprised. That increase did not come as the dew from heaven, but resulted from the aggressive policy of the department of Interior or Immigration, or from Siftonianism, if you like to give it that name.

In 1895 the crop of that country was estimated at 32,000,000 bushels and in 1896 it was estimated at 18,000,000 bushels. The crop of 1895 was a bumper one but that of 1896 was a small one. Well, in this last year of 1905, the crop was 85,000,000 bushels, worth $50,000,000, and the total value of the crop of the west during the past year was not less than $100,000,000—$100,000,000 of created wealth as the result of the operations of one year by those immigrants which this Siftonian policy placed on the land. And remember, Sir, that these results are only the beginning. The immigration that has gone in during the past three years has not made itself felt in the matter of production. It is but the result of the lesser immigration of the preceding years that we have in our crop returns. But with the increase of hundreds of thousands of settlers in the past two or three years, the next two or three years will tell you what has been the result to Canada of this Siftonian administration of the Interior Department.

My hon. friend asks this House, this supposedly intelligent House, to condemn an administration which has produced such results, because he is not able to find out who are the shareholders of a certain company.

Now, this matter is not one of mere academic discussion ; it is a matter of policy upon which the government and the opposition are both to be judged. The government has no excuse to offer for its North Atlantic Trading Company contract or for any other part of its immigration and land policies. It demands to be judged by the results that have been achieved. But the country is interested in knowing not only what is the policy of the government but what is the policy of the opposition who aspire to be a government, who ask to be entrusted with the conduct of public affairs. And on no question is it more important to the people of Canada that they should have a definite and satisfactory answer than on this question of an immigration policy. The immigration policy of this government has been before the people for ten years. The immigration policy of the party in opposition has been placed before the country here to-night, placed before the country by a gentleman who was a member of a government from 1888 to 1896. When that hon. gentleman speaks to-night, we want to know if his policy is what it was when he was a member of the government. We have every reason to believe that it is the same policy—certainly I am safe in saying that he will not deny that it is the same policy. Then let us have some of the results of the policy of that administration. I go back to the year 1883-4, a year in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was a member of this House supporting the government of that day. In that year there was an expenditure of $511,208 on immigration. The amount expended on continental European immigration is not stated in the return. The total number of immigrants for that year was 103,824 of whom 6,151 were continental Europeans. And as a result of this expenditure of half a million dollars and this immigration of one hundred and three thousand people there were just 3,753 homesteads taken up in all Manitoba and the Northwest. Ten years later, in the year 1893-4, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a member of the government. And, under the policy which he was at such pains to expound to-night, the expenditure had decreased to $202,235. Of that expenditure a part was in bonuses—bonuses, Mr. Speaker, on continental European immigrants—the amount spent under that head being $14,935. There was a total immigration from Europe of 20,829, of whom, 4,825 were from the continent of Europe, and in that year the total homestead entries were 3,209. In the year 1903-4, under the present government the expenditure on immigration was $744,788, and on continental European immigration, $39,933 ; the total number of immigrants was 130,331, of whom 34,728 were from the continent of Europe. And the homesteads were 26,819. Now, let us compare the expenditure and results as between 1896 and 1905. In 1896, the total expenditure on immigration was $120,199. This was the expenditure of which my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) expressed himself as being so proud when he spoke here the other night and to which he pointed out as indicating the immigration policy of his party. In this year, 1896, the expenditure on immigration from continental Europe was $6,710. The whole number of immigrants was 16,835. The immigrants from the continent of Europe were 4,451. And the number of homestead entries in that year—and this, mark you, was after eighteen years of the immigration policy of our friends of the opposition as set forth by the records of the government at that time—was 1,857. In the year 1904-5 the expenditure on immigration was $972,356. The amount spent on continental European immigration was $86,967. The whole number of immigrants in that year was 146,266; continental European immigrants 37,255, homesteads taken 30,819. This is the Siftonian policy of immigration as compared with the Fosterian policy of immigration. The government, I repeat, has no apology to offer in this connection. In 1895, 2,394 homestead entries, in 1905, 30,819 homestead entries. In the years from 1879 to 1896, 18 years, during a part of which my hon. friend was a member of the government and during the whole of which I presume he was a supporter of the government, there was a total of 65,000 homestead entries. In the 2½ years 1904, 1905, and one-half of 1906, there were 75,000 homestead entries, 10,000 more in two and a half years under Siftonian administration than there were in 18 years under Fosterian administration. It was not until this government came to power, and not until my predecessor assumed office, that the hopes of the founders and fathers of confederation, had realization in the building up of Canada by the filling of the Northwest. Just one instance more. In the years 1894, 1895, and 1896, there were in all these three years 389 homestead entries in the Edmonton land office. In the month of March 1906 there were 567 homestead entries in the same office. There were nearly twice as many entries in the one month under this administration as there were in the last three years of the administration of which my hon. friend was a member and he asks for an excuse and an apology. It is up to him and his friends——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear!

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many of these were due to the North Atlantic Trading Company?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been the complaint of my hon. friends on the other side that too many of the entries at the Edmonton office have been due to that company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was that complaint made and by whom?

Mr. OLIVER. Some of the supposedly witty gentlemen who sit behind my hon. friend advanced that argument when they were discussing the returns of the election. I would refer to the member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) for one.

Mr. BENNETT. Tell us about the contract now.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes, I will tell about that later. The other feature of this case to which I wish to allude is this: One of the purposes of the acquirement of the Northwest by Canada was that it should retain to Canada the overflow of our surplus population. The census of the United States for 1890 showed that there were in the United States 1,000,000 persons born in Canada; during the twenty-five years following the civil war in that country these people had gone there from Canada. During the greater part of that time the policy and administration of our friends had been paramount in our country. It was said here the other night that it was idle to expect our Northwest to fill up until the United States had been filled up. But let me point to this fact that Canada before the year 1890 had sent to the United States a million of her native born people while her own Northwest, although it had railroad connection, was lying vacant.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear!

Mr. OLIVER. There was no reason why the United States should fill up at the expense of Canada except the policy and administration that we have heard voiced here in the discussion to-night. That was a good enough reason then, it would be just as good a reason to-day if this country were so unfortunate that it could be given.

Mr. INGRAM. You would have given them the whole country in 1891 if you could.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend was very strong on the terms of this contract but, as I said already, when he read out the terms it certainly struck me that they were very favourable. However, perhaps it was not so much the terms that he complained about as the fact that the contract was entered into without the authority of parliament, that it was entered into improperly, and I shall not trouble the House to go over the adjectives which he used in that connection. I have some information to give the House in regard to this matter which may be of interest. It might almost be supposed that bonuses on immigrants from continental Europe had never been heard of before my hon. friend sprung in the House here to-night. I presume the House will be astonished to know that in the year in which my hon. friend entered parliament as a supporter of the government the following letter was written by John Low, secretary of the Department of Agriculture to J. N. Abbott, general passenger agent of the Erie Railway Company, corner of Portland and George streets, New York. It is dated:

Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, January 30, 1882.

I go so far back into ancient history for the purpose of defining accurately the position of my hon. friend in regard to immigration. The letter says:

I have submitted for the consideration of the Minister of Agriculture the points of conversation I had with you in the interview of Friday last. I reported that you expressed willingness generally to assist this department in promoting German and Scandinavian immigration through New York, and via the Erie Railway to the province of Manitoba.

That you would generally afford the department the use of your agency for distributing advertising matter and publications in Europe.

That for the purposes of promoting such immigration you would be the medium of paying to emigration agents in Germany or Scandinavia a commission of $5 per adult for able-bodied immigrants of the agricultural class, or mechanics in common pursuits, such as carpenters, builders, blacksmiths, &c.—such commission being confined to adults of eighteen years of age and upwards—that being the age prescribed by the Dominion Lands Act at which a settler can take up a homestead in Manitoba.

On the understanding that in the next preceding paragraph that only adult male and female immigrants of the class as named are sent the selection will be left to the agents to whom you confide this duty. None but persons of good health and character and able to earn their own living should be sent. Such commission to be payable upon production of the last coupon collected in Manitoba for a voucher. The minister declined, notwithstanding the representations I made to him of your views, to accept the responsibility of paying this commission on the exchanging of the steamship order for the coupon ticket at one of your offices in New York.

It would follow that the agent in Europe would have to take the risk of the immigrant proceeding to Manitoba, so as to give up the coupon, but as this bonus of $5 would be a further inducement, added to the commission of ten per cent on the whole cost of the passage from the port of embarkation in Europe, to the point of St. Paul in Minnesota, it is found that it (the bonus) which you stated to me would be also paid, will make a large and distinct additional inducement to the emigration agent, in that it will as nearly as possible double his commission.

For the consideration of the use of your agency by the department it was understood that all orders issued by the government agents to immigrants for the Canadian Northwest via New York should be confined to the Erie Railway Company, and that the immigrants after leaving its lines should proceed by the Grand Trunk Railway to Chicago, if the all rail route is taken, or via Sarnia or Collingwood if the lake route via Duluth is chosen.

The Minister of Agriculture authorizes me to state that he concurs in the foregoing offer of commission and conditions.

I am to request that you will as early as possible furnish me with an acknowledgment of this letter agreeing to its terms, in order that no time may be lost in having the necessary forms printed, and advertising matter and pamphlets sent to the continent.

Will this hon. House compare this proposition of the secretary of the Department of Agriculture, made to the secretary of the Erie Railway Company, with the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company? I have also a letter here bearing on the same subject. It is signed by J. H. Pope. He does not sign himself as Minister of Agriculture, but he was Minister of Agriculture, I am credibly informed, at that time. It is dated Ottawa, 16th March, 1882, and is addressed to Sir A. T. Galt, High Commissioner of Canada in London. He says:

Department of Agriculture,
Ottawa, March 16, 1882.

Sir,—I inclose to you herewith a copy of a correspondence which has taken place under my directions between this department and Mr. J. N. Abbott, the general passenger agent of the New York Erie Railway Company, on the subject of German and Scandinavian immigration to Manitoba and the Northwest.

I think it well to explain that that correspondence is a continuation of negotiations which I have had since 1880 with this railway company, and arises from the fact of my knowledge of its very extensive connections and ramifications with emigration agencies in the German empire, and the Scandinavian Kingdoms.

You will see from the correspondence that I have agreed to pay a bonus of $5 for each adult immigrant. after arrival in Manitoba, upon proof afforded of such arrival by the collection of the last coupon of the ticket via the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

You will also see it is agreed by the Erie Railway Company that a further commission of ten per cent will be paid to the emigration agent on the total amount of the ticket as far as St. Paul, that is ocean and railway, and this will probably amount to about $5 more.

Thus making a bonus commission of about $10 to the agent, an inducement it is believed which will cause him to make particular exertions to send emigrants to Manitoba.

As respects a point of discussion as to the advisability of paying the $5 government bonus to an agent for commission or to the emigrant as an aid, or in reduction of passage, I may mention to you that in point of fact the latter cannot be done through any agency connected with the German steamship lines, or the inland railway transport from the point of New York, and the Department of Agriculture has no agency by which it could reach the immigrant, either in Germany or Scandinavia, to offer him the $5 as an inducement.

All question, therefore, as to the advisability of mode of payment is settled by the fact as to what is possible to be done.

That was the rule in 1882 under the Hon. J. H. Pope, Minister of Agriculture, but it is not to be the rule in 1902 under the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior.

I may add, moreover, that in my opinion the payment of the bonus to the agent will afford the greater stimulant to promote immigration to Canada.

I propose also to make this bonus payable in precisely the same way, upon the same conditions and on the same forms, in the case of immigrants to Manitoba and the Northwest from Germany or Scandinavia, sailing from the port of Liverpool by either the Allan, the Dominion or the Beaver line, or in fact by any Canadian line from other ports, on proof of the bona fide character of the immigration being clearly established.

You will see from the correspondence that I propose to leave the selection of the immigrants under the general directions stated, to the agents of the steamship companies, for one reason, because the department has no agency, nor is it possible for it to establish any, at least that would be adequate, for the coming season, in either Germany or Scandinavia.

The arrangement is, moreover, tentative, the object being to establish a nucleus of a German and Scandinavian settlement in Manitoba and the Northwest. There is also the check afforded that no bonus will be paid until after the arrival of the immigrants in Manitoba, the chances being against their subsequent removal after reaching that distant point.

The forms of proceeding are indicated in the correspondence herewith, and it is a stipulation as regards the immigrants who come by New York, that they shall be exclusively ticketed by the Erie Railway, a route which is well adapted for immigrant transport between that point and the west. The set off for this special arrangement, as you will see, being the use of the foreign connections of that company for promoting this Canadian immigration.

Forms and tickets must therefore be provided in accordance with this understanding.

As respects the mode of communication with the German and Scandinavian agents, I think it is better that you should put yourself in communication with Mr. Loveland, the general immigration agent of the Erie Company in Europe, as authorized by Mr. Abbott and get him to make the arrangements in detail with the steamship agents in Germany and Scandinavia.

You can also arrange with him the form of the coupon ticket and order for the bonus having in view the nature of the agreement and stipulation in the correspondence herewith.

There will probably come a question as to whether the department should pay Mr. Loveland's travelling expenses while engaged on this service, on its behalf in view of the stipulation of the exclusive benefit to be derived by the Erie Railway Company, as its compensation for such service of its agent. You had better sound Mr. Loveland on that point, keeping this principle in view. If he should demand to have his expenses paid, either in whole or in part, it would be better not to make any difficulties respecting them. But if you agree to pay, it is better to settle in advance on some definite limit.

I think it advisable that the Dominion of Canada should be well advertised in Germany and Scandinavia, and I should be willing to authorize an appropriation of about $2,000 for such service.

I understand that the reports of the German delegates who visited Canada last summer are being printed under the superintendence of Dr. Otta Hahn, of Reuthingen, in Wurtemburg. I think that very large numbers of these should be circulated, the limit to the possible circulation at this late period being really the extent to which it can be carried with judiciousness.

I trust to your prompt action for carrying into effect these several measures which have been delayed from circumstances beyond my control, owing to the protracted nature of the negotiations with the several steamship and railway lines. I have desired as far as possible, to put into effect a complete system simultaneously, and have therefore held back parts of it.

I hope to be able to send you a cable message respecting arrangements with the Canadian steamship lines before this letter will reach you.

Will this hon. House compare the terms of this agreement with the agreement in regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company? Will it compare the arrangement made with the Erie Railway Company for the use of its immigration agents in Europe and for the use of its travelling agents in Europe as a means of promoting emigration to Manitoba with the terms of the North Atlantic Trading Company's contracts and say which it considers the more justified, most in the public interest or more in accordance with sound policy and administration ?

I listened carefully to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and his strong point in condemnation of this contract was because it was not ratified by parliament. He said : Why, it is only endorsed by the Governor in Council. But I find that this contract with the Erie Railway Company, this contract with the steamship lines, this contract with a gauzy and hazy and visionary somebody or something was continued for fourteen years, from 1882 to 1896, without the endorsation even of the Governor in Council. And if there was not a million dollars paid out under that contract, it was because its terms were either not faithfully lived up to or because the people administering it were not competent to do so. No, I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—there was an order in council but it was passed on January 6, 1893. The contract,—and I think we may safely call it a contract—had only run eleven years before the order in council was passed and the occasion of this order in council may be more particularly explained. Again I apologize—I said the contract ran continuously for that time ; the contract did not run continuously for that time but the payments did. It seems that while my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a member of the government, the government came to the conclusion that this contract should be cancelled and they wrote to Sir Charles Tupper, then High Commissioner in London, advising him that he was to cancel the contract, and here is the reply of Sir Charles Tupper, dated June 24, 1889:

9 Victoria Chambers,
Westminister, S.W.,
June 24, 1889.

Dear Mr. Carling—I beg to refer to your telegrams of the 20 (?) March and the 23rd April, on the subject of discontinuance on December 31st next of the payment of the $5 bonus to continental steamship agents, for adults whom they may book to Manitoba and the Northwest Territory. In accordance with yonr directions I have arranged that the agents shall be notified in July next. After discussing the matter with Mr. Dyke I came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to send out the notice before that date, for the reason that it might peril the success of this year's work.

I cannot, however, allow the opportunity to pass without placing on record an expression of my opinion that the measure will in all probability tend to retard the movement which after many years of labour and effort we have been able to set in motion in the direction of the Dominion. I certainly think the bonus system was the best and most economical that could possibly be adopted for obtaining continental immigrants, and for these reasons I regret its suspension.

There was a difference of opinion apparently in regard to this matter of assistance to immigration, between the hon. member (Mr. Foster) and that great statesman Sir Charles Tupper—in order to secure whose accession to power it may be suggested—my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) sacrificed some part of what he had perhaps least to spare—his honour.

I believe there is no difference of opinion as to the value of these people as settlers, or as to the fact that we must look to a considerable extent, to the continent in settling the vacant lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territory.

It must be borne in mind also, that the payment in question was not an indiscriminate expenditure of money, but simply a payment by result.

I would draw attention to the fact that although it has not been my good fortune to be a follower or supporter of Sir Charles Tupper or to agree with him in many things, the expression which he uses here is almost identical with the expression I have used in this House in practically the same connection.

The success, however, which has attended our efforts in this direction is abundantly proved by the statistics of the emigration that has taken place. I find that in 1885 the total number of bonus emigrants was 448; in 1886, 566; in 1887, 808; and in 1888, 1,430. In this connection it will be remembered that no payments have been made excepting in those cases in which the settlement of the people in Canada has been proved beyond question. From the information I have been able to gather I fear it is a matter of some doubt whether the steamship agents on the continent will be disposed to distribute printed matter about Canada and endeavour to attract attention to the advantages which are offered by the different parts of the country with that eagerness they have hitherto shown if they have not some more inducement to do so than the steamship and railway commissions.

I would also recall to your attention our past experience in connection with the cessation of activity in emigration work. We may pursue a policy of comparative inactivity for two or three years, and in this way show some saving in the expenditure, but the time inevitably comes when a period of activity is again necessary, and in order to get the people then, a very much larger expenditure has to be incurred than would have been necssary had a steady and moderate policy been continued, devoted to keeping before the public in all countries whence emigration has taken place, the advantages of Canada for purpose of settlement. I do not regard our expenditure in connection with emigration either continental or British on this side as having been at all of an extravagant nature. Indeed it has been exceedingly moderate, and very much less than that which individual railway companies in the United States have devoted year by year to such purposes.

All that I have said on the subject of continental emigration applies with equal force to the importance of keeping the Dominion prominently before the British public. Immigration of certain classes is very essential to Canada, not only to populate the vacant lands, but for the purposes of developing its trade and commerce, and it seems to me that this is not sufficiently borne in mind when the question of the comparatively small expenditure that is necessary to attract it is under consideration in the press and other quarters.

There is another matter to which I must call your attention. I find on my arrival that we are very short indeed of printed matter. We receive numerous applications for printed information which we shall not in a month or two be able to supply, unless you authorize the printing of some additional literature. What we want is a new addition of the official handbook, a copy of which I inclose, and of an official folder, copy also inclosed, which have been prepared under my directions, the last editions of which are now exhausted. We must keep the country before the classes of people that are wanted, and we cannot do this more judiciously and effectually than by the continued distribution of the papers to which I have referred. I hope you will authorize me to do something in this direction at an early date. It will, of course, come within next year's vote.

You will be aware also that for many years past we have had displayed at every post office in the United Kingdom a poster somewhat similar to the inclosed specimen. It is now, however, over a year since the last edition was distributed, and the time has arrived when we should prepare another poster and send it round. This will involve an expenditure of from £20 to £25, there being about twenty-three or twenty-four thousand post offices in the United Kingdom. This is a cheap advertisement, and a very effective one, and I find that a good many of our correspondents refer to it in their communications with me. I hesitate, however, to incur the expense without your authority, and I trust you will let us hear from you upon this subject at the earliest possible date.

I am, yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) CHARLES TUPPER.

Here you have a comment upon the administration of immigration affairs under the policy outlined by my hon. friend from North Toronto to-night. He was a member of that government which, on the word of the High Commissioner, did not keep its immigration agencies in England supplied with literature, which was a year behind when the literature was supplied; and in regard to the important matter of immigration literature the High Commissioner could not incur the most trifling expenditure without referring it to the government at Otawa.

I said in the beginning of my remarks that immigration could not be successfully carried on under the system laid down by my hon. friend. The evidence of that fact is this letter of Sir Charles Tupper and the immigration returns for those years. I am afraid I cannot give the returns accurately, because I find that our friends opposite compiled their returns in this way: They had a column for British immigation, a column for continental immigration, a column for United States immigration, and a column for the total immigration.

The returns show the immigration from Britain from 1882 to 1896 to have been as follows: 1882, 41,283; 1883, 45,439; 1884, 31,787; 1885, 18,591; 1886, 23,507; 1887, 31,-104; 1888, 30,852; 1889, 19,384; 1890, 21,793; 1891, 22,042; 1892, 22,636; 1893, 20,071; 1894, 16,004; 1895, 14,956; 1896, 12,384. The policy of the administration of my hon. friend was certainly getting in its work.

The continental immigration in those years was as follows: 1882, 12,083; 1883, 9,677; 1884, 6,151; 1885, 3,072; 1886, 4,995; 1887, 12,376; 1888, 12,962; 1889, 4,320; 1890, 2,938; 1891, 7,607; 1892, 8,360; 1893. 9,562; 1894, 4,825; 1895, 3,834; and in 1896, 4,451.

The returns of immigration from the United States showed the following: 1882, 58,372; 1883, 78,508; 1884, 65,886; 1885, 57,-506; 1886, 40,650; 1887, 41,046; 1888, 44,952; 1889, 67,896; 1890, 50,336; 1891, 52,516.

Those were the very years during which the greater portion of that million of Canadians moved from Canada to the United States; and later on they tell the truth by not giving any returns of immigrants for 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895 or 1896.

Now, the letter of Sir Charles Tupper had the desired effect. An order in council was passed to reinstate the bonuses, which I assume had been cancelled as they had been given in the first place, by departmental letter. The bonus to continental booking agents was allowed on January 20, 1882, it was cancelled on April 24, 1889; and on October 30, 1890, it was revived, and payment was made for the interval between April 24, 1889, and October 30, 1890. That was where the order in council came in. It made provision for the payment of bonuses on immigrants who had come in during the period when there was no authority to pay any bonus. But there was another order in council passed on January 6, 1893, in which another feature is introduced. It provided that the bonus on British immigrants should be $1.75 per head, while the bonus on continental European immigrants should remain at $5 per head.

Now, I have just a word or two to say in regard to this North Atlantic Trading Company contract. Hon. gentleman opposite have been asking during the last two months for mountains of information in regard to this matter, and they must bear with me for a little while to-night; I will not trespass on their time very long. I hope I shall be able to relieve their thirst for information. The contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company does not alter the position which existed practically unaltered since 1882, as set forth by Sir Charles Tupper and in other correspondence, that it is sound public policy to pay to booking agents a bonus of $5 per head on adult immigrants from the continent of Europe. That was the policy of the late government, it has been the policy of this government, and the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company is a contract to pay this bonus to booking agents collectively instead of individually—that and only that. Our hon. friends opposite have exhausted every parliamentary device and resource to back up their imagination that there has been some other course in this connection; and to-night we have the evidence that they have failed, as they must fail, in finding out something that does not exist. We have paid to booking agents individually, as the returns show, in continental bonuses, the following amounts: 1892, $5,270; 1893, $7,-235; 1894, $14,935; 1895, $1,480; 1896, $6,710; 1897, $3,045; 1898, $14,880; 1899, $11,130; 1900, $24,298.33; 1901, $24,262.60; 1902, $35,-916; 1903, $34,553.33; 1904, $38,933.33; 1905, $86,967.33.

Now, to whom did our hon. friends on the other side pay the bonuses? They paid them to individual booking agents—so their letters show. To whom did this government pay in the years preceding the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company? They paid to individual booking agents.

To whom do they pay now? Not to any individual booking agents but to the North Atlantic Trading Company, a collective interest of booking agents. And do they get value for their payments? Judged by the standard laid down in the letter of Sir Charles Tupper, they do. And any man of common sense, not warped by political bias, will agree that that is the main question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the North Atlantic Trading Company? And who were they before their incorporation in June, 1905?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the faintest idea.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TISDALE. How do you know they are booking agents if you do not know who they are?

Mr. OLIVER. I know they are engaged in the business of booking emigrants to Canada, and I know that they work under better conditions to-day, as a company, than they did when they worked as individuals, and are sending more emigrants to Canada. That was the purpose of the change from payments to individual agents to payments to this company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are these solicitors' clerks, who have been mentioned in Lord Strathcona's cable, the booking agents? If not, who are the booking agents?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly they are not.

Mr. PATERSON. Who were your booking agents?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You will find their names in every case if you look into the records of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. The papers of that department are unquestionably at the order of the House, and all the hon. gentleman has to do is to have an order of the House and the papers will be at his service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was only answering the question put by the Minister of Customs. I did not understand the Minister of the Interior to state that the booking agents, during all the years over which he has been going, were not known—the years from 1882 to 1896. But I gathered instead from what he said that the booking agents to whom payments were then made were known.

Mr. OLIVER. I presume they were.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the Minister of Customs asked me to name them—a remarkably sensible question.

Mr. OLIVER. I presume that their names are contained in the Auditor General's Reports, and it is not necessary that I should go into the files of the Department of the Interior to find them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I want to know who are the booking agents to whom these moneys in question were paid.

Mr. OLIVER. The committee have been told repeatedly that the booking agents are the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. Any further search as to the identity of these gentlemen will have to be pursued by the hon. gentlemen opposite by such means as they see fit to take. That is not a matter which concerns me in the administration of my department. What I am concerned with is whether we are getting corresponding results. If we get satisfactory results we shall continue the contract. If we do not, we shall cancel it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the hon. gentleman a moment ago to tell us that these solicitors' clerks, who form the majority of the shareholders of the North Atlantic Trading Company, are not the booking agents. But now he tells us that this company are the booking agents. How does he reconcile those two conflicting statements?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that my hon. friend is rather mistaken in his point. He surely does not assume that some six men who hold one share each in a company of some 300 shares have the majority of these shares. That is rather too absurd.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who do hold the shares?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. There are many companies incorporated in this country. There is, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which, I am credibly informed, gentlemen sitting on the opposite benches are shareholders, and that is a company which has been frequently and to a large extent bonused by this House. I do not know that these gentlemen are in fault in any way in holding shares in that company, which necessarily has dealings with this government from day to day. But if it be no offence on their part to hold shares in this company, why should it be an offence on the part of any body else to hold shares in this other company?

Mr. TISDALE. You have only to look at the time table of the Canadian Pacific Railway to get the names of all its directors, but where are the names of the directors of this company?

Mr. OLIVER. They have been furnished. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke of shareholders, and I say that it is not requisite to our doing business with the Canadian Pacific Railway that the names of its shareholders should be known, and I am further credibly informed that there are hon. gentlemen opposite who from day to day are shareholders and are not shareholders in the Canadian Pacific Railway just as the ticker goes up or down. What the names of the shareholders in this North Atlantic Trading Company may be does not concern me. If it concerns my hon. friends, that is their affair and not mine.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But this North Atlantic Trading Company has no shareholders at all before June, 1905, because it was not then incorporated.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not a matter which concerns me in the administration of my department. I have no objection to hon. gentlemen taking any means within their parliamentary rights to find out anything they wish, but they must not expect me to go out of the way of my ordinary administration to gratify what appears to me to be idle curiosity on their part, or a scent for scandal which so far has failed to locate its victims.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because the hon. minister does not know.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I certainly do not. But there is a point about which my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was very definite. He is very fond of pointing out that we must take the one horn of the dilemma or the other. This contract, he said, contains the provision that those who are parties to it must not violate the laws of the country in which they operate, and on the other hand he suggests that in order to carry out their agreement with this government and do effective service they must violate the laws of the country in which they carry on their operations. Well, what are their operations? They are booking agents. That is to say they sell transportation and they are not confined to selling transportation to Canada. They can sell transportation, no doubt, to any part of the world, just as do ticket agents here in Ottawa. They will sell tickets to England, or France, Australia or Japan, or any other part of the world. As my hon. friend has pointed out, there has been a flow of emigration to the extent of half a million a year from Europe to America, and these people sell tickets to those who are moving from the one continent to the other. In so doing they are not violating the laws of those countries in which they sell those tickets, for if they were, they could not do the business. They need not violate the laws of any country in order to sell tickets. And, as pointed out in the letter of Sir Charles Tupper and other documents in this connection, we pay these people $5 per ticket in order to induce them to sell tickets to people to come to Canada instead of selling tickets indifferently for transportation to the United States. We give them an object to induce the emigrant who is leaving one of these European countries to come to Canada—we make it worth $5 to them to do it. That is the principle of the bonus system, and that is what is required of them, and all that is required of them, by this contract. It is true, there is an indefinite boundary between what is within their rights as citizens of these countries and what is beyond their rights. We expect them to use due activity, and we believe they do use due activity, but we do not require them to break the laws of these countries, and it is not necessary for them to break the laws of these countries in order to fulfil their agreement with this government.

Now, I have dealt with this question at considerable length. I have said that this government has no apology to offer, has no excuse to make either for the North Atlantic Trading contract, or for its administration under that contract, or for its immigration policy generally. But it is the business of the government to administer this immigration policy in the best interests of the country; and that applies to the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract as well as to everything in connection with the policy. In dealing with the North Atlantic Trading Company, in going over its work in the last few years, we find that conditions have changed, there is reason for a change of method.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear!

Mr. BENNETT. Let it come.

Mr. OLIVER. We find that the contract is a good contract—

Mr. FOWLER. Better hang on to it then.

Mr. OLIVER—but we find, that in our estimation it is not being lived up to in full by the company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what respect?

Mr. OLIVER. I will state that presently. And, for this reason we have given notice of the cancellation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear!

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad to have secured the approval of my hon. friends opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear!

Mr. OLIVER. I am delighted to find that they do approve of this action of the government. But I would not like that they should be under any wrong impression.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. OLIVER. As to why the government arrived at this conclusion. And may I draw my hon. friend's attention to this point. They have put forth the argument here in the House, in the committee, in conversation and in the press, that this government was in some way concerned, or committed, or bound up, or financially interested, in some way with this North Atlantic Trading Company. They have, so far, failed to establish the most remote connection between this government, or any official of this government, and this North Atlantic Trading Company. And the fact that this government, believing that the company has not lived up to the letter and spirit of its contract, sees fit to cancel that contract, is ample evidence that the government is not committed to the North Atlantic Trading Company in any way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) a question? When did the government arrive at this conclusion?

Mr. OLIVER. The cable was sent to Lord Strathcona on April 14.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the information come to them that the company was not living up to its agreement ?

Mr. OLIVER. The information has been coming for some little time. But the conclusion was reached, I have said, on the 14th of April.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman give us the date when the information first began to come ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think I could give the hon. gentleman any definite or fixed date on that point. I do not think, if he will consider the matter, that he would repeat the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be inclined to repeat it but for the fact that it does not seem to commend itself to the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. If the House will bear with me, I will give the cable and the letter sent to Lord Strathcona in this connection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the hon. minister does that, would he permit me one more question ? Had any of this information come to the government when they voted down the motion of this House last year to cancel the contract ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the information had not come to the government at that time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It began to come after that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I had then come very recently into the position of minister and was not familiar with the working of the department, and so I was not in a position to form a policy at that time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it now, this information came in some time between the date when the government voted down the motion to cancel, and the 14th of April inst. ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is a fair conclusion. I would like to say further that the vote of last year had no more to do with the conclusion reached by the government than has the investigation which my hon. friends opposite have held or the so-called 'dynamite' which they have exploded here to-night, for the contract was cancelled before this 'dynamite' was exploded.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister kindly—

Mr. PATERSON. We are not in committee.

Mr. OLIVER. All right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister have any objection to laying on the table of the House the information on which this is based ?

Mr. OLIVER. I propose to lay it before the House now.

The following letter was sent to Lord Strathcona :

Ottawa, 14th April, 1906.

Dear Lord Strathcona,—The following cable signed by myself was sent to you to-day :

Dominion, London, England. Notify North Atlantic Trading Company that no bonuses will be paid under company's contract on immigrants arriving in Canada after November 30, 1906. Letter follows.

The agreement of November 28, 1904, provides for the payment of a special sum for the encouragement of immigration from Norway, Sweden and Finland, and also provides that payment on immigrants from certain other European countries shall be restricted to a fixed number.

These provisions indicate clearly the purpose had in view in making and continuing the arrangement with the North Atlantic Trading Company. Notwithstanding the plain purpose of the arrangement the returns show that while the claims made as to immigrants from the countries in respect of which a maximum is fixed are kept up to the maximum the returns of qualified arrivals from Norway, Sweden and Finland, show a continuous falling off. The department can only accept this fact as an indication that the company is not carrying out its agreement in good faith, and that, therefore, under the provision appearing in section 12, that the contract may be cancelled 'if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the minister that the company is failing to carry out its obligations.'

I have considered it desirable to give notice of the cancellation of the contract.

The date is fixed at November 30, so that the company may receive the full benefit of any work it may have done in respect of the current season of immigration.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the telegram to Lord Strathcona which the minister has been good enough to read to the House there are certain returns mentioned upon which a certain conclusion is based. Can the minister tell me within what date those reports are comprised ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are comprised from the fiscal year 1901 to the fiscal year 1905. That is they show in the latter years a decrease in the number of immigrants from the countries in respect of which we paid a special sum and of course that conclusion can only be arrived at by a comparison of the returns of several years.

In conclusion I would say that the importance of the work of immigration and of the immigration department cannot be overestimated, that fair criticism is always welcome, but that unfair criticism not only embarrasses the government, which I suppose is its legitimate object, but it embarrasses the efforts put forth in respect of immigration and thereby injures the country, and that our friends on the other side in taking the position they have done this year for the first time, have placed themselves under the criticism, under the adverse opinion I believe, of the country in regard to this matter. That as far as the administration of this department is concerned, there is every effort to administer it vigorously and in the best interests of the country and that so long as it remains in the charge in which it is at present that vigour will not be abated because of unfair criticism on the part of our friends on the other side. We will have to accept such criticism as they choose to offer. If it is fair we will be glad to accept the benefit of it ; if it is unfair we will simply do our duty irrespective of that criticism. In the case of this North Atlantic Trading Company we find a certain condition existing, we find a contract alive, we believe it to be a good contract but we believe it is not being carried out in its proper spirit by the other parties to the contract. We are therefore, in the discharge of our responsibility, prepared to cancel that contract and we do so without regard to the criticism, the very unfair criticism, which has been made in regard to it. As regards the suggestions of private names that have been used—I think the names of Mr. Sifton, Mr. Smart, and Mr. Preston have been used—all the machinery of parliament is available to our friends on the other side to deal with these gentlemen in such manner and in such way as parliament provides. That has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior. I have only to say in conclusion that when any of my hon. friends desire to call in question the policy or principles or attitude of an hon. member of this House, they might at least have the grace to await his presence in it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). The announcement which the Minister of the Interior has made reminds me a little of the story told in one of his novels by Charles Dickens. When a witness was asked : 'Were you ever kicked downstairs', he replied : 'Never, was pushed once rudely at the head of the stairs, and came down a little faster than usual, that is all.' This announcement has put a new complexion certainly on this debate. I thought certainly the minister was at his best when finally he made that announcement. It induces me to wonder whether the government is prepared to acquiesce in this motion. If the contract is to be cancelled that was the object of the motion. If the government does not acquiesce in that motion I think that in view of the advanced hour, and the new complexion that the discussion has taken on, I would be justified in moving the adjournment of the debate. It would probably shorten discussion.

Mr. OLIVER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend desires 48 hours to prepare his defence, there is no objection at all.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 23, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificate of the election and return of Wilbert McIntyre, Esq., for the electoral district of Strathcona in the province of Alberta.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Wilbert McIntyre, Esq., member for the electoral district of Strathcona, introduced by the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Oliver.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Abstract statement of Insurance companies in Canada for the year ended 31st December, 1905.—Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Reports and communications from the Superintendent of Insurance during the years 1903, 1904 and 1905 relating to defects in or proposed amendments of the Insurance Act.—Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Copy of special report of the Superintendent of Insurance to the Minister of Finance, 9th November, 1905, &c., respecting the regulation of life insurance in Canada. —Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Documents relating to the necessity of investigating the working of insurance companies doing business in the Dominion of Canada, &c.—Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) intend to have these documents which he has just presented printed?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I think that my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) had better allow them to go to the committee in the regular way. Some of them are merely of a formal character, and such as he himself, I am sure, would not propose to have printed. However, I shall be glad to leave that matter to the committee.

Correspondence relating to Port Colborne breakwater and elevators or proposed elevators.—Hon. C. S. Hyman.

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). This return is not quite complete. Some matters from the Railways and Canals Department are to be included.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) when the return relating to Collingwood dry dock may be expected? It is pretty old now.

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). The report has been sent over from the Department of Public Works to the Department of the Secretary of State, which means that I shall probably be able to present it to-morrow or the next day.

INDUSTRIAL AND CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) respecting Industrial and Co-operative Societies. He said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill which I wish to introduce is one intended principally to benefit the poorer classes of the people. It is intended to provide an easy method for the creation of co-operative societies, which societies are principally intended for the benefit of the agricultural and wage-earning classes. The preamble of the Bill enunciates clearly its objects. It says: Whereas it is desirable to provide for the creation and organization of industrial and co-operative societies among the farming and labouring classes of Canada. I need not tell the House how important the subject is. The method of organization here provided for has proved so phenominally successful in European countries and in some other parts of the world, and I think that the time has come to provide for a similar form of organization in this country.

If the House will indulge me a few moments, I shall explain briefly the object of this legislation, in the hope of interesting some of the members and inducing them to give their attention to this matter. I might mention that much of the information which I have obtained has been derived from a very valuable book published in England in 1896, and which can be found in our library, 'The Peoples' Banks', by Mr. Henry Wolfe. In it Mr. Wolfe deals at length with the different kind of banks and co-operative societies established in the different countries of Europe and their mode of operation. Another work, much more recent, and of great value as giving the results obtained by these co-operative societies, is the work of Mr. Edward A. Pratt on the organization of agriculture, published in 1904. Mr. Pratt does not deal so much with the system as with the marvellous results it has produced on the continent of Europe and even in England. There is also in the third volume of the Journal of the Canadian Bankers' Association, to be found in our library, an article at some length reviewing Mr. Wolfe's work. The article is entitled the Peoples' Banks and will be found on page 274, vol. 3.

Co-operation, as it is understood for the purposes of this measure, consists in a union of persons of limited resources in organizations having as their object the securing or the production on favourable conditions, of the necessities of life, the providing of a ready means of investing small earnings and the encouragement of habits of thrift among the people.

I cannot do better than quote to the House, in support of the legislation I am introducing, some authorities of weight, which may induce some hon. members, who may not have given the question any considerable study, to bestow further attention upon it. In order to show that this matter has interested the great as well as the lowly, let me give a few citations.

In his inaugural address to the Leeds Co-operative Congress, lord Derby said:

> It is not in the language of idle flattery, but as the expression of a deliberate and sincere conviction that I begin by telling you that the subject which brings this congress here to-night is, in my judgment, more important as regards the future of England than nine-tenths of those discussed in parliament and around which political controversy centres.

The present Governor General of Canada, Lord Grey, when in England, took a very lively interest in the movement now going on in that country towards the multiplication of these societies. He is himself honorary president of the 'International Co-operative Alliance',—a union having for its object the diffusion of knowledge and the encouragement in different countries of Europe of the formation of these societies. Speaking on this subject, Lord Grey said:

> I believe that the greatest hope of permanent improvement in the condition and status of the working classes lies in the successful application of the co-operative principle to the cultivation of land and other productive industries, I will help on, to the best of my ability, the wise efforts of free men in bringing about its voluntary application to industrial enterprise.

Mr. Gladstone himself has often referred most favourably to the movement in favour of co-operative societies. On one occasion he said:

> That the twentieth century would be the century of co-operation, as the nineteenth had been that of the joint stock form of associations.

On another occasion the same statesman said:

> There has not been a better thing done in this country, in my opinion, than the establishment of co-operation, such as the successful co-operation of which Lancashire deserves the principal credit.

The Duke of Argyle said :

Co-operative societies will raise the feeling of independence in the working classes ; they will begin to feel they are not mere hired labourers, but partners, and to a certain extent, capitalists. It is a significant movement of the working classes to their own improvement.

And Mr. Bright thus spoke :

I wish co-operative societies all success, and I am anxious that they should be managed in all cases by prudent, honest men ; and I strengthen my arguments in favour of giving the suffrage to working men, by showing what they are doing in co-operative societies and other directions, to justify their demand for a share of political power

Mr. John Stuart Mills, the great economist, said :

Of all the agencies which are at work to elevate those who labour with their hands, none are so prominent as the present co-operative movement.

These authorities are corroborated by equally prominent authorities in other countries of Europe. I would like to quote to the House the testimony of an economist of great merit, Mr. Jules Meline, formerly Prime Minister of France, in his very able work entitled ' Le Retour à la Terre '.

(Translation).—Our farmers are no longer obliged to resort to horse dealers when in need of live stock, and to sign promissory notes at unreasonably high rates of interest ; they are in a position to pay cash by calling at their own bank where the necessary amount may be obtained at a maximum rate of three or four per cent.

Facilities to farmers for obtaining funds are certainly more developed and more perfectly organized in this country than anywhere else. The state having put at the disposal of district banks as loans not bearing interest the forty millions of the Banque de France, farmers cannot complain any longer that their progress is impeded by lack of capital or its inadequate supply. In that respect they are on a par with manufacturers and even have lower rates of interest to pay.

Co-operative associations will in time become the great means whereby farmers will free themselves.

Speaking of the marvellous pliability of these institutions, the same statesman said :

(Translation).—They are wonderfully adaptable and indefinitely variable in form ; such has been their development of late years, that the only difficulty, for whoever is desirous of pointing to special cases, lies in their selection.

To-day there are no less than 18,000 farmers' associations, of which 1,500 are savings and loan establishments.

I might multiply these citations because, as is well known by most of us, this movement originated and had perhaps its greatest development in Germany and has also been developed in an extraordinary degree throughout the whole Kingdom of Italy. At a time when agriculture in that country was extremely depressed, after the formation of the present kingdom, and its people were suffering extremely from the want of money, not only in the rural districts but in the cities as well, the establishment of these institutions was perhaps the most potent factor in the revival of prosperity which followed. During the great crisis of 1893 in Italy, under the direction of the then Minister of Finance of Italy, M. Luigi Luzzatti, who was twice Minister of Finance in Italy, these institutions received a great impetus, and although many banks succumbed during the crisis, the savings of the people were, with an extraordinary manifestation of confidence, confided entirely to these rural and small village banks, and in no instance whatever was there a loss sustained of a single cent. In Germany where these banks were first established about fifty years ago, under the direction of a man who has been identified with the establishment of these institutions, Mr. Shultze, they develop with extraordinary rapidity and produced very wonderful results. In his book on the organization of agriculture, Mr. Pratt, referring to Germany, speaks as follows :

There are in Germany 4,000 Raiffeisen banks—

Raiffeisen was a man who, side by side with Mr. Shultze, worked for the establishment of the banks, but his system was somewhat different from the system established by the first mentioned economist. The responsibility of this association was unlimited, that was the principal point of difference, but there are in Germany both Shultze banks and Raiffeisen banks, both systems prevail there. Mr. Pratt says :

There are in Germany 4,000 Raiffeisen banks, that is purely village banks, working in small groups of population.

Of others ' co-operative credit banks, says Mr. Pratt, in general there are 4,455 in Prussia, and 3,399 in other German states—a total of 8,354, representing a membership of close on 1,500,000.'

In other words, the total of peoples' banks or credit associations of all types is 12,354.

Some states will have co-operative credit banks in over 33 per cent of their parishes, and 50 per cent of the farmers in those parishes will be members.

As for the good, adds Mr. Pratt, that has been done by such institutions, Mr. F. P. König says, in a report on ' Agriculture in Germany ', issued by the foreign office :

' It has always been a puzzle to me why English farmers do not club together and form similar co-operative banks for the benefit of all concerned. Co-operation has proved to be the key to success in Germany, and has saved many thousands of farmers from ruin.'

Mr. Pratt goes on to examine the results obtained through the incorporation of these co-operative societies, and other companies. I will just summarize what he says :

There were in Belgium in 1894, only four all newley established. On December 31, 1901, there were 286, connected with six central banks created by the different federations, the 286 societies representing a membership of 13,000. In Holland, Mr. Pratt says, the movement is very active, but he does not give the figures. In Hungary the organization of the Central Co-operative Credit Bank gave a further great stimulus to the general movement, so that by the end of 1903, there were about 2,000 local co-operative credit banks in Hungary, and the whole year's business represented a turn over of £3,000,000 sterling.

Mr. Pratt points out to what an extraordinary degree these credit associations, wherever they had been established, had put a stop to usury. The truth is that experience has demonstrated that no amount of legislation will effectively stop that abuse. In order to put a stop to usury you must remove the cause, and there is no more potent agency to remove the cause of usurious dealings than the creation of associations of this kind. I will now quote from Mr. Pratt:

> In one village, for instance, the leaders of the movement held a meeting of the peasants to induce them to start a village co-operative bank. . . . The peasants took a few days to consider the matter. They then gave a reply in the negative. Inquiry showed most of the villagers were indebted to a group of money lenders who had set up a local bank of their own and now threaten them that if they agreed to the starting of a co-operative credit bank in the place, they would at once call in the whole of the outstanding loans. But the propagandists were equal to the occasion. They obtained from the central fund a sum of money sufficient to pay off the debts of the entire village, thus getting the peasants effectually out of the grasp of the money lenders; and they then established the co-operative credit bank, debiting the peasants with the amounts on their behalf.

In these banks, organized principally in European countries, it is obligatory on the members of the local co-operative and credit banks, not only in Hungary but in other European countries, to pay a small weekly subscription, one penny, two pence or three pence, as the case may be, towards the funds from which the wants of those requiring amounts can be supplied. In Austria the development has been equally phenomenal, says Mr. Pratt:

> There are now in Austria over 2,000 institutions of this kind. Close on 800 came into existence in the three years between 1897 and 1900. Agricultural credit banks are now in course of formation in all parts of Finland, the total number at the beginning of December, 1903, being fifty-one. To show the strength of co-operation in all its various forms and the beneficent results already obtained, there are 300 societies and their amount of actual business done is £160,000. Such figures speak well for the vigour of a movement still in its infancy in a land of only 2,700,000 inhabitants. In Siberia there are over 2,035 co-operative societies of all types, whose export trade amounted to 685,500 cwts, in 1902.

There is an immense trade in eggs from Siberia. England is principally supplied with eggs from Siberia, and that immense exportation of eggs is done principally through the instrumentality of co-operative agricultural societies. There the same marvellous progress has taken place as in other countries of Europe. But let us see what has been done in England. Here I quote again from Mr. Pratt's book:

> Happily here again a good commencement has been made by Co-operative Banks Association, whose headquarters are at 29 Old Queen street, Westminster, S.W. The purpose of this association is to establish both town and country co-operative banks. . . . But experience has already shown no really effective scheme of agricultural organization on a widespread basis can be carried out, even in Great British, unless supplemented by some practical system of co-operative agricultural credit banks, arranged on so comprehensive a scale, as to meet the varying wants of all our agricultural classes. There may not be in England, Wales and Scotland so large a proportion as in Ireland and in various continental countries of those very small cultivators to whom the loan of £5 or £6 from a co-operative bank would be a great personal convenience.
> A certain demand for such facilities there undoubtedly is on the part of labourers and very small producers, and such demand the co-operative bank association should, with adequate support, be well able to meet. But a wider basis of operation than this is required to answer the requirements of farmers who would want to borrow more substantial sums, and might find it an inestimable benefit if they could obtain them from a co-operative credit bank. . . . In almost every agricultural district in Great Britain farmers or cultivators of the smaller class are practically in the hands of commission men or brokers who advance money to them before their crops are ready, and afterwards get the produce at substantially less than its legitimate value because of the financial obligations which the growers incurred towards them at a time when they were pressed for money.

That observation applies to a great many parts of the province of Quebec.

> An agricultural co-operative association backed up by an agricultural credit bank, could meet this evil by itself undertaking the sale of the produce, advancing to the farmer the greater part of the amount which the crop might be expected to realize, and paying the balance to him—less a moderate charge for expenses—when the transaction had been completed. In this way the grower would no longer be at the mercy of the dealers, better results would be obtained for the sale of individual lots, and there would also be a greater prospect of the market prices being maintained, in which case the larger class of growers would benefit as well as the small ones.

That is very much the case, I think, in this country and what has been found on the continent of Europe and what is beginning to be perceived in England is that many of the complaints against railway companies made by farmers in respect to the rates are not well founded but that the railway companies, when sufficient freight is offered to them by the farmers acting collectively through co-operative societies, will give rates which are satisfactory. As a matter of fact, one of the reasons for the agricultural depression existing in England at the present time, is, as pointed out by Mr. Pratt, that a very large proportion of the farm products required in England are shipped from the continent in immense quantities by co-operative agricultural societies who thanks to that co-operation, succeed in obtaining from the railway companies rates that enable them to compete in England with the farmers who have not the advantage of that combination. Of course, most of those who have given any attention to this subject know of the marvellous development of those who started that movement in England known as the 'Equitable Pioneers of Rochdale' whose example is always cited as a wonderful illustration of the work that can be accomplished and the progress that can be made by societies of this kind. These co-operators, the pioneers of Rochdale, founded their society in 1844. There were twenty-eight associates. They were simple poor labouring men and had scarcely any capital at all—a few pounds only—accumulated during months by weekly installments of a few pennies. Ten years later from twenty-eight the number of members had risen to nine hundred. In 1864 the pioneers of Rochdale numbered 4,747 ; in 1874, 7,039 ; and in 1878 more than 10,000. In 1878 their capital amounted to £198,115, their business turn over was £298,888, and they had clear profits of over £40,000. The members of the House know that at the present moment one of the largest co-operative organizations of this kind is in operation in Manchester and is known as the Manchester Wholesale. The Manchester Wholesale is not a co-operative society composed of individuals but of a multitude of co-operative societies. These co-operative societies, after having organized, formed a union which is known as the Manchester Wholesale. They have an immense business of their own. They have tea gardens of their own in India, they have several ships of their own to convey products from foreign countries and if I mistake not a year or two ago they sent out a delegation to this country for the purpose of acquiring a very large tract of land in the Northwest in order to produce their own wheat and raise their own cattle. That commission of delegates reported favourably after having returned to England from Canada and there is every reason to believe that the project of that very important association in regard to the acquiring of land in Canada will be put into execution. I have other data in regard to co-operative societies in other countries in Europe, but I do not wish to take up unnecessarily the time of the House, although the explanations I give now will not be required to be given again when the Bill reaches its second stage. I would like to call the attention of the House to the condition of these societies in Germany and I shall do so by quoting from the report of Mr. John F. Winter, consul for the United States, who, making a report from Germany on the 3rd October, 1902, says :

> Until thirty years ago, the German empire was one of the weakest nations financially ; but now, instead of being in need of foreign capital, Germany is following the example of England and France, and is loaning and investing money in foreign countries. According to a recent semi-official statement, there are about $2,000,000,000 of German capital invested in the United States and Mexico. It is estimated that another $2,000,000,000 are invested in Central and South America, some $250,000,000 in Turkey, and about $1,000,000,000 in Africa, Australia and the Far East. In addition to this, it is claimed that $3,000,000,000 are invested in stocks and bonds in different countries.

Or a total of $8,250,000,000 in thirty years. When one thinks that it was during these same thirty years that those reservoirs of small savings, the people's banks, have so wonderfully developed in number and importance, it can hardly be denied that there should be a co-relation between both, and that it cannot be a mere coincidence.

Co-operative societies take the form not only of banking, financial or loan societies, but, as I have already intimated, there are societies of production. There are also societies in respect to agriculture for the purchase of agricultural implements, for the securing of manure or artificial fertilizers, for the transportation of agricultural produce and for buying and selling. They can be organized for a multitude of objects and there is no limit ; in fact, in Europe they have been sometimes organized for the most extraordinary objects—preserving crops from insects and other such objects—always with the most beneficial results.

The following are some recent statistics :

Hungary—1903—1,653 banks—with 366,721 members ; share capital, 17,146,021 crowns paid ; savings deposits 21,190,955—Reserve fund, 2,284,738 crowns.
Rural societies, 517 ; products sold, 10,553,912 crowns.

Germany—13,299 societies, with 1,600,858 members.
Their general turn-over in one year, 1902, amounted to 11,023,497,954 marks.
Amount of loans, 2,990,413,111 in one year.—Assets 2,008,705,629.
Share capital, 200,701,011.—Reserve fund, 91,871,381 marks.
Deposits—1,764,649,632 marks.

Austria—9,713 co-operative societies, including 6,445, people's banks.
Loans in 1900, 1,936,401,000 crowns.

Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia.—558 societies in 1902 ; with 346,449 members.
Share capital, 19,225,257 kroners ; savings deposits, 621,594,048.
Loans, 383,400,060 in one year. Balance of outstanding loans, 591,738,238 kroners.

Italy—3,979 societies in 1902, with a general turn-over of 1,127,713,928 francs.

Switzerland—4,400 societies, with 109,410 members.

Belgium—2,000 co-operative societies.
Netherlands—1,449 co-operative societies.
Finland—288 co-operative societies.
Servia—678 co-operative societies.
Roumania—1,121 rural co-operative banks in 1904.

There is no doubt that the establishment of these societies in India where they were organized under special legislation in 1902, has produced most beneficial results. Just one word with regard to the special rules which should govern all legislation concerning these very interesting associations. The first rule to be observed is that in view of the small resources at the disposal of these societies—at any rate when they begin—a very simple and economic mode of organization must be provided in order to avoid expense on account of middle men and intermediaries ; it cannot be done by charter or by letters patent or any such expensive process. In view of the nature and origin of these societies, each of the associates should have but one vote. In order that the society may really be a popular one and that people of limited means may be induced to join, they must not be overshadowed by large investment of capital. The capital invested by each individual should be limited either by law or by the rules of the association and there should be but one vote for each associate. Another rule which seems to have been observed in all countries, is, that the association must be open to all honest people including women and minors. Another rule which is invariable in continental countries, but which has been departed from in England, is, that the operations of the associations must be absolutely restricted to members. In order to obtain a loan you must become a member, and the reason of that is that these associations can only become powerful by having a large membership. The fact that a man is a member of the association is, in case of a loan being made to him, a guarantee, and sometimes a very good one, that the borrower will observe the conditions of the loan. Another condition is that the membership must be controlled absolutely by the governing body of the association, however, that body may be organized. They must be able, just as in the case of social clubs, to exclude those whom they do not deem it well to associate with. It is urged also as a sound rule, that the association should have a strong reserve in order to ensure its stability and its solvency, to protect it against accident and to make sure that the resources should not be too variable, because, as a rule, in these associations the capital is withdrawable. It is deemed of the utmost importance not only for the benefit of the association but for the sake of the practical lesson, that there should be a permanent reserve which is provided by means of a proportion raised each year on the net profits and put aside as a permanent fund to draw upon in case of need. It has also been deemed a necessary rule that there should be no vote by proxy, a system which in the larger institutions has often been the occasion of evil results. In order to ensure a united interest in the association and the welfare of the company it has been deemed necessary that every man should be present to give his vote when the affairs of the association are being discussed. This is made easy by the fact that the operations of the society are done on a limited area. There is also a rule which I think the Finance Minister will approve of, and that is that there should be a limit fixed for the operation of the associations which are intended to do banking. On the continent of Europe, the banking associations, the rural banks, the village banks, are limited in their operations to the parishes or villages where they have their chief place of business. I do not think that rule prevails in England. Strange to say, banking associations have been far less numerous in England than co-operative associations for the purposes of production and sale. In the Bill which I have submitted I have adopted the rule which limits the field of operations of the banking associations. On the continent, the capital of these associations is always withdrawable, and when a member has withdrawn from the association he is no longer responsible in any way for its debts. I may be asked how that operates in the case of banking associations. In England the law requires that where co-operative association has for its object the carrying on of a banking business, the capital shall not be withdrawn.

In the Bill which I have framed, and which is largely founded upon the English Act, I have not introduced the provision requiring associations carrying on the business of banking to have a non-withdrawable capital. Upon the continent the safeguard afforded by a non-withdrawable capital is replaced by the necessity of the association creating and maintaining a reserve, which is considered an equivalent safeguard. If we were rigidly to apply that rule of the English law in this country it would be extremely difficult in the inception of the movement—because it is in its inception—to get members to join such an association. In our country districts or among our labouring classes, if you organize a banking association, and you state to the prospective associate that he will not be relieved of all responsibility and cannot withdraw his money if at any given moment he judges fit to withdraw from the association, you place a great obstacle in the way of the movement; and that is why on the continent the obligation is imposed on the association to provide a reserve fund as a guarantee. It helps the association, it insures habits of order, it teaches thrift, and it enables the association easily to secure members, because they know that they can withdraw whenever they like, and after all it seems to me that they are entitled to consider that they secure the right to do so by contributing to the creation of this reserve. Hon. members who read this Bill and compare it with the English law, will find that while it provides that if the association creates and maintains a sufficient reserve fund, the capital shall be withdrawable just as it is in any other co-operative association.

I have been somewhat lengthy, but I desire now to acquaint the House with some details concerning this movement, which if it receives encouragement, will I do not doubt work a revolution in my own province, and I believe everywhere else among classes whom the larger banks do not reach, and who have hitherto failed to take cognizance of the immense benefits which co-operation can secure among the agricultural classes and in large cities among the labouring classes.

This is not the first time that the ills which this legislation is intended to cure, have been referred to in this parliament. The matter was brought before the House, I find, in 1884, by Mr. Orton, a member of the House who moved for a committee to consider the means of creating institutions of this kind. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) seconded the resolution and spoke in favour of it, and it was received with favour by the House. Sir John Macdonald, who was prime minister at the time, admitted the necessity of institutions of the kind which I am now referring to, but nothing seems to have come of the motion. It was referred, I think, to the Banking Committee, it being deemed unnecessary to refer it to a special committee. In 1885 Mr. Orton introduced a Bill providing for the creation of farmers' banks. Nothing seems to have come of the introduction of the Bill, I do not know for what reason. But there was a feature of that measure which would not commend itself to me, and probably did not at that time commend itself to the House. It provided that the government should come to the assistance of these associations by issuing for them paper money, which would be guaranteed by mortgages upon the property of the associates. That involved to a certain extent paternal interference by the government, in order to help the movement. I think anybody who studies the question will recognize that to be strong and effective these associations must work without government assistance, must be created by the people and helped by the people themselves. The government can no doubt favour the movement. Under the Bill which I have framed it is called upon to exercise a certain surveillance over the dealings of these associations. It can be resorted to for the purpose of having inquiries, and can even cancel the charters of these associations under certain circumstances; but material help from the government is not required—is even in my humble estimation detrimental to the movement. In 1903 my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance introduced a Bill to incorporate penny banks, and on that occasion, and also I think on a previous occasion, I referred to the necessity there was for the framing of a law embodying the views which I have just briefly laid before the House. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance seemed favourable to that movement, and promised the assistance of the government. The only penny bank created under that Bill, I believe, is the one which exists at Toronto, and as a matter of fact the movement in favour of penny banks has greatly diminished; in England it has practically died out. Not that they are not useful institutions, but they do not, in point of usefulness, as educators, as a powerful means of co-operation and self-help, approach the institutions which have of late years obtained such great success all over Europe.

I may be asked whether the provincial parliament would not be best qualified to deal with a subject of this kind. In regard to co-operative institutions having for their object the business of banking, I suppose there is no doubt that the provincial legislature would not have jurisdiction. Institutions having for the object the co-operation of agriculturists undoubtedly come under our jurisdiction. Producing and manufacturing associations come under our jurisdiction. Most of these are either banking or commercial associations, and consequently I do not doubt that we have jurisdiction for the creation of organizations of this sort, though possibly, in regard to some of them, our provincial legislation may have jurisdiction also. But there would be a great advantage if they could be organized under a uniform, a Dominon law, which would make their conditions similar all over the country. The movement must be in this country, if anything is to come of it, a national movement as it has been in other countries, and in such case it is better that it should be organized under the Dominion statute. Furthermore the provincial legislatures might not all view it from the same standpoint and might not be in a position to obtain for it the same encouragement which it would receive if inaugurated by this parliament.

The Quebec legislature, at its last session, passed a Bill providing for the creation of associations of this kind. I have that measure, which has just become law, here, but of course it touches, though in a very gingerly way, the question of banking, and in my view that question is perhaps the most important. It is the banking associations which have revolutionized Europe, and of course our provincial legislatures are exceedingly touchy about touching anything in that connection in view of the provisions of our constitutional Act.

I might mention also that the system has been tried in Canada, and far from being found wanting it has proved here, as everywhere else, an unqualified success. There is probably no man who has given as much time and attention in this country perhaps, or even on the continent, to this co-operative movement as has Mr. Alphonse Desjardins. of Lévis, president and manager of the first credit association of this kind, founded on a truly co-operative basis in America.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. He has studied it for many years and has kept in close contact with the leaders of the movement all over Europe. And in order to test its efficacy, he started five years ago in the town of Lévis, a small institution, whose main object is to provide small loans of money to people requiring them, and the results of his very patriotic efforts have been astonishing. Any one can obtain a statement of the operations of that institution, which is know as "La Caisse Populaire de Lévis', and no one, who examines that statement, can fail to be surprised at the results. The society, which started with a few hundred dollars of subscribed capital, of $5 shares, payable by weekly installments of ten cents each, in five years, by conducting the institution strictly according to the rules laid down by those who founded the system, brought that capital up to nearly $40,000, and the turn over last year amounted to nearly $140,000. The success of this society in the town of Lévis, as an educative institution, has been marvellous. It has formed there a generation of young men and women who have learned through it the value of thrift and economy, and carry on in their small and modest way with people who would not have secured loans elsewhere, except from the usurers, the business of banking just as it is done on the larger scale in our large cities, and with most excellent results.

In the Bill I have framed, I have followed, as far as possible, the English Act. The legislation of England in this matter dates back nearly half a century, but that legislation was consolidated in 1893. It is simple, and provides a most simple and easy machinery for the creation of these societies. It gives them sufficient power, but not too much. These institutions there are under the control of an official, who is a government official, and is called the registrar. But where it seems to me the English Act is perhaps a little faulty is that it conforms too much to the legislation regarding the organization of joint stock companies. That is the defect, if there be a defect, in that legislation, and where it has been possible for me, with the experience derived from what has been done on the continent, I have departed from the English legislation, but not too much. I have placed the control of these societies under the Department of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Labour. The House will see by the Bill why I have done that. It has seemed to me proper that the Department of Labour should exercise the supervision required and also endeavour to give an impetus to a movement which is destined to benefit the working classes, although in that matter the Department of Agriculture also is interested perhaps to as great a degree.

I shall not go into the details of the Bill, but the explanations I have given on this first reading have been given in the endeavour to rouse the interest of hon. members in this measure. I am in hopes that here as elsewhere will be found that this movement, though unimportant in its inception will have magnificent results and, like the grain of mustard seed, develop into a great tree.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to draw the attention of the government to the fact that certain returns, ordered long since, have not yet been brought down. Amongst others, a return respecting the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, which was ordered on the 14th March. The notice of that return was given a considerable time in advance, and it is about eight or nine weeks since the department was first informed that it would be required. There are also the returns moved for by my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) namely, relating to the classification and export of fish, the expropriation of White Fish Island, and the Board of Pilotage Commissioners at Sydney, Cape Breton.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM. I moved for a return for copies of all forms and declarations for homestead entries since 1890. The return has been brought down but it does not include form 82 and I would ask that that omission be rectified.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I moved for two returns on the 14th March last, namely, the correspondence between the High Commissioner and Mr. Preston and the correspondence between Mr. Griffiths and Mr. Preston.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking on the occasion, told us, that there had been serious trouble between Mr. Preston and Mr. Griffiths, and I think we should have the correspondence as soon as possible.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine). On the 14th of March last two returns were moved for by myself, one relating to land patents, and the other to homestead entries. These are both very much desired.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). On the 11th of April, I moved for a return of the reports and communications to the Department of the Interior from C. W. Speers, an officer of that department who recommended the government to open 10,000 acres of land, subsequently granted to Col. Davidson, for the purpose of showing that it was capable of producing wheat. That report is very important with matters which have already been discussed to some extent and which will be discussed further. I cannot see any reason for the delay in producing it.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP—SESSIONAL INDEMNITY—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Before the orders of the day are called, I will take this opportunity of St. George's Anniversary to pay tribute to progressive legislation by giving notice to the government that, on the first suitable occasion on motion for committee of Supply, I will move :

That, in the opinion of this House, the state should proceed to nationalize one or all of the following services in this country, telegraph lines, trunk telephone lines and express companies.

And I would also take this occasion to call the attention of the government to the fact that while, on April 3 a Bill was introduced by the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) in regard to Express Companies, that Bill has not yet been printed. It is a very short Bill, and it is now three weeks since it was introduced. Four days ago a Bill was introduced by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) with regard to the repeal of the Act respecting an annuity to privy councillors. This Bill also has not been printed.

And, while I am on my feet, I wish to make a personal explanation concerning an incident of the debate on Friday in regard to my own Bill relating to the indemnities of members and annuities of privy councillors. It is true that I have not moved the second reading of that Bill ; but surely a member has a right to choose his own time for presenting the second reading of a Bill. I find that the opinion of the House at least I believe so—is running somewhat in favour, if not of my own Bill, certainly in favour of the Bill proposed by the hon. member for Lennox. I shall be ready at any time, after I get the answer to a question that stands in my name on the paper to-day, to go ahead. And, if it will facilitate matters, I am ready to make an arrangement with the government for the setting aside of a day for the discussion of the Bills that I now have on the paper.

DREDGING AT PORT ARTHUR AND FORT WILLIAM.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before the orders of the day are called I would ask the government whether or not tenders have been received for dredging at Port Arthur and Fort William about a week ago, and if so whether or not the contracts have been awarded, and, if they have been awarded, to whom ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Tenders have been received by the department. They are now in the hands of the engineers to report upon them. The contracts have not been awarded.

YUKON CONCESSIONS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether the report in the press to-day is correct, to the effect that certain concessions in the Yukon, including that known as the Bronson and Ray concession, have been cancelled, and if so whether the government will be good enough to lay upon the table of the House the order in council effecting this concellation, and setting forth—as I presume it would—the reasons ?

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that there has been no cancellation of the concession in question. The government has under consideration at the present time the question of hydraulic leases in the Yukon, and will be able, no doubt, to lay a statement before the House at an early day.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to lay upon the table of the House returns referred to by him on Friday, if he has them in convenient shape to do so—I mean the returns alluded to in the debate on Friday evening, and, if there is any order in council which formally cancels or otherwise deals with the contract between the government and the North Atlantic Trading Company, other than, or in addition to, that which was read by the hon. minister in the course of his speech on Friday, I think it would be an advantage to have it laid upon the table as soon as possible. It is possible that everything was communicated to the House by the hon. gentleman in the course of his speech. But I ask, if there is anything further, that it should be communicated to the House without delay, as the debate will proceed to-morrow.

Mr. OLIVER. As my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows, the contract provides that it may be cancelled by notice over the signature of the minister, and that notice has been given in the form of the cablegram and letter, which were read to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the returns mentioned ?

Mr. OLIVER. I shall be glad to place them on the table.

LANDS FOR CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

Was any extension of area of selection, transfer or exchange of lands first earned by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, authorized by the government, so as to permit the said company, or its vendee, to select in other areas than those originally defined ? If so, what were they ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The Canadian Northern Railway Company is entitled to 2,180,928 acres as land subsidy for the construction of its lines of railway to Erwood, in the province of Saskatchewan. The company has had no extension of area of the land to which it is entitled. There was no original reservation of lands for selection by the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Its rights to land are held by it as the assignee of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company and of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company.

LOSS OF COAL BARGE 'REMBRANT.'

Mr. LAURENCE asked :

1. Has there been any investigation held in respect to the loss of the coal barge 'Rembrant' ?

2. If so, when, and will the Minister of Marine furnish the report of such investigation to the House ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries).

1. Yes.

2. A formal investigation was ordered in January, but owing to the sickness of some of the witnesses, it did not take place until the beginning of March. Yes.

DAM AND LOCKS ON SCUGOG RIVER.

Mr. SAM HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Has the federal government assumed full control of the dam and locks on Scugog river, at Lindsay ?

2. Has the government given a guarantee to construct and maintain in an efficient condition said dam and locks ?

3 Is the government aware that the said dam and locks were reported to them to be in bad condition last year, said report being made by the Ontario government ?

4. Will the government construct a new dam and locks at Lindsay this year ?

5. Will said dam and locks be of concrete ?

6. Will the lock gates be worked upon most modern plans ?

7. Will there be a cradle or slide operated by water power, for the conveyance of small boats and yachts over the dam, thus saving the great waste of water occurring when the locks would be used ?

8. Who is superintendent or in charge of Lindsay lock ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes.

2. The government have undertaken to operate and keep in good repair and condition the lock and minor works in connection therewith.

3. During the negotiations for transfer, a copy of a general report made to the Ontario Commissioner of Public Works by the assistant commissioner on the 4th of March, 1904, enumerating the works owned by the province and making suggestions as the basis for transfer, was sent in to the Department of Railways and Canals. This report described the condition of certain works, amongst others the Lindsay lock, which was incidentally stated to be old and out of repair. No further report has been received in the matter.

4. No.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. Answered by No. 4.

7. Answered by No. 4.

8. J. H. McClelan, superintendent ; John Makins, lockmaster.

SUPERINTENDENT TRENT CANAL.

Mr. SAM HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Who is superintendent of the waters recently taken over by the Dominion from the province of Ontario, at the head waters of the Trent canal in Victoria and Haliburton ?

2. In what capacity is Mr. Pearson employed?

3. Has Mr. Pearson authority to stop the flow of water in any stream so as to close a mill or mills below such dam ?

4. What are the instructions given to Mr. Pearson ?

5. Under whom does Mr. Pearson directly serve ?

6. What are his duties ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. J. H. McClelan, superintendent of the Trent canal, has control of all the waters recently taken over by the Dominion from the Ontario government.

2. Mr. John Pearson is employed as foreman on the Burnt river waters in the counties of Victoria and Haliburton.

3. There are no power users on these waters, who have any privileges granted to them by lease or otherwise from the government.

4. At the present time his instructions are to place in stop logs in all the dams on the Burnt River waters and keep them in until such times as the lakes, which serve as reservoirs, are full.

BONDING BITUMINOUS COAL.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Does the customs law permit bituminous coal to be bonded in Canada, and when Canadians use such coal on steamers running from one port to another Canadian port, to allow the person bonding said coal to be entitled to save duty by making export entry ?

2. Have any refunds of duty paid on coal been made during the last three years ? If so, to whom, and what amounts ?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. Section 105 of the Customs Act provides that warehoused goods may be delivered as ship's stores to ships bound on a voyage to a port out of Canada, and also to vessels engaged in trade on inland waters along the international boundary between the United States and Canada.

Under this provision, coal has been delivered ex-warehouse as ship's stores at ports above Cornwall to steamers bound from one Canadian port to another on the Great Lakes, if traversing foreign waters during part of the voyage.

2. The coal so delivered as ship's stores is in bond. It is not customary to grant refunds on duty paid coal used as ship's stores. It would be necessary to examine some 50,000 refund claims before stating what refunds (if any) have been made in respect of duty paid on coal during the last three years.

I may perhaps add that perhaps the hon. gentleman who has asked the question would not wish the department to go through these 50,000 refunds. The commissioner, so far as he can speak from memory, thinks there have been no refunds on coal, but there may have been. If the hon. gentleman has any in his mind and will give me a little memorandum of them, I will look over the entry.

5. Has any physician been appointed to attend the hospital ? If so, who has been appointed, at what date was he appointed, and at what salary ?
6. What report, if any, has been made to the department respecting the condition of the foundation of this hospital ?
7. Has any report been made to the department as to the condition of the roof of this hospital ?
8. Does such report indicate that the roof or any portion thereof has sagged or is otherwise defective ?
9. What information has the department as to the condition of the foundation and of the roof of the hospital generally ?
10. Is the hospital equipped and ready to receive patients ? If so, since what date has it been so equipped ?
11. What period elapsed after the completion of the hospital before it was equipped and ready to receive patients ?
12. How many seamen have been admitted and treated in the hospital ?
13. How many persons, other than seamen, have been admitted to or treated in this hospital ?
14. Since the completion of the hospital how many seamen landed at Louisburg have been treated in private houses in that town, or sent to St. Joseph's hospital at Glace Bay, or to the hospital at Sydney ?

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—PURCHASE OF LAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

What does the government intend to do respecting the following statements contained in the report of Mr. W. A. Weeks, Sessional Paper No. 82, viz.: 'That Mr. Sharp, the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway, in his zeal for the department which he represented, drove a hard bargain with these people, produced agreements already prepared, and induced them to sign the same, whereby they agreed to convey the lands taken at so much per acre. That these people were not advised as to the damage and injury which would be caused their property, and it was not until they had executed a conveyance of their property that they became aware of the real nature of the transaction. According to the testimony of Professor Herbert H. Shaw, one of the surveyors who ran the line of the railway, and who had a personal, independent knowledge of the parties and their lands the compensation given these people was altogether inadequate ?'

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The matter is under consideration.

The said area included land in township 19, range 18, as well as 17, in the arid section of the railway belt of Manitoba Central. The conditions of sale were the payment for the land purchased at the rate of $1 an acre, being the price at which the land had been valued.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no objection to the first part of the motion in reference to the House of Commons ; but the second part regarding the Senate would not be according to the rules of parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the government could get the information from the Senate ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think there is a certain procedure provided with regard to that. The first part of the motion can pass.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the right hon. gentleman desires the information from 1880 to 1898 his proper course would be to have it moved for by some one on his side of the House. Some of the transactions referred to in my motion have been discussed during this session, and I do not want to wait indefinitely for the information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot agree with my hon. friend. I think if we are preparing a return it should be complete so as to show to the House the exact number of these transactions.

THE TARIFFS OF GERMANY AND CANADA.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton), moved for

Copies of all correspondence since 1896 between the government of Canada, or any member thereof, and the German or British governments or any person or persons officially or otherwise representing those governments, and copies of all documents and papers in possession of the government, respecting the tariffs of Germany and Canada, in relation to each other?

He said: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss this resolution, I wish to ask the Minister of Customs if he will be good enough to tell me whether he has received from Lord Strathcona any reply to the letter sent to him a week or ten days ago?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON. I have to beg the hon. gentleman's pardon for not having inquired. I will try to think of it to-morrow, and inquire of the Department of Trade and Commerce, who sent the message.

Mr. URIAH WILSON.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, the question on which I wish to make a few remarks this afternoon is that of our trade with Germany. I believe the government have been careless and indifferent towards the farming industry of Canada in not encouraging that trade. Though the German empire is the second largest importer of agricultural products in the world, and we in the Dominion of Canada have been able to export to that country only a very small proportion of our farm products, and year by year the quantity is gradually growing less. In 1897, when this government brought down their first budget, they gave a preference to Great Britain of 12½ per cent. Sir Charles Tupper, the then leader of the opposition, said that it would be necessary for them to include Belgium and Germany, because those countries came under the favoured nation clause. The Finance Minister stated that it was not necessary to include them, as they would not come under that clause. The outcome of the matter was that in 1898, when the present government gave an additional preference of 12½ per cent to Great Britain, making a total of 25 per cent, the German government placed goods going into Germany from Canada under the maximum tariff instead of under the minimum tariff, where they had been previous to that time. In 1900 this government increased the preference to Great Britain to 33⅓ per cent, and in 1903 the German government passed a law imposing a restriction of from 50 to 100 per cent on goods going into Germany from the Dominion of Canada, and the present government of Canada in turn placed a surtax on German goods coming into the Dominion amounting to one-third more than the general tariff. The German tariff, I believe, was not brought into effect until the 1st of March of this year. What I wish to call the attention of the House to in particular is the carelessness and indifference which this government has shown towards the farming industry of the Dominion of Canada within the last month or six weeks. During that time I have been asking a number of questions with regard to our trade with Germany, and have been urging the government to give to the farmers of Canada some information with reference to the German tariff upon Canadian goods; but week after week has gone by, and no information has been forthcoming. To give you some idea of the attitude of the Minister of Agriculture on this question, let me quote the remarks he made at the fruit conference held here on the 21st of March last, in reply to an address which was delivered by a prominent apple shipper of the city of Toronto, who had a number of letters from prominent men in Germany, large importers of Canadian apples. The Minister of Agriculture wound up his reply by using these words:

There is reason to believe that the Germans will in a short time seek to open negotiations, but in the meantime I think we can get along without them.

I think that is a very careless answer for the Minister of Agriculture to make in regard to a question of such vital importance to the apple shippers of this country. Only two years ago there were only $50,000 worth of apples imported into Germany, while last year there were considerably over $400,000 worth in barrels and over $100,000 worth of dried apples. Germany is the best market for dried apples in the world, and the German importations of both green and dried apples are constantly increasing. On the 1st of March last, as I undertand it, and as the apple men throughout this country understand it, the German government placed a duty of $1.50 a barrel on apples going into that country, which practically prohibits them ; and the apple shippers at the recent fruit conference urged on the Minister of Agriculture the necessity of opening correspondence with the German government, through Lord Strathcona, with the view of obtaining from them similar concessions to those which the United States government have been able to obtain within the past few months. The same restrictions had been placed upon apples imported into Germany from the United States. The United States government immediately opened up communication with the German government, the outcome of which is that United States apples are admitted into Germany at a duty of 50c. per barrel, while Canadian apples are taxed $1.50 per barrel, which will practically shut them out of the market. The exporters of Canadian apples have found that Canadian apples are the most satisfactory in that market, and command the highest price, and in order to purchase large quantities of Canadian apples, they have moved their head offices from New York to the city of Toronto. I have here a copy of the old tariff which is placed upon some of the farm products going into that country.

Wheat	$0 54	per 100 lbs.
Flour of wheat	1 14	"
Oats	0 43	"
Bacon	2 17	"
Hams	2 17	"
Butter	2 17	"
Cheese	2 17	"
Apples, dried	0 43	"

and so on.

I merely call your attention to this to show you that since the 1st March the German government has placed an extra surtax on all these goods going into that country. So that while last year we shipped many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of agricultural products, it has been almost impossible to get any of them in after the 1st March of this year.

In my opinion it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to open new markets for the farmers of Canada. In that connection this government has signally failed in its duty and it is folly for the hon. minister to sit still and say he will not open negotiations with Germany and try to obtain for our farmers the concession to which they are entitled. I have here a number of letters from different firms in Germany urging upon prominent exporters in this country the necessity of impressing on our government the importance of this apple export trade. I shall not attempt to read these, but they distinctly state that the new duty comes into force the 1st March of this year. I have also here the prices received at sales on Tuesday, 20th February, 1906, in Germany. Canadian apples, Greenings, sold at 27 marks, equal to $6.35 of our money; Spys, 31 marks or $7.29; Baldwins, 29.50 marks or $6.94; Greenings, 29.25 marks or $6.88, and so on. And a large number of sales were made of Canadian apples at advanced prices over what we could possibly obtain for them in any of the other European markets.

I have also here a large number of letters from the different parts of this country urging action in this matter, and I know that the hon. Minister of Agriculture and a number of other members on the government side have also received many letters impressing on them the necessity of convincing this government that immediate action should be taken. I have further a number of petitions from fruit growers' associations in different parts of the Dominion. I do not wish to weary the House by reading them, but would ask the privilege of merely reading one or two. At a meeting of the Port Elgin Fruit Growers' Association they expressed their views as follows:

That it would be to the interests of the general public as well as of the fruit growers of the Dominion, that an improvement in the trade relations between Germany and Canada should prevail, particularly in regard to the duty now imposed by the German government on Canadian green and evaporated apples, so that they may be allowed to enter Germany under as fair conditions as those from the United States, as Germany is practically our only market for evaporated fruits, and this association would pray that you take such measures as you deem wise to bring about the desired object.

I have another from the fruit institute of Creemore, one from the fruit growers of Forest, Ont., another from the Ontario association, Toronto, and also the following from the fruit growers of Sparta :

At a meeting of the fruit growers held at Sparta, Elgin County, Ontario, on April 2, the following motion was unanimously carried :

That our government be urged to at once take steps to bring about better trade relations between Germany and Canada so that our fruit may enter Germany under as fair conditions as does that of the United States, as our dried fruit business is practically ruined and our green fruit trade greatly damaged by loss of the German trade by reason of the present prohibitory duty, we earnestly desire some improvement in our trade relations.

And others from Arkona, Freeman, Kimberly and Georgian bay.

In reply to a question which I put to the Minister of Agriculture on the 27th March, namely:

Was it not stated at the fruit convention last week that our apple industry faced a very serious situation so far as export to Germany was considered because of the duty of $1.50 a barrel,

The hon. gentleman replied.

I heard it so stated, but I do not know whether it is correct or not. I have not looked into the matter; but I should be disposed to accept the statement of the hon. member.

I am merely reading these to show how indifferent and careless the hon. minister's course has been with regard to this matter. On the 5th April I repeated the question and got the same answer and likewise on the 6th April. I may say that I have here the Trade and Commerce Weekly Report of April 9, which gives some of the increased duties placed upon goods going into Germany. But what we are anxious to obtain is the exact tariff and if possible to have the government so arrange matters that we may receive better treatment. In my opinion the time is not far distant when we shall require to have a representative in Germany who will look after the interests of the Dominion and in the United States as well. All the colonies of the empire, Canada alone excepted, have the privilege of the favoured nation clause on entering goods into the German empire.

I am glad to see the Minister of Agricultural in his seat and will just read for his benefit from the Montreal 'Herald' of January 27, some of his remarks in Montreal with reference to the preferential tariff. Regarding the necessity of giving Canada food products an advantage on the English market he said:

If any people were to make such a statement, it would be the Canadian farmers who are producing and selling these products, but I say, as Minister of Agriculture, that the Canadian farmers are not interested in that question and have made no such demand.

I am surprised to see the hon. Minister nod his head in approval. I certainly do not believe it is in the interests of the farmers of this Dominion that our Minister of Agriculture should say it would not be a good thing for them to have a preference in the English market. Why, a few cents a bushel to the advantage of the grain going out from the Dominion would increase the value of every farm in the Dominion and be one of the greatest attractions to Canadian immigration that could possibly be imagined. Not only that: Instead of wheat going across and being put through the mills in the United States, it would be ground in our country, giving employment to workmen in our own mills and developing that industry in Canada to a greater extent than it could possibly be developed in any other way. Let me read a little more of what the minister said:

In this I am sure I represent the feeling of the Canadian farmers. The people who make these statements are not the people who produce or handle these products nor the people who know the real conditions.

I feel confident that the Minister of Agriculture did not know the real conditions when he made these statements. He said further:

We farmers of Canada want no preference in the English market. Now, as to our interest, I am going to say frankly, as a farmer and as Minister of Agriculture, I am rather glad that England has decided not to give us a preference.

Can you imagine anything more emphatic coming from the Minister of Agriculture with reference to his position on these matters? I certainly believe that these remarks were most unwisely made. And as he read the comments of the English papers I think he could not but feel that it was anything but to his credit as Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion to have placed himself on record in this manner. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to tell this House and to tell the people of Canada whether the farmers of Canada receive one-half-penny more for their butter, cheese, wheat, flour or any other products because of this preference. I think he will say that all our goods are placed on the British market, not on sentiment but on the quality of the goods themselves. I am sure that it was unwise of him, in speaking of the proposed preference in the British market, to make the remarks he did.

I was speaking about Germany, which is the greatest dried-apple market in the world. In one year they imported, no less than 2,426,000 pounds of dried apples from this country. This is a most important matter for Canada. In one corner of my own riding, 2,000 bushels of apples are dried each day during the fall of the year. Many a man in this House, I am sure, can tell of large evaporator works which will be practically closed unless some effective interest is taken in this industry and some definite arrangement reached with reference to our trade with Germany.

Let us look at Germany and see whether it would be to our interest to trade with her or not. I have taken some figures from the Commerce and Navigation returns of the United States. In this connection, I may say that our trade and navigation returns are not sufficiently complete in giving the comparisons with the different nations and their trade. The area of Germany is 208,830 square miles: her population 60,000,000.

The imports into Germany in 1905 were $1,428,640,000 ; and the exports $1,193,483,000, a balance in trade against Germany of $235,157,000. Compare Canada with this. Canada has an area of 3,745,574 square miles, and a population of 6,000,000. Our imports in 1905 were $266,834,417, and our exports $203,316,872, an adverse balance of trade of about $63,500,000. The revenue for the German empire including the German states and the colonies amounted in 1901 to $1,402,367,000 and the expenditures to $1,458,432,000. I am merely giving you these figures to show the extent of the German trade which other countries are receiving, but which we are practically prohibited from entering upon. The following figures will show the German trade with the United States in 1905 :

United States exports to Germany..	$224,562,019
United States imports from Germany	122,272,313
Balance of trade in favour of the United States..	$102,289,706

You will always find that the United States has a balance of trade in her favour wherever she does business. The following figures show the German trade with Canada in 1905 :

Canada imported from Germany.. ..	$6,642,139
Canada exported to Germany..	1,123,586
Balance of trade against Canada.. ..	$5,518,553

The total trade between Germany and the United States in 1905 was $346,834,332 ; and the total trade between Germany and Canada in 1905 was $7,765,725. And if you take from our exports to Germany the apple business, which was between $600,000 and $700,000, you will find that we have left only about $500,000 of export trade with the second greatest consumer of agriculture products in the world. I do not believe that we can afford such diplomacy as this. The United States are exporting less and less each year to the world as a whole, and here is a trade that the Dominion of Canada should try to obtain. Germany requires our food products, and every Canadian knows that we have the food products to sell. I was glad indeed to hear the hon. member for Lisgar, Man., make the statement in regard to the province of Manitoba that it was capable of producing 500,000,000 bushels of grain, and that last year it produced 115,000,000 bushels. When these western provinces are fully developed, as they will be before many years go by, we shall be very glad to have access to the German market. We have been catering to the United States market, in relation to which country we have been forced into the position of hewers of wood and drawers of water, for we only got into that country about $77,000,000 worth of goods in 1905, whereas we imported from the United States $162,000,000 worth, leaving a balance of trade against us and in favour of the United States of over $85,000,000. And when we consider that our exports are chiefly composed of the products of our mines and forests $16,000,000 in gold $19,000,000 in timber and its products, $2,000,000 in silver, $9,000,000 in copper, lead, iron and nickel ores, and $4,000,000 in coal, a total of $50,000,000 out of $77,000,000—we can see what portion of trade is done by our agricultural or manufacturing classes. The United States exported to Germany in 1905, in wheat and wheat flour the equivalent of 17,379,941 bushels of wheat. For which they received over $9,000,000. Canada practically exported nothing—a bare $750 worth of flour. In 1905 the United States exported to Germany 188,090,105 lbs. of lard for which she received $14,848,104. I am sure that our pork packers throughout the Dominion would have been glad to have exported a large portion of that lard. But the market of the German empire was closed against them. The United States in 1905 exported 9,234,069 lbs. of bacon, receiving $825,342 in return. Canada was not able to ship anything in this line.

Tobacco—that is an article the trade in which the people of western Ontario are anxious to see developed. The United States exported to Germany 44,442,000 pounds of tobacco in 1905, for, which they received $4,770,000. Canada exported none. Canned goods, fruit, and other products of the farm, were exported to Germany in large quantities. When you come to realize that the total exports from the United States of agricultural products amounted to about $150,000,000, you can see what a great advantage it would be to the farmers of Canada to be able to find a market in that country for their agricultural products, and to receive the reasonable price they would bring. Of dried apples, the United States exported to Germany 19,370,000 pounds, but we will be practically shut out of that market. The United States have access to the British markets, as all other nations have, as well as ourselves. Our goods are sold there only on their merits, it is not sentiment that sells our goods in that country. Why should the farmers of Canada not have a share of that very large German market, as we would have, if the government would take proper steps to procure it for us. But, instead of that, this governmnt and the German government have been drifting farther and farther apart until to-day the trade between these two countries amounts to practically nothing. There is no doubt that Germany can much better afford to be in this position than Canada can.

Now, let me give you a short list of some of the German imports of agricultural products. I take it from the official German records.

Germany imported—

$66,880,000 worth of wheat.
$1,324,500 worth of flour ;

$34,945,800 worth of barley ;
$17,562,000 worth of corn ;
$11,748,400 worth of rye ;
$3,155,900 worth of beef fresh, including veal.
$780,900 worth of prepared beef ;
$1,185,000 worth of fresh pork ;
$404,600 worth of prepared pork ;
$499,000 worth of bacon ;
$337,500 worth of hams ;
$600,000 worth of apples from Canada ;
$45,000 worth of mutton ;
Total, $139,268,600.

Practically, in round figures, Germany imported over $150,000,000 worth of agricultural products, of which Canada was able to send only $600,000 or $700,000 worth. In the year 1906, Canada produced over $600,000,000 worth of agricultural products. Canada is and will be an agricultural country. Her mines may become exhausted, her fisheries depleted, her woodlands denuded like those of the United States, but the farm will always remain the chief asset of the Dominion. It is the farms that builds up our manufactures, our railroads, our telegraph and telephone lines, and to a large extent our cities and towns. It is the farm that has been chiefly instrumental in giving to this government the large amount of revenue that they have distributed so extravagantly throughout the country. Therefore I want to urge on this government the necessity of opening negotiations with Germany at the earliest possible date with a view of trying to obtain for the farmers of Canada concessions at least as fair and reasonable as the farmers of the United States have been able to obtain from that country. Trade once lost by Canada will take years to recover. If this government will try and obtain the present year the same concessions for our apples that the United States have obtained up to the 30th of June, 1907, they would be conferring a great advantage on the apple industry of this country. The United States will be exporters of agricultural products for years to come, and we should also look to Germany for a large portion of our exports of farm produce. Therefore, I beg the government to take immediate steps in reference to this matter. I earnestly hope they will put forth every effort to procure for the farmers of Canada better trade relations with Germany.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). As an agriculturist I feel it my duty to congratulate my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) upon the able manner in which he has spoken to this motion. After listening to his remarks regarding the imports of Germany, one cannot help but feel that the agriculturists of this country have been sadly neglected by this government in not having procured for them better trade relations with Germany in respect to our agricultural products. I do not propose to say much on this question, because it has been so thoroughly treated by the hon. member from Lambton, but I must say that in my opinion the farmers of this country have been sadly neglected by the present government. We have no advantages in the United States markets in respect to our products. It was pointed out by my hon. friend who has just spoken that we practically send no agricultural products to the United States, and I am sure that this is evidence of the fact that there is something radically wrong in the tariff policy of Canada in respect to agricultural products. I once again wish to congratulate my hon. friend from Lambton upon the manner in which he has presented this matter to the House and I sincerely trust that his words will have some influence with the hon. Minister of Agriculture and will induce him to take up the interests of the farmers.

I can assure the hon. minister that the farmers will have to be reckoned with in the very near future. They are down, today, practically to the starvation point. I have lived in one of the best farming sections in this fair Dominion of ours, among the very best class of farmers who have to be and are educated in all classes of farming, and I make the statement knowing whereof I speak and knowing that it will be taken down in 'Hansard' that there is not one farmer in seventy-five in the splendid district in which I live who is making three per cent on his investment. If the manufacturers were placed in that position I will venture to say that there would soon be a great deal made of it in the Dominion. I was very much surprised to learn of the amount of tobacco that the United States are exporting to Germany. I want to remind the hon. Minister of Agriculture that we should have a fair portion of the export trade in tobacco to Germany. If we had a proper tariff on tobacco we would not only supply our own Canadian market but I believe that we could supply a fair amount of tobacco to our German friends from the western portion of the province of Ontario. The former Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) was in our section of the country last year and we were very much encouraged by the remarks which the hon. gentleman made in which he said that the tobacco interest in the very near future would be looked after and that we in that section of the country would get a proper share of protection for that industry. I know that the people there will not lay out the amount of money which must be laid out in order to develop that industry unless they have some encouragement for our German trade or for our own home industry. It requires a great deal of money to be spent for the erection of barns, especially for that industry. I have a large cement foundation laid out for a tobacco barn which will cost probably $1,500, and no farmer in that section of the country will erect these buildings unless there is such a change made in the tariff as well give us a proper share of the profit from the tobacco which we are growing and which we can grow to a far greater extent than, I believe, any member of this House can possibly imagine we are capable of.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the motion deals with a requirement for papers in connection with the German tariff question. There can be no objection to the motion, let me say, however, with this qualification, that very many diplomatic papers are of a confidential character, and of course it goes without saying that if there are any confidential documents in connection with this matter they cannot be brought down. Otherwise, there is no reason why the papers should not be brought down. I wish I could congratulate the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) as warmly as the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) has done. I do not for a moment permit myself to doubt that both of these gentlemen are animated by the excellent purpose and desire of extending the trade of Canada, and particularly of extending the trade of Canada in the localities in which their own constituents are particularly interested; but while recognizing that fact at once, and giving my hon. friends due credit for it, I am nevertheless bound to say that I regard their speeches as most unfortunate, most unwise, and if it is not offensive to say so, most unpatriotic. The hon. member for Lambton has said that the German government and the Canadian authorities have been drifting farther and farther apart. A little reflection will show him that that is not correct. We have been wide apart in the years that have gone by, unfortunately, but a statement has been made in this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to the effect that we had recently been approached by a representative of the German government with the view of further negotiations. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) is therefore aware that in an informal way negotiations have been opened between the German authorities and the Canadian government and there can be only one meaning to my hon. friend's speech, if it is to be taken seriously, and that is that this government is to be condemned for what it has done in the past in relation to Germany, and that we should humbly take off our hats and beg pardon of the German government. With all due respect to the German authorities, with all due desire on our part to meet them in a good spirit and with a desire to respond to the suggestions that have recently come to us, appreciating that it is not the part of good government to place difficulties in the way but rather to smooth the path so that we can have a better understanding, I desire to say that it is necessary in the interest of the people of Canada to vindicate the position which this government and this parliament have taken in the past in reference to our difficulty with Germany. We cannot permit the statement of the hon. gentleman to go abroad as a correct expression of the view of the people of Canada. We hold that the commercial policy of this government generally has been vindicated to the satisfaction of the country, that if there is one part of it above all others in which the parliament and the people of Canada have unmistakably vindicated the action of this government it is in the steps that were taken in reference to our trade with Germany. Why did we come into difficulty with Germany? These hon. gentlemen say that the United States obtained better terms than we did. True, it was our misfortune, and because of that misfortune we found it necessary to take steps to maintain the proper dignity of the Canadian people, of the Canadian parliament and of the Canadian government. Why did Germany penalize us? Why did Germany say that she would impose higher duties on the products of Canada than on the products of the United States? Because we vindicated the right of the people of Canada, a portion of the great British empire, to make that preferential trade arrangement which has done so much for Imperial development and for the highest good of this country. That was our only crime. Down to the years 1897 and 1898 when the preferential tariff was introduced we had the benefit of the favoured nation treatment with Germany; we were admitted on the same terms as other countries. Did Canada do anything whereby she should have forfeited these privileges? Surely not. What was it that we did? We simply said that whatever might be our treatment of foreign nations we formed part of the great British empire; it was our own family affair, our own domestic circle and we had a right to make such an arrangement within our own family and our own domestic circle as might be agreeable to the mother country and to ourselves. And so, we brought down the preferential tariff. There was a temporary difficulty about it as has been stated by the hon. member for East Lambton. We anticipated the possibility of that difficulty but it is a certainty to-day that if we had not taken that step in 1897 these unlucky treaties, as Lord Salisbury described them, which has so long stood in the way of a preferential arrangement between Canada and the mother country, would have remained probably in force down to the present moment. These treaties had stood in the way for a great many years. If you will consult the records of the Colonial conferences you will see that the statesmen of the colonies, the statesmen of Canada, the statesmen of the Conservative party in Canada, adopted resolutions urging the British government to denounce those treaties which stood in the way of commercial freedom between the mother country and her colonies. Years pased and nothing was accomplished. The desire was universal throughout the colonial empire, but red tape in England stood in the way, and, these unlucky treaties, to repeat Lord Salisbury's words, were an obstacle. It was not until the adoption of the preferential tariff by the Canadian government and parliament in 1897 that the forces were set in motion on the other side of the water, which led to the denunciation of these German and Belgian treaties, by which the commercial freedom of the British empire was won. That which our friends on the other side had been trying to accomplish year after year, honestly and faithfully trying, that which they laboured for in vain, was accomplished through the instrumentality of this government by the adoption of the preferential tariff in 1897. The German government took offence at that and underlook to penalize the trade of Canada because we had taken that step, and for no reason. We were called to account in this House by hon. gentlemen on the other side—not perhaps without some reason—that we were too patient in our negotiations with the German government. But diplomatic proceedings are slow. We had to proceed in the ordinary way; we had to come to a conclusion ourselves; we had to communicate perhaps with our High Commissioner in London who would communicate with the colonial office, and the colonial office would communicate with the foreign office, and the foreign office with the ambassador in Berlin, and the ambassador in Berlin would communicate with the German foreign office, and gradually, running through all these necessary channels of diplomacy, we might reach the German government. It so happened that though we year after year carried on these negotiations in this way and made representations as to the injustice which was being done to us by Germany, our representations were without any success.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Minister of Finance why that is so? If, as he states, this was purely a family affair why is it that the rest of the empire has better terms with Germany than Canada has.

Mr. FIELDING. I said that the preferential tariff arrangement was purely a family affair between the mother country and her colonies and that no foreign nation has the right to penalize us because of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the rest of the empire has a better tariff with Germany than we have.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see how that touches the point. We imposed a surtax for good and sufficient reasons which this parliament concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But that was the case before the surtax.

Mr. FIELDING. Prior to the adoption of the preferential tariff we had the same tariff privileges in Germany as the rest of the empire; we shared the same tariff as Great Britain did, but when we adopted the preferential tariff——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would you repeat that.

Mr. FIELDING. Prior to the adoption of the preferential tariff we had the same treatment as Great Britain had; but when we adopted the preferential tariff then the German government, in making their new arrangement with Great Britain, left Canada out of it, and said in effect: We are going to punish Canada for what we deem to be her mistaken course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the point I directed the hon. gentleman's attention to. If this were purely a family affair why is it that the rest of the empire should have better tariff relations with Germany than we have?

Mr. FIELDING. Because the other parts of the empire have not adopted universally a preferential tariff and therefore Germany has not been called upon to punish them. It was because we adopted a preferential tariff that we have been singled out by Germany. If the House will pardon me for proceeding after six o'clock as I may be able to be present this evening, I would like to point out that in dealing with what is ordinarily called the 'favoured nation principle' we did no wrong to Germany; we gave to Germany and were willing to continue to give to Germany every privilege we gave to any foreign nation and therefore the principle of the favoured nation treaty was not broken.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not broken in this respect—that the treaty compelled another country to receive the goods of that country exactly on the same terms as the goods from England, and to give no preference to England even over that country. That was one of the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. Which treaty do you refer to?

Mr. SPROULE. The treaty with Germany; the 'favoured nation clause'.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a distinction between the Belgian and German treaties, and, what is ordinarily called the favoured nation treaties. The favoured nation treaties simply deal with the relation say of Canada, (if it be with Canada) and a number of foreign nations. By the favoured nation treaty you come under the obligation that you will not give any privilege to any one foreign nation without giving the like privilege to the other nations concerned. The Belgian and German treaties went beyond that ; they required that Belgium and Germany should not only have the same privilege that we may extend to any foreign nation but the same privilege that we may extend to Great Britain. That was a vital difference ; that was what we complained of We said : So far as the favoured nation principle is concerned we are willing to respect it ; we are willing to give to Germany every thing we give to France, to Italy, to Spain, to any other foreign nation. But Germany said : No, that is not enough, you must give to us not only what you give to foreign nations but you must put us on the same terms as you put the mother country on. We said : No, we will not do that, we will give a preference to the mother country and to such of the colonies as make satisfactory arrangements with us. The German government resented that ; they thought we were treating them, as they said, badly. It is always well to think there is another side to a question and I have no doubt the German government imagined they had some good cause of complaint. However that may be, after repeated representations, after representations through the official channels, we at last took the matter up directly and informally—of course we have no power to conduct negotiations looking to a treaty or anything of that sort, but we have power to negotiate as to what our tariff shall be as respects any country—we opened negotiations with the German consul in Montreal, a gentleman who is no longer in Canada but who at that time was the representative of the German government. We pointed out to Mr. Bopp the unfairness of the attitude of Germany ; we pointed out that the advantages of the trade were all in favour of Germany ; we pointed out that we exported after all only a small quantity of goods to Germany.

Let me say here that while the German trade may be important to some particular industry, and I do not under estimate it ; and while it may be important to some particular section and to some particular class of producers, yet you will find that the exports from Canada to Germany are not large and have not been large. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) mentions the apple export trade, and coming from an apple country myself that appeals strongly to me. But taking our export trade to Germany in the bulk, it is not considerable. While we would be glad to get an increase in trade from any quarter of the world, the truth is that the German trade in its relation to Canada, speaking in the large, is not an important trade. And, when my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) says that Germany can stand the difference better than we can I honestly think he is mistaken. As the matter stands I think the fact is that Germany has lost a great deal more than we have. However that may be, I want to point out that we remonstrated through diplomatic channels, and afterwards we took the matter up in what might be called a non-diplomatic way and we had personal negotiations with the representative of the German government. We pointed out to him that we were giving his country every privilege we gave to every foreign nation and we said : what more can you want ? We pointed out that we were being criticised in parliament because we allowed this condition to go on. We were asked : Why don't you retaliate, why don't you hit back? However, we felt that in dealing with a great nation, it would be well for us a young country, to show an example of dignity and patience, it would be well for us to go slow, to remonstrate and plead and try to persuade the German government of the mistake they had made. All this was in vain and only after a lapse of years, not until the year of 1903, we took this extreme step. We took it because we found there was no other way of dealing with our German friends and making them appreciate the situation, than by some method of retaliation, and so we adopted the surtax. And, if my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) means to condemn the surtax, then I think I am justified in saying that he is the first man who has risen in the parliament of Canada to condemn it. I venture to say that the adoption of that surtax was regarded by every patriotic Canadian as a necessary and proper step for the vindication of the position of Canada on that question. It is unfortunate that there has been this difference between that great country and ourselves. We are firmly persuaded we are in the right, and though we still feel that we are in the right we are ready to deal in a generous spirit with any approach that may be made. The German government, through a proper channel, have in an informal way approached us. We are glad of it. We are willing to meet them and discuss the matter with them. I am not prepared to say that for the sake of a concession on one particular article that will suit my hon. friend in his country, or that will suit myself in my county, we are willing to give up the whole situation ; but I will say that now the matter is better understood, now that the German government have shown that they appreciate the position of Canada in a higher degree than they did before, we shall be prepared to deal with the matter in the right spirit ; and I think it will not be too much if I ask hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House not to embarrass us, not to tie our hands, not to give the impression that in approaching the German government we are a divided people, but to give the idea that the government of Canada, in what they have done in the past and in what they are willing to do, in their tariff arrangements with Germany, represent the wishes of the people of Canada as a whole.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. S. SPDOULE (East Grey). The country, I have no doubt will appreciate the object and aim of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) in bringing this question to the attention of the House and endeavouring to have something done for that large and important class of the people who are always dependent to a great extent upon foreign markets for the sale of their products. Since the government have absolutely failed in their duty, is it suprising that a member of the opposition should endeavour to draw attention to their shortcomings and spur them on, if possible, to some effort to obtain better markets for our farmers. The observations of the hon. the Minister of Finance in reply to my hon. friend seemed to me the most out of place that I ever heard from an hon. member in this House. And coming from the source they did, makes their absurdity still the more glaring. What were the criticisms in which the Finance Minister indulged regarding the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong)? My hon. friend's course, he said, was unpatriotic, unwise and ill-advised. Just fancy, Mr. Speaker, the term 'unpatriotic' being applied to another member by this Finance Minister who, a few years ago, ran his own provincial election on the platform of secession from confederation. Was that, I ask, patriotism ? Was that love of his country? Was that a desire to keep his country united ? Was it wise ? Was it timely ? Yet we have a Finance Minister, who took this extremely unpatriotic course, charging that crime against the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and describing his remarks as unwise, unpatriotic and illtimed. To my mind the speech of my hon. friend was the very reverse. It simply threw the broad light of criticism on the unbusiness blundering of the present government from the time it took office down to this day. One of the planks in the platform of the reform party in 1896 was more and better markets for the farmers and producers of Canada. Entrust us, they said, with the administration of this country, and we shall be prepared to give you the markets of the eighty million people to the south which your Conservative administration never seriously attempted to obtain for you. We shall be prepared likewise to give you other extensive markets for your products. But their great plank was better trade relations with the eighty million people to our south. And, Sir, what was the result of their efforts when they did get in ? Their first course was characterized by bungling and unbusinesslike conduct followed by their preferential tariff. They told the people that they were aiming at free trade and would lower the tariff; but when the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) found that the conditions were such that he could not meet the expectations he had realized, he said : Our tariff may not seem to the people as low as what they expected, but the condition of things is such that we cannot lower it as much as we would like. Still it must not be forgotten that we are going to do a great deal more than what we have already done in this direction. We have that general tariff but we are going to give a preference to the mother country. We are going to reduce the tax 12½ per cent on goods coming from England, which may be regarded as a reduction in our tariff to that extent. Then we shall reduce it another 12½ per cent, and finally we shall make the reduction 33⅓ per cent. And that, the hon. gentleman claimed, would be a redemption of the government's promise to lower the tariff. At the time this preference was first proposed, his attention was drawn to the fact that he was making a blunder. Here is what Sir Charles Tupper said on that point :

> Does my hon. friend say, hear, hear ? I tell him that the course the government pursued a month ago was nothing short of a declaration of independence on the part of Canada. It was a declaration in the face of the world that Canada refused to be bound by the treaties which England had made with regard to Canada as well as to herself.

That is to say, the contention of Sir Charles Tupper was that in making this reduction on British goods, the government were violating the treaty which England had with Germany and Belgium and which declared that England would allow these countries to trade with her colonies on the most favoured nation principle. Under that favoured nation clause, the lowest rates charged on British goods by any one of Britain's colonies must apply to goods going into that colony from Germany or Belgium. This declaration of Sir Charles Tupper was flatly contradicted by the Finance Minister. He said that clause would not apply and could not in any way affect the situation. that he had made this offer open to the whole world and it was for these other countries to accept it if they chose. Sir Charles Tupper replied that that did not get over the difficulty, that a treaty existed between England and these countries in which there was the favoured nation clause, and that the Canadian government were violating that treaty and practically declaring that Canada refused to be bound by treaties made by the mother country. The Canadian government, he said, were going outside those treaties and were practically making a declaration of fiscal war against Germany and Belgium. Is it not therefore true, as I have said, that these hon. gentlemen opposite began their administration by blundering ? What folowed ? Sir Charles Tupper drew the attention of the Finance Minister to this question again. The Finance Minister replied that there was not an eminent lawyer or statesman in the country who held the views enunciated by Sir Charles. What did Sir Charles Tupper reply :

My hon. friend has said that there are high legal authorities who maintain that these Belgium and German treaties have no relation to this case and do not apply to Canada.

But the Minister of Finance declared they could not apply to Canada. Sir Charles Tupper said :

I defy the hon. gentleman to name one high authority in the world who has ventured to express such an opinion. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have not hesitated to give the authorities upon which they base their opinions. They gave the authority of Lord Knutsford who is charged with the duty of administering the whole colonial empire of Great Britain, and who laid it down in the clearest and most emphatic terms, that in the British colonies no preference could be given to British goods, that, under the terms of the treaties made by England with Belgium and Germany the colonies were included and that German and Belgian goods were entitled to receive entry into these colonies on precisely the same terms as the goods coming from the mother country.

Now, was not that plain enough ? Against the declaration of the Minister of Finance that it did not apply was the declaration of one of the most eminent authorities in the imperial parliament that it did apply ; and, therefore, as Sir Charles Tupper rightly said, you are making a blunder, you are declaring commercial war against Germany, you are singling out Germany which offers us a valuable market and you will offend that country, for your tariff cannot go into effect without a virtual declaration of commercial independence on your part and a denunciation of these treaties by Great Britain.

Now, I have said that they did this by stupidity and blundering. They practically proclaimed commercial war against Germany. We had a growing market in Germany, a valuable market for our barley, wheat, rye and other products. When Germany found that we were levying unfair duties against her, not allowing her to have the advantage of the most-favoured nation clause treaty, she retaliated and shut us out of her market to a large extent. Then, hon. gentlemen opposite found that they had made a mistake. And what did they do to rectify their blunder ? The only thing they could do was to ask Great Britain to denounce these treaties, and rather than offend her most important colony, Great Britain did so. What was the result ? The result was that our trade with Germany was killed. The disaster of which these gentlemen had been warned came upon us. And what was the next step ? The Minister of Finance announced to the world that he was going to put on a surtax against Germany he would single out Germany for special treatment. He declared :

We have to-day practically three tariffs. We have the British preference, we have our general tariff, and we have the German surtax.

We levy against Germany the highest tax that we levy against any country in the world, and all because she dared to strike back when we injured her by the policy we adopted. And not the least wonderful thing is that to-day we are told that the party who call attention to the blundering of the government is unpatriotic, unwise and unkind to mention the matter at this time. I say that this charge of want of patriotism comes with particularly bad grace from the man who ran his election on the cry of secession only a few years ago. It is an old and oft-quoted saying that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel. That saying has not lost anything of its force to-day.

Under the direction of the Minister of Finance, we have singled out Germany and levied against her a special duty of thirty-three and one-third per cent higher than against any other country. What was this but a declaration of commercial war against that country ? Is it any wonder that Germany has treated us as she has done ? And the Minister of Finance grumbles because attention is called to the results of his policy. I say that instead of criticism those who call attention to these blunders are entitled to credit and thanks. Germany has tried her hand at further retaliation. She has struck back and struck heavily—she has levied against Canada special duties of fifty cents a hundred on wheat and $1.50 a barrel on apples. Germany was one of the very best markets for our apples, and apples are a crop raised in every part of our country, and the export of them means millions of dollars of return for the labour of our farmers. I have stated at the outset that the government, when they came into power, declared that the two main planks in their platform were lower duties and better and more extensive markets. Have they found these better markets for our products ? They were to have got a better market in the United States by means of reciprocity treaty with that country. But we know that they did not fulfil that promise. Did they open any other markets ? No, instead of that they lost part of what markets we had—they have lost to us this great market of 60,000,000 of the people of Germany. And the government have not secured for us any special advantages in the British market. They gave a preference on British goods coming into Canada, but what good did that do the Canadian farmer ? Britain did not give us any better terms in her market than she gives to countries that offer her no preference. We on this side claim that we have a right to ask Great Britain for more favourable treatment. Yet the Minister of Agriculture last year stated that he was glad that Great Britain had decided not to give a better market for the products of Canadian farms. The Minister of Finance tells us that what we gave we gave voluntarily and we were not beggardly enough to ask anything in return. Evidently they do not want it in Germany, because they have acted so as to take away the market we already had, and have given us no better market in the United States. At one time they thought they had made a great bargain with Trinidad, and plumed themselves highly upon it, but what does it amount to to-day? Practically little or nothing.

Now, the Minister of Finance is still pursuing his fatuous and unwise policy. He does not desire to retrace his steps. His colleagues seem to entertain the same opinion, and when attention is drawn to their unbusinesslike conduct they declare it to be unwise and unpatriotic for any member of this House to criticise them. Why did they get in to difficulty with Germany? They say it was our own family affairs. It was our own family affairs when we were dealing with England. If so we had a right to remember that the parent had made a contract which we as children were bound to respect. We did not respect it; we were planning commercial independence, as Sir Charles Tupper said, and to-day we are led to see the folly of it in the first place and the result of it in the second place. We are reaping the reward of that folly to-day, and the best evidence that the hon. gentleman has been pursuing a course of folly is the fact that the situation has been getting worse instead of better. There is no brighter outlook for the farmers of Canada. They did not try to protect the farmers of Canada and they got us no additional market abroad. And to-day because we desire to draw their attention to it and ask them to change their unwise course they turn around and become abusive. Now, the farmers of Canada had better know that it is all due to the unwise and unbusinesslike conduct of this government. We are suffering from it to-day. We tried retaliation, and every stroke we made put us in a worse position. The Minister of Finance had better take note of that. I wish the people to take note of that and remember the fact that we have lost the markets of this sixty millions of people by the folly of the present government, and we have no other market to take its place. They have given us no further advantage in the British market that we did not enjoy before. Therefore, I say that as long as they continue in this unwise course the people of Canada must suffer, and no class of Canadians will suffer more than the farmers.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). I wish to say a few words in the line of the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me on this side, because I believe they have suggested a remedy for the evils our farmers complain of. I was sorry to see the Minister of Finance bristle up so defiantly, but perhaps it was the proper attitude for him to assume when he had no other answer to make. He spoke about patriotism. Well, we believe that patriotism is all right, but we have not much confidence in the patriotism which some gentlemen carry in their pockets. Now, I am here to look after the interests of my constituents; I am here to look after their financial interests. This question of a surtax and of Canada's commercial relations to the great German empire is something in which I am interested. The farmers of the western part of older Ontario have found for many years that they cannot compete with Manitoba and the west in the raising of grain. They have, therefore, been compelled to go into fruit, dairy and stock farming. Again, the scarcity of farm labourers during recent years has driven many of our stock farmers into what is now called grass farming. That is, they turn their farms entirely to pasture. They buy cattle in the spring, allow them to run on the grass all summer and then sell them in the fall. But during the last two or three years the cheaper ranch fed cattle of the prairies have been brought east in thousands to be sold in the fall and have thus caused a glut in the market and a lowering of prices just at the very time that the so-called grass farmers of Ontario are compelled to sell their stock. Thus the Ontario grass farmers have been nearly ruined by buying cattle in the spring, when they are dear, and selling them in the fall when they are cheap. This has practically driven them out of the business, so that they are compelled to depend on fruit, dairying and the raising of hogs. Fruit, however, must eventually be their mainstay, as it is the only line in which the west can never compete with them. Germany after Great Britain is the largest and best market in the world, not only for our fruit, but also for our dairy products and bacon, therefore, it is easy to see why the farmers of older Ontario are so deeply interested in the removal of the German surtax and the improvement of our commerical relations with that great intelligent manufacturing and food consuming country.

Let us consider the apple crop as an example. Statistics show that the county of Huron on an average every year produces nearly two and one-half millions of bushels of apples, and it is estimated that this could be increased to seven millions from the same orchards, if the trees were properly pruned, sprayed, scraped, cultivated and otherwise cared for. Those apples should be worth a dollar a bushel on the trees, if we had an effective, complete and continuous system of cold storage from the hand of the producer to the table of the consumer, seasonable and proper facilities for transportation and the full benefit of the British and German markets. Something must be done to meet these changing conditions. New markets for our fruit, dairy products and bacon must be secured, and more, we must be provided with cheap sugar for canning purposes. It is estimated that if it were not for the Canadian duty we could have one hundred pounds of good German sugar laid down wholesale in Toronto for two dollars and eighty cents. Now, if we had this cheap sugar, we could can all the apples that were not of the high standard required for export, and if we had free access to the German market we could export all the apples that were of too high a grade for canning. Why, then, not try to make some kind of a trade arrangement with Germany on the basis of the free admission of German sugar into Canada in return for the free admission of Canadian fruit into Germany ? We can afford it, for we have a surplus. Canadians at present contribute to this surplus by paying duty on sugar to the amount of three million dollars a year, while Germany charges one dollar and fifty cents on every barrel of Canadian apples which now enter her markets. It is, therefore, plain that if we could get the duty taken off German sugar in Canada, and at the same time the duty off Canadian apples in Germany, our farmers would gain in two ways; first, by buying cheaper sugar. and secondly by selling dearer apples. This would be a mutually advantageous arrangement, and would be similar in its workings to the different trade treaties which Germany is now negotiating with other countries. The government of the United States has already made arrangements with Germany that the duty on apples shall not take effect in their case until next June, and no doubt in the meantime will make further arrangements. Can our government not do some thing in this matter to put our Canadian farmers on equal footing with those in the United States?

More, the arrangement which I have proposed is not only practical and possible, but it is fully in accord with the system of maximum and minimum tariffs, which we find in such well known protectionist countries as Germany, the United States and our own Dominion of Canada. Again, we have hundreds of thousands of German settlers and voters in this Dominion, and they will be greatly pleased by the removal of this surtax, for if a German in this country wishes to purchase a Bouker knife, or any of his favourite goods that have been manufactured in Germany, it is very difficult for him to understand why he must pay thirty per cent more for these goods than if they had been manufactured in France. He is very likely to resent such a discrimination against his fatherland. I hope, therefore, the government will consider this matter seriously, and that we will soon hear that the German surtax has been removed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me very remarkable that the government knows so little about the German tariff which is said to have been in force since the first of March. It has been referred to a great many times during the present session. Information has been asked for time and time again. I will not weary the House with the references to it but I have these references under my hand. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) told us some weeks ago that he did not know anything about it but he thought the government might summon sufficient energy to write a letter about it. Afterwards, I think, on one occasion he promised to telegraph but he informed us this afternoon that it was a matter of such trifling importance to the government that he had forgotten all about it. The government were not always so careless about sending telegrams on less important subjects. I recollect on one occasion when there was some debate over the building of a railway in the Yukon the government hastened, without the slightest delay, to send a telegram to the High Commissioner for Canada inquiring—well, we do not know what the telegram was; the telegram was private, but the answer was to be public and it was communicated to the Liberal press promptly upon its receipt. There was a promise made to bring the telegram down but it never was brought down. The government are prompt enough to send telegrams to the High Commissioner or to any one else in regard to matters of that kind, but with thirteen or fourteen minsters of the Crown there is not one of them, who, during the last six weeks, has been able to devote sufficient attention to public business to send a telegram for the purpose of enabling the government to inform parliament as to the actual German tariff levied on goods exported from Canada to that country. This afternoon we had the extraordinary statement from the Minster of Customs that although this matter has been referred to at least half a dozen times by question, by attention called to it on the orders of the day and otherwise, there has been such extreme carelessness and negligence that nothing has been done up to the present time. Now, he frankly confesses that he had forgotten all about sending a telegram to the High Commissioner in regard to this subject involving very large interests in this country. Well, I did hope that some explanation would have been given of that other than the bald statement of the Minister of Customs that there have been absolute forgetfulness and negligence. Are not our trade relations with Germany of equal importance with the subject which demanded a prompt telegram from the Prime Minister of this country to Lord Strathcona on the occasion to which I have just referred? When it is a question of a possible party advantage there is not a moment's delay or loss of time but when it comes to a question in which the interests of thousands of farmers are involved the government cannot find it in their hearts or in their energies to arouse themselves from that lethargy which seems to be creeping over some of the departments and send a telegram for the purpose of communicating to this parliament information which should have been available on the very first day of this session.

I agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the taunt of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) who moved this motion was entirely uncalled for. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) saw fit to discuss a subject which ought to occupy the attention of the government if it has not occupied it up to the present time. I will not go into the history of the extraordinary series of blunders which led to the condition which now prevails. Every one knows the history of it. The government came down with a tariff policy in 1897 which was proclaimed by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) to be a step in the direction of free trade. That was the principle upon which it was put forward. He said that the ship's head was now pointed towards the open sea, that it was the deliberate intention of this government to place upon the statute-books of this country a measure which, to the extent provided for, would give the people of Canada the advantage of lower duties from all the countries which were enumerated. It did give lower duties from a great many countries and from more countries than the government anticipated or intended at the time. They went on and they made strong representations which procured the denunciation of the German treaty. Upon what grounds was that treaty denounced? It was denounced by the government of Lord Salisbury upon the representation of this government, upon the strong, urgent demand of this government, for the reason that the continuance of the German and Belgian treaties was not in the interest of the empire as a whole. Very good. If these treaties were denounced in the interest of the empire as a whole how does it happen that without one single word of remonstrance from this government, the rest of the British empire, under a treaty made afterwards, secures from the German empire better tariff conditions than Canada does? That is a point that I have never been able to understand. It may be that this government having brought conditions into a very unhappy state by the action they took, the argument might be made that there was no other course for them to take than that into which they had driven themselves; but what I have never been able to understand, what I have challenged an answer to over and over again across the floor of this House is this: If the government of this country procured these treaties to be denounced upon the representation that their continuance was not in the interests of the whole empire, if they procured the assent of the Imperial government to the denunciation of these treaties upon that ground—and that was the ground expressed by Lord Salisbury—how does it happen that they have been sitting silent while the rest of the empire, under a treaty made by the mother country, is receiving better tariff treatment from Germany than Canada is? Has there ever been any remonstrance from the government to the British government in regard to this? The hon. Minister of Finance this afternoon said that this is a family affair; then why is not the whole family receiving the same treatment from Germany? Either his term is wrong or else the condition in which we find ourselves at the present time is undeserved. Family affairs, says the Minister of Finance. Well, if this treaty was denounced because this is a family affair within the British empire, how is it that one member of the family is shut out from that treatment which is accorded to all the other members of the family? How does it happen that the government of Canada sit silent without remonstrance while that undeserved treatment has been meted out? That is a subject which should have invited the attention of the government long ago; that is a question to which I have never heard any sufficient answer given, or indeed any answer at all. The consideration which the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has given to this subject and the manner in which he has directed the attention of the public to the inaction of the government, deserve the thanks of the House and of the country.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). It is not necessary to go back, as did the hon. the leader of the opposition, to a period when a discussion as to the wisdom of enacting the British preference would be of any practical value.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not go back any further than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not finding fault, but I do say the British preference was fully discussed in the country in 1900 and the Liberal party were sent back to power by an overwhelming majority. We went to the country again after that, and not only did we announce our intention to maintain the British preference, but we announced that Germany having objected to our making this family arrangement by which Canada made her tariff more favourable to the mother country, and representations having been made to Germany ; and having waited patiently for five years for Germany to see that her position towards Canada was not fair, and after using all means that could be employed between friendly nations to have justice rendered us ; we proposed to enact on our statute-book a surtax clause similar to that which Germany herself had on her statute-book. The German statute-book contains a law that if any country should discriminate against the German empire, Germany may put a surtax on the goods of that country equal to 100 per cent—we stopped at thirty-three and one-third per cent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the German government put that tariff into force in 1903 ; did they apply the surtax against us in 1903 ?

Mr. PATERSON. They did not add the surtax they had the power to add on their maximum tariff, but under their law they had the power to add on their maximum tariff, but under their law they had the power to do it, not to the extent of thirty-three and one-third per cent but to the extent of 100 per cent. Just let me point out to my hon. friend that when this very German surtax was proposed by the government, this House agreed to it unanimously, and the line of argument pursued by gentlemen opposite then was : Ah, the Liberal government has at last awakened, and they are doing now what they should have done long ago. But why is this question revived in parliament and at this critical time ? Hon. gentlemen opposite are not ignorant of the fact (for I mentioned it) that we are being approached on the part of the German government with a view of seeing whether there cannot be freer and mutually beneficial trade relations established. These negotiations I believe will go further. Not very long ago an official of the German government saw the Minister of Finance again ; the thing is being discussed, and I think it was stated in the House that when the new tariff was introduced with a minimum and a maximum, then all questions could be considered in reference to this matter. I feel at one with the Minister of Finance that this being the present condition of the question, it is regrettable that responsible members of parliament should rise and virtually say that it is an absolute necessity for the prosperity of Canada that Canada should have the German market. Well, we don't believe that. We are anxious and we shall endeavour to extend our trade everywhere, but the extension of our trade must be on fair terms. I regret that under such conditions the opposition should think it well to bring this matter up and that the leader of the opposition should lend countenance to his followers in so doing, because when that gentleman representing the German government again approaches us he may come with the idea announced in Canada's parliament, that it is of vital interest to the people of Canada that we should get this treaty with Germany.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What part of the remarks of the leader of the opposition does the Minister of Customs find fault with ?

Mr. PATERSON. The remarks of the leader of the opposition were altogether condemnatory of what he termed the blundering and the bungling of this government in enacting the preferential tariff ; and out of that preferential tariff sprung this whole difficulty with Germany which undertook to punish us for doing what we had a right to do.

Mr. HENDERSON. To blunder ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, it was not a blunder. If it were a blunder then it was a most fortunate blunder, for if ever there was anything that enriched the agriculturists of Canada it was that measure of preference in the British market. If the Liberal government can blunder into a measure so beneficial to this Dominion what will they do when they formulate a carefully considered and well matured policy ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was it the farmers of Canada got the preference in the British market to which the hon. gentleman refers ?

Mr. PATERSON. The farmers of Canada got that preference in the British market the day after the preference to Britain was declared in this parliament, they got it the day the London 'Times' and the other great newspapers of England proclaimed that Canada had given a preference to British goods, and when a feeling was aroused—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh !

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, a feeling was aroused in Britain in favour of Canadian goods ; a feeling that did not require to be crystallized into legislation ; a feeling that sent the British purchasers of goods into the market to ask as they had never asked before : Have you Canadian cheese ? have you Canadian butter ? Have you Canadian hams ? We want to buy from Canada for Canada has given us a preference. I have been from the Atlantic to the Pacific ; I have listened to farmers' deputations ; I have met them, I believe, in all the provinces of this Dominion, and I believe that every farmers' deputation that met us from the Atlantic to the Pacific emphatically declared : 'We stand for and demand a continuance of the preference to Great Britain.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? If Canada does not want a preference in the British market, why did the government ask for it at the Colonial Conference in 1902 ?

Mr. PATERSON. I have not said that Canada does not want a preference in the British market. I said that Canada had got it from the good will of the people there—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the only preference you asked for ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PATERSON. —and it is only betraying an ignorance of English sentiment for any hon. gentleman to attempt to deny that Canada and Canadian products stand better in the British market to-day than ever before. Moreover, the farmers, for whom the hon. gentleman professes to speak want the British preference continued. Let him go to them and suggest : If you will wipe out the preference to Great Britain, then Germany will have no cause of complaint against you, and you may be able to send them the $1,500,000 of goods you sent to them before,' and what will they say ? They will say : 'The $150,000,000 we send to England is worth a great deal more to us than the German market of $1,500,000, and we will stick to the preference.' What are the facts ? The facts are these, that under the old arrangement Germany was sending us double, treble, in some years nearly quadruple, the quantity of goods we were sending to Germany. What is the total of our exports of Canadian produce to Germany, which these gentlemen are talking about ? I am not saying that we would not be willing to increase our trade if we can, but we are not going to increase it by doing away with the British preference in order to please the Germans. We cannot do that ; the country is opposed to it. Our exports to Germany are very nearly as much now as they were before we were shut out off its market. For instance, in 1902, the year before the surtax was imposed, we imported from Germany $10,919,994 whereas Germany took from us of Canadian products of all kinds only $1,298,654. Last year the German surtax had such an effect upon what we bought from Germany that our imports from that country fell to $6,642,139. In 1903 we bought from them $12,127,867, and they took from us $1,618,517. In 1904 they took from us $1,358,910 and last year $1,123,586. We are sending them practically the same amount of goods we sent before the surtax was imposed, but Germany is sending us half the goods it sent us before, and therefore Germany is coming to us and saying : 'Can't we arrange this matter in some way?' And when she comes, she will point to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite to show that Canada is in a difficult position because of the surtax. Sir, in regard to the British preference, we have nothing to take back ; we boast of it ; we say it was the greatest step ever taken to advance the agriculture and every other industry of Canada; we propose to mainfain it, and at the same time to extend the trade of Canada with all other nations as far as we can on fair and equitable terms. But no nation must attempt to discipline Canada if she sees fit to enact a tariff that will give a preference to other parts of the empire. Canadians will not tamely submit to that ; at least, the people's representatives on this side of the House will not. Allusion has been made to the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite asked for the new German tariff, which went into effect on March 1, and that we had promised it. It goes to the Trade and Commerce Department. I had asked for it. I gave the answer of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The Brussels Convention, to which Canada is a party, forwards the tariffs of all the countries connected with that Convention. It had not come to hand. I understood the deputy to say that they had wired Lord Strathcona for it. I did forget to ask him if it had come. I supposed it had not come, or he would have sent it to me. That is all I can say as to that. But of what avail or importance is it ? If it is in force, it is in force whatever it may be. It was going into force with reference to the United States , but the German government reconsidered the matter and extended the time temporarily for one year from March 1, 1906, to March 1, 1907. Then the United States, by proclamation of the President, extended the preference which they had given to Germany on certain articles ; and what are those articles ? They are some five in number; argols or crude tartar ; brandies or other spirits, reduced about 22½ per cent ; still wines and vermouth and some other liquors, reduced about 22½ per cent : and paintings in oil or water colours, pen and ink drawings and statuary, reduced from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, a reduction of about 25 per cent. These are the benefits which the United States gives to the Germans for which they get in return their conventional tariff. And what do hon. gentleman opposite propose to get from Germany to save our agriculturists from ruin, and what benefits do they propose to give to Germany ? When the representative of the German government comes to us to discuss this matter, he will want to know what we are prepared to give ? Should we say : If you give us your minimum and that minimum suits us, we shall give you our minimum. He will reply : Oh, you ought to be content with very much less. According to some of your representatives in parliament, it is a matter of life and death for you that you should get the duty on apples lowered. You ought therefore to be content if we lower the duty on apples provided you wipe out the surtax. That is the position which the speeches of these hon. gentlemen opposite would warrant the representative of the German government in taking. I can only repeat that the bringing up of this question by these hon. gentlemen the line of argument they have taken is the most unfortunate they could have adopted at present ; and I speak as plainly as I do now in order that any representative in the German government may recognize that while we are anxious to do what is right and fair, and while we are anxious to have the most friendly relations with the German empire as well as any other country, yet we are not prepared to be dictated to how we shall manage our own fiscal affairs or quietly submit to be punished because we have done what we believe to be in our own interests and the interests of the empire.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON, (Halton). I must confess that we have had this afternoon one or two rather extraordinary exhibitions of temper. My hon. friend the Finance Minister rose in his place and denounced the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstring) as unpatriotic and in fact unfit to be a representative of the people, and we have just had an equal exhibition of temper along the same line from the hon. the Minister of Customs. I wonder what it is that has touched these hon. gentlemen so keenly? Is it the fact that they are conscious they have made a huge blunder in their arrangement of our fiscal tariff and that this consciousness is cutting them to the quick ? They are evidently beginning to realize their position but do not like to humilate themselves by acknowledging that they have blundered. I was astonished when I heard the Minister of Customs, a few moments ago, saying that we have a preference in the British market. Why, the Minister of Agriculture says that the agriculturists of this country do not want any preference. The Minister of Customs however says we have one. Where is the evidence of it ?

Mr. PATERSON. In the increased sales.

Mr. HENDERSON. If that is the only argument the hon. gentleman has to advance, I would advise him never to advance it again because he would be laughed out of court. If we sell more, Mr. Speaker, it is simply because we produce more. The United States likewise produce more and consequently sell more. If you increase your products, you have to sell more and do sell more. Is the fact of our selling more the only evidence the hon. minister has of a preference in the old country ? Can he point to a single instance in which we get a fraction of a cent to-day more for our cheese than we would get if we had not given British goods a preference ? Will he tell me that we get a cent a bushel more for our wheat than we would get if there had been no preference given by us ? I can tell him that in the last year of the Conservative regime, Canadian wheat sold at Toronto for 20 cents a bushel more than in the Liverpool market. Can he say it has ever sold at that price during the present regime ? Can he say we have had under the present administration a greater preference in the British market than we enjoyed under the old regime when we got that price for our great product ? Not at all. The hon. gentleman is advancing a most fallacious argument. In fact it is no argument at all, but simply a fallacious assertion and he is simply deceiving the people when he attempts to make them believe that we have a preference to-day in the British market over any other country.

Mr. PATERSON. Why do our farmers then insist that we should keep the preference in force ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will tell him why. I have the honour of representing a county and have represented it during the last eighteen sessions—as honest a county as there is in the whole Dominion—and let me contrast the result of the verdict given by that county with that given by the hon. gentleman's riding. Since this preference was given, my majority has been increased and the majority in favour of this government reduced.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I was referring to the fact that without exception, we have been urged, during the course of our tariff commission, to maintain this preference. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have read a good many of those reports, and let me tell the hon. gentleman there are a lot of sensible farmers around the town of Berlin, and I would ask him did they give him the impression that they wanted this preference maintained ? I do not think that any such sentiment is general. But we all admit this. We all admit that there is a feeling in this country that we should show a sentimental preference to the old country.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who denies it ? Should we not respect our mother country more than we do Russia or Germany or France or other European countries ? I think it is only reasonable that we should. The old country is the fatherland of the majority of our people and we look upon it with a great deal of respect. But why should we do something for it that will hurt our own Canadian people ? I am a Canadian first and British afterwards. I do not believe in taking the bread out of the mouths of the children of Canadian workingmen for the sake of helping even British workingmen, yet that is what we are doing. By our preference we are giving employment to the workingmen of Great Britain and depriving our own Canadian workingmen of the opportunity of doing that work. Will the hon. gentleman attempt to deny that ? He dare not because if he did the people would not have any confidence in any statement he would make. Do we import more goods? Yes, but we make less than we would were it not for the increased importation. No doubt there is a class of people in this country who approve of the preference. There is the middleman, for instance, the wholesale importer, who makes more profit on imported goods than he does on Canadian goods, and who consequently will favour a preference for the mother country. But what has this preference done for Canada ? The Minister of Finance tells us that it has done a great deal. I have yet to learn that it has. I say, speaking for myself—I am not speaking for those around me, for I have not consulted them—that in my opinion the preference as given in 1897 and increased in 1898 and 1899, has not resulted in any substantial benefit to this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are you in favour of repealing it ?

Mr. HENDERSON. When we come into power, we will answer that question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I have no objection to giving my answer now, and I do not say one thing to-day and do the opposite to-morrow. I am not going to advocate a duty on cabbage to-day and lower it to-morrow. But let me say that had I now the opportunity I would strike the present preference off the statute-book. What we ought to have is a mutual preference. If we obtain a preference that will be equally advantageous for Great Britain and ourselves let us adopt it. But this jug-handled policy of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance is not at all to my liking. I am not in favour of a preference that is wholly one-sided.

Mr. MILLER. My I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Would the hon. gentleman vote a mutual preference upon our statute-books?

Mr. HENDERSON. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will vote for anything that will bring benefit to Canada. I am not like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) who would vote away all our rights and get nothing in return. My motto is 'Canada first and always. And if we can get a benefit through mutual preference I would certainly hold up both hands for it.

Now, the Minister of Customs is always prepared to discuss a question of this kind. He expressed surprise that some hon. gentleman on this side had gone so far back in the discussion. But a few moments after he had begun speaking we found he had got as far back as any hon. gentleman on this side. If there has been a benefit through the preference, I would like to ask the Minister of Customs where that benefit has come in. He has not shown us where we got one single cent more for our butter, cheese, bacon, hams, wheat, flour, eggs or anything else that we sent to Great Britain than we would have received. All that he is able to say is that we find a larger market there. Of course we find a larger market there, but that is because we are producing more every year. Canada is growing ; her cultivated area is becoming greater, and, no doubt, year after year, we shall continue to send more and more whether the hon gentleman reduces the preference or increases it. There is nothing in the hon. gentleman's argument that we sell more of the products of the farms of Canada in Great Britain.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. At better prices.

Mr. HENDERSON. But can the hon. gentleman from Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) say that we get one-tenth of one cent more for cheese than we would have got if there had been no preference? Does he mean to say that a customer—say some woman going into a shop in an English village say: I am willing to give you a cent more a pound for Canadian cheese because Canada gives us a preference in her markets ? I will undertake to say that there are twenty millions of people in Great Britain who never heard of the preference. A great many of our own people, I believe, are not fully familiar with the facts, but in Great Britain there are large numbers of people who do not even know that such a thing as the preference exists. Yet the hon. member for Brockville would tell us that the British people willingly pay more for cheese because we give Great Britain a preference in our markets.

Well, then, where is the advantage to us ? The Minister of Customs will tell us that we make our purchases of British goods at lower prices. How much lower? What was the policy on which they framed the tariff when they gave us the preference? They simply put up the duty on one thing and took it down on another. They put the duty on the white cotton that the hon. Minister of Customs' shirt is made of down to 16⅔ per cent, giving him a preference, but the man who works in a foundry or the farmer who, because of his occupation prefers a coloured shirt, has to pay 35 per cent—a decrease to the Minister of Customs but an increase to the workingman. And this is what the hon. gentleman calls a British preference. Why, I would not even call it a Yankee preference—it is simply a bit of humbug. The instance I have quoted is merely an instance, but it was repeated time after time in the scale of duties. And hon. gentlemen opposite told us last year that the preference was a failure. The Minister of Finance found that he had ruined the woollen industry of this country and that the woollen goods formerly made in Canada were not made here now, that our workmen were out of employment and were going away to find homes in other parts of the world. And for sheer shame he came at last to the rescue—for a short time and to a slight extent. He gave back to that industry some of the protection he had taken away some years before. Instead of a duty of 23 per cent on woollen goods he increased it to 30 per cent—that is he re-reduced the preference. And what did he do with the iron industry? When he found that he had paralyzed that industry by his British preference he told the farmers and workmen of the country virtually: You will have to help the iron industry by going down in your pockets to pay a bonus to the producers of iron that the industry may be maintained. Time after time, this preference which they laud to the skies they themselves have condemned and brought to ridicule. And yet one of these hon. gentlemen asks me if I will vote against a preference. I should not be at all surprised if, when the revision of the tariff takes place, this preference will be wiped out. And by the way, there is something strange about that revision. We were to have had it in 1904, then in 1905, then most assuredly it was to come on in 1906. And now we are told that it may be brought down in November, 1906, but the probability is that it will be 1907 before we see it. There seems to be some thing about it that the hon. gentlemen opposite are afraid to disclose. If the new tariff is a good thing why do they not bring it down and let the people have the benefit of it. They have admitted that their preferential tariff is a failure and an injury. They have done this by restoring last year protection to the woollen industry. If they are going to do more for our industries, by all means let them not wait any longer, but let them come down with their new tariff and let our industries have the benefit of it. The Minister of Finance told us in his opening remarks that he had done no harm to our trade with Germany. And I think it was the Minister of Customs who said that we gave the same treatment to Germany that we gave to every other country. I wish to say just a word with reference to that because I think that is the kernel of the whole trouble. I do not wish to repeat what has already been said of the blundering of the hon. gentlemen opposite in causing the denunciation of these treaties and interfering in the trade between Canada and Germany, which trade has gone on very well for many years. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the Germans took very little from us. But they must remember that the trade was growing, and had it not been interfered with we do not know what proportions it might have reached to-day. We know that there are certain articles that would find a market in Germany much more readily than in Great Britain. For instance, there is a class of wheat we grow, a softer class of wheat than we can find a market for in Great Britain, for which there is a large market in Germany. But we have practically been shut out of the German market by the action of the government. The hon. gentleman says that we are giving Germany everything that we are giving the others. But there is more than that in it—we took some thing away from Germany and have never restored it. We have given to her what we gave to others, but we have not given back to her what we took from her. Is it any wonder that the German people have felt chagrined and have retaliated against us to our great injury? It seems to me it is no wonder at all, and I hope and trust that the government will use their best endeavours to win back for us the markets of Germany which we had. Of course, we are not begging. Of course, we can get along without these markets. We are not saying it is an absolute necessity, as the Minister of Customs presumed to assert we were doing. I think possibly Canada might get along. But we would like to get into the German market because we find it is a market that would consume a great deal of Canadian products and I hope and trust that the government will do something to enable us to get into that market for such products as Canada has a superabundance of. Now, I must confess that it was not my intention to occupy much time of the House. But this is rather an interesting subject, and the Minister of Customs has exhibited so much warmth in discussing this that I thought there must be something troubling him, and I hope I have been able to say something that will soothe him and make him feel a little better particularly in making him realize the fact that we never had a preference in the British market, and have not got one to-day.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (South Oxford). It was not my intention to join in this discussion when the matter came before the House this afternoon, but after the challenge that has been thrown out by the last speaker the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), I feel that justice to this country requires me to answer him. I am surprised that a gentleman of his intelligence and knowledge of the conditions of this country should challenge this side of the House to show wherein our products are receiving a better price in the English markets to-day than they were before the surtax was imposed. For instance, consider the article of cheese. Are we getting any more for our cheese to-day that we were formerly? Let us look at some figures. In 1896 our exports of cheese to the British market amounted to 164,689,133 lbs. which was sold at an average price of 8·46 cents per lb. In 1904 our exports of cheese increased to 233,980,716 lb., which sold at an average price of 10·29 cents per lb., an increase of 1·84 cents per lb. Our total sales in 1896 for cheese amounted to $13,956,571; in 1904 they amounted to $24,099,004. The increased price of 1·84 cents per lb. on the product of 1904, represented alone a value to this country of $3,434,216.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. I never said the price was not higher to-day than it was before, I merely said that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not able to show that cheese was one fraction of a cent higher to-day than it would have been had we not the preference.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Very well. The hon. gentleman had something else in his mind than I supposed, and something else than this House supposed when he made that challenge. If we look at the exports of our butter, we find that in 1896 they amounted to 1,552,000 lb., which brought an average price of a trifle over 17 cents per lb. Ten years later, under the present system, we find that our exports of butter amount to 5,930,000 lb. Now the increased price of a cent a lb. which obtained between those periods, on the products we exported in 1905, would represent a value of nearly $300,000. If we take last year's exports of butter to England, we find they amount to $8,000,000, an increase of nearly 500 per cent over the exports of butter in 1896, and an increase in price of nearly 20 per cent, since the average price this year is 20½ cents per lb., as compared with a little over 17 cents per lb. in 1896. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the United States is producing more cheese and selling more cheeese, as well as Canada, in the English market. What are the facts ? 15 years ago Canada was exporting to England about 99,000,000 lb. of cheese. At the same time the United States was exporting about 240,000,000 lb. in round numbers. To-day the situation is entirely reversed. We find that the United States is exporting to the English markets less than 100,000,000 pounds, while the exports of Canadian cheese have climbed up to nearly 240,000,000 pounds. Now if we compare the price we are obtaining for our products with the price obtained by other countries, we find that our butter is bringing a price in the English market almost on a par with the best Danish butter, which is considered the best butter in the world. A few years ago they were beating us in that market by 6 cents a pound. During the last year we find that Canadian butter is bringing the very same price as Danish butter, within about a cent a pound, and in some cases it is selling at the very same price. We are capturing the English market with our cheese, and it is largely because of the sentiment that has been spoken of here to-night —not altogether but partially. England has come to appreciate the goods that we send her, and partly because of that appreciation she has come to use our products. We find to-day that Canadian cheese supplies almost entirely the English market. We are supplying them with nearly 80 per cent of the total amount of cheese they import from other countries.

I claim in connection with this discussion that our friends opposite are not taking a position that they would like to advocate in the country. Only a few years ago they were proclaiming their loyalty to the flag, they were talking about loyalty to the British Crown, and advocating a preference to England, but when this government did give a preference to England they said, you have waited too long, why did you not arrange for this preference years before ? To-day we have that preference and I believe there is not an hon. member in this House but who will concede that our products are appreciated more highly because of the preference which was given to the English producers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Do I understand that we get a penny more for our cheese, butter, or goods of any kind because of that preference ? Is it not quality that sells the goods in the old country ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Because of that preference the English consumers have been led to ask for Canadian goods. Realizing the superior quality of Canadian goods they have been educated to pay a better price for them and they have come to demand Canadian cheese, butter, apples and all the other products which we send to Great Britain because they appreciate their superior qualities. This condition has been largely brought about because of the preference that was granted to England in our own Canadian market. I have not the slightest doubt of that fact. I have been in very close touch with English buyers of our products and at the time that this preference was granted to England in our markets it was repeatedly referred to as a friendly, a generous act upon the part of the Canadian government. I know from experience in connection with the English trade that English buyers began to ask for our products because of the preference we gave to them in our markets. Now, touching this question of apples I happen to have some knowledge in connection with the apple trade. You would imagine from the discussion that has been going on this afternoon and evening that we were sending a very large quantity of apples to Hamburg or to other German markets. Millions of dollars have been referred to. What are the facts ? Our exports of apples to the German market have amounted to about $30,000 a year while our exports to the English market during the same time have exceeded $2,000,000.

Mr. PATERSON. $2,500,000.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Exceeded $2,500,000, and some years even more than that, but take last season as an instance, we know that the German markets have been fairly good for Canadian apples—not better than the English market, perhaps not as good, certainly not as good a year ago as last season. This last fall the German markets were fairly good but still not as good as the English markets. I know from personal experience. We have this market still open, it is a market that will take more apples and take them at better paying prices and if the German government are not prepared to allow our apples to go in on the same basis as apples from the United States I do not think it is becoming in us from the standpoint of our dignity as a nation and as a people to concede to Germany favours when they are not willing to treat with us on the same basis as they treat with other foreign nations. We have given them the same privilege to trade with us that we have given to other foreign nations and we claim that we should be dealt with on the same basis. If they put an exclusive duty on our apples we do not feel that it is becoming in us to sacrifice our national dignity and pander to the German market when we are not compelled to do so. I believe that we will not suffer materially even if we do not have the German market to which to ship our apples. In connection with this discussion I am sure that the Canadian people will stand by the government that has inaugurated this arrangement or that has given England a preference in our markets. I am sure this discussion will show that the government is prepared to stand by that arrangement and we believe it would be for the best interests not only of the farmers who have been specially referred to but of the people of this Dominion as a whole.

Mr. D. DERBYSHIRE (Brockville). Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a few figures in connection with our trade with Great Britain and I would specially call them to the attention of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). At the time when the preference was given in 1897 our exports of butter, cheese and bacon were $19,000,000 and since the time that the attention of the British market has been riveted on Canada on account of this preference the increase in our exports has been over $3,000,000 a year until 1905 when we reached the large sum of $5,000,000 more money than we ever received before for our butter, cheese and bacon while in the meantime prices were going up on account of the quality and on account of the preference we had in the British market. We have literally driven the American people out of the British market in connection with butter and cheese. They are exporting less each year while we are exporting more, while we are receiving more money and while we are selling our cheese at higher prices than they are receiving for theirs. I believe that Canada is going to be the greatest country in the world in the production of these articles and that the prices will continue to advance. The government and the country are becoming famous on account of the preference we have given which is rivetting the attention of the British people on the goods that we produce, bringing about a higher appreciation of their quality and leading to the enhancement of prices.

Our exports of these articles in 1905 were $50,000,000, and we consumed at home $50,000,000.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's and Albert). Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the Year Book contains a pretty complete answer to the remarks of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Schell). I find on looking at the Year Book, page 340, that a statement is given of the amount of our exports to the various countries with which we trade and I see that in 1894 our total exports to Great Britain were $60,878,000. A percentage of 58·41 of our trade. In 1904 it is true that the gross amount of our exports had risen but the percentage of trade, instead of having risen had considerably fallen off because the percentage was only 55·50 per cent. This was the country to which we gave a preference between 1894 and 1904. Instead of claiming that the preference has produced an increase of trade it is just as fair an argument to say that it has produced a diminution of trade. Take the United States. Our trade with the United States was $32,872,000 in 1894. In 1904, it had increased to $66,856,000. The percentage in 1894 was 31·57 per cent while in 1904 it had risen to 33·70 per cent, an increase of trade with the United States, a country to which we have given no preference whatever, whereas with a country to which we have given a preference trade has fallen off by over three per cent.

It seems to me, that is a complete answer. Judging by what the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Schell) said, one would think we had a preference in the British market. He said the people of Britain were so filled with gratitude to Canada on account of the preference we gave them, that they trade more with us than they otherwise would. Well, the fact is that our precentage of trade with them has fallen off comparatively. It is absurd to say that Englishmen will pay more for their cheese because we have given English manufacturers a preference. Sentiment has very little to do with trade. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) so loyal that he will pay more for British goods than for American goods of the same quality ? We heard the Minister of Finance attempt to lecture the member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) on his loyalty. That was a strange role for the Finance Minister ; a gentleman who only a few years ago ran an election in Nova Scotia on the cry of secession from the Dominion; a man who did all he could to break up this confederation and to prevent Canada from being the brightest gem in the British crown. It is he who, because he is now reaping the fruits of office and is ultra loyal on that account, had the presumption to lecture my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) on his loyalty to Britain and British institutions. It was like to Satan reproving sin. I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here to-night for I would like to tell him something about that secession campaign of his in Nova Scotia.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I would not have spoken in this debate had it not been for the line taken by the leader of the opposition in this discussion. I had hoped that the hon. gentleman would have declared that his party was not against the British preference; that his followers were not prepared to sacrifice that great policy for the sake of getting a little momentary advantage in the German market. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is one of the oldest members of the opposition; he sits on the right hand of the leader of his party and is entitled to speak with authority, and the tenor of all his remarks was that the British preference was a thing to be abhored and that we ought to immediately do away with it in order to get into the German market.

Mr. SPROULE. I must have been unfortunate if I conveyed that impression. My whole criticism was on the blundering of the government which got us into this unfortunate position.

Mr. FISHER. Got us into this unfortunate position by giving a preference to Great Britain; there was nothing else to get us into what my hon. friend calls an unfortunate position.

Mr. SPROULE. You got into that position by violating the solemn treaties made between the mother country and other nations, and afterwards declaring that your conduct was not a violation of these treaties.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend can call it what he likes; it was the preference to Great Britain given by Canada which we believed we had the right to give notwithstanding any treaties which the British empire may have had with foreign countries; it was that which brought about the action of Germany. And indeed so strong was the feeling in favour of our contention in that regard that although the law officers of the crown thought that perhaps it was not legal, nobody doubted but that it was just and right; nobody doubted that this policy of the Canadian government was not good policy, and it was followed immediately by the British government denouncing these treaties. It was by reason of the action of the Canadian government that a totally new relationship arose between the self-governing colonies of the empire and the mother country in regard to foreign treaties, and to Canada is due the credit for bringing that very desirable end about. The hon. gentleman from Halton (Mr. Henderson) agrees with his friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the denunciation of the German and Belgian treaties was a deplorable thing, but they forget that Sir Charles Tupper and their old time leaders, long before the Liberals came to power, urged the Imperial government to abolish these very treaties. Well, Sir, no matter what these gentlemen may think it is nevertheless true that the denunciation of these treaties was a step in advance for the colonies of the British empire, and that Canada has the honour of bringing that result about. And, up to this evening I have never heard a responsible man in public life in Canada undertake to say that this denunciation of these treaties was a mistake or a blunder. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) wondered why so much heat was displayed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs. I do not think there was any heat shown, but I do believe there was room for resentment in that any man on the floor of the Canadian parliament should undertake to plead for Germany when we have simply been hitting back as the result of the violent and unjustifiable attack by Germany on Canadian agriculture and Canadian trade. It is deplorable to see such tactics pursued in this House. I feel certain that hon. gentlemen opposite must take the consequence of what they have done to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr, FISHER. Hon. gentlemen opposite say hear, hear; do they agree with me, or do they agree with the member for Lambton and the member for Halton?

Mr. FOWLER. I would'nt like to agree with you.

Mr. FISHER. They do not agree with me; then they will be taken to task by the people of Canada who do agree with me. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) was present at the recent fruit grower's conference when I pointed out that Canada was quite ready to trade with Germany, but was not willing to go cap in hand and beg Germany for favours. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) heard the fruit growers of Canada applaud that statement of mine. I would have expected that the statement should have been applauded by my hon. friend, but judging from what he said to-night it was not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I did not happen to be there at the time and could not have applauded.

Mr. FISHER. Then I can tell the hon. gentleman that the fruit growers at that conference representing as they did practically the whole of Canada, in large majority if not unanimously applauded that sentiment and accepted the explanation which I gave of the policy of the government. I regret that the leader of the opposition did not on behalf of his party repudiate the idea announced by some of his followers, that we must do away with the British preference so that we may get entrance to the German market. I had hoped and expected that the leader of the party would have declared that that was not the policy of the party; but as he sat silent and allowed it, and as he spoke without so declaring, I think we are entitled to say that that is the policy of the opposition, and we are ready to join issue with them on that as on many other questions before the people of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not to join issue, because the government themselves threatened to repeal the preference in 1902, and again in 1903.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the hon. gentleman quite catches what I mean.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You catch what I mean.

Mr. FISHER. I want to say a word or two about the preference. Hon. gentlemen opposite have talked a good deal about what I said on a certain occasion in regard to a preference for Canada in the English market. I said that the farmers of Canada made no demand on Great Britain for a preference for their foodstuffs in her market. I say it again. I say the farmers of Canada have had abundant opportunity to ask for that, and they have failed to ask for it, and I do not believe they will ask for it on the terms on which they would require to ask. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) said that the farmers of Canada would like to have a preference in the English market. They have a preference in the English market; they have had it for years, ever since England has enjoyed a preference in our market. Hon. gentlemen opposite have declared, and they have repeated to-night, that the policy of giving a preference in our markets to Great Britain without demanding a quid pro quo, was a blunder and practically a crime against Canadian interests. What does that mean? It means that there would have been no British preference in Canada for the last nine years. It means, according to the judgment of the English people, delivered a few months ago, that for many years to come there would not have been a preference for Canada in the English market. What does that mean? It means that we would have stood in the same position in regard to the sale of our food products in the British market that we did prior to 1897—that we would have had no preference, no sentimental preference if you like to call it such, in that market. It means as a matter of fact that we would not to-day be reaping the enormous advantage which the farmers of Canada do reap as the result of giving a preference to English manufacturers and exporters in our markets. That is what the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite would have resulted in. I believe the people of Canada are well satisfied with the British preference which this government inaugurated and which I believe they will carry on for many years to come.

My hon. friend reproaches me because I said that as far as I personally as a farmer in Canada was concerned, I was rather glad that the English people had decided not to impose taxes on food products going into the English market. I think I can justify that position. I believe that if England were to impose a tax on the food imported for her working classes, she would impair the purchasing power of those classes, and in doing that she would strike a blow against the farmers of Canada, because she would seriously impair the market of the Canadian farmer in Great Britain. I believe moreover that if England were to do that she would seriously impair the unity and solidarity of the British empire. I can understand very well that short-sighted people might say that if the Canadian farmer could get a cent or two more a bushel for his wheat at the expense of the English working classes, it might be well for him; but I do not believe the Canadian farmer, prospering as he is on our fertile soil, and making money continuously out of what he sells to the great labouring and consuming masses of Great Britain, wants those people to be taxed and injured in their work in that way for his benefit. My hon. friend says the Canadian farmer would like to get two or three cents a bushel more for his wheat. What does that mean? It means that the working classes of Great Britain who buy that wheat, or the flour made from it, would have to pay more for their bread. That would mean that the commercial and industrial stability of the mother land would be seriously threatened. That would mean that the food of the English labouring classes would be made dearer. It would mean probably a commercial crisis in Great Britain, which would be the most serious catastrophe that could come to the Canadian farmer, the basis of whose prosperity is the market of the mother land. Does my hon. friend think it would tend to the unity and solidarity of the British empire if the labouring classes of England could be told, 'your bread is made dearer for the benefit of the Canadian farmer'? Would that give them feelings of brotherly love towards the Canadian farmer? I do not believe for one moment that the Canadian farmer is going to take the British people by the throat and say to them, 'if you do not give us that advantage in your market, we will disrupt the empire.' I have said that before on the floor of parliament, and in saying it I believe I speak the almost unanimous sentiment of the Canadian parliament and the Canadian people.

Mr. SPROULE. Perfect rot.

Mr. FISHER. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be ready to say almost anything so long as they can sneer at and hurt the British preference. I regret it. I thought we were coming to be unanimously in favour of the British preference in the Canadian market. Hon. gentlemen opposite at last come out and frankly oppose it. I believe they have felt that way for a long time past—why ? Not because they had any hard feelings against Great Britain or wanted to injure her, but simply because this government introduced the preference, and therefore, because it is supposed to be a part of the Liberal policy, they are ready to attack it from a purely partisan and party spirit, and nothing else.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a preference to Canadian products, such as grain and other foodstuffs, in the English market, would in his opinion disrupt the British empire ?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman has heard what I said, and he has probably read what I said before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that what the hon. gentleman said just now ?

Mr. FISHER. I said that it would tend to disrupt the harmony and strain the relations between the different parts of the British empire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did this government ask for it, then, at the Colonial Conference in 1902 ?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman forgets that when this government proposed that, there was a tax on wheat coming into the British market, and we asked that that tax should be removed on Canadian wheat. We asked for a benefit to the English consumer, and not a hurt. That is very different from putting a tax on. The hon. gentleman is a little at fault in the history of the question, and has forgotten that fact.

Mr. SPROULE. That tax on breadstuffs for war purposes did not seem to disrupt the British empire very much.

Mr. FISHER. That tax did not disrupt the British empire, because it was imposed for a different purpose. And it was found even then by the Chancellor of the Exchequer so unfortunate that about a year afterwards he refused it.

An hon. MEMBER. The war was over.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but was it reimposed? Was it reimposed for the purpose of giving a preference to another part of the empire ? The two things are absolutely and totally different. In the one case, Great Britain, on her own initiative, without any discussion from the outside, without any incitement or demand, chose, for her own fiscal purposes, to put on a tax. Then she repealed that tax when ready. When imposing that tax, she had the opportunity of giving a preference but failed to take it. I myself, on the floor of this House, some years ago pointed out that England had probably made a mistake in not then giving the preference. When a tax is imposed to meet a deficiency in revenue and then a preference is given that implies that the main object in imposing the tax is to raise additional revenue and the preference reduces taxation insofar as it applies. But when we come to impose a tax for the express purpose of giving a preference by reducing it to a certain extent, that is imposing it for a different purpose than the raising of revenue and increases taxation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The intention makes the difference.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it makes a great deal of difference and the results and consequences are absolutely different. Why ? My hon. friend does not seem to be able to appreciate or understand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I certainly do not.

Mr. FISHER. No, nor do I expect him to understand. These things I fear are absolutely beyond the comprehension of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They most certainly are.

Mr. FISHER. They certainly do not seem able to appreciate or understand them. My hon. friend may cover up his ignorance by his inane laughing, but that will not cover it up to the people of this country who have found him out and know how hollow and empty are his pretensions. We have had the same kind of thing before from these hon. gentlemen. We were told by them before 1896 that it was absurd to suppose that by reducing the taxation we could increase the revenue. We were told by them that if we took the duties off certain goods, we would ruin the manufacturers of Canada. Well, in 1897 we did reduce the duties and we did reduce the taxes.

Mr. GANONG. You ruined some of them too.

Mr. FISHER. Did we ? Where are they?

Mr. BENNETT. The Montreal 'Herald'.

Mr. FISHER. That was ruined before. These hon. gentlemen told us that if we reduced the customs duties we would destroy the revenue. But my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, in spite of these protestations, reduced the duties in 1897 very materially. He cut down the duties on a very large number of articles and he put a lot of things on the free list. With what result ? The result was an immediate increase of revenue. My hon. friends opposite argued that if we reduced these protective duties, we would destroy the industries of Canada. Well, the industries of Canada were at that time in a pretty prostrate condition. I remember very well, as no doubt others do, that when the Minister of Finance announced his budget in 1897, the leader of the opposition, then Sir Charles Tupper, pictured the wailing and the gnashing of teeth of the unoccupied labouring men of Canada, standing around the street corners, not knowing where to get the bread with which to feed their children. But the results utterly falsified his predictions. All Canada knows that although we reduced the duties, Canadian manufacturer have been prospering ever since in a way they never dreamed of under the old protective tariff. But hon. gentlemen opposite do not appreciate or understand true economic principles. They were not able to carry those principles out when they were in power and they cannot understand how it is, when we carry them out, the results are satisfactory. I do not expect them to understand the principles which underlie our tariff policy to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FISHER. They cannot understand how it has succeeded. That is beyond the comprehension of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) ; and as long as he remains in that condition, he will stay where he is and we will remain in office. My hon. friend told us that we failed to remonstrate about this German discrimination. Again his memory is at fault. He was in his place when the Minister of Finance in 1903 delivered his budget speech and announced the surtax against Germany, and my hon. friend must remember that speech because it, was a notable one. In it the Minister of Finance went over the whole matter. He pointed out how after the treaty was denounced, Germany immediately began negotiations with England for another commercial treaty and how when that treaty was consummated and signed, it contained a clause insisted upon by Germany, which singled out Canada, as the one part of the British empire, which could not have the advantage of it. My hon. colleague went on to show that we had protested against that clause. He read a memo. which he himself had prepared. He read a letter of Lord Strathcona and various other papers which showed that no sooner had Germany thus discriminated against Canada than the government here protested and entered into negotiations to secure the elimination of that particular clause.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not discuss that speech at all.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend asked why did we not remonstrate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not make that statement. I said that this government had not made the proper remonstrance, as far as I had ever heard, against the renewal of a treaty between Great Britain and Germany on terms which give the rest of the empire better treatment than was given to Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I have just been telling the hon. gentleman that we did protest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where ?

Mr. FISHER. I have it right here under my hand. The Minister of Finance, in describing that treaty said :

> But they specifically excluded Canada from the benefits of that treaty.

Mr. SPROULE. It said Great Britain and the colonies.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they extended it to Great Britain and the colonies generally but they particularly excluded Canada. Just so soon as that became known, we entered our protest against it. Communications passed between our government and the High Commissioner in London. The old treaty did not expire until the end of April, 1898, and on July 11, 1898, shortly after it had actually expired, Lord Strathcona addressed a letter to the Under Secretary of State for the colonies. That was laid on the table and all the correspondence on the subject, but for the purpose of my argument I shall read one or two letters which will put the House in possession of the actual facts. I have all the letters and details of these negotiations, which were being carried on with Lord Strathcona and which were afterwards transferred to Canada and carried on through Mr. Bott, the German Consul.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that those were remonstrances, through the British government, to Germany.

Mr. FISHER. They were remonstances against Canada being excluded from the advantages of that treaty. What more does my hon. friend want ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The point I made was this, that if, as the Minister of Finance said, this was a familly affair, how was it that the rest of the British empire made a treaty from which Canada was excluded.

Mr. FISHER. Because Germany wished to punish us for having been instrumental in the denunciation of the British German treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did the rest of the family consent to one of its members being punished ?

Mr. FISHER. The rest of the family managed their affairs and we did ours. We protested to Germany through Great Britain as we always have to do. My hon. friend knows that we cannot directly protest to a foreign power.

Mr. SPROULE. In the budget speech of 1897, when the Minister of Finance introduced the British preference, and when he was told that this was an open violation of a British treaty, did not he go direct then? The contention was that we did not act through England, but acted direct for ourselves.

Mr. FISHER. We acted for ourselves, no matter whom it might strike. That is what we do and propose to do. We propose to act for Canada and in the interest of Canada, and, if it happens to strike anybody else, so much the worse for him. Hon. gentlemen opposite are inclined to say that when anything that they do injures British connection, so much the worse for British connection. But we do not do that, we watch out that nothing under our policy shall happen to the injury of that connection.

Mr. SPROULE. In other words, thank God you are not like other men.

Mr. FISHER. Thank God we are not like hon. gentlemen opposite. On that point, I am glad to say, I am thoroughly in accord with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule). Thank God the government is not as impotent as the opposition. Now, I suppose I have convinced my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that we did remonstrate, so I need not go on with that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has not convinced me at all.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is very hard to convince when he does not want to see things, and when he does want to see them he can imagine them even when they are not there.

I would like to say this: While we are not prepared to go hat in hand to Germany or any other country to beg for favours, we are quite ready to trade with them, quite ready to open negotiations with them, if they will treat us as fairly as they treat other people. In all our tariff legislation since coming into office, we have assumed the position that such legislation is a domestic affair, one that we deal with in the interests of the people of Canada, as is our right and duty, and that we are not doing any injustice to anybody outside of our own bounds by what we may do by tariff legislation to advance our own interests. As to the preference, we think it to our interest—to our interest especially—to give a preference to the mother country and to such other colonies of the empire as choose to come in with us on that line. It happened—and we were glad of the fact; we were perhaps somewhat influenced in doing what we did, because we expected the fact to result—that it benefited the empire at large and so promoted imperial unity and imperial harmony. I believe, speaking for myself, and for every hon. member on this side, that we shall be glad at any time if the government and people of Canada can do anything to promote imperial unity and imperial harmony and to strengthen the empire. We have done a great deal of that kind of thing since we came into office. The predecessors of hon. gentlemen opposite used to say that they monopolized the loyalty to the empire of the people of Canada. I confess that when that used to be said in the old days I resented it.

Mr. SPROULE. At the time of the commercial union agitation, it would seem so.

Mr. FISHER. At any time. At no time in Canada was there any large section of the people disloyal to the empire, or, if such a time ever existed, it was in the old days long gone by, and among the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, when the leaders of that party signed a manifesto in favour of annexation.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will allow me to finish. I say it is an unfortunate thing for Canada when a considerable portion of the people are accused of disloyalty.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why do you do it then ?

Mr. FISHER. We are not doing it; we have never done it. The predecessors of hon. gentlemen opposite for years traduced the Liberal party of this country by accusing us of disloyalty, and, as I have said, I resent that. But while these gentlemen were shouting their lip-loyalty through the length and breadth of the land what did they ever do for the benefit of the empire, or what did the government who represented them do to strengthen the connections between the colonies and the mother land? Nothing. They imposed the highest protective duties against British goods. And when it was pointed out that this was not going to help British connection, their leading organ answered: So much the worse for British connection. They have opposed the British preference. They have come out, at last, in the open and we hear them saying now that they do not want the preference, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said that if he had his way he would destroy it. That means that these hon. gentlemen would destroy one of the greatest engines for the consolidation of the empire and the strengthening of the ties of empire ever invented. They want to do away with the sentiment that the preference created in Great Britain and in other colonies, and that incitement to imperial connection of which that step was the greatest that, up to that time had ever been taken. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been against doing these things, while they were ready to talk and shout about their loyalty. I say again that it is bad for the country and for the empire for any part of this country to accuse any other part of disloyalty. I do not accuse hon. gentlemen opposite of disloyalty. I see in their remarks only an incapacity to understand the question. I understand that such speeches as those of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), my hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. Clements), my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) show that they simply do not understand the use that will be made of what they say. They do not understand and appreciate what is involved in their utterances. While I am far from accusing them of lack of patriotism or disloyalty, I am sorry for their incapacity, and I am disposed to say: The Lord forgive them.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) would not extend to me the courtesy that I commonly extend to hon. gentlemen on the other side of granting me permission to ask him a question. Perhaps I may be allowed to ask it now. I would like to ask of the hon. gentleman if his party had succeeded in bringing about commercial union with the United States would that have resulted in greater loyalty on the part of Canada to the mother country?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it would have resulted in prosperity and prosperity always tends to contentment and unity.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

An hon. MEMBER. Put him out.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman who makes that observation come over here and try it. If he will, I will give him such a lesson as he has not had for a long time.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There had better be order on both sides.

Mr. SPEAKER. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) will notice that I was calling for order on the government side.

Mr. SPROULE. I only asked at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite a little of the courtesy that I always extend to them.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I was so overcome with the grief that seized the majority in the chamber last Friday night, Mr. Speaker, that I really do not remember whether you were in the Chair or not when the government side sat in sackcloth and ashes weeping over the remarkable announcement made by a minister of the Crown with regard to the contract of the North Atlantic Trading Company. But the government and their followers have evidently recovered a little to-night, and my benevolent and good-natured friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is trying to galvanize a little life into them. It was a sad scene last Friday night, and I suppose the government have hardly recovered from it and for that reason the Minister of Customs has endeavoured to be a little hilarious. When the Minister of Customs gets hilarious he goes beyond all bounds. To-night he told us about the triumphant wave this government had during the last three elections. I think the hon. gentleman forgot all about the result in the province of Ontario, because the Minister of Customs, if he will permit me to say so, is a political outcast in Ontario, and goes from riding to riding wherever he can be taken in. He is not at all sure of the strength of this government in the province of Ontario. They say that when people get advanced in years—that is what the hon. member for North Ontario always says of him when he is interviewed—they always have a liking to go home. But there is no liking to go home with the Minister of Customs. Why, Sir, he represented the riding of South Brant for years and years. But the hon. gentleman won't dare to go home to South Brant for trial. And why? Because he knows what would overtake him, and so he hies away to a hive of 900 or 1,000 majority, and there he secures his election. There was not a minister from Ontario the last time who had the hardihood or the nerve to go into a fighting constituency, not one of them. The late Mr. Sutherland went into a hive, the late Postmaster General went into a hive, and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs took good care to go into a hive. He knew what had happened to him in his old home once before when he was thrown out there. It was unfortunate that the member for South Oxford (Mr. Schell) happened in this debate to talk about the feeling prevailing in the province of Ontario towards this government. Why, Sir, that political outcast as he has often been called by the Liberal party themselves, Sir Richard Cartwright, used to have a majority of 1,100 or 1,200 in South Oxford, and my hon. friend could not get up to the 500 mark. That is the idea the province of Ontario has of these gentlemen. The hon. gentleman knows very well that in the province of Ontario they would have been beaten thoroughly last time had it not been for the influences of the local government in the back ridings. The hon. Minister of Customs and the premier himself know, wherever they went in the province of Ontario, what followed in their wake. Why, a trail of devastation to Liberal members. The premier and the Minister of Customs both came into East Simcoe, and what was the result? My majority went up to 400. I hope that these hon. gentlemen will come again, as every time they come they will increase my majority. The same thing happened everywhere in the province of Ontario. The next time when the election takes place there they will have the criminal law behind them. That was their only chance in Ontaria the last time. When the criminal law is against them and they have not the local government to back them up—the Minister of Customs turns his head. Why, Sir, he remembers how the criminal law in Ontario backed them up in all their proceedings, he knows it well. That is the only reason that these hon. gentlemen had any foot-hold in the province of Ontario. Now, the Minister of Customs, when he comes here and discusses any question, had better stick to the facts and not get into a boastful mood. He boasted about what they did in the last election. Why, if all their men had not been able to do more than the Minister of Customs, they would not have had a corporal's guard. What had the British preference to do in the province of Nova Scotia where the hon. gentleman swept the board? What had it to do in British Columbia where the hon. gentleman swept the board?

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is not discussing the question before the House.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, now, I am surprised that this hon. gentleman should have jumped into the debate. He explained how he came here the other day, by an expenditure of $1,200, when I will be bound to say he made a declaration that his expenses were under $300, and I challenge him to produce the account of his agent at that time.

Mr. MILLER. I say the hon. gentleman is not discussing the question before the House.

Mr. BENNETT. Now the hon. gentleman has got touched on the raw. He knows that he published no statement showing $1,200 expenditure in his riding. I challenge him to produce it. He told us the other day that he had spent $1,200. Why, Sir, where did the money go? Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows. Now the Minister of Customs is excusable to-night. There had been a chill over the government benches on account of that unfortunate affair of Friday night when that great backdown took place on the government side. But the Minister of Customs should have come down to facts. Why, had any listener been present in the gallery and heard the figures given by that hon. gentleman, he would have believed that our trade with Great Britain was increasing from year to year, when the hon. gentleman knew that exactly the reverse was the case. He says sentiment was so strong that the British people were falling over themselves to buy from us. Let us see. In 1902 we sold $1,733,242 worth of eggs to Great Britain. Last year we only sold $1,053,396 worth of eggs to Great Britain, some $400,000 less. Yet my honest and benevolent friend the Minister of Customs would lead everybody to believe that our sales of produce in Great Britain were increasing yearly, when on eggs alone there was a decrease of $400,000. Take butter. In 1903, we sold $6,954,618 worth of butter. Last year we sold only $4,724,155. Why did not the Minister of Customs tell the country that owing to sentiment our trade had decreased in the matter of butter alone by $2,250,000. Why did not he go a little further, and tell the House that in the matter of cheese our exports to Great Britain had decreased by over half a million dollars worth. I need not follow the figures further. The hon. gentleman knows that his talk about sentiment increasing trade there is not borne out by the facts and by the figures. Our trade has really decreased instead of increased in these articles. Well, now, where do these gentlemen stand, these gentlemen of varied moods, these gentlemen who, on Friday night, could have hired themselves out anywhere as mourners at a funeral? Anybody would have availed themselves of their services, they wore such a dejected mien. Where are they to-night? They can change about as political acrobats, and always have. Now in 1902 this government sent representatives—I think the Minister of Customs was one of them—over to Great Britain, and they had a parley with the home authorities. The Minister of Agriculture said to-night that they did not want any preference. He said as reported in the Montreal 'Herald':

> It is an absolute fact of which I challenge contradiction that the farmers of Canada are not worrying about a preference for their food products, and if the farmers who are chiefly interested in the matter are not worrying I do not see why other parties should worry at all.

Now, I have not heard the Minister of Agriculture deny that statement attributed to him, and he stuck to his guns to-night. Now what did these gentlemen say when they went over to Great Britain in 1902? They prepared a memorandum that was submitted to parliamen enunciating the views they held and the grounds they took when they were in Great Britain:

The Canadian ministers desired to have it understood that they took this course with the strong hope and expectation that the principle of preferential trade would be more widely accepted by the colonies, and that the mother country would at an early day apply the same principle by exempting the products of the colonies from customs duties. If after using every effort to bring about such a readjustment of the fiscal policy of the empire, the Canadian government should find that the principle of preferential trade is not acceptable to the colonies generally, or the mother country, then Canada should be free to take such action as might be deemed necessary in the presence of such a condition.

Now, Sir, what does that mean if it meant anything ? Why, that the hon. gentlemen were prepared to recede from the position they had taken on the question of the preference. Again what did they say ?

The Canadian ministers stated that if they could be assured that the imperial government would accept the principle of preferential trade generally, and particularly grant to the food products of Canada in the United Kingdom exemption from duties now levied, or hereafter imposed, they, the Canadian ministers, would be prepared to go further into the subject and endeavour to give to the British manufacturer some increased advantage over his foreign competitors in the markets of Canada.

Why, the whole keynote when they came back to Canada to defend their position, was that they were only going to give a preference or continue the preference on the ground that we had a preference from the British people, that we had a reciprocal preference, or something of the kind. Well, I do not think the public take the hon. gentlemen seriously on their trade policy or on the trade question. They have heard them in the last ten years and they know where they are to be found. The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) was in Toronto the other night and he addressed the manufacturers meeting. He was an out and out protectionist. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to-day says that the policy of the government in regard to the tariff is not right. The government say it is not right. They have gone from one end of this country to the other telling the people what ? That they propose to make changes in the tariff and that these changes are to be important is to be expected when they cannot take them up during the present session of the House. They are going to postpone them. It is a notorious fact that these hon. gentlemen are endeavouring to placate every manufacturing interest in this country. But, the public are not taking them seriously on the trade question. They know that they will set their sails to every breeze that blows. They know that in 1891 the greatest leader that the Liberal party ever had. Mr. Blake, left them. Why ? Because he said that the policy that they were advocating would drive the country into annexation with the United States. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) talks away about their loyalty. These hon. gentlemen were prepared to go to any length no matter what the result might be and the result was that Mr. Blake abandoned them and that was the plight they were left in. What has been their policy since they came into power on the trade question ? The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Liberal party, after denouncing the policy of paying bounties on iron did what ? They at once granted these same high bounties so that they might stimulate the iron trade in Nova Scotia and they know that unless they continue these bounties they will lose the support of hon. gentlemen from that province. The public does not take hon. gentlemen seriously on anything. They take them on this line as the Premier once said in the House : We are here ; you are there ; what are you going to do about it ? That is the position they take to-day. They go from one end of the country to the other bribing constituencies in one way or another and hoping in this manner to continue in power. Principle is unknown to them, it is a stranger to them ; they are prepared to take up anything that will keep them in power and they are prepared to drive out any man from the cabinet who upholds principle. They endeavour to keep their followers in line from day to day and if the better element go to them and demand that there shall be certain things rectified, as in the case of the North Atlantic Trading Company, they give in at last but only at last. Does any man believe that two weeks ago they were going to give in on that question ? Not a bit of it. But when the better element of the party told them that they would have to cancel the arrangement with the North Atlantic Trading Company they gave in. Does any man believe that they were going to throw up the Bronson and Ray concession two weeks ago ? There was not a minister who did not applaud the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) the other night and who did not assent to his declaration that the Bronson and Ray concession was a proper arrangement. You can only drive hon. gentlemen opposite when it comes to the point that the better element of the party are prepared to take them by the throat. It is then and then only that they will come down and not until then. Before this session is over they will come down on other questions just as well as they have come down on the Bronson and Ray concession and just as well as they have come down on the North Atlantic Trading Company arrangement. The Premier knows, and no man knows better than he, that in the province of Ontario his party is as dead as a door nail. The Premier knows that some day his life will come to be written with that of the rest of the politicians and statesmen, so called, of this Dominion, and when it does come to be written he will know—I was almost going to make what might be called an Irish bull by saying that when he is dead and gone he will read it—but somebody will read it and if he could see the advance sheet of it he would find to his annoyance and disgust that the great province of Ontario mistrusted the government of which he is at the head and mistrusted it all through the piece because it had ministers that it did not trust and that the people of Ontario did not trust him. The Premier to-day would sooner have a majority within the province of Ontario than in any province in the whole confederacy. Every man knows that and the right hon. Prime Minister knows it in the bitterness of his heart. He knows that he has never had a majority within that province and he knows, now that he has lost his right arm in the province of Ontario, that he cannot hope to get a corporals guard out of Ontario in the next elections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have heard that before.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the right hon. gentleman has heard that before. He was told before the last election that he would not have a majority in Ontario and he did not have one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I also heard that I was not going to have a majority anywhere.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not going to be so prophetic as to say that but I can tell the right hon. gentleman that his followers from Ontario will be few and far between after the next election. He knows very well that they are endeavouring to-day to get from under the wreck. He knows that hon. gentlemen who sit behind him are advancing their claims to senatorships and other positions. He knows that as well as I do. He knows that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment) is being put forward for a senatorship because he has not the shadow of a chance of ever being returned in that constituency. He knows that the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) will never be a candidate again. He can go all along the line and he knows that these hon. gentlemen who were elected because of the influence of the Ontario government will never again have an abiding place in this House. Lack of confidence in the leaders of the Liberal party is not shared by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House alone because the prophetic member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) tells them that they are unfit for their positions, that age and the infirmities that it brings with it unfit them for the functions which they are supposed to discharge and that they are so suspiciously dishonest that he cannot longer tolerate them. If that dilemma stares them in the face can it be wondered at that the average honest, intelligent elector in the province of Ontario believes that these hon. gentlemen have gone to the end of their tether and that it is time for a change because any sort of a change could not be worse than the present state of affairs.

Mr. ALEXANDER JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, the discussion this afternoon and evening in the House is somewhat refreshing, somewhat interesting and I am quite sure that it will be reviewed with some interest not alone in this House but generally throughout the country. There were many things, that, during the last eight or ten years, were, throughout this country, somewhat in doubt. People were in doubt as to the position occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite on a question of very great importance in this country. Perhaps no question, during the last ten years, has received greater attention throughout the length and breadth of Canada than the preference given to the mother country by the Fielding tariff of 1897. During the years from 1897 down to the present time we have had from time to time mutterings of discontent from the other side of the House. We were treated at times to certain expressions of opinion from that side of the House and indeed not alone in this House but generally throughout the country it was difficult to determine just exactly where our friends stood upon this question. But, this afternoon and this evening we have had, probably for the first time, an official pronouncement from the other side of the House as to where the Conservative party stands upon this question.

The hon. gentleman from Halton (Mr. Henderson), a very prominent member of his party, has declared in most positive terms as to where he stands. There is no doubt he made that declaration with the express consent and authority of his leader who sat immediately in front of him, and assented to the statement he made. There can be no doubt whatever that the policy has been outlined by the Conservative party this afternoon, that the party is pledged from now, henceforth, to do away with the British preference. But there was something else made clear—I see my hon. friend from East Simcoe is leaving the House. I have certain things to say to him and I hope he will remain. Now that my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has returned to his seat I will proceed. The position is now made clear as to where the leader of the opposition and his friends stand on this question ; they are opposed to the British preference and opposed to the German surtax. There is perhaps no feature of our tariff legislation, from confederation down to the present time, which has met with more general approval from the people than the German surtax. From the day it was enacted, until to-night, no reputable public man in this country has taken the responsibility of pronouncing against it. But today our friends on the other side have not only pronounced against the German surtax, but against the British preference as well. From now, henceforth, there can be no doubt as to where the two political parties stand upon these questions ; and it is well the people of Canada should know. So far as I am able to understand it ; so long as the present conditions obtain between Germany and Canada, the German surtax will be maintained by this government, while on the other hand the Conservative party announce they favour its removal.

Now, I propose to make a few observations in reply to my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). He started out by questioning the statement made by the Minister of Customs that the people of Canada were with the Liberal government to-day as they have been since 1896. That oft told story of the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) we have heard from him to-night. He says: Look, the great province of Ontario has declared against you; Ontario declared against you in 1900, and in 1904 and it is ready to declare against you again. Has my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) not heard the voice of other provinces. Ever since I have been in this House the hon. gentleman has been proclaiming that Ontario is the whole of Canada, but if perchance he should bump his head against his desk and wake up some day he may discover that while Ontario is a great province—and no one has more respect for it than I—nevertheless Ontario is not the whole of Canada. If my hon. friend will get some small boy during the recess to teach him the geography of his country, he may learn that there are other provinces in this fair Dominion which have the right to be heard in determining the political destiny of Canada. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has not heard of the provnce of Quebec which at last election returned fifty-four supporters of the administration and eleven supporters of the party to which he belongs ? Has he heard of the province of Manitoba which last election sent seven supporters of the government as against three supporters of the party to which the member for East Simcoe belongs ? Has the hon. gentleman heard of New Brunswick which returned seven supporters of the government as against six supporters of the opposition ? Has he heard from the great Northwest Territories which last election sent seven stalwarts to support the government as against three representatives of the Conservative party ? Not having heard from these provinces, the hon. gentleman could not have been expected to have heard from the far distant province of British Coluabia. But let me convey to him a message from British Columbia and the message I have is, that last election British Columbia returned seven supporters of the government—and what support did his party receive from that province.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Nil.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Nil represents the British Columbia support of the Conservative party. There is also the province of Nova Scotia, and let me ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) if he has heard from that province yet ?

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me—it is unkind of him to harrow the feelings of my benevolent friend the Minister of Customs who gets badly beaten when the other ministers carry their provinces ; don't do that, he had a bad night Friday night.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand that my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is one of those who recently entered into a conspiracy against the man who has been his nominal leader during the past few years, and I can understand that he would regard it as delightful that I should call the attention of the country to the fact that his leader was not only not able to bring himself back from Nova Scotia, but was not able to bring back one single supporter among the eighteen members from that province. Harrow the feelings of the Minister of Customs; not at all. The province of Ontario did well by the Liberal party in 1904. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will find from the returns that Ontario did at least as well for the Liberal party in 1904 as in 1900.

Mr. PATERSON. We gained twelve.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Of course I know that, but I did not want to hurt the feelings of the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) too much. Harrow the feelings of the Minister of Customs. There are men in this House whose feelings can be harrowed when election returns are being considered, but these men do not sit on this side of the House. On every occasion that the hon. gentleman from East Simcoe addressses the House he has something to say about political outcasts. Who are the political outcasts ? Does the member for East Simcoe find any on this side of the House ? How many members occupying seats on the treasury benches have had to flee not only from their own constituencies but actually from their own province ? Not one. But it is different on that side of the House. The cat is out of the bag to-night, and I can understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has really entered into the conspiracy which has recently been formed against the leader of the opposition. Harrow up the feelings of the Minister of Customs ! I think there are some people in this country whose feelings are harrowed. The hon. member from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) had something to say about the criminal courts. Well, my hon. friend has had experience in the criminal courts of this country.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman has stated that I have been in the criminal courts. I ask him either to make good his statement or withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I quite willingly withdraw the statement I made.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has withdrawn the statement.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I simply made the observation that my hon. friend had experience in the criminal courts of this country. I thought he had. He has been a practising barrister in the province of Ontario for many years.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has not withdrawn the statement, and I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. member to withdraw the statement that the hon. member for East Simcoe had been in the criminal courts.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I simply said—

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement has been denied by the hon. member for East Simcoe and must be withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I withdraw that statement absolutely, for the reason that I did not make it. The statement I made was that my hon. friend had experience in the criminal courts of this country. If my hon. friend denies that statement, I most cheerfully take it back. I learn from himself for the first time to-night that he has had absolutely no experience in the criminal courts, notwithstanding the fact that for many years he has been a practicing barrister in the province of Ontario. All things considered, and from the knowledge of the hon. gentleman that we have been able to gain during the years he has been in this House, I am not surprised to hear that he has had no experience in the criminal courts of the province of Ontario. But he has had experiences in the civil courts of this country, and these experiences have perhaps not been very flattering to him. They would not be pleasant to other people occupying similar positions. There is no doubt that in regard to the methods of getting elected to this House the hon. gentleman is an expert. I suppose it would not be quite parliamentary to say that my hon. friend is a self-confessed briber. If it is not parliamenaary I will not say it.

Mr. BENNETT. What does the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I say that perhaps it would not be parliamentary if I said that the hon. gentleman is a self-confessed briber.

Mr. BENNETT. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he makes that as a statement that I ever said at any time he states what is untrue.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The hon. gentleman must settle that question with respected citizens of the province of Ontario; he is not going to settle it with me or with this House; he is going to settle it with the men who know him best, the men who know his daily walks, the men who have followed him up hill and down dale in the last twenty years, and who know his character better than we know it. It is with these men, and not with myself or any one else on this side of the House that he has to settle whether or not the statement is a correct one. It is in the great province of Ontario, of which he is ever ready to speak in the proudest terms—and I commend him for it—that they say my hon. friend really is. Well, having said so much, I do not think it is necessary to say more just now on that matter. We will have occasion to go into it later on when we have some further details.

Mr. BENNETT. I have had satisfaction for my money up in that country and I will have more of it, too.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The hon. gentleman says that he has had satisfaction for his money up in that country. It would be very interesting to know how much he paid. What was the name of the man? He was a gentleman named Wilson. The hon. gentleman said: 'Oh, I bought your vote before.' And this is the man who undertakes to read lectures to people in this House and out of it as to the proper methods of conducting elections.

Mr. BENNETT. You come up next time with the Minister of Customs, please.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Minister of Customs is well able to take care of himself. He has had a long and honourable career in this country, and when he comes to retire from public life I am quite sure there will be nothing recorded against him like that which is recorded against the hon. member for East Simcoe, and which will live as long as history lives in the province of Ontario. I was going to say that this is the man who on every conceivable occasion rises in his place in this House, with the approval of his friend the hon. leader of the opposition—indeed, he is put up on occasions—to read lectures to the people of this country on the purity of elections, when he has been convicted of slander—by whom? By members occupying seats in this House? By a jury of his fellow countrymen. I want the people everywhere throughout the length and breadth of this country to know that the man who stands up in this House on behalf of the leader of the opposition to read lectures on propriety is a man whom he knows is a convicted slanderer before the courts of the province of Ontario, and not only that, but, a. self-confessed briber. Let these facts be known. It is time the people of Canada knew the character of the man put up from time to time by the leader of the opposition to talk to them as to the proper methods of conducting elections and conducting the government of this country. We propose from time to time to tell the people the true state of affairs with regard to this man, and we have something up our sleeve yet, which in due time will be presented. My hon. friend went on to discuss the question which is really before the House, and he shared the view of those who had gone before, that the preference given to Great Britain in 1897 by the Fielding tariff and the German surtax are iniquitous things and should no longer be maintained. He strengthened the conviction that will be known to-morrow morning all over this country that the Conservative party in the House of Commons have at last declared themselves on these two important questions. The hon. gentleman says that the returns show that our exports to Great Britain have not increased, but on the contrary have decreased. If he will look up the returns carefully and compare those of to-day with those of 1896, 1895, 1894 and all through the early nineties, he will find that the statements made by the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that our exports to Great Britain have increased are amply borne out by the figures which are under his hand, and which he could have given to this House, but which for purposes of his own he refrained from giving. He says that the people of this country do not take this government seriously. Well, that is in keeping with all the other statements he made. The people of this country took this government seriously in 1896 and 1900 and again in 1904, and whenever the opportunity again presents itself I can promise the hon. gentleman that the people of this country will take advantage of it to again pronounce themselves seriously in favour of this administration.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer briefly. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), the leader of the opposition, (Mr. R. L. Borden) and my hon. friend from King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) charged the Minister of Finance with disloyalty and talked about a campaign he ran as a secessionist in Nova Scotia. Sir, I was not in active politics when that election, which has been so often referred to in this House, took place, but I know the history of it very well as does every member from Nova Scotia. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, knows it perfectly well, and he knows the causes which led up to the discontent that prevailed in Nova Scotia before that election. He knows that the reason of that discontent was the treatment which was being meted out to that province by the Conservative government then in power, and he is well aware that it was in consequence of the position taken by the Minister of Finance and those who loyally stood by him that the province was able to obtain that justice which year by year had been hitherto refused it. He knows that the people of Nova Scotia had, as they certainly were justified in doing, expressed their dissatisfaction with the Conservative government of that day, led by Sir John Macdonald, and that it was only when these gentlemen saw that the people would no longer tolerate the treatment they were receiving that they came down, a few months after that election, and met the views of Mr. Fielding and those who had supported him by granting the demands of that province which they had hitherto refused. It was because of the hostile attitude assumed by the Conservative government towards the province of Nova Scotia, and for no other reason, that the Finance Minister and his government, backed up by the entire people of the province, took the position they did. Every man in that province knows well the history of that election. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, knows away down in his heart the causes that led to the discontent of the people; and if I mistake not, the hon. gentleman himself warmly approved the course taken by the people on that occasion. Sir, the record of the Minister of Finance in the province of Nova Scotia and generally throughout Canada, is one which can well stand on its own merits. In Nova Scotia particularly he has a record of which every one from that province can well be proud. There he has never met a reverse. From year to year his strength has increased. In 1882, 1886, 1890, and 1894 what were the results? The results were on each occasion the manifestation of an increased confidence in him by his people, and when he entered the Dominion government and handed over the local administration to Mr. Murray who appealed at the earliest opportunity to the people it was discovered that the very best the Conservative party could do was to return three members out of thirty-eight. Four years later there was another appeal to the people, and it then transpired that all the Conservatives could do was to return two out of thirty-eight. And when, a little later on, another appeal took place, the Conservative party had reached the vanishing point and from that day forward the name 'Conservative' is a lost one in that province. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, can therefore well afford to treat with a good deal of calmness and indifference the statements which hon. gentlemen opposite choose to make concerning him.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). I do not rise for the purpose of taking any part in the discussion, but simply to point out that some weeks ago the right hon. the first minister said he hoped to make this a short session. I was therefore much surprised to-night to see him sitting in the House and allowing the Minister of Customs beside him to turn around and say to one of his supporters : Get up and make a speech. In reply to that call the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Johnston) took up more than half an hour of our time without saying one word pertinent to the question before the House. All he did was throw mud at members of the opposition. If the first minister intends making this a short session, he will have to chastise hon. gentlemen sitting beside him and not allow his own ministers to induce their supporters to get up and make use of language not fit to be published in 'Hansard.' The language used by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Johnston), during the greater portion of his remarks was such that I am surprised he was allowed to continue his discourse. If the proceedings are to be continued in the future as they have been to-night, hon. gentlemen opposite may depend on sitting here until long after the dog days. While the opposition are willing to assist the first minister in making this a short session, they shall certainly not do so if he encourages such conduct as we have witnessed to-night.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (S. Simcoe). I wish to say a word or two to the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) who has plunged into a matter about which he evidently does not know anything. In fact that can be the only excuse which can possibly be put forward for the language he addressed to my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). He began by telling us that my hon. friend is a self-confessed briber, and in doing this he alluded to a case recently tried in Simcoe. He either heard the report of that case here the other night, or got it from those who sit around him and wilfully misstated its effect; or else plunged into a subject which he knew nothing about. Let me tell that hon. gentleman and hon. members opposite that if they wish to engage in a careful discussion of the case of Wilson vs. Bennett, they will find not only that it does not at all tell to the disadvantage of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) but on the contrary redounds to his credit from first to last.

At the meeting where the language complained of was used, a disreputable gang were assembled for the purpose of badgering and annoying Mr. Bennett and other citizens who were working for the best interests of the town of Midland. They came there and badgered Mr. Bennett until he made a statement which, while reflecting no discredit upon his manliness was, to a certain extent, indiscreet.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not shout before they are out of the bush. I know what I am talking about and, in that respect, I have the advantage over many of them. They will see, if they are prepared to give the case honest consideration, that Mr. Bennett took a manly and straight forword part and that is more than can be said of hon. gentlemen on the other side. My hon. friend, after saying that Mr. Bennett was a self-confessed briber, had to take it back. And the hon. gentleman either did not know what he was talking about or acted a most disreputable part in making the statement in the first place. There was this organization of which I have spoken the purpose of which was to break up the meeting. Mr. Benentt addressed this man, 'skinny' Wilson, one of the friends of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) a man who had wobbled from side to side according to the side upon which the loaves and fishes happened to be. A man who virtually had said : I do not know which side I am on. I am on the side that gets the coon. My hon. friend understands that class of character very well. This man was one of the leaders of those who were trying to interrupt Mr. Bennett. He was a livery stable keeper and gave his vote and support according to the patronage he received,—that fact he could not deny, for he had made records in his books of having broken the election law by hiring teams out on election day, but without recording names or amounts. And it is said he had brought a suit in the division court to collect illegal fees through certain gentlemen not altogether unrepresented in this House. But he had to abandon that in the end. The fact was that he was trying to force the hand of Mr. Miscampbell, and obtain money that he knew he was not legally entitled to. He brought suit for slander because of what Mr. Bennett said of him. Mr. Bennett knew his record, knew that he had endeavoured to make money out of the Conservatives, and had made money out of the Reformers, in connection with his livery business. After this man had interrupted him several times, Mr. Bennett warned him by name to keep quiet. But this he would not do, because the others egged him on. And Mr. Bennett, as I said knowing his record said, not 'I bought you', but 'we bought you before and we can do it again.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Hon. gentlemen laugh. They think nothing of these things. They will probably laugh on the other side of their mouths before I get through—and that would be an improvement in the appearance of some of them. As I have said, knowing how this man had changed from side to side, according as he could get money for his teams, Mr. Bennett said, probably somewhat hastily, 'We bought you before, and we can do it again.' But, was it not true? I defy hon. gentlemen on the other side to say that the statements I have made are not absolutely in accordance with the record, and, if so, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) spoke nothing but the truth. But Mr. Bennett found that a jury assessed $100 against him for that, and costs followed the verdict. But my hon. friend over there does not understand things of that kind, because he does not understand a gentleman going into court and telling the truth of what occurred and standing by his words, as Mr. Bennett did. This case came before twelve jurymen—not such jurymen as my hon. friend over there is accustomed to, but twelve honest men of the county of Simcoe. Mr. Bennett explained that he had not intended to charge a criminal offence against the plaintiff, that all he had meant to say—and the people who heard him knew that that was all he intended—was that this man had been wobbling about in politics according as he could make more money on one side or the other. Mr. Bennett said: I admit I made the statement, and I come before this jury, and, whatever you think this man is entitled to under all the circumstances, I am willing to give him. And what did the jury give him. They gave him $100 where he had claimed $10,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LENNOX. Certainly.

Mr. SINCLAIR. How did it happen that all the twelve men were Conservatives?

Mr. LENNOX. Simcoe is one of the best counties in the Dominion of Canada, and of course, it is pretty nearly all Conservative. We had a most intelligent jury empanelled on that occasion——

Mr. McCOOL. Will the hon. gentleman—

Mr. LENNOX. Let my hon. friend wait a minute, and he will have his chance. Having, as I say, a specially intelligent, jury, it necessarily follows that they were practically all Conservatives. Now, my hon. friend has a chance to ask his question?

Mr. McCOOL. Was it because there were twelve Conservative jurymen that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) did not settle, thinking that they would exonerate him?

Mr. BENNETT. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will allow me, I would like to reply to my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. McCool), whom I desire to treat courteously. Before the case was started an offer was made to me that each party should pay their own costs, if I would apologize. They got no apology from me. I did not follow the lead of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

Mr. LENNOX. Let me say to my hon. friend over there—lest he recklessly rise to his feet again—that the more he threshes out this case, the less satisfaction he will get out of it.

An hon. MEMBER. Adjourn.

Mr. LENNOX. I will know when to stop quite as well as my hon. friend of the milk-cans. And I will know when to begin, which is what my hon. friend from Cape Breton did not know. I will not make a charge of crime against the man without knowing my grounds. And, as a preliminary for any discussion of such a matter I will have some knowledge of the principles of law which knowledge the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton did not appear to have though, I am informed, he is a lawyer. He said my hon. friend here had been convicted by twelve jurymen of bribery. Why the charge was that my hon. friend Mr. Bennett had said that the plaintiff had been bribed. Had that charge been established, my hon. friend could not have been convicted at all. Had the hon. member for Cape Breton known anything whatever of the principle of law, he would have known that, had bribery been established, there could have been no verdict in this case. The hon. gentleman, I gather, from his remarks is solicitious about the honour of the profession to which he belongs.

Would it not be well for him to turn his eyes nearer home? Is he coming to the rescue to condemn the practice of hon. gentlemen who are practising in the courts where they appoint the judges themselves—members of the cabinet? Will he condemn them? or will he condemn the conduct of the member for Ottawa? But he is silent when anything of that kind comes up. He repeats the tactics of last session. Never in the daylight, I never knew the hon. gentleman to get up in the daylight, but about this hour of the night, or sometimes earlier, but generally about this hour he begins to make a little murmur, and we know what is coming. He begins to lean forward and says something that is unpleasant, something not very much to his credit sometimes, I will admit, such as 'get out of the house', 'put him out'. Then after a while when the hour gets a little later—what works upon him in the meantime I do not know, I cannot tell, I have nothing to guide me—but when the hour gets later he gets upon his feet. We have noticed this many times in sessions gone by. He has been moderately quiet this session, but now he seems to be breaking out again. I recommend him to follow the advice of the Minister of Customs, for whom I have great respect, I recommend that he do not yield to temptation again.

Mr. ARMSTRONG., Before closing the debate I would like to make a few remarks. I was sorry indeed to listen to the unwarranted attack the Finance Minister made on me this afternoon. I was merely placing before the House a number of facts and asking the government to take immediate action with reference to the question which I brought up. The hon. the Minister of Finance told us we should keep quiet. Nine long years have passed, and no action has been taken. It is high time some action should be taken. With reference to my loyalty, after what we have heard with reference to the loyalty of the Finance Minister to-night, I feel that I have no need to apologize to that hon. gentleman. I believe, Sir, in a home market for our products, as I have always done. I sincerely hope that this government will take the matter up seriously and frame a tariff that will be satisfactory to the farmers of Canada, and relieve them from the unpleasant position in which they are placed. I wished chiefly to impress upon this government the fact that the United States have been able to obtain concesssions from the German government, by going about it in the proper way, within the last six months. But this government have been careless and indifferent as to the wishes and interests of the farmers of Canada. I am sorry that the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. H. S. Schell) took the stand which he did to-night. I know that he has been urged by many people to come out and try and induce the government to do something to relieve the position in which our farmers find themselves. The Minister of Agriculture again placed himself on record as opposed to a preference being granted to the farmers of Canada. I am sure that when the farmers of Canada realize his position they will not agree with him in that matter. I have brought up this question to-night, having been urged thereto by letters as well as by petitions from different parts of the country, and I will now leave upon the government the responsibility of dealing with it.

Motion agreed to.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will the government take up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Resuming the debate on the motion of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

Mr. TAYLOR. And after that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. After that, I think we will adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

Mr. LENNOX.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 24, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TREATY WITH JAPAN.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I beg to lay on the table of the House the treaty with Japan and all the papers connected therewith.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows :

GREY.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :—

I have received with much pleasure the address which you have adopted in reply to the speech from the Throne, and thank you for it very heartily.

Government House, Ottawa,
21st April, 1906.

INSURANCE COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to inquire of the government what are the present proceedings of the Insurance Commission ; when was their last meeting and when do they resume ? And, in that connection we were promised copies of the evidence from time to time, but I have not seen any copies yet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry but the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is engaged in some other business at the present time. I will ask him to give my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) an answer to-morrow.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to inquire about the returns, generally, to which I called attention yesterday and as to which no reply was given by the government yesterday. Is anything to be said about them to-day ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not to-day, I am sorry to say.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some of them are a little urgent, especially the one with regard to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company which I moved for on the 14th of March last. As I have mentioned two or three times, I gave the department notice of it a considerable time in advance, so that really they have had eight or nine weeks' notice of the desire of the House for it, and it is about six weeks since the motion for it was passed. I do not know what procedure the departments adopt in these matters, but if these returns are taken up in anything like their order, one would think that this particular return would have been overtaken before now.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am very sorry if the return is not ready to be presented. The department is not overmanned and this is the rush season—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know, and a good many returns have been ordered.

Mr. OLIVER. And our friends opposite have ordered a good many returns, as the leader of the opposition has suggested. We have tried to get out as many returns as possible, preparing those which could be made ready in a short time. This has delayed the larger returns. But as the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said that he wishes this one particularly, I will see to its being prepared at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At the request of the Prime Minister, I gave him privately a list of the returns that were urgent, and this one was among them.

SUPPLY—THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding : 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and the proposed motion of Mr. Foster in amendment thereto.'

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). On referring to 'Hansard' I find that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on his motion for adjournment the other day, suggested that we required forty-eight hours to prepare our defence. I can hardly believe that my right hon. friend uttered those words. Certainly I did not hear them. I did not understand that we were on our defence. I thought that I belonged to the attacking party. And it seemed to me that at the time of the adjournment that there was very little left to attack. The fortress which had been deemed impregnable last year had surrendered. The white flag was floating over Port Arthur ; General Stoessel—I mean the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver)—was coming out of the fortification, and we, who represent the victorious Japanese, had only to rest upon our arms. A very potent agency has acted against the government in this attack. The pressure of public opinion has forced them to recede from the position which they took a year ago and to cancel a contract which, has not one defensible feature, and which under any circumstances, must remain tainted with a very strong suspicion of fraud. Every motive for cancellation was urged last year—without effect which motives seem to have had this year a paramount influence upon the government. Every fact was alleged—although the facts were not as minutely known last year as they are this year. Yet what did we see ? The Minister of the Interior and the government defending this government like tigers and refusing to entertain the proposition made by my hon. friend the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that the time had arrived for the cancellation of that very peculiar arrangement. This year they come down, and with extraordinary haste, cancel that contract. And they find no better excuse for having entered into the contract than this, that nearly a quarter of a century ago a similar system of immigration existed under a previous government.

Well, in the first place, that statement is not correct. The system of immigration at that time, may or may not have been proportionate to the wants of the country and the notions which we possess to-day. But there is one thing certain about it, and that is that we paid less than we do to-day. Besides we dealt with known agents for immigration, and we only paid a bonus on tickets which permitted of absolute identification. But the government at that time found another excuse for refusing to cancel the contract. They shelved, in a manner which I think must be deemed very unchivalrous, the whole responsibility for the contract upon a person who was well able to shield them if he had taken any part at all in the negotiations which led up to the completion of the contract. I refer to Lord Strathcona. They made that gentleman, last year, the scapegoat for the attacks directed upon that contract by members on this side of the House. Allow me to quote on that point the words uttered by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior last year. Speaking in support of the motion made by the hon. member for West Toronto, the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said, on page 9443 of 'Hansard' :

> Mr. OLIVER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—if he will change the name to Lord Strathcona.

Further on the right hon. the Prime Minister, discussing himself the motion, speaks as follows :

> I now come to the practical side of this contract. It was first introduced by Lord Strathcona, and was then continued by Mr. Preston on the terms agreed to by Lord Strathcona.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are few members of this House, and I readily understand it, who have taken the trouble to peruse the immense mass of papers that were thrown down before the Committee of Agriculture and the Committee of Public Accounts this year, and that refer to this transaction. They are numerous, and they are not classified in a way that invites insrection. But I have taken the trouble to examine those documents, and there is not one member of this House who looks through those documents who can arrive at any other conclusion than that Lord Strathcona had nothing whatever to do with the making of this contract from the beginning until the end. The letters that are among those papers—and we have a right to presume that they are the only papers disclose on the contrary that from beginning to end Mr. Preston and Mr. Preston alone, with the deputy minister at that time, Mr. Smart, carried on negotiations with the mysterious parties who subsequently became the beneficiaries of this contract, visited the continent, conferred with these parties unknown to Lord Strathcona; and the only thing the High Commissioner in London did while these negotiations were going on, was to warn Mr. Preston that the contract they were entering into was a contract which violated the law of the nations among which those parties were going to operate. He warned them of that fact. Mr. Preston consulted lawyers in England, and received from our lawyers in London the opinion that this contract was a violation of the comity of nations, that we were undertaking by that contract to violate, in a secret and clandestine manner, the laws relating to emigration of all those countries, or most of them, that are covered by the terms of this contract. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, had no other defence at that time, he did not commit the ungenerous act which I would almost qualify as a mean act, of sheltering the government under the broad shoulders of Lord Strathcona and transferring to that eminently respectable citizen the responsibility for all the misdoings of those who began and carried on this undertaking. But he had another ingenious excuse. Speaking on July 13, he said:

> The document to which I have referred is on file——

He referred to the protest which we received from Belgium.

> —and it is a protest against the distribution of literature by shipping companies and also against the Canadian government.
> Now, my hon. friend says that this is not a contract with a reliable and reputable steamship company. Certainly not. Your reliable and reputable steamship company would not undertake such a work, that is not its business.

He admitted therefore that whoever might be the parties with whom we were contracting at that time, they were not reputable, nor were they people in whom we could place absolute confidence, and consequently, in dealing with them, we were obliged to take extraordinary and unusual precautions. But, what shall I say of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior? In truth, Mr. Speaker, there is not one, but there are three, Olivers. There is the good Oliver, who this year, in view of the pressure of public opinion, and having no doubt become acquainted with some of the facts, some of the history of this mysterious association, exerted his influence in a proper direction, and came down to this House to announce the cancellation of the contract. There is the bad Oliver, who last year, under similar circumstances, and with a motion having a similar purport, came down to the House and defended in every manner the justice and proper foundation of this contract. And there is what I would call the excellent, the frank Oliver, who, three years ago, in this House, denounced our system of immigration in terms to which I will refer presently, and declared that it was time the system should be changed from top to bottom, and particularly that the continental immigration towards which the country was sacrificing such a large amount of money should be put a stop to without delay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the cause of this sudden change? What is the cause of the anxiety of the government to bury the matter at once as if it were a case of plague or contagious disease, instead of waiting with calm and dignity the result of the investigation which is now proceeding before two committees? There are, Mr. Speaker, for that hurried action, two causes. There is the outburst of public indignation at the very idea that this country, enjoying constitutional institutions, where the people, after centuries, of struggles, have achieved absolute, entire and illimitable control over the expenditure of public money—there is the sentiment that we should not, at this advanced period of our national existence, tolerate for a single instant the expenditure of large amounts of public money when those charged with that expenditure refuse to reveal to us the names of the parties to whom we are paying these immense sums of money. That feeling has found echo throughout the whole of the country has found echo in the Liberal press itself in no uncertain terms, and is no doubt the principal if not the only, reason which has led the government to recede so entirely from the position it took not a year ago upon this self same subject. There is another cause and it is this, the conviction, the widespread conviction existing, not only outside this House, but among many members of this House on both sides, that beneath this elaborate system in regard to which the policy has been one throughout of reticence, of suppression, of concealment, underneath that there was hidden what I cannot qualify otherwise than as a swindle, perpetrated by some clever schemers at the expense of the public chest.

Now, Sir, why did we insist, as we did insist, in view of the blocking of the evidence which took place before the committees of this House, in view of the evasive nature of all answers to questions put in this House, in view of all the circumstances that were disclosed by the papers placed before the Committee of Agriculture and Immigration—why did we insist upon a telegram being sent to Lord Strathcona? And why was there from the very beginning such intense opposition to what seemed to be such a just, such an equitable and fair demand? The reason was that everybody knew that whatever we received in the way of information from Lord Strathcona we could rely upon. We were assured that if he could not disclose to us all that we contended that we had a right to know, the names, the nature of the syndicate or company or association with which we were dealing and its composition, he would at least give us some information which would enable us to advance the purposes of our inquiry. And what did we get? What was disclosed, Mr. Speaker, by the cablegram received from Lord Strathcona ? This, that since the very inception over four years ago, of our dealings with this company, we have been dealing with a phantom association, with an association that had no corporate existence, with an association that had no responsibility, with a body that was not incorporated and against which we could exercise no recourse. Further, that less than a year ago the parties, whoever they are, who are interested in this contract and in this arrangement, repaired to what place? Not to England, not to Holland ; they thought it necessary to sneak out to the Channel Islands in order to register there an incorporation which I have no hesitation in saying they never thought would be ferretted out. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that not very long ago laws were passed in England governing the creation of associations such as these and destined to prevent just such frauds as have been perpetrated upon our country in regard to this association, but from the operation of those laws the Channel Islands were exempted, and that is the reason which brought these smugglers, these nefarious contractors, who to-day refuse to see the light of day, to the Channel Islands in order that they might there secure corporate existence and yet be out of the way of tracing and of discovery. And what do we find, Sir? Under the registration which has been summarily cabled to us by Lord Strathcona, a company was created and registered in the Island of Guernsey with a capital of $15,000. There are 3,000 shares and this registration, made in order to conform strictly and merely with the requirements of the law as it exists in that island, reveals to our gaze seven persons who hold one share each only in that association, known as the North Atlantic Trading Company. Who are the others? Who are those that with reason we are endeavouring to discover and publish to-day who hold the 2,993 remaining shares? We know that there is a hotel proprietor, an inn keeper, a tavern keeper who holds one share, there is an engineer, there is a builder, there are two solicitors' clerks, law students, there is a chartered secretary and a legal clerk—very fit and proper persons indeed to whom we should entrust the delicate care of the immigration which we are to receive from the continent of Europe. Persons of experience indeed and deeply interested in the movement which we have endeavoured to create in order to foster an immigration from continental Europe. But who are the others? That is the question which is suggested by the cable received from Lord Strathcona, and very far from clearing up this mysterious affair, the answer we have received, frank, sincere, to the question we put to Lord Strathcona, only deepens the plot, darkens the mystery and makes stronger within us and within the minds of every one interested in this affair that desire to know who are, to use the term employed by Mr. Smart in his examination before the committee, who are the parties behind this scheme.

Let me, as one who has taken the trouble to examine with some care the mass of documents which have been brought before our committees, what in my humble estimation is disclosed by the evidence and by these heaps of papers, all in very great disorder, thrown before the committee and what appears to any man in good faith to be the conclusions to which lead these papers and the examination of Mr. Smart. No man, Mr. Speaker, who takes the trouble to examine what we have so far before us can come to any other conclusion than this one, that in 1899 Mr. Preston arrived in England, and, alone and at once, and without seeming to have any special authority from anybody, scampered over to the continent and made there, alone and by himself, arrangements with parties whose names are known to the cabinet, are known to the government of this country, for a contract which brought to the syndicate, to 'the parties behind the scheme,' ' to our friends,' to use the words employed in these letters and documents, 'to our allies,' in four years a sum of over $250,000 without, as I submit to this House, any acceptable or legal proof of any expenditure whatever, by the parties to whom these large sums were paid. I am prepared to admit that any boy who looks through these papers will find statements of expenditure, but not the statements which would pass muster in a court of law or before actuaries or before anybody who had any desire to satisfy himself as to the absolute sincerity of those statements.

The company itself has prepared accounts for the rent of offices, but Mr. Smart tells us that they have no office on the continent; that there is but a room in Amsterdam which is unoccupied and to which he could not gain admittance, and when asked if they had opened offices in other parts of continental Europe he replied that had they done so they would very soon have been closed up. If there has been any genuine expenditure for rent why were not the vouchers produced to show that rent had really been paid. There are large sums alleged by the company to have been paid to agents, but Mr. Smart swears they had no agents appointed on the continent, and look where you will there are no vouchers to show that money was really paid for travelling expenses or salaries to agents. Are we not entitled to say that so far as we can find, these claims are absolutely unjustifiable; that indeed was the judgment of the Auditor General when the accounts were first presented to him for verification. And as to advertising, there are no receipts to show that any advertising ever was done or that any money ever was paid for it. There is not an actuary or an accountant who would be able to declare after going through these papers, that during the four years this company has received large sums from the government of Canada it has spent one single cent which it can claim to be recouped for.

There was another fact disclosed which was very ably dealt with by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who proposed this motion. I refer to the fact that three times since the first arrangements were made by Mr. Preston, in Berlin, made on his own responsibility, accepting the proposals of this company; three times since that the contract has been amended and every time the amendment was more favourable to the company. The extraordinary fact also appears that parliament never was made acquainted with the original contract, or with the negotiations which preceded it or the subsequent amendments. I leave it to any one who can appreciate fairly the importance of matters of this kind to say if that is a proper way to carry on the affairs of this country in regard to immigration, or in regard to anything else. Any one who takes the trouble to look into each succeeding amendment to that contract will find clearly evidenced a desire on the part of the contractors to wrest something more from the government in the shape of concessions, and in the last amendment which was only brought down by the government at the last moment and under pressure—whoever these gentlemen are, and whatever may be their names —they succeeded in obtaining from the government an extension of that contract for ten years from 1904 to 1914, thus making us liable without our knowledge or approval, and unknown I am sure even to certain members of the government, for a total amount which on a moderate calculation cannot be less than $1,000,000. Whoever the members of this company are it is clear at any rate that they possess potency and influence with the government. The investigation has also disclosed that Mr. Smart went four times to Europe in reference to immigration matters, and each time, as his own evidence and the subsequent correspondence show, he dealt with Mr. Preston and with Mr. Preston alone, entirely ignoring Lord Strathcona our High Commissioner. He saw the members of the syndicate, he saw them on the continent, he conferred with them, and each of his trips was followed by a concession more and more advantageous to the company. Let me, en passant, speak of the difficulty we had to obtain information in the Agricultural Committee. From the very beginning, whether in the committee or in this House there has been a continuous disposition to refuse information. Questions asked in the House were incompletely answered; questions asked in the committee were not answered at all or unsatisfactorily answered, and that not by one witness but by all the witnesses. We the representatives of the people were constitutionally entitled to the information we asked, but that information was refused and we had the culmination of it when Mr. Smart himself said to the committee: I will not tell you who this company is, who the men behind it are, who are its officers, who are the parties who for four years in the past and for ten years to come are going to draw vast sums of money from the government of Canada. And, Sir, in that very extraordinary attitude, repugnant as it is to every principle of constitutional government in a free country, Mr. Smart was sustained by a majority in the committee. We had the singular spectacle of certain members of that committee sustaining a witness in his rebellion against the constitutional rights of the people's representatives; we had these gentlemen endeavouring by their questions to show that this was an excellent contract at the very moment when the government were deciding that it must be cancelled because it was indefensible, as was announced to the House on Friday last.

There is one fact which I know will not be lost sight of, but which cannot be too clearly insisted upon, and that is, that during the whole of these four years and up to the time when we finally succeeded in obtaining the production of the last contract, the ex-Minister of the Interior was in this House, he attended to his estimates, we voted large amounts, and yet we never had a clear and frank and sincere statement of our relations with this company; and when finally the contract was brought down, the paper produced before the House, which I hold in my hand, it was found to have torn out, purposely torn out at the end, the names of these mysterious parties who signed the contract with the government; and we have not been able to discover since, in spite of our best endeavours, who the officers of this company are who actually concluded the negotiations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what have we seen in an investigation of the system under which the work of this North Atlantic Trading Company was deducted? We have found that this phantom company or its agents, whoever they are, never came into contact with one single immigrant. That is a point the importance of which cannot be exaggerated. They never saw an immigrant, never were in a position to appreciate his fitness to settle in this country and form part of the Canadian national family. They never took occasion to urge one immigrant to come to Canada—never in one single instance were in a position to say, here is a man good, bad or indifferent, that we have brought to your shores, and we are entitled to an indemnity for the work we have done. The emigrants left the countries covered by the contract without having seen this company or heard of it; but if they belonged to the callings specified by the contract if they were farmers or domestic servants, or said they were, we paid for them at a pound a head, men, women and children. That is a point which I think is of some importance, and it will be difficult for hon. gentlemen opposite to show that we acted wisely when under these circumstances we consented to pay. As a matter of fact, the only evidence to show that the company were entitled to draw money from the government, was the manifest of the steamship which brought them out to Canada. When that manifest reached Canada, it passed into the hands of the immigration agent, who checked it and forwarded it to Ottawa, and all passengers of the classes referred to coming from those countries were credited to the company, and the company was paid in consequence. There is in connection with this matter a point to which I desire to refer immediately, because whatever may be the merits of this arrangement, it seems to me beyond all doubt that we have been paying all these years for a large number of immigrants who have passed from Canada into the United States, and that as a matter of fact a very large proportion of the money paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company has gone to promote immigration to the United States. The cream of the immigrants who came from those countries passed into the United States; and although Mr. Smart asserts that a deduction was made for those immigrants, I find no evidence whatever of this or of any regular checking or auditing or examination of this class of immigrants in any of the papers I have seen.

Let the House bear with me for a moment while I quote from the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for the United States for the year ending the 30th of June last. In that report is found incorporated the report of Mr. Clarke, the Canadian Immigration Commissioner, and it contains very valuable information. We find at page 67 of the report that last year there were examined at the Canadian border, 40,488 immigrants coming from Europe to Canada and passing into the United States. But hon. members will perhaps say that they were manifested in the steamship manifest, and consequently were never credited to the company. I do not arrive at that conclusion. There are three classes of immigrants mentioned in Commissioner Clarke's report. There are those manifested through Canada to the United States, of whom last year 12,881 were examined. There was a second class manifested by border boards of special inquiry under department circular No. 97. These are immigrants who have come to Canada, manifested to Canada, and who within the year after their arrival here have determined to undergo an examination and go to the United States. These numbered last year 9,142. There are also those in the third class who, after the year expired, although originally manifested to Canada, have determined to undergo an examination under department circular No. 43, and have gone to the United States. Of this class there were examined last year 20,076. Now, is anybody in a position to say in regard to the two last-mentioned classes—and there was a very large number of them who came from the countries contracted for, —that they were subsequently deducted?

And if it be true that no deduction was made during any year, since the beginning of this arrangement, for the large number of immigrants who first came to Canada and subsequently went to the United States, we have paid a bonus on these which we are entitled to get back?

There is also a fourth-class recently created which comprises a considerable number of people. They are those who arrive in Canada, manifested to Canada, and who within ten days declared their option of going to the United States. Inquiry at the American Commissioner's office showed me that there are, on an average, a thousand of those who every year arrive in Canada and within the delay of ten days decide to go to the United States. Have those immigrants been deducted? There is no evidence whatever that they have. Let us see for a moment how, with regard to countries and nationalities, we can classify the 40,488 immigrants from Europe who were admitted last year into the United States from the Canadian border. There were 5,154 English, 2,096 Finns, 2,124 Germans, 4,777 Greeks, 698 Irish, 8,591 Italians, south, 6,373 Scandinavians, 1,845 Scotch, and of all other nationalities, 7,965. If you deduct from this number of 40,488 the English, Irish, South Italians and Scotch, and leave the others who came from the countries comprised in the contract, you find that there were 24,199 who came from the continent of Europe last year, manifested to Canada, who subsequently passed to the United States, and out of that 24,000, there were 5,778 belonging to the class of gardeners, farm labourers and servants upon whom we pay a bonus under this contract. That is a matter which certainly calls for a fuller investigation than has been hitherto made.

There has been a strange point brought out, which is of very great importance in an investigation of this kind. It has been brought out by the evidence and by the letters which are filed on record before the committee. That point is this, that the business which we have been carrying on through this company is an illegal business, forbidden by the countries interested We had a protest from Belgium ; and if we are to believe the evidence of Mr. Smart, the offence is punishable by imprisonment. Is it consonant with our dignity, is it right as a matter of justice, whether it be in our interest or not, that we should subsidize unknown persons, who refuse to reveal their names ? And is it right that we should subsidize those persons—who could not be considered as other than our agents—to carry out in friendly countries on the continent of Europe, a work, the doing of which is forbidden in those countries, and would lead to the punishment of those found guilty of doing it ?

Another disclosure of the investigation, so far as it has proceeded, is that we do not deal directly with this company in making the payments. The payments, amounting to this large sum of $250,000 were remitted to England. I do not say that in all cases they were remitted to Mr. Preston himself, but there can be no doubt that some of those remittances were made to him directly. Others were made by bills of exchange to the North Atlantic Trading Company, and others were made to the office of the Commissioner in London. But I have no doubt that further investigation will show that all the payments which went through the London office went through Mr. Preston's hands. In view of the singular conduct of Mr. Preston, in view of his having appointed himself the intermediary and agent in all the negotiations, in view of the letter we find in the record, in which he presses so earnestly for payment, in which he says: you must send over money to the company. I am going to Hamburg and do not like to present myself at the office without the account having been settled—in view of a number of other things and the special circumstances of the transaction, it is legitimate to lay some stress on the fact that Mr. Preston, apart from the many other roles he played in this matter, was the recipient himself of large sums which he handled and subsequently transferred to this mysterious company. That is shown by the investigation as far as it has proceeded. That is what is revealed up to the present. But what we have claimed all along is that we are entitled to know who are the members of this company. Who are the parties with whom we have negotiated, to whom we have paid the money and with whom we have still a very important settlement to make? Are we going to get any further light from the government ? Now that the government has changed its attitude, now that it has cancelled this contract and admitted that it was an improvident and unwise arrangement, are we going to be informed as to the personnel of the company ? The body corporate itself was only created, less than a year ago, and we have the right to assume that previous to that we were dealing with individuals only. Who are they ? Are the government going to tell us ? My right hon. friend remains silent. Why is he silent ? Is there any valid and sound motive for his refusing to give this House and the country the information for which it has been so rightly clamouring. I pause for a reply. Absolute silence prevails. This reminds me of the scene in Macbeth. Does the government want to hush up the 'matter of the murder ?' Is the cupboard going to be opened and are we going to finally see the skeleton ? Silence still prevails, and I believe we are doomed to wait until the withered and dried bones of that skeleton have mouldered into unidentifiable dust, before we find out the truth ?

I have referred already to the absolutely faulty system which prevailed during the existence of this company a system which anybody connected with immigration would undoubtedly condemn. We paid agents for work which they did not do. The agent did not come in contact with the immigrant and judge whether he fulfilled the requirements of citizenship in this country. What I submit to this House is that, if the investigation is pursued as undoubtedly it should be, it will reveal, in the first place, that there were other reasons than the nature of the work which made the government persistantly refuse to come out and frankly tell us the names of those who have been throughout interested in this contract. It will reveal, in the second place, that the company cannot establish that it spent the money it had contracted to spend in this immigration work. I defy the company, or anybody on its behalf, to produce legal, acceptable evidence that it has spent $15,000 a year during the continuance of this contract, or the sums which it bound itself to spend, and to show conclusively before any fair judge that its own part of the contract has been faithfully performed. The investigation will show that a very large number of immigrants from these countries for whom we have paid have not in reality remained in Canada, but have gone to the United States since their arrival here. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) blamed with considerable harshness my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) for having commented with such disfavour, upon the absence of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) from this House. It is the duty of members of this House to treat one another with indulgence. But surely, there is something singularly extraordinary and abnormal, in view of the circumstances of the case, in the absence of the ex-Minister of the Interior on every occasion when this subject has come up for discussion. And, so far as I am concerned, I do not hesitate to say this—in which I think manly members of this House will agree—that when the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) a new arrival, a man against whom there had been no reproach in the past, was taxed with all the unfortunate circumstances of this contract, it was the duty of the ex-Minister of the Interior to attend in this House, and to give to the House the explanation which he alone could give, or if he could not do that—if there was inevitable absence—what prevented him, I would ask, from communicating with the House or with the Minister of the Interior himself and saying frankly: 'You are attacked upon this point: here are the facts.' No member will say that this is an unjust or unfair position to take. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) knows all about the facts. Mr. Smart tells us in so many words in his evidence that from the beginning the hon. gentleman knew what was going on in Europe and that he, Mr. Smart, had the approval of the minister in all these transactions. What then, is the explanation, not only of the personal absence of that hon. gentleman, but of the absence of any explanation, written or otherwise, from him, upon this question, which, I think, every one will admit reflects little credit upon him.

Now, I do not wish to prolong this discussion. I only wish to call the attention of the House to what has transpired since the investigation began. It seems incredible—I could hardly believe it myself—that the witness about whom so much has been said has re-appeared before one of our committees and declared that all the private papers he had in connection with this affair when he was deputy minister, and all his letter-books, have been by him destroyed. Surely, that circumstance alone, if there were no others, would justify us upon looking upon this transaction as a most suspicious one. But, when all the other circumstances have been disclosed. with the unwillingness appearing everywhere to give us the true facts in connection with this transaction, I say that the burning of these papers is one of the most damning circumstances that could be possibly conceived.

I referred a moment ago to what I called the good Oliver. Let me quote to the House the language which that hon. gentleman used a few years ago when he was member of this House, but not Minister of the Interior—when he was fresh from the West and conversant with circumstances as they existed in that part of our country. I find that he is reported in 'Hansard' 1899, page 8523, as follows:

Now, it would be a very simple matter to overcome any particular settlement in the Northwest by a foreign population. Every settlement in that country stands in danger from that influx of population, if it is not checked. The whole of the Northwest Territories stand in danger.

Then at page 8524, he said:

It is said that those people settle where other people will not, but in my part of the country they settle where other people have settled, and where other people would settle in larger numbers, were it not for these Galicians. In fact where these Galicians have settled, some of the others have moved away.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. OLIVER. Because they are not desirable neighbours.

Mr. MONK. And in 1901, my hon. friend spoke as follows—page 2937 of 'Hansard':

In regard to the Doukhobors, I wish to say, speaking of course without having such an intimate knowledge of them, but speaking on the general principle, that any people that are too good to conform in the laws of this country are too good to live in this country, and we do not want them at any price.

Then at page 2939:

There is another question that the people of the west feel more strongly on than this immigration question, and there is nothing that they more earnestly resent than the idea of settling up the country with people who will be a drag on our civilization and progress. We did not go out to that country simply to produce wheat. We went to build up a nation, a civilization, a social system that we could enjoy, be proud of, and transmit to our children. And we resent the idea of having the millstone of this Slav population hung around our necks.

And in 1902, he said:

Our social system, our political system, our religious system are those which we have inherited and under which we are trying to improve ourselves. Then if it is worth while to organize all these systems for the purpose of improving ourselves in this country, it is surely worth while to take means that our efforts shall not be to a certain extent rendered useless by the introduction of an element into our population which will have a contrary effect. If you will fill those prairies with people of different ideas, different aspirations and different views from our own, you are simply placing yourselves under a yoke; you are swerving your country from that destiny which your fathers intended it, and which you fondly hoped you were achieving.

I say that every undesirable settler who enters the Northwest, who is, we will say, inferior to ourselves in his knowledge of the government, in his ideas of liberty, is a detriment to this country. . . . I am given to understand that a new system is being adopted in regard to immigration from the British isles. I am not familiar with the details of that system, but I will say that there is no possibility of adopting any system which could be less effective than that which has prevailed during the past years. I am satisfied that any system that is adopted will be an improvement.

Mr. Speaker, I said when I began my remarks that not only does the resolution before the House raise the particular question of this unexplained contract, this singular arrangement, but it raises the whole question of immigration. We have for years been increasing the sums which we devote to immigration. How do we spend these sums ? We employ agents in Europe, in the British isles, we spent last year I believe over $200,000 in advertising in the United States ; and there is an item in the Auditor General's Report of $30,000 spent on a single newspaper, an issue of a million copies circulating through the United States. I venture to assert that an investigation, a careful and unbiased investigation of our immigration work, not only on the continent, a part of which has just been brought to light, but in the United States and England as well, will show that the time has arrived in our history for a complete change of system. There can be no doubt whatever that we must abolish the bonusing system. We have outlived that system, it produces nothing but abuse. We should abolish that system without delay. It costs hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, and it brings nothing good to this country. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will take up a little more time by quoting from the report of the inspector of prisons for the province of Ontario. I quote it because I have no doubt whatever that what is stated in that report could be corroborated in the province of Quebec by our city police and judges, and by all those who have anything to do with the punishment of crime. This is what I find in the 36th Annual Report of the Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities and Hospitals, for the year ending 30th September, 1905 :

> There is marked evidence that public attention should be called to the large number of undesirable and unsuitable immigrants that are being induced to seek a shelter in Ontario. This has been found nowhere more noticeable than in the city of Toronto where more than half of the indigent casuals who have had to be provided for, belong to the immigrant class. When they arrive here they are carefully and kindly looked after and provided with employment. In many instances, however, they prove quite incapable and, when winter comes on, they drift into cities and are not slow to find the location of the charitable institutions. The whole fault for this condition must be placed where it belongs, namely, in the system that permits and encourages immigration without a proper discrimination. The present policy of Canadian immigration agents in Europe would seem to be to secure the number and pay no heed to the quality of persons urged to seek a haven in this country. The present system of the Dominion government in bonusing agents to send out in an apparently indiscriminate manner a class of people totally unfit to provide a livelihood for themselves, is deplorable.

There is much more to the same effect,

I have other documents here from which I could read, and which demonstrate that our system of bonusing requires an immediate reform. Mr. Speaker, I trust the government will not only give us the full facts in connection with this contract, reveal to us the persons with whom they have made that contract, and to whom they have paid such large sums of money, but will pursue with willingness the investigation they have begun. I believe it is high time that we should adopt in this country the system which has prevailed in the United States for years past—respect for our country, a desire to prevent undesirable immigrants, a system of inspection, no catering, no advertising, no begging for immigrants in other countries ; but on the contrary a dignified position with regard to those immigrants, making sure before they arrive in this country that they are not going to be an element to degrade, an element to lower us, an element to imperil our future, but that they are in every respect worthy to form a part of this great nation.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). The hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Monk) flatters himself that he belongs to the attacking party. I think he will find before this discussion is finished that he belongs to the defensive and defenceless party. However, I must congratulate him upon the fact that he has substituted 'the comity of nations' for the old flag. In days gone by when the Conservative party made some pretense of having a platform and a policy, they used to wave vigorously the old flag when argument was lacking. But in this case, as there is no argument to justify the resolution, they exploit 'the comity of nations.' They tell us that His Majesty the King is to have no supply because the North Atlantic Trading Company has smashed into smithereens the comity of nations. Now, Sir, why so much ado about this contract at the present time ? It is no new contract. It has been in force for a great many years, it has been before this parliament for a great many years. Why, Sir, in the annual report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1901-1902 there are no less than four, five and six pages dealing with this particular contract. The details of the contract are set forth, the conditions under which the North Atlantic Trading Company are operating are set forth. I also find that before the Committee of Agriculture and Colonization for the same year this contract was under review. How is it that it is only in the session of 1906 that these gentlemen have discovered that it is an awful contract, that suspicious circumstances surround it on all sides? I will tell you why it is. About a month ago it was suggested in this House that this contract was under review by the Department of the Interior. It was known to the great majority of members, at least, that the Minister of the Interior had decided that this company was not living up to all the conditions of the contract, and he was making an inquiry into the conditions under which it was being operated. Well, the Conservative party thought this was a splendid opportunity for them to assert themselves. Although this contract had been before the House for five long years, they thought that the present was a splendid opportunity for them to attack it. So they said, we will attack it now, we will forestall any action the Minister of the Interior may take, and we will show that it is a bad contract. Now why did not these gentlemen at any time during the last five years, tell the people of this country that it was a bad contract ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We did last year. We moved to cancel it last year.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Oh, you did. Well I am very glad to find that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was good enough, in the interests of the country, to move last year to cancel this contract which had been four years in operation. However, that does not destroy my argument that this contract was in force for five years and that they had plenty of opportunity, at any time within those five years, of bringing it before parliament. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) says now that he moved to cancel the contract last year. I was not aware of the fact, I do not remember the fact. However, it seems to me that if the contract was a bad one, this discussion should have taken place long before it was known to the members of this House that the Minister of the Interior had the contract under review. I am not one of those who believe that the contract is a bad one. I believe it was a good contract, I believe it was a contract in the best interests of this country and while it is a very easy matter for hon. gentlemen to criticise it now, at the same time, if we take the results from this contract what do we find ? We find that we have secured immigration under this contract cheaper than by any other means that have been suggested to secure immigration to this country. Take the results in the year 1904-5. We find that this year the total immigration from the continent of Europe was 35,923. We find that from the countries under the contract the total immigration was 28,596. The total number of immigrants of the farming classes under the contract was 13,554. The total immigration from the restricted countries under the contract was 8,794. The numbers of immigrants of the farming classes from the restricted countries was 6,167. The Department of the Interior allowed on these 6,167 a bonus only on 5,000. The net number allowed for bonus after deducting 482, who went to the United States and upon whom no bonus was allowed was 11,905, making a total of $57,858 for which we got 13,076, or $4.42 per head.

I need not to go into details in regard to 1903-4. In that year, bonus was paid on 11,790, making a total of $57,299 for which we got 14,221 of the agricultural class or at the rate of $4.03 per head. In 1902-3 we got, of the agricultural class, 15,632 for whom we paid $3.69 per head. In 1901-2 we got, of the agricultural class, 11,049 for whom we paid $3.86 per head. In the four years we paid to this company $216,555 in bonuses, and £750 per year conditional upon the company expending £1,000 per year in Scandinavian work making an average of $4.21 per head for the four years during which this company was operating for our farming classes from these countries. The question was asked by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other night : Why don't we send our own agents in there, why don't we distribute our own advertising matter, why don't we do our own immigration work in those countries ? Let us see the result in the countries in which we have continued the old line system of carrying on immigration work. I shall give the details of the cost of our immigrants from the British Isles in the year 1903-4. The total arrivals were 50,374. The number of farmers, farm servants and domestics was 17,570. The total expenditure in the British Isles for immigration work in the year 1904 was $236,000. The cost per head for all the immigrants we got from the British Isles was $4.68. The cost per head for the farming class from British Isles was $13.43 against an average of $4.21 per head for the agricultural classes we got from those continental countries of Europe. Let us take Belgium and France where we have our own immigration agents. What was the cost there ? The total arrivals from France in 1903-4 was 1,324, from Beligum 356, making a total of 2,398. The total number of farmers from France was 693, from Belgium 347, making a total of 1,039. We expended in those countries on immigration work, $30,000. The cost per head was $12.54. The cost per farmer was $28.87 against $4.21 under this contract. Take it in the United States. We expended there last year $205,000. That made an average cost for the farmers we secured from the United States of $4.73 against $4.21 under the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, so that you see, Mr. Speaker, in all these countries where this plan has been adopted it cost us more for our immigrants than it did under this contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

The statement was also made the other evening by the hon. gentleman for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that conditions were favourable for immigration work on the continent under this contract, that :

> In parts of those countries you have grinding taxation, which tends to disperse its population to free countries and freer conditions. In those countries you have ferocity of religious and race persecution, which, rising into violence and even murder at times, sends waves of people out of these countries to seek an asylum in freer and better countries.

Now, Sir, I would like to ask the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) if these conditions have become worse since this contract was entered into? Is this persecution any more severe now than it was before the contract was entered into? Is taxation any more grinding? What is the result? Before we entered into this contract, in the year 1898, we received from the countries under the contract 5,499 immigrants. In the year 1903, under the contract, we received 27,048 immigrants. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) must find some other excuse for this increase in the immigration from those countries because the same conditions obtained there in 1898 as obtain to-day.

There were two factors which most largely contributed to the development of the Northwest; one was the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company; the other was the contract with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. I am not one of those hidebound partisans who believes that credit should not be given to an opponent where credit is due. I am free to admit there was nothing particularly original about either scheme for we borrowed both of them from the Conservative party. We were not the first to begin the work of getting immigrants from continental Europe nor the first to pay bonuses on European immigrants. That eminent Canadian statesman Sir Charles Tupper, must be given credit for having originated this scheme. He offered bonuses to shipping agents for securing immigrants from continental Europe and more than that, he sent his man John Dyke to work up emigration to Canada with the result that poor Mr. Dyke went to jail and for six months languished in a Hungarian dungeon until the British government got him out. When the Liberal government came to power they perfected that scheme, and made it workable, so that it was possible to secure immigrants from these countries without anybody going to jail.

Mr. WARD. Because you could not find them.

Mr. SPROULE. You could not find them with a search warrant.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Whom do you want to find?

Mr. WARD. The North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Very well, I will deal with that. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) made a good deal of the fact that the incorporators of this company were an hotel keeper, lawyer's clerks, and persons of that kind, but I can go to the office of the registrar of joint stock companies in the city of Victoria and I can find there at least half a dozen companies with which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is connected, and the incorporators of these companies are the printers in the offices in which the articles of association were printed, no others who could be conveniently found to sign the articles. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that in the mere formality of registering a joint stock company, the names of the subscribers to the memorandum of association are usually picked up in the most convenient manner. And by the way, if I wanted to go into that matter I could tell a very very sad tale, (a tale almost as sad as the tale about the Amsterdam office of the North Atlantic Trading Company) about the success attending the mining operations of the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. There are others.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. There is another phase of this question, Mr. Speaker, with which I shall deal briefly. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) has evidently adopted a policy of vilifying the work of the Department of the Interior and it is quite evident he has stampeded the Conservative party in the same effort. It is only a short time ago that he discussed here the contract of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, and again I give the Conservative party due credit for having originated the plan of inducing settlement in the Northwest by means of colonization companies. They had colonization companies, plenty of them about 20 in all. But the trouble with their colonization companies was that they would not work; they never brought in settlers, the friends of the member for North Toronto, when he was in power, got the land but the Northwest didn't get the settlers. The Liberal government did business with one colonization company, viz., the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. They entered into a business arrangement with men of expert knowledge in the work of placing settlers of a good class on the land and the result was we got the settlers. They brought settlers there who had money, settlers who had experience, settlers having knowledge of the conditions in the Northwest, settlers who purchased the land and made a success of farming, settlers who sent the good news to their friends in the United States, and it is this which is responsible for creating such a flood of immigration to the Northwest from the United States, as did in a measure offset the drain of our best blood to that country during the dark days of Conservative rule. I shall deal very briefly with some of the colonization—immigration schemes of the Conservative government, of which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a member. Let us take first the Temperance Colonization Society Limited, which comprised some very near and dear political friends of the hon. gentleman. That society entered into a contract with the Conservative government for something like 217,000 acres of land on condition that they would within five years :

> Colonize this tract within five years from the date of the contract by placing two settlers on homesteads on each even numbered section and two settlers on each odd numbered section.

This contract was made in the days when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) had a prejudice in favour of cold water, and he was particularly anxious that the Temperance Colonization Society should receive every encouragement in getting this 217,000 acres in the Northwest. They got the land. What happened in 1891 when the hon. gentleman from North Toronto was a member of the government? Hear the sad story of that Temperance Colonization Society, as set forth in this order in council passed on the 21st of April, 1891. In the meantime the hon. gentleman had a moment of weakness and he took a 'scunner' to cold water, and the Temperance Society did not flourish in the west. Let us see what became of the land. Its story is set forth in the order in council. During these five years, according to the report of Mr. Rufus Stephenson, inspector of colonization companies, there was in 1887, one year after the contract went into effect, 90 bona fide settlers on the land granted to this colonization company ; and four years after that, Mr. Stephenson states with a flourish of trumpets that this company succeeded in getting 11 additional settlers upon the land, making 101 settlers all told. And the government was so grateful to this company at having in five years' time put 101 settlers upon 217,000 acres of land that by order in council they gave the company a bonus of $100,000 for having done so. The hon. member for North Toronto shies at a bonus of $4.09 a head for immigrants from continental Europe, but he never blinked an eye when he gave the temperance colony a bonus of $1,000 a head for putting settlers on those lands.

But that was not all. The company asked for payment of an expense bill—here it is in the order in council—amounting to $222,737.18 in connection with putting the 101 settlers on those lands. Even the hon. member for North Toronto could not stand for that, so they made an even number of it, and gave them an allowance of $100,000 in part payment for 100,000 acres of land. And what became of the land ? It remained unsettled until the present government came into power. They could not sell it ; they could not do anything with it ; but as soon as this government adopted an aggressive and systematic policy of settling the Northwest, as soon as they entered into a contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, as soon as they entered into a contract with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, as soon as they got immigration pouring in there, the friends of the hon. member for North Toronto sold their lands. Go into the office of the hon. member for West Toronto Mr. Osler) today, and what do you find ? You find them selling the land of the temperance colony in the Northwest under the names of these trustees : Mr. E. B. Osler, Mr. Charles Bailie Powell, Mr. J. C. White, Mr. A. M. Nanton ; and at what price are they selling the lands ? At $7 or $8 an acre that horrified the hon. member for North Toronto the other day ? Not much. They are selling the land which was given by the Conservative government to the temperance colonization society at from $75 to $100 per foot front in the town of Saskatoon and at $1,500 and $2,000 an acre. The hon. member for North Toronto howls because the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company sells its land at $7 and $8 an acre ; but he has not a word to say when his dear Conservative friends sell the lands they secured in violation of an agreement with the Conservative government at $1,500 and $2,000 an acre. The gentlemen who are today manipulating this temperance society of hon. gentlemen opposite are E. B. Osler, Charles Bailie Powell, J C. White and A. M. Nanton.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Perhaps the hon. member will now give us the names of the directors of the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not know the names of the directors of the North Atlantic Trading Company, and I do not care. All I care about is whether they have done the work for the money which was paid to them.

This brings me back to another phase of the situation in connection with the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company. The hon. member for North Toronto and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier wonder if they were responsible for the immigrants which we secured from those European countries. It is a matter of wonder to these hon. gentlemen whether the fact that the company did work, that they distributed literature, opened up offices and carried on a propaganda in those countries, is responsible for the immigration that we got from there. Why, Sir, was such an absurd question ever asked before ? It is truly Fosterian in its absurdity. There is a firm in Montreal, the Slater Shoe Company, who make shoes. They spend nearly $1,000,000 a year in advertising. Does Mr. Slater discontinue to advertise because John Jones at Metlakatla in British Columbia does not send him a letter like this : 'Dear Mr. Slater, I saw your advertisement in such and such a paper and I am going to buy your shoes' ? He cannot trace the direct effect of his advertising in a single instance, but he knows that he is selling shoes, and he continues to advertise. We knew that we were getting the immigrants, and we continued to do business with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

But I am not through with the hon. member for North Toronto and his policy of the land for the settler. I find that since he got into the cold shades of opposition, the expert knowledge which he acquired as a member of this government in connection with land deals in the Northwest, has been exploited to his own advantage and the advantage of his friends. I find that some few years ago he and his friends got possession of 40,000 acres of land adjoining the village of Tisdale in the province of Saskatchewan on the line of the Canadian Northern Railway. They got both the odd numbered and even numbered sections—in fact, every acre in two townships except the lands of the Hudson's Bay Company and the school lands. Although he had been approached numerous times by the owners of the lands in adjoining townships, with the offer that they would let him select from their lands lands as good or better if he would only release the ever numbered sections so that they could be thrown open to entry of free homesteads—notwithstanding these offers and the protests of the people in that district, and to the great detriment of the village of Tisdale, he persistently held on to the lands, with the result that there is not a single settler in either township; and the hon. member for North Toronto to-day enjoys the distinction of being the manager of the only two townships of arable land between Winnipeg and Prince Albert which remain unsettled, and which he is holding at $3 or $4 an acre above the market price. And this is the hon. gentleman who howls in this House about the land for the settler.

But there is another land deal in which the hon. member for North Toronto is interested. A few years ago when a certain railway company was very much afraid that the monopoly which they secured under the Conservative government, and which they had enjoyed for a good many years would be destroyed. By some mysterious method, certain Conservative members of this House became possessed of some 200,000 acres of Canadian Pacific Railway lands in the Northwest. Not having the experience of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in land dealings, they immediately went to him to manage the affair, and no sooner did he get his clutches on it than a new nest of traitors was organized—a nest of traitors among the land speculators; and those poor members of the House who were not seasoned birds like the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the Hon. Dr. Montague, and Mr. John A. McGillivray, ex-M.P., and Robert Birmingham and J. H. Spence, were thrown out of the nest. And these gentlemen are trying to get back by process of law. I hold in my hands the statement of claims in the case between A. A. Lefurgey, W. H. Bennett—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. oh.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That name seems familiar. The hon. gentleman from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) must have been trying to secure a balm for his disappointment at not having some years ago got a slice of public domain upon easy terms. A. A. Lefurgey, W. H. Bennett and Arthur Penthin, plaintiffs, and the Great West Land Company, Limited, Rufus Pope and George W. Fowler, defendants. As I read this statement of claims I am very much impressed with the fact that the Conservatives, even in their land dealings and speculations, cannot trust each other, they cannot play fair among themselves. They were all right until they came under the blighting influence of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Until then they were a happy family, but just as soon as he began to complicate matters, they had to go to law to get their rights. Now, what do we find? In the statement of claim, the plaintiffs allege the formation of a syndicate of only five members namely, Lefurgey, Bennett, Penthin, Pope and Fowler. It was contemplated at first that the syndicate should be composed of ten, but they found the scheme would work so beautifully that five could get along first rate. Messrs. Pope and Fowler, being the more seasoned birds, managed the affair and made a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purchase of 200,000 acres of lands in the Territories. The plaintiffs—here is the point—upon the call of Pope and Fowler duly contributed their share of the moneys for the said purchase. Pope and Fowler made a contract for the sale to the New Ontario Farm and Town Site Syndicate for a portion of the lands. This last company transferred to the Great West Land Company, Limited, the last mentioned contract, which was for 202,572 49-100 acres of land. The Great West Land Company, Limited, was composed of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and Conservative friends of his who were out of a job—Dr. Montague, John A. McGillivray, Robert Birmingham and J. A. Spence, who I understand used once to be a Liberal, but when he came into the Fosterian cult he developed into a real good Conservative. These are the men who formed the Great West Land Company, Limited. The plaintiffs go on to recite that the syndicate, that is these five persons, were thus entitled to receive for the land, stock in the Great West Land Company amounting to $63,320, besides a large sum of money in cash. The stock in the Great West Land Company has not been issued, and Messrs. Pope and Fowler claim to be entitled to seven-tenths of the stock so to be issued, but the plaintiffs claim to be entitled each to one-fifth. The claim goes on to recite that Pope and Fowler have received from the defendant company on account of said sale $50,484.36, and they have assumed to retain for their commission in respect of the said sale the sum of $20,000 and also assume to retain therefrom seven-tenths of the remainder of the money divisible amongst the members of the syndicate.

These gentlemen wanted to take $20,000, they wanted to take seven-tenths of the balance and then divide among the syndicate the small remaining portion, and our poor dear friends from Prince Edward Island and East Simcoe will come in after this division is made. Bearing in mind that in that statement of claim the plaintiffs say that they contributed their share of the moneys for the said purchase, we now turn to the defence of the said Pope and Fowler. They even deny the syndicate of five members. They deny the contribution by the plaintiffs of any money. They say the syndicate was composed of ten persons to purchase 193,937 acres of land along the North Saskatchewan river from the Canadian Pacific Railway at $3.50 per acre, in which the plaintiffs have each one-tenth interest and contributed one-tenth of the expense. They say they got the option from the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purchase of the land solely by their own exertions—I wonder what exertions they put forth to get land for about $3 an acre less than the market price. But here is the point. The defendants say that the plaintiffs contributed only $200 each and had no trouble about getting the option, but you will mark that in their statement of claim the plaintiffs hold that they put up their share. Consequently if they were telling the truth, each of the members of this syndicate of five only put up $200, and through the manipulation of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) they sold some 200,000 acres of Canadian Pacific Railway land to this company at a profit of $1 an acre. One would think there was enough in that to go round. But no, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is never mixed up in anything without developing a nest of traitors. He did not want to divide up on an even basis, but wanted to squeeze the two neophytes who could not live in the same nest with himself and Dr. Montague and Mr. Birmingham and the rest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, regarding this North Atlantic Trading Company, I took the trouble to follow very closely the investigation in the Committee of Agriculture and Colonization and have endeavoured to secure as much information as posible in connection with this contract.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Which contract ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am speaking of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company. The hon. gentleman has heard of it before, I presume. And I am bound to say that while the Minister of the Interior has found it necessary, because of the violations of the conditions of the contract, to give notice of its cancellation, it was a contract in the best interests of the country. The contract itself was a good one, but of course it is for the Minister of the Interior to say whether the conditions have been lived up to or not. And, notwithstanding the denunciation by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) notwithstanding his denunciation of the ex-deputy minister of the Interior, I am bound to say that so far as the west is concerned, nothing has so strengthened this government as its administration of the Department of the Interior, and no men receive so much credit for having initiated a policy of progress and development in connection with that department as these two gentlemen. It is all very well for the member for West Toronto to vilify the ex-Minister of the Interior in his absence, but let him go out to the west and let him find what the people there think of the ex-minister and his administration of his department. Let him consider if he will the by-elections in the Northwest during the last few months. Let him consider the fact that two members supporting this government were returned by acclamation, and that, yesterday, there was introduced into this House another member whose opponent lost his deposit. There he will find his answer to his vilification of the ex-Minister of the Interior.

In reference to this contract, I say that we in the west have entered upon an era of railway development such as this country has never seen. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is building hundreds of miles of railway in the west. The Grand Trunk Pacific another transcontinental railway is now under construction. Mr. J. J. Hill has announced that he is going to build still another transcontinental railway through Canada. The Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul Railway Company is building a line from the Missouri river to the coast. And these are only a few of the railway projects in that country. Now, I hold that so far as the Grand Trunk Pacific at least, is concerned, we should secure the very highest percentage of the best Canadian citizenship from the expenditure of the large amount of money necessary to construct that road. That road must be built by one or other of two classes, for in these days there are only two classes of people who engage largely in railway work. One, is composed of the Finlanders, Swedes, and other people from the north, and the other is composed of Italians, people from the south of Europe. It was announced yesterday that Mr. J. D. McArthur would require at least 10,000 men to complete his contract from Winnipeg to Superior junction. I have no hesitation in saying that it will require an army of 100,000 men to construct the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway within the time set for its completion. Whence are these men to come? If you destroy your system of regulating immigration into this country, your railway contractors will become aggressive immigraion agents and, if you put a time limit upon them for the completion of their works, you cannot restrict them as to the places whence they shall bring their labour or as to the class of labour they shall secure. They will bring in Italians, because it is more convenient to procure them. And these Italians will not settle upon the land, but will congregate in your cities to become a menace to the other citizens of those places. But, if the people from these other countries are given work on the railways, it will be an encouragement for them to come in here, and they will settle upon the land. For my part, I would like to see the people who construct these railways of the same class as those who built the state of Minnesota which is to-day one of the most prosperous states in the union. For this reason I hope that, if this contract is to be cancelled the Minister of the Interior, will lose no time in making some other arrangement to regulate the immigration into this country. We would like to get the people who will not only engage in railway work, but will also remain here and settle upon our lands and make good citizens.

It seems to me quite plain that the resolution proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto is merely part of a campaign which the Conservative party in this House has evidently adopted since they came under his blighting influence. It is a campaign of slander a campaign of mudslinging in the hope that some of it will stick. They know perfectly well that public opinion in this country will tolerate nothing but honest administration of public affairs; and so from their places in this House, through their party press and otherwise, they carry on a systematic campaign of abuse in the hope that the public of this country will accept their reiterated statements, though there is not a tittle of evidence to substantiate them. But I am afraid that by the blundering, if brilliant tactics, which have always characterized the chequered career of the hon. member for North Toronto, he has led his friends into a cul de sac from which there is no escape. They are surrounded on all sides by the awful record of his own administration, not only in reference to immigration, not only in reference to the administration of the Northwest lands, but in reference to the administration of every department of the public service. And this record is an impenetrable and insurmountable wall. When the hon. member for North Toronto introduces resolutions of this kind he should not forget that he belongs to a party of the past, a party with a record. The hon. gentleman got his answer in 1896, in 1900 and 1904. And, so long as he is the chief apostle of political purity on that side of the House, so long will the answer of the people be the same. The ugly chickens which he hatched between 1888 and 1896 are still coming home to roost. He will get no sympathy from this side of the House, and, what is still more galling, he will get no sympathy from his own side.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I trust I shall receive the indulgence of the House, if I venture to recall to the recollection of hon. members the subject which is before the House—a matter to which their attention has not been called for the last three-quarters of an hour. I trust that I shall receive indulgence at your hands, if, through ignorance of the rules of debate and procedure in this House, I should transgress. In my humble ignorance I have always understood that speakers on the floor of parliament were to confine themselves to the subject before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have always thought so, Sir, though I see from the laughter of the hon. member from Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) that there is one member of the House who differs from me on that point. But I am ready to leave it to the arbitrament of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that, at least, it used to be considered the duty of members of parliament, when speaking, to confine themselves to the subject before the House. And I trust that this will be the last time when, with the right hon. leader of the House present three-quarters of an hour of the time of this Chamber shall be occupied by a discussion of private matters between members who sit side by side and by the reading of one-sided quotations from a case—yes, and a case that is actually now pending in the courts of the province in which we sit. I venture to say that a more humiliating spectacle was never seen in this legislative body. And, Sir, I blame not so much the hon. gentleman himself to whom I give full credit for speaking with perfect sincerity though with dense ignorance; but I blame the right hon. gentleman who leads this House that he should allow our time to be fritted away and attempts to be made to draw the attention of members of this House away from the question before them, a question on which they will have to vote to-night and a question which it is the duty of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to consider well, so that when they are called to face the people of this country, they at all events cannot say that they did not understand the question on which they voted on the evening of April 24, 1906.

Now, Sir, begging pardon of the House for reminding them of the question before us, let me point out that the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Toronto was absolutely clear cut. The hon. gentlemen opposite may agree or disagree with it, but they have no right to rise in this House and profess to discuss it unless they at least know what it is, and if they will take the trouble to read that amendment they will find that there is not a single word in it of condemnation of the government on any other ground than on account of the particular contract known as the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract which is referred to in that resolution. When hon. gentlemen come to vote to-night, they are not called upon to vote in support of the gentlemen administering the government, they are not called on to vote even in favour of the immigration department of the government, but as between them and their constituents, they will have to stand up and vote whether or not the conditions of the contract made between this government and the North Atlantic Trading Company are 'injurious, improvident and absurd.' This is the question before the House, and any gentleman trifles with the dignity of parliament, any gentleman insults not only his opponents but those sitting about him, when he occupies the time of this House discussing any other question than that.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to be unjust to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and I quite understand perhaps why he devoted his attention to other topics than that before the House. He did make three references, and three only, to that subject, the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Toronto. Outside of these three references, every word he said this afternoon was like the flowers that bloom in spring, having nothing to do with the case. When I listened to the first two statements the hon. gentleman made, I wondered what in the world he would say next. I must congratulate him at all events on his wisdom in leaving the subject on which he shows much deplorable ignorance. I do not know whether to congratulate him more on the length of his memory or the depth of his forgetfulness. He commenced his remarks by attacking hon. gentlemen on this side because, through all these long years, we had sat here idle, crouching under the weight of this North Atlantic Trading Company. Why had we not done something before to-day ? Why, at this time, do we suddenly rise and attempt to cancel this most righteous contract ? Why, Sir, I see the hon. gentleman has left his seat, I suppose he is afraid that possibly he might learn something about this contract. Now, if he thinks the opposition was to blame because we did not attack this contract in days gone by, he gives proof of a very short memory. Let me refer him to the 'Hansard' debate of last year. I find that on the 2nd of July a resolution was moved by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) in the following words :

> That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to give notice of the government's intention to terminate the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company according to the terms of the contract.

Could anything be more clear cut than that ? And a vote of this House was taken, and gentlemen on this side voted that the government should cancel that contract, and gentlemen on the other side voted that the government should not cancel that contract, and among the gentlemen voting not to cancel the contract was the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross). Unfortunately, Sir, the rules of parliament to which I wish to adhere, prevent me from referring to the proceedings in another branch of this legislature within a week or ten days, otherwise I could accumulate evidence as to what the hon. gentleman supporting the government thinks of this contract. Then the hon. gentleman said that the only reason we moved now was because everybody knew a month ago that the government had decided to cancel this contract, and therefore we on this side of the House, knowing that the government intended to cancel the contract, decided to steal their thunder and thereby gain a little cheap popularity. Now, I do not say that the hon. gentleman did not speak sincerely, but I wish to congratulate him on his memory. This is more than a case of memory, it is a case of even more than mind reading, more than second sight, because, although the government had decided to cancel this contract they did not decide to cancel it until the 14th of April, as we are told by the Minister of the Interior page 1901, of the 'Hansard', in answer to a question of the leader of the opposition.

> The conclusion was reached, I have said, on the 14th of April.

So, I hope the hon. gentleman will apologize to gentlemen on this side of the House and admit that he was wrong when he said that we brought up this motion because everybody knew a month ago that the government had decided to cancel this contract. Now, Sir, the question, as I have said, is not one concerning the general administration of the government, and members cannot shelter themselves under that pretense when they go back to their constituents. The question is this, is this particular contract an excellent contract, is it one that should be maintained, or is it one that should be cancelled ? I can quite understand the embarrassment of hon. gentlemen opposite who, in this painful dilemma, are obliged to stand up and tell their fellow-members that this is a righteous contract, and at the same time say that, righteous as it is, beneficial as it is to the people of this country, desirable as it is that it should be maintained and perpetuated, still the government decided on the 14th of April last to cancel it. Surely members of this House were never placed in a more embarrassing position than that. Now what is this contract about which so much has been said ? The contract is in the possession of all the members. It commences by correspondence in the fall of the year 1899, and is closed by a letter of the 4th of November, 1899, signed by W. T. R. Preston, agreeing to the terms. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to read that contract they will find that this North Atlantic Trading Company only agrees to do one thing, and in consideration of that one thing they are to be paid certain bonuses. They are to be paid :

17 shillings and 6 pence sterling per capita on any number less than ten thousand in each year ;

20 shillings sterling per capita on any number between ten thousand and fifteen thousand in each year ;

25 shillings sterling per capita on any number exceeding fifteen thousand in each year.

They are given the whole continent of Europe, and no matter from what country people may come to Canada, no matter what reasons brought them here, no matter who the agents were, booking agents or otherwise, who called Canada to their attention, this happy trading company, coming into existence at the close of 1899, is to receive from the 1st of January those sums on every immigrant which came to this country, provided that the immigrants landed in Canada and were registered at the ports of Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal, and were over twelve years of age. Now that seems like an attractive contract. That company could step in and have this advantage without having expended, or being able to expend, anything up to the beginning of the year. They are to be paid those sums on all immigrants who came to this country bound for Manitoba and the Northwest, provided they were over twelve years of age. Now what was the company to do ?—for something surely must come from the company in consideration of this valuable franchise. What was the company to do ?

We will undertake to bring Canada to the attention of people residing in continental European countries——

That is not very serious, 'to bring Canada to the attention of the people residing in continental European countries.'

They agreed further in answer to queries to furnish reliable information regarding the climatic conditions and resources of Canada, and, where it is the intention to emigrate, to point to Canada as a desirable field for settlement.

And that is all they were to do. This North Atlantic Trading Company was not bound to spend one single dollar, under the first contract and yet from the time it was signed they were entitled to this sum per head for every immigrant. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they think that was a business-like proposition ; I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if there is any one of them—and I will admit frankly there is not any member on this side of the House—who would not be delighted to receive a contract from the Dominion of Canada under which he would be entitled to receive these sums on every immigrant over twelve years of age going to Manitoba and the Northwest provinces for five years without the slightest undertaking on his part to expend one dollar or to expend any exertion except to advertise Canada to those who come to inquire, to answer questions and if people are inclined to emigrate to point out the peculiar advantages of Canada as a land for settlement.

That is the contract in its initiation and I would like hon. gentlemen calmly to consider whether or not they can endorse the statement of the hon. gentleman who last spoke (Mr. Ross) that it was a good contract. But the contract did not remain in that position ; there was one weak spot in the contract from the standpoint of the company. The immigrants on whose heads the bounty was to be paid had to be over twelve years of age, a very wise provision. I think about the only wise provision there was in the contract made on behalf of the country. But the contract had not been in existence more than two or three months before, by a quiet side arrangement between Mr. Smart and the company, an arrangement communicated by Mr. Smart to the pay masters, it was decided to pay this bonus on every man, woman and child, although under the original contract these sums were to be paid only on immigrants over twelve years of age. I find on looking through the papers, that in one year there was question about the amount of money that the Galicians brought into this country, and in order to ascertain how much per head they brought in an investigation was held as to the number of men, women and children and it was found that in that year, among the Galicians alone, one single nationality out of a dozen, 2,087 children were brought into this country of Galician parentage on whom this country had to pay $5 per head. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they think that was an improvement in the contract. The first contract was for a limited time, five years. That was not satisfactory to these gentlemen, whoever they are, composing the North Atlantic Trading Company and so, by successive changes—and I do not wish to weary the House by going into the changes because I want to adhere to the main point—the contract was made more favourable to the company. The original contract in November, 1899, was not approved by order in council, but as far as we can see from the papers brought down an alleged copy was sent to the Auditor General, and acted upon by him at the time being represented to him by the deputy minister to be the contract, although it was not the contract, and the result of this was that money was paid on the children as well as on the adults. There was a change in 1902, by which the term was extended ten years with the requirement of two years' notice of cancellation. There was a change again in 1904, small changes each time, but on each occasion giving greater concessions, greater advantages to this company, and the greatest advantage of all was that each time there was a change the contract was continued for another ten years. When the change was made in 1902, two years of the term had elapsed, and the term had then became eight years. It was again extended ten years and the right of cancellation was only to exist after four years. Without going into further details I think I may say that when we find a contract of this kind, no matter with whom made, which in its inception does not require a dollar to be put up by the company, which later required £3,000 a year to be spent in literature but which did not require a pound to be spent until the company had been in existence long enough to have gained five or ten times that amount out of the government, so that it did not have to pay out a dollar of its own money, and when we find the company called upon to pay a thousand pounds for additional work in Scandinavia the government put up £750 a year and we find that, year after year, the accounts were not audited because they could not be audited by the officers of the government, then we have some reason to be suspicious, and have reason to say that the contract is absurd, iniquitous and unjust as is stated in the amendment to the motion for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Now, having said so much about the contract let me refer to a few remarks of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) the other day which were repeated by his humble follower to-day. The Minister of the Interior followed a course that I think was probably quite legitimate as a matter of political argument, but I do not think it was patriotic. The duty of the minister is to try and secure the best bargain he can for this country, and I am sure there is nobody on the Treasury benches or on the seats behind them any more than there is on this side of the House, or in the country, who really believes it is any answer to a charge of wrong-doing made against hon. gentlemen opposite for them to say : Your predecessors, the Conservative party, ten years ago did as badly as we did. Our party was turned out of power by the people of this country because they thought we were not doing the best and you were put in power to carry out the promises you made to do better than we did, and therefore you know perfectly well it is no answer to say : You gentlemen opposite, on the opposition benches, in the day of your power did as badly as or worse than we have done. But what does the Minister of the Interior say ? He says a contract was made by the Conservative party when in power, and he gives the contract in order that there should be no possibility of difference of opinion about it. He quoted a letter written by Mr. Low and another by the Hon. John Henry Pope, the latter being Minister of Agriculture at the time. This contract was made in 1882, and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) triumphantly says : Why gentlemen here was your immigration system established by the Conservative party away back in 1882, maintained by them until they went out of power in 1896, and faithfully, but with improvements, continued by us ever since. Now, that statement is accurate or it is not accurate. If it is not accurate I think a withdrawal would be very fitting and becoming on the part of the Minister of the Interior who used this language :

> This was the rule in 1882 under the Hon. John Henry Pope, Minister of Agriculture, but it is not the rule in 1902 under the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior.

Now, if the cases are entirely dissimilar, if there is not the faintest shadow of resemblance between the policy of the Conservative party and the policy of the present administration, I think we might fairly ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) as the member of the government whom hon. members on this side have always said desired to be honest—I think I can ask him to withdraw his statement that he has followed the policy initiated by his predecessors in office, and after I have proved it I cannot say to the hon. gentleman because his term of an hour a day in the House seems to have expired, but to his colleagues I hope that they will carry the news to him, that there is no similarity whatever between the contract made in 1882 and the contract made in 1899 and frequently amended from that day to this. In the first place if one looks at the contract made in 1882, that is the letter written to the agent of the Erie Railway Company, it is written by Mr. John Henry Pope to the General Passenger Agent of the Erie Railway Company, New York. There is no dispute there as to the party with whom the contract was made, there is no doubt in the world with whom the government is dealing, and one of the reasons given in this letter for the government in making the contract with this particular railway company was the ramifications of their business that extended throughout the continent of Europe. On one hand we have the Conservative government making a contract with one of the greatest railroads in America because of its ramifications in Europe and in the other case we have this government making a contract with Heaven only knows whom, for after years and years of endeavour, we have not found out and hon. gentlemen will not let us find out. If you look at the contract made in 1882, you will find it is a contract for emigration work in only two countries, Germany and Scandinavia are the only two countries.

These are the two countries which the correspondence on the file again and again points to as affording the best class of immigrants. Therefore the government of 1882 picked out the two best countries of Europe and made arrangements for emigration from them to Canada. The contract made by the present government hands over the whole of continental Europe to this company and obliges us to pay the same bonus per head on desirable and undesirable immigrants alike. Surely that is one striking difference between the two contracts. Then under contract made in 1882 payments were for adults only, the reason stated being that eighteen years was the age at which land could be taken up by any settler and consequently on no one under the age of eighteen was a bonus of $5 paid according to the contract made by the Conservative government. Under the terms of the contract made by this Liberal government they pay the bonus on children in arms. Is there not a vast difference there? Under the contract made by the Conservative government the bonus was not paid until the immigrant arrived in Manitoba and had produced a voucher showing that he had come there to settle, whereas under the contract made by this government the bonus was paid on the arrival of the immigrant in Canada. Surely there is a difference between the two contracts there. And there is another difference. The contract made in 1882 could be cancelled at any time and it did not bind Canada for a day longer than the government chose to maintain it; the contract made in 1899 and the successive amendments to it, bound this country first for five years—if a deputy minister had power to bind the revenues of the country which had not been voted by parliament, and which I very much doubt—at all events it professed to bind this country for five years, and from time to time the contract was amended each time care being taken that the ten years extension was continued so that there was no time they had not their ten years ahead, unless that under the four years clause we could cancel it on giving four years notice. Now, I have shown the difference between the two contracts—first the contract made by the Conservatives was made with a responsible company, while the contract made by the present government was not made with a responsible company. Second, the contract made by the Conservatives was for Germany and Scandinavia alone; the contract made by the present government is for the whole of continental Europe. Again, the contract made by the Conservative government was to pay for adults over eighteen years, whereas the contract made by the present government was for payment on those over twelve years of age and even then they proceeded to pay on every infant in arms, and within a few months the contract was changed so that they were bound to pay for these infants. Again, the contract made by the Conservative government provided for payment only on the arrival of the immigrant in Manitoba and the production of a voucher that he intended to settle, whereas under the contract made by the Liberal government the bonus was paid the moment the immigrant sets foot in Canada. And lastly, the contract made by the Conservative government could be cancelled at any time, whereas that made by the present administration is subject to the four years clause and otherwise for 10 years.

Surely I was justified when I called on the Minister of the Interior to establish the truth of his assertion, that he was following out the policy of the Conservative government when he made such a contract as this. Having said so much about the contract itself; having found that the contract was made with an unknown company, having found that every attempt made by gentlemen of this side of the House to obtain information about that company was obstructed in every way, it is not unreasonable that we should state to the House what information we have been able to gather. I regret we have not more information. We have, however, certain reliable information some of which was obtained from the files of the department and some from the examination of the late deputy minister. Beyond all question this is good evidence because it comes either from the files of the department or from the mouth of the ex-deputy minister who is the present manager of the company, and that being so the evidence can be relied on even by hon. gentlemen opposite. We find in the first place that this offer was suggested by one W. T. R. Preston. I am not here to attack this man Preston; I want to try to discuss this question calmly and dispassionately as a question of great importance in which this country is interested, and so I merely say that we find that the first suggestion that such a contract should be made comes from Preston. He states that he had been in communication with people on the continent who are important booking agents, able to do good immigration work for this country, and he writes Mr, Smart, the deputy minister, asking him to bring about such a contract. So far as we know the suggestion was then first broached to Mr. Smart, and he and Mr. Preston sat down and made this contract of 1899. Without spending more time in discussing that question, the members of this House can consider for themselves as a judge or a jury would consider. Was there anybody looking after the interests of Canada in drawing up of that contract. It is evident beyond peradventure that counsel were there for the company. When a company is getting a valuable franchise and pledges itself to give or pay nothing in return, I am justified in saying that at this stage the company was represented. But there is no evidence before us to show that the Dominion of Canada or the people of Canada were represented at that conference when this contract came into existence. It purports to be made with a company called the North Atlantic Trading Company, and if I remember aright it is referred to in the first contract as a syndicate doing business under that name, and it is not described as being actually a corporation. The ink was hardly dry on this contract which was entirely in the interest of the company when it was suggested by the company in writing, that the payments should be made monthly. That was agreed to by the department and the payments began to be made monthly, although that was not provided for by the contract. Let me again ask who was acting for the country here ? It was surely in the interests of Canada that we should hold back this money until we saw what this company was doing to justify payments to them. But no—so fast as the immigrants came in the government paid the bonus on them monthly. Then a question arose between the Auditor General and the Department of the Interior as to whether or not infants should be paid for, the Auditor General pointing out that under the contract infants should not be paid for, and at once the deputy Minister of the Interior provided a new contract which said that infants in arms should be paid for, and so the Auditor General had to give up his contention. Without recapitulating the various changes in this contract I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to say whether there was any change made in this contract from beginning to end in regard to which it could be honestly said that the people of Canada got the advantage. There is one very singular letter which sheds a great deal of light on this subject, and to which I shall refer when the House meets after the dinner hour.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Before you left the Chair, Sir, I had referred to the inception of the contract between the government and the North Atlantic Trading Company in the year 1899, and the successive changes that have been made in it, each, as I claimed, in the interest of the company, not of the government or the country. I gave my understanding of the original contract as I took it from that lying on the files. Hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House who have already spoken seem to have a slight difference of opinion as to the construction of that contract, and Mr. Smart, the ex-Deputy Minister of the Interior, in his examination before the Public Accounts Committee, also seemed to have the idea that from the very beginning the contract should be read as it eventually was altered to read, that the bonus should be paid on every individual, adult or infant, who came to the shores of Canada from the countries specified. I find on the files a memorandum from the Department of the Interior, whether to the minister or council does not appear, under date of 2nd February, 1900, and this memorandum, giving the understanding of the department as to the construction of the contract of the 4th of November, 1899, is as follows :

> Memorandum.—The old system of bonuses to booking agents has been abolished, and on the 4th November, 1899, an agreement was completed between Mr. Preston, acting for this department, and the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Therefore, when I said that the agreement was made by Mr. Preston I was borne out by the testimony of this memorandum. The names of a number of countries are then stated to which the contract relates, being all the continent of Europe. It goes on :

> It is observed, however, that these countries are not mentioned specifically in the written agreement, and that publicity in Canada regarding this agreement is deprecated.

I do not blame the minister for that.

> Finland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark are not included in the agreement——

Although the agreement itself shows that they are.

> —and not yet provided for.

I want the minister's attention particularly to what follows, because this memorandum gives the first genuine information which we have received as to who constitute this famous company. It continues:

> The company consists of certain of the continental booking agents and their friends (names not given).

It is rather significant that the expression 'certain continental booking agents and their friends' is in quotation marks, showing that somebody, either Mr. Preston, Mr. Smart or the minister, whoever drew this memorandum, had been informed that the parties entering into this contract were certain continental booking agents and their friends.

> The company is to receive a per capita bonus on all immigrants to Canada, male and female, destined for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and who are twelve years of age or over. Children under twelve years of age are not taken account of. The company is to receive its bonus as soon as the immigrants are registered at the ports of Halifax, St. John, Quebec or Montreal via these ports, or via Portland and New York in the United States. The agreement is to be regarded as very confidential.

Now, Sir, when we find an agreement entered into between a deputy minister and a myth called a trading company, when we find a memorandum sent either to the minister or to council stating that the agreement is really with certain booking agents and their friends, and when they find that the publication of the agreement in Canada is deprecated, and that the agreement is to be regarded as very confidential, I think members of this House may be justified in being a little suspicious as to the terms of such an agreement and as to the parties with whom it is made. Perhaps before I finish my resumé of the facts which I have been able to elicit from the correspondence every member of the House will agree with me that those who have been inclined to be a little suspicious from the inception of this matter have long ago been proved to be amply justified in their suspicions. The next document I find to which I will refer the House is a telegram from Mr. Smart to Mr. Preston—not to the North Atlantic Trading Company, although the matter being one affecting that company, one would have thought that the telegram would have been sent to it. But the agreement having provided, as that agreement was interpreted by the memorandum laid before the minister or council, that the bonus should be paid only on immigrants over twelve years of age, the next step is this telegram from the Department of the Interior:

Ottawa, July 17, 1900.

Preston, London.

Re arrangement of continental bonus. One pound allowed on immigrants, excepting Galicians. No bonus on latter, except families possessed of $20 above transportation. Am writing fully.

SMART.

So we find that although there was a binding contract under which this company was not bound to spend a dollar, and under which it was only entitled to 17s. 6d. on certain immigrants, the department voluntarily, without apparently laying the matter before council, increased that amount to £1 per head; and so jubilant was the deputy minister over this success that he could not even wait to write, but had forthwith to cable, not to the company, but to his friend Mr. Preston, in London. Can we who are acquainted with the past history of Mr. Preston not well understand the glad refrain that arose from his joyous lips after be received in London this cable ? We can well understand that he should then have burst into song, as he did on a famous occasion in Canada when he carolled : There is sunshine in my soul to-night.

This telegram of July 17 was followed by a letter, for we find on the files a letter from Mr. Smart to Mr. Preston of that date. I shall not read the whole of it, but will merely call attention to this clause :

You will observe——

And mind you Mr. Speaker, these were two government employees corresponding with one another.

You will observe that the government has rearranged the bonus so that there will be a decided advantage reaped by your company in connection with all except the Galicians.

Here, Sir, were these two gentlemen, who were supposed to be safeguarding the interests of the people of this country—the deputy minister, Mr. Smart, acting for the government on the one hand, and Mr. Preston on the other,—and we find Mr. Smart gratuitously increasing the bonus to be paid this company and then notifying by cable, not the company whose headquarters were in Amsterdam, but Mr. Preston, whose headquarters are in London, and saying your company. Can there be any conceivable reason why this cable message should have been sent to Mr. Preston unless he was interested in the news it bore ?

A couple of years rolled on and another agreement was made in 1902. Into its details I shall not enter but merely repeat what I said this afternoon. First that, every agreement gave substantial advantage to the company ; and secondly, that in connection with this agreement of 1902, which was approved by the Privy Council, whose report was approved by His Excellency on May 31, of that year, it is recited in that order in council :

The minister observes that about two years ago the Immigration Department made a tentative arrangement with an organization known as the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Therefore, in 1902, the minister understood he was dealing with an organization known as the North Atlantic Trading Company. The next change was made in 1904, and I have before me the contract then entered into, under which the company has since carried on business, but which the minister has promised to cancel by virtue of one of the terms thereof. There is a significant feature in this contract to which I would call attention. The contract bears date November 28, 1904, and is made :

Between His Majesty the King, represented herein by the Minister of the Interior of Canada, hereinafter called the minister, which expression includes also the successors in office of the minister. His Majesty, as so represented, being hereinafter referred to as the government, of the first part, and the North Atlantic Trading Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, a body corporate and politic, hereinafter called the company, of the second part.

Are there any legal advisers of this government at all? Was there any check to be put on the rapacity or recklessness of some of the subordinate head officers of the department? Was no step taken to see what had been done, and where and how it was that this company, described in the previous contract as an organization known as the North Atlantic Trading Company, suddenly blossoms out a full fledged body corporate with headquarters at Amsterdam? And this document I find winds up with these words:

In witness whereof the corporate seal of the company has been affixed hereto and this agreement has been signed by the manager and secretary of the company, and has been signed and sealed by the Minister of the Interior of Canada on behalf of the government.

I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) what he has to say about such a contract as that, entered into by his predecessor, for which he is politically, legally, and constitutionally just as responsible as his predecessor would be were he occupying his seat to-night. What is the meaning of this document, purporting to be made with an incorporated company, purporting to be sealed and signed by its manager and secretary, when we know—as we only learnt within the last forty-eight hours—that at the time this document purported to be executed, there was not such a company in the world and there is no such company to-day. It seems to me that the minister is in this unfortunate dilemma. Either this document was sealed and signed as it purports to be or it was not. If the minister accepted this document as signed and sealed by an incorporated company, it is his duty to prosecute those who obtain from the government certain concessions under false pretenses. If, on the other hand, the document was not signed by the company, I would ask the hon. minister what the government has to say of such a way of doing business as to make a contract with some persons, who might or might not become a company, and then wait seven or eight months until the company was incorporated and it was in a position to affix its seal to the agreement. We have on this document the seal of the company and the signatures of its manager and secretary. I would ask whether that seal and those signatures were affixed on the date this document bears or was the document held over in abeyance for seven months until incorporation was obtained in another country?

When we look at the circumstances surrounding the inception of this company, and when we examine its record, we cannot help being convinced that the whole thing was a scheme of a most suspicious character. The company, having been thus formed, proceeded to business, and one of the first things it did was to send in a bill to the government. Its bills came in from year to year, and there is no great difference between the bills of one year and another. I have seen probably all, or nearly all, on the files, and I can see no great difference among them, but I selected one year in particular because it was the year before the deputy minister made his famous trip to Amsterdam and because the account is one which, for other reasons, the House should hear about. I am taking the account for the year ending June 30, 1902. The company only began operations practically in January, 1901, so that at the end of a year and a half they sent in their bill. The bill is rather a remarkable one on its face, but is still more remarkable by virtue of the facts which occurred afterwards. Here are the items of expenses between July 1, 1901 and June 30, 1902:

	Marks.
1.—Office rent, salaries to clerks, postage and commission, Amsterdam office	32,529 15
2.—Travelling expenses in Belgium, Holland, Russia, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, &c.	9,250 28
3.—Literature	19,202 00
4.—Libau offices	6,900 00
5.—Austrian business	10,103 00
6a.-Scandinavian business	12,335 00
6b.-Finnish bsiness	2,680 00
7.—Remuneration to different sub-agencies for postage and propaganda	12,325 00
Total	105,325 00

The deputy minister was asked in the committee about this bill and about his visit to the office in Amsterdam, which visit was so vividly described by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other day, and the House will remember that the deputy minister visited Amsterdam on a tour of inspection, paid for, not out of his own pockets, but by the people of this country, because he went there to ascertain all about the company, and the House will remember that he wandered about Amsterdam until he found the office, but could not remember what story the office was on. He did remember, however, when he reached it, the door was locked and there was no one about the premises. But on making subsequent inquiries it turned out that things were not quite so bad as they appeared, because every few days a boy did come to take the mail from the door. According to the then deputy minister, Mr. Smart, the expenses of that office from July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902, were as follows:

Office rent, salaries to clerks, postage and commissions, 32,529.15 marks.

And when he was asked an explanation of that, he said it was because postage was a very heavy item, and postage and all the other items would naturally be charged up against the head office. But his attention was called to the last item, remuneration to different sub-agencies for postage and propaganda 12,325 marks. It is for the House to consider whether, in view of the evidence of Mr. Smart—not a statement made by a member of the opposition, not a canard published in the Conservative press, not a story that may have floated across the Atlantic coming no one knows whence and received by no one knows whom, but the sworn evidence of the ex-deputy himself, who made an official visit at the expense of the people to find out the state of affairs at Amsterdam—I say it is for the House to judge, in view of this, whether this contract has been duly carried out and whether these charges have been properly made.

There is another significant feature about that account. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads this House, may remember that in the year 1903 he received a letter from one Ennis, asking him to use his best endeavours with the Canadian government to see that he, poor, unfortunate, unpaid Ennis, should receive the remuneration to which he was entitled under his contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company. It turned out that he had been the agent of this company in Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland, and though he had done their work, and done it well, the company refused to pay him. He was pressing them for payment, and there is a letter on file from the company showing that they had advised him to write to Ottawa because they had not been paid all that was coming to them from Ottawa. And so Ennis wrote to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister referred the matter to the Department of the Interior. The letter from Ennis is on file showing that he feels grievously hurt because he has not been paid for his services as representative of the North Atlantic Trading Company in the four countries I have named. And what was the contract between Ennis and the North Atlantic Trading Company? The documents on file show that for every emigrant from Denmark, he was to be paid 4 kroner, or $1.04 and for every emigrant from Norway, Sweden or Finland, he was thankful to receive 2 kroner, 52c. per head. Does it strike the members of this House that the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) made a business arrangement, that he acted with that sagacity with which he is credited, that he acted with that honesty which he ought to possess, when he made a bargain with this company which they were able to sub-let so profitably that, whereas they received $5 per head for doing nothing, the man who did the work was to receive 52c. for work in any of the three countries, and $1.04 for the other?

Now, when the ex-deputy minister went to Amsterdam and visited this office, he knew of this letter from Ennis, for it had been in his possession for a year. That was enough, surely, to make him suspicious as to the manner in which the affairs of the company were being carried on. But, more than that, he had also this account for 105,000 marks which I have just read. A report on that account had been sent to the department on that account by Mr. W. D. Scott. And, if I might be allowed to diverge for a moment from the strict line from the subject before us, I would like to say, in justice to the sub-ordinate officials of the department that, after a considerable time spent in reading the files in connection with this case, I am deeply impressed with the fact that, whatever the heads of the department may have done, or may not have done, the subordinate officers of the department have diligently, laboriously, and faithfully striven to do their duty in the positions in which they are placed. I say there is a report on this account from Mr. W. D. Scott. It is dated June 11, 1903. In this report Mr. Scott criticises pretty severely this bill of 105,000 marks which had been sent by this company. He criticised it so severely that Mr. Smart had to write to Mr. Preston on the subject, and, in writing, he repeats the figures given by Mr. Scott. And so we see that, at the very time when Mr. Smart visited this office in Amsterdam, in 1904, he had in his mind—or should have had—the apparent fraud that had been perpetrated by this company as shown by the analysis of their account of the previous year made by Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott calls attention to the facts in this way:

> Of the whole 105,325.10 marks, which is equal to $25,067.37, I find that the main part of this account is for office rents, salaries of clerks, postage, commissions, sub-agencies, and that of this total 19,202.10 marks or $4,570.10 has been actually used for advertising.

And what kind of advertising?

> I find the large portion of the advertising is not of the character at all that the department could approve if it had been submitted in accordance with the agreement before the publications were made.

The House, is perhaps aware, that under the terms of the agreement the publications had to be submitted to the department before they were made. And they were not so submitted, nor can we find evidence in the files that they were submitted afterwards, notwithstanding the protest of Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott's report is embodied in a letter from Mr. Smart to Mr. Preston, a part of which reads:

> The point is that a large part of the advertising is simply steamship advertising not directed by the North Atlantic Trading Company at all, but by Mr. Karlsberg and Mr. Falck, and it would appear to me that a large portion of the former—that is the cost of the office rent, &c.—covers steamship offices, which are established for the general ocean business not only to Canada but to all portions of the globe, at all events for steamers represented by these individual steamship agents, and consequently we cannot be getting the advertising we expected when entering into the arrangement with the company.

This letter of Mr. Smart follows word for word the report that Mr. Scott had sent to him. And so, we find that in the month of June, 1903, Mr. Smart, then deputy minister, knew that the accounts sent to him were not proper accounts, that the money supposed to be spent was not being spent as it should be. And the additional fact remains, that from that day to this, so far as I have been able to discover from the laborious search of the files, no practical attempt has been made by the government to obtain genuine vouchers for the expenditure of that money. It was well to provide that the company should spend £3,000 a year, but was not the spirit of those who entered into the contract on the part of the government displayed in the arrangement that, while the company was bound to spend £3,000 a year, on the other hand the government has to pay on the immigrants reaching Canada monthly. And the company was not called upon to make return until the end of the year, and the vouchers sent him were the certificates of their own officers. Not only was Mr. Smart, at the time he visited Amsterdam, aware that the accounts of the company were in the unsatisfactory condition which his subordinate had reported, but he knew also that the very reason of the contract—the settlement of Manitoba and part of the Northwest—was not being carried out by means of this company. We listened to a dissertation this afternoon by an hon. gentleman opposite upon the wonderful success of the present policy of the administration. We heard the Minister of the Interior, the other evening dilate at great length upon the glories of that policy. But the practical question before this House, the question upon which hon. gentlemen must vote this evening, is not the general policy of the government; it is not even the immigration policy of the government—hon. gentlemen must vote on the particular contract made by this government with the North Atlantic Trading Company and the various amendments and additions thereto. When Mr. Smart went to Amsterdam in 1904, he had in his pocket, or in his mind—or should have had—certain reports that had come from Winnipeg about the beginning of 1903. I find that in going over the files, Mr. Geo. A. Johnston—I do not know if he is the statistician, but it matters little, for he in this case, only started the ball rolling—wrote, under date of 30th of December, 1902, to the effect that while on an immigrant special, after great trouble he had found seven families of Russian-Germans ticketed to Winnipeg, but whose destinations and addresses were North Dakota and Minnesota. He says that he only ascertained this by examining their tickets and addresses. These parties, had received specific instructions as to their destination and were very reticent about giving information.

He further advised that these parties had specific instructions as to their destination and were very reticent about giving information.

And he advised the department to look into this matter. The department thereupon wrote to the Winnipeg agency, and the next letter I find is dated January 6, 1903, from Winnipeg. It says :

Numbers are coming to Winnipeg en route to the United States and say the steamship officers told them that was the cheapest way. They arrive in mid-winter and are a heavy burthen.

Then began a singular list of communications, the department at Winnipeg apparently being determined to drive into the heads of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, that their immigration system, instead of being a glorious success, was a most dismal failure. Here are the letters :

There is a report from Mr. Moffett of the 8th of January, 1903, inclosing Stemshorn's report showing that 556 booked for Winnipeg departed for the States between October 21, 1902, and January 6, 1903.

556 booked for Winnipeg and paid for by the department under this contract, left Winnipeg forthwith. This is interesting because——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. How does the hon. gentleman know that the bonus was paid on these people ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have read the files, which the hon. gentleman perhaps has not ; and there has never been a dispute in all the letters filed, or any question that the company was not to be paid on every adult and every child which reached this country.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman knows that the bonuses were to be paid only to those who belonged to the agricultural classes, and it is possible, and a fair presumption, that not one of these people belonged to the agricultural classes —unless the hon. gentleman can give some proof of it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I thank the hon. gentleman for saying that, I was hoping somebody would raise that point to give me an opportunity of telling him and telling the House that whoever will take the trouble to search the files will find that these officials at Winnipeg not only gave the names of the families and the ages of the individuals, but gave the names of the vessels in which they came out, and the officials protested in their letters against immigrants coming there who were routed for the States and this company getting bonuses for them. The government has never repudiated the obligation to pay bonuses on these people. The government has not closed up all its accounts, there are some disputes as to the accuracy of some of the figures, but as to the principle there is no dispute.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am not talking about the principle, I am talking about what took place; and I say the hon. gentleman cannot give any evidence that will substantiate his statement.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I refer the hon. gentleman to the files, and I tell him that he will find in the files the names of even the vessels in which these people came out, and the complaints that they were being sent to Winnipeg when they were routed to the United States. Now I take it for granted that the officials of this government have some ideas of their duties, some idea as to what they should do in the position in which they are placed. Read this series of reports, and you will see whether or not the officials at Winnipeg considered that this country was being defrauded by every immigrant that left this country. Here is a letter of the 13th of January, 1903, from Mr. Smith, commissioner :

He has gone further into matter and finds that during the last six months of 1902 nearly 1,500 are recorded in their books as destined for United States.

There is a letter from Mr. Smith, commissioner at Winnipeg, dated the 13th of January, saying that of the number who came in 1902, nearly 2,300 souls were recorded in their books as having come to Winnipeg who were really destined and had gone to the United States.

He explains the reason why. He explains that the Canadian Pacific Railway rate to Emerson was so much cheaper than the American rate to Pembina that the people were sent through by way of Winnipeg when they were going to Minnesota or Dakota. They were ticketed to Winnipeg, cared for by the department there, and the company were entitled under the terms of this contract to payment for them ; because there is nothing in the contract about settlement in this country, the moment they reach this country they entitle the company to a bonus. That number of 1,500 went to the States during the last six months of 1902. That went on from day to day :

On the 15th of January, 1903—
Male, adult..	26
Male, children..	7
Female, adult..	16
Female, children..	11
	60
Another lot 16th January, 1903—
Male, adults..	2
Male, children..	3
Female, adults..	1
Female, children..	2
	8
Another lot 17th January, 1903—
2 men and 21 women.
Another lot 19th January, 1903—
Male, adults..	3
Male, children..	2
Female, adults..	2
	10

Then there is a telegram from Mr. Smart, dated January 22, from this same Mr. J. Obed Smith, saying :

During last year records show 2,094 immigrants ticketed to Winnipeg or similar Manitoba points destined for the States. Of these 21 Icelanders, 151 Scandinavians, 1,922 Russian-Germans. Doubtless several hundreds of other Russian Germans, although ticketed to Winnipeg, left immediately for the States without declaring such as their intention.

Then again on the 26th, three days later on, he gives statistics for a party of 80 that had gone to the States that day. Now when we find the Minister of the Interior, comparing this contract with the contract made by his predecessor, and when we find that under the contract made by the Conservative government they were only bound to pay on adults when they reached Manitoba, whereas the present government are bound to pay on every adult or infant coming under the agricultural or domestic class the moment they reach the shores of this country, surely there can be no doubt as to which is the better contract. Mr. Smart, knowing these facts, having his attention called to the fact of these reports when he went to Amsterdam the following year, should have been doubly careful to see that a company which so easily earned its money when the gain to the country was so slight —he should have been doubly careful to see that the company was doing its duty in every possible way. Now, Sir, here are certain facts that are discoverable from the files brought down before the Public Accounts Committee, and I say there are certain inferences one can fairly draw from them. We know in the first place now that Smart and Preston entered into a contract, no doubt about that. We know that that contract entered into by them was not made known in Canada, that is expressly stated in a memo. to council, or to the minister. It was a secret contract made between Preston and Smart, which was not to be made known in Canada. We know that a few months after that contract was made it was changed greatly to the advantage of the company, apparently by Mr. Smart alone, who that very day cabled and wrote to Preston triumphantly telling him the contract had been changed to the advantage of the company. We know that Smart's attention had been called, first to the character of the accounts sent in by him and their lack of verification, then to the fact that the immigrants were not remaining in this country, and he, knowing all these facts, went to Amsterdam and found the position there in such a state that if he had been a man anxious to do his duty by his employer, he would have been prompted to make every inquiry. But we find he did not even bother to make any report to Mr. Preston, or to Mr. Sifton, his minister. Then we find Smart coming back to this country, knowing from the facts I have stated that the company was not faithfully carrying out its duty, and entering into another agreement in 1904, still further changing the conditions to the advantage of that company, and giving them a hold on this country for a still longer period.

And then, Sir, we find, after 1904, when Mr. Smart thought he had riveted this company on this country for ten years, when it required four years' notice to break the contract, that Mr. Smart writes to a member of this syndicate, and he will not tell his name, saying that he, Mr. Smart, intends to resign his position as deputy minister. Now, that is a pregnant fact ; there are few men in this country who would not like to retain the position of deputy minister. I believe the salary is now $5,000 and in Mr. Smart's case it has been shown that it included a trip to the old country whenever he desired to go. He was assured of a good position and a good salary for life, and here we have Mr. Smart resigning his position and the only reason he could give in the committee was that he had such a love for immigration, that he was bound to devote the balance of his shattered life to that cause. Why, surely as deputy minister of this country he would have far wider scope for his devotion and usefulness to the cause of immigration than as the manager of any company. It is true the profits might not be as great, but the usefulness unquestionably would be greater. Mr. Smart writes to a member of this syndicate that he is going to resign, and of course a wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse and no one ever accused Mr. Preston or any friend of his, of being a blind horse. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Smart resigns and is appointed manager of this company, whose history I have tried to trace. Could anything be more clouded with suspicion than that ? But there is something more. When Mr. Smart, was being examined, inquiry was made as to letters he had written as deputy minister of the department, while in receipt of the people's money for the discharge of the duties of that office. He was asked to produce letters to this syndicate and refused, the only reason he gave was that they were private, but this morning he came back to the committee and what had come over the spirit of his dream, I know not, unless it is the old principle that whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad. This morning, he came before the committee and told us he would not and could not produce his letters, because he had burned them and his letter books. I am not here to attack Mr. Smart, but there are many business men on the opposite side of the House, and I would ask any hon. gentleman opposite, if he were sitting on a jury in a court of law and a question arose as to the contents of a letter and it was admitted, all the evidence being produced by the accused, that while in a public office, enjoying public pay, he had written to a member of a trading organization to which he had certainly given phenomenal privileges, announcing that he was going to retire, surely after he retired, giving up a magnificent position to accept the humble position of manager of a simple trading company, and we find when he is asked to produce the letters he simply refuses, because they were private letters and might injure other parties, and later says he could not produce them because he had burnt his letters and letter books—surely not the only letters in the letter books, because he must have many letters to others than members of his company—I ask the members if this does not seem to shed further light on the transaction investigation here to-day ?

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) tells us frankly that there is no difference between such a company as this and the Canadian Pacific Railway, he says : Who knows the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway he cries ? If I were about to enter into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway would I think of asking who the shareholders were? What are we to think of a defence such as that from a minister of the Crown ? Must there not be an utter absence of all right, of all evidence, of all justice or sense of justice, when a minister will calmly compare such a company as this with the Canadian Pacific Railway ? If the minister does not know the difference I will tell him. If this government chooses to enter into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway they need not have the slightest anxiety in the world but that the Canadian Pacific Railway can be made to carry out its contract. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a list of officers whose names he who runs may read. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a charter of incorporation found on the statute-book of our country ; it has a list of shareholders which any man can find. There is no secrecy and the Canadian Pacific Railway has assets which make it a matter of utter indifference who the officers, shareholders or directors may be. Surely there is a difference between a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway or a corporation like the Bank of England, and a contract with a nebulous myth like this organization called the North Atlantic Trading Company, an organization which solemnly describes itself as a body corporate, in November, 1902, and signs itself with a corporate seal and the name of its secretary and all the time there was no such organization. Surely the Minister of the Interior can see the distinction between these two companies. Then the minister tried, as I think, rather to draw a herring across the scent, by referring to the immigration results under the old and the present government. I do not intend to be dragged off into that discussion. I simply ask him to consider the effect of some of his own figures. According to his own figures, in 1896 the Conservative party spent $120,000 in immigration. Out of that $6,710 was spent on immigration from continental Europe. According to his own figures we spent $6,710 and got 4,451 immigrants from continental Europe ; $1.50 a head, was all it cost. Was that not a better scheme than the scheme in force to-day ? And was there no difference in the state of this country in 1896 when world-wide depression clouded every civilized land and the conditions in the last few years, when there has been prosperity here and all the world over, and yet at that time we spent only $6,710 and got 4,451 immigrants from continental Europe. What did we do in 1904-5 ? We spent $972,000 in immigration, and of that we spent, according to his own figures (I am not committing myself to figures I may wish to attack later on) $86,967 on European immigration. We got, so he says, 37,255 immigrants from continental Europe in consequence. I am afraid if we have had 37,255 immigrants from continental Europe to Manitoba and the west, and we paid $5 a head we will find that we have not got off for $86,967. I take the minister's figures and I ask him this, can he maintain the stand in this House, and give all the credit as he and my predecessor in the debate do, to the Sifton bargain with the North Atlantic Trading Company for filling all the Northwest when according to the figures given out of $972,000 only $86,000 went to fill up the Northwest What about the other $972,000 iess $86,000 ? What about the $886,967 spent on behalf of immigration ? Had that no effect ? Surely the minister must think the people of this country blind, that all he has to do is to draw a herring across the scent and the people will forget issues such as the present which it will be well for the government to consider and take warning by ere it be, for them, too late. The Minister of the Interior in this debate said that the policy of the Liberal party and the Conservative party was the same. I think I answered that this afternoon. The gentleman who spoke this afternoon said that the policy of the Conservatives and that of the Reform party were the same both along the lines of this question we are discussing and the question of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company which he tried to drag in. I decline to wander from this discussion and assure the hon. gentleman he will have plenty of opportunity to ventilate his views on the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company question before the session is much older.

If the Minister of the Interior be right when he says that in this matter the Liberal government has followed the policy of the Conservative government, then the truth must be that as in the case of the fiscal policy of the Conservative party, which they also adopted, they so mutilated it and cut it up that in every single respect in which they changed it they changed it for the worse. And as to the trade policy, it is only the other night that the Solicitor General delivered one of the most able and eloquent and patriotic speeches on protection which was ever delivered even in the city of Toronto, he adopts the trade policy of the Conservative party and to the extent that he does adopt it he is pursuing a sane and a safe course.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, on this question except to ask hon. gentleman before they vote to calmly and carefully consider the amendment which is before the House. The Minister of the Interior and his followers who have spoken have carefully abstained from discussing the question before us, and have wandered far afield to deal with other matters with which we have no immediate concern. I have no doubt that the issue before the House is so distasteful to them, that gentlemen on the other side who may speak later will continue to steer clear of the question, but I trust that gentlemen on this side of the House will take care that they stick to the text. Will the Minister of the Interior or any of his supporters explain how it is that on the one hand he can tell us that this is a good contract, and on the other hand he announces that it is so bad that he is going to cancel it? There is no clause in that contract under which he can cancel it except clause 12, which provides:

> This agreement shall continue in force for ten years from the date thereof, subject however to the right of the government to cancel it by notice in writing under the hand of the minister if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the minister that the company is failing to carry out its obligations. But either party has the right to abrogate the agreement by four years' notice.

It has appeared to the satisfaction of the minister that the company has failed to carry out its obligation and he has written to the company giving his reasons for cancelling the contract, and the reasons which he gives are simply, that because immigration is less than he expected from certain countries he therefore infers that the company cannot have been carrying out the contract. It would seem that the further this contract goes the worse it gets. If the minister is sincere in his declaration; if this is a good contract; if it is a contract in the interests of this country, why in Heaven's name does not the government do its best to have the company carry it out and thus secure the benefits which they say will result to Canada from it. What are we to say of a minister who declares that this is a good contract, but because immigration is not as great as he expected it should be from two countries, he cancels the contract without considering whether it is not possible to have it faithfully carried out. From the way in which he has proceeded the minister may find that on top of all his other difficulties he has simply brought the country into a lawsuit by professing to cancel a contract while according to his own letter written to the company he had no grounds for cancelling except his suspicion based on the fact that the returns were not as great as he had expected. And, if that contract should be rescinded because the company is not carrying it out, why does the government not rescind it at once? Why pay this company another dollar of the public money of Canada ? What right have the members of this syndicate ; of their bonus of $5 per head ; what right has Mr. Smart to sit in his office in Montreal and draw his salary for six months more if that company has forfeited its rights under the contract ? Let the minister come out in a manly way; let the government do one right thing in connection with this contract, even though it be the last; if this contract has been conceived in inquity and carried out in misfortune, let there be one redeeming feature about it, let them cancel the contract at once if it is a bad contract. But if, as they say, it is a good contract, then let them retain it, let them make the contractors do their duty to this country and let Canada enjoy the benefits of this contract which they declare is such an excellent one. We are here representing the people of this country and we owe the duty to our constituents that if the government has made a contract that is injurious and absurd, to so declare by our vote. How can the members of this House vote down the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto which declares that this contract ought to be cancelled, and then hold up both hands to praise the government which forthwith cancels the contract and cancels it in the most objectionable and illegal way? I trust that gentlemen on both sides of the House when they come to vote will bear in mind that this is the kind of thing that is liable to undermine the whole of our public life. If it be true that this company is the bogus company it apparently is, then the good name of Canada at home and abroad requires that the condemnation of this House should be visited on those who made such a contract and on those who participated in it. If on the other hand a majority of the members of this House should deliberately vote that this contract is not injurious, is not improvident, is not absurd, and that immediate steps should not be taken to terminate it, then, Sir, I shall be deeply sorry for the effect that such a vote as that will have on the good name of this House and on the good name of the people of Canada in countries outside the borders of our Dominion.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg). I desire to engage the attention of the House for a short time to-night, and in doing so I am afraid I shall incur the displeasure of my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) who has counselled us to keep close to the text. I am afraid I shall incur the displeasure of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who told us last night that we on this side of the House had no business in reply to the irrelevant charges made against us by gentlemen on the other side. However that may be, it is my intention to briefly review the general immigration policy of this government. My justification is a paragraph in the resolution introduced by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) and his declaration of the policy of the opposition with respect to immigration, and because the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Monk) in his speech dealt with the same general question. I represent the city of Winnipeg, which above all other cities in Canada has profited by the immigration policy of the present government, and I feel I would fail in my duty if I did not uphold that policy, and at the same time raise my voice in protest against the character of the campaign which hon. gentlemen opposite have directed against it.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) made a very excellent speech on Friday night last. I listened to it with mixed feelings of pleasure and disappointment—pleasure because of the beauty of the speech, and disappointment at the things that were not in it. The speech of the hon. member was very much like the fig-tree planted in the vineyard, that was beautiful to look upon, but had no fruit. The back and front, the head and foot of the hon. gentleman's criticism was that certain contracts entered into by this government with the North Atlantic Trading Company lacked definiteness and that they were not reported to parliament. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience in immigration work, I have been engaged in it for some years; and I assert that it is impossible to have definiteness in a contract with respect to immigration work. It is impossible for the hon. gentleman to dictate a contract that will state that John Jones or some one else lives in Austria, and that he must be transplanted from Austria to a certain section in the Northwest Territories. The hon. gentleman must know that a contract with any company that is working in the immigration field can only be effective by producing a certain atmosphere in a country from which we may hope to receive immigrants. The other portion of the hon. gentleman's criticism is that this contract was not reported to parliament. I am surprised to learn from the remarks of the Minister of the Interior that like contracts existed during the regime of the hon. member for North Toronto, and that he sat as Minister of Finance writing cheques—as he so dramatically described my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance—to certain companies, and that those contracts were not reported to parliament. Now, what is the policy of the opposition with respect to immigration? I think I can fairly accept the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto of that policy, and I am quite sure the hon. leader of the opposition will not repudiate my statement that hon. gentlemen makes with respect to general policy. The hon. member for North Toronto states that poverty exists in those continental countries, that the people there have been subject to religious and race persecution, and therefore he says 'they will come anyway.' 'They will come anyway,' Mr. Speaker, is the policy of the opposition with respect to immigration. I want to inform the hon. member for North Toronto and the hon. leader of the opposition and every hon. gentleman who may hope at some future time to be associated with him in the administration of the affairs of this country, that the west, for which I speak to-night, will not stand for any such policy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to digress for a few moments, I would like to say that I deprecate very much the character of the campaign that has been put up against the administration of the immigration department of this government and against other departments. It consists in the constant cry of 'graft,' 'graft.' Mr. Speaker, I do not believe a word of it. I have not been able to distinguish one particle of convincing evidence to substantiate the charges of graft which have been made this session and the last session I had the honour of sitting in this House. Nearly every question of public policy discussed by the government or by members of this side of the House is answered by hon. gentlemen opposite with the cry of 'graft, graft.' In regard to public works, dredging, immigration, and almost everything else, their cry is 'graft.' Failing to convince the people and the members of this House as they signally failed last night, when they discussed the trade policy of this government, they have started a campaign of graft, which is not creditable to them. These charges of graft are very largely manufactured out of stories heard here and there on the street; and I am sure that hon. members of this House will justify me when I state that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is not entirely blameless in this respect. A story has been circulated in this House and on the streets last night and to-day with respect to that gentleman. I refuse to believe that story, and my chief cause for disbelief is the fact that that gentleman is an hon. member of this House. It was reported in this House last night that the hon. gentleman had undertaken to fix a certain jury in a certain trial in which he was interested in his own county. It was reported that he had endeavoured to secure a Conservative jury in order that that jury might acquit him of the charge that was laid against him. Now, what are the earmarks of probability? That jury was Conservative, every man of them; yet I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for East Simcoe conspired to get a Conservative jury to try him. Still, I have a suspicion that if any such circumstance attached to any member of this government, the cry of bribery and intimidation would be raised against him. If I desired to review the history of graft in this country, I am afraid I could not leave out the friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I will take second place to no hon. member of this House in standing for purity in the administration of public affairs. At the same time, I will take second place to no man in holding ministers and officials guiltless until the charge is proved against them.

Now, I desire to review briefly an almost hackneyed question—a question that has been referred to by almost every speaker on either side of the House— the question of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company's deal. I am prepared to state, because I am acquainted with the facts, that that deal has received the endorsement of every thinking man in the west to-day. I was not acquainted with some of the land deals that have become history in this country until they were recited in my hearing to-day. I had no notion of bringing to the attention of the House any such land deals; but I am here prepared to defend the deal with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

The Saskatchewan Land Company purchased from the Dominion government 250,000 acres of land at $1 an acre. Therefore it follows necessarily that somebody has enjoyed the luxury of graft. It has been intimated by certain hon. gentlemen that there are members on this side who enjoyed that graft. I do not believe a word of it. The simple fact that a business transaction was entered into with a responsible company, such as the Saskatchewan Land Company, is no evidence that graft existed, and I do not believe it did. The advantage of that deal with that company was this. The government is spending $700,000 or $800,000 a year on its immigration policy. It costs a large amount of money to place every settler we get on the land. The deal with that company provides that we shall receive from it $250,000 in hard cash, and in addition they are obliged to put 32 settlers on every township they receive. It has been charged that the company stole these settlers from the government after the government had paid the expenses of bringing them out. I know that that charge is not true. I know all the circumstances connected with the colonization of that tract of land, and the facts are that the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company has over 3,000 agents of its own in the United States, and every 32 settlers placed on each township came from the United States through the instrumentality of the agents of this company.

When the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was discussing this question, he referred in a very sarcastic manner to this tract of land as having been a desert yesterday and a garden to-day. Let me say Mr. Speaker, that I have lived many years within thirty or forty miles of that district, and it will surprise hon. gentlemen when I tell them that the hon. member's description of that land as a desert yesterday and a garden to-day is literally correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOLE. That district, Sir, for years presented a freak of nature. It was a phenomenon which none of us could account for, but the fact was undoubted that that phenomenon did exist and that for a great many years the district north of Lumsden, for 90 or 100 miles was a veritable desert, but three or four or five years ago, when the rains began to come again that particular district became converted into what it is to-day, one of the gardens of the Northwest.

With respect to the North Atlantic Trading Company, it is not my desire to discuss that particular phase of the immigration policy at any length. But I intend to express, at some risk perhaps of disagreeing with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), my understanding of that transaction. As I view it, the reason why secrecy is observed was because in certain countries of continental Europe there are laws prohibiting immigration propaganda, and although this company appears to be composed of men of straw, the names of whom were read by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on Friday night last, it is really a company represented by men of substance but who do not desire that their names should be known, in consequence of the laws that exist in these countries. Rather than have their names made public, they would have the contract cease.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has told us that in addition the contract had not been properly carried out and therefore it has been cancelled. But after all, Sir, was the contract a bad one ? As I have said, it is impossible to measure immigration work except by the general results. We know that during five years of the life of that contract, 128,000 people came from the countries covered by it, and 49,000 were paid for at $5 per head. Well, if the 128,000 immigrants from continental Europe are worth $1,000 a head—and that is the valuation which was put by hon. members opposite when they were in power—we have, as the general results of that contract, the fact that this company has increased the valuation of our country by $128,000,000.

The bringing of cheap immigrants, immigrants without money, immigrants who are the so called scurf of continental Europe, has been deprecated in this House and out of it. The Doukhobors and the Galicians have been reviled by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I believe the Minister of the Interior had something to say with regard to the latter in previous years, but I am bound to dissent from hon. gentlemen and the Minister of the Interior on that point. I say that cheap immigrants without money are as necessary to the development of this country as immigrants with money who are prepared to go on the land. What are the requirements of this country at present ? Contracts have been already let to a fellow citizen of mine, which will call for the employment of 10,000 men. Are you going to get monied men to do this manual labour from England or Scotland ? No, we shall have to go to the countries covered by this contract. Contracts have been let in Quebec and eastern Ontario which will require 5,000 to 6,000 men. Contracts are let by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern in our western country requiring 4,000 to 5,000 men. I have figured up the total requirements for railway construction this year alone at 20,000, and I calculate that the crops, which are now almost in throughout the West will, if no misfortune happens, require 30,000 labourers to harvest them. We therefore shall require 50,000 men. We cannot look for labour of that kind from people who come here with large sums in their pockets.

A good deal has been said in the House and the country in deprecation of the Doukhobors who came here seven or eight years ago. It has been said that they are not educated and do not desire education. Well, I wish to state that contracts have been let to provide 128 school-houses for the education of these people.

Is the bonus system a good one ? I am prepared to admit that it is a fruitful source of trouble and perhaps of peculation, and that if we could possibly conduct an immigration propaganda without it, we should do so. But I believe it is simply impossible to divert the flow of immigration to this country without the bonus system. It is acknowledged by hon gentlemen opposite that the bonus system is a proper one because they inaugurated it themselves in 1882. I also find that other countries have adopted it. For instance, the Argentine Republic, in addition to giving a bonus, have been able to secure passage rates for immigrants which will enable them to be brought to that country very much cheaper than they can be from the same place to Canada. The Australian commonwealth have been paying one pound per head for immigrants ; and in addition to this amount, paid by the general government, the various States of that commonwealth also contribute largely to bring out immigrants. So, too, with New Zealand. With opposition of that kind, it seems to me to be impossible for this country to continue to divert the flow of immigrants to our shores unless the bonus system is continued.

Now, I desire, for a moment or two, to review some figures which are certainly very interesting to me. During the last five years for which we have the figures of this government—1900-1 to 1904-5 inclusive, there were 521,489 immigrants of all classes came to our shores. We find the statement made in this House that we are neglecting the immigration of our kinsmen of the United Kingdom. But the facts are against that statement. I find that during this five-year period, 186,594 immigrants came from the United Kingdom and 182,729 from the United States, a total of 369,323 of Anglo-Saxon origin. From continental Europe came 152,166 immigrants in that time. Now let me give you the figures for the last five years of Conservative rule. I give first the number of immigrants from continental Europe for five years ending 1896 :

1893	9,562
1894	4,825
1895	3,834
1896	4,451

This is the result of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power. These people in continental Europe are suffering persecution and poverty, and the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is to say that they can come to Canada if they wish to do so. And we see the results of that policy. What were the results of that policy with respect to immigrants from the United Kingdom. Here are the figures :

1892	22,636
1893	20,071
1894	16,004
1895	14,956
1896	12,384

Now, for the nine months of the present fiscal year, that is from 1st July last to March 31, 1906, there arrived from the United States 30,971 immigrants as against 25,240 for the same period last year. From the United Kingdom the number of immigrants was 37,576, and from continental Europe 17,202 a total from Europe of 54,778, against 50,880 for the same period last year. For the month of March last, there were twice as many immigrants came into Canada as during March, 1905. I have a letter here from a friend of mine who is secretary of the Western Canada Immigration Association, and it will perhaps be interesting to the House to hear a passage from it. It is dated Minneapolis, March 27, 1906 :

> Immigration from the States into Western Canada this year is apparently going to be tremendous. I think there will be at least 60,000 people in the movement. A week ago Monday, there were 704 carloads of settlers' effects held up at North Portal awaiting government inspection.

Seven hundred and four carloads of immigrants effects in one day. The contrast between the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite and that of the present government with regard to immigration is most strikingly seen in its results. Let me quote a few figures showing the progress of the city of Winnipeg, in which I live under one policy and under the other. First I will give a statement of the post office receipts for the city of Winnipeg of the last five years of Conservative administration, and then I will put in contrast to these figures the returns for the last five years under the present administration.

The returns for the last five years of Conservative rule were as follows :

1891-2	$86,069 56
1892-3	93,211 56
1893-4	91,815 01
1894-5	85,721 90
1895-6	91,417 34

You see it comes up and down, and there is a total increase of something like $5,000. Now let me give the figures showing the post office receipts in Winnipeg for the last five years of the administration of the present government :

1900-1	$123,864 73
1901-2	156,734 36
1902-3	201,906 62
1903-4	256,519 17
1904-5	319,378 22

The policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite is to allow immigrants to come if they wish; the policy of the present government is to bend every energy we can to secure people for this country. And these figures show the different results. There are other evidences of prosperity. If any hon. gentleman opposite thinks it worth while to reply to these figures, no doubt he will at least attribute some of this prosperity to Providence, and perhaps, to other causes. But I want to tell this House that the conviction down in the hearts of the people of the west is that the prosperity that blesses Canada to-day is due very largely, almost wholly to the Siftonian policy of immigration which was criticised by the hon. gentleman for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

The Siftonian policy of immigration was the policy which carried the elections of 1904 in that great western country. It is due to the Siftonian policy that something like 20 members support the right hon. gentleman in this House, as against 6 or 7 who sit behind the leader of the opposition. Now, I want to repeat and impress upon this House, and I want to warn this government, that if they allow themselves to be stampeded by any attack of hon. gentlemen opposite to withdraw from the policy that has been followed for the past ten years, if they relax any of their efforts, if they withdraw any of the agencies that have been conducive to the inflow of immigrants from foreign countries to the Canadian west, the people of the west will not hold up their hands. I can assure them that the recent great success, political and otherwise, in the western country is very largely due to the immigration policy of this government.

Now, I have some other figures. It will not be news, I suppose, to any hon. member in this House to know that we have a custom house in the city of Winnipeg. I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will agree that there is no better indication of the prosperity and the consuming power of a population than the customs receipts. Here are the figures during the last five years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite:

1891-2	$ 649,169 31
1892-3	591,925 68
1893-4	517,978 63
1894-5	411,885 71
1895-6	528,589 41
	2,699,548 74

Mark these figures, Mr. Speaker. In 1891-92 the receipts of the custom house in Winnipeg were $649,169, and five years afterwards, during the Conservative administration, the receipts had shrunk to $528,589. Now, what is the record of the present government during the last five years of their administration:

1900-1	$ 920,074 33
1901-2	1,400,367 55
1902-3	1,803,304 50
1903-4	2,498,856 37
1904-5	2,629,937 45
1905-6 (9 months)	2,685,240 21

Now, if we are to believe that immigration is responsible for the growth of these receipts, the immigration policy has certainly been a successful one. We find that the receipts during the last five years of this administration increased from $920,074 to $2,629,937.45; whereas, during the last five years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the receipts actually decreased. Now, let us take Inland Revenue. I think you will agree that the Inland Revenue receipts also are an indication of the consuming power of the people, although it may not always be in the right direction.

1891-2	$376,665 55
1892-3	412,345 15
1893-4	414,426 11
1894-5	379,581 89
1895-6	423,762 40

You will observe that there is a slight increase during the last five years of their administration from $376,665 to $423,762. Now, what is the result under the administration of the present government:

1900-1	$ 537,958 36
1901-2	637,881 28
1902-3	775,783 02
1903-4	913,611 46
1904-5	1,000,259 55

You see that whereas there was an increase of something like $40,000 during the last five years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, there was an increase of nearly half a million dollars during the same period under the present government. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other indications of progress and prosperity in the western country. I can remember when, in the city of Winnipeg, you could purchase lots at $10 to $15 a front foot that are selling to-day at $200, $300 and $400 a front foot. Perhaps those valuations are too high, but I do not think they are, in certain districts, but I am here to state that, generally speaking, land in the city of Winnipeg is about at its proper valuation. Another indication of progress is the value of buildings erected. In 1900, in the city of Winnipeg, the buildings erected were valued at $1,352,000; in 1901, $1,718,000; in 1902, $2,365,000; in 1903, $5,689,000; in 1904, $7,225,000; in 1905, $10,500,000. I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that the indications are that there will be $15,000,000 worth of buildings put up in the city of Winnipeg this year. And I want to tell this House that if you go on the streets of Winnipeg and ask any boy you meet what is the reason of the phenomenal increase in that city, he will tell you that it is the Siftonian policy with respect to immigration. In 1901, when the official census was taken, the population of the city of Winnipeg was 42,000; to-day I am credibly informed and verily believe that the population of that city is considerably over 100,000. During the past 6 or 7 years the assessment value of the city of Winnipeg has increased by over $26,000,000.

I have some other figures, I hope I am not wearying the House, but certainly these figures are interesting to me. If there is any visible indication of the success of an immigration policy it is surely the records with respect to homestead entries. Now, what are the results of the last five years of the administration of our hon. friends opposite in regard to homestead entries:

Year.	Homestead entries.
1891-2	4,738
1892-3	4,175
1893-4	3,568
1894-5	3,030
1895-6	1,888

Mr. Speaker, the policy of 'come if you will' inaugurated or pronounced by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), with the sanction, I believe, of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), who hopes at one time or other to be the premier of this country, I say the policy of 'come if you will' has resulted in five years of their administration in a decrease from 4,738 homestead entries in the first year of the period to 1,888 in the last year. What is the result of the policy of the present government, which we all consider to be a policy of activity, of well directed energy, of proper information, a policy that has had no peer under any other government that I have studied. The result of the administration of the Interior Department during the past five years of the administration of this government is as follows:

Year.	Homestead entries.
1900-1..	8,162
1901-2..	14,673
1902-3..	31,383
1903-4..	26,073

Or an increase in the last five years, under the administration of this government, from 8,162 to 30,819, and I am credibly informed that the homestead entries of this year are going to exceed in number any two years in the previous history of this country. I think I have said sufficient to convince this House, at least some members of it, that the immigration policy of the present administration is a well and intelligently directed policy, and I want to warn the hon. gentlemen opposite that the people of the west will not stand for the policy that has been enunciated by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the policy of 'come if you will,' and I want also to repeat my warning to this government that the people of the western country will not stand for one moment for any relaxation of the well directed energy that the government have put forward during the past ten years with respect to the immigration policy.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have not seen fit to confine their attention to the amendment now before the House. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) gave us a lot of figures about what the Conservatives have done in the past, as did also the hon. gentlemen who followed him. The member for Yale (Mr. Ross) submitted to the House some statements regarding certain members of this House who had bought land from the Canadian Pacific Railway. I fail to see what that has to do with the discussion now before the House. The hon. gentleman from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) has made what to my mind is a most unfair remark regarding a certain member of this House. I do not see he is called upon in any way to introduce that matter into this discussion as nothing of a personal nature had been brought into it before. If the hon. gentlemen opposite wish to have a field day on immigration, it is very easy for them to get it; in fact they will find they will have it anyway, on the general question of the estimates, without bringing it in here.

The figures given by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) are no doubt very interesting, but I fail to see that they have any bearing on the North Atlantic Trading Company. I would ask the hon. member for Winnipeg whether he can say in fairness that the $15,000,000 worth of new buildings being put up in Winnipeg this year were brought about by the North Atlantic Trading Company or the little office in Amsterdam? It seems to me that the hon. gentlemen are either ashamed or afraid to discuss the particular question at issue. The fact of the matter is they have so far seemed unable in any way to refute the arguments of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and they are trying by speaking about these other matters to draw away the attention of the people of this country from this most scandalous and unfortunate contract. I have listened carefully to this debate from the beginning and I have been puzzling myself a good deal as to why the government does not accept the amendment of the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and let us have a unanimous vote on the subject and get through with this debate. As a matter of fact every section of the amendment of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has either been accepted in principle by the minister and members on the other side of of the House or else they have made no effort whatever to disprove it. I would like to bring attention back to the amendment before the House and to discuss the different sections. Section No. 1 as moved states:

> That the contracts entered into by the government of Canada with the North Atlantic Trading Company were made without the authority and knowledge of parliament.

I think that no one disputes this section of the amendment; in fact, the Minister of the Interior on page 1,888 of the 'Hansard' last Friday evening said:

> However, perhaps it was not so much the terms that he (Mr. Foster) complained about as the fact that the contract was entered into without the authority of parliament.

In other words, the minister himself has acknowledged that this contract was entered into without the authority of parliament. That disposes of that section. The second section of the amendment states:

> That the engagements thus undertaken cover a possible period of nearly thirteen years and involve the payment by the country of about $1,000,000 without any reasonable compensating advantages.

This is a very mild statement of the case. The first contract was entered into in November, 1899. I need not go into particulars; they have already been laid before the House. The second contract was approved by order in council, May 31, 1902, and the third contract in November, 1904, was made for a period of ten years with the right of four years' notice of cancellation. In other words, this contract would run from November, 1899, to November, 1914, a period of 15 years, two years longer than the term stated in the amendment.

This section of the amendment states that the amount expended was about $1,000,000. According to the Auditor General's Report (page L—26) the amount paid to this company for three years was $194,340.98, on the basis of which the amount for fifteen years would be $971,705 if there were no increase in the number of immigrants, but as the number of immigrants has been increasing there is no doubt that had this contract lasted the payment to the company during its term would have amounted to over $1,000,000. The Minister of the Interior in replying to a question (' Hansard,' page 191) gave the number of immigrants for 1904-5, and I have calculated from that statement that there were 28,957 immigrants from the countries mentioned in the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company. We have no means of knowing what proportion of these people would be paid for under the contract, but I believe there is no question at all that under the terms of this document the company would have received $1,000,000. The amendment further says that the payments have been made to this company without any reasonable compensating advantages to this country and I think it is now generally admitted that such is the case. We have had no evidence whatever to show that the North Atlantic Trading Company has spent any money in bringing these people to Canada ; no proof has been offered by the company that they have had anything at all to do with bringing in these immigrants. A great mass of papers was brought down in connection with this matter, so great that it was impossible to analyse them closely, but in looking over the documents I was surprised to find that no particulars were given of the payments made to this company which seems to have been treated entirely differently from the regular booking agents in England and the United States. In the Auditor General's Report (L—26) you will find minute details of the payments made to immigration agents in Great Britain, the United States, and other countries, but the payments to the North Atlantic Trading Company are simply set out in bulk and no particulars whatever are given. We can also find proof that this contract has been made without any reasonable compensating advantage to Canada, in the fact that the company is paid far more per head for immigrants than the other immigration agencies. The Minister of the Interior told us the other day (' Hansard,' page 188) that the booking agents in Great Britain received 7 shillings for adults and half price for those under twelve years of age ; he told us that the Salvation Army which I am glad to see brings in a very fine class of immigrants receives 12 shillings for adults and half price for those under 12 years of age ; he told us that the Women's Domestic Guild receives three dollars for each servant, that a bonus of two dollars per head is paid to philanthropic societies, and he told us also that agents in the United States receive a bonus of three dollars for each adult male, two dollars for each adult female and one dollar for each child under eight years of age. But when we come to the North Atlantic Trading Company it is given a bonus of £1 per head for every man, woman, and child brought to Canada, and most of them come from south eastern Europe. I submit that these very figures prove that his contract was made with the company without any reasonable compensating advantage to us. The third clause of the amendment says :

> That the contracts were made under a pledge not to disclose the personnel or agents of the alleged company who are either unknown to the government, or if known to the government have not been disclosed to parliament notwithstanding various attempts to secure the information.

This declaration in the amendment has been proven by the evidence given by Mr. Smart before the Agriculture Committee. In fact, when the Minister of the Interior was asked on Friday last who were the North Atlantic Trading Company he replied : I have not the slightest idea. The Minister of the Interior does not care who they are, but when the money of this country is going to such a company it seems to me that he ought to care and that he ought to help the members of this House and the taxpayers of Canada to discover to whom we are paying our money. The fourth clause of the amendment states :

> That it does not appear that the alleged Trading Company had any corporate existence, any recognized headquarters, any known directors or officers, that it has any vessels afloat, or possesses any trading or operating facilities of any kind or any agents or agencies effective or otherwise.

This assertion is amply proven by the cable receivd from Lord Strathcona. It is shown that this company was not incorporated until June 1905, and that from 1889 to 1905 although the company was being paid from the taxes contributed by the people of Canada, it had no corporate existence whatever, it had no officers or directors and I fancy that nobody has ever claimed it had any vessels afloat. The Minister of the Interior seems to have the extraordinary idea that the opposition in this parliament are not entitled to any assistance from the government to get at the bottom of this matter. In reply to the leader of the opposition he said on Friday night last:

> That is not a matter which concerns me in the administration of my department. I have no objection to hon. gentleman taking any means within their parliamentary rights to find out anything they wish, but they must not expect me to go out of the way of my ordinary administration to gratify what appears to me to be idle curiosity on their part, or a scent for scandal which so far has failed to locate its victims.

In other words, the Minister of the Interior does not propose that the people of this country shall receive any assistance from the department to enable them to discover who are at the bottom of this plot to get the money of the people of Canada without giving any return for it. I submit that the hon. minister should not take that position, but that it is in the interests of the government as well as of the opposition that a matter of this kind should be probed to the bottom. Section 5 of the amendment is:

> That no evidence has been given to parliament of the efficiency of its plans and methods of operation, or that it has been primarily instrumental in sending one single immigrant to Canada.

This statement has been made by the hon. member for North Toronto, and no evidence whatever has been submitted to the contrary. It seems to me that if the department had any evidence whatever among their voluminous papers to disprove this statement, they would have brought that evidence before the House. But they say nothing about it. On the contrary, the contract provides that 'it shall be sufficient for the company to send in at the end of the year their account for $15,000 and a receipted voucher or other reasonable proof of the same.' I ask hon. members if they think that people who could get their money by sending in an ordinary receipt would take any other means of proving their claim. I submit that this section 5 is one of the most important of all, and no effort has been made to disprove it. I take for granted that there is no evidence in the department that would go to disprove this section, or the hon. minister would have so stated to the House. Section 6 of the amendment, says:

> That the conditions of the contract are injurious, improvident and absurd.

The reason I claim that this section has been proved to the House is in the first place that the bulk of the immigration for which this North Atlantic Trading Company has been paid, has come from the south and the east of Europe. I have nothing to say at this time regarding immigration from that part of the world, but it is a well recognized fact that it is not as desirable as immigration from the north and west of Europe. On looking over the returns brought in from the hon. Minister of the Interior, I find that in 1904-5 20,739 immigrants came in from such countries as Austria, Bohemia, Galicia, Hungary, Roumania, Russia, &c. These people would all come within the terms of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, and they represent the bulk of the people for whom that company was paid, the total from all the countries covered by the contract being 28,957.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we might learn something from the experience of the United States. This is not a question of following their example. In many cases it would not be wise for us to do that; but we might at any rate learn something from their experience. The United States, for many years, were only too glad to get in all the immigrants they could. I fancy that there was nothing but a sense of exultation throughout the United States at the great number of arrivals prior to some forty years ago. They came in to increase the wealth of the country, and the United States provided an asylum for the poor and the oppressed of other countries, and delighted in so doing. In 1864 an Immigration Act was passed by Congress to promote and not to restrain immigration. This was repealed in 1868. On August 3, 1882, the first restrictive Act was passed by the United States, but only to bar out criminals, insane, paupers, &c. Foreign convicts, lunatics, idiots, and those liable to be a public charge were to be returned at the expense of the vessels' owners. On February 26, 1885, a much more drastic law was passed, and there has been other legislation from time to time since. At present, I believe there is a head tax imposed on immigrants going into the United States. On March 3, 1903, legislation was passed requiring preliminary inspection at the point of departure, and the right was retained to deport immigrants at any time within two years of their arrival. This legislation has been going on in the United States for the past twenty years. They found that the people coming in from south eastern Europe were not desirable, and that they were coming in such large numbers that in self-protection they had to pass legislation of this kind. The character of the immigration from Europe had greatly altered, a larger proportion of people coming from southern and eastern Europe than had been the case a few years before. The following figures show the immigration of people of Teutonic and Anglo-Celtic origin as compared with that of people from the south and east of Europe:

	Teutonic and Anglo-Celtic.	South and East European.
1871-1880	1,914,341	179,982
1881-1890	2,494,171	926,116
1891-1900	1,615,718	1,841,581
1901-1903	393,195	1,365,070

In other words, the experience of the United States has been that people from the south and east of Europe are coming in vast numbers without any effort being made by the United States to bring them in. On the contrary, an effort has been made by the United States to prevent them from coming. I commend these facts to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), who made so much of the present immigration policy with regard to bringing people into the Northwest. I am not now arguing in any way against using some efforts to bring people into this country; but I certainly think we should stop our expenditure for that purpose in the undesirable parts of the world. There are plenty of desirable immigrants to come to this country. We are getting large numbers from the United States and also from the United Kingdom, and I see no reason why we should any longer spend money for the purpose of encouraging the undesirable sections of the old world's populations to come here and settle on our lands. The hon. member for Winnipeg will please take notice that the immigration into the United States in the year ending June 30, 1898, amounted to 229,299, whereas in the year ending June 30, 1903, it amounted to 857,046. In Canada the immigration increased from 49,149 in 1901 to 146,266 in 1905. In other words, the increase of immigrants into the United States has been just as great in proportion as it has been into Canada, notwithstanding the fact that the United States impose a head tax on these people and spend no money on booking agents.

I would like the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) to tell me how it is, if this Siftonian policy is such a good thing that the number of immigrants to the United States has not fallen off but has instead increased in proportion just as fast as the immigration to this country.

I claim that many of these people from the south and east of Europe will come here anyway. The stream has been started and they will keep on coming even if we stop soliciting them or sending to them. It seems to me that we will get enough of them in this country without spending any more money for that purpose; and without belittling them in any way, I would like to read an extract from a certain report concerning this question in the United States. That report says:

> In pauperism there can be no question that the foreigners, mostly coming with nothing and having no friends to care for them, swell the pauper population immensely. In 1890 there were over three and three quarter times as many foreign as native born paupers. As to insanity, there is a considerably larger tendency to it in the foreigner than the native, most likely from greater average debility of constitution, which shows in the brain as well as in other organs. Between the ages of 25 and 55, the period which furnishes most of the patients, there was in 1890 a percentage of insane foreigners more than half as large again as that of natives.

I simply mention these facts to show that what we require is to keep if possible for our own children this country, and have it inhabited with as good a class of people as we can get. The more we get of our own Anglo-Saxon race and our own French Canadian race and the inhabitants of the north of Europe and our friends in the United States, the better. But why should we spend thousands of dollars in bringing people from the south and east of Europe, now that immigration is flowing in as it is? In the Hansard of last year I notice at page 9320—and I give this for the benefit of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole)—a quotation with reference to a trial by jury in Winnipeg of certain foreigners for murder. The jury added a rider to its verdict as follows:

> And this jury wishes to place on record its opinion that it considers the importation of undesirable immigrants from southern Europe, of whom we find so many amongst us in this province and Winnipeg in particular, to be most undesirable and should be discontinued in the best interest of this country. We find that most of the serious crimes, such as we are called upon to investigate this evening, are committed by this foreign element in our midst.

That, Sir, is not my opinion but it is the opinion of some of the constituents of the hon. member for Winnipeg. Another thing I wish to point out in this connection is the difficulty that Canadians have to encounter when going to settle in the Northwest. It is harder for a man from eastern Canada to go to the Northwest and take up land than it is for a Galician. He gets no encouragement, he has no agent to solicit him, he is not served with any of the papers or notices given to foreigners, and he has to pay full fare and find out all about these things for himself. I submit that many of our young men who now go to the States would go to our Northwest more gladly if they were only given a better chance or put on an equal footing with the Galicians.

Section 6 states that the conditions of the contract are injurious, improvident and absurd. Well, I claim they are injurious for many reasons, and among others because they result in bringing into this country largely immigrants from the most undesirable sections of Europe. I claim that the contract is improvident because too high prices were paid for the services and there is no check whatever to show whether the work has really been done or not. The contract is absurd because we are paying for these people from the south and east of Europe more than for the people of our own blood from the United Kingdom.

The other section, section No. 7 asks that immediate steps be taken to terminate and cancel the contract. I do not think there will be any difference of opinion on either side regarding this section. The opposition has been trying to get information throughout this session with regard to this North Atlantic Trading Company, and after a great deal of difficulty they did manage to find out something and brought in this amendment asking for the cancellation of this contract. The result of this is that the hon. minister said on Friday that the government had decided to give notice of the cancellation of this contract. But I ask in all fairness whether it would have been cancelled if the opposition had not taken up this matter and fought it out line by line and inch by inch in this House. The minister says: You have your remedy; find out the best way you know how. That is what we have had to do. But the right hon. the First Minister knows—nobody knows better—how difficult it is to get at the facts when you are in ignorance at the start and have to keep on asking questions to find out. I submit therefore that this contract would never have been cancelled if the oppsition had not taken the course they have to try and get at the facts.

I do not intend to weary the House. I have simply endeavoured to bring the discussion back to the amendment at issue. I claim it is one which ought to have the support of both sides. It is in fact supported by both. I am confident the minister of the Interior believes that every word in that amendment is quite right. I am confident that the hon. gentlemen opposite share that opinion. In private life it is not considered wrong to acknowledge you have done something you should not have done. This is the time when the government should join the opposition and pass this amendment without a dissenting voice. There is nothing about it which hon. gentlemen opposite have disproved, and I would like to ask what position they will occupy before the country should they vote down this amendment which they themselves have practically agreed to be correct.

Mr. J. BUREAU (Three Rivers). I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of taking up much of the time of the House, but cannot refrain from expressing my satisfaction that this great storm, which was to put in the shade the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius and the earthquake of South California, has passed over so harmlessly. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has fired his threatened bomb-shell and it missed fire. True it exploded but it exploded in the wrong direction, and the pieces are flying back on the Conservative side. But out of the incident have come certain things which should tend to our education. That bombshell, Sir, bears all the marks of Fosterianism. Every birth mark is clearly defined. A supreme disregard shown for the protection of parliamentary dignity, an utter contempt for parliamentary decorum, an entire ignoring of the question at issue and substituting therefor a stream of oratory, an ignoring of the facts and substituting for the facts a flow of epithets of which he is the acknowledged king—and an effort to make up for lack of strength in his case by a great mise en scène.

We are here, as my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) who has just taken his seat has said, to analyse a contract. And he tells us that we are not to talk immigration, not to talk politics, not to talk figures. He tells us: If you want a field day on immigration, let us have it, but it is not the subject of discussion now. And then in a few moments he himself goes on to tell as that a young man from his own riding cannot go west as easily as a Galician—and so he goes on discussing immigration. What is there in this that hurts hon. gentlemen opposite so much? This contract was made for the simple and only purpose of promoting immigration. It is a contract made with the North Atlantic Trading Company by the Department of the Interior to help in bringing in immigrants. And what is the question that we are to discuss? The question is: Have they lived up to their agreement or not? —was it a good contract or was it not? Now, the hon. gentlemen, after all their inquisitiveness, after all their searches can only say it is a shame for this country to have good results if you have not the name of the parties to this contract. They want to find some scandal, some shame, but they cannot find it. And so they ask us not to talk about the facts, not to talk about the results. But what are the facts? They are very simple. In 1901 a contract was entered into between the Department of the Interior and the North Atlantic Trading Company. This contract was varied at different times, but the results have been, as shown by the Minister of the Interior, that we have flooded the country with immigrants, that we have brought prosperity to Canada, that, as shown this afternoon by my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) lands which our predecessors thought were fit compensation for a disappointed company and which were given away for nothing are now sold at high prices. I can readily understand that the feelings of hon. gentlemen opposite are hurt. I realize that my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was in great need of delivering himself of some of his oratory. I was pleased to see him rise for I greatly admire his facility in putting words together, and, as I am anxious to learn as much of English as I can, I always listen to him with attention and great pleasure. But one thing that struck me was that, although the hon. gentleman was discussing a subject of great importance, his words lacked seriousness. Wishing to learn some details about this North Atlantic Trading Company, he thought that he would take us on a little trip to Amsterdam, to Damarack street in Amsterdam. With his histrionic abilities, he told us of a small building, a dusty stair, a closed door with a knob that would not turn—and so on. As he spoke, I asked myself whether he was drawing upon his imagination, or whether he was able to make this word picture so vivid because of his experience in this kind of thing. Has he, in carrying on any of his enterprises, walked up some dark street, climbed a dusty stair, sought to turn the knob of a door that would not open, and struck it resounding blows with his manly first without gaining any response ? If so, it was not across the Atlantic that the hon. member went. Had he crossed the ocean the cool breezes would have fanned his burning brow and might have cooled his fevered imagination. But he did not seek the continent of Europe ; he betook himself to the state of Illinois and to the city of Chicago. With his experience as Minister of Finance and with his success in always balancing the credit of this country on the debit side, he thought he could improve his financial standing. I recall that on one occasion, the hon. member for North Toronto in this House said to the right hon. Prime Minister. Let me pluck a few of your feathers that we may see what kind of a bird you are. I know that the hon. gentleman knows nothing but the golden rule, he must have treated others as he wishes others to treat him. So he will not object if he is deprived of some of his feathers. My hon. friend (Mr. D. Ross) has taken some of his plumage as a land speculator. Let me show something of the hon. gentleman as a financier—let me take some of his feathers that we may see what kind of a bird he is. The hon. gentleman is always refering to newspapers for his information, so I suppose he will not be mad if I do the same. On a stormy day in January 1905, by chance, I laid my hands upon a copy of the New York ' Herald.' It is dated the 27th of January of that year. I suppose it is as good an authority as the Yukon papers with which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) informs and inspires himself when he wants to throw suspicion or insinuate anything wrong against a fellow-member of this House. The article to which I refer had a big heading, and was as follows :

Chicago bank fails because its president was snowbound.—He was on his way from this city with funds for the relief of the institution, but the blizzard stopped him.

New York ' Herald,' January 27, 1905.—(Special despatch to the ' Herald ').— Chicago, Illinois, Thursday.—With its president stuck in a snow bank on the Hudson—an imprisoned passenger on the Twentieth Century Limited—the Pan-American Banking Company, No. 185 Dearborn street, closed its doors to-day because of the failure of the head of the institution to arrive from New York with funds to meet the demands made at the cashier's window.

The bank was closed by Constable Moore, of Justice Wolfe's court, on complaint of a depositor who was unable to get his money. Meanwhile the company's president, W. H. Hunt, carrying relief to the concern, was endeavouring to keep warm on board the belated Lake Shore train.

The fact that the bank suspended payment caused no excitement in banking or financial circles. It has a capital of $500,000. W. R. Travers, secretary and treasurer of the company, and the offices of both Mr. Travers and Mr. Hunt are given as 91 Wall street, New York.

At the doors of the bank J. N. Heldman, an attorney, met all customers and assured them that they would be paid as soon as Mr. Hunt arrived. But the snow storm in the east interfered. Following the posting of the notice of suspension at the bank to-day some of the depositors expressed themselves in forceful language, but there was no other demonstration or excitement. William H. Hunt is the head of a private bank at No. 91 Wall street. As W. Hill Hunt he was the promoter and active head of the International Bank and Trust Company, a concern which failed about eighteen months ago.

W. Hill Hunt, who seems very much like the same man as Wm. H. Hunt, but with a slight change in the initials, was the promoter and active head of the International Bank and Trust Company.

It had branches on the Pacific coast, in Mexico, and its headquarters was located in New York. There were eight or ten Mexican branches, and the weak spot in the system of branch banking was discovered in Mexico. As in the present instance, Mr. W. Hill Hunt——

Wm. H. Hunt, it may have been then.

—was speeding to Mexico to relieve the strained situation in one of the branch offices, when the government took action. The office was closed, and thereafter the various branches suspended. The International Bank and Trust Company failed for nearly $1,000,000. Mr. Hunt attempted to reorganize the Bank Trust concern, and the result of his efforts was the formation of the Pan-American Banking Company.

This is very important.

It is a West Virginia corporation with $500,000 capital, of which only $80,000 has been paid in. With this amount of money as a basis, several branch offices have been opened. The directors are W. Hill Hunt, D. B. Helm and Robert Leslie Moffatt, of New York ; H. L. Turner, of Chicago, and——

Last but not least,

—Geo. E. Foster, former Canadian Finance Minister, of Toronto.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman expatiating so long on the fact that this concern was incorporated in the Isle of Guernsey, for there is a Chicago concern doing business in the state of Illinois and surrounding states, which got its charter from West Virginia. Now if there is any suspicion in the fact that the North Atlantic Trading Company, which I claim are in different circumstances entirely an account of the laws of the various countries—if there is any suspicion in the fact that they got their charter from the Isle of Guernsey, what may we suspect from the fact that this banking concern had to go to West Virginia to get its charter? Well, Sir, I do not wish to taunt the hon. gentleman with having drawn exclusvely on his imagination, because, as the House will see, he had some experience in similar matters, and this may have been the reason of his inspiration when he gave us such a vivid description of the deputy minister's wandering on Damarack street in Amsterdam. Now there is another thing that struck me in the hon. gentleman's remarks. After showing the great calamity that had struck this country he said:

> If it were not so important a matter that is at stake it would be the most ridiculous comedy that ever a comedian set himself to play, or a writer of comedies set himself to write. But it is serious.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has nothing to envy any writer of comedy. I think that speech of his is the best piece of comedy that was ever invented, and I do not think you could find anywhere a better comedian to act it than the hon. member for North Toronto. Unfortunately, whenever he made a mistake in some parts of his speech, the prompter did not act, and he had to refer to his paper. But there is one thing that we have a right to complain of, and that is that he should have chosen the floor of parliament on which to enact his comedy. Well, now that I have explained my views as to this great explosion of indignation on account of the North Atlantic Trading Company, and probed a little into the motives of the hon. member for North Toronto, I am willing to leave that part of the subject. But I must take exception to the way in which the member for North Toronto finished his speech. There is something in it—I do not know how to express it, my knowledge of English may be imperfect—but I would use the word 'wicked,' and if that is not parliamentary, I am willing to withdraw it. But in winding up that fine oration of his, he said:

> We have no sympathy with the right hon. gentleman who leads this government.

Why, Mr. Speaker, who would expect sympathy from the ex-Finance Minister of the Conservative government? He has none to give; if he has we cannot see it. When you consider the right hon. leader of this House, as a last resort, having recourse to the sympathy of the member for North Toronto, why, Sir, it requires a great effort of the imagination. This hon. gentleman has had quite a checkered political career, and knows what the lack of sympathy means. We saw him leaving the county of King's, N.B., because of a lack of sympathy, and he went to York, N.B.; and having gone to York, the same ideas prevailed with him, and he said, gentlemen of York, I thank you for your sympathy, you are too small for me, I will try the city of St. John. The hon. gentleman was like the lonely sparrow on the house top which we have heard mentioned in this House. He went from county to county in New Brunswick, finding no rest for the sole of his foot, and finally he came to North Toronto. That was the first place where he could find rest. And what success did he meet with? To use his own words in his speech, his success was 'nit.' Now let me tell the hon. gentleman that we are willing to dispense with his sympathy, and we are willing to dispense him from all the trouble he has taken to bring such a calamity on the Liberal party as he expects his speech and his bomb that he has exploded will be. He says: 'Not a little bit of it.' Well 'not a little bit' will be the success of his enterprise. In resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the right hon. the Prime Minister with his past record, in view of the verdict of the people of Canada, in view of the result of the policy that he has inaugurated and maintained, in spite of all that may be said to the contrary, can well do without the sympathy of the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. CRAWFORD moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) delivered a message from the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

GREY.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion or the year ending June 30, 1906, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, April 24, 1906.

Mr. FIELDING moved that His Excellency's message, together with the estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—DECORUM IN THE HOUSE—BUDGET SPEECH.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved the adjournment of the House. He said : Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that there is getting to be a great deal of confusion the moment the adjournment is moved, and that instead of hurrying out of the House, it would be far more seemly for members to wait until the adjournment is finally passed upon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I might add that a predecessor of yours in the office of Speaker enjoined upon the House, that it was an improper thing for any member to move out of the Chamber upon adjournment until the Speaker and the mace had gone first. That is my idea of the proper decorum to be observed by the members of the House, and I think it would be more becoming if members would remain in the House and thus pay due respect to the Speaker instead of leaving their seats and scurrying out in advance.

I wanted to ask the Prime Minister whether or not his attention has been directed to a paragraph in the Toronto 'Globe' of yesterday, which speaks of the Alberta Land Company, capital £60,000 in pound shares as having been registered. Its objects are to adopt an agreement with J. A. Macdonald to acquire any lands or premises in Canada, the United States or elsewhere. Among the signatories are W. G. Morden, Montreal, and W. T. R. Preston, London. I do not know the object of this company, but apparently, it is to deal in western lands. I understand there is a rule expressed in the statute which governs the Department of the Interior, that no person employed in the department shall have any dealings in Dominion lands. I do not know whether this company proposes to do so or not, but one would judge from this item that it has that object in view. I would like to know whether the attention of the government has been directed to this paragraph and whether or not they have thought it of sufficient importance to make any inquiries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My attention has been called to-day to this paragraph. I have had no opportunity yet of talking the matter over with my colleague, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), but I will give an answer to-morrow.

BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns, is the Finance Minister able to say yet, when he proposes to make his exposition of the budget ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to make a definite statement, except that it will not be this week, but it will be as early as possible after this week, and in the usual way, an intimation will be given to my hon. friends several days in advance.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.
